Virgilio · Eneida

Texto en latín y traducción inglesa alineados por pasaje; cada sección de la traducción figura una sola vez, junto al primer pasaje que abarca.

Fuente: Perseus Digital Library (Tufts University), urn:cts:latinLit:phi0690.phi003. Texto crítico y traducción tomados sin cambios de los archivos TEI del repositorio.

Licencia CC BY-SA 4.0 (se comparte con la misma licencia). Edición de lectura generada por Vitruvius Digital Library (Diego Kurilo), 2026. Lectura en línea: https://diegoalonsok-png.github.io/vitruvius-digital-library/lector-clasico.html?obra=phi0690.phi003

Locus	Latín	Traducción inglesa
1.1	1 Arma virumque cano, Troiae qui primus ab oris 2 Italiam, fato profugus, Laviniaque venit 3 litora, multum ille et terris iactatus et alto 4 vi superum saevae memorem Iunonis ob iram; 5 multa quoque et bello passus, dum conderet urbem, 6 inferretque deos Latio, genus unde Latinum, 7 Albanique patres, atque altae moenia Romae. 8 Musa, mihi causas memora, quo numine laeso, 9 quidve dolens, regina deum tot volvere casus 10 insignem pietate virum, tot adire labores 11 impulerit. Tantaene animis caelestibus irae? 12 Urbs antiqua fuit, Tyrii tenuere coloni, 13 Karthago, Italiam contra Tiberinaque longe 14 ostia, dives opum studiisque asperrima belli; 15 quam Iuno fertur terris magis omnibus unam 16 posthabita coluisse Samo; hic illius arma, 17 hic currus fuit; hoc regnum dea gentibus esse, 18 si qua fata sinant, iam tum tenditque fovetque. 19 Progeniem sed enim Troiano a sanguine duci 20 audierat, Tyrias olim quae verteret arces; 21 hinc populum late regem belloque superbum 22 venturum excidio Libyae: sic volvere Parcas. 23 Id metuens, veterisque memor	1 Arms and the man I sing, who first made way, 2 predestined exile, from the Trojan shore 3 to Italy, the blest Lavinian strand. 4 Smitten of storms he was on land and sea 5 by violence of Heaven, to satisfy 6 stern Juno's sleepless wrath; and much in war 7 he suffered, seeking at the last to found 8 the city, and bring o'er his fathers' gods 9 to safe abode in Latium; whence arose 10 the Latin race, old Alba's reverend lords, 11 and from her hills wide-walled, imperial Rome.

	Saturnia belli, 24 prima quod ad Troiam pro caris gesserat Argis— 25 necdum etiam causae irarum saevique dolores 26 exciderant animo: manet alta mente repostum 27 iudicium Paridis spretaeque iniuria formae, 28 et genus invisum, et rapti Ganymedis honores. 29 His accensa super, iactatos aequore toto 30 Troas, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli,
1.31	31 arcebat longe Latio, multosque per annos 32 errabant, acti fatis, maria omnia circum. 33 Tantae molis erat Romanam condere gentem! 34 Vix e conspectu Siculae telluris in altum 35 vela dabant laeti, et spumas salis aere ruebant, 36 cum Iuno, aeternum servans sub pectore volnus, 37 haec secum: Mene incepto desistere victam, 38 nec posse Italia Teucrorum avertere regem? 39 Quippe vetor fatis. Pallasne exurere classem 40 Argivum atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto, 41 unius ob noxam et furias Aiacis Oilei? 42 Ipsa, Iovis rapidum iaculata e nubibus ignem, 43 disiecitque rates evertitque aequora ventis, 44 illum expirantem transfixo pectore flammas 45 turbine corripuit scopuloque infixit acuto. 46 Ast ego, quae divom incedo regina, Iovisque 47 et soror et coniunx, una cum gente tot annos 48 bella gero! Et quisquam numen Iunonis adoret 49 praeterea, aut supplex aris imponet honorem? 50 Talia flammato secum dea corde volutans 51 nimborum in patriam, loca feta furentibus austris, 52 Aeoliam venit. Hic vasto rex Aeolus	17 In ages gone an ancient city stood— 18 Carthage, a Tyrian seat, which from afar 19 made front on Italy and on the mouths 20 of Tiber's stream; its wealth and revenues 21 were vast, and ruthless was its quest of war. 22 'T is said that Juno, of all lands she loved, 23 most cherished this,—not Samos' self so dear. 24 Here were her arms, her chariot; even then 25 a throne of power o'er nations near and far, 26 if Fate opposed not, 't was her darling hope 27 to 'stablish here; but anxiously she heard 28 that of the Trojan blood there was a breed 29 then rising, which upon the destined day 30 should utterly o'erwhelm her Tyrian towers, 31 a people of wide sway and conquest proud 32 should compass Libya's doom; —such was the web 33 the Fatal Sisters spun. Such was the fear 34 of Saturn's daughter, who remembered well 35 what long and unavailing strife she waged 36 for her loved Greeks at Troy. Nor did she fail 37 to meditate th' occasions of her rage, 38 and cherish deep within her bosom proud 39 its griefs and wrongs: the choice by Paris made; 40 her scorned and slighted beauty; a whole race 41 rebellious to her godhead; and Jove's smile 42 that beamed on eagle-ravished Ganymede. 43 With all these thoughts infuriate, her power 44 pursued with tempests o'er the boundless main 45 the Trojans, though by Grecian victor spared 46 and fierce Achilles; so she thrust them far 47 from Latium; and they drifted, Heaven-impelled, 48 year after year, o'er many an unknown sea— 49 O labor vast, to found the Roman line! 50 Below th' horizon the Sicilian isle 51 just sank from view, as for the open sea 52 with antro 53 luctantes ventos tempestatesque sonoras 54 imperio premit ac vinclis et carcere frenat. 55 Illi indignantes magno cum murmure montis 56 circum claustra fremunt; celsa sedet Aeolus arce 57 sceptra tenens, mollitque animos et temperat iras. 58 Ni faciat, maria ac terras caelumque profundum 59 quippe ferant rapidi secum verrantque per auras. 60 Sed pater omnipotens speluncis abdidit atris,	heart of hope they sailed, and every ship 53 clove with its brazen beak the salt, white waves. 54 But Juno of her everlasting wound 55 knew no surcease, but from her heart of pain 56 thus darkly mused: “Must I, defeated, fail 57 of what I will, nor turn the Teucrian King 58 from Italy away? Can Fate oppose? 59 Had Pallas power to lay waste in flame 60 the Argive fleet and sink its mariners, 61 revenging but the sacrilege obscene 62 by Ajax wrought, Oileus' desperate son? 63 She, from the clouds, herself Jove's lightning threw, 64 scattered the ships, and ploughed the sea with storms. 65 Her foe, from his pierced breast out-breathing fire, 66 in whirlwind on a deadly rock she flung. 67 But I, who move among the gods a queen, 68 Jove's sister and his spouse, with one weak tribe 69 make war so long! Who now on Juno calls? 70 What suppliant gifts henceforth her altars crown?”

1.61	61 hoc metuens, molemque et montis insuper altos 62 imposuit, regemque dedit, qui foedere certo 63 et premere et laxas sciret dare iussus habenas. 64 Ad quem tum Iuno supplex his vocibus usa est: 65 Aeole, namque tibi divom pater atque hominum rex 66 et mulcere dedit fluctus et tollere vento, 67 gens inimica mihi Tyrrhenum navigat aequor, 68 Ilium in Italiam portans victosque Penates: 69 incute vim ventis submersasque obrue puppes, 70 aut age diversos et disiice corpora ponto. 71 Sunt mihi bis septem praestanti corpore nymphae, 72 quarum quae forma pulcherrima Deiopea, 73 conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo, 74 omnis ut tecum meritis pro talibus annos 75 exigat, et pulchra faciat te prole parentem. 76 Aeolus haec contra: Tuus, O regina, quid optes 77 explorare labor; mihi iussa capessere fas est.	71 So, in her fevered heart complaining still, 72 unto the storm-cloud land the goddess came, 73 a region with wild whirlwinds in its womb, 74 Aeolia named, where royal Aeolus 75 in a high-vaulted cavern keeps control 76 o'er warring winds and loud concourse of storms. 77 There closely pent in chains and bastions strong, 78 they, scornful, make the vacant mountain roar, 79 chafing against their bonds. But from a throne 80 of lofty crag, their king with sceptred hand 81 allays their fury and their rage confines. 82 Did he not so, our ocean, earth, and sky 83 were whirled before them through the vast inane. 84 But over-ruling Jove, of this in fear, 85 hid them in dungeon dark: then o'er them piled 86 huge mountains, and ordained a lawful king 87 to hold them in firm sway, or know what time, 88 with Jove's consent, to loose them o'er the world. 89 To him proud Juno thus made lowly plea: 90 “Thou in whose hands the Father of all gods 91 and Sovereign of mankind confides the power 92 to calm the waters or with winds upturn, 93 great Aeolus! a race with me at war 94 now sails the Tuscan main towards Italy, 95 bringing their Ilium and its vanquished powers. 96 Uprouse thy gales. Strike that proud navy down! 97 Hurl far and wide, and strew the waves with dead!

	78 Tu mihi, quodcumque hoc regni, tu sceptra Iovemque 79 concilias, tu das epulis accumbere divom, 80 nimborumque facis tempestatumque potentem. 81 Haec ubi dicta, cavum conversa cuspide montem 82 impulit in latus: ac venti, velut agmine facto, 83 qua data porta, ruunt et terras turbine perflant. 84 Incubuere mari, totumque a sedibus imis 85 una Eurusque Notusque ruunt creberque procellis 86 Africus, et vastos volvunt ad litora fluctus. 87 Insequitur clamorque virum stridorque rudentum. 88 Eripiunt subito nubes caelumque diemque 89 Teucrorum ex oculis; ponto nox incubat atra. 90 Intonuere poli, et crebris micat ignibus aether,	98 Twice seven nymphs are mine, of rarest mould; 99 of whom Deiopea, the most fair, 100 I give thee in true wedlock for thine own, 101 to mate thy noble worth; she at thy side 102 shall pass long, happy years, and fruitful bring 103 her beauteous offspring unto thee their sire.”
1.91	91 praesentemque viris intentant omnia mortem. 92 Extemplo Aeneae solvuntur frigore membra: 93 ingemit, et duplicis tendens ad sidera palmas 94 talia voce refert: O terque quaterque beati, 95 quis ante ora patrum Troiae sub moenibus altis 96 contigit oppetere! O Danaum fortissime gentis 97 Tydide! Mene Iliacis occumbere campis 98 non potuisse, tuaque animam hanc effundere dextra, 99 saevus ubi Aeacidae telo iacet Hector, ubi ingens 100 Sarpedon, ubi tot Simois correpta sub undis 101 scuta virum galeasque et fortia corpora volvit? 102 Talia iactanti stridens Aquilone procella 103 velum adversa ferit, fluctusque ad sidera tollit. 104 Franguntur remi; tum prora avertit, et undis 105 dat latus; insequitur cumulo praeruptus aquae mons. 106 Hi summo in fluctu pendent; his unda dehiscens	104 Then Aeolus: “'T is thy sole task, O Queen, 105 to weigh thy wish and will. My fealty 106 thy high behest obeys. This humble throne 107 is of thy gift. Thy smiles for me obtain 108 authority from Jove. Thy grace concedes 109 my station at your bright Olympian board, 110 and gives me lordship of the darkening storm.” 111 Replying thus, he smote with spear reversed 112 the hollow mountain's wall; then rush the winds 113 through that wide breach in long, embattled line, 114 and sweep tumultuous from land to land: 115 with brooding pinions o'er the waters spread, 116 east wind and south, and boisterous Afric gale 117 upturn the sea; vast billows shoreward roll; 118 the shout of mariners, the creak of cordage, 119 follow the shock; low-hanging clouds conceal 120 from Trojan eyes all sight of heaven and day; 121 night o'er the ocean broods; from sky to sky 122 the thunders roll, the ceaseless lightnings glare; 123 and all things mean swift death for mortal man. 124 Straightway Aeneas, shuddering with amaze, 125 groaned loud, upraised both holy hands to Heaven, 126 and thus did plead: “O thrice and four times blest, 127 ye whom your sires and whom the walls of

	107 terram inter fluctus aperit; furit aestus harenis. 108 Tris Notus abreptas in saxa latentia torquet— 109 saxa vocant Itali mediis quae in fluctibus aras— 110 dorsum immane mari summo; tris Eurus ab alto 111 in brevia et Syrtis urguet, miserabile visu, 112 inliditque vadis atque aggere cingit harenae. 113 Unam, quae Lycios fidumque vehebat Oronten, 114 ipsius ante oculos ingens a vertice pontus 115 in puppim ferit: excutitur pronusque magister 116 volvitur in caput; ast illam ter fluctus ibidem 117 torquet agens circum, et rapidus vorat aequore vortex. 118 Adparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto, 119 arma virum, tabulaeque, et Troia gaza per undas. 120 Iam validam Ilionei navem, iam fortis Achati,	Troy 128 looked on in your last hour! O bravest son 129 Greece ever bore, Tydides! O that I 130 had fallen on Ilian fields, and given this life 131 struck down by thy strong hand! where by the spear 132 of great Achilles, fiery Hector fell, 133 and huge Sarpedon; where the Simois 134 in furious flood engulfed and whirled away 135 so many helms and shields and heroes slain!”
1.121	121 et qua vectus Abas, et qua grandaevus Aletes, 122 vicit hiems; laxis laterum compagibus omnes 123 accipiunt inimicum imbrem, rimisque fatiscunt. 124 Interea magno misceri murmure pontum, 125 emissamque hiemem sensit Neptunus, et imis 126 stagna refusa vadis, graviter commotus; et alto 127 prospiciens, summa placidum caput extulit unda. 128 Disiectam Aeneae, toto videt aequore classem, 129 fluctibus oppressos Troas caelique ruina, 130 nec latuere doli fratrem Iunonis et irae. 131 Eurum ad se Zephyrumque vocat, dehinc talia fatur: 132 Tantane vos generis tenuit fiducia vestri? 133 Iam caelum terramque meo sine numine, venti, 134 miscere, et tantas audetis tollere moles? 135 Quos ego—sed motos praestat componere fluctus.	136 While thus he cried to Heaven, a shrieking blast 137 smote full upon the sail. Up surged the waves 138 to strike the very stars; in fragments flew 139 the shattered oars; the helpless vessel veered 140 and gave her broadside to the roaring flood, 141 where watery mountains rose and burst and fell. 142 Now high in air she hangs, then yawning gulfs 143 lay bare the shoals and sands o'er which she drives. 144 Three ships a whirling south wind snatched and flung 145 on hidden rocks,—altars of sacrifice 146 Italians call them, which lie far from shore 147 a vast ridge in the sea; three ships beside 148 an east wind, blowing landward from the deep, 149 drove on the shallows,—pitiable sight,— 150 and girdled them in walls of drifting sand. 151 That ship, which, with his friend Orontes, bore 152 the Lycian mariners, a great, plunging wave 153 struck straight astern, before Aeneas' eyes. 154 Forward the steersman rolled and o'er the side 155 fell headlong, while three times the circling flood 156 spun the light bark through swift engulfing seas. 157 Look, how the lonely swimmers breast the wave! 158 And on

	136 Post mihi non simili poena commissa luetis. 137 Maturate fugam, regique haec dicite vestro: 138 non illi imperium pelagi saevumque tridentem, 139 sed mihi sorte datum. Tenet ille immania saxa, 140 vestras, Eure, domos; illa se iactet in aula 141 Aeolus, et clauso ventorum carcere regnet. 142 Sic ait, et dicto citius tumida aequora placat, 143 collectasque fugat nubes, solemque reducit. 144 Cymothoe simul et Triton adnixus acuto 145 detrudunt navis scopulo; levat ipse tridenti; 146 et vastas aperit syrtis, et temperat aequor, 147 atque rotis summas levibus perlabitur undas. 148 Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est 149 seditio, saevitque animis ignobile volgus, 150 iamque faces et saxa volant—furor arma ministrat;	the waste of waters wide are seen 159 weapons of war, spars, planks, and treasures rare, 160 once Ilium's boast, all mingled with the storm. 161 Now o'er Achates and Ilioneus, 162 now o'er the ship of Abas or Aletes, 163 bursts the tempestuous shock; their loosened seams 164 yawn wide and yield the angry wave its will.
1.151	151 tum, pietate gravem ac meritis si forte virum quem 152 conspexere, silent, arrectisque auribus adstant; 153 ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet,— 154 sic cunctus pelagi cecidit fragor, aequora postquam 155 prospiciens genitor caeloque invectus aperto 156 flectit equos, curruque volans dat lora secundo. 157 Defessi Aeneadae, quae proxima litora, cursu 158 contendunt petere, et Libyae vertuntur ad oras. 159 Est in secessu longo locus: insula portum 160 efficit obiectu laterum, quibus omnis ab alto 161 frangitur inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos. 162 Hinc atque hinc vastae rupes geminique minantur 163 in caelum scopuli, quorum sub vertice late 164 aequora tuta silent; tum silvis scaena coruscis	165 Meanwhile how all his smitten ocean moaned, 166 and how the tempest's turbulent assault 167 had vexed the stillness of his deepest cave, 168 great Neptune knew; and with indignant mien 169 uplifted o'er the sea his sovereign brow. 170 He saw the Teucrian navy scattered far 171 along the waters; and Aeneas' men 172 o'erwhelmed in mingling shock of wave and sky. 173 Saturnian Juno's vengeful stratagem 174 her brother's royal glance failed not to see; 175 and loud to eastward and to westward calling, 176 he voiced this word:“What pride of birth or power 177 is yours, ye winds, that, reckless of my will, 178 audacious thus, ye ride through earth and heaven, 179 and stir these mountain waves? Such rebels I— 180 nay, first I calm this tumult! But yourselves 181 by heavier chastisement shall expiate 182 hereafter your bold trespass. Haste away 183 and bear your king this word! Not unto him 184 dominion o'er the seas and trident dread, 185 but unto me, Fate gives. Let him possess 186 wild mountain crags, thy favored haunt

	165 desuper horrentique atrum nemus imminet umbra. 166 Fronte sub adversa scopulis pendentibus antrum, 167 intus aquae dulces vivoque sedilia saxo, 168 nympharum domus: hic fessas non vincula navis 169 ulla tenent, unco non alligat ancora morsu. 170 Huc septem Aeneas collectis navibus omni 171 ex numero subit; ac magno telluris amore 172 egressi optata potiuntur Troes harena, 173 et sale tabentis artus in litore ponunt. 174 Ac primum silici scintillam excudit Achates, 175 succepitque ignem foliis, atque arida circum 176 nutrimenta dedit, rapuitque in fomite flammam. 177 Tum Cererem corruptam undis Cerealiaque arma 178 expediunt fessi rerum, frugesque receptas 179 et torrere parant flammis et frangere saxo. 180 Aeneas scopulum interea conscendit, et omnem	and home, 187 O Eurus! In his barbarous mansion there, 188 let Aeolus look proud, and play the king 189 in yon close-bounded prison-house of storms!”
1.181	181 prospectum late pelago petit, Anthea si quem 182 iactatum vento videat Phrygiasque biremis, 183 aut Capyn, aut celsis in puppibus arma Caici. 184 Navem in conspectu nullam, tris litore cervos 185 prospicit errantis; hos tota armenta sequuntur 186 a tergo, et longum per vallis pascitur agmen. 187 Constitit hic, arcumque manu celerisque sagittas 188 corripuit, fidus quae tela gerebat Achates; 189 ductoresque ipsos primum, capita alta ferentis 190 cornibus arboreis, sternit, tum volgus, et omnem 191 miscet agens telis nemora inter frondea turbam; 192 nec prius absistit, quam septem ingentia victor 193 corpora fundat humi, et numerum cum navibus aequet.	190 He spoke, and swiftlier than his word subdued 191 the swelling of the floods; dispersed afar 192 th' assembled clouds, and brought back light to heaven. 193 Cymothoe then and Triton, with huge toil, 194 thrust down the vessels from the sharp-edged reef; 195 while, with the trident, the great god's own hand 196 assists the task; then, from the sand-strewn shore 197 out-ebbing far, he calms the whole wide sea, 198 and glides light-wheeled along the crested foam. 199 As when, with not unwonted tumult, roars 200 in some vast city a rebellious mob, 201 and base-born passions in its bosom burn, 202 till rocks and blazing torches fill the air 203 (rage never lacks for arms)—if haply then 204 some wise man comes, whose reverend looks attest 205 a life to duty given, swift silence falls; 206 all ears are turned attentive; and he sways 207 with clear and soothing speech the people's will. 208 So ceased the sea's uproar, when its grave Sire 209 looked o'er th'

	194 Hinc portum petit, et socios partitur in omnes. 195 Vina bonus quae deinde cadis onerarat Acestes 196 litore Trinacrio dederatque abeuntibus heros, 197 dividit, et dictis maerentia pectora mulcet: 198 O socii—neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum— 199 O passi graviora, dabit deus his quoque finem. 200 Vos et Scyllaeam rabiem penitusque sonantis 201 accestis scopulos, vos et Cyclopea saxa 202 experti: revocate animos, maestumque timorem 203 mittite: forsan et haec olim meminisse iuvabit. 204 Per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum 205 tendimus in Latium; sedes ubi fata quietas 206 ostendunt; illic fas regna resurgere Troiae. 207 Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis. 208 Talia voce refert, curisque ingentibus aeger 209 spem voltu simulat, premit altum corde dolorem. 210 Illi se praedae accingunt, dapibusque futuris;	expanse, and, riding on in light, 210 flung free rein to his winged obedient car.
1.211	211 tergora deripiunt costis et viscera nudant; 212 pars in frusta secant veribusque trementia figunt; 213 litore aena locant alii, flammasque ministrant. 214 Tum victu revocant vires, fusique per herbam 215 implentur veteris Bacchi pinguisque ferinae. 216 Postquam exempta fames epulis mensaeque remotae, 217 amissos longo socios sermone requirunt, 218 spemque metumque inter dubii, seu vivere credant, 219 sive extrema pati nec iam exaudire vocatos. 220 Praecipue pius Aeneas nunc acris Oronti, 221 nunc Amyci casum gemit et crudelia secum 222 fata Lyci, fortemque Gyan, fortemque Cloanthum.	211 Aeneas' wave-worn crew now landward made, 212 and took the nearest passage, whither lay 213 the coast of Libya. A haven there 214 walled in by bold sides of a rocky isle, 215 offers a spacious and secure retreat, 216 where every billow from the distant main 217 breaks, and in many a rippling curve retires. 218 Huge crags and two confronted promontories 219 frown heaven-high, beneath whose brows outspread 220 the silent, sheltered waters; on the heights 221 the bright and glimmering foliage seems to show 222 a woodland amphitheatre; and yet higher 223 rises a straight-stemmed grove of dense, dark shade. 224 Fronting on these a grotto may be seen, 225 o'erhung by steep cliffs; from its inmost wall 226 clear springs gush out; and shelving seats it has 227 of unhewn stone, a place the wood-nymphs love. 228 In such a port, a weary ship rides free 229

	223 Et iam finis erat, cum Iuppiter aethere summo 224 despiciens mare velivolum terrasque iacentis 225 litoraque et latos populos, sic vertice caeli 226 constitit, et Libyae defixit lumina regnis. 227 Atque illum talis iactantem pectore curas 228 tristior et lacrimis oculos suffusa nitentis 229 adloquitur Venus: O qui res hominumque deumque 230 aeternis regis imperiis, et fulmine terres, 231 quid meus Aeneas in te committere tantum, 232 quid Troes potuere, quibus, tot funera passis, 233 cunctus ob Italiam terrarum clauditur orbis? 234 Certe hinc Romanos olim, volventibus annis, 235 hinc fore ductores, revocato a sanguine Teucri, 236 qui mare, qui terras omni dicione tenerent, 237 pollicitus, quae te, genitor, sententia vertit? 238 Hoc equidem occasum Troiae tristisque ruinas 239 solabar, fatis contraria fata rependens; 240 nunc eadem fortuna viros tot casibus actos	of weight of firm-fluked anchor or strong chain. 230 Hither Aeneas of his scattered fleet 231 saving but seven, into harbor sailed; 232 with passionate longing for the touch of land, 233 forth leap the Trojans to the welcome shore, 234 and fling their dripping limbs along the ground. 235 Then good Achates smote a flinty stone, 236 secured a flashing spark, heaped on light leaves, 237 and with dry branches nursed the mounting flame. 238 Then Ceres' gift from the corrupting sea 239 they bring away; and wearied utterly 240 ply Ceres' cunning on the rescued corn, 241 and parch in flames, and mill 'twixt two smooth stones. 242 Aeneas meanwhile climbed the cliffs, and searched 243 the wide sea-prospect; haply Antheus there, 244 storm-buffeted, might sail within his ken, 245 with biremes, and his Phrygian mariners, 246 or Capys or Caicus armor-clad, 247 upon a towering deck. No ship is seen; 248 but while he looks, three stags along the shore 249 come straying by, and close behind them comes 250 the whole herd, browsing through the lowland vale 251 in one long line. Aeneas stopped and seized 252 his bow and swift-winged arrows, which his friend, 253 trusty Achates, close beside him bore. 254 His first shafts brought to earth the lordly heads 255 of the high-antlered chiefs; his next assailed 256 the general herd, and drove them one and all 257 in panic through the leafy wood, nor ceased 258 the victory of his bow, till on the ground 259 lay seven huge forms, one gift for every ship. 260 Then back to shore he sped, and to his friends 261 distributed the spoil, with that rare wine 262 which good Acestes while in Sicily 263 had stored in jars, and prince-like sent away 264 with his Ioved guest;—this too Aeneas gave; 265 and with these words their mournful mood consoled.
1.241	241 insequitur. Quem das finem, rex magne, laborum? 242 Antenor potuit, mediis elapsus Achivis, 243 Illyricos penetrare sinus, atque intima tutus 244 regna Liburnorum, et fontem superare Timavi, 245 unde per ora novem vasto cum murmure montis	266 “Companions mine, we have not failed to feel 267 calamity till now. O, ye have borne 268 far heavier sorrow: Jove will make an end 269 also of this. Ye sailed a course hard by 270 infuriate Scylla's howling cliffs and caves. 271 Ye knew the Cyclops' crags. Lift up your hearts! 272 No more complaint and fear! It well may be 273 some happier hour will find this memory fair. 274

	246 it mare proruptum et pelago premit arva sonanti. 247 Hic tamen ille urbem Patavi sedesque locavit 248 Teucrorum, et genti nomen dedit, armaque fixit 249 Troia; nunc placida compostus pace quiescit: 250 nos, tua progenies, caeli quibus adnuis arcem, 251 navibus (infandum!) amissis, unius ob iram 252 prodimur atque Italis longe disiungimur oris. 253 Hic pietatis honos? Sic nos in sceptra reponis? 254 Olli subridens hominum sator atque deorum, 255 voltu, quo caelum tempestatesque serenat, 256 oscula libavit natae, dehinc talia fatur: 257 Parce metu, Cytherea: manent immota tuorum 258 fata tibi; cernes urbem et promissa Lavini 259 moenia, sublimemque feres ad sidera caeli 260 magnanimum Aenean; neque me sententia vertit. 261 Hic tibi (fabor enim, quando haec te cura remordet, 262 longius et volvens fatorum arcana movebo) 263 bellum ingens geret Italia, populosque feroces 264 contundet, moresque viris et moenia ponet, 265 tertia dum Latio regnantem viderit aestas, 266 ternaque transierint Rutulis hiberna subactis. 267 At puer Ascanius, cui nunc cognomen Iulo 268 additur,—Ilus erat, dum res stetit Ilia regno,— 269 triginta magnos volvendis mensibus orbis 270 imperio explebit, regnumque ab sede Lavini	Through chance and change and hazard without end, 275 our goal is Latium; where our destinies 276 beckon to blest abodes, and have ordained 277 that Troy shall rise new-born! Have patience all! 278 And bide expectantly that golden day.”
1.271	271 transferet, et longam multa vi muniet Albam. 272 Hic iam ter centum totos regnabitur annos 273 gente sub Hectorea, donec regina sacerdos, 274 Marte gravis, geminam partu dabit Ilia prolem.	279 Such was his word, but vexed with grief and care, 280 feigned hopes upon his forehead firm he wore, 281 and locked within his heart a hero's pain. 282 Now round the welcome trophies of his chase 283 they gather for a feast. Some flay the ribs 284 and bare the flesh below; some slice with knives, 285

	275 Inde lupae fulvo nutricis tegmine laetus 276 Romulus excipiet gentem, et Mavortia condet 277 moenia, Romanosque suo de nomine dicet. 278 His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono; 279 imperium sine fine dedi. Quin aspera Iuno, 280 quae mare nunc terrasque metu caelumque fatigat, 281 consilia in melius referet, mecumque fovebit 282 Romanos rerum dominos gentemque togatam: 283 sic placitum. Veniet lustris labentibus aetas, 284 cum domus Assaraci Phthiam clarasque Mycenas 285 servitio premet, ac victis dominabitur Argis. 286 Nascetur pulchra Troianus origine Caesar, 287 imperium oceano, famam qui terminet astris,— 288 Iulius, a magno demissum nomen Iulo. 289 Hunc tu olim caelo, spoliis Orientis onustum, 290 accipies secura; vocabitur hic quoque votis. 291 Aspera tum positis mitescent saecula bellis; 292 cana Fides, et Vesta, Remo cum fratre Quirinus, 293 iura dabunt; dirae ferro et compagibus artis 294 claudentur Belli portae; Furor impius intus, 295 saeva sedens super arma, et centum vinctus aenis 296 post tergum nodis, fremet horridus ore cruento. 297 Haec ait, et Maia genitum demittit ab alto, 298 ut terrae, utque novae pateant Karthaginis arces 299 hospitio Teucris, ne fati nescia Dido 300 finibus arceret: volat ille per aera magnum	and on keen prongs the quivering strips impale, 286 place cauldrons on the shore, and fan the fires. 287 Then, stretched at ease on couch of simple green, 288 they rally their lost powers, and feast them well 289 on seasoned wine and succulent haunch of game. 290 But hunger banished and the banquet done, 291 in long discourse of their lost mates they tell, 292 'twixt hopes and fears divided; for who knows 293 whether the lost ones live, or strive with death, 294 or heed no more whatever voice may call? 295 Chiefly Aeneas now bewails his friends, 296 Orontes brave and fallen Amycus, 297 or mourns with grief untold the untimely doom 298 of bold young Gyas and Cloanthus bold. 299 After these things were past, exalted Jove, 300 from his ethereal sky surveying clear 301 the seas all winged with sails, lands widely spread, 302 and nations populous from shore to shore, 303 paused on the peak of heaven, and fixed his gaze 304 on Libya. But while he anxious mused, 305 near him, her radiant eyes all dim with tears, 306 nor smiling any more, Venus approached, 307 and thus complained: “O thou who dost control 308 things human and divine by changeless laws, 309 enthroned in awful thunder! What huge wrong 310 could my Aeneas and his Trojans few 311 achieve against thy power? For they have borne 312 unnumbered deaths, and, failing Italy, 313 the gates of all the world against them close. 314 Hast thou not given us thy covenant 315 that hence the Romans when the rolling years 316 have come full cycle, shall arise to power 317 from Troy's regenerate seed, and rule supreme 318 the unresisted lords of land and sea? 319 O Sire, what swerves thy will? How oft have I 320 in Troy's most lamentable wreck and woe 321 consoled my heart with this, and balanced oft 322 our destined good against our destined ill! 323 But the same stormful fortune still pursues 324 my band of heroes on their perilous way. 325 When shall these labors cease, O glorious King? 326 Antenor, though th' Achaeans pressed him sore, 327 found his way forth, and entered unassailed 328 Illyria's haven, and the guarded land

1.301	301 remigio alarum, ac Libyae citus adstitit oris. 302 Et iam iussa facit, ponuntque ferocia Poeni 303 corda volente deo; in primis regina quietum 304 accipit in Teucros animum mentemque benignam. 305 At pius Aeneas, per noctem plurima volvens, 306 ut primum lux alma data est, exire locosque 307 explorare novos, quas vento accesserit oras, 308 qui teneant, nam inculta videt, hominesne feraene, 309 quaerere constituit, sociisque exacta referre 310 Classem in convexo nemorum sub rupe cavata 311 arboribus clausam circum atque horrentibus umbris 312 occulit; ipse uno graditur comitatus Achate, 313 bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro. 314 Cui mater media sese tulit obvia silva, 315 virginis os habitumque gerens, et virginis arma 316 Spartanae, vel qualis equos Threissa fatigat 317 Harpalyce, volucremque fuga praevertitur Hebrum. 318 Namque umeris de more habilem suspenderat arcum 319 venatrix, dederatque comam diffundere ventis, 320 nuda genu, nodoque sinus collecta fluentis. 321 Ac prior, Heus inquit iuvenes, monstrate mearum 322 vidistis si quam hic errantem forte sororum, 323 succinctam pharetra et maculosae tegmine lyncis, 324 aut spumantis apri cursum clamore prementem. 325 Sic Venus; et Veneris contra sic filius orsus: 326 Nulla tuarum audita mihi neque visa sororum— 327 O quam te memorem, virgo? Namque haud tibi voltus 328 mortalis, nec vox hominem sonat: O, dea certe— 329 an Phoebi soror? an nympharum sanguinis una?—	329 of the Liburni. Straight up stream he sailed 330 where like a swollen sea Timavus pours 331 a nine-fold flood from roaring mountain gorge, 332 and whelms with voiceful wave the fields below. 333 He built Patavium there, and fixed abodes 334 for Troy's far-exiled sons; he gave a name 335 to a new land and race; the Trojan arms 336 were hung on temple walls; and, to this day, 337 lying in perfect peace, the hero sleeps. 338 But we of thine own seed, to whom thou dost 339 a station in the arch of heaven assign, 340 behold our navy vilely wrecked, because 341 a single god is angry; we endure 342 this treachery and violence, whereby 343 wide seas divide us from th' Hesperian shore. 344 Is this what piety receives? Or thus 345 doth Heaven's decree restore our fallen thrones?”

	330 sis felix, nostrumque leves, quaecumque, laborem,
1.331	331 et, quo sub caelo tandem, quibus orbis in oris 332 iactemur, doceas. Ignari hominumque locorumque 333 erramus, vento huc vastis et fluctibus acti: 334 multa tibi ante aras nostra cadet hostia dextra. 335 Tum Venus: Haud equidem tali me dignor honore; 336 virginibus Tyriis mos est gestare pharetram, 337 purpureoque alte suras vincire cothurno. 338 Punica regna vides, Tyrios et Agenoris urbem; 339 sed fines Libyci, genus intractabile bello. 340 Imperium Dido Tyria regit urbe profecta, 341 germanum fugiens. Longa est iniuria, longae 342 ambages; sed summa sequar fastigia rerum. 343 Huic coniunx Sychaeus erat, ditissimus agri 344 Phoenicum, et magno miserae dilectus amore, 345 cui pater intactam dederat, primisque iugarat 346 ominibus. Sed regna Tyri germanus habebat 347 Pygmalion, scelere ante alios immanior omnes. 348 Quos inter medius venit furor. Ille Sychaeum 349 impius ante aras, atque auri caecus amore, 350 clam ferro incautum superat, securus amorum 351 germanae; factumque diu celavit, et aegram, 352 multa malus simulans, vana spe lusit amantem. 353 Ipsa sed in somnis inhumati venit imago 354 coniugis, ora modis attollens pallida miris, 355 crudeles aras traiectaque pectora ferro 356 nudavit, caecumque domus scelus omne retexit. 357 Tum celerare fugam patriaque excedere suadet, 358 auxiliumque viae veteres tellure recludit	346 Smiling reply, the Sire of gods and men, 347 with such a look as clears the skies of storm 348 chastely his daughter kissed, and thus spake on: 349 “Let Cytherea cast her fears away! 350 Irrevocably blest the fortunes be 351 of thee and thine. Nor shalt thou fail to see 352 that City, and the proud predestined wall 353 encompassing Lavinium. Thyself 354 shall starward to the heights of heaven bear 355 Aeneas the great-hearted. Nothing swerves 356 my will once uttered. Since such carking cares 357 consume thee, I this hour speak freely forth, 358 and leaf by leaf the book of fate unfold. 359 Thy son in Italy shall wage vast war 360 and, quell its nations wild; his city-wall 361 and sacred laws shall be a mighty bond 362 about his gathered people. Summers three 363 shall Latium call him king; and three times pass 364 the winter o'er Rutulia's vanquished hills. 365 His heir, Ascanius, now Iulus called 366 (Ilus it was while Ilium's kingdom stood), 367 full thirty months shall reign, then move the throne 368 from the Lavinian citadel, and build 369 for Alba Longa its well-bastioned wall.

	359 thesauros, ignotum argenti pondus et auri. 360 His commota fugam Dido sociosque parabat:
1.361	361 conveniunt, quibus aut odium crudele tyranni 362 aut metus acer erat; navis, quae forte paratae, 363 corripiunt, onerantque auro: portantur avari 364 Pygmalionis opes pelago; dux femina facti. 365 Devenere locos, ubi nunc ingentia cernis 366 moenia surgentemque novae Karthaginis arcem, 367 mercatique solum, facti de nomine Byrsam, 368 taurino quantum possent circumdare tergo. 369 Sed vos qui tandem, quibus aut venistis ab oris, 370 quove tenetis iter? Quaerenti talibus ille 371 suspirans, imoque trahens a pectore vocem: 372 O dea, si prima repetens ab origine pergam, 373 et vacet annalis nostrorum audire laborum, 374 ante diem clauso componat Vesper Olympo. 375 Nos Troia antiqua, si vestras forte per auris 376 Troiae nomen iit, diversa per aequora vectos 377 forte sua Libycis tempestas adpulit oris. 378 Sum pius Aeneas, raptos qui ex hoste Penates 379 classe veho mecum, fama super aethera notus. 380 Italiam quaero patriam et genus ab Iove summo. 381 Bis denis Phrygium conscendi navibus aequor, 382 matre dea monstrante viam, data fata secutus; 383 vix septem convolsae undis Euroque supersunt. 384 Ipse ignotus, egens, Libyae deserta peragro, 385 Europa atque Asia pulsus. Nec plura querentem 386 passa Venus medio sic interfata dolore est: 387 Quisquis es, haud, credo, invisus caelestibus auras	370 Here three full centuries shall Hector's race 371 have kingly power; till a priestess queen, 372 by Mars conceiving, her twin offspring bear; 373 then Romulus, wolf-nursed and proudly clad 374 in tawny wolf-skin mantle, shall receive 375 the sceptre of his race. He shall uprear 376 and on his Romans his own name bestow. 377 To these I give no bounded times or power, 378 but empire without end. Yea, even my Queen, 379 Juno, who now chastiseth land and sea 380 with her dread frown, will find a wiser way, 381 and at my sovereign side protect and bless 382 the Romans, masters of the whole round world, 383 who, clad in peaceful toga, judge mankind. 384 Such my decree! In lapse of seasons due, 385 the heirs of Ilium's kings shall bind in chains 386 Mycenae's glory and Achilles' towers, 387 and over prostrate Argos sit supreme. 388 Of Trojan stock illustriously sprung, 389 lo, Caesar comes! whose power the ocean bounds, 390 whose fame, the skies. He shall receive the name 391 Iulus nobly bore, great Julius, he. 392 Him to the skies, in Orient trophies dress, 393 thou shalt with smiles receive; and he, like us, 394 shall hear at his own shrines the suppliant vow. 395 Then will the world grow mild; the battle-sound 396 will be forgot; for olden Honor then, 397 with spotless Vesta, and the brothers twain, 398 Remus and Romulus, at strife no more, 399 will publish sacred laws. The dreadful gates 400 whence issueth war, shall with close-jointed steel 401 be barred impregnably; and prisoned there 402 the heaven-offending Fury, throned on swords, 403 and fettered by a hundred brazen chains, 404 shall belch vain curses from his lips of gore.”

	388 vitalis carpis, Tyriam qui adveneris urbem. 389 Perge modo, atque hinc te reginae ad limina perfer, 390 Namque tibi reduces socios classemque relatam
1.391	391 nuntio, et in tutum versis aquilonibus actam, 392 ni frustra augurium vani docuere parentes. 393 Aspice bis senos laetantis agmine cycnos, 394 aetheria quos lapsa plaga Iovis ales aperto 395 turbabat caelo; nunc terras ordine longo 396 aut capere, aut captas iam despectare videntur: 397 ut reduces illi ludunt stridentibus alis, 398 et coetu cinxere polum, cantusque dedere, 399 haud aliter puppesque tuae pubesque tuorum 400 aut portum tenet aut pleno subit ostia velo. 401 Perge modo, et, qua te ducit via, dirige gressum. 402 Dixit, et avertens rosea cervice refulsit, 403 ambrosiaeque comae divinum vertice odorem 404 spiravere, pedes vestis defluxit ad imos, 405 et vera incessu patuit dea. Ille ubi matrem 406 adgnovit, tali fugientem est voce secutus: 407 Quid natum totiens, crudelis tu quoque, falsis 408 ludis imaginibus? Cur dextrae iungere dextram 409 non datur, ac veras audire et reddere voces? 410 Talibus incusat, gressumque ad moenia tendit: 411 at Venus obscuro gradientes aere saepsit, 412 et multo nebulae circum dea fudit amictu, 413 cernere ne quis eos, neu quis contingere posset, 414 molirive moram, aut veniendi poscere causas. 415 Ipsa Paphum sublimis abit, sedesque revisit 416 laeta suas, ubi templum illi, centumque Sabaeo	405 These words he gave, and summoned Maia's son, 406 the herald Mercury, who earthward flying, 407 should bid the Tyrian realms and new-built towers 408 welcome the Trojan waifs; lest Dido, blind 409 to Fate's decree, should thrust them from the land. 410 He takes his flight, with rhythmic stroke of wing, 411 across th' abyss of air, and soon draws near 412 unto the Libyan mainland. He fulfils 413 his heavenly task; the Punic hearts of stone 414 grow soft beneath the effluence divine; 415 and, most of all, the Queen, with heart at ease 416 awaits benignantly her guests from Troy. 417 But good Aeneas, pondering all night long 418 his many cares, when first the cheerful dawn 419 upon him broke, resolved to take survey 420 of this strange country whither wind and wave 421 had driven him,—for desert land it seemed,— 422 to learn what tribes of man or beast possess 423 a place so wild, and careful tidings bring 424 back to his friends. His fleet of ships the while, 425 where dense, dark groves o'er-arch a hollowed crag, 426 he left encircled in far-branching shade. 427 Then with no followers save his trusty friend 428 Achates, he went forth upon his way, 429 two broad-tipped javelins poising in his hand. 430 Deep to the midmost wood he went, and there 431 his Mother in his path uprose; she seemed 432 in garb and countenance a maid, and bore, 433 like Spartan maids, a weapon; in such guise 434 Harpalyce the Thracian urges on 435 her panting coursers and in wild career 436 outstrips impetuous Hebrus as it flows. 437 Over her lovely shoulders was a bow, 438 slender and light, as fits a huntress fair; 439 her golden tresses without wimple moved 440 in every wind, and girded in a knot 441 her undulant vesture bared her marble knees. 442 She hailed them thus: “Ho, sirs, I pray you tell 443 if haply ye have noted, as ye came, 444 one of my sisters in this wood astray? 445 She bore a quiver, and a lynx's hide

	417 ture calent arae, sertisque recentibus halant. 418 Corripuere viam interea, qua semita monstrat. 419 Iamque ascendebant collem, qui plurimus urbi 420 imminet, adversasque adspectat desuper arces.	446 her spotted mantle was; perchance she roused 447 some foaming boar, and chased with loud halloo.”
1.421	421 Miratur molem Aeneas, magalia quondam, 422 miratur portas strepitumque et strata viarum. 423 Instant ardentes Tyrii pars ducere muros, 424 molirique arcem et manibus subvolvere saxa, 425 pars optare locum tecto et concludere sulco. 426 427 hic portus alii effodiunt; hic alta theatris 428 fundamenta locant alii, immanisque columnas 429 rupibus excidunt, scaenis decora alta futuris. 430 Qualis apes aestate nova per florea rura 431 exercet sub sole labor, cum gentis adultos 432 educunt fetus, aut cum liquentia mella 433 stipant et dulci distendunt nectare cellas, 434 aut onera accipiunt venientum, aut agmine facto 435 ignavom fucos pecus a praesepibus arcent: 436 fervet opus, redolentque thymo fragrantia mella. 437 O fortunati, quorum iam moenia surgunt! 438 Aeneas ait, et fastigia suspicit urbis. 439 Infert se saeptus nebula, mirabile dictu, 440 per medios, miscetque viris, neque cernitur ulli. 441 Lucus in urbe fuit media, laetissimus umbra, 442 quo primum iactati undis et turbine Poeni 443 effodere loco signum, quod regia Iuno 444 monstrarat, caput acris equi; sic nam fore bello 445 egregiam et facilem victu per saecula gentem. 446 Hic templum Iunoni ingens Sidonia	448 So Venus spoke, and Venus' son replied: 449 “No voice or vision of thy sister fair 450 has crossed my path, thou maid without a name! 451 Thy beauty seems not of terrestrial mould, 452 nor is thy music mortal! Tell me, goddess, 453 art thou bright Phoebus' sister? Or some nymph, 454 the daughter of a god? Whate'er thou art, 455 thy favor we implore, and potent aid 456 in our vast toil. Instruct us of what skies, 457 or what world's end, our storm-swept lives have found! 458 Strange are these lands and people where we rove, 459 compelled by wind and wave. Lo, this right hand 460 shall many a victim on thine altar slay!”

	Dido 447 condebat, donis opulentum et numine divae, 448 aerea cui gradibus surgebant limina, nexaeque 449 aere trabes, foribus cardo stridebat aenis. 450 Hoc primum in luco nova res oblata timorem
1.451	451 leniit, hic primum Aeneas sperare salutem 452 ausus, et adflictis melius confidere rebus. 453 Namque sub ingenti lustrat dum singula templo, 454 reginam opperiens, dum, quae fortuna sit urbi, 455 artificumque manus inter se operumque laborem 456 miratur, videt Iliacas ex ordine pugnas, 457 bellaque iam fama totum volgata per orbem, 458 Atridas, Priamumque, et saevum ambobus Achillem. 459 Constitit, et lacrimans, Quis iam locus inquit Achate, 460 quae regio in terris nostri non plena laboris? 461 En Priamus! Sunt hic etiam sua praemia laudi; 462 sunt lacrimae rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt. 463 Solve metus; feret haec aliquam tibi fama salutem. 464 Sic ait, atque animum pictura pascit inani, 465 multa gemens, largoque umectat flumine voltum. 466 Namque videbat, uti bellantes Pergama circum 467 hac fugerent Graii, premeret Troiana iuventus, 468 hac Phryges, instaret curru cristatus Achilles. 469 Nec procul hinc Rhesi niveis tentoria velis 470 adgnoscit lacrimans, primo quae prodita somno 471 Tydides multa vastabat caede cruentus, 472 ardentisque avertit equos in castra, prius quam 473 pabula gustassent Troiae Xanthumque bibissent. 474 Parte alia fugiens amissis Troilus armis, 475 infelix puer atque impar	461 Then Venus: “Nay, I boast not to receive 462 honors divine. We Tyrian virgins oft 463 bear bow and quiver, and our ankles white 464 lace up in purple buskin. Yonder lies 465 the Punic power, where Tyrian masters hold 466 Agenor's town; but on its borders dwell 467 the Libyans, by battles unsubdued. 468 Upon the throne is Dido, exiled there 469 from Tyre, to flee th' unnatural enmity 470 of her own brother. 'T was an ancient wrong; 471 too Iong the dark and tangled tale would be; 472 I trace the larger outline of her story: 473 Sichreus was her spouse, whose acres broad 474 no Tyrian lord could match, and he was-blessed 475 by his ill-fated lady's fondest love, 476 whose father gave him her first virgin bloom 477 in youthful marriage. But the kingly power 478 among the Tyrians to her brother came, 479 Pygmalion, none deeper dyed in crime 480 in all that land. Betwixt these twain there rose 481 a deadly hatred,—and the impious wretch, 482 blinded by greed, and reckless utterly 483 of his fond sister's joy, did murder foul 484 upon defenceless and unarmed Sichaeus, 485 and at the very altar hewed him down. 486 Long did he hide the deed, and guilefully 487 deceived with false hopes, and empty words, 488 her grief and stricken love. But as she slept, 489 her husband's tombless ghost before her came, 490 with face all wondrous pale, and he laid bare congressus Achilli, 476 fertur equis, curruque haeret resupinus inani, 477 lora tenens tamen; huic cervixque comaeque trahuntur 478 per terram, et versa pulvis inscribitur hasta. 479 Interea ad templum non aequae Palladis ibant 480 crinibus Iliades passis peplumque ferebant, 1.481	481 suppliciter tristes et tunsae pectora palmis; 482 diva solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat. 483 Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros, 484 exanimumque auro corpus vendebat Achilles. 485 Tum vero ingentem gemitum dat pectore ab imo, 486 ut spolia, ut currus, utque ipsum corpus amici, 487 tendentemque manus Priamum conspexit inermis. 488 Se quoque principibus permixtum adgnovit Achivis, 489 Eoasque acies et nigri Memnonis arma. 490 Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis 491 Penthesilea furens, mediisque in milibus ardet, 492 aurea subnectens exsertae cingula mammae, 493 bellatrix, audetque viris concurrere virgo. 494 Haec dum Dardanio Aeneae miranda videntur, 495 dum stupet, obtutuque haeret defixus in uno, 496 regina ad templum, forma pulcherrima Dido, 497 incessit magna iuvenum stipante caterva. 498 Qualis in Eurotae ripis aut per iuga Cynthi 499 exercet Diana choros, quam mille secutae 500 hinc atque hinc glomerantur oreades; illa pharetram 501 fert umero, gradiensque deas supereminet omnis: 502 Latonae tacitum pertemptant gaudia pectus: 503 talis erat Dido, talem se laeta ferebat 504 per medios, instans operi	491 his heart with dagger pierced, disclosing so 492 the blood-stained altar and the infamy 493 that darkened now their house. His counsel was 494 to fly, self-banished, from her ruined land, 495 and for her journey's aid, he whispered where 496 his buried treasure lay, a weight unknown 497 of silver and of gold. Thus onward urged, 498 Dido, assembling her few trusted friends, 499 prepared her flight. There rallied to her cause 500 all who did hate and scorn the tyrant king, 501 or feared his cruelty. They seized his ships, 502 which haply rode at anchor in the bay, 503 and loaded them with gold; the hoarded wealth 504 of vile and covetous Pygmalion 505 they took to sea. A woman wrought this deed. 506 Then came they to these lands where now thine eyes 507 behold yon walls and yonder citadel 508 of newly rising Carthage. For a price 509 they measured round so much of Afric soil 510 as one bull's hide encircles, and the spot 511 received its name, the Byrsa. But, I pray, 512 what men are ye? from what far land arrived, 513 and whither going?” When she questioned thus, 514 her son, with sighs that rose from his heart's depths, 515 this answer gave:

	regnisque futuris. 505 Tum foribus divae, media testudine templi, 506 saepta armis, solioque alte subnixa resedit. 507 Iura dabat legesque viris, operumque laborem 508 partibus aequabat iustis, aut sorte trahebat: 509 cum subito Aeneas concursu accedere magno 510 Anthea Sergestumque videt fortemque Cloanthum, 1.511	511 Teucrorumque alios, ater quos aequore turbo 512 dispulerat penitusque alias avexerat oras. 513 Obstipuit simul ipse simul perculsus Achates 514 laetitiaque metuque; avidi coniungere dextras 515 ardebant; sed res animos incognita turbat. 516 Dissimulant, et nube cava speculantur amicti, 517 quae fortuna viris, classem quo litore linquant, 518 quid veniant; cunctis nam lecti navibus ibant, 519 orantes veniam, et templum clamore petebant. 520 Postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi, 521 maxumus Ilioneus placido sic pectore coepit: 522 O Regina, novam cui condere Iuppiter urbem 523 iustitiaque dedit gentis frenare superbas, 524 Troes te miseri, ventis maria omnia vecti, 525 oramus, prohibe infandos a navibus ignis, 526 parce pio generi, et propius res aspice nostras. 527 Non nos aut ferro Libycos populare Penatis 528 venimus, aut raptas ad litora vertere praedas; 529 non ea vis animo, nec tanta superbia victis. 530 Est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt, 531 terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glaebae; 532 Oenotri coluere viri; nunc fama minores 533 Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine	516 “Divine one, if I tell 517 my woes and burdens all, and thou could'st pause 518 to heed the tale, first would the vesper star 519 th' Olympian portals close, and bid the day 520 in slumber lie. Of ancient Troy are we— 521 if aught of Troy thou knowest! As we roved 522 from sea to sea, the hazard of the storm 523 cast us up hither on this Libyan coast. 524 I am Aeneas, faithful evermore 525 to Heaven's command; and in my ships I bear 526 my gods ancestral, which I snatched away 527 from peril of the foe. My fame is known 528 above the stars. I travel on in quest 529 of Italy, my true home-land, and I 530 from Jove himself may trace my birth divine. 531 With twice ten ships upon the Phryglan main 532 I launched away. My mother from the skies 533 gave guidance, and I wrought what Fate ordained. 534 Yet now scarce seven shattered ships survive 535 the shock of wind and wave; and I myself 536 friendless, bereft, am wandering up and down 537 this Libyan wilderness! Behold me here, 538 from Europe and from Asia exiled still!” 539 But Venus could not let him longer plain, 540 and stopped his grief midway:

	gentem. 534 Hic cursus fuit: 535 cum subito adsurgens fluctu nimbosus Orion 536 in vada caeca tulit, penitusque procacibus austris 537 perque undas, superante salo, perque invia saxa 538 dispulit; huc pauci vestris adnavimus oris. 539 Quod genus hoc hominum? Quaeve hunc tam barbara morem 540 permittit patria? Hospitio prohibemur harenae;
1.541	541 bella cient, primaque vetant consistere terra. 542 Si genus humanum et mortalia temnitis arma 543 at sperate deos memores fandi atque nefandi. 544 Rex erat Aeneas nobis, quo iustior alter, 545 nec pietate fuit, nec bello maior et armis. 546 Quem si fata virum servant, si vescitur aura 547 aetheria, neque adhuc crudelibus occubat umbris, 548 non metus; officio nec te certasse priorem 549 paeniteat. Sunt et Siculis regionibus urbes 550 arvaque, Troianoque a sanguine clarus Acestes. 551 Quassatam ventis liceat subducere classem, 552 et silvis aptare trabes et stringere remos: 553 si datur Italiam, sociis et rege recepto, 554 tendere, ut Italiam laeti Latiumque petamus; 555 sin absumpta salus, et te, pater optume Teucrum, 556 pontus habet Lybiae, nec spes iam restat Iuli, 557 at freta Sicaniae saltem sedesque paratas, 558 unde huc advecti, regemque petamus Acesten. 559 Talibus Ilioneus; cuncti simul ore fremebant 560 Dardanidae. 561 Tum breviter Dido, voltum demissa, profatur: 562 Solvite corde metum, Teucri, secludite curas. 563 Res dura et regni novitas me talia	541 “Whoe'er thou art, 542 I deem that not unblest of heavenly powers, 543 with vital breath still thine, thou comest hither 544 unto our Tyrian town. Go steadfast on, 545 and to the royal threshold make thy way! 546 I bring thee tidings that thy comrades all 547 are safe at land; and all thy ships, conveyed 548 by favoring breezes, safe at anchor lie; 549 or else in vain my parents gave me skill 550 to read the skies. Look up at yonder swans! 551 A flock of twelve, whose gayly fluttering file, 552 erst scattered by Jove's eagle swooping down 553 from his ethereal haunt, now form anew 554 their long-drawn line, and make a landing-place, 555 or, hovering over, scan some chosen ground, 556 or soaring high, with whir of happy wings, 557 re-circle heaven in triumphant song: 558 likewise, I tell thee, thy Iost mariners 559 are landed, or fly landward at full sail. 560 Up, then! let yon plain path thy guidance be,” 561 She ceased and turned away. A roseate beam 562 from her bright shoulder glowed; th' ambrosial hair 563 breathed more than mortal sweetness, while her robes 564 fell rippling to her feet. Each step revealed 565 the veritable goddess. Now he knew 566 that vision was his mother, and his words 567 pursued the fading phantom as it fled: 568 “Why is thy son deluded o'er and o'er 569 with mocking dreams,—another cruel god? 570 Hast thou no hand-clasp true, nor interchange 571 of words unfeigned betwixt this heart and thine?” 572 Such word of blame he spoke, and took his way 573 toward the city's rampart. Venus then 574 o'erveiled them as they moved in darkened air,— 575 a liquid mantle of thick cloud divine,— 576 that cogunt 564 moliri, et late finis custode tueri. 565 Quis genus Aeneadum, quis Troiae nesciat urbem, 566 virtutesque virosque, aut tanti incendia belli? 567 Non obtusa adeo gestamus pectora Poeni, 568 nec tam aversus equos Tyria Sol iungit ab urbe. 569 Seu vos Hesperiam magnam Saturniaque arva, 570 sive Erycis finis regemque optatis Acesten,	viewless they might pass, nor would any 577 obstruct, delay, or question why they came. 578 To Paphos then she soared, her Ioved abode, 579 where stands her temple, at whose hundred shrines 580 garlands of myrtle and fresh roses breathe, 581 and clouds of orient sweetness waft away.

1.571	571 auxilio tutos dimittam, opibusque iuvabo. 572 Voltis et his mecum pariter considere regnis; 573 urbem quam statuo vestra est, subducite navis; 574 Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur. 575 Atque utinam rex ipse Noto compulsus eodem 576 adforet Aeneas! Equidem per litora certos 577 dimittam et Libyae lustrare extrema iubebo, 578 si quibus eiectus silvis aut urbibus errat. 579 His animum arrecti dictis et fortis Achates 580 et pater Aeneas iamdudum erumpere nubem 581 ardebant. Prior Aenean compellat Achates: 582 Nate dea, quae nunc animo sententia surgit? 583 omnia tuta vides, classem sociosque receptos. 584 Unus abest, medio in fluctu quem vidimus ipsi 585 submersum; dictis respondent cetera matris. 586 Vix ea fatus erat, cum circumfusa repente 587 scindit se nubes et in aethera purgat apertum. 588 Restitit Aeneas claraque in luce refulsit, 589 os umerosque deo similis; namque ipsa decoram 590 caesariem nato genetrix lumenque iuventae 591 purpureum et laetos oculis adflarat honores: 592 quale manus addunt ebori decus, aut ubi flavo	582 Meanwhile the wanderers swiftly journey on 583 along the clear-marked road, and soon they climb 584 the brow of a high hill, which close in view 585 o'er-towers the city's crown. The vast exploit, 586 where lately rose but Afric cabins rude, 587 Aeneas wondered at: the smooth, wide ways; 588 the bastioned gates; the uproar of the throng. 589 The Tyrians toil unwearied; some up-raise 590 a wall or citadel, from far below 591 lifting the ponderous stone; or with due care 592 choose where to build, and close the space around 593 with sacred furrow; in their gathering-place 594 the people for just governors, just laws, 595 and for their reverend senate shout acclaim. 596 Some clear the harbor mouth; some deeply lay 597 the base of a great theatre, and carve out 598 proud columns from the mountain, to adorn 599 their rising stage with lofty ornament. 600 so busy bees above a field of flowers 601 in early summer amid sunbeams toil, 602 leading abroad their nation's youthful brood; 603 or with the flowing honey storing close 604 the pliant cells, until they quite run o'er 605 with nectared sweet; while from the entering swarm 606 they take their little loads; or lined for war, 607 rout the dull drones, and chase them from the hive; 608 brisk is the task, and all the honeyed air 609 breathes odors of wild thyme. “How blest of Heaven. 610 These men that see their promised ramparts rise!” 611 Aeneas sighed; and swift his glances moved 612 from tower to tower; then on his way he fared, 613 veiled in the wonder-cloud, whence all unseen 614 of human eyes,—O strange the tale and true!— 615 he threaded the thronged streets, unmarked,

	593 argentum Pariusve lapis circumdatur auro. 594 Tum sic reginam adloquitur, cunctisque repente 595 improvisus ait: Coram, quem quaeritis, adsum, 596 Troius Aeneas, Lybicis ereptus ab undis. 597 O sola infandos Troiae miserata labores, 598 quae nos, reliquias Danaum, terraeque marisque 599 omnibus exhaustos iam casibus, omnium egenos, 600 urbe, domo, socias, grates persolvere dignas	unknown.
1.601	601 non opis est nostrae, Dido, nec quicquid ubique est 602 gentis Dardaniae, magnum quae sparsa per orbem. 603 Di tibi, si qua pios respectant numina, si quid 604 usquam iustitia est et mens sibi conscia recti, 605 praemia digna ferant. Quae te tam laeta tulerunt 606 saecula? Qui tanti talem genuere parentes? 607 In freta dum fluvii current, dum montibus umbrae 608 lustrabunt convexa, polus dum sidera pascet, 609 semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt, 610 quae me cumque vocant terrae. Sic fatus, amicum 611 Ilionea petit dextra, laevaque Serestum, 612 post alios, fortemque Gyan fortemque Cloanthum. 613 Obstipuit primo aspectu Sidonia Dido, 614 casu deinde viri tanto, et sic ore locuta est: 615 Quis te, nate dea, per tanta pericula casus 616 insequitur? Quae vis immanibus applicat oris? 617 Tune ille Aeneas, quem Dardanio Anchisae 618 alma Venus Phrygii genuit Simoentis ad undam? 619 Atque equidem Teucrum memini Sidona venire 620 finibus expulsum patriis, nova regna petentem 621 auxilio Beli; genitor tum Belus opimam	616 Deep in the city's heart there was a grove 617 of beauteous shade, where once the Tyrians, 618 cast here by stormful waves, delved out of earth 619 that portent which Queen Juno bade them find,— 620 the head of a proud horse,—that ages long 621 their boast might be wealth, luxury and war. 622 Upon this spot Sidonian Dido raised 623 a spacious fane to Juno, which became 624 splendid with gifts, and hallowed far and wide 625 for potency divine. Its beams were bronze, 626 and on loud hinges swung the brazen doors. 627 A rare, new sight this sacred grove did show, 628 which calmed Aeneas' fears, and made him bold 629 to hope for safety, and with lifted heart 630 from his low-fallen fortunes re-aspire. 631 For while he waits the advent of the Queen, 632 he scans the mighty temple, and admires 633 the city's opulent pride, and all the skill 634 its rival craftsmen in their work approve. 635 Behold! he sees old Ilium's well-fought fields 636 in sequent picture, and those famous wars 637 now told upon men's lips the whole world round. 638 There Atreus' sons, there kingly Priam moved, 639 and fierce Pelides pitiless to both. 640 Aeneas paused, and, weeping, thus began: 641 “Alas, Achates, what far region now, 642 what land in all the world knows not our pain? 643 See, it is Priam! Virtue's wage is given— 644 O even here! Here also there be tears 645 for what men bear, and mortal creatures feel 646 each other's sorrow. Therefore, have no fear! 647 This story of our loss forbodes us well.”

	622 vastabat Cyprum, et victor dicione tenebat. 623 Tempore iam ex illo casus mihi cognitus urbis 624 Troianae nomenque tuum regesque Pelasgi. 625 Ipse hostis Teucros insigni laude ferebat, 626 seque ortum antiqua Teucrorum ab stirpe volebat. 627 Quare agite, O tectis, iuvenes, succedite nostris. 628 Me quoque per multos similis fortuna labores 629 iactatam hac demum voluit consistere terra. 630 Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.
1.631	631 Sic memorat; simul Aenean in regia ducit 632 tecta, simul divom templis indicit honorem. 633 Nec minus interea sociis ad litora mittit 634 viginti tauros, magnorum horrentia centum 635 terga suum, pinguis centum cum matribus agnos, 636 munera laetitiamque dii. 637 At domus interior regali splendida luxu 638 instruitur, mediisque parant convivia tectis: 639 arte laboratae vestes ostroque superbo, 640 ingens argentum mensis, caelataque in auro 641 fortia facta patrum, series longissima rerum 642 per tot ducta viros antiqua ab origine gentis. 643 Aeneas (neque enim patrius consistere mentem 644 passus amor) rapidum ad navis praemittit Achaten, 645 Ascanio ferat haec, ipsumque ad moenia ducat; 646 omnis in Ascanio cari stat cura parentis. 647 Munera praeterea, Iliacis erepta ruinis, 648 ferre iubet, pallam signis auroque rigentem, 649 et circumtextum croceo velamen acantho, 650 ornatus Argivae Helenae, quos illa Mycenis, 651 Pergama cum peteret	648 So saying, he received into his heart 649 that visionary scene, profoundly sighed, 650 and let his plenteous tears unheeded flow. 651 There he beheld the citadel of Troy 652 girt with embattled foes; here, Greeks in flight 653 some Trojan onset 'scaped; there, Phrygian bands 654 before tall-plumed Achilles' chariot sped. 655 The snowy tents of Rhesus spread hard by 656 (he sees them through his tears), where Diomed 657 in night's first watch burst o'er them unawares 658 with bloody havoc and a host of deaths; 659 then drove his fiery coursers o'er the plain 660 before their thirst or hunger could be stayed 661 on Trojan corn or Xanthus' cooling stream. 662 Here too was princely Troilus, despoiled, 663 routed and weaponless, O wretched boy! 664 Ill-matched against Achilles! His wild steeds 665 bear him along, as from his chariot's rear 666 he falls far back, but clutches still the rein; 667 his hair and shoulders on the ground go trailing, 668 and his down-pointing spear-head scrawls the dust. 669 Elsewhere, to Pallas' ever-hostile shrine, 670 daughters of Ilium, with unsnooded hair, 671 and lifting all in vain her hallowed pall, 672 walked suppliant and sad, beating their breasts, 673 with outspread palms. But her unswerving eyes 674 the goddess fixed on earth, and would not see. 675 Achilles round the Trojan rampart thrice 676 had dragged the fallen Hector, and for gold 677 was making traffic of the lifeless clay. 678 Aeneas groaned aloud, with bursting heart, 679

	inconcessosque hymenaeos, 652 extulerat, matris Ledae mirabile donum: 653 praeterea sceptrum, Ilione quod gesserat olim, 654 maxima natarum Priami, colloque monile 655 bacatum, et duplicem gemmis auroque coronam. 656 Haec celerans ita ad naves tendebat Achates. 657 At Cytherea novas artes, nova pectore versat 658 Consilia, ut faciem mutatus et ora Cupido 659 pro dulci Ascanio veniat, donisque furentem 660 incendat reginam, atque ossibus implicet ignem;	to see the spoils, the car, the very corpse 680 of his lost friend,—while Priam for the dead 681 stretched forth in piteous prayer his helpless hands. 682 There too his own presentment he could see 683 surrounded by Greek kings; and there were shown 684 hordes from the East, and black-browed Memnon's arms; 685 her band of Amazons, with moon-shaped shields, 686 Penthesilea led; her martial eye 687 flamed on from troop to troop; a belt of gold 688 beneath one bare, protruded breast she bound— 689 a warrior-virgin braving mail-clad men.
1.661	661 quippe domum timet ambiguam Tyriosque bilinguis; 662 urit atrox Iuno, et sub noctem cura recursat. 663 Ergo his aligerum dictis adfatur Amorem: 664 Nate, meae vires, mea magna potentia solus, 665 nate, patris summi qui tela Typhoia temnis, 666 ad te confugio et supplex tua numina posco. 667 Frater ut Aeneas pelago tuus omnia circum 668 litora iactetur odiis Iunonis iniquae, 669 nota tibi, et nostro doluisti saepe dolore. 670 Hunc Phoenissa tenet Dido blandisque moratur 671 vocibus; et vereor, quo se Iunonia vertant 672 hospitia; haud tanto cessabit cardine rerum. 673 Quocirca capere ante dolis et cingere flamma 674 reginam meditor, ne quo se numine mutet, 675 sed magno Aeneae mecum teneatur amore. 676 Qua facere id possis, nostram nunc accipe mentem. 677 Regius accitu cari genitoris ad urbem 678 Sidoniam puer ire parat, mea maxima cura, 679 dona ferens, pelago et flammis restantia Troiae: 680 hunc ego sopitum somno super alta	690 While on such spectacle Aeneas' eyes 691 looked wondering, while mute and motionless 692 he stood at gaze, Queen Dido to the shrine 693 in lovely majesty drew near; a throng 694 of youthful followers pressed round her way. 695 So by the margin of Eurotas wide 696 or o'er the Cynthian steep, Diana leads 697 her bright processional; hither and yon 698 are visionary legions numberless 699 of Oreads; the regnant goddess bears 700 a quiver on her shoulders, and is seen 701 emerging tallest of her beauteous train; 702 while joy unutterable thrills the breast 703 of fond Latona: Dido not less fair 704 amid her subjects passed, and not less bright 705 her glow of gracious joy, while she approved 706 her future kingdom's pomp and vast emprise. 707 Then at the sacred portal and beneath 708 the temple's vaulted dome she took her place, 709 encompassed by armed men, and lifted high 710 upon a throne; her statutes and decrees 711 the people heard, and took what lot or toil 712 her sentence, or impartial urn, assigned. 713 But, lo! Aeneas sees among the throng 714 Antheus, Sergestus, and Cloanthus bold, 715 with other Teucrians, whom the black storm flung 716 far o'er the deep and drove on alien shores. 717 Struck dumb was he, and good Achates too, 718 half gladness and half fear. Fain would they fly 719 to friendship's fond embrace; but knowing not 720 what might befall, their hearts felt doubt and care. 721 Therefore they

	Cythera 681 aut super Idalium sacrata sede recondam, 682 ne qua scire dolos mediusve occurrere possit. 683 Tu faciem illius noctem non amplius unam 684 falle dolo, et notos pueri puer indue voltus, 685 ut, cum te gremio accipiet laetissima Dido 686 regalis inter mensas laticemque Lyaeum, 687 cum dabit amplexus atque oscula dulcia figet, 688 occultum inspires ignem fallasque veneno. 689 Paret Amor dictis carae genetricis, et alas 690 exuit, et gressu gaudens incedit Iuli.	kept the secret, and remained 722 forth-peering from the hollow veil of cloud, 723 haply to learn what their friends' fate might be, 724 or where the fleet was landed, or what aim 725 had brought them hither; for a chosen few 726 from every ship had come to sue for grace, 727 and all the temple with their voices rang.
1.691	691 At Venus Ascanio placidam per membra quietem 692 inrigat, et fotum gremio dea tollit in altos 693 Idaliae lucos, ubi mollis amaracus illum 694 floribus et dulci adspirans complectitur umbra. 695 Iamque ibat dicto parens et dona Cupido 696 regia portabat Tyriis, duce laetus Achate. 697 Cum venit, aulaeis iam se regina superbis 698 aurea composuit sponda mediamque locavit. 699 Iam pater Aeneas et iam Troiana iuventus 700 conveniunt, stratoque super discumbitur ostro. 701 Dant famuli manibus lymphas, Cereremque canistris 702 expediunt, tonsisque ferunt mantelia villis. 703 Quinquaginta intus famulae, quibus ordine longam 704 cura penum struere, et flammis adolere Penatis; 705 centum aliae totidemque pares aetate ministri, 706 qui dapibus mensas onerent et pocula ponant. 707 Nec non et Tyrii per limina laeta frequentes 708 convenere, toris iussi discumbere pictis. 709 Mirantur dona Aeneae, mirantur

	Iulum 710 flagrantisque dei voltus simulataque verba, 711 712 Praecipue infelix, pesti devota futurae, 713 expleri mentem nequit ardescitque tuendo 714 Phoenissa, et pariter puero donisque movetur. 715 Ille ubi complexu Aeneae colloque pependit 716 et magnum falsi implevit genitoris amorem, 717 reginam petit haec oculis, haec pectore toto 718 haeret et interdum gremio fovet, inscia Dido, 719 insidat quantus miserae deus; at memor ille 720 matris Acidaliae paulatim abolere Sychaeum
1.721	721 incipit, et vivo temptat praevertere amore 722 iam pridem resides animos desuetaque corda. 723 Postquam prima quies epulis, mensaeque remotae, 724 crateras magnos statuunt et vina coronant. 725 Fit strepitus tectis, vocemque per ampla volutant 726 atria; dependent lychni laquearibus aureis 727 incensi, et noctem flammis funalia vincunt. 728 Hic regina gravem gemmis auroque poposcit 729 implevitque mero pateram, quam Belus et omnes 730 a Belo soliti; tum facta silentia tectis: 731 Iuppiter, hospitibus nam te dare iura loquuntur, 732 hunc laetum Tyriisque diem Troiaque profectis 733 esse velis, nostrosque huius meminisse minores. 734 Adsit laetitiae Bacchus dator, et bona Iuno; 735 et vos, O, coetum, Tyrii, celebrate faventes. 736 Dixit, et in mensam laticum libavit honorem, 737 primaque, libato, summo tenus attigit ore, 738 tum Bitiae dedit increpitans; ille impiger hausit	728 The doors swung wide; and after access given 729 and leave to speak, revered Ilioneus 730 with soul serene these lowly words essayed: 731 “O Queen, who hast authority of Jove 732 to found this rising city, and subdue 733 with righteous governance its people proud, 734 we wretched Trojans, blown from sea to sea, 735 beseech thy mercy; keep the curse of fire 736 from our poor ships! We pray thee, do no wrong 737 unto a guiltless race. But heed our plea! 738 No Libyan hearth shall suffer by our sword, 739 nor spoil and plunder to our ships be borne; 740 such haughty violence fits not the souls 741 of vanquished men. We journey to a land 742 named, in Greek syllables, Hesperia: 743 a storied realm, made mighty by great wars 744 and wealth of fruitful land; in former days 745 Oenotrians had it, and their sons, 't is said, 746 have called it Italy, a chieftain's name 747 to a whole region given. Thitherward 748 our ships did fare; but with swift-rising flood 749 the stormful season of Orion's star 750 drove us on viewless shoals; and angry gales 751 dispersed us, smitten by the tumbling surge, 752 among innavigable rocks. Behold, 753 we few swam hither, waifs upon your shore! 754 What race of mortals this? What barbarous land, 755 that with inhospitable laws ye thrust 756 a stranger from your coasts, and fly to

	739 spumantem pateram, et pleno se proluit auro 740 post alii proceres. Cithara crinitus Iopas 741 personat aurata, docuit quem maximus Atlas. 742 Hic canit errantem lunam solisque labores; 743 unde hominum genus et pecudes; unde imber et ignes; 744 Arcturum pluviasque Hyadas geminosque Triones; 745 quid tantum Oceano properent se tinguere soles 746 hiberni, vel quae tardis mora noctibus obstet. 747 Ingeminant plausu Tyrii, Troesque sequuntur. 748 Nec non et vario noctem sermone trahebat 749 infelix Dido, longumque bibebat amorem, 750 multa super Priamo rogitans, super Hectore multa;	arms, 757 nor grant mere foothold on your kingdom's bound? 758 If man thou scornest and all mortal power, 759 forget not that the gods watch good and ill!
1.751	751 nunc quibus Aurorae venisset filius armis, 752 nunc quales Diomedis equi, nunc quantus Achilles. 753 Immo age, et a prima dic, hospes, origine nobis 754 insidias, inquit, Danaum, casusque tuorum, 755 erroresque tuos; nam te iam septima portat 756 omnibus errantem terris et fluctibus aestas.
2.1	1 Conticuere omnes, intentique ora tenebant. 2 Inde toro pater Aeneas sic orsus ab alto: 3 Infandum, regina, iubes renovare dolorem, 4 Troianas ut opes et lamentabile regnum 5 eruerint Danai; quaeque ipse miserrima vidi, 6 et quorum pars magna fui. Quis talia fando 7 Myrmidonum Dolopumve aut duri miles Ulixi 8 temperet a lacrimis? Et iam nox umida caelo 9 praecipitat, suadentque cadentia sidera somnos. 10 Sed si tantus amor casus cognoscere nostros 11 et breviter Troiae supremum audire	1 A general silence fell; and all gave ear, 2 while, from his lofty station at the feast, 3 Father Aeneas with these words began :— 4 A grief unspeakable thy gracious word, 5 o sovereign lady, bids my heart live o'er: 6 how Asia's glory and afflicted throne 7 the Greek flung down; which woeful scene I saw, 8 and bore great part in each event I tell. 9 But O! in telling, what Dolopian churl, 10 or Myrmidon, or gory follower 11 of grim Ulysses could the tears restrain? 12 'T is evening; lo! the dews of night begin 13 to fall from heaven, and yonder sinking stars 14 invite to slumber. But if thy heart yearn 15 to hear in brief of all our evil days 16 and Troy's last throes, although the memory 17 makes my soul shudder and recoil in pain, 18 I will essay it. Wearied of the war, 19 and by ill-fortune crushed, year

	laborem, 12 quamquam animus meminisse horret, luctuque refugit, 13 incipiam.Fracti bello fatisque repulsi 14 ductores Danaum, tot iam labentibus annis, 15 instar montis equum divina Palladis arte 16 aedificant, sectaque intexunt abiete costas: 17 votum pro reditu simulant; ea fama vagatur. 18 Huc delecta virum sortiti corpora furtim 19 includunt caeco lateri, penitusque cavernas 20 ingentis uterumque armato milite complent. 21 Est in conspectu Tenedos, notissima fama 22 insula, dives opum, Priami dum regna manebant, 23 nunc tantum sinus et statio male fida carinis: 24 huc se provecti deserto in litore condunt. 25 Nos abiisse rati et vento petiisse Mycenas: 26 ergo omnis longo solvit se Teucria luctu; 27 panduntur portae; iuvat ire et Dorica castra 28 desertosque videre locos litusque relictum. 29 Hic Dolopum manus, hic saevus tendebat Achilles; 30 classibus hic locus; hic acie certare solebant.	after year, 20 the kings of Greece, by Pallas' skill divine, 21 build a huge horse, a thing of mountain size, 22 with timbered ribs of fir. They falsely say 23 it has been vowed to Heaven for safe return, 24 and spread this lie abroad. Then they conceal 25 choice bands of warriors in the deep, dark side, 26 and fill the caverns of that monstrous womb 27 with arms and soldiery. In sight of Troy 28 lies Tenedos, an island widely famed 29 and opulent, ere Priam's kingdom fell, 30 but a poor haven now, with anchorage
2.31	31 Pars stupet innuptae donum exitiale Minervae, 32 et molem mirantur equi; primusque Thymoetes 33 duci intra muros hortatur et arce locari, 34 sive dolo, seu iam Troiae sic fata ferebant. 35 At Capys, et quorum melior sententia menti, 36 aut pelago Danaum insidias suspectaque dona 37 praecipitare iubent, subiectisque urere flammis, 38 aut terebrare cavas uteri et temptare latebras. 39 Scinditur incertum studia in contraria volgus. 40 Primus ibi ante omnis, magna comitante caterva,	31 not half secure; 't was thitherward they sailed, 32 and lurked unseen by that abandoned shore. 33 We deemed them launched away and sailing far, 34 bound homeward for Mycenae. Teucria then 35 threw off her grief inveterate; all her gates 36 swung wide; exultant went we forth, and saw 37 the Dorian camp untenanted, the siege 38 abandoned, and the shore without a keel. 39 “Here!” cried we, “the Dolopian pitched; the host 40 of fierce Achilles here; here lay the fleet; 41 and here the battling lines to conflict ran.” 42 Others, all wonder, scan the gift of doom 43 by virgin Pallas given, and view with awe 44 that horse which loomed so large. Thymoetes then 45 bade lead it through the gates, and set on high 46 within our citadel,—or

	41 Laocoön ardens summa decurrit ab arce, 42 et procul: O miseri, quae tanta insania, cives? 43 Creditis avectos hostis? Aut ulla putatis 44 dona carere dolis Danaum? Sic notus Ulixes? 45 aut hoc inclusi ligno occultantur Achivi, 46 aut haec in nostros fabricata est machina muros 47 inspectura domos venturaque desuper urbi, 48 aut aliquis latet error; equo ne credite, Teucri. 49 Quicquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis. 50 Sic fatus, validis ingentem viribus hastam 51 in latus inque feri curvam compagibus alvum 52 contorsit: stetit illa tremens, uteroque recusso 53 insonuere cavae gemitumque dedere cavernae. 54 Et, si fata deum, si mens non laeva fuisset, 55 impulerat ferro Argolicas foedare latebras, 56 Troiaque, nunc stares, Priamique arx alta, maneres. 57 Ecce, manus iuvenem interea post terga revinctum 58 pastores magno ad regem clamore trahebant 59 Dardanidae, qui se ignotum venientibus ultro, 60 hoc ipsum ut strueret Troiamque aperiret Achivis,	traitor he, 47 or tool of fate in Troy's predestined fall. 48 But Capys, as did all of wiser heart, 49 bade hurl into the sea the false Greek gift, 50 or underneath it thrust a kindling flame 51 or pierce the hollow ambush of its womb 52 with probing spear. Yet did the multitude 53 veer round from voice to voice and doubt of all. 54 Then from the citadel, conspicuous, 55 Laocoon, with all his following choir, 56 hurried indignant down; and from afar 57 thus hailed the people: “O unhappy men! 58 What madness this? Who deems our foemen fled? 59 Think ye the gifts of Greece can lack for guile? 60 Have ye not known Ulysses? The Achaean 61 hides, caged in yonder beams; or this is reared 62 for engin'ry on our proud battlements, 63 to spy upon our roof-tops, or descend 64 in ruin on the city. 'T is a snare. 65 Trust not this horse, O Troy, whate'er it bode! 66 I fear the Greeks, though gift on gift they bear.” 67 So saying, he whirled with ponderous javelin 68 a sturdy stroke straight at the rounded side 69 of the great, jointed beast. A tremor struck 70 its towering form, and through the cavernous womb 71 rolled loud, reverberate rumbling, deep and long. 72 If heaven's decree, if our own wills, that hour, 73 had not been fixed on woe, his spear had brought 74 a bloody slaughter on our ambushed foe, 75 and Troy were standing on the earth this day! 76 O Priam's towers, ye were unfallen still!
2.61	61 obtulerat, fidens animi atque in utrumque paratus, 62 seu versare dolos, seu certae occumbere morti. 63 Undique visendi studio Troiana iuventus 64 circumfusa ruit, certantque inludere capto. 65 Accipe nunc Danaum insidias, et crimine ab uno 66 disce omnes. 67 Namque ut conspectu in medio turbatus, inermis 68 constitit atque oculis Phrygia agmina circumspexit: 69 Heu, quae nunc tellus inquit quae me aequora possunt 70 accipere? Aut quid iam misero mihi	77 But, lo! with hands fast bound behind, a youth 78 by clamorous Dardan shepherds haled along, 79 was brought before our king,—to this sole end 80 a self-surrendered captive, that he might, 81 although a nameless stranger, cunningly 82 deliver to the Greek the gates of Troy. 83 His firm-set mind flinched not from either goal,— 84 success in crime, or on swift death to fall. 85 The thronging Trojan youth made haste his way 86 from every side, all eager to see close 87 their captive's face, and clout with emulous scorn. 88 Hear now what Greek deception is, and learn 89 from one dark wickedness the whole. For he, 90 a mark for every eye, defenceless, dazed, 91 stood staring at denique restat, 71 cui neque apud Danaos usquam locus, et super ipsi 72 Dardanidae infensi poenas cum sanguine poscunt? 73 Quo gemitu conversi animi, compressus et omnis 74 impetus. Hortamur fari; quo sanguine cretus, 75 quidve ferat, memoret, quae sit fiducia capto. 76 77 Cuncta equidem tibi, Rex, fuerit quodcumque, fatebor 78 vera, inquit; neque me Argolica de gente negabo: 79 hoc primum; nec, si miserum Fortuna Sinonem 80 finxit, vanum etiam mendacemque improba finget. 81 Fando aliquod si forte tuas pervenit ad auris 82 Belidae nomen Palamedis et incluta fama 83 gloria, quem falsa sub proditione Pelasgi 84 insontem infando indicio, quia bella vetabat, 85 demisere neci, nunc cassum lumine lugent. 86 Illi me comitem et consanguinitate propinquum 87 pauper in arma pater primis huc misit ab annis, 88 dum stabat regno incolumis regumque vigebat 89 consiliis, et nos aliquod nomenque decusque 90 gessimus. Invidia postquam pellacis Ulixi—	our Phrygian hosts, and cried: 92 “Woe worth the day! What ocean or what shore 93 will have me now? What desperate path remains 94 for miserable me? Now have I lost 95 all foothold with the Greeks, and o'er my head 96 Troy's furious sons call bloody vengeance down.” 97 Such groans and anguish turned all rage away 98 and stayed our lifted hands. We bade him tell 99 his birth, his errand, and from whence might be 100 such hope of mercy for a foe in chains. 101 Then fearing us no more, this speech he dared:

2.91	91 haud ignota loquor—superis concessit ab oris, 92 adflictus vitam in tenebris luctuque trahebam, 93 et casum insontis mecum indignabar amici. 94 Nec tacui demens, et me, fors si qua tulisset, 95 si patrios umquam remeassem victor ad Argos, 96 promisi ultorem, et verbis odia aspera movi. 97 Hinc mihi prima mali labes, hinc semper Ulixes 98 criminibus terrere novis, hinc spargere voces 99 in volgum ambiguas, et quaerere conscius arma.	102 “O King! I will confess, whate'er befall, 103 the whole unvarnished truth. I will not hide 104 my Grecian birth. Yea, thus will I begin. 105 For Fortune has brought wretched Sinon low; 106 but never shall her cruelty impair 107 his honor and his truth. Perchance the name 108 of Palamedes, Belus' glorious son, 109 has come by rumor to your listening ears; 110 whom by false witness and conspiracy, 111 because his counsel was not for this war, 112 the Greeks condemned, though guiltless, to his death, 113 and now make much lament for him they slew. 114 I, his companion, of his kith and kin, 115 sent hither by my humble sire's command, 116 followed his arms

	100 Nec requievit enim, donec, Calchante ministro— 101 sed quid ego haec autem nequiquam ingrata revolvo? 102 Quidve moror, si omnis uno ordine habetis Achivos, 103 idque audire sat est? Iamdudum sumite poenas, 104 hoc Ithacus velit, et magno mercentur Atridae. 105 Tum vero ardemus scitari et quaerere causas, 106 ignari scelerum tantorum artisque Pelasgae. 107 Prosequitur pavitans, et ficto pectore fatur: 108 Saepe fugam Danai Troia cupiere relicta 109 moliri, et longo fessi discedere bello; 110 fecissentque utinam! Saepe illos aspera ponti 111 interclusit hiemps, et terruit Auster euntis. 112 Praecipue, cum iam hic trabibus contextus acernis 113 staret equus, toto sonuerunt aethere nimbi. 114 Suspensi Eurypylum scitantem oracula Phoebi 115 mittimus, isque adytis haec tristia dicta reportat: 116 Sanguine placastis ventos et virgine caesa, 117 cum primum Iliacas, Danai, venistis ad oras; 118 sanguine quaerendi reditus, animaque litandum 119 Argolica. Volgi quae vox ut venit ad auris, 120 obstipuere animi, gelidusque per ima cucurrit	and fortunes from my youth. 117 Long as his throne endured, and while he throve 118 in conclave with his kingly peers, we twain 119 some name and lustre bore; but afterward, 120 because that cheat Ulysses envied him 121 (Ye know the deed), he from this world withdrew, 122 and I in gloom and tribulation sore 123 lived miserably on, lamenting loud 124 my lost friend's blameless fall. A fool was I 125 that kept not these lips closed; but I had vowed 126 that if a conqueror home to Greece I came, 127 I would avenge. Such words moved wrath, and were 128 the first shock of my ruin; from that hour, 129 Ulysses whispered slander and alarm; 130 breathed doubt and malice into all men's ears, 131 and darkly plotted how to strike his blow. 132 Nor rest had he, till Calchas, as his tool,- 133 but why unfold this useless, cruel story? 134 Why make delay? Ye count all sons of Greece 135 arrayed as one; and to have heard thus far 136 suffices you. Take now your ripe revenge! 137 Ulysses smiles and Atreus' royal sons 138 with liberal price your deed of blood repay.”
2.121	121 ossa tremor, cui fata parent, quem poscat Apollo. 122 Hic Ithacus vatem magno Calchanta tumultu 123 protrahit in medios; quae sint ea numina divom, 124 flagitat; et mihi iam multi crudele canebant 125 artificis scelus, et taciti ventura videbant. 126 Bis quinos silet ille dies, tectusque recusat 127 prodere voce sua quemquam aut opponere morti. 128 Vix tandem, magnis Ithaci clamoribus actus,	139 We ply him then with passionate appeal 140 and question all his cause: of guilt so dire 141 or such Greek guile we harbored not the thought. 142 So on he prates, with well-feigned grief and fear, 143 and from his Iying heart thus told his tale: 144 “Full oft the Greeks had fain achieved their flight, 145 and raised the Trojan siege, and sailed away 146 war-wearied quite. O, would it had been so! 147 Full oft the wintry tumult of the seas 148 did wall them round, and many a swollen storm 149 their embarcation stayed. But chiefly when, 150 all fitly built of beams of maple fair, 151 this horse stood forth,— what

	129 composito rumpit vocem, et me destinat arae. 130 Adsensere omnes, et, quae sibi quisque timebat, 131 unius in miseri exitium conversa tulere. 132 Iamque dies infanda aderat; mihi sacra parari, 133 et salsae fruges, et circum tempora vittae: 134 eripui, fateor, leto me, et vincula rupi, 135 limosoque lacu per noctem obscurus in ulva 136 delitui, dum vela darent, si forte dedissent. 137 Nec mihi iam patriam antiquam spes ulla videndi, 138 nec dulcis natos exoptatumque parentem; 139 quos illi fors et poenas ob nostra reposcent 140 effugia, et culpam hanc miserorum morte piabunt. 141 Quod te per superos et conscia numina veri, 142 per si qua est quae restet adhuc mortalibus usquam 143 intemerata fides, oro, miserere laborum 144 tantorum, miserere animi non digna ferentis. 145 His lacrimis vitam damus, et miserescimus ultro. 146 Ipse viro primus manicas atque arta levari 147 vincla iubet Priamus, dictisque ita fatur amicis: 148 Quisquis es, amissos hinc iam obliviscere Graios; 149 noster eris, mihique haec edissere vera roganti: 150 Quo molem hanc immanis equi statuere? Quis auctor?	thunders filled the skies! 152 With anxious fears we sent Eurypylus 153 to ask Apollo's word; and from the shrine 154 he brings the sorrowful commandment home: 155 ‘By flowing blood and by a virgin slain 156 the wild winds were appeased, when first ye came, 157 ye sons of Greece, to Ilium's distant shore. 158 Through blood ye must return. Let some Greek life 159 your expiation be.’ The popular ear 160 the saying caught, all spirits were dimmed o'er; 161 cold doubt and horror through each bosom ran, 162 asking what fate would do, and on what wretch 163 Apollo's choice would fall. Ulysses, then, 164 amid the people's tumult and acclaim, 165 thrust Calchas forth, some prophecy to tell 166 to all the throng: he asked him o'er and o'er 167 what Heaven desired. Already not a few 168 foretold the murderous plot, and silently
2.151	151 Quidve petunt? Quae religio, aut quae machina belli? 152 Dixerat. Ille, dolis instructus et arte Pelasga, 153 sustulit exutas vinclis ad sidera palmas: 154 Vos, aeterni ignes, et non violabile vestrum 155 testor numen ait vos arae ensesque nefandi, 156 quos fugi, vittaeque deum, quas hostia gessi: 157 fas mihi Graiorum sacrata resolvere iura,	169 watched the dark doom upon my life impend. 170 Twice five long days the seer his lips did seal, 171 and hid himself, refusing to bring forth 172 His word of guile, and name what wretch should die. 173 At last, reluctant, and all loudly urged 174 By false Ulysses, he fulfils their plot, 175 and, lifting up his voice oracular, 176 points out myself the victim to be slain. 177 Nor did one voice oppose. The mortal stroke 178 horribly hanging o'er each coward head 179 was changed to one man's ruin, and their hearts 180 endured it

	158 fas odisse viros, atque omnia ferre sub auras, 159 si qua tegunt; teneor patriae nec legibus ullis. 160 Tu modo promissis maneas, servataque serves 161 Troia fidem, si vera feram, si magna rependam. 162 Omnis spes Danaum et coepti fiducia belli 163 Palladis auxiliis semper stetit. Impius ex quo 164 Tydides sed enim scelerumque inventor Ulixes, 165 fatale adgressi sacrato avellere templo 166 Palladium, caesis summae custodibus arcis, 167 corripuere sacram effigiem, manibusque cruentis 168 virgineas ausi divae contingere vittas; 169 ex illo fluere ac retro sublapsa referri 170 spes Danaum, fractae vires, aversa deae mens. 171 Nec dubiis ea signa dedit Tritonia monstris. 172 Vix positum castris simulacrum, arsere coruscae 173 luminibus flammae arrectis, salsusque per artus 174 sudor iit, terque ipsa solo—mirabile dictu— 175 emicuit, parmamque ferens hastamque trementem. 176 Extemplo temptanda fuga canit aequora Calchas, 177 nec posse Argolicis exscindi Pergama telis, 178 omina ni repetant Argis, numenque reducant, 179 quod pelago et curvis secum avexere carinis. 180 Et nunc, quod patrias vento petiere Mycenas,	well. Soon rose th' accursed morn; 181 the bloody ritual was ready; salt 182 was sprinkled on the sacred loaf; my brows 183 were bound with fillets for the offering. 184 But I escaped that death—yes! I deny not! 185 I cast my fetters off, and darkling lay 186 concealed all night in lake-side sedge and mire, 187 awaiting their departure, if perchance 188 they should in truth set sail. But nevermore 189 shall my dear, native country greet these eyes. 190 No more my father or my tender babes 191 shall I behold. Nay, haply their own lives 192 are forfeit, when my foemen take revenge 193 for my escape, and slay those helpless ones, 194 in expiation of my guilty deed. 195 O, by yon powers in heaven which witness truth, 196 by aught in this dark world remaining now 197 of spotless human faith and innocence, 198 I do implore thee look with pitying eye
2.181	181 arma deosque parant comites, pelagoque remenso 182 improvisi aderunt: ita digerit omina Calchas. 183 Hanc pro Palladio moniti, pro numine laeso 184 effigiem statuere, nefas quae triste piaret. 185 Hanc tamen immensam Calchas attollere molem 186 roboribus textis caeloque educere iussit,	199 on these long sufferings my heart hath borne. 200 O, pity! I deserve not what I bear.” 201 Pity and pardon to his tears we gave, 202 and spared his life. King Priam bade unbind 203 the fettered hands and loose those heavy chains 204 that pressed him sore; then with benignant mien 205 addressed him thus: “ Whate'er thy place or name, 206 forget the people thou hast Iost, and be 207 henceforth our countryman. But tell me true! 208 What means the

	187 ne recipi portis, aut duci in moenia possit, 188 neu populum antiqua sub religione tueri. 189 Nam si vestra manus violasset dona Minervae, 190 tum magnum exitium (quod di prius omen in ipsum 191 convertant!) Priami imperio Phrygibusque futurum; 192 sin manibus vestris vestram ascendisset in urbem, 193 ultro Asiam magno Pelopea ad moenia bello 194 venturam, et nostros ea fata manere nepotes. 195 Talibus insidiis periurique arte Sinonis 196 credita res, captique dolis lacrimisque coactis, 197 quos neque Tydides, nec Larisaeus Achilles, 198 non anni domuere decem, non mille carinae. 199 Hic aliud maius miseris multoque tremendum 200 obicitur magis, atque improvida pectora turbat. 201 Laocoön, ductus Neptuno sorte sacerdos, 202 sollemnis taurum ingentem mactabat ad aras. 203 Ecce autem gemini a Tenedo tranquilla per alta— 204 horresco referens—immensis orbibus angues 205 incumbunt pelago, pariterque ad litora tendunt; 206 pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta iubaeque 207 sanguineae superant undas; pars cetera pontum 208 pone legit, sinuatque immensa volumine terga. 209 Fit sonitus spumante salo; iamque arva tenebant, 210 ardentisque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni,	monstrous fabric of this horse? 209 Who made it? Why? What offering to Heaven, 210 or engin'ry of conquest may it be?” 211 He spake; and in reply, with skilful guile, 212 Greek that he was! the other lifted up 213 his hands, now freed and chainless, to the skies: 214 “O ever-burning and inviolate fires, 215 witness my word! O altars and sharp steel, 216 whose curse I fled, O fillets of the gods, 217 which bound a victim's helpless forehead, hear! 218 'T is lawful now to break the oath that gave 219 my troth to Greece. To execrate her kings 220 is now my solemn duty. Their whole plot 221 I publish to the world. No fatherland 222 and no allegiance binds me any more. 223 O Troy, whom I have saved, I bid thee keep 224 the pledge of safety by good Priam given, 225 for my true tale shall my rich ransom be. 226 The Greeks' one hope, since first they opened war, 227 was Pallas, grace and power. But from the day 228 when Diomed, bold scorner of the gods, 229 and false Ulysses, author of all guile, 230 rose up and violently bore away
2.211	211 sibila lambebant linguis vibrantibus ora. 212 Diffugimus visu exsangues: illi agmine certo 213 Laocoönta petunt; et primum parva duorum 214 corpora natorum serpens amplexus uterque 215 implicat, et miseros morsu depascitur artus;	231 Palladium, her holy shrine, hewed down 232 the sentinels of her acropolis, 233 and with polluted, gory hands dared touch 234 the goddess, virgin fillets, white and pure,— 235 thenceforth, I say, the courage of the Greeks 236 ebbed utterly away; their strength was Iost, 237 and favoring Pallas all her grace withdrew. 238 No dubious sign she gave. Scarce had they

	216 post ipsum auxilio subeuntem ac tela ferentem 217 corripiunt, spirisque ligant ingentibus; et iam 218 bis medium amplexi, bis collo squamea circum 219 terga dati, superant capite et cervicibus altis. 220 Ille simul manibus tendit divellere nodos, 221 perfusus sanie vittas atroque veneno, 222 clamores simul horrendos ad sidera tollit: 223 quales mugitus, fugit cum saucius aram 224 taurus, et incertam excussit cervice securim. 225 At gemini lapsu delubra ad summa dracones 226 effugiunt saevaeque petunt Tritonidis arcem, 227 sub pedibusque deae clipeique sub orbe teguntur. 228 Tum vero tremefacta novus per pectora cunctis 229 insinuat pavor, et scelus expendisse merentem 230 Laocoönta ferunt, sacrum qui cuspide robur 231 laeserit, et tergo sceleratam intorserit hastam. 232 Ducendum ad sedes simulacrum orandaque divae 233 numina conclamant. 234 Dividimus muros et moenia pandimus urbis. 235 Accingunt omnes operi, pedibusque rotarum 236 subiciunt lapsus, et stuppea vincula collo 237 intendunt: scandit fatalis machina muros, 238 feta armis. Pueri circum innuptaeque puellae 239 sacra canunt, funemque manu contingere gaudent. 240 Illa subit, mediaeque minans inlabitur urbi.	set 239 her statue in our camp, when glittering flame 240 flashed from the staring eyes; from all its limbs 241 salt sweat ran forth; three times (O wondrous tale!) 242 it gave a sudden skyward leap, and made 243 prodigious trembling of her lance and shield. 244 The prophet Calchas bade us straightway take 245 swift flight across the sea; for fate had willed 246 the Trojan citadel should never fall 247 by Grecian arm, till once more they obtain 248 new oracles at Argos, and restore 249 that god the round ships hurried o'er the sea. 250 Now in Mycenae, whither they are fled, 251 new help of heaven they find, and forge anew 252 the means of war. Back hither o'er the waves 253 they suddenly will come. So Calchas gave 254 the meaning of the god. Warned thus, they reared 255 in place of Pallas, desecrated shrine 256 yon image of the horse, to expiate 257 the woeful sacrilege. Calchas ordained 258 that they should build a thing of monstrous size 259 of jointed beams, and rear it heavenward, 260 so might it never pass your gates, nor come
2.241	241 O patria, O divom domus Ilium, et incluta bello 242 moenia Dardanidum, quater ipso in limine portae 243 substitit, atque utero sonitum quater arma dedere: 244 instamus tamen inmemores caecique furore, 245 et monstrum infelix sacrata	261 inside your walls, nor anywise restore 262 unto the Trojans their lost help divine. 263 For had your hands Minerva's gift profaned, 264 a ruin horrible—O, may the gods 265 bring it on Calchas rather!—would have come 266 on Priam's throne and all the Phrygian power. 267 But if your hands should lift the holy thing 268 to your sistimus arce. 246 Tunc etiam fatis aperit Cassandra futuris 247 ora, dei iussu non umquam credita Teucris. 248 Nos delubra deum miseri, quibus ultimus esset 249 ille dies, festa velamus fronde per urbem. 250 Vertitur interea caelum et ruit oceano nox, 251 involvens umbra magna terramque polumque 252 Myrmidonumque dolos; fusi per moenia Teucri 253 conticuere, sopor fessos complectitur artus: 254 et iam Argiva phalanx instructis navibus ibat 255 a Tenedo tacitae per amica silentia lunae 256 litora nota petens, flammas cum regia puppis 257 extulerat, fatisque deum defensus iniquis 258 inclusos utero Danaos et pinea furtim 259 laxat claustra Sinon. Illos patefactus ad auras 260 reddit equus, laetique cavo se robore promunt 261 Thessandrus Sthenelusque duces, et dirus Ulixes, 262 demissum lapsi per funem, Acamasque, Thoasque, 263 Pelidesque Neoptolemus, primusque Machaon, 264 et Menelaus, et ipse doli fabricator Epeos. 265 Invadunt urbem somno vinoque sepultam; 266 caeduntur vigiles, portisque patentibus omnis 267 accipiunt socios atque agmina conscia iungunt. 268 Tempus erat, quo prima quies mortalibus aegris 269 incipit, et dono divom gratissima serpit. 270 In somnis, ecce, ante oculos maestissimus Hector	own citadel, then Asia's host 269 would hurl aggression upon Pelops' land, 270 and all that curse on our own nation fall.”

2.271	271 visus adesse mihi, largosque effundere fletus, 272 raptatus bigis, ut quondam, aterque cruento 273 pulvere, perque pedes traiectus lora tumentis. 274 Ei mihi, qualis erat, quantum	271 Thus Sinon's guile and practiced perjury 272 our doubt dispelled. His stratagems and tears 273 wrought victory where neither Tydeus' son, 274 nor mountain-bred Achilles could prevail, 275 nor ten years' war, nor fleets a thousand strong. 276 But now a

	mutatus ab illo 275 Hectore, qui redit exuvias indutus Achilli, 276 vel Danaum Phrygios iaculatus puppibus ignis, 277 squalentem barbam et concretos sanguine crinis 278 volneraque illa gerens, quae circum plurima muros 279 accepit patrios. Ultro flens ipse videbar 280 Compellare virum et maestas expromere voces: 281 O lux Dardaniae, spes O fidissima Teucrum, 282 quae tantae tenuere morae? Quibus Hector ab oris 283 exspectate venis? Ut te post multa tuorum 284 funera, post varios hominumque urbisque labores 285 defessi aspicimus! Quae causa indigna serenos 286 foedavit voltus? Aut cur haec volnera cerno? 287 Ille nihil, nec me quaerentem vana moratur, 288 sed graviter gemitus imo de pectore ducens, 289 Heu fuge, nate dea, teque his, ait, eripe flammis. 290 Hostis habet muros; ruit alto a culmine Troia. 291 Sat patriae Priamoque datum: si Pergama dextra 292 defendi possent, etiam hac defensa fuissent. 293 Sacra suosque tibi commendat Troia penatis: 294 hos cape fatorum comites, his moenia quaere 295 magna, pererrato statues quae denique ponto. 296 Sic ait, et manibus vittas Vestamque potentem 297 aeternumque adytis effert penetralibus ignem. 298 Diverso interea miscentur moenia luctu, 299 et magis atque magis, quamquam secreta parentis 300 Anchisae domus arboribusque obtecta recessit,	vaster spectacle of fear 277 burst over us, to vex our startled souls. 278 Laocoon, that day by cast of lot 279 priest unto Neptune, was in act to slay 280 a huge bull at the god's appointed fane. 281 Lo! o'er the tranquil deep from Tenedos 282 appeared a pair (I shudder as I tell) 283 of vastly coiling serpents, side by side, 284 stretching along the waves, and to the shore 285 taking swift course; their necks were lifted high, 286 their gory dragon-crests o'ertopped the waves; 287 all else, half seen, trailed low along the sea; 288 while with loud cleavage of the foaming brine 289 their monstrous backs wound forward fold on fold. 290 Soon they made land; the furious bright eyes 291 glowed with ensanguined fire; their quivering tongues 292 lapped hungrily the hissing, gruesome jaws. 293 All terror-pale we fled. Unswerving then 294 the monsters to Laocoon made way. 295 First round the tender limbs of his two sons 296 each dragon coiled, and on the shrinking flesh 297 fixed fast and fed. Then seized they on the sire, 298 who flew to aid, a javelin in his hand, 299 embracing close in bondage serpentine 300 twice round the waist; and twice in scaly grasp
2.301	301 clarescunt sonitus, armorumque ingruit horror. 302 Excutior somno, et summi fastigia tecti 303 ascensu supero, atque arrectis	301 around his neck, and o'er him grimly peered 302 with lifted head and crest; he, all the while, 303 his holy fillet fouled with venomous blood, 304 tore at his fetters with a desperate

	auribus adsto: 304 in segetem veluti cum flamma furentibus austris 305 incidit, aut rapidus montano flumine torrens 306 sternit agros, sternit sata laeta boumque labores, 307 praecipitisque trahit silvas, stupet inscius alto 308 accipiens sonitum saxi de vertice pastor. 309 Tum vero manifesta fides, Danaumque patescunt 310 insidiae. Iam Deiphobi dedit ampla ruinam 311 Volcano superante domus; iam proxumus ardet 312 Ucalegon; Sigea igni freta lata relucent. 313 Exoritur clamorque virum clangorque tubarum. 314 Arma amens capio; nec sat rationis in armis, 315 sed glomerare manum bello et concurrere in arcem 316 cum sociis ardent animi; furor iraque mentem 317 praecipitant, pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis. 318 Ecce autem telis Panthus elapsus Achivom, 319 Panthus Othryades, arcis Phoebique sacerdos, 320 sacra manu victosque deos parvumque nepotem 321 ipse trahit, cursuque amens ad limina tendit. 322 Quo res summa, loco, Panthu? Quam prendimus arcem? 323 Vix ea fatus eram, gemitu cum talia reddit: 324 Venit summa dies et ineluctabile tempus 325 Dardaniae: fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium et ingens 326 gloria Teucrorum; ferus omnia Iuppiter Argos 327 transtulit; incensa Danai dominantur in urbe. 328 Arduus armatos mediis in moenibus adstans 329 fundit equus, victorque Sinon incendia miscet 330 insultans; portis alii bipatentibus adsunt,	hand, 305 and lifted up such agonizing voice, 306 as when a bull, death-wounded, seeks to flee 307 the sacrificial altar, and thrusts back 308 from his doomed head the ill-aimed, glancing blade. 309 then swiftly writhed the dragon-pair away 310 unto the templed height, and in the shrine 311 of cruel Pallas sure asylum found 312 beneath the goddess' feet and orbed shield. 313 Such trembling horror as we ne'er had known 314 seized now on every heart. “ Of his vast guilt 315 Laocoon,” they say, “receives reward; 316 for he with most abominable spear 317 did strike and violate that blessed wood. 318 Yon statue to the temple! Ask the grace 319 of glorious Pallas!” So the people cried 320 in general acclaim.Ourselves did make 321 a breach within our walls and opened wide 322 the ramparts of our city. One and all 323 were girded for the task. Smooth-gliding wheels 324 were 'neath its feet; great ropes stretched round its neck, 325 till o'er our walls the fatal engine climbed, 326 pregnant with men-at-arms. On every side 327 fair youths and maidens made a festal song, 328 and hauled the ropes with merry heart and gay. 329 So on and up it rolled, a tower of doom, 330 and in proud menace through our Forum moved.
2.331	331 milia quot magnis umquam venere Mycenis; 332 obsedere alii telis angusta viarum	331 O Ilium, my country, where abode 332 the gods of all my sires! O glorious walls 333 of Dardan's sons! before your

	333 oppositi; stat ferri acies mucrone corusco 334 stricta, parata neci; vix primi proelia temptant 335 portarum vigiles, et caeco Marte resistunt. 336 Talibus Othryadae dictis et numine divom 337 in flammas et in arma feror, quo tristis Erinys, 338 quo fremitus vocat et sublatus ad aethera clamor. 339 Addunt se socios Rhipeus et maximus armis 340 Epytus oblati per lunam Hypanisque Dymasque, 341 et lateri adglomerant nostro, iuvenisque Coroebus, 342 Mygdonides: illis ad Troiam forte diebus 343 venerat, insano Cassandrae incensus amore, 344 et gener auxilium Priamo Phrygibusque ferebat, 345 infelix, qui non sponsae praecepta furentis 346 audierit. 347 Quos ubi confertos audere in proelia vidi, 348 incipio super his: Iuvenes, fortissima frustra 349 pectora, si vobis audentem extrema cupido 350 certa sequi, quae sit rebus fortuna videtis: 351 excessere omnes, adytis arisque relictis, 352 di, quibus imperium hoc steterat; succurritis urbi 353 incensae; moriamur et in media arma ruamus. 354 Una salus victis, nullam sperare salutem. 355 Sic animis iuvenum furor additus: inde, lupi ceu 356 raptores atra in nebula, quos improba ventris 357 exegit caecos rabies, catulique relicti 358 faucibus exspectant siccis, per tela, per hostis 359 vadimus haud dubiam in mortem, mediaeque tenemus 360 urbis iter; nox atra cava circumvolat umbra.	gates it passed, 334 four times it stopped and dreadful clash of arms 335 four times from its vast concave loudly rang. 336 Yet frantic pressed we on, our hearts all blind, 337 and in the consecrated citadel 338 set up the hateful thing. Cassandra then 339 from heaven-instructed heart our doom foretold; 340 but doomed to unbelief were Ilium's sons. 341 Our hapless nation on its dying day 342 flung free o'er streets and shrines the votive flowers. 343 The skies rolled on; and o'er the ocean fell 344 the veil of night, till utmost earth and heaven 345 and all their Myrmidonian stratagems 346 were mantled darkly o'er. In silent sleep 347 the Trojan city lay; dull slumber chained 348 its weary life. But now the Greek array 349 of ordered ships moved on from Tenedos, 350 their only light the silent, favoring moon, 351 on to the well-known strand. The King displayed 352 torch from his own ship, and Sinon then, 353 whom wrathful Heaven defended in that hour, 354 let the imprisoned band of Greeks go free 355 from that huge womb of wood; the open horse 356 restored them to the light; and joyfully 357 emerging from the darkness, one by one, 358 princely Thessander, Sthenelus, and dire 359 Ulysses glided down the swinging cord. 360 Closely upon them Neoptolemus, 361 the son of Peleus, came, and Acamas, 362 King Menelaus, Thoas and Machaon, 363 and last, Epeus, who the fabric wrought. 364 Upon the town they fell, for deep in sleep 365 and drowsed with wine it lay; the sentinels 366 they slaughtered, and through gates now opened wide 367 let in their fellows, and arrayed for war 368 th' auxiliar legions of the dark design.
2.361	361 Quis cladem illius noctis, quis funera fando 362 explicet, aut possit lacrimis	369 That hour it was when heaven's first gift of sleep 370 on weary hearts of men most sweetly steals. 371 O, then aequare labores? 363 Urbs antiqua ruit, multos dominata per annos; 364 plurima perque vias sternuntur inertia passim 365 corpora, perque domos et religiosa deorum 366 limina. Nec soli poenas dant sanguine Teucri; 367 quondam etiam victis redit in praecordia virtus 368 victoresque cadunt Danai: crudelis ubique 369 luctus, ubique pavor, et plurima mortis imago. 370 Primus se, Danaum magna comitante caterva, 371 Androgeos offert nobis, socia agmina credens 372 inscius, atque ultro verbis compellat amicis: 373 Festinate, viri: nam quae tam sera moratur 374 segnities? Alii rapiunt incensa feruntque 375 Pergama; vos celsis nunc primum a navibus itis. 376 Dixit, et extemplo, neque enim responsa dabantur 377 fida satis, sensit medios delapsus in hostis. 378 Obstipuit, retroque pedem cum voce repressit: 379 inprovisum aspris veluti qui sentibus anguem 380 pressit humi nitens, trepidusque repente refugit 381 attollentem iras et caerula colla tumentem; 382 haud secus Androgeos visu tremefactus abibat. 383 Inruimus, densis et circumfundimur armis, 384 ignarosque loci passim et formidine captos 385 sternimus: adspirat primo fortuna labori. 386 Atque hic successu exsultans animisque Coroebus, 387 O socii, qua prima inquit fortuna salutis 388 monstrat iter, quoque ostendit se dextra, sequamur 389 mutemus clipeos, Danaumque insignia nobis 390 aptemus: dolus an virtus, quis in hoste requirat?	my slumbering senses seemed to see 372 Hector, with woeful face and streaming eyes; 373 I seemed to see him from the chariot trailing, 374 foul with dark dust and gore, his swollen feet 375 pierced with a cruel thong. Ah me! what change 376 from glorious Hector when he homeward bore 377 the spoils of fierce Achilles; or hurled far 378 that shower of torches on the ships of Greece! 379 Unkempt his beard, his tresses thick with blood, 380 and all those wounds in sight which he did take 381 defending Troy. Then, weeping as I spoke, 382 I seemed on that heroic shape to call 383 with mournful utterance: “O star of Troy! 384 O surest hope and stay of all her sons! 385 Why tarriest thou so Iong? What region sends 386 the long-expected Hector home once more? 387 These weary eyes that look on thee have seen 388 hosts of thy kindred die, and fateful change 389 upon thy people and thy city fall. 390 O, say what dire occasion has defiled 391 thy tranquil brows? What mean those bleeding wounds?” 392 Silent he stood, nor anywise would stay 393 my vain lament; but groaned, and answered thus: 394 “Haste, goddess-born, and out of yonder flames 395 achieve thy flight. Our foes have scaled the wall; 396 exalted Troy is falling. Fatherland 397 and Priam ask no more. If human arm 398 could profit Troy, my own had kept her free. 399 Her Lares and her people to thy hands 400 Troy here commends. Companions let them be 401 of all thy fortunes. Let them share thy quest 402 of that wide realm, which, after wandering far, 403 thou shalt achieve, at last, beyond the sea.” 404 He spoke: and from our holy hearth brought forth 405 the solemn fillet, the ancestral shrines, 406 and Vesta's ever-bright, inviolate fire.

2.391	391 Arma dabunt ipsi. Sic fatus, deinde	407 Now shrieks and loud confusion

	comantem 392 Androgei galeam clipeique insigne decorum 393 induitur, laterique Argivum accommodat ensem. 394 Hoc Rhipeus, hoc ipse Dymas omnisque iuventus 395 laeta facit; spoliis se quisque recentibus armat. 396 Vadimus immixti Danais haud numine nostro, 397 multaque per caecam congressi proelia noctem 398 conserimus, multos Danaum demittimus Orco. 399 Diffugiunt alii ad navis, et litora cursu 400 fida petunt: pars ingentem formidine turpi 401 scandunt rursus equum et nota conduntur in alvo. 402 Heu nihil invitis fas quemquam fidere divis! 403 Ecce trahebatur passis Priameïa virgo 404 crinibus a templo Cassandra adytisque Minervae, 405 ad caelum tendens ardentia lumina frustra,— 406 lumina, nam teneras arcebant vincula palmas. 407 Non tulit hanc speciem furiata mente Coroebus, 408 et sese medium iniecit periturus in agmen. 409 Consequimur cuncti et densis incurrimus armis. 410 Hic primum ex alto delubri culmine telis 411 nostrorum obruimur, oriturque miserrima caedes 412 armorum facie et Graiarum errore iubarum. 413 Tum Danai gemitu atque ereptae virginis ira 414 undique collecti invadunt, acerrimus Aiax, 415 et gemini Atridae, Dolopumque exercitus omnis; 416 adversi rupto ceu quondam turbine venti 417 confligunt, Zephyrusque Notusque et laetus Eois 418 Eurus equis; stridunt silvae, saevitque tridenti 419 spumeus atque imo Nereus ciet aequora fundo. 420 Illi etiam, si quos obscura nocte	swept the town; 408 and though my father's dwelling stood apart 409 embowered deep in trees, th' increasing din 410 drew nearer, and the battle-thunder swelled. 411 I woke on sudden, and up-starting scaled 412 the roof, the tower, then stood with listening ear: 413 't was like an harvest burning, when wild winds 414 uprouse the flames; 't was like a mountain stream 415 that bursts in flood and ruinously whelms 416 sweet fields and farms and all the ploughman's toil, 417 whirling whole groves along; while dumb with fear, 418 from some far cliff the shepherd hears the sound. 419 Now their Greek plot was plain, the stratagem 420 at last laid bare. Deiphobus' great house 421 sank vanquished in the fire. Ucalegon's 422 hard by was blazing, while the waters wide 423 around Sigeum gave an answering glow. 424 Shrill trumpets rang; Ioud shouting voices roared; 425 wildly I armed me (when the battle calls, 426 how dimly reason shines!); I burned to join 427 the rally of my peers, and to the heights 428 defensive gather. Frenzy and vast rage 429 seized on my soul. I only sought what way 430 with sword in hand some noble death to die.

	per umbram
2.421	421 fudimus insidiis totaque agitavimus urbe, 422 apparent; primi clipeos mentitaque tela 423 adgnoscunt, atque ora sono discordia signant. 424 Ilicet obruimur numero; primusque Coroebus 425 Penelei dextra divae armipotentis ad aram 426 procumbit; cadit et Rhipeus, iustissimus unus 427 qui fuit in Teucris et servantissimus aequi: 428 dis aliter visum; pereunt Hypanisque Dymasque 429 confixi a sociis; nec te tua plurima, Panthu, 430 labentem pietas nec Apollinis infula texit. 431 Iliaci cineres et flamma extrema meorum, 432 testor, in occasu vestro nec tela nec ullas 433 vitavisse vices Danaum, et, si fata fuissent 434 ut caderem, meruisse manu. Divellimur inde, 435 Iphitus et Pelias mecum, quorum Iphitus aevo 436 iam gravior, Pelias et volnere tardus Ulixi; 437 protinus ad sedes Priami clamore vocati. 438 Hic vero ingentem pugnam, ceu cetera nusquam 439 bella forent, nulli tota morerentur in urbe. 440 Sic Martem indomitum, Danaosque ad tecta ruentis 441 cernimus, obsessumque acta testudine limen. 442 Haerent parietibus scalae, postisque sub ipsos 443 nituntur gradibus, clipeosque ad tela sinistris 444 protecti obiciunt, prensant fastigia dextris. 445 Dardanidae contra turris ac tota domorum 446 culmina convellunt; his se, quando ultima cernunt, 447 extrema iam in morte parant defendere telis; 448 auratasque trabes, veterum decora alta parentum, 449 devolvunt; alii strictis mucronibus	431 When Panthus met me, who had scarce escaped 432 the Grecian spears, —Panthus of Othrys' line, 433 Apollo's priest within our citadel; 434 his holy emblems, his defeated gods, 435 and his small grandson in his arms he bore, 436 while toward the gates with wild, swift steps he flew. 437 “How fares the kingdom, Panthus? What strong place 438 is still our own?” But scarcely could I ask 439 when thus, with many a groan, he made reply:— 440 “Dardania's death and doom are come to-day, 441 implacable. There is no Ilium now; 442 our Trojan name is gone, the Teucrian throne 443 Quite fallen. For the wrathful power of Jove 444 has given to Argos all our boast and pride. 445 The Greek is Iord of all yon blazing towers. 446 yon horse uplifted on our city's heart 447 disgorges men-at-arms. False Sinon now, 448 with scorn exultant, heaps up flame on flame. 449 Others throw wide the gates. The whole vast horde 450 that out of proud Mycenae hither sailed 451 is at us. With confronting spears they throng 452 each narrow passage. Every steel-bright blade 453 is flashing naked, making haste for blood. 454 Our sentries helpless meet the invading shock 455 and give back blind and unavailing war.” 456 By Panthus' word and by some god impelled, 457 I flew to battle, where the flames leaped high, 458 where grim Bellona called, and all the air 459 resounded high as heaven with shouts of war. 460 Rhipeus and Epytus of doughty arm 461 were at my side, Dymas and Hypanis, 462 seen by a pale moon, join our little band; 463 and young Coroebus, Mygdon's princely son, 464 who was in Troy that hour because he loved 465 Cassandra madly, and had made a league 466 as Priam's kinsman with our Phrygian arms: 467 ill-starred, to heed not what the virgin raved!

	imas 450 obsedere fores; has servant agmine denso.
2.451	451 Instaurati animi, regis succurrere tectis, 452 auxilioque levare viros, vimque addere victis. 453 Limen erat caecaeque fores et pervius usus 454 tectorum inter se Priami, postesque relicti 455 a tergo, infelix qua se, dum regna manebant, 456 saepius Andromache ferre incomitata solebat 457 ad soceros, et avo puerum Astyanacta trahebat. 458 Evado ad summi fastigia culminis, unde 459 tela manu miseri iactabant inrita Teucri. 460 Turrim in praecipiti stantem summisque sub astra 461 eductam tectis, unde omnis Troia videri 462 et Danaum solitae naves et Achaia castra, 463 adgressi ferro circum, qua summa labantis 464 iuncturas tabulata dabant, convellimus altis 465 sedibus, impulimusque; ea lapsa repente ruinam 466 cum sonitu trahit et Danaum super agmina late 467 incidit: ast alii subeunt, nec saxa, nec ullum 468 telorum interea cessat genus. 469 Vestibulum ante ipsum primoque in limine Pyrrhus 470 exsultat, telis et luce coruscus aëna; 471 qualis ubi in lucem coluber mala gramina pastus 472 frigida sub terra tumidum quem bruma tegebat, 473 nunc, positis novus exuviis nitidusque iuventa, 474 lubrica convolvit sublato pectore terga 475 arduus ad solem, et linguis micat ore trisulcis. 476 Una ingens Periphas et equorum agitator Achillis, 477 armiger Automedon, una omnis Scyria pubes 478 succedunt tecto, et flammas ad culmina iactant.	468 When these I saw close-gathered for the fight, 469 I thus addressed them: “Warriors, vainly brave, 470 if ye indeed desire to follow one 471 who dares the uttermost brave men may do, 472 our evil plight ye see: the gods are fled 473 from every altar and protecting fire, 474 which were the kingdom's stay. Ye offer aid 475 unto your country's ashes. Let us fight 476 unto the death! To arms, my men, to arms! 477 The single hope and stay of desperate men 478 is their despair.” Thus did I rouse their souls. 479 Then like the ravening wolves, some night of cloud, 480 when cruel hunger in an empty maw 481 drives them forth furious, and their whelps behind 482 wait famine-throated; so through foemen's steel 483 we flew to surest death, and kept our way 484 straight through the midmost town . The wings of night 485 brooded above us in vast vault of shade. 486 But who the bloodshed of that night can tell? 487 What tongue its deaths shall number, or what eyes 488 find meed of tears to equal all its woe? 489 The ancient City fell, whose throne had stood 490 age after age. Along her streets were strewn 491 the unresisting dead; at household shrines 492 and by the temples of the gods they lay. 493 Yet not alone was Teucrian blood required: 494 oft out of vanquished hearts fresh valor flamed, 495 and the Greek victor fell. Anguish and woe 496 were everywhere; pale terrors ranged abroad, 497 and multitudinous death met every eye.

	479 Ipse inter primos correpta dura bipenni 480 limina perrumpit, postisque a cardine vellit
2.481	481 aeratos; iamque excisa trabe firma cavavit 482 robora, et ingentem lato dedit ore fenestram. 483 Adparet domus intus, et atria longa patescunt; 484 adparent Priami et veterum penetralia regum, 485 armatosque vident stantis in limine primo. 486 At domus interior gemitu miseroque tumultu 487 miscetur, penitusque cavae plangoribus aedes 488 femineis ululant; ferit aurea sidera clamor. 489 Tum pavidae tectis matres ingentibus errant; 490 amplexaeque tenent postis atque oscula figunt. 491 Instat vi patria Pyrrhus; nec claustra, neque ipsi 492 custodes sufferre valent; labat ariete crebro 493 ianua, et emoti procumbunt cardine postes. 494 Fit via vi; rumpunt aditus, primosque trucidant 495 immissi Danai, et late loca milite complent. 496 Non sic, aggeribus ruptis cum spumeus amnis 497 exiit, oppositasque evicit gurgite moles, 498 fertur in arva furens cumulo, camposque per omnis 499 cum stabulis armenta trahit. Vidi ipse furentem 500 caede Neoptolemum geminosque in limine Atridas; 501 vidi Hecubam centumque nurus, Priamumque per aras 502 sanguine foedantem, quos ipse sacraverat, ignis. 503 Quinquaginta illi thalami, spes tanta nepotum, 504 barbarico postes auro spoliisque superbi, 505 procubuere; tenent Danai, qua deficit ignis. 506 Forsitan et Priami fuerint quae fata requiras. 507 Urbis uti captae casum convolsaque vidit	498 Androgeos, followed by a thronging band 499 of Greeks, first met us on our desperate way; 500 but heedless, and confounding friend with foe, 501 thus, all unchallenged, hailed us as his own : 502 “Haste, heroes! Are ye laggards at this hour? 503 Others bear off the captives and the spoil 504 of burning Troy. Just from the galleys ye?” 505 He spoke; but straightway, when no safe reply 506 returned, he knew himself entrapped, and fallen 507 into a foeman's snare; struck dumb was he 508 and stopped both word and motion; as one steps, 509 when blindly treading a thick path of thorns, 510 upon a snake, and sick with fear would flee 511 that lifted wrath and swollen gorge of green: 512 so trembling did Androgeos backward fall. 513 At them we flew and closed them round with war; 514 and since they could not know the ground, and fear 515 had whelmed them quite, we swiftly laid them low. 516 Thus Fortune on our first achievement smiled; 517 and, flushed with victory, Cormbus cried: 518 “Come, friends, and follow Fortune's finger, where 519 she beckons us what path deliverance lies. 520 Change we our shields, and these Greek emblems wear. 521 'Twixt guile and valor who will nicely weigh 522 When foes are met? These dead shall find us arms.” 523 With this, he dons Androgeos' crested helm 524 and beauteous, blazoned shield; and to his side 525 girds on a Grecian blade. Young Rhipeus next, 526 with Dymas and the other soldiery, 527 repeat the deed, exulting, and array 528 their valor in fresh trophies from the slain. 529 Now intermingled with our foes we moved, 530 and alien emblems wore; the long, black night 531 brought many a grapple, and a host of Greeks 532 down to the dark we hurled. Some fled away, 533 seeking their safe ships and the friendly shore. 534 Some cowards foul went clambering back again 535 to that vast horse and hid them in its maw.

	508 limina tectorum et medium in penetralibus hostem, 509 arma diu senior desueta trementibus aevo 510 circumdat nequiquam umeris, et inutile ferrum
2.511	511 cingitur, ac densos fertur moriturus in hostis. 512 Aedibus in mediis nudoque sub aetheris axe 513 ingens ara fuit iuxtaque veterrima laurus, 514 incumbens arae atque umbra complexa Penatis. 515 Hic Hecuba et natae nequiquam altaria circum, 516 praecipites atra ceu tempestate columbae, 517 condensae et divom amplexae simulacra sedebant. 518 Ipsum autem sumptis Priamum iuvenalibus armis 519 ut vidit, Quae mens tam dira, miserrime coniunx, 520 impulit his cingi telis? Aut quo ruis? inquit; 521 Non tali auxilio nec defensoribus istis 522 tempus eget, non, si ipse meus nunc adforet Hector. 523 Huc tandem concede; haec ara tuebitur omnis, 524 aut moriere simul. Sic ore effata recepit 525 ad sese et sacra longaevum in sede locavit. 526 Ecce autem elapsus Pyrrhi de caede Polites, 527 unus natorum Priami, per tela, per hostis 528 porticibus longis fugit, et vacua atria lustrat 529 saucius: illum ardens infesto volnere Pyrrhus 530 insequitur, iam iamque manu tenet et premit hasta. 531 Ut tandem ante oculos evasit et ora parentum, 532 concidit, ac multo vitam cum sanguine fudit. 533 Hic Priamus, quamquam in media iam morte tenetur, 534 non tamen abstinuit, nec voci iraeque pepercit: 535 At tibi pro scelere, exclamat, pro talibus ausis, 536 di, si qua est caelo pietas, quae talia curet,	536 But woe is me! If gods their help withhold, 537 't is impious to be brave. That very hour 538 the fair Cassandra passed us, bound in chains, 539 King Priam's virgin daughter, from the shrine 540 and altars of Minerva; her loose hair 541 had lost its fillet; her impassioned eyes 542 were lifted in vain prayer,—her eyes alone! 543 For chains of steel her frail, soft hands confined. 544 Coroebus' eyes this horror not endured, 545 and, sorrow-crazed, he plunged him headlong in 546 the midmost fray, self-offered to be slain, 547 while in close mass our troop behind him poured. 548 But, at this point, the overwhelming spears 549 of our own kinsmen rained resistless down 550 from a high temple-tower; and carnage wild 551 ensued, because of the Greek arms we bore 552 and our false crests. The howling Grecian band, 553 crazed by Cassandra's rescue, charged at us 554 from every side; Ajax of savage soul, 555 the sons of Atreus, and that whole wild horde 556 Achilles from Dolopian deserts drew. 557 'T was like the bursting storm, when gales contend, 558 west wind and South, and jocund wind of morn 559 upon his orient steeds—while forests roar, 560 and foam-flecked Nereus with fierce trident stirs 561 the dark deep of the sea. All who did hide 562 in shadows of the night, by our assault 563 surprised, and driven in tumultuous flight, 564 now start to view. Full well they now can see 565 our shields and borrowed arms, and clearly note

	537 persolvant grates dignas et praemia reddant 538 debita, qui nati coram me cernere letum 539 fecisti et patrios foedasti funere voltus. 540 At non ille, satum quo te mentiris, Achilles
2.541	541 talis in hoste fuit Priamo; sed iura fidemque 542 supplicis erubuit, corpusque exsangue sepulchro 543 reddidit Hectoreum, meque in mea regna remisit. 544 Sic fatus senior, telumque imbelle sine ictu 545 coniecit, rauco quod protinus aere repulsum 546 e summo clipei nequiquam umbone pependit. 547 Cui Pyrrhus: Referes ergo haec et nuntius ibis 548 Pelidae genitori; illi mea tristia facta 549 degeneremque Neoptolemum narrare memento. 550 Nunc morere. Hoc dicens altaria ad ipsa trementem 551 traxit et in multo lapsantem sanguine nati, 552 implicuitque comam laeva, dextraque coruscum 553 extulit, ac lateri capulo tenus abdidit ensem. 554 Haec finis Priami fatorum; hic exitus illum 555 sorte tulit, Troiam incensam et prolapsa videntem 556 Pergama, tot quondam populis terrisque superbum 557 regnatorem Asiae. Iacet ingens litore truncus, 558 avolsumque umeris caput, et sine nomine corpus. 559 At me tum primum saevus circumstetit horror 560 Obstipui; subiit cari genitoris imago, 561 ut regem aequaevum crudeli volnere vidi 562 vitam exhalantem; subiit deserta Creüsa, 563 et direpta domus, et parvi casus Iuli. 564 Respicio, et quae sit me circum copia lustro. 565 Deseruere omnes defessi, et corpora saltu	566 our speech of alien sound; their multitude 567 o'erwhelms us utterly. Coroebus first 568 at mailed Minerva's altar prostrate lay, 569 pierced by Peneleus, blade; then Rhipeus fell; 570 we deemed him of all Trojans the most just, 571 most scrupulously righteous; but the gods 572 gave judgment otherwise. There Dymas died, 573 and Hypanis, by their compatriots slain; 574 nor thee, O Panthus, in that mortal hour, 575 could thy clean hands or Phoebus, priesthood save. 576 O ashes of my country! funeral pyre 577 of all my kin! bear witness that my breast 578 shrank not from any sword the Grecian drew, 579 and that my deeds the night my country died 580 deserved a warrior's death, had Fate ordained. 581 But soon our ranks were broken; at my side 582 stayed Iphitus and Pelias; one with age 583 was Iong since wearied, and the other bore 584 the burden of Ulysses' crippling wound. 585 Straightway the roar and tumult summoned us 586 to Priam's palace,where a battle raged 587 as if save this no conflict else were known, 588 and all Troy's dying brave were mustered there. 589 There we beheld the war-god unconfined; 590 The Greek besiegers to the roof-tops fled; 591 or, with shields tortoise-back, the gates assailed. 592 Ladders were on the walls; and round by round, 593 up the huge bulwark as they fight their way, 594 the shielded left-hand thwarts the falling spears, 595 the right to every vantage closely clings.

	566 ad terram misere aut ignibus aegra dedere. 567 568 569 570
2.571	571 572 573 574 575 576 577 578 579 580 581 582 583 584 585 586 587 588 589 cum mihi se, non ante oculis tam clara, videndam 590 obtulit et pura per noctem in luce refulsit 591 alma parens, confessa deam, qualisque videri 592 caelicolis et quanta solet, dextraque prehensum 593 continuit, roseoque haec insuper addidit ore: 594 Nate, quis indomitas tantus dolor excitat iras? 595 Quid furis, aut quonam nostri tibi cura recessit? 596 Non prius aspicies, ubi fessum aetate parentem 597 liqueris Anchisen; superet coniunxne Creüsa, 598 Ascaniusque puer? Quos omnes undique Graiae 599 circum errant acies, et, ni mea cura resistat, 600 iam flammae tulerint inimicus et hauserit ensis.	596 The Trojans hurl whole towers and roof-tops down 597 upon the mounting foe; for well they see 598 that the last hour is come, and with what arms 599 the dying must resist. Rich gilded beams, 600 with many a beauteous blazon of old time, 601 go crashing down. Men armed with naked swords 602 defend the inner doors in close array.
2.601	601 Non tibi Tyndaridis facies invisa Lacaenae 602 culpatusve Paris: divom inclementia, divom, 603 has evertit opes sternitque a culmine Troiam. 604 Aspice—namque omnem, quae nunc obducta tuenti 605 mortalis hebetat visus tibi et umida	603 Thus were our hearts inflamed to stand and strike 604 for the king's house, and to his body-guard 605 bring succor, and renew their vanquished powers. 606 A certain gate I knew, a secret way, 607 which gave free passage between Priam's halls, 608 and exit rearward; hither, in the days 609 before our fall, the lone Andromache

	circum 606 caligat, nubem eripiam; tu ne qua parentis 607 iussa time, neu praeceptis parere recusa:— 608 hic, ubi disiectas moles avolsaque saxis 609 saxa vides mixtoque undantem pulvere fumum. 610 Neptunus muros magnoque emota tridenti 611 fundamenta quatit, totamque a sedibus urbem 612 eruit; hic Iuno Scaeas saevissima portas 613 prima tenet, sociumque furens a navibus agmen 614 ferro accincta vocat. 615 Iam summas arces Tritonia, respice, Pallas 616 insedit, nimbo effulgens et Gorgone saeva. 617 Ipse pater Danais animos viresque secundas 618 sufficit, ipse deos in Dardana suscitat arma. 619 Eripe, nate, fugam, finemque impone labori. 620 Nusquam abero, et tutum patrio te limine sistam. 621 Dixerat, et spissis noctis se condidit umbris. 622 Adparent dirae facies inimicaque Troiae 623 numina magna deum. 624 Tum vero omne mihi visum considere in ignis 625 Ilium et ex imo verti Neptunia Troia; 626 ac veluti summis antiquam in montibus ornum 627 cum ferro accisam crebrisque bipennibus instant 628 eruere agricolae certatim,—illa usque minatur 629 et tremefacta comam concusso vertice nutat, 630 volneribus donec paulatim evicta, supremum	610 was wont with young Astyanax to pass 611 in quest of Priam and her husband's kin. 612 This way to climb the palace roof I flew, 613 where, desperate, the Trojans with vain skill 614 hurled forth repellent arms. A tower was there, 615 reared skyward from the roof-top, giving view 616 of Troy's wide walls and full reconnaissance 617 of all Achaea's fleets and tented field; 618 this, with strong steel, our gathered strength assailed, 619 and as the loosened courses offered us 620 great threatening fissures, we uprooted it 621 from its aerial throne and thrust it down. 622 It fell with instantaneous crash of thunder 623 along the Danaan host in ruin wide. 624 But fresh ranks soon arrive; thick showers of stone 625 rain down, with every missile rage can find. 626 Now at the threshold of the outer court 627 Pyrrhus triumphant stood, with glittering arms 628 and helm of burnished brass. He glittered like 629 some swollen viper, fed on poison-leaves, 630 whom chilling winter shelters underground, 631 till, fresh and strong, he sheds his annual scales 632 and, crawling forth rejuvenate, uncoils 633 his slimy length; his lifted gorge insults 634 the sunbeam with three-forked and quivering tongue. 635 Huge Periphas was there; Automedon, 636 who drove Achilles' steeds, and bore his arms. 637 Then Scyros' island-warriors assault 638 the palaces, and hurl reiterate fire 639 at wall and tower. Pyrrhus led the van; 640 seizing an axe he clove the ponderous doors 641 and rent the hinges from their posts of bronze; 642 he cut the beams, and through the solid mass 643 burrowed his way, till like a window huge 644 the breach yawned wide, and opened to his gaze 645 a vista of long courts and corridors, 646 the hearth and home of many an ancient king, 647 and Priam's own; upon its sacred bourne 648 the sentry, all in arms, kept watch and ward. 649 Confusion, groans, and piteous turmoil 650 were in that dwelling; women shrieked and wailed 651 from many a dark retreat, and their loud cry 652 rang to the golden stars. Through those vast halls 653 the panic-stricken mothers wildly roved, 654 and clung with frantic kisses and embrace 655 unto the columns cold. Fierce as his sire, 2.631	631 congemuit, traxitque iugis avolsa ruinam. 632 Descendo, ac ducente deo flammam inter et hostis 633 expedior; dant tela locum, flammaeque recedunt. 634 Atque ubi iam patriae perventum ad limina sedis 635 antiquasque domos, genitor, quem tollere in altos 636 optabam primum montis primumque petebam, 637 abnegat excisa vitam producere Troia 638 exsiliumque pati. Vos O, quibus integer aevi 639 sanguis, ait solidaeque suo stant robore vires, 640 vos agitate fugam: 641 me si caelicolae voluissent ducere vitam, 642 has mihi servassent sedes. Satis una superque 643 vidimus exscidia et captae superavimus urbi. 644 Sic O, sic positum adfati discedite corpus. 645 Ipse manu mortem inveniam; miserebitur hostis 646 exuviasque petet; facilis iactura sepulcri. 647 Iam pridem invisus divis et inutilis annos 648 demoror, ex quo me divom pater atque hominum rex 649 fulminis adflavit ventis et contigit igni. 650 Talia perstabat memorans, fixusque manebat. 651 Nos contra effusi lacrimis, coniunxque Creüsa 652 Ascaniusque omnisque domus, ne vertere secum 653 cuncta pater fatoque urguenti incumbere vellet. 654 Abnegat, inceptoque et sedibus haeret in isdem. 655 Rursus in arma feror, mortemque miserrimus opto: 656 nam quod consilium aut quae iam fortuna dabatur? 657 Mene efferre pedem, genitor, te posse relicto 658 sperasti, tantumque nefas patrio excidit ore?	656 Pyrrhus moves on; nor bar nor sentinel 657 may stop his way; down tumbles the great door 658 beneath the battering beam, and with it fall 659 hinges and framework violently torn. 660 Force bursts all bars; th' assailing Greeks break in, 661 do butchery, and with men-at-arms possess 662 what place they will. Scarce with an equal rage 663 a foaming river, when its dykes are down, 664 o'erwhelms its mounded shores, and through the plain 665 rolls mountain-high, while from the ravaged farms 666 its fierce flood sweeps along both flock and fold. 667 My own eyes looked on Neoptolemus 668 frenzied with slaughter, and both Atreus' sons 669 upon the threshold frowning; I beheld 670 her hundred daughters with old Hecuba; 671 and Priam, whose own bleeding wounds defiled 672 the altars where himself had blessed the fires; 673 there fifty nuptial beds gave promise proud 674 of princely heirs; but all their brightness now, 675 of broidered cunning and barbaric gold, 676 lay strewn and trampled on. The Danaan foe 677 stood victor, where the raging flame had failed.

	659 Si nihil ex tanta Superis placet urbe relinqui, 660 et sedet hoc animo, perituraeque addere Troiae
2.661	661 teque tuosque iuvat, patet isti ianua leto, 662 iamque aderit multo Priami de sanguine Pyrrhus, 663 natum ante ora patris, patrem qui obtruncat ad aras. 664 Hoc erat, alma parens, quod me per tela, per ignis 665 eripis, ut mediis hostem in penetralibus, utque 666 Ascanium patremque meum iuxtaque Creüsam 667 alterum in alterius mactatos sanguine cernam? 668 Arma, viri, ferte arma; vocat lux ultima victos. 669 Reddite me Danais; sinite instaurata revisam 670 proelia: Numquam omnes hodie moriemur inulti. 671 Hinc ferro accingor rursus clipeoque sinistram 672 insertabam aptans, meque extra tecta ferebam. 673 Ecce autem complexa pedes in limine coniunx 674 haerebat, parvumque patri tendebat Iulum: 675 Si periturus abis, et nos rape in omnia tecum; 676 sin aliquam expertus sumptis spem ponis in armis, 677 hanc primum tutare domum. Cui parvus Iulus, 678 cui pater et coniunx quondam tua dicta relinquor? 679 Talia vociferans gemitu tectum omne replebat, 680 cum subitum dictuque oritur mirabile monstrum. 681 Namque manus inter maestorumque ora parentum 682 ecce levis summo de vertice visus Iuli 683 fundere lumen apex, tactuque innoxia mollis 684 lambere flamma comas et circum tempora pasci. 685 Nos pavidi trepidare metu, crinemque flagrantem 686 excutere et sanctos restinguere fontibus ignis. 687 At pater Anchises oculos ad sidera laetus	678 But would ye haply know what stroke of doom 679 on Priam fell? Now when his anguish saw 680 his kingdom lost and fallen, his abode 681 shattered, and in his very hearth and home 682 th' exulting foe, the aged King did bind 683 his rusted armor to his trembling thews,— 684 all vainly,— and a useless blade of steel 685 he girded on; then charged, resolved to die 686 encircled by the foe. Within his walls 687 there stood, beneath the wide and open sky, 688 a lofty altar; an old laurel-tree 689 leaned o'er it, and enclasped in holy shade 690 the statues of the tutelary powers. 691 Here Hecuba and all the princesses 692 took refuge vain within the place of prayer. 693 Like panic-stricken doves in some dark storm, 694 close-gathering they sate, and in despair 695 embraced their graven gods. But when the Queen 696 saw Priam with his youthful harness on, 697 “What frenzy, O my wretched lord,” she cried, 698 “Arrayed thee in such arms? O, whither now? 699 Not such defences, nor such arm as thine, 700 the time requires, though thy companion were 701 our Hector's self. O, yield thee, I implore! 702 This altar now shall save us one and all, 703 or we must die together.” With these words 704 she drew him to her side, and near the shrine 705 made for her aged spouse a place to cling.

	688 extulit, et caelo palmas cum voce tetendit: 689 Iuppiter omnipotens, precibus si flecteris ullis, 690 aspice nos; hoc tantum, et, si pietate meremur,
2.691	691 da deinde auxilium, pater, atque haec omina firma. 692 Vix ea fatus erat senior, subitoque fragore 693 intonuit laevum, et de caelo lapsa per umbras 694 stella facem ducens multa cum luce cucurrit. 695 Illam, summa super labentem culmina tecti, 696 cernimus Idaea claram se condere silva 697 signantemque vias; tum longo limite sulcus 698 dat lucem, et late circum loca sulphure fumant. 699 Hic vero victus genitor se tollit ad auras, 700 adfaturque deos et sanctum sidus adorat. 701 Iam iam nulla mora est; sequor et qua ducitis adsum. 702 Di patrii, servate domum, servate nepotem. 703 Vestrum hoc augurium, vestroque in numine Troia est. 704 Cedo equidem, nec, nate, tibi comes ire recuso. 705 Dixerat ille; et iam per moenia clarior ignis 706 auditur, propiusque aestus incendia volvunt. 707 Ergo age, care pater, cervici imponere nostrae; 708 ipse subibo umeris, nec me labor iste gravabit: 709 quo res cumque cadent, unum et commune periclum, 710 una salus ambobus erit. Mihi parvus Iulus 711 sit comes, et longe servet vestigia coniunx: 712 vos, famuli, quae dicam, animis advertite vestris. 713 Est urbe egressis tumulus templumque vetustum 714 desertae Cereris, iuxtaque antiqua cupressus 715 religione patrum multos servata per annos. 716 Hanc ex diverso sedem veniemus in unam.	706 But, lo! just 'scaped of Pyrrhus' murderous hand, 707 Polites, one of Priam's sons, fled fast 708 along the corridors, through thronging foes 709 and a thick rain of spears. Wildly he gazed 710 across the desolate halls, wounded to death. 711 Fierce Pyrrhus followed after, pressing hard 712 with mortal stroke, and now his hand and spear 713 were close upon:— when the lost youth leaped forth 714 into his father's sight, and prostrate there 715 lay dying, while his life-blood ebbed away. 716 Then Priam, though on all sides death was nigh, 717 quit not the strife, nor from loud wrath refrained: 718 “Thy crime and impious outrage, may the gods 719 (if Heaven to mortals render debt and due) 720 justly reward and worthy honors pay! 721 My own son's murder thou hast made me see, 722 blood and pollution impiously throwing 723 upon a father's head. Not such was he, 724 not such, Achilles, thy pretended sire, 725 when Priam was his foe. With flush of shame 726 he nobly listened to a suppliant's plea 727 in honor made. He rendered to the tomb 728 my Hector's body pale, and me did send 729 back to my throne a king.” With this proud word 730 the aged warrior hurled with nerveless arm 731 his ineffectual spear, which hoarsely rang 732 rebounding on the brazen shield, and hung 733 piercing the midmost boss,- but all in vain. 734 Then Pyrrhus: “Take these tidings, and convey 735 message to my father, Peleus' son! 736 tell him my naughty deeds! Be sure and say 737 how Neoptolemus hath shamed his sires. 738 Now die!” With this, he trailed before the shrines 739 the trembling King, whose feet slipped in the stream 740 of his son's blood. Then Pyrrhus' left hand clutched 741 the tresses old and gray; a glittering sword 742 his right hand lifted high, and buried it 743 far as the hilt in that defenceless heart. 744 So Priam's story ceased. Such final doom 745 fell on him, while his dying eyes surveyed 746 Troy burning, and

	717 Tu, genitor, cape sacra manu patriosque Penatis; 718 me, bello e tanto digressum et caede recenti, 719 attrectare nefas, donec me flumine vivo 720 abluero.	her altars overthrown, 747 though once of many an orient land and tribe 748 the boasted lord. In huge dismemberment 749 his severed trunk lies tombless on the shore, 750 the head from shoulder torn, the corpse unknown.
2.721	721 Haec fatus, latos umeros subiectaque colla 722 veste super fulvique insternor pelle leonis, 723 succedoque oneri; dextrae se parvus Iulus 724 implicuit sequiturque patrem non passibus aequis; 725 pone subit coniunx: ferimur per opaca locorum; 726 et me, quem dudum non ulla iniecta movebant 727 tela neque adverso glomerati ex agmine Grai, 728 nunc omnes terrent aurae, sonus excitat omnis 729 suspensum et pariter comitique onerique timentem. 730 Iamque propinquabam portis, omnemque videbar 731 evasisse viam, subito cum creber ad auris 732 visus adesse pedum sonitus, genitorque per umbram 733 prospiciens; Nate exclamat, fuge nate, propinquant. 734 Ardentis clipeos atque aera micantia cerno!— 735 Hic mihi nescio quod trepido male numen amicum 736 confusam eripuit mentem. Namque avia cursu 737 dum sequor, et nota excedo regione viarum, 738 heu, misero coniunx fatone erepta Creüsa 739 substitit, erravitne via, seu lassa resedit, 740 incertum; nec post oculis est reddita nostris. 741 Nec prius amissam respexi animumque reflexi, 742 quam tumulum antiquae Cereris sedemque sacratam 743 venimus; hic demum collectis omnibus una 744 defuit, et comites natumque virumque fefellit. 745 Quem non incusavi amens hominumque deorumque, 746 aut quid in eversa vidi crudelius

	urbe? 747 Ascanium Anchisenque patrem Teucrosque Penatis 748 commendo sociis et curva valle recondo; 749 ipse urbem repeto et cingor fulgentibus armis. 750 Stat casus renovare omnis, omnemque reverti
2.751	751 per Troiam, et rursus caput obiectare periclis. 752 Principio muros obscuraque limina portae, 753 qua gressum extuleram, repeto, et vestigia retro 754 observata sequor per noctem et lumine lustro. 755 Horror ubique animo, simul ipsa silentia terrent. 756 Inde domum, si forte pedem, si forte tulisset, 757 me refero: inruerant Danai, et tectum omne tenebant. 758 Ilicet ignis edax summa ad fastigia vento 759 volvitur; exsuperant flammae, furit aestus ad auras. 760 Procedo et Priami sedes arcemque reviso. 761 Et iam porticibus vacuis Iunonis asylo 762 custodes lecti Phoenix et dirus Ulixes 763 praedam adservabant. Huc undique Troia gaza 764 incensis erepta adytis, mensaeque deorum, 765 crateresque auro solidi, captivaque vestis 766 congeritur; pueri et pavidae longo ordine matres 767 stant circum. 768 Ausus quin etiam voces iactare per umbram 769 implevi clamore vias, maestusque Creüsam 770 nequiquam ingeminans iterumque iterumque vocavi. 771 Quaerenti et tectis urbis sine fine furenti 772 infelix simulacrum atque ipsius umbra Creüsae 773 visa mihi ante oculos et nota maior imago. 774 Obstipui, steteruntque comae et vox faucibus haesit. 775 776 Quid tantum insano iuvat indulgere	751 Then first wild horror on my spirit fell 752 and dazed me utterly. A vision rose 753 of my own cherished father, as I saw 754 the King, his aged peer, sore wounded Iying 755 in mortal agony; a vision too 756 of lost Creusa at my ravaged hearth, 757 and young Iulus' peril. Then my eyes 758 looked round me seeking aid. But all were fled, 759 war-wearied and undone; some earthward leaped 760 from battlement or tower; some in despair 761 yielded their suffering bodies to the flame. 762 I stood there sole surviving; when, behold, 763 to Vesta's altar clinging in dumb fear, 764 hiding and crouching in the hallowed shade, 765 Tyndarus' daughter!— 't was the burning town 766 lighted full well my roving steps and eyes. 767 In fear was she both of some Trojan's rage 768 for Troy o'erthrown, and of some Greek revenge, 769 or her wronged husband's Iong indignant ire. 770 So hid she at that shrine her hateful brow, 771 being of Greece and Troy, full well she knew, 772 the common curse. Then in my bosom rose 773 a blaze of wrath; methought I should avenge 774 my dying country, and with horrid deed 775 pay crime for crime. “Shall she return unscathed 776 to Sparta, to Mycenae's golden pride, 777 and have a royal triumph? Shall her eyes 778 her sire and sons, her hearth and husband see, 779 while Phrygian captives follow in her train? 780 is Priam murdered? Have the flames swept o'er 781 my native Troy? and cloth our Dardan strand 782 sweat o'er and o'er with sanguinary dew? 783 O, not thus unavenged! For though there be 784 no glory if I smite a woman's crime, 785 nor conqueror's fame for such a victory won, 786 yet if I blot this monster out, and wring 787 full punishment from guilt, the time to come 788 will praise me, and sweet pleasure it will be 789 to glut my soul with vengeance and dolori, 777 O dulcis coniunx? Non haec sine numine divom 778 eveniunt; nec te hinc comitem asportare Creüsam 779 fas, aut ille sinit superi regnator Olympi. 780 Longa tibi exsilia, et vastum maris aequor arandum,	appease 790 the ashes of my kindred.”So I raved, 791 and to such frenzied purpose gave my soul.

2.781	781 et terram Hesperiam venies, ubi Lydius arva 782 inter opima virum leni fluit agmine Thybris: 783 illic res laetae regnumque et regia coniunx 784 parta tibi. Lacrimas dilectae pelle Creüsae. 785 Non ego Myrmidonum sedes Dolopumve superbas 786 aspiciam, aut Graiis servitum matribus ibo, 787 Dardanis, et divae Veneris nurus. 788 Sed me magna deum genetrix his detinet oris: 789 iamque vale, et nati serva communis amorem. 790 Haec ubi dicta dedit, lacrimantem et multa volentem 791 dicere deseruit, tenuisque recessit in auras. 792 Ter conatus ibi collo dare bracchia circum: 793 ter frustra comprensa manus effugit imago, 794 par levibus ventis volucrique simillima somno. 795 Sic demum socios consumpta nocte reviso. 796 Atque hic ingentem comitum adfluxisse novorum 797 invenio admirans numerum, matresque virosque, 798 collectam exsilio pubem, miserabile volgus. 799 Undique convenere, animis opibusque parati, 800 in quascumque velim pelago deducere terras. 801 Iamque iugis summae surgebat Lucifer Idae 802 ducebatque diem, Danaique obsessa tenebant 803 limina portarum, nec spes opis ulla dabatur; 804 cessi, et sublato montes genitore petivi.	792 Then with clear vision (never had I seen 793 her presence so unclouded) I beheld, 794 in golden beams that pierced the midnight gloom, 795 my gracious mother, visibly divine, 796 and with that mien of majesty she wears 797 when seen in heaven; she stayed me with her hand, 798 and from her lips of rose this counsel gave: 799 “O son, what sorrow stirs thy boundless rage? 800 what madness this? Or whither vanisheth 801 thy love of me? Wilt thou not seek to know 802 where bides Anchises, thy abandoned sire, 803 now weak with age? or if Creusa lives 804 and young Ascanius, who are ringed about 805 with ranks of Grecian foes, and long ere this— 806 save that my love can shield them and defend— 807 had fallen on flame or fed some hungry sword? 808 Not Helen's hated beauty works thee woe; 809 nor Paris, oft-accused. The cruelty 810 of gods, of gods unaided, overwhelms 811 thy country's power, and from its Iofty height 812 casts Ilium down. Behold, I take away 813 the barrier-cloud that dims thy mortal eye, 814 with murk and mist o'er-veiling. Fear not thou 815 to heed thy mother's word, nor let thy heart 816 refuse obedience to her counsel given. 817 'Mid yonder trembling ruins, where thou see'st 818 stone torn from stone, with dust and smoke uprolling, 819 't is Neptune strikes the wall; his trident vast 820 makes her foundation tremble, and unseats 821 the city from her throne. Fierce Juno leads evertere gentem 2 immeritam visum Superis, ceciditque superbum 3 Ilium, et omnis humo fumat Neptunia Troia, 4 diversa exsilia et desertas quaerere terras 5 auguriis agimur divom, classemque sub ipsa 6 Antandro et Phrygiae molimur montibus Idae, 7 incerti, quo fata ferant, ubi sistere detur, 8 contrahimusque viros. Vix prima inceperat aestas, 9 et pater Anchises dare fatis vela iubebat; 10 litora cum patriae lacrimans portusque relinquo 11 et campos, ubi Troia fuit: feror exsul in altum 12 cum sociis natoque Penatibus et magnis dis. 13 Terra procul vastis colitur Mavortia campis, 14 Thraces arant, acri quondam regnata Lycurgo, 15 hospitium antiquum Troiae sociique Penates, 16 dum Fortuna fuit. Feror huc, et litore curvo 17 moenia prima loco, fatis ingressus iniquis, 18 Aeneadasque meo nomen de nomine fingo. 19 Sacra Dionaeae matri divisque ferebam 20 auspicibus coeptorum operum, superoque nitentem 21 caelicolum regi mactabam in litore taurum. 22 Forte fuit iuxta tumulus, quo cornea summo 23 virgulta et densis hastilibus horrida myrtus. 24 Accessi, viridemque ab humo convellere silvam 25 conatus, ramis tegerem ut frondentibus aras, 26 horrendum et dictu video mirabile monstrum. 27 Nam, quae prima solo ruptis radicibus arbos 28 vellitur, huic atro liquuntur sanguine guttae, 29 et terram tabo maculant. Mihi frigidus horror 30 membra quatit, gelidusque coit	and throne, 2 though guiltless, were cast down by Heaven's decree, 3 when Ilium proud had fallen, and Neptune's Troy 4 in smouldering ash lay level with the ground, 5 to wandering exile then and regions wild 6 the gods by many an augury and sign 7 compelled us forth. We fashioned us a fleet 8 within Antander's haven, in the shade 9 of Phrygian Ida's peak (though knowing not 10 whither our fate would drive, or where afford 11 a resting-place at last), and my small band 12 of warriors I arrayed. As soon as smiled 13 the light of summer's prime, my reverend sire 14 Anchises bade us on the winds of Fate 15 to spread all sail. Through tears I saw recede 16 my native shore, the haven and the plains 17 where once was Troy. An exile on the seas, 18 with son and followers and household shrines, 19 and Troy's great guardian-gods, I took my way.
3.1	1 Postquam res Asiae Priamique	1 When Asia's power and Priam's race

	formidine sanguis.
3.31	31 Rursus et alterius lentum convellere vimen 32 insequor, et causas penitus temptare latentis: 33 ater et alterius sequitur de cortice sanguis. 34 Multa movens animo nymphas venerabar agrestis 35 Gradivumque patrem, Geticis qui praesidet arvis, 36 rite secundarent visus omenque levarent. 37 Tertia sed postquam maiore hastilia nisu 38 adgredior, genibusque adversae obluctor harenae— 39 eloquar, an sileam?—gemitus lacrimabilis imo 40 auditur tumulo, et vox reddita fertur ad auris: 41 Quid miserum, Aenea, laceras? Iam parce sepulto; 42 parce pias scelerare manus. Non me tibi Troia 43 externum tulit, aut cruor hic de stipite manat. 44 Heu, fuge crudelis terras, fuge litus avarum: 45 nam Polydorus ego; hic confixum ferrea texit 46 telorum seges et iaculis increvit acutis. 47 Tum vero ancipiti mentem formidine pressus 48 obstipui, steteruntque comae et vox faucibus haesit. 49 Hunc Polydorum auri quondam cum pondere magno 50 infelix Priamus furtim mandarat alendum 51 Threicio regi, cum iam diffideret armis 52 Dardaniae, cingique urbem obsidione videret. 53 Ille, ut opes fractae Teucrum, et Fortuna recessit, 54 res Agamemnonias victriciaque arma secutus, 55 fas omne abrumpit; Polydorum obtruncat, et auro 56 vi potitur. Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, 57 auri sacra fames? Postquam pavor ossa reliquit, 58 delectos populi ad proceres primumque parentem 59 monstra deum refero, et quae sit	29 Unto Dione's daughter, and all gods 30 who blessed our young emprise, due gifts were paid; 31 and unto the supreme celestial King 32 I slew a fair white bull beside the sea. 33 But haply near my place of sacrifice 34 a mound was seen, and on the summit grew 35 a copse of corner and a myrtle tree, 36 with spear-like limbs outbranched on every side. 37 This I approached, and tried to rend away 38 from its deep roots that grove of gloomy green, 39 and dress my altars in its leafy boughs. 40 But, horrible to tell, a prodigy 41 smote my astonished eyes: for the first tree, 42 which from the earth with broken roots I drew, 43 dripped black with bloody drops, and gave the ground 44 dark stains of gore. Cold horror shook my frame, 45 and every vein within me froze for fear. 46 Once more I tried from yet another stock 47 the pliant stem to tear, and to explore 48 the mystery within,—but yet again 49 the foul bark oozed with clots of blackest gore! 50 From my deep-shaken soul I made a prayer 51 to all the woodland nymphs and to divine 52 Gradivus, patron of the Thracian plain, 53 to bless this sight, to lift its curse away. 54 But when at a third sheaf of myrtle spears 55 I fell upon my knees, and tugged amain 56 against the adverse ground (I dread to tell!), 57 a moaning and a wail from that deep grave 58 burst forth and murmured in my listening ear: 59 “Why wound me, great Aeneas, in my woe? 60 O, spare the dead, nor let thy holy hands 61 do sacrilege and sin! I, Trojan-born, 62 was kin of thine. This blood is not of trees. 63 Haste from this murderous shore, this land of greed. 64 O, I am Polydorus! Haste away! 65 Here was I pierced; a crop of iron spears 66 has grown up o'er my breast, and multiplied 67 to all these deadly javelins, keen and strong.” 68 Then stood I, burdened with dark doubt and fear 69 I quailed, my hair rose and my utterance choked.

	sententia posco. 60 Omnibus idem animus, scelerata excedere terra,
3.61	61 linqui pollutum hospitium, et dare classibus austros. 62 Ergo instauramus Polydoro funus, et ingens 63 aggeritur tumulo tellus; stant Manibus arae, 64 caeruleis maestae vittis atraque cupresso, 65 et circum Iliades crinem de more solutae; 66 inferimus tepido spumantia cymbia lacte 67 sanguinis et sacri pateras, animamque sepulchro 68 condimus, et magna supremum voce ciemus. 69 Inde, ubi prima fides pelago, placataque venti 70 dant maria et lenis crepitans vocat Auster in altum, 71 deducunt socii navis et litora complent: 72 provehimur portu, terraeque urbesque recedunt. 73 Sacra mari colitur medio gratissima tellus 74 Nereidum matri et Neptuno Aegaeo, 75 quam pius arquitenens oras et litora circum 76 errantem Mycono e celsa Gyaroque revinxit, 77 immotamque coli dedit et contemnere ventos. 78 Huc feror; haec fessos tuto placidissima portu 79 accipit: egressi veneramur Apollinis urbem. 80 Rex Anius, rex idem hominum Phoebique sacerdos 81 vittis et sacra redimitus tempora lauro, 82 occurrit; veterem Anchisen adgnovit amicum. 83 Iungimus hospitio dextras, et tecta subimus. 84 Templa dei saxo venerabar structa vetusto: 85 Da propriam, Thymbraee, domum; da moenia fessis 86 et genus et mansuram urbem; serva altera Troiae 87 Pergama, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli. 88 Quem sequimur? Quove ire iubes? Ubi ponere sedes?	70 For once this Polydorus, with much gold, 71 ill-fated Priam sent by stealth away 72 for nurture with the Thracian king, what time 73 Dardania's war Iooked hopeless, and her towers 74 were ringed about by unrelenting siege. 75 That king, when Ilium's cause was ebbing low, 76 and fortune frowned, gave o'er his plighted faith 77 to Agamemnon's might and victory; 78 he scorned all honor and did murder foul 79 on Polydorus, seizing lawlessly 80 on all the gold. O, whither at thy will, 81 curst greed of gold, may mortal hearts be driven? 82 Soon as my shuddering ceased, I told this tale 83 of prodigies before the people's chiefs, 84 who sat in conclave with my kingly sire, 85 and bade them speak their reverend counsel forth. 86 All found one voice; to leave that land of sin, 87 where foul abomination had profaned 88 a stranger's right; and once more to resign 89 our fleet unto the tempest and the wave. 90 But fit and solemn funeral rites were paid 91 to Polydorus. A high mound we reared 92 of heaped-up earth, and to his honored shade 93 built a perpetual altar, sadly dressed 94 in cypress dark and purple pall of woe. 95 Our Ilian women wailed with loosened hair; 96 new milk was sprinkled from a foaming cup, 97 and from the shallow bowl fresh blood out-poured 98 upon the sacred ground. So in its tomb 99 we laid his ghost to rest, and loudly sang, 100 with prayer for peace, the long, the last farewell.

	89 Da, pater, augurium, atque animis inlabere nostris. 90 Vix ea fatus eram: tremere omnia visa repente,
3.91	91 liminaque laurusque dei, totusque moveri 92 mons circum, et mugire adytis cortina reclusis. 93 Submissi petimus terram, et vox fertur ad auris: 94 Dardanidae duri, quae vos a stirpe parentum 95 prima tulit tellus, eadem vos ubere laeto 96 accipiet reduces. Antiquam exquirite matrem: 97 hic domus Aeneae cunctis dominabitur oris, 98 et nati natorum, et qui nascentur ab illis. 99 Haec Phoebus; mixtoque ingens exorta tumultu 100 laetitia, et cuncti quae sint ea moenia quaerunt, 101 quo Phoebus vocet errantis iubeatque reverti? 102 Tum genitor, veterum volvens monumenta virorum, 103 Audite, O proceres ait et spes discite vestras: 104 Creta Iovis magni medio iacet insula ponto; 105 mons Idaeus ubi, et gentis cunabula nostrae. 106 Centum urbes habitant magnas, uberrima regna; 107 maximus unde pater, si rite audita recordor, 108 Teucrus Rhoeteas primum est advectus in oras, 109 optavitque locum regno. Nondum Ilium et arces 110 Pergameae steterant; habitabant vallibus imis. 111 hinc mater cultrix Cybeli Corybantiaque aera 112 Idaeumque nemus; hinc fida silentia sacris, 113 et iuncti currum dominae subiere leones. 114 Ergo agite, et, divom ducunt qua iussa, sequamur; 115 placemus ventos et Gnosia regna petamus. 116 Nec longo distant cursu; modo Iuppiter adsit, 117 tertia lux classem Cretaeis sistet in oris.	101 After these things, when first the friendly sea 102 looked safe and fair, and o'er its tranquil plain 103 light-whispering breezes bade us launch away, 104 my men drew down our galleys to the brine, 105 thronging the shore. Soon out of port we ran, 106 and watched the hills and cities fading far. 107 There is a sacred island in mid-seas, 108 to fruitful Doris and to Neptune dear, 109 which grateful Phoebus, wielder of the bow, 110 the while it drifted loose from land to land, 111 chained firmly where the crags of Gyaros 112 and Myconos uptower, and bade it rest 113 immovable, in scorn of wind and wave. 114 Thither I sped; by this my weary ships 115 found undisturbed retreat and haven fair. 116 To land we came and saw with reverent eyes 117 Apollo's citadel. King Anius, 118 his people's king, and priest at Phoebus' fane, 119 came forth to meet us, wearing on his brow 120 the fillets and a holy laurel crown. 121 Unto Anchises he gave greeting kind, 122 claimed old acquaintance, grasped us by the hand, 123 and bade us both his roof and welcome share.

	118 Sic fatus, meritos aris mactavit honores, 119 taurum Neptuno, taurum tibi, pulcher Apollo 120 nigram Hiemi pecudem, Zephyris felicibus albam.
3.121	121 Fama volat pulsum regnis cessisse paternis 122 Idomenea ducem, desertaque litora Cretae 123 hoste vacare domos, sedesque adstare relictas. 124 Linquimus Ortygiae portus, pelagoque volamus, 125 bacchatamque iugis Naxon viridemque Donysam, 126 Olearon, niveamque Paron, sparsasque per aequor 127 Cycladas, et crebris legimus freta consita terris. 128 Nauticus exoritur vario certamine clamor; 129 hortantur socii: Cretam proavosque petamus! 130 Prosequitur surgens a puppi ventus euntis 131 et tandem antiquis Curetum adlabimur oris. 132 Ergo avidus muros optatae molior urbis, 133 Pergameamque voco, et laetam cognomine gentem 134 hortor amare focos arcemque attollere tectis. 135 Iamque fere sicco subductae litore puppes; 136 conubiis arvisque novis operata iuventus; 137 iura domosque dabam: subito cum tabida membris, 138 corrupto caeli tractu, miserandaque venit 139 arboribusque satisque lues et letifer annus. 140 Linquebant dulcis animas, aut aegra trahebant 141 corpora; tum sterilis exurere Sirius agros; 142 arebant herbae, et victum seges aegra negabat. 143 Rursus ad oraclum Ortygiae Phoebumque remenso 144 hortatur pater ire mari, veniamque precari: 145 quam fessis finem rebus ferat; unde laborum 146 temptare auxilium iubeat; quo vertere cursus.	180 The tale was told us that Idomeneus, 181 from his hereditary kindgom driven, 182 had left his Crete abandoned, that no foe 183 now harbored there, but all its dwellings lay 184 untenanted of man. So forth we sailed 185 out of the port of Delos, and sped far 186 along the main. The maenad-haunted hills 187 of Naxos came in view; the ridges green 188 of fair Donysa, with Olearos, 189 and Paros, gleaming white, and Cyclades 190 scattered among the waves, as close we ran 191 where thick-strewn islands vex the channelled seas 192 with rival shout the sailors cheerly called: 193 “On, comrades! On, to Crete and to our sires!” 194 Freely behind us blew the friendly winds, 195 and gave smooth passage to that fabled shore, 196 the land of the Curetes, friends of Jove. 197 There eagerly I labored at the walls 198 of our long-prayed-for city; and its name 199 was Pergamea; to my Trojan band, 200 pleased with such name, I gave command to build 201 altar and hearth, and raise the lofty tower.

	147 Nox erat, et terris animalia somnus habebat: 148 effigies sacrae divom Phrygiique Penates, 149 quos mecum a Troia mediisque ex ignibus urbis 150 extuleram, visi ante oculos adstare iacentis
3.151	151 in somnis, multo manifesti lumine, qua se 152 plena per insertas fundebat luna fenestras; 153 tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 154 Quod tibi delato Ortygiam dicturus Apollo est, 155 hic canit, et tua nos en ultro ad limina mittit. 156 Nos te, Dardania incensa, tuaque arma secuti, 157 nos tumidum sub te permensi classibus aequor, 158 idem venturos tollemus in astra nepotes, 159 imperiumque urbi dabimus: tu moenia magnis 160 magna para, longumque fugae ne linque laborem. 161 Mutandae sedes: non haec tibi litora suasit 162 Delius, aut Cretae iussit considere Apollo. 163 Est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt, 164 terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glaebae; 165 Oenotri coluere viri; nunc fama minores 166 Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem: 167 hae nobis propriae sedes; hinc Dardanus ortus, 168 Iasiusque pater, genus a quo principe nostrum. 169 Surge age, et haec laetus longaevo dicta parenti 170 haud dubitanda refer: Corythum terrasque requirat 171 Ausonias; Dictaea negat tibi Iuppiter arva. 172 Talibus attonitus visis et voce deorum— 173 nec sopor illud erat, sed coram adgnoscere voltus 174 velatasque comas praesentiaque ora videbar; 175 tum gelidus toto manabat corpore sudor	124 Then, kneeling at the shrine of time-worn stone: 125 “Thou who at Thymbra on the Trojan shore 126 hast often blessed my prayer, O, give to me 127 a hearth and home, and to this war-worn band 128 defensive towers and offspring multiplied 129 in an abiding city; give to Troy 130 a second citadel, that shall survive 131 Achilles' wrath and all our Argive foe. 132 Whom shall we follow? Whither lies our way? 133 Where wilt thou grant us an abiding-place? 134 Send forth, O King, thy voice oracular, 135 and on our spirits move.” Scarce had I spoke 136 when sudden trembling through the laurels ran 137 and smote the holy portals; far and wide 138 the mighty ridges of the mountain shook, 139 and from the opening shrine the tripod moaned. 140 Prostrate to earth we fall, as on our ears 141 this utterance breaks: “O breed of iron men, 142 ye sons of Dardanus! the self-same land 143 where bloomed at first your far-descended stem 144 shall to its bounteous bosom draw ye home. 145 Seek out your ancient Mother! There at last 146 Aeneas' race shall reign on every shore, 147 and his sons' sons, and all their house to be.” 148 So Phoebus spoke; and mighty joy uprose 149 from all my thronging people, who would know 150 where Phoebus' city lay, and whitherward 151 the god ordained the wandering tribe's return. 152 Then spake my father, pondering olden days 153 and sacred memories of heroes gone: 154 “Hear, chiefs and princes, what your hopes shall be! 155 The Isle of Crete, abode of lofty Jove, 156 rests in the middle sea. Thence Ida soars; 157 there is the cradle of our race. It boasts 158 a hundred cities, seats of fruitful power. 159 Thence our chief sire, if duly I recall 160 the olden tale, King Teucer sprung, who first 161 touched on the Trojan shore, and chose his seat 162 of kingly power. There was no Ilium then 163 nor towered

	176 corripio e stratis corpus, tendoque supinas 177 ad caelum cum voce manus, et munera libo 178 intemerata focis. Perfecto laetus honore 179 Anchisen facio certum, remque ordine pando. 180 Adgnovit prolem ambiguam geminosque parentes,	Pergama; in lowly vales 164 their dwelling; hence the ancient worship given 165 to the Protectress of Mount Cybele, 166 mother of Gods, what time in Ida's grove 167 the brazen Corybantic cymbals clang, 168 or sacred silence guards her mystery, 169 and lions yoked her royal chariot draw. 170 Up, then, and follow the behests divine! 171 Pour offering to the winds, and point your keels 172 unto that realm of Minos. It is near. 173 if Jove but bless, the third day's dawn should see 174 our ships at Cretan land." So, having said, 175 he slew the victims for each altar's praise. 176 A bull to Neptune, and a bull to thee, 177 o beauteous Apollo! A black lamb 178 unto the clouds and storms; but fleece of snow 179 to the mild zephyrs was our offering.
3.181	181 seque novo veterum deceptum errore locorum. 182 Tum memorat: Nate, Iliacis exercite fatis, 183 sola mihi talis casus Cassandra canebat. 184 Nunc repeto haec generi portendere debita nostro, 185 et saepe Hesperiam, saepe Itala regna vocare. 186 Sed quis ad Hesperiae venturos litora Teucros 187 crederet, aut quem tum vates Cassandra moveret? 188 Cedamus Phoebo, et moniti meliora sequamur. 189 Sic ait, et cuncti dicto paremus ovantes. 190 Hanc quoque deserimus sedem, paucisque relictis 191 vela damus, vastumque cava trabe currimus aequor. 192 Postquam altum tenuere rates, nec iam amplius ullae 193 adparent terrae, caelum undique et undique pontus, 194 tum mihi caeruleus supra caput adstitit imber, 195 noctem hiememque ferens, et inhorruit unda tenebris. 196 Continuo venti volvunt mare, magnaque surgunt 197 aequora; dispersi iactamur gurgite vasto; 198 involvere diem nimbi, et nox umida caelum 199 abstulit; ingeminant abruptis	202 But scarce the ships were beached along the strand 203 (While o'er the isle my busy mariners 204 ploughed in new fields and took them wives once more, — 205 I giving homes and laws) when suddenly 206 a pestilence from some infectious sky 207 seized on man's flesh, and horribly exhaled 208 o'er trees and crops a fatal year of plague. 209 Some breathed their last, while others weak and worn 210 lived on; the dog-star parched the barren fields; 211 grass withered, and the sickly, mouldering corn 212 refused us life. My aged father then 213 bade us re-cross the waves and re-implore 214 Apollo's mercy at his island shrine; 215 if haply of our weariness and woe 216 he might vouchsafe the end, or bid us find 217 help for our task, or guidance o'er the sea.

	nubibus ignes. 200 Excutimur cursu, et caecis erramus in undis. 201 Ipse diem noctemque negat discernere caelo, 202 nec meminisse viae media Palinurus in unda. 203 Tris adeo incertos caeca caligine soles 204 erramus pelago, totidem sine sidere noctes. 205 Quarto terra die primum se attollere tandem 206 visa, aperire procul montis, ac volvere fumum. 207 Vela cadunt, remis insurgimus; haud mora nautae 208 adnixi torquent spumas et caerula verrunt. 209 Servatum ex undis Strophadum me litora primum 210 accipiunt; Strophades Graio stant nomine dictae,
3.211	211 insulae Ionio in magno, quas dira Celaeno 212 Harpyiaeque colunt aliae, Phineia postquam 213 clausa domus, mensasque metu liquere priores. 214 Tristius haud illis monstrum, nec saevior ulla 215 pestis et ira deum Stygiis sese extulit undis. 216 Virginei volucrum voltus, foedissima ventris 217 proluvies, uncaeque manus, et pallida semper 218 ora fame. 219 Huc ubi delati portus intravimus, ecce 220 laeta boum passim campis armenta videmus, 221 caprigenumque pecus nullo custode per herbas. 222 Inruimus ferro, et divos ipsumque vocamus 223 in partem praedamque Iovem; tum litore curvo 224 exstruimusque toros, dapibusque epulamur opimis. 225 At subitae horrifico lapsu de montibus adsunt 226 Harpyiae, et magnis quatiunt clangoribus alas, 227 diripiuntque dapes, contactuque omnia foedant 228 immundo; tum vox taetrum dira inter odorem.	218 'T was night, and sleep possessed all breathing things; 219 when, lo! the sacred effigies divine, 220 the Phrygian gods which through the flames I bore 221 from fallen Troy, seemed in a vision clear 222 to stand before me where I slumbering lay, 223 bathed in bright beams which from the moon at full 224 streamed through the latticed wall: and thus they spoke 225 to soothe my care away. “Apollo's word, 226 which in far Delos the god meant for thee, 227 is uttered here. Behold, he sends ourselves 228 to this thy house, before thy prayer is made. 229 We from Troy's ashes have companioned thee 230 in every fight; and we the swollen seas, 231 guided by thee, in thine own ships have crossed; 232 our power divine shall set among the stars 233 thy seed to be, and to thy city give 234 dominion evermore. For mighty men 235 go build its mighty walls! Seek not to shun 236 the hard, long labors of an exile's way. 237 Change this abode! Not thine this Cretan shore, 238 nor here would Delian Phoebus have thee bide. 239 There is a land the roving Greeks have named 240 Hesperia. It is a storied realm 241 made mighty by great wars and fruitful land. 242 Oenotrians had it, and their sons, 't is said, 243 have called it Italy, a chieftain's name 244 to a whole region given. That land alone 245 our true abode can be; for

	229 Rursum in secessu longo sub rupe cavata, 230 arboribus clausi circum atque horrentibus umbris, 231 instruimus mensas arisque reponimus ignem: 232 rursum ex diverso caeli caecisque latebris 233 turba sonans praedam pedibus circumvolat uncis, 234 polluit ore dapes. Sociis tunc, arma capessant, 235 edico, et dira bellum cum gente gerendum. 236 Haud secus ac iussi faciunt, tectosque per herbam 237 disponunt enses et scuta latentia condunt. 238 Ergo ubi delapsae sonitum per curva dedere 239 litora, dat signum specula Misenus ab alta 240 aere cavo. Invadunt socii, et nova proelia temptant,	Dardanus 246 was cradled there, and old Iasius, 247 their blood the oldest of our ancient line.
3.241	241 obscenas pelagi ferro foedare volucres: 242 sed neque vim plumis ullam nec volnera tergo 243 accipiunt, celerique fuga sub sidera lapsae 244 semesam praedam et vestigia foeda relinquunt. 245 Una in praecelsa consedit rupe Celaeno, 246 infelix vates, rumpitque hanc pectore vocem: 247 Bellum etiam pro caede boum stratisque iuvencis, 248 Laomedontiadae, bellumne inferre paratis, 249 et patrio Harpyias insontis pellere regno? 250 Accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta, 251 quae Phoebo pater omnipotens, mihi Phoebus Apollo 252 praedixit, vobis Furiarum ego maxuma pando. 253 Italiam cursu petitis, ventisque vocatis 254 ibitis Italiam, portusque intrare licebit; 255 sed non ante datam cingetis moenibus urbem, 256 quam vos dira fames nostraeque iniuria caedis 257 ambesas subigat malis absumere mensas.	248 Arise! go forth and cheer thy father gray 249 with the glad tidings! Bid him doubt no more! 250 Ausonia seek and Corythus; for Jove 251 denies this Cretan realm to thine and thee.” 252 I marvelled at the heavenly presences 253 so vocal and so bright, for 't was not sleep; 254 but face to face I deemed I could discern 255 each countenance august and holy brow, 256 each mantled head; and from my body ran 257 cold sweat of awe. From my low couch I sprang, 258 lifting to heaven my suppliant hands and prayer, 259 and o'er my hearth poured forth libations free. 260 After th' auspicious offering, I told 261 Anchises the whole tale in order due. 262 He owned our stock two-branched, of our great sires 263 the twofold line, and that his thought had strayed, 264 in new confusion mingling ancient names; 265 then spoke: “O son, in Ilium's doom severe 266 afflicted ever! To my ears alone 267 this dark vicissitude Cassandra sang. 268 I mind me now that her wild tongue foretold 269 such destiny. For oft she called aloud 270 ‘Hesperia!’ oft ‘Italia's kingdom!’ called. 271 But who had faith that Teucer's sons should come 272 to far Hesperia? What mortal ear 273 gave heed to sad Cassandra's voice divine? 274 Now Phoebus speaks. Obedient let

	258 Dixit, et in silvam pennis ablata refugit. 259 At sociis subita gelidus formidine sanguis 260 deriguit; cecidere animi, nec iam amplius armis, 261 sed votis precibusque iubent exposcere pacem, 262 sive deae, seu sint dirae obscenaeque volucres. 263 Et pater Anchises passis de litore palmis 264 numina magna vocat, meritosque indicit honores: 265 Di, prohibete minas; di, talem avertite casum, 266 et placidi servate pios! Tum litore funem 267 deripere, excussosque iubet laxare rudentes. 268 Tendunt vela Noti; fugimus spumantibus undis, 269 qua cursum ventusque gubernatorque vocabat. 270 Iam medio adparet fluctu nemorosa Zacynthos	us be, 275 and, warned by him, our happier Iot pursue!” 276 He spoke: with heart of hope we all obeyed; 277 again we changed abode; and, leaving there
3.271	271 Dulichiumque Sameque et Neritos ardua saxis. 272 Effugimus scopulos Ithacae, Laertia regna, 273 et terram altricem saevi exsecramur Ulixi. 274 Mox et Leucatae nimbosa cacumina montis 275 et formidatus nautis aperitur Apollo. 276 Hunc petimus fessi et parvae succedimus urbi; 277 ancora de prora iacitur, stant litore puppes. 278 Ergo insperata tandem tellure potiti, 279 lustramurque Iovi votisque incendimus aras, 280 Actiaque Iliacis celebramus litora ludis. 281 Exercent patrias oleo labente palaestras 282 nudati socii; iuvat evasisse tot urbes 283 Argolicas, mediosque fugam tenuisse per hostis. 284 Interea magnum sol circumvolvitur annum, 285 et glacialis hiemps aquilonibus asperat undas. 286 Aere cavo clipeum. magni gestamen Abantis,	278 a feeble few, again with spreading sails 279 we coursed in hollow ship the spacious sea. 280 When from the deep the shores had faded far, 281 and only sky and sea were round our way, 282 full in the zenith hung a purple cloud, 283 storm-laden, dark as night, and every wave 284 grew black and angry, while perpetual gales 285 came rolling o'er the main, and mountain-high 286 the wreckful surges rose; our ships were hurled 287 wide o'er the whirling waters; thunder-clouds 288 and misty murk of night made end of all 289 the light of heaven, save where the rifted storm 290 flashed with the oft-reiterate shaft of Jove. 291 Then went we drifting, beaten from our course, 292 upon a trackless sea. Not even the eyes 293 of Palinurus could tell night from noon 294 or ken our way. Three days of blinding dark, 295 three nights without a star, we roved the seas; 296 The fourth, land seemed to rise. Far distant hills 297 and rolling smoke we saw. Down came our sails, 298 out flew the oars, and with prompt stroke the crews 299 swept the dark waves and tossed the crested foam. 300 From such sea-peril safe, I made the shores 301 of Strophades,—a name the Grecians gave 302 to islands in the broad Ionic main,

	287 postibus adversis figo, et rem carmine signo: 288 AENEAS HAEC DE DANAIS VICTORIBVS ARMA. 289 Linquere tum portus iubeo et considere transtris: 290 certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora verrunt. 291 Protinus aërias Phaeacum abscondimus arces, 292 litoraque Epiri legimus portuque subimus 293 Chaonio, et celsam Buthroti accedimus urbem. 294 Hic incredibilis rerum fama occupat auris, 295 Priamiden Helenum Graias regnare per urbes, 296 coniugio Aeacidae Pyrrhi sceptrisque potitum, 297 et patrio Andromachen iterum cessisse marito. 298 Obstipui, miroque incensum pectus amore, 299 compellare virum et casus cognoscere tantos. 300 Progredior portu, classis et litora linquens,	— 303 the Strophades, where dread Celaeno bides, 304 with other Harpies, who had quit the halls 305 of stricken Phineus, and for very fear 306 fled from the routed feast; no prodigy 307 more vile than these, nor plague more pitiless 308 ere rose by wrath divine from Stygian wave; 309 birds seem they, but with face like woman-kind;
3.301	301 sollemnis cum forte dapes et tristia dona 302 ante urbem in luco falsi Simoentis ad undam 303 libabat cineri Andromache, Manisque vocabat 304 Hectoreum ad tumulum, viridi quem caespite inanem 305 et geminas, causam lacrimis, sacraverat aras. 306 Ut me conspexit venientem et Troïa circum 307 arma amens vidit, magnis exterrita monstris 308 deriguit visu in medio, calor ossa reliquit; 309 labitur, et longo vix tandem tempore fatur: 310 Verane te facies, verus mihi nuntius adfers, 311 nate dea? Vivisne, aut, si lux alma recessit, 312 Hector ubi est? Dixit, lacrimasque effudit et omnem 313 implevit clamore locum. Vix pauca furenti 314 subicio, et raris turbatus vocibus hisco: 315 Vivo equidem, vitamque extrema per omnia duco;	310 foul-flowing bellies, hands with crooked claws, 311 and ghastly lips they have, with hunger pale. 312 Scarce had we made the haven, when, behold! 313 Fair herds of cattle roaming a wide plain, 314 and horned goats, untended, feeding free 315 in pastures green, surprised our happy eyes. 316 with eager blades we ran to take and slay, 317 asking of every god, and chicfly Jove, 318 to share the welcome prize: we ranged a feast, 319 with turf-built couches and a banquet-board 320 along the curving strand. But in a trice, 321 down from the high hills swooping horribly, 322 the Harpies loudly shrieking, flapped their wings, 323 snatched at our meats, and with infectious touch 324 polluted all; infernal was their cry, 325 the stench most vile. Once more in covert far 326 beneath a caverned rock, and close concealed 327 with trees and branching shade, we raised aloft 328 our tables, altars, and rekindled fires. 329 Once more from haunts unknown the clamorous flock 330 from every quarter flew, and seized its prey 331 with taloned feet and carrion lip most foul. 332 I called my mates to arms and

	316 ne dubita, nam vera vides. 317 Heu, quis te casus deiectam coniuge tanto 318 excipit, aut quae digna satis fortuna revisit 319 Hectoris Andromachen? Pyrrhin’ conubia servas? 320 Deiecit vultum et demissa voce locuta est: 321 O felix una ante alias Priameïa virgo, 322 hostilem ad tumulum Troiae sub moenibus altis 323 iussa mori, quae sortitus non pertulit ullos, 324 nec victoris eri tetigit captiva cubile! 325 nos, patria incensa, diversa per aequora vectae, 326 stirpis Achilleae fastus iuvenemque superbum, 327 servitio enixae, tulimus: qui deinde, secutus 328 Ledaeam Hermionen Lacedaemoniosque hymenaeos, 329 me famulo famulamque Heleno transmisit habendam. 330 Ast illum, ereptae magno inflammatus amore	opened war 333 on that accursed brood. My band obeyed; 334 and, hiding in deep grass their swords and shields, 335 in ambush lay. But presently the foe 336 swept o'er the winding shore with loud alarm : 337 then from a sentry-crag, Misenus blew 338 a signal on his hollow horn. My men 339 flew to the combat strange, and fain would wound
3.331	331 coniugis et scelerum Furiis agitatus, Orestes 332 excipit incautum patriasque obtruncat ad aras. 333 Morte Neoptolemi regnorum reddita cessit 334 pars Heleno, qui Chaonios cognomine campos 335 Chaoniamque omnem Troiano a Chaone dixit, 336 Pergamaque Iliacamque iugis hanc addidit arcem. 337 Sed tibi qui cursum venti, quae fata dedere? 338 Aut quisnam ignarum nostris deus adpulit oris? 339 Quid puer Ascanius? superatne et vescitur aura, 340 quem tibi iam Troia— 341 Ecqua tamen puero est amissae cura parentis? 342 Ecquid in antiquam virtutem animosque virilis 343 et pater Aeneas et avunculus excitat Hector? 344 Talia fundebat lacrimans longosque ciebat 345 incassum fletus, cum sese a moenibus heros	340 with martial steel those foul birds of the sea; 341 but on their sides no wounding blade could fall, 342 nor any plume be marred. In swiftest flight 343 to starry skies they soared, and left on earth 344 their half-gnawed, stolen feast, and footprints foul. 345 Celaeno only on a beetling crag 346 took lofty perch, and, prophetess of ill, 347 shrieked malediction from her vulture breast: 348 “Because of slaughtered kine and ravished herd, 349 sons of Laomedon, have ye made war? 350 And will ye from their rightful kingdom drive 351 the guiltless Harpies? Hear, O, hear my word 352 (Long in your bosoms may it rankle sore!) 353 which Jove omnipotent to Phoebus gave, 354 Phoebus to me: a word of doom, which I, 355 the Furies' elder sister, here unfold: 356 ‘To Italy ye fare. The willing winds 357 your call have heard; and ye shall have your prayer 358 in some Italian haven safely moored. 359 But never shall ye rear the circling walls 360 of your own city, till for this our blood 361 by you unjustly spilt, your famished jaws 362 bite at your tables, aye,—and half devour.’”

	346 Priamides multis Helenus comitantibus adfert, 347 adgnoscitque suos, laetusque ad limina ducit, 348 et multum lacrimas verba inter singula fundit. 349 Procedo, et parvam Troiam simulataque magnis 350 Pergama, et arentem Xanthi cognomine rivum 351 adgnosco, Scaeaeque amplector limina portae. 352 Nec non et Teucri socia simul urbe fruuntur: 353 illos porticibus rex accipiebat in amplis; 354 aulaï medio libabant pocula Bacchi, 355 impositis auro dapibus, paterasque tenebant. 356 Iamque dies alterque dies processit, et aurae 357 vela vocant tumidoque inflatur carbasus austro. 358 His vatem adgredior dictis ac talia quaeso: 359 Troiugena, interpres divom, qui numina Phoebi, 360 qui tripodas, Clarii laurus, qui sidera sentis,
3.361	361 et volucrum linguas et praepetis omina pennae, 362 fare age—namque omnem cursum mihi prospera dixit 363 religio, et cuncti suaserunt numine divi 364 Italiam petere et terras temptare repostas: 365 sola novum dictuque nefas Harpyia Celaeno 366 prodigium canit, et tristis denuntiat iras, 367 obscenamque famem—quae prima pericula vito? 368 Quidve sequens tantos possim superare labores? 369 Hic Helenus, caesis primum de more iuvencis, 370 exorat pacem divom, vittasque resolvit 371 sacrati capitis, meque ad tua limina, Phoebe, 372 ipse manu multo suspensum numine ducit, 373 atque haec deinde canit divino ex ore sacerdos: 374 Nate dea,—nam te maioribus ire per altum 375 auspiciis manifesta fides: sic fata	363 She spoke: her pinions bore her to the grove, 364 and she was seen no more. But all my band 365 shuddered with shock of fear in each cold vein; 366 their drooping spirits trusted swords no more, 367 but turned to prayers and offerings, asking grace, 368 scarce knowing if those creatures were divine, 369 or but vast birds, ill-omened and unclean. 370 Father Anchises to the gods in heaven 371 uplifted suppliant hands, and on that shore 372 due ritual made, crying aloud; “Ye gods 373 avert this curse, this evil turn away! 374 Smile, Heaven, upon your faithful votaries.” 375 Then bade he launch away, the chain undo, 376 set every cable free and spread all sail. 377 O'er the white waves we flew, and took our way 378 where'er the helmsman or the winds could guide. 379 Now forest-clad Zacynthus met our gaze, 380 engirdled by the waves; Dulichium, 381 same, and Neritos, a rocky steep, 382 uprose. We passed the cliffs of Ithaca 383 that called Laertes king, and flung our curse 384 on fierce Ulysses' hearth and native land. 385 nigh hoar Leucate's clouded crest we

	deum rex 376 sortitur, volvitque vices; is vertitur ordo— 377 pauca tibi e multis, quo tutior hospita lustres 378 aequora et Ausonio possis considere portu, 379 expediam dictis; prohibent nam cetera Parcae 380 scire Helenum farique vetat Saturnia Iuno. 381 Principio Italiam, quam tu iam rere propinquam 382 vicinosque, ignare, paras invadere portus, 383 longa procul longis via dividit invia terris. 384 Ante et Trinacria lentandus remus in unda, 385 et salis Ausonii lustrandum navibus aequor, 386 infernique lacus, Aeaeaeque insula Circae, 387 quam tuta possis urbem componere terra: 388 signa tibi dicam, tu condita mente teneto: 389 cum tibi sollicito secreti ad fluminis undam 390 litoreis ingens inventa sub ilicibus sus	drew, 386 where Phoebus' temple, feared by mariners, 387 loomed o'er us; thitherward we steered and reached 388 the little port and town. Our weary fleet 389 dropped anchor, and lay beached along the strand. 390 So, safe at land, our hopeless peril past, 391 we offered thanks to Jove, and kindled high 392 his altars with our feast and sacrifice; 393 then, gathering on Actium's holy shore, 394 made fair solemnities of pomp and game. 395 My youth, anointing their smooth, naked limbs, 396 wrestled our wonted way. For glad were we, 397 who past so many isles of Greece had sped 398 and 'scaped our circling foes. Now had the sun 399 rolled through the year's full circle, and the waves 400 were rough with icy winter's northern gales. 401 I hung for trophy on that temple door 402 a swelling shield of brass (which once was worn 403 by mighty Abas) graven with this line: 404 SPOIL OF AENEAS FROM TRIUMPHANT FOES. 405 Then from that haven I command them forth; 406 my good crews take the thwarts, smiting the sea 407 with rival strokes, and skim the level main. 408 Soon sank Phaeacia's wind-swept citadels 409 out of our view; we skirted the bold shores 410 of proud Epirus, in Chaonian land, 411 and made Buthrotum's port and towering town.
3.391	391 triginta capitum fetus enixa iacebit. 392 alba, solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati, 393 is locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum. 394 Nec tu mensarum morsus horresce futuros: 395 fata viam invenient, aderitque vocatus Apollo. 396 Has autem terras, Italique hanc litoris oram, 397 proxuma quae nostri perfunditur aequoris aestu, 398 effuge; cuncta malis habitantur moenia Grais. 399 Hic et Narycii posuerunt moenia Locri, 400 et Sallentinos obsedit milite campos 401 Lyctius Idomeneus; hic illa ducis Meliboei 402 parva Philoctetae subnixa Petelia muro.	412 Here wondrous tidings met us, that the son 413 of Priam, Helenus, held kingly sway 414 o'er many Argive cities, having wed 415 the Queen of Pyrrhus, great Achilles' son, 416 and gained his throne; and that Andromache 417 once more was wife unto a kindred lord. 418 Amazement held me; all my bosom burned 419 to see the hero's face and hear this tale 420 of strange vicissitude. So up I climbed, 421 leaving the haven, fleet, and friendly shore. 422 That self-same hour outside the city walls, 423 within a grove where flowed the mimic stream 424 of a new Simois, Andromache, 425 with offerings to the dead, and gifts of woe, 426 poured forth libation, and invoked the shade 427 of Hector, at a tomb which her fond grief 428 had consecrated to perpetual tears, 429 though void; a mound of fair green turf it stood, 430 and near it rose twin altars to his name. 431 She saw me

	403 Quin, ubi transmissae steterint trans aequora classes, 404 et positis aris iam vota in litore solves, 405 purpureo velare comas adopertus amictu, 406 ne qua inter sanctos ignis in honore deorum 407 hostilis facies occurrat et omina turbet. 408 Hunc socii morem sacrorum, hunc ipse teneto: 409 hac casti maneant in religione nepotes. 410 Ast ubi digressum Siculae te admoverit orae 411 ventus, et angusti rarescent claustra Pelori, 412 laeva tibi tellus et longo laeva petantur 413 aequora circuitu: dextrum fuge litus et undas. 414 Haec loca vi quondam et vasta convolsa ruina— 415 tantum aevi longinqua valet mutare vetustas— 416 dissiluisse ferunt, cum protinus utraque tellus 417 una foret; venit medio vi pontus et undis 418 Hesperium Siculo latus abscidit, arvaque et urbes 419 litore diductas angusto interluit aestu. 420 Dextrum Scylla latus, laevum implacata Charybdis	drawing near; our Trojan helms 432 met her bewildered eyes, and, terror-struck 433 at the portentous sight, she swooning fell 434 and lay cold, rigid, lifeless, till at last, 435 scarce finding voice, her lips addressed me thus : 436 “Have I true vision? Bringest thou the word 437 Of truth, O goddess-born? Art still in flesh? 438 Or if sweet light be fled, my Hector, where?” 439 With flood of tears she spoke, and all the grove 440 reechoed to her cry. Scarce could I frame 441 brief answer to her passion, but replied 442 with broken voice and accents faltering: 443 “I live, 't is true. I lengthen out my days 444 through many a desperate strait. But O, believe 445 that what thine eyes behold is vision true. 446 Alas! what lot is thine, that wert unthroned 447 from such a husband's side? What after-fate 448 could give thee honor due? Andromache, 449 once Hector's wife, is Pyrrhus still thy lord?”
3.421	421 obsidet, atque imo barathri ter gurgite vastos 422 sorbet in abruptum fluctus, rursusque sub auras 423 erigit alternos et sidera verberat unda. 424 At Scyllam caecis cohibet spelunca latebris, 425 ora exsertantem et navis in saxa trahentem. 426 Prima hominis facies et pulchro pectore virgo 427 pube tenus, postrema immani corpore pristis, 428 delphinum caudas utero commissa luporum. 429 Praestat Trinacrii metas lustrare Pachyni 430 cessantem, longos et circumflectere cursus, 431 quam semel informem vasto vidisse sub antro	450 With drooping brows and lowly voice she cried : 451 “O, happy only was that virgin blest, 452 daughter of Priam, summoned forth to die 453 in sight of Ilium, on a foeman's tomb! 454 No casting of the lot her doom decreed, 455 nor came she to her conqueror's couch a slave. 456 Myself from burning Ilium carried far 457 o'er seas and seas, endured the swollen pride 458 of that young scion of Achilles' race, 459 and bore him as his slave a son. When he 460 sued for Hermione, of Leda's line, 461 and nuptial-bond with Lacedaemon's Iords, 462 I, the slave-wife, to Helenus was given, 463 and slave was wed with slave. But afterward 464 Orestes, crazed by loss of her he loved, 465 and ever fury-driven from crime to crime, 466 crept upon Pyrrhus in a careless hour 467 and murdered him upon his own

	432 Scyllam, et caeruleis canibus resonantia saxa. 433 Praeterea, si qua est Heleno prudentia, vati 434 si qua fides, animum si veris implet Apollo, 435 unum illud tibi, nate dea, proque omnibus unum 436 praedicam, et repetens iterumque iterumque monebo: 437 Iunonis magnae primum prece numen adora; 438 Iunoni cane vota libens, dominamque potentem 439 supplicibus supera donis: sic denique victor 440 Trinacria finis Italos mittere relicta. 441 Huc ubi delatus Cumaeam accesseris urbem, 442 divinosque lacus, et Averna sonantia silvis, 443 insanam vatem aspicies, quae rupe sub ima 444 fata canit, foliisque notas et nomina mandat. 445 Quaecumque in foliis descripsit carmina virgo, 446 digerit in numerum, atque antro seclusa relinquit. 447 Illa manent immota locis, neque ab ordine cedunt; 448 verum eadem, verso tenuis cum cardine ventus 449 impulit et teneras turbavit ianua frondes, 450 numquam deinde cavo volitantia prendere saxo,	hearth-stone. 468 Part of the realm of Neoptolemus 469 fell thus to Helenus, who called his lands 470 Chaonian, and in Trojan Chaon's name 471 his kingdom is Chaonia. Yonder height 472 is Pergamus, our Ilian citadel. 473 What power divine did waft thee to our shore, 474 not knowing whither? Tell me of the boy 475 Ascanius! Still breathes he earthly air? 476 In Troy she bore him—is he mourning still 477 that mother ravished from his childhood's eyes? 478 what ancient valor stirs the manly soul 479 of thine own son, of Hector's sister's child?”
3.451	451 nec revocare situs aut iungere carmina curat: 452 inconsulti abeunt, sedemque odere Sibyllae. 453 Hic tibi ne qua morae fuerint dispendia tanti,— 454 quamvis increpitent socii, et vi cursus in altum 455 vela vocet, possisque sinus implere secundos,— 456 quin adeas vatem precibusque oracula poscas 457 ipsa canat, vocemque volens atque ora resolvat. 458 Illa tibi Italiae populos venturaque bella, 459 et quo quemque modo fugiasque ferasque laborem 460 expediet, cursusque dabit venerata secundos.	480 Thus poured she forth full many a doleful word 481 with unavailing tears. But as she ceased, 482 out of the city gates appeared the son 483 of Priam, Helenus, with princely train. 484 He welcomed us as kin, and glad at heart 485 gave guidance to his house, though oft his words 486 fell faltering and few, with many a tear. 487 Soon to a humbler Troy I lift my eyes, 488 and of a mightier Pergamus discern 489 the towering semblance; there a scanty stream 490 runs on in Xanthus' name, and my glad arms 491 the pillars of a Scaean gate embrace. 492 My Teucrian mariners with welcome free 493 enjoyed the friendly town; his ample halls 494 our royal host threw wide; full wine-cups flowed 495 within the palace; golden feast was spread, 496 and many

	461 Haec sunt, quae nostra liceat te voce moneri. 462 Vade age, et ingentem factis fer ad aethera Troiam. 463 Quae postquam vates sic ore effatus amico est, 464 dona dehinc auro gravia sectoque elephanto 465 imperat ad navis ferri, stipatque carinis 466 ingens argentum, Dodonaeosque lebetas, 467 loricam consertam hamis auroque trilicem, 468 et conum insignis galeae cristasque comantis, 469 arma Neoptolemi; sunt et sua dona parenti. 470 Addit equos, additque duces; 471 remigium supplet; socios simul instruit armis. 472 Interea classem velis aptare iubebat 473 Anchises, fieret vento mora ne qua ferenti. 474 Quem Phoebi interpres multo compellat honore: 475 Coniugio, Anchise, Veneris dignate superbo, 476 cura deum, bis Pergameis erepte ruinis, 477 ecce tibi Ausoniae tellus; hanc arripe velis. 478 Et tamen hanc pelago praeterlabare necesse est; 479 Ausoniae pars illa procul, quam pandit Apollo. 480 Vade ait O felix nati pietate. Quid ultra	a goblet quaffed. Day followed day, 497 while favoring breezes beckoned us to sea, 498 and swelled the waiting canvas as they blew. 499 Then to the prophet-priest I made this prayer: 500 “Offspring of Troy, interpreter of Heaven! 501 Who knowest Phoebus' power, and readest well 502 the tripod, stars, and vocal laurel leaves 503 to Phoebus dear, who know'st of every bird 504 the ominous swift wing or boding song, 505 o, speak! For all my course good omens showed, 506 and every god admonished me to sail 507 in quest of Italy's far-distant shores; 508 but lone Celaeno, heralding strange woe, 509 foretold prodigious horror, vengeance dark, ferebat; 491 et nunc aequali tecum pubesceret aevo. 492 Hos ego digrediens lacrimis adfabar obortis: 493 Vivite felices, quibus est fortuna peracta 494 iam sua; nos alia ex aliis in fata vocamur. 495 Vobis parta quies; nullum maris aequor arandum, 496 arva neque Ausoniae semper cedentia retro 497 quaerenda. Effigiem Xanthi Troiamque videtis 498 quam vestrae fecere manus, melioribus, opto, 499 auspiciis, et quae fuerit minus obvia Graiis. 500 Si quando Thybrim vicinaque Thybridis arva 501 intraro, gentique meae data moenia cernam, 502 cognatas urbes olim populosque propinquos, 503 Epiro, Hesperia, quibus idem Dardanus auctor 504 atque idem casus, unam faciemus utramque 505 Troiam animis; maneat nostros ea cura nepotes. 506 Provehimur pelago vicina Ceraunia iuxta, 507 unde iter Italiam cursusque brevissimus undis. 508 Sol ruit interea et montes umbrantur opaci; 509 sternimur optatae gremio telluris ad undam, 510 sortiti remos, passimque in litore sicco
3.481	481 provehor, et fando surgentis demoror austros? 482 Nec minus Andromache digressu maesta supremo 483 fert picturatas auri subtemine vestes 484 et Phrygiam Ascanio chlamydem (nec cedit honore), 485 textilibusque onerat donis, ac talia fatur: 486 Accipe et haec, manuum tibi quae monumenta mearum 487 sint, puer, et longum Andromachae testentur amorem, 488 coniugis Hectoreae. Cape dona extrema tuorum, 489 O mihi sola mei super Astyanactis imago: 490 sic oculos, sic ille manus, sic ora	510 and vile, unnatural hunger. How elude 511 such perils? Or by what hard duty done 512 may such huge host of evils vanquished be?” 513 Then Helenus, with sacrifice of kine 514 in order due, implored the grace of Heaven, 515 unloosed the fillets from his sacred brow, 516 and led me, Phoebus, to thy temple's door, 517 awed by th' o'er-brooding godhead, whose true priest, 518 with lips inspired, made this prophetic song:

3.511	511 corpora curamus; fessos sopor inrigat artus. 512 Necdum orbem medium Nox horis acta subibat: 513 haud segnis strato surgit Palinurus et omnis 514 explorat ventos, atque auribus aera captat; 515 sidera cuncta notat tacito labentia caelo, 516 Arcturum pluviasque Hyadas geminosque Triones, 517 armatumque auro circumspicit Oriona. 518 Postquam cuncta videt caelo constare sereno, 519 dat clarum e puppi signum; nos	519 “O goddess-born, indubitably shines 520 the blessing of great gods upon thy path 521 across the sea; the heavenly King supreme 522 thy destiny ordains; 't is he unfolds 523 the grand vicissitude, which now pursues 524 a course immutable. I will declare 525 of thy large fate a certain bounded part; 526 that fearless thou may'st view the friendly sea, 527 and in Ausonia's haven at the last 528 find thee a fixed abode. Than this no more 529 the Sister Fates to Helenus unveil, 530 and Juno, Saturn's daughter, grants no more. 531 First, that Italia (which nigh at hand 532 thou deemest, and wouldst fondly enter in 533 by yonder

	castra movemus, 520 temptamusque viam et velorum pandimus alas. 521 Iamque rubescebat stellis Aurora fugatis, 522 cum procul obscuros collis humilemque videmus 523 Italiam. Italiam primus conclamat Achates, 524 Italiam laeto socii clamore salutant. 525 Tum pater Anchises magnum cratera corona 526 induit, implevitque mero, divosque vocavit 527 stans celsa in puppi: 528 Di maris et terrae tempestatumque potentes, 529 ferte viam vento facilem et spirate secundi. 530 Crebrescunt optatae aurae portusque patescit 531 iam propior, templumque adparet in arce Minervae. 532 Vela legunt socii et proras ad litora torquent. 533 Portus ab Euroo fluctu curvatus in arcum, 534 obiectae salsa spumant aspargine cautes; 535 ipse latet; gemino demittunt bracchia muro 536 turriti scopuli, refugitque ab litore templum. 537 Quattuor hic, primum omen, equos in gramine vidi 538 tondentis campum late, candore nivali. 539 Et pater Anchises: Bellum, O terra hospita, portas 540 bello armantur equi, bellum haec armenta minantur.	neighboring bays) lies distant far 534 o'er trackless course and long, with interval 535 of far-extended lands. Thine oars must ply 536 the waves of Sicily; thy fleet must cleave 537 the large expanse of that Ausonian brine; 538 the waters of Avernus thou shalt see, 539 and that enchanted island where abides 540 Aeaean Circe, ere on tranquil shore 541 thou mayest plant thy nation. Lo! a sign 542 I tell thee; hide this wonder in thy heart: 543 Beside a certain stream's sequestered wave, 544 thy troubled eyes, in shadowy flex grove 545 that fringes on the river, shall descry 546 a milk-white, monstrous sow, with teeming brood 547 of thirty young, new littered, white like her, 548 all clustering at her teats, as prone she lies.
3.541	541 Sed tamen idem olim curru succedere sueti 542 quadrupedes, et frena iugo concordia ferre; 543 spes et pacis ait. Tum numina sancta precamur 544 Palladis armisonae, quae prima accepit ovantis, 545 et capita ante aras Phrygio velamur amictu; 546 praeceptisque Heleni, dederat quae maxima, rite 547 Iunoni Argivae iussos adolemus honores. 548 Haud mora, continuo perfectis ordine votis,	549 There is thy city's safe, predestined ground, 550 and there thy labors' end. Vex not thy heart 551 about those ‘tables bitten’, for kind fate 552 thy path will show, and Phoebus bless thy prayer. 553 But from these lands and yon Italian shore, 554 where from this sea of ours the tide sweeps in, 555 escape and flee, for all its cities hold 556 pernicious Greeks, thy foes: the Locri there 557 have builded walls; the wide Sallentine fields 558 are filled with soldiers of Idomeneus; 559 there Meliboean Philoctetes' town, 560 petilia, towers above its little wall. 561 Yea, even when thy fleet has crossed

	549 cornua velatarum obvertimus antemarum, 550 Graiugenumque domos suspectaque linquimus arva. 551 Hinc sinus Herculei (si vera est fama) Tarenti 552 cernitur; attollit se diva Lacinia contra, 553 Caulonisque arces et navifragum Scylaceum. 554 Tum procul e fluctu Trinacria cernitur Aetna, 555 et gemitum ingentem pelagi pulsataque saxa 556 audimus longe fractasque ad litora voces, 557 exsultantque vada, atque aestu miscentur harenae. 558 Et pater Anchises: Nimirum haec illa Charybdis: 559 hos Helenus scopulos, haec saxa horrenda canebat. 560 Eripite, O socii, pariterque insurgite remis! 561 Haud minus ac iussi faciunt, primusque rudentem 562 contorsit laevas proram Palinurus ad undas. 563 laevam cuncta cohors remis ventisque petivit. 564 Tollimur in caelum curvato gurgite, et idem 565 subducta ad Manis imos desedimus unda. 566 Ter scopuli clamorem inter cava saxa dedere: 567 ter spumam elisam et rorantia vidimus astra. 568 Interea fessos ventus cum sole reliquit, 569 ignarique viae Cyclopum adlabimur oris. 570 Portus ab accessu ventorum immotus et ingens	the main, 562 and from new altars built along the shore 563 thy vows to Heaven are paid, throw o'er thy head 564 a purple mantle, veiling well thy brows, 565 lest, while the sacrificial fire ascends 566 in offering to the gods, thine eye behold 567 some face of foe, and every omen fail. 568 Let all thy people keep this custom due, 569 and thou thyself be faithful; let thy seed 570 forever thus th' immaculate rite maintain. 571 After departing hence, thou shalt be blown 572 toward Sicily, and strait Pelorus' bounds 573 will open wide. Then take the leftward way: 574 those leftward waters in long circuit sweep, 575 far from that billowy coast, the opposing side. 576 These regions, so they tell, in ages gone 577 by huge and violent convulsion riven 578 (Such mutability is wrought by time),
3.571	571 ipse; sed horrificis iuxta tonat Aetna ruinis; 572 interdumque atram prorumpit ad aethera nubem, 573 turbine fumantem piceo et candente favilla, 574 attollitque globos flammarum et sidera lambit; 575 interdum scopulos avolsaque viscera montis 576 erigit eructans, liquefactaque saxa sub auras 577 cum gemitu glomerat, fundoque exaestuat imo.	579 sprang wide asunder; where the doubled strand 580 sole and continuous lay, the sea's vast power 581 burst in between, and bade its waves divide 582 Hesperia's bosom from fair Sicily, 583 while with a straitened firth it interflowed 584 their fields and cities sundered shore from shore. 585 The right side Scylla keeps; the left is given 586 to pitiless Charybdis, who draws down 587 to the wild whirling of her steep abyss 588 the monster waves, and ever and anon 589 flings them at heaven, to lash the tranquil stars. 590

	578 Fama est Enceladi semustum fulmine corpus 579 urgueri mole hac, ingentemque insuper Aetnam 580 impositam ruptis flammam exspirare caminis; 581 et fessum quotiens mutet latus, intremere omnem 582 murmure Trinacriam, et caelum subtexere fumo. 583 Noctem illam tecti silvis immania monstra 584 perferimus, nec quae sonitum det causa videmus. 585 Nam neque erant astrorum ignes, nec lucidus aethra 586 siderea polus, obscuro sed nubila caelo, 587 et lunam in nimbo nox intempesta tenebat. 588 Postera iamque dies primo surgebat Eoo, 589 umentemque Aurora polo dimoverat umbram: 590 cum subito e silvis, macie confecta suprema, 591 ignoti nova forma viri miserandaque cultu 592 procedit, supplexque manus ad litora tendit. 593 Respicimus: dira inluvies inmissaque barba, 594 consertum tegumen spinis; at cetera Graius, 595 596 Isque ubi Dardanios habitus et Troia vidit 597 arma procul, paulum aspectu conterritus haesit, 598 continuitque gradum; mox sese ad litora praeceps 599 cum fletu precibusque tulit: Per sidera testor, 600 per superos atque hoc caeli spirabile lumen,	But Scylla, prisoned in her eyeless cave, 591 thrusts forth her face, and pulls upon the rocks 592 ship after ship; the parts that first be seen 593 are human; a fair-breasted virgin she, 594 down to the womb; but all that lurks below 595 is a huge-membered fish, where strangely join 596 the flukes of dolphins and the paunch of wolves. 597 Better by far to round the distant goal 598 of the Trinacrian headlands, veering wide 599 from thy true course, than ever thou shouldst see 600 that shapeless Scylla in her vaulted cave, 601 where grim rocks echo her dark sea-dogs' roar. 602 Yea, more, if aught of prescience be bestowed 603 on Helenus, if trusted prophet he, 604 and Phoebus to his heart true voice have given, 605 o goddess-born, one counsel chief of all 606 I tell thee oft, and urge it o'er and o'er. 607 To Juno's godhead lift thy Ioudest prayer; 608 to Juno chant a fervent votive song,
3.601	601 tollite me, Teucri; quascumque abducite terras; 602 hoc sat erit. Scio me Danais e classibus unum, 603 et bello Iliacos fateor petiisse Penatis; 604 pro quo, si sceleris tanta est iniuria nostri, 605 spargite me in fluctus, vastoque inmergite ponto. 606 Si pereo, hominum manibus periisse iuvabit. 607 Dixerat, et genua amplexus	609 and with obedient offering persuade 610 that potent Queen. So shalt thou, triumphing, 611 to Italy be sped, and leave behind 612 Trinacria.When wafted to that shore, 613 repair to Cumae's hill, and to the Lake 614 Avernus with its whispering grove divine. 615 There shalt thou see a frenzied prophetess, 616 who from beneath the hollow scarped crag 617 sings oracles, or characters on leaves 618 mysterious names. Whate'er the virgin writes, 619 on leaves inscribing

	genibusque volutans 608 haerebat. Qui sit, fari, quo sanguine cretus, 609 hortamur; quae deinde agitet fortuna, fateri. 610 Ipse pater dextram Anchises, haud multa moratus, 611 dat iuveni, atque animum praesenti pignore firmat. 612 Ille haec, deposita tandem formidine, fatur: 613 Sum patria ex Ithaca, comes infelicis Ulixi, 614 nomine Achaemenides, Troiam genitore Adamasto 615 paupere—mansissetque utinam fortuna!—profectus. 616 Hic me, dum trepidi crudelia limina linquunt, 617 inmemores socii vasto Cyclopis in antro 618 deseruere. Domus sanie dapibusque cruentis, 619 intus opaca, ingens; ipse arduus, altaque pulsat 620 sidera—Di, talem terris avertite pestem!— 621 nec visu facilis nec dictu adfabilis ulli. 622 Visceribus miserorum et sanguine vescitur atro. 623 Vidi egomet, duo de numero cum corpora nostro 624 prensa manu magna, medio resupinus in antro, 625 frangeret ad saxum, sanieque aspersa natarent 626 limina; vidi atro cum membra fluentia tabo 627 manderet, et tepidi tremerent sub dentibus artus. 628 Haud impune quidem; nec talia passus Ulixes, 629 oblitusve sui est Ithacus discrimine tanto. 630 Nam simul expletus dapibus vinoque sepultus	the portentous song, 620 she sets in order, and conceals them well 621 in her deep cave, where they abide unchanged 622 in due array. Yet not a care has she, 623 if with some swinging hinge a breeze sweeps in, 624 to catch them as they whirl: if open door 625 disperse them flutterlig through the hollow rock, 626 she will not link their shifted sense anew, 627 nor re-invent her fragmentary song. 628 Oft her unanswered votaries depart, 629 scorning the Sibyl's shrine. But deem not thou 630 thy tarrying too Iong, whate'er thy stay. 631 Though thy companions chide, though winds of power 632 invite thy ship to sea, and well would speed 633 the swelling sail, yet to that Sibyl go. 634 Pray that her own lips may sing forth for thee 635 the oracles, uplifting her dread voice 636 in willing prophecy. Her rede shall tell 637 of Italy, its wars and tribes to be, 638 and of what way each burden and each woe
3.631	631 cervicem inflexam posuit, iacuitque per antrum 632 immensus, saniem eructans et frusta cruento 633 per somnum commixta mero, nos magna precati 634 numina sortitique vices, una undique circum 635 fundimur, et telo lumen terebramus acuto,— 636 ingens, quod torva solum sub	639 may be escaped, or borne. Her favoring aid 640 will grant swift, happy voyages to thy prayer. 641 Such counsels Heaven to my lips allows. 642 arise, begone! and by thy glorious deeds 643 set Troy among the stars! “ 644 So spake the prophet with benignant voice. 645 Then gifts he bade be brought of heavy gold 646 and graven ivory, which to our ships 647 he bade us bear; each bark was Ioaded full

	fronte latebat, 637 Argolici clipei aut Phoebeae lampadis instar,— 638 et tandem laeti sociorum ulciscimur umbras. 639 Sed fugite, O miseri, fugite, atque ab litore funem 640 rumpite. 641 Nam qualis quantusque cavo Polyphemus in antro 642 lanigeras claudit pecudes atque ubera pressat, 643 centum alii curva haec habitant ad litora volgo 644 infandi Cyclopes, et altis montibus errant. 645 Tertia iam lunae se cornua lumine complent, 646 cum vitam in silvis inter deserta ferarum 647 lustra domosque traho, vastosque ab rupe Cyclopas 648 prospicio, sonitumque pedum vocemque tremesco. 649 Victum infelicem, bacas lapidosaque corna, 650 dant rami et volsis pascunt radicibus herbae. 651 Omnia conlustrans, hanc primum ad litora classem 652 conspexi venientem. Huic me, quaecumque fuisset, 653 addixi: satis est gentem effugisse nefandam. 654 Vos animam hanc potius quocumque absumite leto. 655 Vix ea fatus erat, summo cum monte videmus 656 ipsum inter pecudes vasta se mole moventem 657 pastorem Polyphemum et litora nota petentem, 658 monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum. 659 Trunca manu pinus regit et vestigia firmat; 660 lanigerae comitantur oves—ea sola voluptas	648 with messy silver and Dodona's pride 649 of brazen cauldrons; a cuirass he gave 650 of linked gold enwrought and triple chain; 651 a noble helmet, too, with flaming crest 652 and lofty cone, th' accoutrement erewhile 653 of Neoptolemus. My father too 654 had fit gifts from the King; whose bounty then 655 gave steeds and riders; and new gear was sent 656 to every sea-worn ship, while he supplied 657 seafarers, kit to all my loyal crews. 658 Anchises bade us speedily set sail, 659 nor lose a wind so fair; and answering him, 660 Apollo's priest made reverent adieu: 661 “Anchises, honored by the love sublime 662 of Venus, self and twice in safety borne 663 from falling Troy, chief care of kindly Heaven, 664 th' Ausonian shore is thine. Sail thitherward! 665 For thou art pre-ordained to travel far 666 o'er yonder seas; far in the distance lies 667 that region of Ausonia, Phoebus' voice 668 to thee made promise of. Onward, I say, 669 o blest in the exceeding loyal love 670 of thy dear son! Why keep thee longer now? 671 Why should my words yon gathering winds detain?” 672 Likewise Andromache in mournful guise 673 took last farewell, bringing embroidered robes 674 of golden woof; a princely Phrygian cloak 675 she gave Ascanius, vying with the King 676 in gifts of honor; and threw o'er the boy 677 the labors of her loom, with words like these: 678 “Accept these gifts, sweet youth, memorials 679 of me and my poor handicraft, to prove 680 th' undying friendship of Andromache, 681 once Hector's wife. Take these last offerings 682 of those who are thy kin—O thou that art 683 of my Astyanax in all this world 684 the only image! His thy lovely eyes! 685 Thy hands, thy lips, are even what he bore, 686 and like thy own his youthful bloom would be.” 687 Thus I made answer, turning to depart
3.661	661 solamenque mali. 662 Postquam altos tetigit fluctus et ad aequora venit, 663 luminis effossi fluidum lavit inde cruorem, 664 dentibus infrendens gemitu, graditurque per aequor 665 iam medium, necdum fluctus latera ardua tinxit.	688 with rising tears: “Live on, and be ye blessed, 689 whose greatness is accomplished! As for me, 690 from change to change Fate summons, and I go; 691 but ye have won repose. No leagues of sea 692 await your cleaving keel. Not yours the quest 693 of fading Italy's delusive shore. 694 Here a new Xanthus and a second Troy 695 your

	666 Nos procul inde fugam trepidi celerare, recepto 667 supplice sic merito, tacitique incidere funem; 668 vertimus et proni certantibus aequora remis. 669 Sensit, et ad sonitum vocis vestigia torsit; 670 verum ubi nulla datur dextra adfectare potestas, 671 nec potis Ionios fluctus aequare sequendo, 672 clamorem immensum tollit, quo pontus et omnes 673 contremuere undae, penitusque exterrita tellus 674 Italiae, curvisque immugiit Aetna cavernis. 675 At genus e silvis Cyclopum et montibus altis 676 excitum ruit ad portus et litora complent. 677 Cernimus adstantis nequiquam lumine torvo 678 Aetnaeos fratres, caelo capita alta ferentis, 679 concilium horrendum: quales cum vertice celso 680 aeriae quercus, aut coniferae cyparissi 681 constiterunt, silva alta Iovis, lucusve Dianae. 682 Praecipites metus acer agit quocumque rudentis 683 excutere, et ventis intendere vela secundis. 684 Contra iussa monent Heleni Scyllam atque Charybdin 685 inter, utramque viam leti discrimine parvo, 686 ni teneant cursus; certum est dare lintea retro. 687 Ecce autem Boreas angusta ab sede Pelori 688 missus adest. Vivo praetervehor ostia saxo 689 Pantagiae Megarosque sinus Thapsumque iacentem. 690 Talia monstrabat relegens errata retrorsus	labor fashioned and your eyes may see — 696 more blest, I trust, less tempting to our foes! 697 If e'er on Tiber and its bordering vales 698 I safely enter, and these eyes behold 699 our destined walls, then in fraternal bond 700 let our two nations live, whose mutual boast 701 is one Dardanian blood, one common story. 702 Epirus with Hesperia shall be 703 one Troy in heart and soul. But this remains 704 for our sons' sons the happy task and care.”
3.691	691 litora Achaemenides; comes infelicis Ulixi. 692 Sicanio praetenta sinu iacet insula contra 693 Plemyrium undosum; nomen dixere priores 694 Ortygiam. Alpheum fama est huc Elidis amnem	705 Forth o'er the seas we sped and kept our course 706 nigh the Ceraunian headland, where begins 707 the short sea-passage unto Italy. 708 Soon sank the sun, while down the shadowed hills 709 stole deeper gloom; then making shore, we flung 710 our bodies on a dry, sea-bordering sand, 711 couched

	695 occultas egisse vias subter mare; qui nunc 696 ore, Arethusa, tuo Siculis confunditur undis. 697 Iussi numina magna loci veneramur; et inde 698 exsupero praepingue solum stagnantis Helori. 699 Hinc altas cautes proiectaque saxa Pachyni 700 radimus, et fatis numquam concessa moveri 701 adparet Camerina procul campique Geloi, 702 immanisque Gela fluvii cognomine dicta. 703 Arduus inde Acragas ostentat maxuma longe 704 moenia, magnanimum quondam generator equorum; 705 teque datis linquo ventis, palmosa Selinus, 706 et vada dura lego saxis Lilybeia caecis. 707 Hinc Drepani me portus et inlaetabilis ora 708 accipit. Hic, pelagi tot tempestatibus actis, 709 heu genitorem, omnis curae casusque levamen, 710 amitto Anchisen: hic me, pater optume, fessum 711 deseris, heu, tantis nequiquam erepte periclis! 712 Nec vates Helenus, cum multa horrenda moneret, 713 hos mihi praedixit luctus, non dira Celaeno. 714 Hic labor extremus, longarum haec meta viarum. 715 Hinc me digressum vestris deus adpulit oris. 716 Sic pater Aeneas intentis omnibus unus 717 fata renarrabat divom, cursusque docebat. 718 Conticuit tandem, factoque hic fine quievit.	on earth's welcome breast; the oars were ranged 712 in order due; the tides of slumber dark 713 o'erflowed our lives. But scarce the chariot 714 of Night, on wings of swift, obedient Hours, 715 had touched the middle sky, when wakeful sprang 716 good Palinurus from his pillowed stone: 717 with hand at ear he caught each airy gust 718 and questioned of the winds; the gliding stars 719 he called by name, as onward they advanced 720 through the still heaven; Arcturus he beheld, 721 the Hyades, rain-bringers, the twin Bears, 722 and vast Orion girt in golden arms. 723 He blew a trumpet from his ship; our camp 724 stirred to the signal for embarking; soon 725 we rode the seas once more with swelling sail.
4.1	1 At regina gravi iamdudum saucia cura 2 volnus alit venis, et caeco carpitur igni. 3 Multa viri virtus animo, multusque recursat 4 gentis honos: haerent infixi pectore voltus 5 verbaque, nec placidam membris dat cura quietem.	1 Now felt the Queen the sharp, slow-gathering pangs 2 of love; and out of every pulsing vein 3 nourished the wound and fed its viewless fire. 4 Her hero's virtues and his lordly line 5 keep calling to her soul; his words, his glance, 6 cling to her heart like lingering, barbed steel, 7 and rest and peace from her vexed body fly. 8 A new day's dawn with Phoebus' lamp divine 9

	6 Postera Phoebea lustrabat lampade terras, 7 umentemque Aurora polo dimoverat umbram, 8 cum sic unanimam adloquitur male sana sororem: 9 Anna soror, quae me suspensam insomnia terrent! 10 Quis novus hic nostris successit sedibus hospes, 11 quem sese ore ferens, quam forti pectore et armis! 12 Credo equidem, nec vana fides, genus esse deorum. 13 Degeneres animos timor arguit: heu, quibus ille 14 iactatus fatis! Quae bella exhausta canebat! 15 Si mihi non animo fixum immotumque sederet, 16 ne cui me vinclo vellem sociare iugali, 17 postquam primus amor deceptam morte fefellit; 18 si non pertaesum thalami taedaeque fuisset, 19 huic uni forsan potui succumbere culpae. 20 Anna, fatebor enim, miseri post fata Sychaei 21 coniugis et sparsos fraterna caede Penatis, 22 solus hic inflexit sensus, animumque labantem 23 impulit: adgnosco veteris vestigia flammae. 24 Sed mihi vel tellus optem prius ima dehiscat, 25 vel Pater omnipotens adigat me fulmine ad umbras, 26 pallentis umbras Erebi noctemque profundam, 27 ante, Pudor, quam te violo, aut tua iura resolvo. 28 Ille meos, primus qui me sibi iunxit, amores 29 abstulit; ille habeat secum servetque sepulchro. 30 Sic effata sinum lacrimis implevit obortis.	lit up all lands, and from the vaulted heaven 10 Aurora had dispelled the dark and dew; 11 when thus unto the ever-answering heart 12 of her dear sister spoke the stricken Queen: 13 “Anna, my sister, what disturbing dreams 14 perplex me and alarm? What guest is this 15 new-welcomed to our house? How proud his mien! 16 What dauntless courage and exploits of war! 17 Sooth, I receive it for no idle tale 18 that of the gods he sprang. 'T is cowardice 19 betrays the base-born soul. Ah me! How fate 20 has smitten him with storms! What dire extremes 21 of war and horror in his tale he told! 22 O, were it not immutably resolved 23 in my fixed heart, that to no shape of man 24 I would be wed again (since my first love 25 left me by death abandoned and betrayed); 26 loathed I not so the marriage torch and train, 27 I could—who knows?—to this one weakness yield. 28 Anna, I hide it not! But since the doom 29 of my ill-starred Sichaeus, when our shrines 30 were by a brother's murder dabbled o'er, 31 this man alone has moved me; he alone 32 has shaken my weak will. I seem to feel 33 the motions of love's lost, familiar fire. 34 But may the earth gape open where I tread, 35 and may almighty Jove with thunder-scourge 36 hurl me to Erebus' abysmal shade, 37 to pallid ghosts and midnight fathomless, 38 before, O Chastity! I shall offend 39 thy holy power, or cast thy bonds away! 40 He who first mingled his dear life with mine 41 took with him all my heart. 'T is his alone — 42 o, let it rest beside him in the grave!” 43 She spoke: the bursting tears her breast o'erflowed.
4.31	31 Anna refert: O luce magis dilecta sorori, 32 solane perpetua maerens carpere iuventa, 33 nec dulcis natos, Veneris nec praemia noris? 34 Id cinerem aut Manis credis curare sepultos?	44 “O dearer to thy sister than her life,” 45 Anna replied, “wouldst thou in sorrow's weed 46 waste thy long youth alone, nor ever know 47 sweet babes at thine own breast, nor gifts of love? 48 Will dust and ashes, or a buried ghost 49 reck what we do? 'T is true thy grieving heart 50 was cold to earlier

	35 Esto: aegram nulli quondam flexere mariti, 36 non Libyae, non ante Tyro; despectus Iarbas 37 ductoresque alii, quos Africa terra triumphis 38 dives alit: placitone etiam pugnabis amori? 39 Nec venit in mentem, quorum consederis arvis? 40 Hinc Gaetulae urbes, genus insuperabile bello, 41 et Numidae infreni cingunt et inhospita Syrtis; 42 hinc deserta siti regio, lateque furentes 43 Barcaei. Quid bella Tyro surgentia dicam, 44 germanique minas? 45 Dis equidem auspicibus reor et Iunone secunda 46 hunc cursum Iliacas vento tenuisse carinas. 47 Quam tu urbem, soror, hanc cernes, quae surgere regna 48 coniugio tali! Teucrum comitantibus armis 49 Punica se quantis attollet gloria rebus! 50 Tu modo posce deos veniam, sacrisque litatis 51 indulge hospitio, causasque innecte morandi, 52 dum pelago desaevit hiemps et aquosus Orion, 53 quassataeque rates, dum non tractabile caelum. 54 His dictis incensum animum inflammavit amore, 55 spemque dedit dubiae menti, solvitque pudorem. 56 Principio delubra adeunt, pacemque per aras 57 exquirunt; mactant lectas de more bidentis 58 legiferae Cereri Phoeboque patrique Lyaeo, 59 Iunoni ante omnis, cui vincla iugalia curae. 60 Ipsa, tenens dextra pateram, pulcherrima Dido	wooers, Libya's now, 51 and long ago in Tyre. Iarbas knew 52 thy scorn, and many a prince and captain bred 53 in Afric's land of glory. Why resist 54 a love that makes thee glad? Hast thou no care 55 what alien lands are these where thou dost reign? 56 Here are Gaetulia's cities and her tribes 57 unconquered ever; on thy borders rove 58 Numidia's uncurbed cavalry; here too 59 lies Syrtis' cruel shore, and regions wide 60 of thirsty desert, menaced everywhere 61 by the wild hordes of Barca. Shall I tell 62 of Tyre's hostilities, the threats and rage 63 of our own brother? Friendly gods, I bow, 64 wafted the Teucrian ships, with Juno's aid, 65 to these our shores. O sister, what a throne, 66 and what imperial city shall be thine, 67 if thus espoused! With Trojan arms allied 68 how far may not our Punic fame extend 69 in deeds of power? Call therefore on the gods 70 to favor thee; and, after omens fair, 71 give queenly welcome, and contrive excuse 72 to make him tarry, while yon wintry seas 73 are loud beneath Orion's stormful star, 74 and on his battered ships the season frowns.”
4.61	61 candentis vaccae media inter cornua fundit, 62 aut ante ora deum pinguis spatiatur ad aras, 63 instauratque diem donis, pecudumque reclusis 64 pectoribus inhians spirantia consulit	75 So saying, she stirred a passion-burning breast 76 to Iove more madly still; her words infused 77 a doubting mind with hope, and bade the blush 78 of shame begone. First to the shrines they went 79 and sued for grace; performing sacrifice, 80 choosing an

	exta. 65 Heu vatum ignarae mentes! quid vota furentem, 66 quid delubra iuvant? Est mollis flamma medullas 67 interea, et tacitum vivit sub pectore volnus. 68 Uritur infelix Dido, totaque vagatur 69 urbe furens, qualis coniecta cerva sagitta, 70 quam procul incautam nemora inter Cresia fixit 71 pastor agens telis, liquitque volatile ferrum 72 nescius; illa fuga silvas saltusque peragrat 73 Dictaeos; haeret lateri letalis arundo. 74 Nunc media Aenean secum per moenia ducit, 75 Sidoniasque ostentat opes urbemque paratam; 76 incipit effari, mediaque in voce resistit; 77 nunc eadem labente die convivia quaerit, 78 Iliacosque iterum demens audire labores 79 exposcit, pendetque iterum narrantis ab ore. 80 Post, ubi digressi, lumenque obscura vicissim 81 luna premit suadentque cadentia sidera somnos, 82 sola domo maeret vacua, stratisque relictis 83 incubat, illum absens absentem auditque videtque; 84 aut gremio Ascanium, genitoris imagine capta, 85 detinet, infandum si fallere possit amorem. 86 Non coeptae adsurgunt turres, non arma iuventus 87 exercet, portusve aut propugnacula bello 88 tuta parant; pendent opera interrupta, minaeque 89 murorum ingentes aequataque machina caelo. 90 Quam simul ac tali persensit peste teneri	offering of unblemished ewes, 81 to law-bestowing Ceres, to the god 82 of light, to sire Lyeus, Iord of wine; 83 but chiefly unto Juno, patroness 84 of nuptial vows. There Dido, beauteous Queen 85 held forth in her right hand the sacred bowl 86 and poured it full between the lifted horns 87 of the white heifer; or on temple floors 88 she strode among the richly laden shrines, 89 the eyes of gods upon her, worshipping 90 with many a votive gift; or, peering deep 91 into the victims' cloven sides, she read 92 the fate-revealing tokens trembling there. 93 How blind the hearts of prophets be! Alas! 94 Of what avail be temples and fond prayers 95 to change a frenzied mind? Devouring ever, 96 love's fire burns inward to her bones; she feels 97 quick in her breast the viewless, voiceless wound. 98 Ill-fated Dido ranges up and down 99 the spaces of her city, desperate 100 her life one flame—like arrow-stricken doe 101 through Cretan forest rashly wandering, 102 pierced by a far-off shepherd, who pursues 103 with shafts, and leaves behind his light-winged steed, 104 not knowing; while she scours the dark ravines
4.91	91 cara Iovis coniunx, nec famam obstare furori, 92 talibus adgreditur Venerem Saturnia dictis: 93 Egregiam vero laudem et spolia ampla refertis	105 of Dicte and its woodlands; at her heart 106 the mortal barb irrevocably clings. 107 around her city's battlements she guides 108 aeneas, to make show of Sidon's gold, 109 and what her realm can boast; full oft her

	94 tuque puerque tuus, magnum et memorabile numen, 95 una dolo divom si femina victa duorum est! 96 Nec me adeo fallit veritam te moenia nostra 97 suspectas habuisse domos Karthaginis altae. 98 Sed quis erit modus, aut quo nunc certamine tanto? 99 Quin potius pacem aeternam pactosque hymenaeos 100 exercemus? Habes, tota quod mente petisti: 101 ardet amans Dido, traxitque per ossa furorem. 102 Communem hunc ergo populum paribusque regamus 103 auspiciis; liceat Phrygio servire marito, 104 dotalisque tuae Tyrios permittere dextrae. 105 Olli—sensit enim simulata mente locutam, 106 quo regnum Italiae Libycas averteret oras— 107 sic contra est ingressa Venus: Quis talia demens 108 abnuat, aut tecum malit contendere bello, 109 si modo, quod memoras, factum fortuna sequatur. 110 Sed fatis incerta feror, si Iuppiter unam 111 esse velit Tyriis urbem Troiaque profectis, 112 miscerive probet populos, aut foedera iungi. 113 Tu coniunx tibi fas animum temptare precando. 114 Perge; sequar. Tum sic excepit regia Iuno: 115 Mecum erit iste labor: nunc qua ratione, quod instat 116 confieri possit, paucis, adverte, docebo. 117 Venatum Aeneas unaque miserrima Dido 118 in nemus ire parant, ubi primos crastinus ortus 119 extulerit Titan, radiisque retexerit orbem. 120 His ego nigrantem commixta grandine nimbum,	voice 110 essays to speak and frembling dies away: 111 or, when the daylight fades, she spreads anew 112 a royal banquet, and once more will plead 113 mad that she is, to hear the Trojan sorrow; 114 and with oblivious ravishment once more 115 hangs on his lips who tells; or when her guests 116 are scattered, and the wan moon's fading horn 117 bedims its ray, while many a sinking star 118 invites to slumber, there she weeps alone 119 in the deserted hall, and casts her down 120 on the cold couch he pressed. Her love from far 121 beholds her vanished hero and receives 122 his voice upon her ears; or to her breast, 123 moved by a father's image in his child, 124 she clasps Ascanius, seeking to deceive 125 her unblest passion so. Her enterprise 126 of tower and rampart stops: her martial host 127 no Ionger she reviews, nor fashions now 128 defensive haven and defiant wall; 129 but idly all her half-built bastions frown, 130 and enginery of sieges, high as heaven.
4.121	121 dum trepidant alae, saltusque indagine cingunt, 122 desuper infundam, et tonitru caelum omne ciebo.	131 But soon the chosen spouse of Jove perceived 132 the Queen's infection; and because the voice 133 of honor to such frenzy spoke not, she, 134

	123 Diffugient comites et nocte tegentur opaca: 124 speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem 125 devenient; adero, et, tua si mihi certa voluntas, 126 127 hic hymenaeus erit.—Non adversata petenti 128 adnuit, atque dolis risit Cytherea repertis. 129 Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit. 130 It portis iubare exorto delecta iuventus; 131 retia rara, plagae, lato venabula ferro, 132 Massylique ruunt equites et odora canum vis. 133 Reginam thalamo cunctantem ad limina primi 134 Poenorum exspectant, ostroque insignis et auro 135 stat sonipes, ac frena ferox spumantia mandit. 136 Tandem progreditur, magna stipante caterva, 137 Sidoniam picto chlamydem circumdata limbo. 138 Cui pharetra ex auro, crines nodantur in aurum, 139 aurea purpuream subnectit fibula vestem. 140 Nec non et Phrygii comites et laetus Iulus 141 incedunt. Ipse ante alios pulcherrimus omnis 142 infert se socium Aeneas atque agmina iungit. 143 Qualis ubi hibernam Lyciam Xanthique fluenta 144 deserit ac Delum maternam invisit Apollo, 145 instauratque choros, mixtique altaria circum 146 Cretesque Dryopesque fremunt pictique Agathyrsi; 147 ipse iugis Cynthi graditur, mollique fluentem 148 fronde premit crinem fingens atque implicat auro; 149 tela sonant umeris: haud illo segnior ibat 150 Aeneas; tantum egregio decus enitet ore.	daughter of Saturn, unto Venus turned 135 and counselled thus: “How noble is the praise, 136 how glorious the spoils of victory, 137 for thee and for thy boy! Your names should be 138 in lasting, vast renown—that by the snare 139 of two great gods in league one woman fell! 140 it 'scapes me not that my protected realms 141 have ever been thy fear, and the proud halls 142 of Carthage thy vexation and annoy. 143 Why further go? Prithee, what useful end 144 has our long war? Why not from this day forth 145 perpetual peace and nuptial amity? 146 Hast thou not worked thy will? Behold and see 147 how Iove-sick Dido burns, and all her flesh 148 'The madness feels! So let our common grace 149 smile on a mingled people! Let her serve 150 a Phrygian husband, while thy hands receive 151 her Tyrian subjects for the bridal dower!”
4.151	151 Postquam altos ventum in montis atque invia lustra, 152 ecce ferae, saxi deiectae vertice,	152 In answer (reading the dissembler's mind 153 which unto Libyan shores were fain to shift 154

	caprae 153 decurrere iugis; alia de parte patentis 154 transmittunt cursu campos atque agmina cervi 155 pulverulenta fuga glomerant montisque relinquunt. 156 At puer Ascanius mediis in vallibus acri 157 gaudet equo, iamque hos cursu, iam praeterit illos, 158 spumantemque dari pecora inter inertia votis 159 optat aprum, aut fulvum descendere monte leonem. 160 Interea magno misceri murmure caelum 161 incipit; insequitur commixta grandine nimbus; 162 et Tyrii comites passim et Troiana iuventus 163 Dardaniusque nepos Veneris diversa per agros 164 tecta metu petiere; ruunt de montibus amnes. 165 Speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem 166 deveniunt: prima et Tellus et pronuba Iuno 167 dant signum; fulsere ignes et conscius aether 168 conubiis, summoque ululârunt vertice nymphae. 169 Ille dies primus leti primusque malorum 170 causa fuit; neque enim specie famave movetur, 171 nec iam furtivum Dido meditatur amorem: 172 coniugium vocat; hoc praetexit nomine culpam. 173 Extemplo Libyae magnas it Fama per urbes— 174 Fama, malum qua non aliud velocius ullum; 175 mobilitate viget, viresque adquirit eundo, 176 parva metu primo, mox sese attollit in auras, 177 ingrediturque solo, et caput inter nubila condit. 178 Illam Terra parens, ira inritata deorum, 179 extremam (ut perhibent) Coeo Enceladoque sororem 180 progenuit, pedibus celerem et pernicibus alis,	italia's future throne) thus Venus spoke: 155 “'T were mad to spurn such favor, or by choice 156 be numbered with thy foes. But can it be 157 that fortune on thy noble counsel smiles? 158 To me Fate shows but dimly whether Jove 159 unto the Trojan wanderers ordains 160 a common city with the sons of Tyre, 161 with mingling blood and sworn, perpetual peace. 162 His wife thou art; it is thy rightful due 163 to plead to know his mind. Go, ask him, then! 164 For humbly I obey!” With instant word 165 Juno the Queen replied: “Leave that to me! 166 But in what wise our urgent task and grave 167 may soon be sped, I will in brief unfold 168 to thine attending ear. A royal hunt 169 in sylvan shades unhappy Dido gives 170 for her Aeneas, when to-morrow's dawn 171 uplifts its earliest ray and Titan's beam 172 shall first unveil the world. But I will pour 173 black storm-clouds with a burst of heavy hail 174 along their way; and as the huntsmen speed 175 to hem the wood with snares, I will arouse 176 all heaven with thunder. The attending train 177 shall scatter and be veiled in blinding dark, 178 while Dido and her hero out of Troy 179 to the same cavern fly. My auspices 180 I will declare—if thou alike wilt bless; 181 and yield her in true wedlock for his bride.
4.181	181 monstrum horrendum, ingens, cui,	182 Such shall their spousal be!” To

	quot sunt corpore plumae 182 tot vigiles oculi subter, mirabile dictu, 183 tot linguae, totidem ora sonant, tot subrigit aures. 184 Nocte volat caeli medio terraeque per umbram, 185 stridens, nec dulci declinat lumina somno; 186 luce sedet custos aut summi culmine tecti, 187 turribus aut altis, et magnas territat urbes; 188 tam ficti pravique tenax, quam nuntia veri. 189 Haec tum multiplici populos sermone replebat 190 gaudens, et pariter facta atque infecta canebat: 191 venisse Aenean, Troiano sanguine cretum, 192 cui se pulchra viro dignetur iungere Dido; 193 nunc hiemem inter se luxu, quam longa, fovere 194 regnorum immemores turpique cupidine captos. 195 Haec passim dea foeda virum diffundit in ora. 196 Protinus ad regem cursus detorquet Iarban, 197 incenditque animum dictis atque aggerat iras. 198 Hic Hammone satus, rapta Garamantide Nympha, 199 templa Iovi centum latis immania regnis, 200 centum aras posuit, vigilemque sacraverat ignem, 201 excubias divom aeternas, pecudumque cruore 202 pingue solum et variis florentia limina sertis. 203 Isque amens animi et rumore accensus amaro 204 dicitur ante aras media inter numina divom 205 multa Iovem manibus supplex orasse supinis: 206 Iuppiter omnipotens, cui nunc Maurusia pictis 207 gens epulata toris Lenaeum libat honorem, 208 aspicis haec, an te, genitor, cum fulmina torques, 209 nequiquam horremus, caecique in nubibus ignes 210 terrificant animos et inania	Juno's will 183 Cythera's Queen inclined assenting brow, 184 and laughed such guile to see. Aurora rose, 185 and left the ocean's rim. The city's gates 186 pour forth to greet the morn a gallant train 187 of huntsmen, bearing many a woven snare 188 and steel-tipped javelin; while to and fro 189 run the keen-scented dogs and Libyan squires. 190 The Queen still keeps her chamber; at her doors 191 the Punic lords await; her palfrey, brave 192 in gold and purple housing, paws the ground 193 and fiercely champs the foam-flecked bridle-rein. 194 At last, with numerous escort, forth she shines: 195 her Tyrian pall is bordered in bright hues, 196 her quiver, gold; her tresses are confined 197 only with gold; her robes of purple rare 198 meet in a golden clasp. To greet her come 199 the noble Phrygian guests; among them smiles 200 the boy Iulus; and in fair array 201 Aeneas, goodliest of all his train. 202 In such a guise Apollo (when he leaves 203 cold Lycian hills and Xanthus' frosty stream 204 to visit Delos to Latona dear) 205 ordains the song, while round his altars cry 206 the choirs of many islands, with the pied, 207 fantastic Agathyrsi; soon the god 208 moves o'er the Cynthian steep; his flowing hair 209 he binds with laurel garland and bright gold; 210 upon his shining shoulder as he goes 211 the arrows ring:—not less uplifted mien murmura miscent?

4.211	211 Femina, quae nostris errans in finibus urbem 212 exiguam pretio posuit, cui litus arandum 213 cuique loci leges dedimus, conubia nostra 214 reppulit, ac dominum Aenean in regna recepit. 215 Et nunc ille Paris cum semiviro comitatu, 216 Maeonia mentum mitra crinemque madentem 217 subnexus, rapto potitur: nos munera templis 218 quippe tuis ferimus, famamque fovemus inanem. 219 Talibus orantem dictis arasque tenentem 220 audiit omnipotens, oculosque ad moenia torsit 221 regia et oblitos famae melioris amantes. 222 Tum sic Mercurium adloquitur ac talia mandat: 223 Vade age, nate, voca Zephyros et labere pennis, 224 Dardaniumque ducem, Tyria Karthagine qui nunc 225 exspectat, fatisque datas non respicit urbes, 226 adloquere, et celeris defer mea dicta per auras. 227 Non illum nobis genetrix pulcherrima talem 228 promisit, Graiumque ideo bis vindicat armis; 229 sed fore, qui gravidam imperiis belloque frementem 230 Italiam regeret, genus alto a sanguine Teucri 231 proderet, ac totum sub leges mitteret orbem. 232 Si nulla accendit tantarum gloria rerum, 233 nec super ipse sua molitur laude laborem, 234 Ascanione pater Romanas invidet arces? 235 Quid struit, aut qua spe inimica in gente moratur, 236 nec prolem Ausoniam et Lavinia respicit arva? 237 Naviget: haec summa est; hic nostri nuntius esto. 238 Dixerat. Ille patris magni parere parabat 239 imperio; et primum pedibus talaria	212 aeneas wore; from his illustrious brow 213 such beauty shone. Soon to the mountains tall 214 the cavalcade comes nigh, to pathless haunts 215 of woodland creatures; the wild goats are seen, 216 from pointed crag descending leap by leap 217 down the steep ridges; in the vales below 218 are routed deer, that scour the spreading plain, 219 and mass their dust-blown squadrons in wild flight, 220 far from the mountain's bound. Ascanius 221 flushed with the sport, spurs on a mettled steed 222 from vale to vale, and many a flying herd 223 his chase outspeeds; but in his heart he prays 224 among these tame things suddenly to see 225 a tusky boar, or, leaping from the hills, 226 a growling mountain-lion, golden-maned. 227 Meanwhile low thunders in the distant sky 228 mutter confusedly; soon bursts in full 229 the storm-cloud and the hail. The Tyrian troop 230 is scattered wide; the chivalry of Troy, 231 with the young heir of Dardan's kingly line, 232 of Venus sprung, seek shelter where they may, 233 with sudden terror; down the deep ravines 234 the swollen torrents roar. In that same hour 235 Queen Dido and her hero out of Troy 236 to the same cavern fly. Old Mother-Earth 237 and wedlock-keeping Juno gave the sign; 238 the flash of lightnings on the conscious air 239 were torches to the bridal; from the hills 240 the wailing wood-nymphs sobbed a wedding song. 241 Such was that day of death, the source and spring 242 of many a woe. For Dido took no heed 243 of honor and good-name; nor did she mean 244 her loves to hide; but called the lawlessness 245 a marriage, and with phrases veiled her shame.

	nectit 240 aurea, quae sublimem alis sive aequora supra
4.241	241 seu terram rapido pariter cum flamine portant; 242 tum virgam capit: hac animas ille evocat Orco 243 pallentis, alias sub Tartara tristia mittit, 244 dat somnos adimitque, et lumina morte resignat. 245 Illa fretus agit ventos, et turbida tranat 246 nubila; iamque volans apicem et latera ardua cernit 247 Atlantis duri, caelum qui vertice fulcit, 248 Atlantis, cinctum adsidue cui nubibus atris 249 piniferum caput et vento pulsatur et imbri; 250 nix umeros infusa tegit; tum flumina mento 251 praecipitant senis, et glacie riget horrida barba. 252 Hic primum paribus nitens Cyllenius alis 253 constitit; hinc toto praeceps se corpore ad undas 254 misit, avi similis, quae circum litora, circum 255 piscosos scopulos humilis volat aequora iuxta. 256 Haud aliter terras inter caelumque volabat, 257 litus harenosum Libyae ventosque secabat 258 materno veniens ab avo Cyllenia proles. 259 Ut primum alatis tetigit magalia plantis, 260 Aenean fundantem arces ac tecta novantem 261 conspicit; atque illi stellatus iaspide fulva 262 ensis erat, Tyrioque ardebat murice laena 263 demissa ex umeris, dives quae munera Dido 264 fecerat, et tenui telas discreverat auro. 265 Continuo invadit: Tu nunc Karthaginis altae 266 fundamenta locas, pulchramque uxorius urbem 267 exstruis, heu regni rerumque oblite tuarum? 268 Ipse deum tibi me claro demittit	246 Swift through the Libyan cities Rumor sped. 247 Rumor! What evil can surpass her speed? 248 In movement she grows mighty, and achieves 249 strength and dominion as she swifter flies. 250 small first, because afraid, she soon exalts 251 her stature skyward, stalking through the lands 252 and mantling in the clouds her baleful brow. 253 The womb of Earth, in anger at high Heaven, 254 bore her, they say, last of the Titan spawn, 255 sister to Coeus and Enceladus. 256 Feet swift to run and pinions like the wind 257 the dreadful monster wears; her carcase huge 258 is feathered, and at root of every plume 259 a peering eye abides; and, strange to tell, 260 an equal number of vociferous tongues, 261 foul, whispering lips, and ears, that catch at all. 262 At night she spreads midway 'twixt earth and heaven 263 her pinions in the darkness, hissing loud, 264 nor e'er to happy slumber gives her eyes: 265 but with the morn she takes her watchful throne 266 high on the housetops or on lofty towers, 267 to terrify the nations. She can cling 268 to vile invention and malignant wrong, 269 or mingle with her word some tidings true. 270 She now with changeful story filled men's ears, 271 exultant, whether false or true she sung: 272 how, Trojan-born Aeneas having come, 273 Dido, the lovely widow, Iooked his way, 274 deigning to wed; how all the winter long 275 they passed in revel and voluptuous ease, 276 to dalliance given o'er; naught heeding now 277 of crown or kingdom —shameless! lust-enslaved! 278 Such tidings broadcast on the lips of men 279 the filthy goddess spread; and soon she hied 280 to King Iarbas, where her hateful song 281 to newly-swollen wrath his heart inflamed.

	Olympo 269 regnator, caelum ac terras qui numine torquet; 270 ipse haec ferre iubet celeris mandata per auras:
4.271	271 quid struis, aut qua spe Libycis teris otia terris? 272 Si te nulla movet tantarum gloria rerum, 273 274 Ascanium surgentem et spes heredis Iuli 275 respice, cui regnum Italiae Romanaque tellus 276 debentur. Tali Cyllenius ore locutus 277 mortalis visus medio sermone reliquit, 278 et procul in tenuem ex oculis evanuit auram. 279 At vero Aeneas aspectu obmutuit amens, 280 arrectaeque horrore comae, et vox faucibus haesit. 281 Ardet abire fuga dulcisque relinquere terras, 282 attonitus tanto monitu imperioque deorum. 283 Heu quid agat? Quo nunc reginam ambire furentem 284 audeat adfatu? Quae prima exordia sumat? 285 Atque animum nunc huc celerem, nunc dividit illuc, 286 in partisque rapit varias perque omnia versat. 287 Haec alternanti potior sententia visa est: 288 Mnesthea Sergestumque vocat fortemque Serestum, 289 classem aptent taciti sociosque ad litora cogant, 290 arma parent, et quae rebus sit causa novandis 291 dissimulent; sese interea, quando optuma Dido 292 nesciat et tantos rumpi non speret amores, 293 temptaturum aditus, et quae mollissima fandi 294 tempora, quis rebus dexter modus. Ocius omnes 295 imperio laeti parent ac iussa facessunt. 296 At regina dolos—quis fallere possit amantem? 297 praesensit, motusque excepit prima futuros,	282 Him the god Ammon got by forced embrace 283 upon a Libyan nymph; his kingdoms wide 284 possessed a hundred ample shrines to Jove, 285 a hundred altars whence ascended ever 286 the fires of sacrifice, perpetual seats 287 for a great god's abode, where flowing blood 288 enriched the ground, and on the portals hung 289 garlands of every flower. The angered King, 290 half-maddened by malignant Rumor's voice, 291 unto his favored altars came, and there, 292 surrounded by the effluence divine, 293 upraised in prayer to Jove his suppliant hands. 294 “Almighty Jupiter, to whom each day, 295 at banquet on the painted couch reclined, 296 Numidia pours libation! Do thine eyes 297 behold us? Or when out of yonder heaven, 298 o sire, thou launchest the swift thunderbolt, 299 is it for naught we fear thee? Do the clouds 300 shoot forth blind fire to terrify the soul 301 with wild, unmeaning roar? O, Iook upon 302 that woman, who was homeless in our realm, 303 and bargained where to build her paltry town, 304 receiving fertile coastland for her farms, 305 by hospitable grant! She dares disdain 306 our proffered nuptial vow. She has proclaimed 307 Aeneas partner of her bed and throne. 308 And now that Paris, with his eunuch crew, 309 beneath his chin and fragrant, oozy hair 310 ties the soft Lydian bonnet, boasting well 311 his stolen prize. But we to all these fanes, 312 though they be thine, a fruitless offering bring, 313 and feed on empty tales our trust in thee.”

	298 omnia tuta timens. Eadem impia Fama furenti 299 detulit armari classem cursumque parari. 300 Saevit inops animi, totamque incensa per urbem
4.301	301 bacchatur, qualis commotis excita sacris 302 Thyias, ubi audito stimulant trieterica Baccho 303 orgia, nocturnusque vocat clamore Cithaeron. 304 Tandem his Aenean compellat vocibus ultro: 305 Dissimulare etiam sperasti, perfide, tantum 306 posse nefas, tacitusque mea decedere terra? 307 Nec te noster amor, nec te data dextera quondam, 308 nec moritura tenet crudeli funere Dido? 309 Quin etiam hiberno moliris sidere classem, 310 et mediis properas aquilonibus ire per altum, 311 crudelis? Quid, si non arva aliena domosque 312 ignotas peteres, sed Troia antiqua maneret, 313 Troia per undosum peteretur classibus aequor 314 Mene fugis? Per ego has lacrimas dextramque tuam te 315 (quando aliud mihi iam miserae nihil ipsa reliqui) 316 per conubia nostra, per inceptos hymenaeos, 317 si bene quid de te merui, fuit aut tibi quicquam 318 dulce meum, miserere domus labentis, et istam— 319 oro, si quis adhuc precibus locus—exue mentem. 320 Te propter Libycae gentes Nomadumque tyranni 321 odere, infensi Tyrii; te propter eundem 322 exstinctus pudor, et, qua sola sidera adibam, 323 fama prior. Cui me moribundam deseris, hospes? 324 Hoc solum nomen quoniam de coniuge restat. 325 Quid moror? An mea Pygmalion dum moenia frater 326 destruat, aut captam ducat Gaetulus Iarbas?	314 As thus he prayed and to the altars clung, 315 th' Omnipotent gave ear, and turned his gaze 316 upon the royal dwelling, where for love 317 the amorous pair forgot their place and name. 318 Then thus to Mercury he gave command: 319 “Haste thee, my son, upon the Zephyrs call, 320 and take thy winged way! My mandate bear 321 unto that prince of Troy who tarries now 322 in Tyrian Carthage, heedless utterly 323 of empire Heaven-bestowed. On winged winds 324 hasten with my decrees. Not such the man 325 his beauteous mother promised; not for this 326 twice did she shield him from the Greeks in arms: 327 but that he might rule Italy, a land 328 pregnant with thrones and echoing with war; 329 that he of Teucer's seed a race should sire, 330 and bring beneath its law the whole wide world. 331 If such a glory and event supreme 332 enkindle not his bosom; if such task 333 to his own honor speak not; can the sire 334 begrudge Ascanius the heritage 335 of the proud name of Rome? What plans he now? 336 What mad hope bids him linger in the lap 337 of enemies, considering no more 338 the land Lavinian and Ausonia's sons. 339 Let him to sea! Be this our final word: 340 this message let our herald faithful bear.”

	327 Saltem si qua mihi de te suscepta fuisset 328 ante fugam suboles, si quis mihi parvulus aula 329 luderet Aeneas, qui te tamen ore referret, 330 non equidem omnino capta ac deserta viderer.
4.331	331 Dixerat. Ille Iovis monitis immota tenebat 332 lumina, et obnixus curam sub corde premebat. 333 Tandem pauca refert: Ego te, quae plurima fando 334 enumerare vales, numquam, regina, negabo 335 promeritam; nec me meminisse pigebit Elissae, 336 dum memor ipse mei, dum spiritus hos regit artus. 337 Pro re pauca loquar. Neque ego hanc abscondere furto 338 speravi—ne finge—fugam, nec coniugis umquam 339 praetendi taedas, aut haec in foedera veni. 340 Me si fata meis paterentur ducere vitam 341 auspiciis et sponte mea componere curas, 342 urbem Troianam primum dulcisque meorum 343 reliquias colerem, Priami tecta alta manerent, 344 et recidiva manu posuissem Pergama victis. 345 Sed nunc Italiam magnam Gryneus Apollo, 346 Italiam Lyciae iussere capessere sortes: 347 hic amor, haec patria est. Si te Karthaginis arces, 348 Phoenissam, Libycaeque aspectus detinet urbis, 349 quae tandem, Ausonia Teucros considere terra, 350 invidia est? Et nos fas extera quaerere regna. 351 Me patris Anchisae, quotiens umentibus umbris 352 nox operit terras, quotiens astra ignea surgunt, 353 admonet in somnis et turbida terret imago; 354 me puer Ascanius capitisque iniuria cari, 355 quem regno Hesperiae fraudo et fatalibus arvis.	466 She said. But he, obeying Jove's decree, 467 gazed steadfastly away; and in his heart 468 with strong repression crushed his cruel pain; 469 then thus the silence broke: “O Queen, not one 470 of my unnumbered debts so strongly urged 471 would I gainsay. Elissa's memory 472 will be my treasure Iong as memory holds, 473 or breath of life is mine. Hear my brief plea! 474 'T was not my hope to hide this flight I take, 475 as thou hast dreamed. Nay, I did never light 476 a bridegroom's torch, nor gave I thee the vow 477 of marriage. Had my destiny decreed, 478 that I should shape life to my heart's desire, 479 and at my own will put away the weight 480 of foil and pain, my place would now be found 481 in Troy, among the cherished sepulchres 482 of my own kin, and Priam's mansion proud 483 were standing still; or these my loyal hands 484 had rebuilt Ilium for her vanquished sons. 485 But now to Italy Apollo's power 486 commands me forth; his Lycian oracles 487 are loud for Italy. My heart is there, 488 and there my fatherland. If now the towers 489 of Carthage and thy Libyan colony 490 delight thy Tyrian eyes; wilt thou refuse 491 to Trojan exiles their Ausonian shore? 492 I too by Fate was driven, not less than thou, 493 to wander far a foreign throne to find. 494 Oft when in dewy dark night hides the world, 495 and flaming stars arise, Anchises' shade 496 looks on me in my dreams with angered brow. 497 I think of my Ascanius, and the wrong 498 to that dear heart, from whom I steal away 499 Hesperia, his destined home and throne. 500 But now the winged messenger of Heaven, 501 sent down by Jove (I swear by thee and me!), 502 has brought on winged winds his sire's command. 503 My own eyes with unclouded vision saw 504 the god within these walls; I have received 505 with my own ears his word. No more

	356 Nunc etiam interpres divom, Iove missus ab ipso— 357 testor utrumque caput—celeris mandata per auras 358 detulit; ipse deum manifesto in lumine vidi 359 intrantem muros, vocemque his auribus hausi. 360 Desine meque tuis incendere teque querelis:	inflame 506 with lamentation fond thy heart and mine. 507 'T is not my own free act seeks Italy.”
4.361	361 Italiam non sponte sequor. 362 Talia dicentem iamdudum aversa tuetur, 363 huc illuc volvens oculos, totumque pererrat 364 luminibus tacitis, et sic accensa profatur: 365 Nec tibi diva parens, generis nec Dardanus auctor, 366 perfide; sed duris genuit te cautibus horrens 367 Caucasus, Hyrcanaeque admorunt ubera tigres. 368 Nam quid dissimulo, aut quae me ad maiora reservo? 369 Num fletu ingemuit nostro? Num lumina flexit? 370 Num lacrimas victus dedit, aut miseratus amantem est? 371 Quae quibus anteferam? Iam iam nec maxuma Iuno, 372 nec Saturnius haec oculis pater aspicit aequis. 373 Nusquam tuta fides. Eiectum litore, egentem 374 excepi, et regni demens in parte locavi; 375 amissam classem, socios a morte reduxi. 376 Heu furiis incensa feror! Nunc augur Apollo, 377 nunc Lyciae sortes, nunc et Iove missus ab ipso 378 interpres divom fert horrida iussa per auras. 379 Scilicet is Superis labor est, ea cura quietos 380 sollicitat. Neque te teneo, neque dicta refello. 381 I, sequere Italiam ventis, pete regna per undas. 382 Spero equidem mediis, si quid pia numina possunt, 383 supplicia hausurum scopulis, et nomine Dido 384 saepe vocaturum. Sequar atris ignibus absens, 385 et, cum frigida mors anima	341 He spoke. The god a prompt obedience gave 342 to his great sire's command. He fastened first 343 those sandals of bright gold, which carry him 344 aloft o'er land or sea, with airy wings 345 that race the fleeting wind; then lifted he 346 his wand, wherewith he summons from the grave 347 pale-featured ghosts, or, if he will, consigns 348 to doleful Tartarus; or by its power 349 gives slumber or dispels; or quite unseals 350 the eyelids of the dead: on this relying, 351 he routs the winds or cleaves th' obscurity 352 of stormful clouds. Soon from his flight he spied 353 the summit and the sides precipitous 354 of stubborn Atlas, whose star-pointing peak 355 props heaven; of Atlas, whose pine-wreathed brow 356 is girdled evermore with misty gloom 357 and lashed of wind and rain; a cloak of snow 358 melts on his shoulder; from his aged chin 359 drop rivers, and ensheathed in stiffening ice 360 glitters his great grim beard. Here first was stayed 361 the speed of Mercury's well-poising wing; 362 here making pause, from hence he headlong flung 363 his body to the sea; in motion like 364 some sea-bird's, which along the levelled shore 365 or round tall crags where rove the swarming fish, 366 flies Iow along the waves: o'er-hovering so 367 between the earth and skies, Cyllene's god 368 flew downward from his mother's mountain-sire, 369 parted the winds and skimmed the sandy merge 370 of Libya. When first his winged feet 371 came nigh the clay-built Punic huts, he saw 372 Aeneas building at a citadel, 373 and founding walls and towers; at his side 374 was girt a blade with yellow jaspers starred, 375 his mantle with the stain of Tyrian shell 376 flowed purple from his shoulder, broidered fair 377 by opulent Dido with fine threads of gold, 378 her gift of seduxerit artus, 386 omnibus umbra locis adero. Dabis, improbe, poenas. 387 Audiam et haec Manis veniet mihi fama sub imos. 388 His medium dictis sermonem abrumpit, et auras 389 aegra fugit, seque ex oculis avertit et aufert, 390 linquens multa metu cunctantem et multa parantem	love; straightway the god began: 379 “Dost thou for lofty Carthage toil, to build 380 foundations strong? Dost thou, a wife's weak thrall, 381 build her proud city? Hast thou, shameful loss! 382 Forgot thy kingdom and thy task sublime? 383 From bright Olympus, I. He who commands 384 all gods, and by his sovran deity 385 moves earth and heaven—he it was who bade 386 me bear on winged winds his high decree. 387 What plan is thine? By what mad hope dost thou 388 linger so Iong in lap of Libyan land? 389 If the proud reward of thy destined way 390 move not thy heart, if all the arduous toil 391 to thine own honor speak not, Iook upon 392 Iulus in his bloom, thy hope and heir 393 Ascanius. It is his rightful due 394 in Italy o'er Roman lands to reign.” 395 After such word Cyllene's winged god 396 vanished, and e'er his accents died away, 397 dissolved in air before the mortal's eyes.

4.391	391 dicere. Suscipiunt famulae, conlapsaque membra 392 marmoreo referunt thalamo stratisque reponunt. 393 At pius Aeneas, quamquam lenire dolentem 394 solando cupit et dictis avertere curas, 395 multa gemens magnoque animum labefactus amore, 396 iussa tamen divom exsequitur, classemque revisit. 397 Tum vero Teucri incumbunt, et litore celsas 398 deducunt toto naves: natat uncta carina; 399 frondentisque ferunt remos et robora silvis 400 infabricata, fugae studio. 401 Migrantis cernas, totaque ex urbe ruentis. 402 Ac velut ingentem formicae farris acervum 403 cum populant, hiemis memores, tectoque reponunt; 404 it nigrum campis agmen, praedamque per herbas 405 convectant calle angusto; pars grandia trudunt 406 obnixae frumenta umeris; pars agmina cogunt 407 castigantque moras; opere omnis semita fervet. 408 Quis tibi tum, Dido, cernenti talia	398 Aeneas at the sight stood terror-dumb 399 with choking voice and horror-rising hair. 400 He fain would fly at once and get him gone 401 from that voluptuous land, much wondering 402 at Heaven's wrathful word. Alas! how stir? 403 What cunning argument can plead his cause 404 before th' infuriate Queen? How break such news? 405 Flashing this way and that, his startled mind 406 makes many a project and surveys them all. 407 But, pondering well, his final counsel stopped 408 at this resolve: he summoned to his side 409 Mnestheus, Sergestus, and Serestus bold, 410 and bade them fit the fleet, all silently 411 gathering the sailors and collecting gear, 412 but carefully dissembling what emprise 413 such novel stir intends: himself the while 414 (Since high-born Dido dreamed not love so fond 415 could have an end) would seek an audience, 416 at some indulgent time, and try what shift 417 such matters may require. With joy they heard, 418 and wrought, assiduous, at their prince's plan. 419 But what can cheat true love? The Queen foreknew 420 his stratagem, and all the coming change 421 perceived ere it began. Her jealous fear 422 counted no hour secure. That unclean tongue 423 of Rumor told her fevered heart the fleet 424 was fitting sensus? 409 quosve dabas gemitus, cum litora fervere late 410 prospiceres arce ex summa, totumque videres 411 misceri ante oculos tantis clamoribus aequor? 412 Improbe Amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis? 413 Ire iterum in lacrimas, iterum temptare precando 414 cogitur, et supplex animos submittere amori, 415 ne quid inexpertum frustra moritura relinquat. 416 Anna, vides toto properari litore; circum 417 undique convenere; vocat iam carbasus auras, 418 puppibus et laeti nautae imposuere coronas. 419 Hunc ego si potui tantum sperare dolorem, 420 et perferre, soror, potero. Miserae hoc tamen unum	forth, and hastening to be gone. 425 Distractedly she raved, and passion-tossed 426 roamed through her city, like a Maenad roused 427 by the wild rout of Bacchus, when are heard 428 the third year's orgies, and the midnight scream 429 to cold Cithaeron calls the frenzied crew. 430 Finding Aeneas, thus her plaint she poured: 431 “Didst hope to hide it, false one, that such crime 432 was in thy heart,—to steal without farewell 433 out of my kingdom? Did our mutual joy 434 not move thee; nor thine own true promise given 435 once on a time? Nor Dido, who will die 436 a death of sorrow? Why compel thy ships 437 to brave the winter stars? Why off to sea 438 so fast through stormy skies? O, cruelty! 439 If Troy still stood, and if thou wert not bound 440 for alien shore unknown, wouldst steer for Troy 441 through yonder waste of waves? Is it from me 442 thou takest flight? O, by these flowing tears, 443 by thine own plighted word (for nothing more 444 my weakness left to miserable me), 445 by our poor marriage of imperfect vow, 446 if aught to me thou owest, if aught in me 447 ever have pleased thee—O, be merciful 448 to my low-fallen fortunes! I implore,

4.421	421 exsequere, Anna, mihi. Solam nam perfidus ille 422 te colere, arcanos etiam tibi credere sensus; 423 sola viri mollis aditus et tempora noras. 424 I, soror, atque hostem supplex adfare superbum: 425 non ego cum Danais Troianam exscindere gentem 426 Aulide iuravi, classemve ad Pergama misi, 427 nec patris Anchisae cineres Manisve revelli, 428 cur mea dicta neget duras demittere in auris. 429 Quo ruit? Extremum hoc miserae det munus amanti: 430 exspectet facilemque fugam ventosque ferentis. 431 Non iam coniugium antiquum, quod prodidit, oro, 432 nec pulchro ut Latio careat regnumque relinquat: 433 tempus inane peto, requiem spatiumque furori,	449 if place be left for prayer, thy purpose change! 450 Because of thee yon Libyan savages 451 and nomad chiefs are grown implacable, 452 and my own Tyrians hate me. Yes, for thee 453 my chastity was slain and honor fair, 454 by which alone to glory I aspired, 455 in former days. To whom dost thou in death 456 abandon me? my guest!—since but this name 457 is left me of a husband! Shall I wait 458 till fell Pygmalion, my brother, raze 459 my city walls? Or the Gaetulian king, 460 Iarbas, chain me captive to his car? . 461 O, if, ere thou hadst fled, I might but bear 462 some pledge of love to thee, and in these halls 463 watch some sweet babe Aeneas at his play, 464 whose face should be the memory of thine own — 465 I were not so forsaken, Iost, undone!”

	434 dum mea me victam doceat fortuna dolere. 435 Extremam hanc oro veniam— miserere sororis— 436 quam mihi cum dederit, cumulatam morte remittam. 437 Talibus orabat, talisque miserrima fletus 438 fertque refertque soror: sed nullis ille movetur 439 fletibus, aut voces ullas tractabilis audit; 440 fata obstant, placidasque viri deus obstruit auris. 441 Ac, velut annoso validam cum robore quercum 442 Alpini Boreae nunc hinc nunc flatibus illinc 443 eruere inter se certant; it stridor, et altae 444 consternunt terram concusso stipite frondes; 445 ipsa haeret scopulis, et, quantum vertice ad auras 446 aetherias, tantum radice in Tartara tendit: 447 haud secus adsiduis hinc atque hinc vocibus heros 448 tunditur, et magno persentit pectore curas; 449 mens immota manet; lacrimae volvuntur inanes. 450 Tum vero infelix fatis exterrita Dido
4.451	451 mortem orat; taedet caeli convexa tueri. 452 Quo magis inceptum peragat lucemque relinquat, 453 vidit, turicremis cum dona imponeret aris, 454 horrendum dictu, latices nigrescere sacros, 455 fusaque in obscenum se vertere vina cruorem. 456 Hoc visum nulli, non ipsi effata sorori. 457 Praeterea fuit in tectis de marmore templum 458 coniugis antiqui, miro quod honore colebat, 459 velleribus niveis et festa fronde revinctum: 460 hinc exaudiri voces et verba vocantis 461 visa viri, nox cum terras obscura teneret; 462 solaque culminibus ferali carmine bubo

	463 saepe queri et longas in fletum ducere voces; 464 multaque praeterea vatum praedicta priorum 465 terribili monitu horrificant. Agit ipse furentem 466 in somnis ferus Aeneas; semperque relinqui 467 sola sibi, semper longam incomitata videtur 468 ire viam, et Tyrios deserta quaerere terra. 469 Eumenidum veluti demens videt agmina Pentheus, 470 et solem geminum et duplicis se ostendere Thebas; 471 aut Agamemnonius scaenis agitatus Orestes 472 armatam facibus matrem et serpentibus atris 473 cum fugit, ultricesque sedent in limine Dirae. 474 Ergo ubi concepit furias evicta dolore 475 decrevitque mori, tempus secum ipsa modumque 476 exigit, et, maestam dictis adgressa sororem, 477 consilium voltu tegit, ac spem fronte serenat: 478 Inveni, germana, viam—gratare sorori— 479 quae mihi reddat eum, vel eo me solvat amantem. 480 Oceani finem iuxta solemque cadentem
4.481	481 ultimus Aethiopum locus est, ubi maxumus Atlas 482 axem humero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum: 483 hinc mihi Massylae gentis monstrata sacerdos, 484 Hesperidum templi custos, epulasque draconi 485 quae dabat, et sacros servabat in arbore ramos, 486 spargens umida mella soporiferumque papaver. 487 Haec se carminibus promittit solvere mentes 488 quas velit, ast aliis duras immittere curas, 489 sistere aquam fluviis, et vertere sidera retro; 490 nocturnosque movet Manis: mugire videbis 491 sub pedibus terram, et descendere montibus ornos.	508 She with averted eyes and glance that rolled 509 speechless this way and that, had listened long 510 to his reply, till thus her rage broke forth: 511 “No goddess gave thee birth. No Dardanus 512 begot thy sires. But on its breast of stone 513 Caucasus bore thee, and the tigresses 514 of fell Hyrcania to thy baby lip 515 their udders gave. Why should I longer show 516 a lying smile? What worse can I endure? 517 Did my tears draw one sigh? Did he once drop 518 his stony stare? or did he yield a tear 519 to my lament, or pity this fond heart? 520 Why set my wrongs in order? Juno, now, 521 and Jove, the son of Saturn, heed no more 522 where justice lies. No trusting heart is safe 523 in all this world. That waif and castaway 524 I found in beggary and gave him share— 525 fool that I was!— in my own royal glory. 526 His Iost fleet

	492 Testor, cara, deos et te, germana, tuumque 493 dulce caput, magicas invitam accingier artes. 494 Tu secreta pyram tecto interiore sub auras 495 erige, et arma viri, thalamo quae fixa reliquit 496 impius, exuviasque omnis, lectumque iugalem, 497 quo perii, superimponas: abolere nefandi 498 cuncta viri monumenta iuvat, monstratque sacerdos. 499 Haec effata silet; pallor simul occupat ora. 500 Non tamen Anna novis praetexere funera sacris 501 germanam credit, nec tantos mente furores 502 concipit, aut graviora timet, quam morte Sychaei: 503 ergo iussa parat. 504 At regina, pyra penetrali in sede sub auras 505 erecta ingenti taedis atque ilice secta, 506 intenditque locum sertis, et fronde coronat 507 funerea; super exuvias ensemque relictum 508 effigiemque toro locat, haud ignara futuri. 509 Stant arae circum, et crines effusa sacerdos 510 ter centum tonat ore deos, Erebumque Chaosque,	and his sorry crews I steered 527 from death away. O, how my fevered soul 528 unceasing raves! Forsooth Apollo speaks! 529 His Lycian oracles! and sent by Jove 530 the messenger of Heaven on fleeting air 531 the ruthless bidding brings! Proud business 532 for gods, I trow, that such a task disturbs 533 their still abodes! I hold thee back no more, 534 nor to thy cunning speeches give the lie. 535 Begone! Sail on to Italy, thy throne, 536 through wind and wave! I pray that, if there be 537 any just gods of power, thou mayest drink down 538 death on the mid-sea rocks, and often call 539 with dying gasps on Dido's name—while I 540 pursue with vengeful fire. When cold death rends 541 the body from the breath, my ghost shall sit 542 forever in thy path. Full penalties 543 thy stubborn heart shall pay. They'll bring me never 544 in yon deep gulf of death of all thy woe.” 545 Abrupt her utterance ceased; and sick at heart 546 she fled the light of day, as if to shrink 547 from human eyes, and left Aeneas there 548 irresolute with horror, while his soul 549 framed many a vain reply. Her swooning shape 550 her maidens to a marble chamber bore 551 and on her couch the helpless limbs reposed.
4.511	511 tergeminamque Hecaten, tria virginis ora Dianae. 512 Sparserat et latices simulatos fontis Averni, 513 falcibus et messae ad lunam quaeruntur aënis 514 pubentes herbae nigri cum lacte veneni; 515 quaeritur et nascentis equi de fronte revolsus 516 et matri praereptus amor. 517 Ipsa mola manibusque piis altaria iuxta, 518 unum exuta pedem vinclis, in veste recincta, 519 testatur moritura deos et conscia fati 520 sidera; tum, si quod non aequo foedere amantes 521 curae numen habet iustumque memorque, precatur.

	522 Nox erat, et placidum carpebant fessa soporem 523 corpora per terras, silvaeque et saeva quierant 524 aequora: cum medio volvuntur sidera lapsu, 525 cum tacet omnis ager, pecudes pictaeque volucres, 526 quaeque lacus late liquidos, quaeque aspera dumis 527 rura tenent, somno positae sub nocte silenti 528 . 529 At non infelix animi Phoenissa, nec umquam 530 Solvitur in somnos, oculisve aut pectore noctem 531 accipit: ingeminant curae, rursusque resurgens 532 saevit amor, magnoque irarum fluctuat aestu. 533 Sic adeo insistit, secumque ita corde volutat: 534 En, quid ago? Rursusne procos inrisa priores 535 experiar, Nomadumque petam conubia supplex, 536 quos ego sim totiens iam dedignata maritos? 537 Iliacas igitur classes atque ultima Teucrum 538 iussa sequar? Quiane auxilio iuvat ante levatos, 539 et bene apud memores veteris stat gratia facti? 540 Quis me autem, fac velle, sinet, ratibusve superbis
4.541	541 invisam accipiet? Nescis heu, perdita, necdum 542 Laomedonteae sentis periuria gentis? 543 Quid tum, sola fuga nautas comitabor ovantes, 544 an Tyriis omnique manu stipata meorum 545 inferar, et, quos Sidonia vix urbe revelli, 546 rursus agam pelago, et ventis dare vela iubebo? 547 Quin morere, ut merita es, ferroque averte dolorem. 548 Tu lacrimis evicta meis, tu prima furentem 549 his, germana, malis oneras atque obicis hosti. 550 Non licuit thalami expertem sine crimine vitam 551 degere, more ferae, tales nec	552 Aeneas, faithful to a task divine, 553 though yearning sore to remedy and soothe 554 such misery, and with the timely word 555 her grief assuage, and though his burdened heart 556 was weak because of love, while many a groan 557 rose from his bosom, yet no whit did fail 558 to do the will of Heaven, but of his fleet 559 resumed command. The Trojans on the shore 560 ply well their task and push into the sea 561 the lofty ships. Now floats the shining keel, 562 and oars they bring all leafy from the grove, 563 with oak half-hewn, so hurried was the flight. 564 Behold them how they haste —from every gate 565 forth-streaming! —just as when a heap of corn 566 is thronged with ants, who, knowing winter nigh, 567 refill their granaries; the long black line 568 runs o'er the

	tangere curas! 552 Non servata fides cineri promissa Sychaeo! 553 Tantos illa suo rumpebat pectore questus. 554 Aeneas celsa in puppi, iam certus eundi, 555 carpebat somnos, rebus iam rite paratis. 556 Huic se forma dei voltu redeuntis eodem 557 obtulit in somnis, rursusque ita visa monere est— 558 omnia Mercurio similis, vocemque coloremque 559 et crinis flavos et membra decora iuventa: 560 Nate dea, potes hoc sub casu ducere somnos, 561 nec, quae te circum stent deinde pericula, cernis, 562 demens, nec Zephyros audis spirare secundos? 563 Illa dolos dirumque nefas in pectore versat, 564 certa mori, varioque irarum fluctuat aestu. 565 Non fugis hinc praeceps, dum praecipitare potestas? 566 Iam mare turbari trabibus, saevasque videbis 567 conlucere faces, iam fervere litora flammis, 568 si te his attigerit terris Aurora morantem. 569 Heia age, rumpe moras. Varium et mutabile semper 570 femina. Sic fatus, nocti se immiscuit atrae.	levels, and conveys the spoil 569 in narrow pathway through the grass; a part 570 with straining and assiduous shoulder push 571 the kernels huge; a part array the file, 572 and whip the laggards on; their busy track 573 swarms quick and eager with unceasing toil. 574 O Dido, how thy suffering heart was wrung, 575 that spectacle to see! What sore lament 576 was thine, when from the towering citadel 577 the whole shore seemed alive, the sea itself 578 in turmoil with loud cries! Relentless Love, 579 to what mad courses may not mortal hearts 580 by thee be driven? Again her sorrow flies 581 to doleful plaint and supplication vain;
4.571	571 Tum vero Aeneas, subitis exterritus umbris, 572 corripit e somno corpus, sociosque fatigat: 573 Praecipites vigilate, viri, et considite transtris; 574 solvite vela citi. Deus aethere missus ab alto 575 festinare fugam tortosque incidere funes 576 ecce iterum stimulat. Sequimur te, sancte deorum, 577 quisquis es, imperioque iterum paremus ovantes. 578 Adsis o placidusque iuves, et sidera caelo 579 dextra feras. Dixit, vaginaque eripit ensem 580 fulmineum, strictoque ferit	794 Aeneas, by that fleeting vision struck 795 with an exceeding awe, straightway leaped forth 796 from slumber's power, and to his followers cried : 797 “Awake, my men! Away! Each to his place 798 upon the thwarts! Unfurl at once the sails! 799 A god from heaven a second time sent down 800 urges our instant flight and bids us cut 801 the twisted cords. Whatever be thy name, 802 behold, we come, O venerated Power! 803 Again with joy we follow! Let thy grace 804 assist us as we go! And may thy power 805 bring none but stars benign across our sky.” 806 So saying, from its scabbard forth he flashed 807 the lightning of his sword, with naked blade 808 striking the hawsers free. Like ardor seized 809

	retinacula ferro. 581 Idem omnes simul ardor habet, rapiuntque ruuntque; 582 litora deseruere; latet sub classibus aequor; 583 adnixi torquent spumas et caerula verrunt. 584 Et iam prima novo spargebat lumine terras 585 Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile. 586 Regina e speculis ut primum albescere lucem 587 vidit, et aequatis classem procedere velis, 588 litoraque et vacuos sensit sine remige portus, 589 terque quaterque manu pectus percussa decorum, 590 flaventesque abscissa comas, Pro Iuppiter, ibit 591 hic ait et nostris inluserit advena regnis? 592 Non arma expedient, totaque ex urbe sequentur, 593 deripientque rates alii navalibus? Ite, 594 ferte citi flammas, date vela, impellite remos!— 595 Quid loquor, aut ubi sum? Quae mentem insania mutat? 596 Infelix Dido, nunc te facta impia tangunt. 597 Tum decuit, cum sceptra dabas.— En dextra fidesque, 598 quem secum patrios aiunt portare Penates, 599 quem subiisse umeris confectum aetate parentem! 600 Non potui abreptum divellere corpus, et undis	on all his willing men, who raced and ran; 810 and, while their galleys shadowed all the sea, 811 clean from the shore they scudded, with strong strokes 812 sweeping the purple waves and crested foam.
4.601	601 spargere? Non socios, non ipsum absumere ferro 602 Ascanium, patriisque epulandum ponere mensis?— 603 Verum anceps pugnae fuerat fortuna:—fuisset. 604 Quem metui moritura? Faces in castra tulissem, 605 implessemque foros flammis, natumque patremque 606 cum genere extinxem, memet super ipsa dedissem. 607 Sol, qui terrarum flammis opera omnia lustras, 608 tuque harum interpres curarum et conscia Iuno, 609 nocturnisque Hecate triviis ululata	582 again her pride to tyrant Love bows down 583 lest, though resolved to die, she fail to prove 584 each hope of living: “O Anna, dost thou see 585 yon busy shore? From every side they come. 586 their canvas wooes the winds, and o'er each prow 587 the merry seamen hang their votive flowers. 588 Dear sister, since I did forebode this grief, 589 I shall be strong to bear it. One sole boon 590 my sorrow asks thee, Anna! Since of thee, 591 thee only, did that traitor make a friend, 592 and trusted thee with what he hid so deep — 593 the feelings of his heart; since thou alone 594 hast known what way, what hour the man would yield 595 to per urbes, 610 et Dirae ultrices, et di morientis Elissae, 611 accipite haec, meritumque malis advertite numen, 612 et nostras audite preces. Si tangere portus 613 infandum caput ac terris adnare necesse est, 614 et sic fata Iovis poscunt, hic terminus haeret: 615 at bello audacis populi vexatus et armis, 616 finibus extorris, complexu avulsus Iuli, 617 auxilium imploret, videatque indigna suorum 618 funera; nec, cum se sub leges pacis iniquae 619 tradiderit, regno aut optata luce fruatur, 620 sed cadat ante diem, mediaque inhumatus harena. 621 Haec precor, hanc vocem extremam cum sanguine fundo. 622 Tum vos, o Tyrii, stirpem et genus omne futurum 623 exercete odiis, cinerique haec mittite nostro 624 munera. Nullus amor populis, nec foedera sunto. 625 Exoriare aliquis nostris ex ossibus ultor, 626 qui face Dardanios ferroque sequare colonos, 627 nunc, olim, quocumque dabunt se tempore vires. 628 Litora litoribus contraria, fluctibus undas 629 imprecor, arma armis; pugnent ipsique nepotesque. 630 Haec ait, et partis animum versabat in omnis,	soft persuasion—therefore, sister, haste, 596 and humbly thus implore our haughty foe: 597 ‘I was not with the Greeks what time they swore 598 at Aulis to cut off the seed of Troy; 599 I sent no ships to Ilium. Pray, have I 600 profaned Anchises' tomb, or vexed his shade?’ 601 Why should his ear be deaf and obdurate 602 to all I say? What haste? May he not make 603 one last poor offering to her whose love 604 is only pain? O, bid him but delay 605 till flight be easy and the winds blow fair. 606 I plead no more that bygone marriage-vow 607 by him forsworn, nor ask that he should lose 608 his beauteous Latium and his realm to be. 609 Nothing but time I crave! to give repose 610 and more room to this fever, till my fate 611 teach a crushed heart to sorrow. I implore 612 this last grace. (To thy sister's grief be kind!) 613 I will requite with increase, till I die.” 614 Such plaints, such prayers, again and yet again, 615 betwixt the twain the sorrowing sister bore. 616 But no words move, no lamentations bring 617 persuasion to his soul; decrees of Fate 618 oppose, and some wise god obstructs the way 619 that finds the hero's ear. Oft-times around 620 the aged strength of some stupendous oak 621 the rival blasts of wintry Alpine winds 622 smite with alternate wrath: Ioud is the roar, 623 and from its rocking top the broken boughs 624 are strewn along the ground; but to the crag 625 steadfast it ever clings; far as toward heaven 626 its giant crest uprears, so deep below 627 its roots reach down to Tartarus:—not less 628 the hero by unceasing wail and cry 629 is smitten sore, and in his mighty heart 630 has many a pang, while his serene intent 631 abides unmoved, and tears gush forth in vain.

4.631	631 invisam quaerens quam primum abrumpere lucem. 632 Tum breviter Barcen nutricem adfata Sychaei; 633 namque suam patria antiqua cinis ater habebat: 634 Annam cara mihi nutrix huc siste sororem; 635 dic corpus properet fluviali spargere lympha, 636 et pecudes secum et monstrata piacula ducat:	632 Then wretched Dido, by her doom appalled, 633 asks only death. It wearies her to see 634 the sun in heaven. Yet that she might hold fast 635 her dread resolve to quit the light of day, 636 behold, when on an incense-breathing shrine 637 her offering was laid—O fearful tale!— 638 the pure libation blackened, and the wine 639 flowed like polluting gore. She told the sight 640 to none, not even to her sister's ear. 641 A second sign was

	637 sic veniat; tuque ipsa pia tege tempora vitta. 638 Sacra Iovi Stygio, quae rite incepta paravi, 639 perficere est animus, finemque imponere curis, 640 Dardaniique rogum capitis permittere flammae. 641 Sic ait: illa gradum studio celerabat anili. 642 At trepida, et coeptis immanibus effera Dido, 643 sanguineam volvens aciem, maculisque trementis 644 interfusa genas, et pallida morte futura, 645 interiora domus inrumpit limina, et altos 646 conscendit furibunda rogos, ensemque recludit 647 Dardanium, non hos quaesitum munus in usus. 648 Hic, postquam Iliacas vestes notumque cubile 649 conspexit, paulum lacrimis et mente morata, 650 incubuitque toro, dixitque novissima verba: 651 Dulces exuviae, dum fata deusque sinebant, 652 accipite hanc animam, meque his exsolvite curis. 653 Vixi, et, quem dederat cursum fortuna, peregi, 654 et nunc magna mei sub terras ibit imago. 655 Urbem praeclaram statui; mea moenia vidi; 656 ulta virum, poenas inimico a fratre recepi; 657 felix, heu nimium felix, si litora tantum 658 numquam Dardaniae tetigissent nostra carinae! 659 Dixit, et, os impressa toro, Moriemur inultae, 660 sed moriamur ait. Sic, sic iuvat ire sub umbras:	given: for in her house 642 a marble altar to her husband's shade, 643 with garlands bright and snowy fleeces dressed, 644 had fervent worship; here strange cries were heard 645 as if her dead spouse called while midnight reigned, 646 and round her towers its inhuman song 647 the lone owl sang, complaining o'er and o'er 648 with lamentation and long shriek of woe. 649 Forgotten oracles by wizards told 650 whisper old omens dire. In dreams she feels 651 cruel Aeneas goad her madness on, 652 and ever seems she, friendless and alone, 653 some lengthening path to travel, or to seek 654 her Tyrians through wide wastes of barren lands. 655 Thus frantic Pentheus flees the stern array 656 of the Eumenides, and thinks to see 657 two noonday lights blaze oer his doubled Thebes; 658 or murdered Agamemnon's haunted son, 659 Orestes, flees his mother's phantom scourge 660 of flames and serpents foul, while at his door 661 avenging horrors wait. Now sorrow-crazed
4.661	661 Hauriat hunc oculis ignem crudelis ab alto 662 Dardanus, et nostrae secum ferat omina mortis. 663 Dixerat; atque illam media inter talia ferro 664 conlapsam aspiciunt comites, ensemque cruore 665 spumantem, sparsasque manus. It clamor ad alta	662 and by her grief undone, resolved on death, 663 the manner and the time her secret soul 664 prepares, and, speaking to her sister sad, 665 she masks in cheerful calm her fatal will: 666 “I know a way—O, wish thy sister joy!— 667 to bring him back to Iove, or set me free. 668 On Ocean's bound and next the setting sun 669 lies the last Aethiop land, where Atlas tall 670 lifts

	666 atria; concussam bacchatur Fama per urbem. 667 Lamentis gemituque et femineo ululatu 668 tecta fremunt; resonat magnis plangoribus aether, 669 non aliter, quam si immissis ruat hostibus omnis 670 Karthago aut antiqua Tyros, flammaeque furentes 671 culmina perque hominum volvantur perque deorum. 672 Audiit exanimis, trepidoque exterrita cursu 673 unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnis 674 per medios ruit, ac morientem nomine clamat: 675 Hoc illud, germana, fuit? Me fraude petebas? 676 Hoc rogus iste mihi, hoc ignes araeque parabant? 677 Quid primum deserta querar? Comitemne sororem 678 sprevisti moriens? Eadem me ad fata vocasses: 679 idem ambas ferro dolor, atque eadem hora tulisset. 680 His etiam struxi manibus, patriosque vocavi 681 voce deos, sic te ut posita crudelis abessem? 682 Exstinxti te meque, soror, populumque patresque 683 Sidonios urbemque tuam. Date volnera lymphis 684 abluam, et, extremus si quis super halitus errat, 685 ore legam. Sic fata, gradus evaserat altos, 686 semianimemque sinu germanam amplexa fovebat 687 cum gemitu, atque atros siccabat veste cruores. 688 Illa, graves oculos conata attollere, rursus 689 deficit; infixum stridit sub pectore vulnus. 690 Ter sese attollens cubitoque adnixa levavit;	on his shoulder the wide wheel of heaven, 671 studded with burning stars. From thence is come 672 a witch, a priestess, a Numidian crone, 673 who guards the shrine of the Hesperides 674 and feeds the dragon; she protects the fruit 675 of that enchanting tree, and scatters there 676 her slumb'rous poppies mixed with honey-dew. 677 Her spells and magic promise to set free 678 what hearts she will, or visit cruel woes 679 on men afar. She stops the downward flow 680 of rivers, and turns back the rolling stars; 681 on midnight ghosts she calls: her vot'ries hear 682 earth bellowing loud below, while from the hills 683 the ash-trees travel down. But, sister mine, 684 thou knowest, and the gods their witness give, 685 how little mind have I to don the garb 686 of sorcery. Depart in secret, thou, 687 and bid them build a lofty funeral pyre 688 inside our palalce-wall, and heap thereon 689 the hero's arms, which that blasphemer hung 690 within my chamber; every relic bring, 691 and chiefly that ill-omened nuptial bed,
4.691	691 ter revoluta toro est, oculisque errantibus alto 692 quaesivit caelo lucem, ingemuitque reperta. 693 Tum Iuno omnipotens, longum miserata dolorem 694 difficilisque obitus, Irim demisit Olympo,	692 my death and ruin! For I must blot out 693 all sight and token of this husband vile. 694 'T is what the witch commands.” She spoke no more, 695 and pallid was her brow. Yet Anna's mind 696 knew not what web of death her sister wove 697 by these strange rites, nor what such frenzy dares; 698

	695 quae luctantem animam nexosque resolveret artus. 696 Nam quia nec fato, merita nec morte peribat, 697 sed misera ante diem, subitoque accensa furore, 698 nondum illi flavum Proserpina vertice crinem 699 abstulerat, Stygioque caput damnaverat Orco. 700 Ergo Iris croceis per caelum roscida pennis, 701 mille trahens varios adverso sole colores, 702 devolat, et supra caput adstitit: Hunc ego Diti 703 sacrum iussa fero, teque isto corpore solvo. 704 Sic ait, et dextra crinem secat: omnis et una 705 dilapsus calor, atque in ventos vita recessit.	nor feared she worse than when Sichaeus died, 699 but tried her forth the errand to fulfil. 700 Soon as the funeral pyre was builded high 701 in a sequestered garden, looming huge 702 with boughs of pine and faggots of cleft oak, 703 the queen herself enwreathed it with sad flowers 704 and boughs of mournful shade; and crowning all 705 she laid on nuptial bed the robes and sword 706 by him abandoned; and stretched out thereon 707 a mock Aeneas;—but her doom she knew. 708 Altars were there; and with loose locks unbound 709 the priestess with a voice of thunder called 710 three hundred gods, Hell, Chaos, the three shapes 711 of triple Hecate, the faces three 712 of virgin Dian. She aspersed a stream 713 from dark Avernus drawn, she said; soft herbs 714 were cut by moonlight with a blade of bronze, 715 oozing black poison-sap; and she had plucked 716 that philter from the forehead of new foal 717 before its dam devours. Dido herself, 718 sprinkling the salt meal, at the altar stands; 719 one foot unsandalled, and with cincture free, 720 on all the gods and fate-instructed stars, 721 foreseeing death, she calls. But if there be 722 some just and not oblivious power on high, 723 who heeds when lovers plight unequal vow, 724 to that god first her supplications rise.
5.1	1 Interea medium Aeneas iam classe tenebat 2 certus iter, fluctusque atros Aquilone secabat, 3 moenia respiciens, quae iam infelicis Elissae 4 conlucent flammis. Quae tantum accenderit ignem, 5 causa latet; duri magno sed amore dolores 6 polluto, notumque, furens quid femina possit, 7 triste per augurium Teucrorum pectora ducunt. 8 Ut pelagus tenuere rates, nec iam amplius ulla 9 occurrit tellus, maria undique et undique caelum, 10 olli caeruleus supra caput adstitit imber, 11 noctem hiememque ferens, et inhorruit unda tenebris. 12 Ipse gubernator puppi Palinurus ab alta:	1 Meanwhile Aeneas, now well launched away, 2 steered forth with all the fleet to open sea, 3 on his unswerving course, and ploughed the waves, 4 sped by a driving gale; but when his eyes 5 looked back on Carthage, they beheld the glare 6 of hapless Dido's fire. Not yet was known 7 what kindled the wild flames; but that the pang 8 of outraged love is cruel, and what the heart 9 of desperate woman dares, they knew too well, 10 and sad foreboding shook each Trojan soul. 11 Soon in mid-sea, beyond all chart of shore, 12 when only seas and skies were round their way, 13 full in the zenith loomed a purple cloud, 14 storm-laden, dark as night, and every wave 15 grew black and angry; from his Iofty seat 16 the helmsman Palinurus cried, “Alas! 17 What means this host of storms encircling heaven? 18 What, Neptune, wilt thou now?” He, having said, 19 bade reef and tighten, bend to 13 Heu! quianam tanti cinxerunt aethera nimbi? 14 Quidve, pater Neptune, paras? Sic deinde locutus 15 colligere arma iubet validisque incumbere remis, 16 obliquatque sinus in ventum, ac talia fatur: 17 Magnanime Aenea, non, si mihi Iuppiter auctor 18 spondeat, hoc sperem Italiam contingere caelo. 19 Mutati transversa fremunt et vespere ab atro 20 consurgunt venti, atque in nubem cogitur aër. 21 Nec nos obniti contra, nec tendere tantum 22 sufficimus. Superat quoniam Fortuna, sequamur, 23 quoque vocat, vertamus iter. Nec litora longe 24 fida reor fraterna Erycis portusque Sicanos, 25 si modo rite memor servata remetior astra. 26 Tum pius Aeneas: Equidem sic poscere ventos 27 iamdudum et frustra cerno te tendere contra: 28 Flecte viam velis. An sit mihi gratior ulla, 29 quove magis fessas optem demittere naves, 30 quam quae Dardanium tellus mihi servat Acesten,	stronger stroke, 20 and slant sail to the wind; then spake again: 21 “High-souled Aeneas, not if Jove the King 22 gave happy omen, would I have good hope 23 of making Italy through yonder sky. 24 Athwart our course from clouded evening-star 25 rebellious winds run shifting, and the air 26 into a cloud-wrack rolls. Against such foes 27 too weak our strife and strain! Since now the hand 28 of Fortune triumphs, let us where she calls 29 obedient go. For near us, I believe, 30 lies Eryx' faithful and fraternal shore: 31 here are Sicilian havens, if my mind 32 of yon familiar stars have knowledge true.” 33 then good Aeneas: “For a friendly wind 34 long have I sued, and watched thee vainly strive. 35 Shift sail! What happier land for me and mine, 36 or for our storm-beat ships what safer shore, 37 than where Dardanian Acestes reigns; 38 the land whose faithful bosom cherishes 39 Anchises' ashes?” Heedful of his word, 40 they landward steer, while favoring zephyrs fill 41 the spreading sail. On currents swift and strong 42 the fleet is wafted, and with thankful soul 43 they moor on Sicily's familiar strand.

5.31	31 et patris Anchisae gremio complectitur ossa? 32 Haec ubi dicta, petunt portus, et vela secundi 33 intendunt Zephyri; fertur cita gurgite classis, 34 et tandem laeti notae advertuntur harenae. 35 At procul ex celso miratus vertice montis 36 adventum sociasque rates occurrit Acestes, 37 horridus in iaculis et pelle Libystidis ursae, 38 Troïa Criniso conceptum flumine mater 39 quem genuit: veterum non immemor ille parentum 40 gratatur reduces, et gaza laetus agresti 41 excipit, ac fessos opibus solatur amicis.	44 From a far hill-top having seen with joy 45 the entering ships, and knowing them for friends, 46 good King Acestes ran to bid them hail. 47 Garbed in rough pelt of Libyan bear was he, 48 and javelins he bore, in sylvan guise: 49 for him the river-god Crimisus sired 50 of Trojan wife. Remembering in his heart 51 his ancient blood, he greeted with glad words 52 the wanderers returned; bade welcome to 53 his rude abundance, and with friendly gifts 54 their weariness consoled. The morrow morn, 55 soon as the new beams of a golden day 56 had banished every star, Aeneas called 57 a council of his followers on the shore, 58 and from a fair green hillock gave this word: 59 “Proud sons of Dardanus, whose lofty line 60 none but the gods began! This day fulfils 61 the annual cycle of revolving time, 62 since the dear relics

	42 Postera cum primo stellas Oriente fugarat 43 clara dies, socios in coetum litore ab omni 44 advocat Aeneas, tumulique ex aggere fatur: 45 Dardanidae magni, genus alto a sanguine divom, 46 annuus exactis completur mensibus orbis, 47 ex quo reliquias divinique ossa parentis 48 Condidimus terra maestasque sacravimus aras. 49 Iamque dies, nisi fallor, adest, quem semper acerbum, 50 semper honoratum—sic di voluistis —habebo. 51 Hunc ego Gaetulis agerem si Syrtibus exsul, 52 Argolicove mari deprensus et urbe Mycenae; 53 annua vota tamen sollemnisque ordine pompas 54 exsequerer, strueremque suis altaria donis. 55 Nunc ultro ad cineres ipsius et ossa parentis, 56 haud equidem sine mente, reor, sine numine divom, 57 adsumus et portus delati intramus amicos. 58 Ergo agite, et laetum cuncti celebremus honorem; 59 poscamus ventos; atque haec me sacra quotannis 60 urbe velit posita templis sibi ferre dicatis.	of my god-like sire 63 to earth we gave, and with dark offerings due 64 built altars sorrowful. If now I err not, 65 this is my day—ye gods have willed it so! — 66 for mourning and for praise. Should it befall 67 me exiled in Gaetulia's wilderness, 68 or sailing some Greek sea, or at the walls 69 of dire Mycenae, still would I renew 70 unfailing vows, and make solemnity 71 with thankful rites, and worshipful array, 72 at altars rich with gifts. But, lo, we come, 73 beyond all hope, where lie the very bones
5.61	61 Bina boum vobis Troia generatus Acestes 62 dat numero capita in naves; adhibete Penates 63 et patrios epulis et quos colit hospes Acestes. 64 Praeterea, si nona diem mortalibus almum 65 Aurora extulerit radiisque retexerit orbem, 66 prima citae Teucris ponam certamina classis; 67 quique pedum cursu valet, et qui viribus audax 68 aut iaculo incedit melior levibusque sagittis, 69 seu crudo fidit pugnam committere caestu, 70 cuncti adsint, meritaeque exspectent praemia palmae.	74 of my great sire. Nor did it come to pass 75 without divine intent and heavenly power, 76 that on these hospitable shores we stand. 77 Up, then! For we will make a festal day, 78 imploring lucky winds! O, may his spirit 79 grant me to build my city, where his shrines 80 forever shall receive perpetual vows 81 made in his name! This prince of Trojan line, 82 Acestes, upon every ship bestows 83 a pair of oxen. To our offerings call 84 the powers that bless the altars and the fires 85 of our ancestral hearth; and join with these 86 the gods of good Acestes. Presently, 87 when the ninth dawn shall bring its beam benign 88 to mortal men, and show the radiant world, 89 or all my Teucrian people I ordain 90 a holiday of games; the flying

	71 Ore favete omnes, et cingite tempora ramis. 72 Sic fatus, velat materna tempora myrto; 73 hoc Elymus facit, hoc aevi maturus Acestes, 74 hoc puer Ascanius, sequitur quos cetera pubes. 75 Ille e concilio multis cum milibus ibat 76 ad tumulum, magna medius comitante caterva. 77 Hic duo rite mero libans carchesia Baccho 78 fundit humi, duo lacte novo, duo sanguine sacro, 79 purpureosque iacit flores, ac talia fatur: 80 Salve, sancte parens: iterum salvete, recepti 81 nequiquam cineres, animaeque umbraeque paternae. 82 Non licuit fines Italos fataliaque arva, 83 nec tecum Ausonium (quicumque est) quaerere Thybrim. 84 Dixerat haec, adytis cum lubricus anguis ab imis 85 septem ingens gyros, septena volumina traxit, 86 amplexus placide tumulum lapsusque per aras, 87 caeruleae cui terga notae, maculosus et auro 88 squamam incendebat fulgor, ceu nubibus arcus 89 mille iacit varios adverso sole colores. 90 Obstipuit visu Aeneas. Ille agmine longo	ships 91 shall first contend; then swiftest runners try 92 a foot-race; after that the champions bold 93 who step forth for a cast of javelins, 94 or boast the soaring arrow; or fear not 95 the boxing-bout, with gauntlet of thick thongs. 96 This summons is for all; let all have hope 97 to earn some noble palm! And from this hour 98 speak but well-boding words, and bind your brows 99 with garlands green." So saying, he twined a wreath 100 of his own mother's myrtle-tree, to shade 101 his sacred brow; the hero Helymus, 102 and King Acestes for his tresses gray, 103 like coronals took on; Ascanius
5.91	91 tandem inter pateras et levia pocula serpens 92 libavitque dapes, rursusque innoxius imo 93 successit tumulo, et depasta altaria liquit. 94 Hoc magis inceptos genitori instaurat honores, 95 incertus, geniumne loci famulumne parentis 96 esse putet: caedit binas de more bidentes, 97 totque sues, totidem nigrantis terga iuvencos; 98 vinaque fundebat pateris, animamque vocabat 99 Anchisae magni Manisque Acheronte remissos.	104 and all the warrior youth like emblems wore. 105 Then in th' attendant throng conspicuous, 106 with thousands at his side, the hero moved 107 from place of council to his father's tomb. 108 There on the ground he poured libation due, 109 two beakers of good wine, of sweet milk two, 110 two of the victim's blood—and scattered flowers 111 of saddest purple stain, while thus he prayed: 112 "Hail, hallowed sire! And hail, ye ashes dear 113 of him I vainly saved! O soul and shade 114 of my blest father! Heaven to us denied 115 to find together that predestined land 116 of Italy, or our Ausonian stream 117 of Tiber—ah! but where?" He scarce had said, 118 when

	100 Nec non et socii, quae cuique est copia, laeti 101 dona ferunt, onerant aras, mactantque iuvencos; 102 ordine aena locant alii, fusique per herbam 103 subiciunt veribus prunas et viscera torrent. 104 Exspectata dies aderat, nonamque serena 105 Auroram Phaethontis equi iam luce vehebant, 106 famaque finitimos et clari nomen Acestae 107 excierat; laeto complerant litora coetu, 108 visuri Aeneadas, pars et certare parati. 109 Munera principio ante oculos circoque locantur 110 in medio, sacri tripodes viridesque coronae, 111 et palmae pretium victoribus, armaque et ostro 112 perfusae vestes, argenti aurique talenta; 113 et tuba commissos medio canit aggere ludos. 114 Prima pares ineunt gravibus certamina remis 115 quattuor ex omni delectae classe carinae. 116 Velocem Mnestheus agit acri remige Pristim, 117 mox Italus Mnestheus, genus a quo nomine Memmi; 118 ingentemque Gyas ingenti mole Chimaeram, 119 urbis opus, triplici pubes quam Dardana versu 120 impellunt, terno consurgunt ordine remi;	from the central shrine a gliding snake, 119 coiled seven-fold in seven spirals wide, 120 twined round the tomb and trailed innocuous o'er 121 the very altars; his smooth back was flecked 122 with green and azure, and his changeful scales 123 gleamed golden, as the cloud-born rainbow flings 124 its thousand colors from th' opposing sun. 125 Aeneas breathless watched the serpent wind 126 among the bowls and cups of polished rim, 127 tasting the sacred feast; where, having fed, 128 back to the tomb all harmless it withdrew. 129 Then with new zeal his sacrifice he brings 130 in honor of his sire; for he must deem 131 that serpent the kind genius of the place, 132 or of his very father's present shade 133 some creature ministrant. Two lambs he slew,
5.121	121 Sergestusque, domus tenet a quo Sergia nomen, 122 Centauro invehitur magna, Scyllaque Cloanthus 123 caerulea, genus unde tibi, Romane Cluenti. 124 Est procul in pelago saxum spumantia contra 125 litora, quod tumidis submersum tunditur olim 126 fluctibus, hiberni condunt ubi sidera cori; 127 tranquillo silet, immotaque attollitur unda 128 campus, et apricis statio gratissima mergis.	134 the wonted way, two swine, and, sable-hued, 135 the yoke of bulls; from shallow bowl he poured 136 libation of the grape, and called aloud 137 on great Anchises' spirit, and his shade, 138 from Acheron set free. Then all the throng, 139 each from his separate store, heap up the shrines 140 with victims slain; some range in order fair 141 the brazen cauldrons; or along the grass, 142 scattered at ease, hold o'er the embers bright 143 the spitted flesh and roast it in the flames. 144 Arrived the wished-for day; through cloudless sky 145 the coursers of the Sun's bright-beaming car 146 bore upward

	129 Hic viridem Aeneas frondenti ex ilice metam 130 constituit signum nautis pater, unde reverti 131 scirent, et longos ubi circumflectere cursus. 132 Tum loca sorte legunt, ipsique in puppibus auro 133 ductores longe effulgent ostroque decori; 134 cetera populea velatur fronde iuventus, 135 nudatosque umeros oleo perfilsa nitescit. 136 Considunt transtris, intentaque brachia remis; 137 intenti exspectant signum, exsultantiaque haurit 138 corda pavor pulsans, laudumque arrecta cupido. 139 Inde, ubi clara dedit sonitum tuba, finibus omnes, 140 haud mora, prosiluere suis; ferit aethera clamor 141 nauticus, adductis spumant freta versa lacertis. 142 Infindunt pariter sulcos, totumque dehiscit 143 convulsum remis rostrisque tridentibus aequor. 144 Non tam praecipites biiugo certamine campum 145 corripuere, ruuntque effusi carcere currus, 146 nec sic immissis aurigae undantia lora 147 concussere iugis pronique in verbera pendent. 148 Tum plausu fremituque virum studiisque faventum 149 consonat omne nemus, vocemque inclusa volutant 150 litora, pulsati colles clamore resultant.	the ninth morn. The neighboring folk 147 thronged eager to the shore; some hoped to see 148 Aeneas and his warriors, others fain 149 would their own prowess prove in bout and game. 150 Conspicuous lie the rewards, ranged in sight 151 in the mid-circus; wreaths of laurel green, 152 the honored tripod, coronals of palm 153 for conquerors' brows, accoutrements of war, 154 rare robes of purple stain, and generous weight 155 of silver and of gold. The trumpet's call 156 proclaimed from lofty mound the opening games.
5.151	151 Effugit ante alios primisque elabitur undis 152 turbam inter fremitumque Gyas; quem deinde Cloanthus 153 consequitur, melior remis, sed pondere pinus 154 tarda tenet. Post hos aequo discrimine Pristis 155 Centaurusque locum tendunt superare priorem; 156 et nunc Pristis habet, nunc victam praeterit ingens 157 Centaurus, nunc una ambae iunctisque feruntur	157 First, side by side, with sturdy, rival oars, 158 four noble galleys, pride of all the fleet, 159 come forward to contend. The straining crew 160 of Mnestheus bring his speedy Pristis on, — 161 Mnestheus in Italy erelong the sire 162 of Memmius' noble line. Brave Gyas guides 163 his vast Chimaera, a colossal craft, 164 a floating city, by a triple row 165 of Dardan sailors manned, whose banks of oars 166 in triple order rise. Sergestus, he 167 of whom the Sergian house shall after spring, 168 rides in his mighty Centaur.

	158 frontibus, et longa sulcant vada salsa carina. 159 Iamque propinquabant scopulo metamque tenebant, 160 cum princeps medioque Gyas in gurgite victor 161 rectorem navis compellat voce Menoeten: 162 Quo tantum mihi dexter abis? Huc dirige gressum; 163 litus ama, et laevas stringat sine palmula cautes; 164 altum alii teneant. Dixit; sed caeca Menoetes 165 saxa timens proram pelagi detorquet ad undas. 166 Quo diversus abis? iterum Pete saxa, Menoete! 167 cum clamore Gyas revocabat; et ecce Cloanthum 168 respicit instantem tergo, et propiora tenentem. 169 Ille inter navemque Gyae scopulosque sonantes 170 radit iter laevum interior, subitoque priorem 171 praeterit, et metis tenet aequora tuta relictis. 172 Tum vero exarsit iuveni dolor ossibus ingens, 173 nec lacrimis caruere genae, segnemque Menoeten, 174 oblitus decorisque sui sociumque salutis, 175 in mare praecipitem puppi deturbat ab alta; 176 ipse gubernaclo rector subit, ipse magister, 177 hortaturque viros, clavumque ad litora torquet. 178 At gravis, ut fundo vix tandem redditus imo est, 179 iam senior madidaque fluens in veste Menoetes 180 summa petit scopuli siccaque in rupe resedit.	Next in line, 169 on sky-blue Scylla proud Cloanthus rides — 170 whence thy great stem, Cluentius of Rome! 171 Fronting the surf-beat shore, far out at sea 172 rises a rock, which under swollen waves 173 lies buffeted unseen, when wintry storms 174 mantle the stars; but when the deep is calm, 175 lifts silently above the sleeping wave 176 its level field,—a place where haunt and play 177 flocks of the sea-birds, Iovers of the sun. 178 Here was the goal; and here Aeneas set 179 a green-leaved flex-tree, to be a mark 180 for every captain's eye, from whence to veer 181 the courses of their ships in sweeping curves 182 and speed them home. Now places in the line 183 are given by lot. Upon the lofty sterns 184 the captains ride, in beautiful array 185 of Tyriao purple and far-flaming gold; 186 the crews are poplar-crowned, the shoulders bare 187 rubbed well with glittering oil; their straining arms 188 make long reach to the oar, as on the thwarts 189 they sit attentive, listening for the call 190 of the loud trumpet; while with pride and fear 191 their hot hearts throb, impassioned for renown. 192 Soon pealed the signal clear; from all the line 193 instant the galleys bounded, and the air 194 rang to the rowers, shouting, while their arms 195 pulled every inch and flung the waves in foam; 196 deep cut the rival strokes; the surface fair 197 yawned wide beneath their blades and cleaving keels. 198 Not swifter scour the chariots o'er the plain, 199 sped headlong from the line behind their teams 200 of mated coursers, while each driver shakes
5.181	181 Ilium et labentem Teucri et risere natantem, 182 et salsos rident revomentem pectore fluctus. 183 Hic laeta extremis spes est accensa duobus, 184 Sergesto Mnestheique, Gyan superare morantem. 185 Sergestus capit ante locum scopuloque propinquat, 186 nec tota tamen ille prior praeeunte carina;	201 loose, rippling reins above his plunging pairs, 202 and o'er the lash leans far. With loud applause 203 vociferous and many an urgent cheer 204 the woodlands rang, and all the concave shores 205 back from the mountains took the Trojan cry 206 in answering song. Forth-flying from his peers, 207 while all the crowd acclaims, sped Gyas' keel 208 along the outmost wave. Cloanthus next 209 pushed hard upon, with stronger stroke of oars 210

	187 parte prior, partem rostro premit aemula Pristis. 188 At media socios incedens nave per ipsos 189 hortatur Mnestheus: Nunc, nunc insurgite remis, 190 Hectorei socii, Troiae quos sorte suprema 191 delegi comites; nunc illas promite vires, 192 nunc animos, quibus in Gaetulis Syrtibus usi, 193 Ionioque mari Maleaeque sequacibus undis. 194 Non iam prima peto Mnestheus, neque vincere certo; 195 quamquam O!—sed superent, quibus hoc, Neptune, dedisti; 196 extremos pudeat rediisse; hoc vincite, cives, 197 et prohibete nefas. Olli certamine summo 198 procumbunt; vastis tremit ictibus aerea puppis, 199 subtrahiturque solum; tum creber anhelitus artus 200 aridaque ora quatit, sudor fluit undique rivis. 201 Attulit ipse viris optatum casus honorem. 202 Namque furens animi dum proram ad saxa suburguet 203 interior, spatioque subit Sergestus iniquo, 204 infelix saxis in procurrentibus haesit. 205 Concussae cautes, et acuto in murice remi 206 obnixi crepuere, inlisaque prora pependit. 207 Consurgunt nautae et magno clamore morantur, 208 ferratasque trudes et acuta cuspide contos 209 expediunt, fractosque legunt in gurgite remos. 210 At laetus Mnestheus successuque acrior ipso	but heavier ship. At equal pace behind 211 the Pristis and the Centaur fiercely strive 212 for the third place. Now Pristis seems to lead, 213 now mightier Centaur past her flies, then both 214 ride on together, prow with prow, and cleave 215 long lines of foaming furrow with swift keels. 216 Soon near the rock they drew, and either ship 217 was making goal,—when Gyas, in the lead, 218 and winner of the half-course, Ioudly hailed 219 menoetes, the ship's pilot: “Why so far 220 to starboard, we? Keep her head round this way! 221 Hug shore! Let every oar-blade almost graze 222 that reef to larboard! Let the others take 223 the deep-sea course outside!” But while he spoke, 224 Menoetes, dreading unknown rocks below, 225 veered off to open sea. “Why steer so wide? 226 Round to the rock, Menoetes!” Gyas roared, — 227 again in vain, for looking back he saw 228 cloanthus hard astern, and ever nearer, 229 who, in a trice, betwixt the booming reef 230 and Gyas' galley, lightly forward thrust
5.211	211 agmine remorum celeri ventisque vocatis 212 prona petit maria et pelago decurrit aperto. 213 Qualis spelunca subito commota columba, 214 cui domus et dulces latebroso in pumice nidi, 215 fertur in ana volans, plausumque exterrita pennis	231 the beak of Scylla to the inside course, 232 and, quickly taking lead, flew past the goal 233 to the smooth seas beyond. Then wrathful grief 234 flamed in the warrior's heart, nor was his cheek 235 unwet with tears; and, reckless utterly 236 of his own honor and his comrades, lives, 237 he hurled poor, slack Menoetes from the poop 238 headlong upon the waters, while

	216 dat tecto ingentem, mox aere lapsa quieto 217 radit iter liquidum, celeres neque commovet alas: 218 sic Mnestheus, sic ipsa fuga secat ultima Pristis 219 aequora, sic illam fert impetus ipse volantem. 220 Et primum in scopulo luctantem deserit alto 221 Sergestum, brevibusque vadis frustraque vocantem 222 auxilia, et fractis discentem currere remis 223 Inde Gyan ipsamque ingenti mole Chimaeram 224 consequitur; cedit, quoniam spoliata magistro est. 225 Solus iamque ipso superest in fine Cloanthus: 226 quem petit, et summis adnixus viribus urguet. 227 Tum vero ingeminat clamor, cunctique sequentem 228 instigant studiis, resonatque fragoribus aether. 229 Hi proprium decus et partum indignantur honorem 230 ni teneant, vitamque volunt pro laude pacisci; 231 hos successus alit: possunt, quia posse videntur. 232 Et fors aequatis cepissent praemia rostris, 233 ni palmas ponto tendens utrasque Cloanthus 234 fudissetque preces, divosque in vota vocasset: 235 Di, quibus imperium est pelagi, quorum aequora curro, 236 vobis laetus ego hoc candentem in litore taurum 237 constituam ante aras, voti reus, extaque salsos 238 porriciam in fluctus et vina liquentia fundam. 239 Dixit, eumque imis sub fluctibus audiit omnis 240 Nereidum Phorcique chorus Panopeaque virgo,	himself, 239 pilot and master both, the helm assuming, 240 urged on his crew, and landward took his way. 241 But now, with heavy limbs that hardly won 242 his rescue from the deep, engulfing wave, 243 up the rude rock graybeard Menoetes climbed 244 with garment dripping wet, and there dropped down 245 upon the cliff's dry top. With laughter loud 246 the Trojan crews had watched him plunging, swimming, 247 and now to see his drink of bitter brine 248 spewed on the ground, the sailors laughed again.
5.241	241 et pater ipse manu magna Portunus euntem 242 impulit; illa Noto citius volucrique sagitta 243 ad terram fugit, et portu se condidit alto. 244 Tum satus Anchisa, cunctis ex more vocatis,	249 But Mnestheus and Sergestus, coming last, 250 have joyful hope enkindled in each heart 251 to pass the laggard Gyas. In the lead 252 Sergestus' ship shoots forth; and to the rock 253 runs boldly nigh; but not his whole long keel 254 may pass his rival; the projecting beak 255 is followed fast

	245 victorem magna praeconis voce Cloanthum 246 declarat viridique advelat tempora lauro, 247 muneraque in naves ternos optare iuvencos, 248 vinaque et argenti magnum dat ferre talentum. 249 Ipsis praecipuos ductoribus addit honores: 250 victori chlamydem auratam, quam plurima circum 251 purpura maeandro duplici Meliboea cucurrit, 252 intextusque puer frondosa regius Ida 253 veloces iaculo cervos cursuque fatigat, 254 acer, anhelanti similis, quem praepes ab Ida 255 sublimem pedibus rapuit Iovis armiger uncis; 256 longaevi palmas nequiquam ad sidera tendunt 257 custodes, saevitque canum latratus in auras. 258 At qui deinde locum tenuit virtute secundum, 259 levibus huic hamis consertam auroque trilicem 260 loricam, quam Demoleo detraxerat ipse 261 victor apud rapidum Simoënta sub Ilio alto, 262 donat habere viro, decus et tutamen in armis. 263 Vix illam famuli Phegeus Sagarisque ferebant 264 multiplicem, conixi umeris; indutus at olim 265 Demoleos cursu palantes Troas agebat. 266 Tertia dona facit geminos ex aere lebetas, 267 cymbiaque argento perfecta atque aspera signis. 268 Iamque adeo donati omnes opibusque superbi 269 puniceis ibant evincti tempora taenis, 270 cum saevo e scopulo multa vix arte revolsus,	by Pristis' emulous prow. 256 Then, striding straight amidships through his crew, 257 thus Mnestheus urged them on: “O Hector's friends! 258 Whom in the dying hours of Troy I chose 259 for followers! Now stand ye to your best! 260 Put forth the thews of valor that ye showed 261 in the Gaetulian Syrtes, or that sea 262 Ionian, or where the waves race by 263 the Malean promontory! Mnestheus now 264 hopes not to be the first, nor do I strive 265 for victory. O Father Neptune, give 266 that garland where thou wilt! But O, the shame 267 if we are last! Endure it not, my men! 268 The infamy refuse!” So, bending low, 269 they enter the home-stretch. Beneath their stroke 270 the brass-decked galley throbs, and under her 271 the sea-floor drops away. On, on they fly! 272 Parched are the panting lips, and sweat in streams 273 pours down their giant sides; but lucky chance 274 brought the proud heroes what their honor craved. 275 For while Sergestus furiously drove 276 his ship's beak toward the rock, and kept inside 277 the scanty passage, by his evil star 278 he grounded on the jutting reef; the cliffs
5.271	271 amissis remis atque ordine debilis uno, 272 inrisam sine honore ratem Sergestus agebat. 273 Qualis saepe viae deprensus in aggere serpens,	279 rang with the blow, and his entangled oars 280 grated along the jagged granite, while 281 the prow hung wrecked and helpless. With loud cry 282 upsprang the sailors, while the ship stood still, 283 and pushed off with

	274 aerea quem obliquum rota transiit, aut gravis ictu 275 seminecem liquit saxo lacerumque viator; 276 nequiquam longos fugiens dat corpore tortus, 277 parte ferox, ardensque oculis, et sibila colla 278 arduus attollens, pars volnere clauda retentat 279 nexantem nodis seque in sua membra plicantem: 280 tali remigio navis se tarda movebat; 281 vela facit tamen, et velis subit ostia plenis. 282 Sergestum Aeneas promisso munere donat, 283 servatam ob navem laetus sociosque reductos. 284 Olli serva datur, operum haud ignara Minervae, 285 Cressa genus, Pholoë, geminique sub ubere nati. 286 Hoc pius Aeneas misso certamine tendit 287 gramineum in campum, quem collibus undique curvis 288 cingebant silvae, mediaque in valle theatri 289 circus erat; quo se multis cum milibus heros 290 consessu medium tulit exstructoque resedit. 291 Hic, qui forte velint rapido contendere cursu, 292 invitat pretiis animos, et praemia ponit. 293 Undique conveniunt Teucri mixtique Sicani, 294 Nisus et Euryalus primi, 295 Euryalus forma insignis viridique iuventa, 296 Nisus amore pio pueri; quos deinde secutus 297 regius egregia Priami de stirpe Diores; 298 hunc Salius simul et Patron, quorum alter Acarnan, 299 alter ab Arcadio Tegeaeae sanguine gentis; 300 tum duo Trinacrii iuvenes, Helymus Panopesque,	long poles and pointed iron, 284 or snatched the smashed oars from the whirling tide. 285 Mnestheus exults; and, roused to keener strife 286 by happy fortune, with a quicker stroke 287 of each bright rank of oars, and with the breeze 288 his prayer implored, skims o'er the obedient wave 289 and sweeps the level main. Not otherwise 290 a startled dove, emerging o'er the fields 291 from secret cavern in the crannied hill 292 where her safe house and pretty nestlings lie, 293 soars from her nest, with whirring wings—but soon 294 through the still sky she takes her path of air 295 on pinions motionless. So Pristis sped 296 with Mnestheus, cleaving her last stretch of sea, 297 by her own impulse wafted. She outstripped 298 Sergestus first; for he upon the reef 299 fought with the breakers, desperately shouting 300 for help, for help in vain, with broken oars 301 contriving to move on. Then Mnestheus ran 302 past Gyas, in Chimaera's ponderous hulk, 303 of pilot now bereft; at last remains 304 Cloanthus his sole peer, whom he pursues 305 with a supreme endeavor. From the shore 306 burst echoing cheers that spur him to the chase, 307 and wild applause makes all the welkin ring. 308 The leaders now with eager souls would scorn
5.301	301 adsueti silvis, comites senioris Acestae; 302 multi praeterea, quos fama obscura recondit. 303 Aeneas quibus in mediis sic deinde	309 to lose their glory, and faint-hearted fail 310 to grasp a prize half-won, but fain would buy 311 honor with life itself; the followers too 312 are flushed with proud success, and feel

	locutus: 304 Accipite haec animis, laetasque advertite mentes: 305 nemo ex hoc numero mihi non donatus abibit. 306 Gnosia bina dabo levato lucida ferro 307 spicula caelatamque argento ferre bipennem; 308 omnibus hic erit unus honos. Tres praemia primi 309 accipient flavaque caput nectentur oliva. 310 Primus equum phaleris insignem victor habeto; 311 alter Amazoniam pharetram plenamque sagittis 312 Threïciis, lato quam circum amplectitur auro 313 balteus et tereti subnectit fibula gemma; 314 tertius Argolica hac galea contentus abito. 315 Haec ubi dicta, locum capiunt, signoque repente 316 corripiunt spatia audito, limenque relinquunt, 317 effusi nimbo similes, simul ultima signant. 318 Primus abit longeque ante omnia corpora Nisus 319 emicat, et ventis et fulminis ocior alis; 320 proximus huic, longo sed proxumus intervallo, 321 insequitur Salius; spatio post deinde relicto 322 tertius Euryalus: 323 Euryalumque Helymus sequitur; quo deinde sub ipso 324 ecce volat calcemque terit iam calce Diores, 325 incumbens umero, spatia et si plura supersint, 326 transeat elapsus prior, ambiguumque relinquat. 327 Iamque fere spatio extremo fessique sub ipsam 328 finem adventabant, levi cum sanguine Nisus 329 labitur infelix, caesis ut forte iuvencis 330 fusus humum viridisque super madefecerat herbas.	them strong 313 because their strength is proven. Both ships now 314 with indistinguishable prows had sped 315 to share one prize,—but with uplifted hands 316 spread o'er the sea, Cloanthus, suppliant, 317 called on the gods to bless his votive prayer: 318 “Ye gods who rule the waves, whose waters be 319 my pathway now; for you on yonder strand 320 a white bull at the altar shall be slain 321 in grateful tribute for a granted vow; 322 and o'er the salt waves I will scatter far 323 the entrails, and outpour the flowing wine.” 324 He spoke; and from the caverns under sea 325 Phorcus and virgin Panopea heard, 326 and all the sea-nymphs' choir; while with strong hand 327 the kindly God of Havens rose and thrust 328 the gliding ship along, that swifter flew 329 than south wind, or an arrow from the string, 330 and soon made land in haven safe and sure.
5.331	331 Hic iuvenis iam victor ovans vestigia presso 332 haud tenuit titubata solo, sed pronus in ipso	331 Aeneas then, assembling all to hear, 332 by a far-sounding herald's voice proclaimed 333 Cloanthus victor, and arrayed his brows 334 with the

	333 concidit immundoque fimo sacroque cruore. 334 Non tamen Euryali, non ille oblitus amorum; 335 nam sese opposuit Salio per lubrica surgens; 336 ille autem spissa iacuit revolutus harena. 337 Emicat Euryalus, et munere victor amici 338 prima tenet, plausuque volat fremituque secundo. 339 Post Helymus subit, et nunc tertia palma Diores. 340 Hic totum caveae consessum ingentis et ora 341 prima patrum magnis Salius clamoribus implet, 342 ereptumque dolo reddi sibi poscit honorem. 343 Tutatur favor Euryalum, lacrimaeque decorae, 344 gratior et pulchro veniens in corpore virtus. 345 Adiuvat et magna proclamat voce Diores, 346 qui subiit palmae, frustraque ad praemia venit 347 ultima, si primi Salio reddentur honores. 348 Tum pater Aeneas Vestra inquit munera vobis 349 certa manent, pueri, et palmam movet ordine nemo; 350 me liceat casus misereri insontis amici. 351 Sic fatus, tergum Gaetuli immane leonis 352 dat Salio, villis onerosum atque unguibus aureis. 353 Hic Nisus, Si tanta inquit sunt praemia victis, 354 et te lapsorum miseret, quae munera Niso 355 digna dabis, primam merui qui laude coronam, 356 ni me, quae Salium, fortuna inimica tulisset? 357 Et simul his dictis faciem ostentabat et udo 358 turpia membra fimo. Risit pater optimus olli 359 et clipeum efferri iussit, Didymaonis artem, 360 Neptuni sacro Danais de poste refixum.	green laurel-garland; to the crews 335 three bulls, at choice, were given, and plenteous wine 336 and talent-weight of silver; to the chiefs 337 illustrious gifts beside; the victor had 338 a gold-embroidered mantle with wide band 339 of undulant Meliboean purple rare, 340 where, pictured in the woof, young Ganymede 341 through Ida's forest chased the light-foot deer 342 with javelin; all flushed and panting he. 343 But lo! Jove's thunder-bearing eagle fell, 344 and his strong talons snatched from Ida far 345 the royal boy, whose aged servitors 346 reached helpless hands to heaven; his faithful hound 347 bayed fiercely at the air. To him whose worth 348 the second place had won, Aeneas gave 349 a smooth-linked golden corselet, triple-chained, 350 of which his own victorious hand despoiled 351 Demoleos, by the swift, embattled stream 352 of Simois, under Troy,—and bade it be 353 a glory and defence on valor's field; 354 scarce might the straining shoulders of two slaves, 355 Phegeus and Sagaris, the load endure, 356 yet oft Demoleos in this armor dressed 357 charged down full speed on routed hosts of Troy. 358 The third gift was two cauldrons of wrought brass, 359 and bowls of beaten silver, cunningly 360 embossed with sculpture fair. Bearing such gifts,
5.361	361 Hoc iuvenem egregium praestanti munere donat;	361 th' exultant victors onward moved, each brow 362 bound with a purple

	362 Post, ubi confecti cursus, et dona peregit: 363 Nunc, si cui virtus animusque in pectore praesens, 364 adsit, et evinctis attollat brachia palmis. 365 Sic ait, et geminum pugnae proponit honorem, 366 victori velatum auro vittisque iuvencum, 367 ensem atque insignem galeam solacia victo. 368 Nec mora: continuo vastis cum viribus effert 369 ora Dares, magnoque virum se murmure tollit; 370 solus qui Paridem solitus contendere contra, 371 idemque ad tumulum, quo maximus occubat Hector, 372 victorem Buten immani corpore, qui se 373 Bebrycia veniens Amyci de gente ferebat, 374 perculit, et fulva moribundum extendit harena. 375 Talis prima Dares caput altum in proelia tollit, 376 ostenditque umeros latos, alternaque iactat 377 brachia protendens, et verberat ictibus auras. 378 Quaeritur huic alius; nec quisquam ex agmine tanto 379 audet adire virum manibusque inducere caestus. 380 Ergo alacris, cunctosque putans excedere palma, 381 Aeneae stetit ante pedes, nec plura moratus 382 tum laeva taurum cornu tenet, atque ita fatur: 383 Nate dea, si nemo audet se credere pugnae, 384 quae finis standi? Quo me decet usque teneri? 385 Ducere dona iube. Cuncti simul ore fremebant 386 Dardanidae, reddique viro promissa iubebant. 387 Hic gravis Entellum dictis castigat Acestes, 388 proximus ut viridante toro consederat herbae: 389 Entelle, heroum quondam fortissime frustra, 390 tantane tam patiens nullo certamine tolli	fillet. But behold! 363 Sergestus, from the grim rock just dragged off 364 by cunning toil, one halting rank of oars 365 left of his many lost, comes crawling in 366 with vanquished ship, a mockery to all. 367 As when a serpent, on the highway caught, 368 some brazen wheel has crushed, or traveller 369 with heavy-smiting blow left half alive 370 and mangled by a stone; in vain he moves 371 in writhing flight; a part is lifted high 372 with hissing throat and angry, glittering eyes; 373 but by the wounded part a captive still 374 he knots him fold on fold: with such a track 375 the maimed ship labored slow; but by her sails 376 she still made way, and with full canvas on 377 arrived at land. Aeneas then bestowed 378 a boon upon Sergestus, as was meet 379 for reward of the ship in safety brought 380 with all its men; a fair slave was the prize, 381 the Cretan Pholoe, well taught to weave, 382 and twin boy-babes upon her breast she bore. 383 Then good Aeneas, the ship-contest o'er, 384 turned to a wide green valley, circled round 385 with clasp of wood-clad hills, wherein was made 386 an amphitheatre; entering with a throng 387 of followers, the hero took his seat 388 in mid-arena on a lofty mound. 389 For the fleet foot-race, now, his summons flies, — 390 he offers gifts, and shows the rewards due. 391 The mingling youth of Troy and Sicily 392 hastened from far. Among the foremost came 393 the comrades Nisus and Euryalus, 394 Euryalus for beauty's bloom renowned, 395 Nisus for loyal love; close-following these 396 Diores strode, a prince of Priam's line; 397 then Salius and Patron, who were bred 398 in Acarnania and Arcady; 399 then two Sicilian warriors, Helymus 400 and Panopes, both sylvan bred and born, 401 comrades of King Acestes; after these 402 the multitude whom Fame forgets to tell. 403 Aeneas, so surrounded, thus spake forth: 404 “Hear what I purpose, and with joy receive! 405 of all your company, not one departs 406 with empty hand. The Cretan javelins 407 bright-tipped with burnished steel, and battle-axe 408 adorned with graven silver, these shall be 409 the meed of all. The three first at the goal 410 shall bind their foreheads with fair olive green, 411 and win the rewards due. The first shall lead, 412 victorious, yon rich-bridled steed away; 413 this Amazonian quiver, the next prize, 414 well-stocked with Thracian arrows; round it goes 415 a baldrick broad and golden,—in its clasp 416 a lustrous gem. The third man goes away 417 taking this helmet from the Argive spoil.”

5.391	391 dona sines? Ubi nunc nobis deus ille magister 392 nequiquam memoratus Eryx? Ubi fama per omnem 393 Trinacriam, et spolia illa tuis pendentia tectis? 394 Ille sub haec: Non laudis amor, nec gloria cessit 395 pulsa metu; sed enim gelidus tardante senecta 396 sanguis hebet, frigentque effetae in corpore vires. 397 Si mihi, quae quondam fuerat, quaque improbus iste 398 exsultat fidens, si nunc foret illa iuventas, 399 haud equidem pretio inductus pulchroque iuvenco 400 venissem, nec dona moror. Sic deinde locutus 401 in medium geminos immani pondere caestus 402 proiecit, quibus acer Eryx in proelia suetus 403 ferre manum, duroque intendere brachia tergo. 404 Obstipuere animi: tantorum ingentia septem 405 terga boum plumbo insuto ferroque rigebant. 406 Ante omnes stupet ipse Dares, longeque recusat; 407 magnanimusque Anchisiades et pondus et ipsa 408 huc illuc vinclorum immensa volumina versat. 409 Tum senior talis referebat pectore voces: 410 Quid, si quis caestus ipsius et Herculis arma 411 vidisset, tristemque hoc ipso in litore pugnam? 412 Haec germanus Eryx quondam tuus arma gerebat;— 413 sanguine cernis adhuc sparsoque infecta cerebro;— 414 his magnum Alciden contra stetit; his ego suetus,	418 They heard, and took their places. The loud horn 419 gave signal, and impetuous from the line, 420 swift as a bursting storm they sped away, 421 eyes fixed upon the goal. Far in advance 422 Nisus shot forward, swifter than the winds 423 or winged thunderbolt; the next in course, 424 next, but out-rivalled far, was Salius, 425 and after him a space, Euryalus 426 came third; him Helymus was hard upon; 427 and, look! Diores follows, heel on heel, 428 close at his shoulder —if the race be long 429 he sure must win, or claim a doubtful prize. 430 Now at the last stretch, spent and panting, all 431 pressed to the goal, when in a slime of blood 432 Nisus, hard fate! slipped down, where late the death 433 of victims slain had drenched the turf below. 434 Here the young victor, with his triumph flushed, 435 lost foothold on the yielding ground, and plunged 436 face forward in the pool of filth and gore; 437 but not of dear Euryalus was he 438 forgetful then, nor heedless of his friend; 439 but rising from the mire he hurled himself 440 in Salius' way; so he in equal plight 441 rolled in the filthy slough. Euryalus 442 leaped forth, the winner of the race by gift 443 of his true friend, and flying to the goal 444 stood first, by many a favoring shout acclaimed. 445 Next Helymus ran in; and, for the third, last prize, 446 Diores. But the multitude now heard 447 the hollowed hill-side ringing with wild wrath

	415 dum melior vires sanguis dabat, aemula necdum 416 temporibus geminis canebat sparsa senectus. 417 Sed si nostra Dares haec Troius arma recusat, 418 idque pio sedet Aeneae, probat auctor Acestes, 419 aequemus pugnas. Erycis tibi terga remitto; 420 solve metus; et tu Troianos exue caestus.
5.421	421 Haec fatus, duplicem ex umeris reiecit amictum 422 et magnos membrorum artus, magna ossa lacertosque 423 exuit, atque ingens media consistit harena. 424 Tum satus Anchisa caestus pater extulit aequos, 425 et paribus palmas amborum innexuit armis. 426 Constitit in digitos extemplo arrectus uterque, 427 brachiaque ad superas interritus extulit auras. 428 Abduxere retro longe capita ardua ab ictu, 429 immiscentque manus manibus, pugnamque lacessunt. 430 Ille pedum melior motu, fretusque iuventa; 431 hic membris et mole valens, sed tarda trementi 432 genua labant, vastos quatit aeger anhelitus artus. 433 Multa viri nequiquam inter se volnera iactant, 434 multa cavo lateri ingeminant, et pectore vastos 435 dant sonitus, erratque auris et tempora circum 436 crebra manus, duro crepitant sub volnere malae. 437 Stat gravis Entellus nisuque immotus eodem, 438 corpore tela modo atque oculis vigilantibus exit. 439 Ille, velut celsam oppugnat qui molibus urbem, 440 aut montana sedet circum castella sub armis, 441 nunc hos, nunc illos aditus, omnemque pererrat 442 arte locum, et variis adsultibus inritus urguet. 443 Ostendit dextram insurgens Entellus, et alte	448 from Salius, clamoring where the chieftains sate 449 for restitution of his stolen prize, 450 lost by a cheat. But general favor smiles 451 upon Euryalus, whose beauteous tears 452 commend him much, and nobler seems the worth 453 of valor clothed in youthful shape so fair. 454 Diores, too, assists the victor's claim, 455 with loud appeal—he too has won a prize, 456 and vainly holds his last place, if the first 457 to Salius fall. Aeneas then replied: 458 “Your gifts, my gallant youths, remain secure. 459 None can re-judge the prize. But to console 460 the misadventure of a blameless friend, 461 is in my power.” Therewith to Salius 462 an Afric lion's monstrous pelt he gave, 463 with ponderous mane, the claws o'erlaid with gold. 464 But Nisus cried: “If such a gift be found 465 for less than victory, and men who fall 466 are worthy so much sorrow, pray, what prize 467 shall Nisus have? For surely I had won 468 the proudest of the garlands, if one stroke 469 of inauspicious fortune had not fallen 470 on Salius and me.” So saying, he showed 471 his smeared face and his sorry limbs befouled 472 with mire and slime. Then laughed the gracious sire, 473 and bade a shield be brought, the cunning work 474 of Didymaon, which the Greeks tore down 475 from Neptune's temple; with this noble gift 476 he sent the high-born youth upon his way.

	444 extulit: ille ictum venientem a vertice velox 445 praevidit, celerique elapsus corpore cessit. 446 Entellus vires in ventum effudit, et ultro 447 ipse gravis graviterque ad terram pondere vasto 448 concidit, ut quondam cava concidit aut Erymantho, 449 aut Ida in magna, radicibus eruta pinus. 450 Consurgunt studiis Teucri et Trinacria pubes;
5.451	451 it clamor caelo, primusque accurrit Acestes, 452 aequaevumque ab humo miserans attollit amicum. 453 At non tardatus casu neque territus heros 454 acrior ad pugnam redit ac vim suscitat ira. 455 Tum pudor incendit vires et conscia virtus, 456 praecipitemque Daren ardens agit aequore toto, 457 nunc dextra ingeminans ictus, nunc ille sinistra; 458 nec mora, nec requies: quam multa grandine nimbi 459 culminibus crepitant, sic densis ictibus heros 460 creber utraque manu pulsat versatque Dareta. 461 Tum pater Aeneas procedere longius iras 462 et saevire animis Entellum haud passus acerbis; 463 sed finem imposuit pugnae, fessumque Dareta 464 eripuit mulcens dictis, ac talia fatur: 465 Infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit? 466 Non vires alias conversaque numina sentis? 467 Cede deo. Dixitque et proelia voce diremit. 468 Ast illum fidi aequales, genua aegra trahentem, 469 iactantemque utroque caput, crassumque cruorem 470 ore eiectantem mixtosque in sanguine dentes, 471 ducunt ad naves; galeamque ensemque vocati 472 accipiunt; palmam Entello taurumque relinquunt.	477 The foot-race over and the gifts disbursed, 478 “Come forth!” he cries, “if any in his heart 479 have strength and valor, let him now pull on 480 the gauntlets and uplift his thong-bound arms 481 in challenge.” For the reward of this fight 482 a two-fold gift he showed: the victor's meed, 483 a bullock decked and gilded; but a sword 484 and glittering helmet to console the fallen. 485 Straightway, in all his pride of giant strength, 486 Dares Ioomed up, and wondering murmurs ran 487 along the gazing crowd; for he alone 488 was wont to match with Paris, he it was 489 met Butes, the huge-bodied champion 490 boasting the name and race of Amycus, 491 Bythinian-born; him felled he at a blow, 492 and stretched him dying on the tawny sand. 493 Such Dares was, who now held high his head, 494 fierce for the fray, bared both his shoulders broad, 495 lunged out with left and right, and beat the air. 496 Who shall his rival be? Of all the throng 497 not one puts on the gauntlets, or would face 498 the hero's challenge. Therefore, striding forth, 499 believing none now dare but yield the palm, 500 he stood before Aeneas, and straightway 501 seized with his left hand the bull's golden horn, 502 and cried, “O goddess-born, if no man dares 503 to risk him in this fight, how Iong delay? 504 how Iong beseems it I should stand and wait? 505 Bid me bear off my prize.” The Trojans all 506 murmured assent, and bade the due award

	473 Hic victor, superans animis tauroque superbus: 474 Nate dea, vosque haec inquit cognoscite, Teucri, 475 et mihi quae fuerint iuvenali in corpore vires, 476 et qua servetis revocatum a morte Dareta. 477 Dixit, et adversi contra stetit ora iuvenci, 478 qui donum adstabat pugnae, durosque reducta 479 libravit dextra media inter cornua caestus, 480 arduus, effractoque inlisit in ossa cerebro.
5.481	481 sternitur exanimisque tremens procumbit humi bos. 482 Ille super tales effundit pectore voces: 483 Hanc tibi, Eryx, meliorem animam pro morte Daretis 484 persolvo; hic victor caestus artemque repono. 485 Protinus Aeneas celeri certare sagitta 486 invitat qui forte velint, et praemia ponit, 487 ingentique manu malum de nave Seresti 488 erigit, et volucrem traiecto in fune columbam, 489 quo tendant ferrum, malo suspendit ab alto. 490 Convenere viri, deiectamque aerea sortem 491 accepit galea; et primus clamore secundo 492 Hyrtacidae ante omnes exit locus Hippocoöntis; 493 quem modo navali Mnestheus certamine victor 494 consequitur, viridi Mnestheus evinctus oliva. 495 Tertius Eurytion, tuus, o clarissime, frater, 496 Pandare, qui quondam, iussus confundere foedus, 497 in medios telum torsisti primus Achivos. 498 Extremus galeaque ima subsedit Acestes, 499 ausus et ipse manu iuvenum temptare laborem. 500 Tum validis flexos incurvant viribus arcus 501 pro se quisque viri, et depromunt tela pharetris.	507 of promised gift. But with a brow severe 508 Acestes to Entellus at his side 509 addressed upbraiding words, where they reclined 510 on grassy bank and couch of pleasant green: 511 “O my Entellus, in the olden days 512 bravest among the mighty, but in vain! 513 Endurest thou to see yon reward won 514 without a blow? Where, prithee, is that god 515 who taught thee? Are thy tales of Eryx vain? 516 Does all Sicilia praise thee? Is thy roof 517 with trophies hung?” The other in reply: 518 “My jealous honor and good name yield not 519 to fear. But age, so cold and slow to move, 520 makes my blood laggard, and my ebbing powers 521 in all my body are but slack and chill. 522 O, if I had what yonder ruffian boasts— 523 my own proud youth once more! I would not ask 524 the fair bull for a prize, nor to the lists 525 in search of gifts come forth.” So saying, he threw 526 into the mid-arena a vast pair 527 of ponderous gauntlets, which in former days 528 fierce Eryx for his fights was wont to bind 529 on hand and arm, with the stiff raw-hide thong. 530 All marvelled; for a weight of seven bulls' hides 531 was pieced with lead and iron. Dares stared 532 astonished, and step after step recoiled; 533 high-souled Anchises' son, this way and that, 534 turned o'er the enormous coil of knots and thongs; 535 then with a deep-drawn breath the veteran spoke: 536 “O, that thy wondering eyes had seen the arms

	502 Primaque per caelum, nervo stridente, sagitta 503 Hyrtacidae iuvenis volucres diverberat auras; 504 et venit, adversique infigitur arbore mali. 505 Intremuit malus, timuitque exterrita pennis 506 ales, et ingenti sonuerunt omnia plausu. 507 Post acer Mnestheus adducto constitit arcu, 508 alta petens, pariterque oculos telumque tetendit. 509 Ast ipsam miserandus avem contingere ferro 510 non valuit: nodos et vincula linea rupit,
5.511	511 quis innexa pedem malo pendebat ab alto: 512 illa notos atque alta volans in nubila fugit. 513 Tum rapidus, iamdudum arcu contenta parato 514 tela tenens, fratrem Eurytion in Pota vocavit, 515 iam vacuo laetam caelo speculatus, et alis 516 plaudentem nigra figit sub nube columbam. 517 Decidit exanimis, vitamque reliquit in astris 518 aetheriis, fixamque refert delapsa sagittam. 519 Amissa solus palma superabat Acestes; 520 qui tamen aerias telum contendit in auras, 521 ostentans artemque pater arcumque sonantem. 522 Hic oculis subito obicitur magnoque futurum 523 augurio monstrum; docuit post exitus ingens, 524 seraque terrifici cecinerunt omina vates. 525 Namque volans liquidis in nubibus arsit harundo, 526 signavitque viam flammis, tenuisque recessit 527 consumpta in ventos, caelo ceu saepe refixa 528 transcurrunt crinemque volantia sidera ducunt. 529 Attonitis haesere animis, superosque precati 530 Trinacrii Teucrique viri; nec maximus omen	537 of Hercules, and what his gauntlets were! 538 Would thou hadst seen the conflict terrible 539 upon this self-same shore! These arms were borne 540 by Eryx. Look; thy brother's!—spattered yet 541 with blood, with dashed-out brains! In these he stood 542 when he matched Hercules. I wore them oft 543 when in my pride and prime, ere envious age 544 shed frost upon my brows. But if these arms 545 be of our Trojan Dares disapproved, 546 if good Aeneas rules it so, and King 547 Acestes wills it, let us offer fight 548 on even terms. Let Eryx' bull's-hide go. 549 Tremble no more! But strip those gauntlets off — 550 fetched here from Troy.” So saying, he dropped down 551 the double-folded mantle from his shoulders, 552 stripped bare the huge joints, the huge arms and thews, 553 and towered gigantic in the midmost ring. 554 Anchises' son then gave two equal pairs 555 of gauntlets, and accoutred with like arms 556 both champions. Each lifted him full height 557 on tiptoe; each with mien unterrified 558 held both fists high in air, and drew his head 559 far back from blows assailing. Then they joined 560 in struggle hand to hand, and made the fray 561 each moment fiercer. One was light of foot 562 and on his youth relied; the other strong 563 in bulk of every limb, but tottering 564 on sluggish knees, while all his body shook 565 with labor of his breath. Without avail 566 they rained their blows, and on each hollow side,

	531 abnuit Aeneas; sed laetum amplexus Acesten 532 muneribus cumulat magnis, ac talia fatur: 533 Sume, pater; nam te voluit rex magnus Olympi 534 talibus auspiciis exsortem ducere honores. 535 Ipsius Anchisae longaevi hoc munus habebis, 536 cratera impressum signis, quem Thracius olim 537 Anchisae genitori in magno munere Cisseus 538 ferre sui dederat monumentum et pignus amoris. 539 Sic fatus cingit viridanti tempora lauro, 540 et primum ante omnes victorem appellat Acesten.
5.541	541 Nec bonus Eurytion praelato invidit honori, 542 quamvis solus avem caelo deiecit ab alto. 543 Proximus ingreditur donis, qui vincula rupit; 544 extremus, volucri qui fixit arundine malum. 545 At pater Aeneas, nondum certamine misso, 546 custodem ad sese comitemque impubis Iuli 547 Epytiden vocat, et fidam sic fatur ad aurem: 548 Vade age, et Ascanio, si iam puerile paratum 549 agmen habet secum, cursusque instruxit equorum, 550 ducat avo turmas, et sese ostendat in armis, 551 dic ait. Ipse omnem longo decedere circo 552 infusum populum, et campos iubet esse patentes. 553 Incedunt pueri, pariterque ante ora parentum 554 frenatis lucent in equis, quos omnis euntes 555 Trinacriae mirata fremit Troiaeque iuventus. 556 omnibus in morem tonsa coma pressa corona; 557 cornea bina ferunt praefixa hastilia ferro; 558 pars levis umero pharetras; it pectore summo 559 flexilis obtorti per collum circulus auri.	567 each sounding chest, the swift, reverberate strokes 568 fell without pause; around their ears and brows 569 came blow on blow, and with relentless shocks 570 the smitten jaws cracked loud. Entellus stands 571 unshaken, and, the self-same posture keeping, 572 only by body-movement or quick eye 573 parries attack. Dares (like one in siege 574 against a mountain-citadel, who now will drive 575 with ram and engine at the craggy wall, 576 now wait in full-armed watch beneath its towers) 577 tries manifold approach, most craftily 578 invests each point of vantage, and renews 579 his unsuccessful, ever various war. 580 Then, rising to the stroke, Entellus poised 581 aloft his ponderous right; but, quick of eye, 582 the other the descending wrath foresaw 583 and nimbly slipped away; Entellus so 584 wasted his stroke on air, and, self-o'erthrown, 585 dropped prone to earth his monstrous length along, 586 as when on Erymanth or Ida falls 587 a hollowed pine from giant roots uptorn. 588 Alike the Teucrian and Trinacrian throng 589 shout wildly; while Acestes, pitying, hastes 590 to lift his gray companion. But, unchecked, 591 undaunted by his fall, the champion brave 592 rushed fiercer to the fight, his strength now roused 593 by rage, while shame and courage confident 594 kindle his soul; impetuous he drives 595 Dares full speed all round the ring, with blows 596 redoubled right and

	560 Tres equitum numero turmae, ternique vagantur 561 ductores: pueri bis seni quemque secuti 562 agmine partito fulgent paribusque magistris. 563 Una acies iuvenum, ducit quam parvus ovantem 564 nomen avi referens Priamus,—tua clara, Polite, 565 progenies, auctura Italos,—quem Thracius albis 566 portat equus bicolor maculis, vestigia primi 567 alba pedis frontemque ostentans arduus albam. 568 Alter Atys, genus unde Atii duxere Latini, 569 parvus Atys, pueroque puer dilectus Iulo. 570 Extremus, formaque ante omnis pulcher, Iulus	left. No stop or stay
5.571	571 Sidonio est invectus equo, quem candida Dido 572 esse sui dederat monumentum et pignus amoris. 573 Cetera Trinacrii pubes senioris Acestae 574 fertur equis. 575 Excipiunt plausu pavidos, gaudentque tuentes 576 Dardanidae, veterumque adgnoscunt ora parentum. 577 Postquam omnem laeti consessum oculosque suorum 578 lustravere in equis, signum clamore paratis 579 Epytides longe dedit insonuitque flagello. 580 Olli discurrere pares, atque agmina terni 581 diductis solvere choris, rursusque vocati 582 convertere vias infestaque tela tulere. 583 Inde alios ineunt cursus aliosque recursus 584 adversi spatiis, alternosque orbibus orbes 585 impediunt, pugnaeque cient simulacra sub armis; 586 et nunc terga fuga nudant, nunc spicula vertunt 587 infensi, facta pariter nunc pace feruntur. 588 Ut quondam Creta fertur Labyrinthus in alta 589 parietibus textum caecis iter,	597 gives he, but like a storm of rattling hail 598 upon a house-top, so from each huge hand 599 the champion's strokes on dizzy Dares fall. 600 Then Sire Aeneas willed to make a stay 601 to so much rage, nor let Entellus' soul 602 flame beyond bound, but bade the battle pause, 603 and, rescuing weary Dares, thus he spoke 604 in soothing words: “Ill-starred! What mad attempt 605 is in thy mind? Will not thy heart confess 606 thy strength surpassed, and auspices averse? 607 Submit, for Heaven decrees!” With such wise words 608 he sundered the fell strife. But trusty friends 609 bore Dares off: his spent limbs helpless trailed, 610 his head he could not lift, and from his lips 611 came blood and broken teeth. So to the ship 612 they bore him, taking, at Aeneas' word, 613 the helmet and the sword—but left behind 614 Entellus' prize of victory, the bull. 615 He, then, elate and glorying, spoke forth: 616 “See, goddess-born, and all ye Teucrians, see, 617 what strength was mine in youth, and from what death 618 ye have clelivered Dares.” Saying so, 619 he turned him full front to the bull, who stood 620 for reward of the fight, and, drawing back 621 his right hand, poising the dread gauntlet high, 622 swung sheer between the horns and crushed the skull; 623 a trembling, lifeless creature, to the ground 624 the ancipitemque 590 mille viis habuisse dolum, qua signa sequendi 591 falleret indeprensus et inremeabilis error; 592 haud alio Teucrum nati vestigia cursu 593 impediunt texuntque fugas et proelia ludo, 594 delphinum similes, qui per maria umida nando 595 Carpathium Libycumque secant, 596 Hunc morem cursus atque haec certamina primus 597 Ascanius, Longam muris cum cingeret Albam, 598 rettulit, et priscos docuit celebrare Latinos, 599 quo puer ipse modo, secum quo Troïa pubes; 600 Albani docuere suos; hinc maxima porro	bull dropped forward dead. Above the fallen 625 Entellus cried aloud, “This victim due 626 I give thee, Eryx, more acceptable 627 than Dares' death to thy benignant shade. 628 For this last victory and joyful day, 629 my gauntlets and my art I leave with thee.”

5.601	601 accepit Roma, et patrium servavit honorem; 602 Troiaque nunc pueri, Troianum dicitur agmen. 603 Hac celebrata tenus sancto certamina patri. 604 Hic primum fortuna fidem mutata novavit. 605 Dum variis tumulo referunt sollemnia ludis, 606 Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno 607 Iliacam ad classem, ventosque adspirat eunti, 608 multa movens, necdum antiquum saturata dolorem. 609 Illa, viam celerans per mille coloribus arcum, 610 nulli visa cito decurrit tramite virgo. 611 Conspicit ingentem concursum, et litora lustrat, 612 desertosque videt portus classemque relictam. 613 At procul in sola secretae Troades acta 614 amissum Anchisen flebant, cunctaeque profundum 615 pontum adspectabant flentes. Heu tot vada fessis 616 et tantum superesse maris! vox omnibus una. 617 Urbem orant; taedet pelagi perferre laborem. 618 Ergo inter medias sese haud ignara nocendi 619 conicit, et faciemque deae	630 Forthwith Aeneas summons all who will 631 to contest of swift arrows, and displays 632 reward and prize. With mighty hand he rears 633 a mast within th' arena, from the ship 634 of good Sergestus taken; and thereto 635 a fluttering dove by winding cord is bound 636 for target of their shafts. Soon to the match 637 the rival bowmen came and cast the lots 638 into a brazen helmet. First came forth 639 Hippocoon's number, son of Hyrtacus, 640 by cheers applauded; Mnestheus was the next, 641 late victor in the ship-race, Mnestheus crowned 642 with olive-garland; next Eurytion, 643 brother of thee, O bowman most renowned, 644 Pandarus, breaker of the truce, who hurled 645 his shaft upon the Achaeans, at the word 646 the goddess gave. Acestes' Iot and name 647 came from the helmet last, whose royal hand 648 the deeds of youth dared even yet to try. 649 Each then with strong arm bends his pliant bow, 650 each from the quiver plucks a chosen shaft. 651 First, with loud arrow whizzing from the string, 652 the young Hippocoon with skyward aim 653 cuts through the yielding air; and lo! his barb 654 pierces the very wood, and makes the mast 655 tremble; while with a fluttering, frighted wing 656 the bird tugs hard,—and plaudits fill the sky. 657 Boldly rose Mnestheus, and with bow full-drawn 658 aimed both his eye

	vestemque reponit; 620 fit Beroë, Tmarii coniunx longaeva Dorycli, 621 cui genus et quondam nomen natique fuissent; 622 ac sic Dardanidum mediam se matribus infert: 623 O miserae, quas non manus inquit Achaïca bello 624 traxerit ad letum patriae sub moenibus! O gens 625 infelix, cui te exitio Fortuna reservat? 626 Septuma post Troiae exscidium iam vertitur aestas, 627 cum freta, cum terras omnes, tot inhospita saxa 628 sideraque emensae ferimur, dum per mare magnum 629 Italiam sequimur fugientem, et volvimur undis. 630 Hic Erycis fines fraterni, atque hospes Acestes:	and shaft aloft; but he 659 failing, unhappy man, to bring his barb
5.631	631 quis prohibet muros iacere et dare civibus urbem? 632 O patria et rapti nequiquam ex hoste Penates, 633 nullane iam Troiae dicentur moenia? Nusquam 634 Hectoreos amnes, Xanthum et Simoenta, videbo? 635 Quin agite et mecum infaustas exurite puppes. 636 Nam mihi Cassandrae per somnum vatis imago 637 ardentes dare visa faces: Hic quaerite Troiam; 638 hic domus est inquit vobis. Iam tempus agi res, 639 nec tantis mora prodigiis. En quattuor arae 640 Neptuno; deus ipse faces animumque ministrat. 641 Haec memorans, prima infensum vi corripit ignem, 642 sublataque procul dextra conixa coruscat, 643 et iacit: arrectae mentes stupefactaque corda 644 Iliadum. Hic una e multis, quae maxima natu, 645 Pyrgo, tot Priami natorum regia nutrix: 646 Non Beroë vobis, non haec Rhoeteïa, matres, 647 est Dorycli coniunx; divini signa decoris 648 ardentesque notate oculos; qui	660 up to the dove herself, just cut the cord 661 and broke the hempen bond, whereby her feet 662 were captive to the tree: she, taking flight, 663 clove through the shadowing clouds her path of air. 664 But swiftly—for upon his waiting bow 665 he held a shaft in rest —Eurytion 666 invoked his brother's shade, and, marking well 667 the dove, whose happy pinions fluttered free 668 in vacant sky, pierced her, hard by a cloud; 669 lifeless she fell, and left in light of heaven 670 her spark of life, as, floating down, she bore 671 the arrow back to earth. Acestes now 672 remained, last rival, though the victor's palm 673 to him was Iost; yet did the aged sire, 674 to show his prowess and resounding bow, 675 hurl forth one shaft in air; then suddenly 676 all eyes beheld such wonder as portends 677 events to be (but when fulfilment came, 678 too late the fearful seers its warning sung): 679 for, soaring through the stream of cloud, his shaft 680 took fire, tracing its bright path in flame, 681 then vanished on the wind,— as oft a star 682 will fall unfastened from the firmament, 683 while far behind its blazing tresses flow. 684 Awe-struck both Trojan and Trinacrian stood, 685 calling upon the gods. Nor came the sign 686 in vain to great Aeneas. But his arms 687 folded the blest Acestes to his heart, 688 and, spiritus illi, 649 qui voltus, vocisque sonus, vel gressus eunti. 650 Ipsa egomet dudum Beroen digressa reliqui 651 aegram, indignantem, tali quod sola careret 652 munere, nec meritos Anchisae inferet honores. 653 Haec effata. 654 At matres primo ancipites oculisque malignis 655 ambiguae spectare rates miserum inter amorem 656 praesentis terrae fatisque vocantia regna, 657 cum dea se paribus per caelum sustulit alis, 658 ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum. 659 Tum vero attonitae monstris actaeque furore 660 conclamant, rapiuntque focis penetralibus ignem;	Ioading him with noble gifts, he cried: 689 “Receive them, sire! The great Olympian King

5.661	661 pars spoliant aras, frondem ac virgulta facesque 662 coniciunt. Furit immissis Volcanus habenis 663 transtra per et remos et pictas abiete puppes. 664 Nuntius Anchisae ad tumulum cuneosque theatri 665 incensas perfert naves Eumelus, et ipsi 666 respiciunt atram in nimbo volitare favillam. 667 Primus et Ascanius, cursus ut laetus equestres 668 ducebat, sic acer equo turbata petivit 669 castra, nec exanimes possunt retinere magistri. 670 Quis furor iste novus? Quo nunc, quo tenditis inquit, 671 heu, miserae cives? Non hostem inimicaque castra 672 Argivum, vestras spes uritis. En, ego vester 673 Ascanius! Galeam ante pedes proiecit inanem, 674 qua ludo indutus belli simulacra ciebat; 675 accelerat simul Aeneas, simul agmina Teucrum. 676 Ast illae diversa metu per litora passim 677 diffugiunt, silvasque et sicubi concava furtim	690 some peerless honor to thy name decrees 691 by such an omen given. I offer thee 692 this bowl with figures graven, which my sire, 693 good gray Anchises, for proud gift received 694 of Thracian Cisseus, for their friendship's pledge 695 and memory evermore.” Thereon he crowned 696 his brows with garland of the laurel green, 697 and named Acestes victor over all. 698 Nor could Eurytion, noble youth, think ill 699 of honor which his own surpassed, though he, 700 he only, pierced the bird in upper air. 701 Next gift was his whose arrow cut the cord; 702 last, his whose light shaft clove the lofty pine.

	678 saxa petunt; piget incepti lucisque, suosque 679 mutatae adgnoscunt, excussaque pectore Iuno est. 680 Sed non idcirco flammae atque incendia vires 681 indomitas posuere; udo sub robore vivit 682 stuppa vomens tardum fumum, lentusque carinas 683 est vapor, et toto descendit corpore pestis, 684 nec vires heroum infusaque flumina prosunt. 685 Tum pius Aeneas umeris abscindere vestem, 686 auxilioque vocare deos, et tendere palmas: 687 Iuppiter omnipotens, si nondum exosus ad unum 688 Troianos, si quid pietas antiqua labores 689 respicit humanos, da flammam evadere classi 690 nunc, Pater, et tenues Teucrum res eripe leto.
5.691	691 Vel tu, quod superest infesto fulmine morti, 692 si mereor, demitte, tuaque hic obrue dextra. 693 Vix haec ediderat, cum effusis imbribus atra 694 tempestas sine more furit, tonitruque tremescunt 695 ardua terrarum et campi; ruit aethere toto 696 turbidus imber aqua densisque nigerrimus austris; 697 implenturque super puppes; semiusta madescunt 698 robora; restinctus donec vapor omnis, et omnes, 699 quattuor amissis, servatae a peste carinae. 700 At pater Aeneas, casu concussus acerbo, 701 nunc huc ingentes, nunc illuc pectore curas 702 mutabat versans, Siculisne resideret arvis, 703 oblitus fatorum, Italasne capesseret oras. 704 Tum senior Nautes, unum Tritonia Pallas 705 quem docuit multaque insignem reddidit arte, 706 haec responsa dabat, vel quae portenderet ira	703 Father Aeneas now, not making end 704 of game and contest, summoned to his side 705 Epytides, the mentor and true friend 706 of young Iulus, and this bidding gave 707 to his obedient ear: “Arise and go 708 where my Ascanius has lined his troop 709 of youthful cavalry, and trained the steeds 710 to tread in ranks of war. Bid him lead forth 711 the squadron in our sire Anchises' name, 712 and wear a hero's arms!” So saying, he bade 713 the course be cleared, and from the whole wide field 714 th' insurging, curious multitude withdrew. 715 In rode the boys, to meet their parents' eyes, 716 in even lines, a glittering cavalry; 717 while all Trinacria and the host from Troy 718 made loud applause. On each bright brow 719 a well-trimmed wreath the flowing tresses bound; 720 two javelins of corner tipped with steel 721 each bore for arms; some from the shoulder slung 722 a polished quiver; to each bosom fell 723 a pliant necklace of fine, twisted gold. 724 Three bands of horsemen ride, three captains proud 725 prance here and there, assiduous in command, 726 each of his twelve, who shine in parted lines 727 which lesser captains lead. One cohort proud 728 follows a little Priam's royal name

	707 magna deum, vel quae fatorum posceret ordo; 708 isque his Aenean solatus vocibus infit: 709 Nate dea, quo fata trahunt retrahuntque, sequamur; 710 quidquid erit, superanda omnis fortuna ferendo est. 711 Est tibi Dardanius divinae stirpis Acestes: 712 hunc cape consiliis socium et coniunge volentem; 713 huic trade, amissis superant qui navibus, et quos 714 pertaesum magni incepti rerumque tuarum est; 715 longaevosque senes ac fessas aequore matres, 716 et quidquid tecum invalidum metuensque pericli est, 717 delige, et his habeant terris sine moenia fessi: 718 urbem appellabunt permisso nomine Acestam. 719 Talibus incensus dictis senioris amici, 720 tum vero in curas animo diducitur omnes.	— 729 one day, Polites, thy illustrious race 730 through him prolonged, shall greater glory bring 731 to Italy. A dappled Thracian steed 732 with snow-white spots and fore-feet white as snow 733 bears him along, its white face lifted high. 734 Next Atys rode, young Atys, sire to be 735 of th' Atian house in Rome, a boy most dear 736 unto the boy Iulus; last in line, 737 and fairest of the throng, Iulus came, 738 astride a steed from Sidon, the fond gift 739 of beauteous Dido and her pledge of love. 740 Close followed him the youthful chivalry 741 of King Acestes on Trinacrian steeds.
5.721	721 Et nox atra polum bigis subvecta tenebat: 722 visa dehinc caelo facies delapsa parentis 723 Anchisae subito tales effundere voces: 724 Nate, mihi vita quondam, dum vita manebat, 725 care magis, nate, Iliacis exercite fatis, 726 imperio Iovis huc venio, qui classibus ignem 727 depulit, et caelo tandem miseratus ab alto est. 728 Consiliis pare, quae nunc pulcherrima Nautes 729 dat senior; lectos iuvenes, fortissima corda, 730 defer in Italiam; gens dura atque aspera cultu 731 debellanda tibi Latio est. Ditis tamen ante 732 infernas accede domos, et Averna per alta 733 congressus pete, nate, meos. Non me impia namque 734 Tartara habent, tristes umbrae, sed amoena piorum 735 concilia Elysiumque colo. Huc casta Sibylla	742 The Trojans, with exultant, Ioud acclaim, 743 receive the shy-faced boys, and joyfully 744 trace in the features of the sons their sires. 745 After, with smiling eyes, the horsemen proud 746 have greeted each his kin in all the throng, 747 Epytides th' appointed signal calls, 748 and cracks his lash; in even lines they move, 749 then, Ioosely sundering in triple band, 750 wheel at a word and thrust their lances forth 751 in hostile ranks; or on the ample field 752 retreat or charge, in figure intricate 753 of circling troop with troop, and swift parade 754 of simulated war; now from the field 755 they flee with backs defenceless to the foe; 756 then rally, lance in rest—or, mingling all, 757 make common front, one legion strong and fair. 758 As once in Crete, the lofty mountain-isle, 759 that-fabled labyrinthine gallery 760 wound on through lightless walls, with thousand paths 761 which baffled every clue, and led astray 762 in unreturning mazes dark and blind: 763 so did the sons of Troy their courses weave 764 in mimic flights and battles fought for play, 765 like dolphins tumbling in the liquid waves, 766 along the Afric or

	736 nigrarum multo pecudum te sanguine ducet: 737 tum genus omne tuum, et quae dentur moenia, disces. 738 Iamque vale: torquet medios Nox humida cursus, 739 et me saevus equis Oriens adflavit anhelis. 740 Dixerat, et tenuis fugit, ceu fumus, in auras. 741 Aeneas, Quo deinde ruis, quo proripis? inquit, 742 Quem fugis, aut quis te nostris complexibus arcet? 743 Haec memorans cinerem et sopitos suscitat ignes, 744 Pergameumque Larem et canae penetralia Vestae 745 farre pio et plena supplex veneratur acerra. 746 Extemplo socios primumque arcessit Acesten, 747 et Iovis imperium et cari praecepta parentis 748 edocet, et quae nunc animo sententia constet. 749 Haud mora consiliis, nec iussa recusat Acestes. 750 Transcribunt urbi matres, populumque volentem	Carpathian seas. 767 This game and mode of march Ascanius, 768 when Alba Longa's bastions proudly rose, 769 taught to the Latin people of the prime; 770 and as the princely Trojan and his train 771 were wont to do, so Alba to her sons 772 the custom gave; so glorious Rome at last 773 the heritage accepted and revered; 774 and still we know them for the “Trojan Band,” 775 and call the lads a “Troy.” Such was the end 776 of game and contest at Anchises' grave.
5.751	751 deponunt, animos nil magnae laudis egentes. 752 Ipsi transtra novant, flammisque ambesa reponunt 753 robora navigiis, aptant remosque rudentesque, 754 exigui numero, sed bello vivida virtus. 755 Interea Aeneas urbem designat aratro 756 sortiturque domos; hoc Ilium et haec loca Troiam 757 esse iubet. Gaudet regno Troianus Acestes, 758 indicitque forum et patribus dat iura vocatis. 759 Tum vicina astris, Erycino in vertice sedes 760 fundatur Veneri Idaliae, tumuloque sacerdos 761 ac lucus late sacer additur Anchiseo. 762 Iamque dies epulata novem gens omnis, et aris 763 factus honos: placidi straverunt aequora venti, 764 creber et adspirans rursus vocat Auster in altum.	777 Then fortune veered and different aspect wore. 778 For 'ere the sacred funeral games are done, 779 Saturnian Juno from high heaven sent down 780 the light-winged Iris to the ships of Troy, 781 giving her flight good wind—still full of schemes 782 and hungering to avenge her ancient wrong. 783 Unseen of mortal eye, the virgin took 784 her pathway on the thousand-colored bow, 785 and o'er its gliding passage earthward flew. 786 She scanned the vast assemblage; then her gaze 787 turned shoreward, where along the idle bay 788 the Trojan galleys quite unpeopled rode. 789 But far removed, upon a lonely shore, 790 a throng of Trojan dames bewailed aloud 791 their lost Anchises, and with tears surveyed 792 the mighty deep. “O weary waste of seas! 793 What vast, untravelled floods beyond us roll!” 794 So cried they with one voice, and prayed the gods 795 for an abiding city; every heart 796 loathed utterly the long, laborious sea. 797 Then in their midst alighted, not unskilled 798 in working woe, the goddess; though she

	765 Exoritur procurva ingens per litora fletus; 766 complexi inter se noctemque diemque morantur. 767 Ipsae iam matres, ipsi, quibus aspera quondam 768 visa maris facies et non tolerabile nomen, 769 ire volunt, omnemque fugae perferre laborem. 770 Quos bonus Aeneas dictis solatur amicis, 771 et consanguineo lacrimans commendat Acestae. 772 Tris Eryci vitulos et Tempestatibus agnam 773 caedere deinde iubet, solvique ex ordine funem. 774 Ipse, caput tonsae foliis evinctus olivae, 775 stans procul in prora pateram tenet, extaque salsos 776 proiicit in fluctus ac vina liquentia fundit. 777 Prosequitur surgens a puppi ventus euntes. 778 Certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora verrunt. 779 At Venus interea Neptunum exercita curis 780 adloquitur, talesque effundit pectore questus:	wore 799 nor garb nor form divine, but made herself 800 one Beroe, Doryclus' aged wife, 801 who in her happier days had lineage fair 802 and sons of noble name; in such disguise 803 she called the Trojan dames:“O ye ill-starred, 804 that were not seized and slain by Grecian foes 805 under your native walls! O tribe accursed, 806 what death is Fate preparing? Since Troy fell
5.781	781 Iunonis gravis ira nec exsaturabile pectus 782 cogunt me, Neptune, preces descendere in omnes; 783 quam nec longa dies, pietas nec mitigat ulla, 784 nec Iovis imperio fatisque infracta quiescit. 785 Non media de gente Phrygum exedisse nefandis 786 urbem odiis satis est, nec poenam traxe per omnem: 787 reliquias Troiae, cineres atque ossa peremptae 788 insequitur: causas tanti sciat illa furoris. 789 Ipse mihi nuper Libycis tu testis in undis 790 quam molem subito excierit: maria omnia caelo 791 miscuit, Aeoliis nequiquam freta procellis, 792 in regnis hoc ausa tuis. 793 Per scelus ecce etiam Troianis matribus actis 794 exussit foede puppes, et classe	807 the seventh summer flies, while still we rove 808 o'er cruel rocks and seas, from star to star, 809 from alien land to land, as evermore 810 we chase, storm-tossed, that fleeting Italy 811 across the waters wide. Behold this land 812 of Eryx, of Acestes, friend and kin; 813 what hinders them to raise a rampart here 814 and build a town? O city of our sires! 815 O venerated gods from haughty foes 816 rescued in vain! Will nevermore a wall 817 rise in the name of Troy? Shall I not see 818 a Xanthus or a Simois, the streams 819 to Hector dear? Come now! I lead the way. 820 Let us go touch their baneful ships with fire! 821 I saw Cassandra in a dream. Her shade, 822 prophetic ever, gave me firebrands, 823 and cried, ‘Find Ilium so! The home for thee 824 is where thou art.’ Behold, the hour is ripe 825 for our great act! No longer now delay 826 to heed the heavenly omen. Yonder stand 827 four altars unto Neptune. 'T is the god, 828 the god himself, gives courage for the deed, subegit 795 amissa socios ignotae linquere terrae. 796 Quod superest, oro, liceat dare tuta per undas 797 vela tibi, liceat Laurentem attingere Thybrim: 798 si concessa peto, si dant ea moenia Parcae. 799 Tum Saturnius haec domitor maris edidit alti: 800 Fas omne est, Cytherea, meis te fidere regnis, 801 unde genus ducis: merui quoque; saepe furores 802 compressi, et rabiem tantam caelique marisque. 803 Nec minor in terris, Xanthum Simoëntaque testor, 804 Aeneae mihi cura tui. Cum Troia Achilles 805 exanimata sequens impingeret agmina muris, 806 milia multa daret leto, gemerentque repleti 807 amnes, nec reperire viam atque evolvere posset 808 in mare se Xanthus, Pelidae tunc ego forti 809 congressum Aenean nec dis nec viribus aequis 810 nube cava rapui, cuperem cum vertere ab imo	829 and swift-enkindling fire.” So having said, 830 she seized a dreadful brand; then, lifting high, 831 waved it all flaming, and with furious arm 832 hurled it from far. The Ilian matrons gazed, 833 bewildered and appalled. But one, of all 834 the eldest, Pyrgo, venerated nurse 835 of Priam's numerous sons, exclaimed, “Nay, nay! 836 This is no Beroe, my noble dames.

5.811	811 structa meis manibus periurae moenia Troiae. 812 Nunc quoque mens eadem perstat mihi: pelle timores. 813 Tutus, quos optas, portus accedet Averni. 814 Unus erit tantum, amissum quem gurgite quaeres; 815 unum pro multis dabitur caput. 816 His ubi laeta deae permulsit pectora dictis, 817 iungit equos auro genitor, spumantiaque addit 818 frena feris, manibusque omnes effundit habenas. 819 Caeruleo per summa levis volat aequora curru; 820 subsidunt undae, tumidumque sub axe tonanti 821 sternitur aequor aquis; fugiunt vasto aethere nimbi. 822 Tum variae comitum facies, immania cete, 823 et senior Glauci chorus, Inousque Palaemon,	837 Doryclus knew her not. Behold and see 838 her heavenly beauty and her radiant eyes! 839 What voice of music and majestic mien, 840 what movement like a god! Myself am come 841 from Beroe sick, and left her grieving sore 842 that she, she only, had no gift to bring 843 of mournful honor to Anchises' shade.” 844 She spoke. The women with ill-boding eyes 845 looked on the ships. Their doubting hearts were torn 846 'twixt tearful passion for the beauteous isle 847 their feet then trod, and that prophetic call 848 of Fate to lands unknown. Then on wide wings 849 soared Iris into heaven, and through the clouds 850 clove a vast arch of light. With wonder dazed, 851 the women in a shrieking frenzy rose, 852 took embers from the hearth-stones, stole the fires 853 upon the altars—faggots, branches, brands — 854 and rained them on the ships. The god of fire, 855 through thwarts and oars and bows of painted fir, 856 ran in

	824 Tritonesque citi, Phorcique exercitus omnis; 825 laeva tenent Thetis, et Melite, Panopeaque virgo, 826 Nisaee, Spioque, Thaliaque, Cymodoceque. 827 Hic patris Aeneae suspensam blanda vicissim 828 gaudia pertemptant mentem: iubet ocius omnes 829 attolli malos, intendi brachia velis. 830 Una omnes fecere pedem pariterque sinistros, 831 nunc dextros solvere sinus; una ardua torquent 832 cornua detorquentque; ferunt sua flamina classem. 833 Princeps ante omnes densum Palinurus agebat 834 agmen; ad hunc alii cursum contendere iussi. 835 Iamque fere mediam caeli Nox humida metam 836 contigerat; placida laxabant membra quiete 837 sub remis fusi per dura sedilia nautae: 838 cum levis aetheriis delapsus Somnus ab astris 839 aëra dimovit tenebrosum et dispulit umbras, 840 te, Palinure, petens, tibi somnia tristia portans	unbridled flame. Swift to the tomb 857 of Sire Anchises, to the circus-seats, 858 the messenger Eumelus flew, to bring 859 news of the ships on fire; soon every eye 860 the clouds of smoke and hovering flame could see. 861 Ascanius, who had led with smiling brow 862 his troops of horse, accoutred as he was, 863 rode hot-haste to the turmoil of the camp, 864 nor could his guards restrain . “What madness now? 865 What is it ye would do?” he cried. “Alas! 866 Ill-fated women! Not our enemies,
5.841	841 insonti; puppique deus consedit in alta, 842 Phorbanti similis, funditque has ore loquelas: 843 Iaside Palinure, ferunt ipsa aequora classem; 844 aequatae spirant aurae; datur hora quieti. 845 Pone caput, fessosque oculos furare labori: 846 ipse ego paulisper pro te tua munera inibo. 847 Cui vix attollens Palinurus lumina fatur: 848 Mene salis placidi voltum fluctusque quietos 849 ignorare iubes? Mene huic confidere monstro? 850 Aenean credam quid enim fallacibus auris 851 et caelo, totiens deceptus fraude sereni? 852 Talia dicta dabat, clavumque affixus et haerens 853 nusquam amittebat, oculosque sub	867 nor the dread bulwarks of the Greek ye burn, 868 but all ye have to hope for. Look at me, 869 your own Ascanius!” His helmet then 870 into their midst he flung, which he had worn 871 for pageantry of war. Aeneas, too, 872 with Trojan bands sped thither. But far off, 873 the women, panic-scattered on the shore, 874 fled many ways, and deep in caverned crags 875 or shadowed forests hid them, for they Ioathed 876 their deed and life itself; their thoughts were changed; 877 they knew their kin and husbands, and their hearts 878 from Juno were set free. But none the less 879 the burning and indomitable flames 880 raged without stay; beneath the ships' smeared sides 881 the hempen fuel puffed a lingering smoke, 882 as, through the whole bulk creeping, the slow fire 883 devoured its way; and little it availed 884 that strong men fought the fire with stream on stream. 885 Then good Aeneas from his shoulder rent 886 his garment, and astra tenebat. 854 Ecce deus ramum Lethaeo rore madentem, 855 vique soporatum Stygia, super utraque quassat 856 tempora, cunctantique natantia lumina solvit. 857 Vix primos inopina quies laxaverat artus, 858 et super incumbens cum puppis parte revolsa, 859 cumque gubernaclo, liquidas proiecit in undas 860 praecipitem ac socios nequiquam saepe vocantem; 861 ipse volans tenues se sustulit ales ad auras. 862 Currit iter tutum non secius aequore classis, 863 promissisque patris Neptuni interrita fertur. 864 Iamque adeo scopulos Sirenum advecta subibat, 865 difficiles quondam multorumque ossibus albos, 866 tum rauca adsiduo longe sale saxa sonabant: 867 cum pater amisso fluitantem errare magistro 868 sensit, et ipse ratem nocturnis rexit in undis, 869 multa gemens, casuque animum concussus amici 870 O nimium caelo et pelago confise sereno,	with lifted hands implored 887 the help of Heaven. “O Jove omnipotent! 888 If thou not yet thy wrath implacable 889 on every Trojan pourest, if thou still 890 hast pity, as of old, for what men bear, 891 O, grant my fleet deliverance from this flame! 892 From uttermost destruction, Father, save 893 our desperate Trojan cause! Or even now — 894 last cruelty! thy fatal thunders throw. 895 If this be my just meed, let thy dread arm 896 confound us all.” But scarce the prayer is said,

5.871	871 nudus in ignota, Palinure, iacebis harena!
6.1	1 Sic fatur lacrimans, classique immittit habenas, 2 et tandem Euboïcis Cumarum adlabitur oris. 3 Obvertunt pelago proras; tum dente tenaci 4 ancora fundabat naves, et litora curvae 5 praetexunt puppes. Iuvenum manus emicat ardens 6 litus in Hesperium; quaerit pars semina flammae 7 abstrusa in venis silicis, pars densa ferarum 8 tecta rapit silvas, inventaque flumina monstrat. 9 At pius Aeneas arces, quibus altus Apollo 10 praesidet, horrendaeque procul secreta Sibyllae	1 After such words and tears, he flung free rein 2 To the swift fleet, which sped along the wave 3 To old Euboean Cumae's sacred shore. 4 They veer all prows to sea; the anchor fluke 5 Makes each ship sure, and shading the long strand 6 The rounded sterns jut o'er. Impetuously 7 The eager warriors leap forth to land 8 Upon Hesperian soil. One strikes the flint 9 To find the seed-spark hidden in its veins; 10 One breaks the thick-branched trees, and steals away 11 The shelter where the woodland creatures bide; 12 One leads his mates where living waters flow. 13 Aeneas, servant of the gods, ascends 14 The templed hill where lofty Phoebus reigns, 15 And that far-off, inviolable shrine 16 Of dread Sibylla, in stupendous cave, 17 O'er whose deep

	11 antrum immane petit, magnum cui mentem animumque 12 Delius inspirat vates, aperitque futura. 13 Iam subeunt Triviae lucos atque aurea tecta. 14 Daedalus, ut fama est, fugiens Minoïa regna, 15 praepetibus pennis ausus se credere caelo, 16 insuetum per iter gelidas enavit ad Arctos, 17 Chalcidicaque levis tandem super adstitit arce. 18 Redditus his primum terris, tibi, Phoebe, sacravit 19 remigium alarum, posuitque immania templa. 20 In foribus letum Androgeo: tum pendere poenas 21 Cecropidae iussi—miserum!— septena quotannis 22 corpora natorum; stat ductis sortibus urna. 23 Contra elata mari respondet Gnosia tellus: 24 hic crudelis amor tauri, suppostaque furto 25 Pasiphaë, mixtumque genus prolesque biformis 26 Minotaurus inest, Veneris monumenta nefandae; 27 hic labor ille domus et inextricabilis error; 28 magnum reginae sed enim miseratus amorem 29 Daedalus ipse dolos tecti ambagesque resolvit, 30 caeca regens filo vestigia. Tu quoque magnam	soul the god of Delos breathes 18 Prophetic gifts, unfolding things to come. 19 Here are pale Trivia's golden house and grove.
6.31	31 partem opere in tanto, sineret dolor, Icare, haberes. 32 Bis conatus erat casus effingere in auro; 33 bis patriae cecidere manus. Quin protinus omnia 34 perlegerent oculis, ni iam praemissus Achates 35 adforet, atque una Phoebi Triviaeque sacerdos, 36 Deiphobe Glauci, fatur quae talia regi: 37 Non hoc ista sibi tempus spectacula poscit; 38 nunc grege de intacto septem mactare iuvencos 39 praestiterit, totidem lectas de more bidentes.	20 Here Daedalus, the ancient story tells, 21 Escaping Minos' power, and having made 22 Hazard of heaven on far-mounting wings, 23 Floated to northward, a cold, trackless way, 24 And lightly poised, at last, o'er Cumae's towers. 25 Here first to earth come down, he gave to thee 26 His gear of wings, Apollo! and ordained 27 Vast temples to thy name and altars fair. 28 On huge bronze doors Androgeos' death was done; 29 And Cecrops' children paid their debt of woe, 30 Where, seven and seven,—0 pitiable sight!— 31 The youths and maidens wait the annual doom, 32 Drawn out by lot from yonder marble urn. 33 Beyond, above a sea, lay carven Crete:— 34 The

	40 Talibus adfata Aenean (nec sacra morantur 41 iussa viri), Teucros vocat alta in templa sacerdos. 42 Excisum Euboicae latus ingens rupis in antrum, 43 quo lati ducunt aditus centum, ostia centum; 44 unde ruunt totidem voces, responsa Sibyllae. 45 Ventum erat ad limen, cum virgo. Poscere fata 46 tempus ait; deus, ecce, deus! Cui talia fanti 47 ante fores subito non voltus, non color unus, 48 non comptae mansere comae; sed pectus anhelum, 49 et rabie fera corda tument; maiorque videri, 50 nec mortale sonans, adflata est numine quando 51 iam propiore dei. Cessas in vota precesque, 52 Tros ait Aenea? Cessas? Neque enim ante dehiscent 53 attonitae magna ora domus. Et talia fata 54 conticuit. Gelidus Teucris per dura cucurrit 55 ossa tremor, funditque preces rex pectore ab imo: 56 Phoebe, graves Troiae semper miserate labores, 57 Dardana qui Paridis direxti tela manusque 58 corpus in Aeacidae, magnas obeuntia terras 59 tot maria intravi duce te, penitusque repostas 60 Massylum gentes praetentaque Syrtibus arva,	bull was there; the passion, the strange guile; 35 And Queen Pasiphae's brute-human son, 36 The Minotaur—of monstrous loves the sign. 37 Here was the toilsome, labyrinthine maze, 38 Where, pitying love-lorn Ariadne's tears, 39 The crafty Daedalus himself betrayed 40 The secret of his work; and gave the clue 41 To guide the path of Theseus through the gloom. 42 0 Icarus, in such well-graven scene 43 How proud thy place should be! but grief forbade: 44 Twice in pure gold a father's fingers strove 45 To shape thy fall, and twice they strove in vain. 46 Aeneas long the various work would scan; 47 But now Achates comes, and by his side 48 Deiphobe, the Sibyl, Glaucus' child. 49 Thus to the prince she spoke : 50 “Is this thine hour 51 To stand and wonder? Rather go obtain 52 From young unbroken herd the bullocks seven, 53 And seven yearling ewes, our wonted way.” 54 Thus to Aeneas; his attendants haste 55 To work her will; the priestess, calling loud, 56 Gathers the Trojans to her mountain-shrine. 57 Deep in the face of that Euboean crag 58 A cavern vast is hollowed out amain, 59 With hundred openings, a hundred mouths, 60 Whence voices flow, the Sibyl's answering songs. 61 While at the door they paused, the virgin cried : 62 “Ask now thy doom!—the god! the god is nigh!” 63 So saying, from her face its color flew, 64 Her twisted locks flowed free, the heaving breast 65 Swelled with her heart's wild blood; her stature seemed 66 Vaster, her accent more than mortal man, 67 As all th' oncoming god around her breathed : 68 “On with thy vows and prayers, 0 Trojan, on! 69 For only unto prayer this haunted cave 70 May its vast lips unclose.” She spake no more. 71 An icy shudder through the marrow ran 72 Of the bold Trojans; while their sacred King 73 Poured from his inmost soul this plaint and prayer : 74 “Phoebus, who ever for the woes of Troy 75 Hadst pitying eyes! who gavest deadly aim 76 To Paris when his Dardan shaft he hurled 77 On great Achilles! Thou hast guided me 78 Through many an unknown water, where the seas 79 Break upon kingdoms vast, and to the tribes 80 Of the remote Massyli, whose wild land 81

		To Syrtes spreads. But now; because at last 82 I touch Hesperia's ever-fleeting bound, 83 May Troy's ill fate forsake me from this day! 84 0 gods and goddesses, beneath whose wrath 85 Dardania's glory and great Ilium stood, 86 Spare, for ye may, the remnant of my race!
6.61	61 iam tandem Italiae fugientis prendimus oras; 62 hac Troiana tenus fuerit Fortuna secuta. 63 Vos quoque Pergameae iam fas est parcere genti, 64 dique deaeque omnes quibus obstitit Ilium et ingens 65 gloria Dardaniae. Tuque, O sanctissima vates, 66 praescia venturi, da, non indebita posco 67 regna meis fatis, Latio considere Teucros 68 errantisque deos agitataque numina Troiae. 69 Tum Phoebo et Triviae solido de marmore templum 70 instituam, festosque dies de nomine Phoebi. 71 Te quoque magna manent regnis penetralia nostris: 72 hic ego namque tuas sortes arcanaque fata, 73 dicta meae genti, ponam, lectosque sacrabo, 74 alma, viros. Foliis tantum ne carmina manda, 75 ne turbata volent rapidis ludibria ventis; 76 ipsa canas oro. Finem dedit ore loquendi. 77 At, Phoebi nondum patiens, immanis in antro 78 bacchatur vates, magnum si pectore possit 79 excussisse deum; tanto magis ille fatigat 80 os rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo. 81 Ostia iamque domus patuere ingentia centum 82 sponte sua, vatisque ferunt responsa per auras: 83 O tandem magnis pelagi defuncte periclis! 84 Sed terrae graviora manent. In regna Lavini 85 Dardanidae venient; mitte hanc de pectore curam;	87 And thou, most holy prophetess, whose soul 88 Foreknows events to come, grant to my prayer 89 (Which asks no kingdom save what Fate decrees) 90 That I may stablish in the Latin land 91 My Trojans, my far-wandering household-gods, 92 And storm-tossed deities of fallen Troy. 93 Then unto Phoebus and his sister pale 94 A temple all of marble shall be given, 95 And festal days to Phoebus evermore. 96 Thee also in my realms a spacious shrine 97 Shall honor; thy dark books and holy songs 98 I there will keep, to be my people's law; 99 And thee, benignant Sibyl for all time 100 A company of chosen priests shall serve. 101 O, not on leaves, light leaves, inscribe thy songs! 102 Lest, playthings of each breeze, they fly afar 103 In swift confusion! Sing thyself, I pray.” 104 So ceased his voice;the virgin through the cave, 105 Scarce bridled yet by Phoebus' hand divine, 106 Ecstatic swept along, and vainly stove 107 To fing its potent master from her breast; 108 But he more strongly plied his rein and curb 109 Upon her frenzied lips, and soon subdued 110 Her spirit fierce, and swayed her at his will. 111 Free and self-moved the cavern's hundred adoors 112 Swung open wide, and uttered to the air 113 The oracles the virgin-priestess sung : 114 “Thy long sea-perils thou hast safely passed; 115 But heavier woes await thee on the land. 116 Truly thy Trojans to Lavinian shore

	86 sed non et venisse volent. Bella, horrida bella, 87 et Thybrim multo spumantem sanguine cerno. 88 Non Simois tibi, nec Xanthus, nec Dorica castra 89 defuerint; alius Latio iam partus Achilles, 90 natus et ipse dea; nec Teucris addita Iuno
6.91	91 usquam aberit; cum tu supplex in rebus egenis 92 quas gentes Italum aut quas non oraveris urbes! 93 Causa mali tanti coniunx iterum hospita Teucris 94 externique iterum thalami. 95 Tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito, 96 qua tua te Fortuna sinet. Via prima salutis, 97 quod minime reris, Graia pandetur ab urbe. 98 Talibus ex adyto dictis Cumaea Sibylla 99 horrendas canit ambages antroque remugit, 100 obscuris vera involvens: ea frena furenti 101 concutit, et stimulos sub pectore vertit Apollo. 102 Ut primum cessit furor et rabida ora quierunt, 103 incipit Aeneas heros: Non ulla laborum, 104 O virgo, nova mi facies inopinave surgit; 105 omnia praecepi atque animo mecum ante peregi. 106 Unum oro: quando hic inferni ianua regis 107 dicitur, et tenebrosa palus Acheronte refuso, 108 ire ad conspectum cari genitoris et ora 109 contingat; doceas iter et sacra ostia pandas. 110 Illum ego per flammas et mille sequentia tela 111 eripui his umeris, medioque ex hoste recepi; 112 ille meum comitatus iter, maria omnia mecum 113 atque omnes pelagique minas caelique ferebat, 114 invalidus, vires ultra sortemque senectae. 115 Quin, ut te supplex peterem et tua	117 Shall come—vex not thyself thereon—but, oh! 118 Shall rue their coming thither! war, red war! 119 And Tiber stained with bloody foam I see. 120 Simois, Xanthus, and the Dorian horde 121 Thou shalt behold; a new Achilles now 122 In Latium breathes,—he, too, of goddess born; 123 And Juno, burden of the sons of Troy, 124 Will vex them ever; while thyself shalt sue 125 In dire distress to many a town and tribe 126 Through Italy; the cause of so much ill 127 Again shall be a hostess-queen, again 128 A marriage-chamber for an alien bride. 129 Oh! yield not to thy woe, but front it ever, 130 And follow boldly whither Fortune calls. 131 Thy way of safety, as thou least couldst dream, 132 Lies through a city of the Greeks, thy foes.”

	limina adirem, 116 idem orans mandata dabat. Gnatique patrisque, 117 alma, precor, miserere;—potes namque omnia, nec te 118 nequiquam lucis Hecate praefecit Avernis;— 119 si potuit Manes arcessere coniugis Orpheus, 120 Threïcia fretus cithara fidibusque canoris, 6.121	121 si fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit, 122 itque reditque viam totiens. Quid Thesea, magnum 123 quid memorem Alciden? Et mi genus ab Iove summo. 124 Talibus orabat dictis, arasque tenebat, 125 cum sic orsa loqui vates: Sate sanguine divom, 126 Tros Anchisiade, facilis descensus Averno; 127 noctes atque dies patet atri ianua Ditis; 128 sed revocare gradum superasque evadere ad auras, 129 hoc opus, hic labor est. Pauci, quos aequus amavit 130 Iuppiter, aut ardens evexit ad aethera virtus, 131 dis geniti potuere. Tenent media omnia silvae, 132 Cocytusque sinu labens circumvenit atro. 133 Quod si tantus amor menti, si tanta cupido est, 134 bis Stygios innare lacus, bis nigra videre 135 Tartara, et insano iuvat indulgere labori, 136 accipe, quae peragenda prius. Latet arbore opaca 137 aureus et foliis et lento vimine ramus, 138 Iunoni infernae dictus sacer; hunc tegit omnis 139 lucus, et obscuris claudunt convallibus umbrae. 140 Sed non ante datur telluris operta subire, 141 auricomos quam quis decerpserit arbore fetus. 142 Hoc sibi pulchra suum ferri Proserpina munus 143 instituit. Primo avulso non deficit alter 144 aureus, et simili frondescit virga	133 Thus from her shrine Cumaea's prophetess 134 Chanted the dark decrees; the dreadful sound 135 Reverberated through the bellowing cave, 136 Commingling truth with ecstasies obscure. 137 Apollo, as she raged, flung loosened rein, 138 And thrust beneath her heart a quickening spur. 139 When first her madness ceased, and her wild lips 140 Were still at last, the hero thus began : 141 “No tribulations new, 0 Sibyl blest, 142 Can now confront me; every future pain 143 I have foretasted; my prophetic soul 144 Endured each stroke of fate before it fell. 145 One boon I ask. If of th' infernal King 146 This be the portal where the murky wave 147 Of swollen Acheron o'erflows its bound, 148 Here let me enter and behold the face 149 Of my loved sire. Thy hand may point the way; 150 Thy word will open wide yon holy doors. 151 My father through the flames and falling spears, 152 Straight through the centre of our foes, I bore 153 Upon these shoulders. My long flight he shared 154 From sea to sea, and suffered at my side 155 The anger of rude waters and dark skies,— 156 Though weak—0 task too great for old and gray! 157 Thus as a suppliant at thy door to stand, 158 Was his behest and prayer. On son and sire, 159 0 gracious one, have pity,—for thy rule 160 Is over all; no vain authority 161 Hadst thou from Trivia o'er th' Avernian groves. 162 If Orpheus could call back his loved one's shade, 163 Emboldened by the lyre's melodious string : 164 If Pollux by the interchange of death 165 Redeemed his twin, and oft repassed the way : 166 If Theseus—but why name him? why recall 167 Alcides' task? I, too, am sprung from Jove.”

	metallo. 145 Ergo alte vestiga oculis, et rite repertum 146 carpe manu; namque ipse volens facilisque sequetur, 147 si te fata vocant; aliter non viribus ullis 148 vincere, nec duro poteris convellere ferro. 149 Praeterea iacet exanimum tibi corpus amici— 150 heu nescis—totamque incestat funere classem, 6.151	151 dum consulta petis nostroque in limine pendes. 152 Sedibus hunc refer ante suis et conde sepulchro. 153 Duc nigras pecudes; ea prima piacula sunto: 154 sic demum lucos Stygis et regna invia vivis 155 aspicies. Dixit, pressoque obmutuit ore. 156 Aeneas maesto defixus lumina voltu 157 ingreditur, linquens antrum, caecosque volutat 158 eventus animo secum. Cui fidus Achates 159 it comes, et paribus curis vestigia figit. 160 Multa inter sese vario sermone serebant, 161 quem socium exanimem vates, quod corpus humandum 162 diceret. Atque illi Misenum in litore sicco, 163 ut venere, vident indigna morte peremptum, 164 Misenum Aeoliden, quo non praestantior alter 165 aere ciere viros, Martemque accendere cantu. 166 Hectoris hic magni fuerat comes, Hectora circum 167 et lituo pugnas insignis obibat et hasta: 168 postquam illum vita victor spoliavit Achilles, 169 Dardanio Aeneae sese fortissimus heros 170 addiderat socium, non inferiora secutus. 171 Sed tum, forte cava dum personat aequora concha, 172 demens, et cantu vocat in certamina divos, 173 aemulus exceptum Triton, si	168 Thus, to the altar clinging, did he pray : 169 The Sibyl thus replied : “Offspring of Heaven, 170 Anchises' son, the downward path to death 171 Is easy; all the livelong night and day 172 Dark Pluto's door stands open for a guest. 173 But 0! remounting to the world of light, 174 This is a task indeed, a strife supreme. 175 Few, very few, whom righteous Jove did bless, 176 Or quenchless virtue carried to the stars, 177 Children of gods, have such a victory won. 178 Grim forests stop the way, and, gliding slow, 179 Cocytus circles through the sightless gloom. 180 But if it be thy dream and fond desire 181 Twice o'er the Stygian gulf to travel, twice 182 On glooms of Tartarus to set thine eyes, 183 If such mad quest be now thy pleasure—hear 184 What must be first fulfilled . A certain tree 185 Hides in obscurest shade a golden bough, 186 Of pliant stems and many a leaf of gold, 187 Sacred to Proserpine, infernal Queen. 188 Far in the grove it hides; in sunless vale 189 Deep shadows keep it in captivity. 190 No pilgrim to that underworld can pass 191 But he who plucks this burgeoned, leafy gold; 192 For this hath beauteous Proserpine ordained 193 Her chosen gift to be. Whene'er it is culled, 194 A branch out-leafing in like golden gleam, 195 A second wonder-stem, fails not to spring. 196 Therefore go seek it with uplifted eyes! 197 And when by will of Heaven thou findest it, 198 Reach forth and pluck; for at a touch it yields, 199 A free and willing gift, if Fate ordain; 200 But otherwise no mortal strength avails, 201 Nor strong, sharp steel, to rend it from the tree. 202 Another task awaits; thy friend's cold clay 203 Lies unentombed. Alas! thou art not ware 204 (While in my house thou lingerest, credere dignum est, 174 inter saxa virum spumosa inmerserat unda. 175 Ergo omnes magno circum clamore fremebant, 176 praecipue pius Aeneas. Tum iussa Sibyllae, 177 haud mora, festinant flentes, aramque sepulchri 178 congerere arboribus caeloque educere certant. 179 Itur in antiquam silvam, stabula alta ferarum; 180 procumbunt piceae, sonat icta securibus ilex,	seeking light) 205 That all thy ships are by his death defiled. 206 Unto his resting-place and sepulchre, 207 Go, carry him! And sable victims bring, 208 In expiation, to his mournful shade. 209 So at the last on yonder Stygian groves, 210 And realms to things that breathe impassable, 211 Thine eye shall gaze.” So closed her lips inspired.

6.181	181 fraxineaeque trabes cuneis et fissile robur 182 scinditur, advolvunt ingentis montibus ornos. 183 Nec non Aeneas opera inter talia primus 184 hortatur socios, paribusque accingitur armis. 185 Atque haec ipse suo tristi cum corde volutat, 186 aspectans silvam inmensam, et sic voce precatur: 187 Si nunc se nobis ille aureus arbore ramus 188 ostendat nemore in tanto, quando omnia vere 189 heu nimium de te vates, Misene, locuta est. 190 Vix ea fatus erat, geminae cum forte columbae 191 ipsa sub ora viri caelo venere volantes, 192 et viridi sedere solo. Tum maximus heros 193 maternas agnoscit aves, laetusque precatur: 194 Este duces, O, si qua via est, cursumque per auras 195 dirigite in lucos, ubi pinguem dives opacat 196 ramus humum. Tuque, O, dubiis ne defice rebus, 197 diva parens. Sic effatus vestigia pressit, 198 observans quae signa ferant, quo tendere pergant. 199 Pascentes illae tantum prodire volando, 200 quantum acie possent oculi servare sequentum. 201 Inde ubi venere ad fauces grave olentis Averni, 202 tollunt se celeres, liquidumque per aëra lapsae 203 sedibus optatis geminae super arbore sidunt, 204 discolor unde auri per ramos aura refulsit. 205 Quale solet silvis brumali frigore viscum 206 fronde virere nova, quod non sua seminat arbos, 207 et croceo fetu teretis circumdare truncos, 208 talis erat species auri frondentis opaca 209 ilice, sic leni crepitabat brattea vento. 210 Corripit Aeneas extemplo avidusque refringit

6.211	211 cunctantem, et vatis portat sub tecta Sibyllae. 212 Nec minus interea Misenum in litore Teucri 213 flebant, et cineri ingrato suprema ferebant. 214 Principio pinguem taedis et robore secto 215 ingentem struxere pyram, cui frondibus atris 216 intexunt latera, et ferales ante cupressos 217 constituunt, decorantque super fulgentibus armis. 218 Pars calidos latices et aëna undantia flammis 219 expediunt, corpusque lavant frigentis et unguunt. 220 Fit gemitus. Tum membra toro defleta reponunt, 221 purpureasque super vestes, velamina nota, 222 coniciunt. Pars ingenti subiere feretro, 223 triste ministerium, et subiectam more parentum 224 aversi tenuere facem. Congesta cremantur 225 turea dona, dapes, fuso crateres olivo. 226 Postquam conlapsi cineres et flamma quievit 227 reliquias vino et bibulam lavere favillam, 228 ossaque lecta cado texit Corynaeus aëno. 229 Idem ter socios pura circumtulit unda, 230 spargens rore levi et ramo felicis olivae, 231 lustravitque viros, dixitque	212 Aeneas then drew forth, with downcast eyes, 213 From that dark cavern, pondering in his heart 214 The riddle of his fate. His faithful friend 215 Achates at his side, with paces slow, 216 Companioned all his care, while their sad souls 217 Made mutual and oft-renewed surmise 218 What comrade dead, what cold and tombless clay, 219 The Sibyl's word would show. 220 But as they mused, 221 Behold Misenus on the dry sea-sands, 222 By hasty hand of death struck guiltless down! 223 A son of Aeolus, none better knew 224 To waken heroes by the clarion's call, 225 With war-enkindling sound. Great Hector's friend 226 In happier days, he oft at Hector's side 227 Strode to the fight with glittering lance and horn. 228 But when Achilles stripped his fallen foe, 229 This dauntless hero to Aeneas gave 230 Allegiance true, in not less noble cause. 231 But, on a day, he chanced beside the sea 232 To blow his shell-shaped horn, and wildly dared 233 Challenge the gods themselves to rival song; 234 Till jealous Triton, if the tale be true, 235 Grasped the rash mortal, and out-flung him far 236 'mid surf-beat rocks and waves of whirling foam. 237 Now from all sides, with tumult and loud cry, 238 The Trojans came,— Aeneas leading all 239 In faithful grief; they hasten to fulfil 240 The Sibyl's mandate, and with many a tear 241 Build, altar-wise, a pyre, of tree on tree 242 Heaped high as heaven : then they penetrate 243 The tall, old forest, where wild creatures bide, 244 And fell pitch-pines, or with resounding blows 245 Of axe and wedge, cleave oak and

	novissima verba. 232 At pius Aeneas ingenti mole sepulcrum 233 imponit, suaque arma viro, remumque tubamque, 234 monte sub aërio, qui nunc Misenus ab illo 235 dicitur, aeternumque tenet per saecula nomen. 236 His actis, propere exsequitur praecepta Sibyllae. 237 Spelunca alta fuit vastoque immanis hiatu, 238 scrupea, tuta lacu nigro nemorumque tenebris, 239 quam super haud ullae poterant impune volantes 240 tendere iter pennis—talis sese halitus atris	ash-tree through, 246 Or logs of rowan down the mountains roll.
6.241	241 faucibus effundens supera ad convexa ferebat: 242 243 quattuor hic primum nigrantis terga iuvencos 244 constituit, frontique invergit vina sacerdos; 245 et summas carpens media inter cornua saetas 246 ignibus imponit sacris, libamina prima, 247 voce vocans Hecaten, Caeloque Ereboque potentem. 248 Supponunt alii cultros, tepidumque cruorem 249 suscipiunt pateris. Ipse atri velleris agnam 250 Aeneas matri Eumenidum magnaeque sorori 251 ense ferit, sterilemque tibi. Proserpina, vaccam. 252 Tum Stygio regi nocturnas inchoat aras, 253 et solida imponit taurorum viscera flammis, 254 pingue superque oleum infundens ardentibus extis. 255 Ecce autem, primi sub lumina solis et ortus, 256 sub pedibus mugire solum, et iuga coepta moveri 257 silvarum, visaeque canes ululare per umbram, 258 adventante dea. Procul O procul este, profani, 259 conclamat vates, totoque absistite luco; 260 tuque invade viam, vaginaque eripe ferrum:	247 Aeneas oversees and shares the toil, 248 Cheers on his mates, and swings a woodman's steel. 249 But, sad at heart with many a doubt and care, 250 O'erlooks the forest wide; then prays aloud : 251 “0, that the Golden Bough from this vast grove 252 Might o'er me shine! For, 0 Aeolides, 253 The oracle foretold thy fate, too well!” 254 Scarce had he spoken, when a pair of doves 255 Before his very eyes flew down from heaven 256 To the green turf below; the prince of Troy 257 Knew them his mother's birds, and joyful cried, 258 “0, guide me on, whatever path there be! 259 In airy travel through the woodland fly, 260 To where yon rare branch shades the blessed ground. 261 Fail thou not me, in this my doubtful hour, 262 0 heavenly mother!” So saying, his steps lie stayed, 263 Close watching whither they should signal give; 264 The lightly-feeding doves flit on and on, 265 Ever in easy ken of following eyes, 266 Till over foul Avernus' sulphurous throat 267 Swiftly they lift them through the liquid air, 268 In silent flight, and find a wished-for rest 269 On a twy-natured tree, where through green boughs 270 Flames forth the glowing gold's contrasted hue. 271 As in the wintry woodland bare and chill, 272 Fresh-budded shines the clinging mistletoe, 273 Whose seed is never from the parent tree 274 O'er whose round limbs its tawny tendrils twine,— 275 So shone th' out-leafing gold within the shade 276 Of dark holm-oak, and so its tinsel-

	261 nunc animis opus, Aenea, nunc pectore firmo. 262 Tantum effata, furens antro se immisit aperto; 263 ille ducem haud timidis vadentem passibus aequat. 264 Di, quibus imperium est animarum, umbraeque silentes, 265 et Chaos, et Phlegethon, loca nocte tacentia late, 266 sit mihi fas audita loqui; sit numine vestro 267 pandere res alta terra et caligine mersas! 268 Ibant obscuri sola sub nocte per umbram, 269 perque domos Ditis vacuas et inania regna: 270 quale per incertam lunam sub luce maligna	bract 277 Rustled in each light breeze. Aeneas grasped 278 The lingering bough, broke it in eager haste, 279 And bore it straightway to the Sibyl's shrine.
6.271	271 est iter in silvis, ubi caelum condidit umbra 272 Iuppiter, et rebus nox abstulit atra colorem. 273 Vestibulum ante ipsum, primisque in faucibus Orci 274 Luctus et ultrices posuere cubilia Curae; 275 pallentesque habitant Morbi, tristisque Senectus, 276 et Metus, et malesuada Fames, ac turpis Egestas, 277 terribiles visu formae: Letumque, Labosque; 278 tum consanguineus Leti Sopor, et mala mentis 279 Gaudia, mortiferumque adverso in limine Bellum, 280 ferreique Eumenidum thalami, et Discordia demens, 281 vipereum crinem vittis innexa cruentis. 282 In medio ramos annosaque brachia pandit 283 ulmus opaca, ingens, quam sedem Somnia volgo 284 vana tenere ferunt, foliisque sub omnibus haerent. 285 Multaque praeterea variarum monstra ferarum: 286 Centauri in foribus stabulant, Scyllaeque biformes, 287 et centumgeminus Briareus, ac belua Lernae 288 horrendum stridens, flammisque armata Chimaera, 289 Gorgones Harpyiaeque et forma tricorporis umbrae.	280 Meanwhile the Trojans on the doleful shore 281 Bewailed Misenus, and brought tribute there 282 Of grief's last gift to his unheeding clay. 283 First, of the full-sapped pine and well-hewn oak 284 A lofty pyre they build; then sombre boughs 285 Around it wreathe, and in fair order range 286 Funereal cypress; glittering arms are piled 287 High over all; on blazing coals they lift 288 Cauldrons of brass brimmed o'er with waters pure; 289 And that cold, lifeless clay lave and anoint 290 With many a moan and cry; on their last couch 291 The poor, dead limbs they lay, and mantle o'er 292 With purple vesture and familiar pall. 293 Then in sad ministry the chosen few, 294 With eyes averted, as our sires did use, 295 Hold the enkindling torch beneath the pyre : 296 They gather up and burn the gifts of myrrh, 297 The sacred bread and bowls of flowing oil; 298 And when in flame the dying embers fall, 299 On thirsty ash they pour the streams of wine. 300 Good Corynaeus, in an urn of brass 301 The gathered relics hides; and three times round, 302 With blessed olive branch and sprinkling dew, 303 Purges the people with ablution cold, 304 In lustral rite; oft chanting, “Hail! Farewell!” 305 Faithful Aeneas for his comrade built 306 A mighty tomb, and dedicated there 307 Trophy of arms, with trumpet and with oar, 308 Beneath a windy hill, which now is called 309 “Misenus,”— for all time the name to bear.

	290 Corripit hic subita trepidus formidine ferrum 291 Aeneas, strictamque aciem venientibus offert, 292 et, ni docta comes tenues sine corpore vitas 293 admoneat volitare cava sub imagine formae, 294 inruat, et frustra ferro diverberet umbras. 295 Hinc via, Tartarei quae fert Acherontis ad undas. 296 Turbidus hic caeno vastaque voragine gurges 297 aestuat, atque omnem Cocyto eructat harenam. 298 Portitor has horrendus aquas et flumina servat 299 terribili squalore Charon, cui plurima mento 300 canities inculta iacet; stant lumina flamma,
6.301	301 sordidus ex umeris nodo dependet amictus. 302 Ipse ratem conto subigit, velisque ministrat, 303 et ferruginea subvectat corpora cymba, 304 iam senior, sed cruda deo viridisque senectus. 305 Huc omnis turba ad ripas effusa ruebat, 306 matres atque viri, defunctaque corpora vita 307 magnanimum heroum, pueri innuptaeque puellae, 308 impositique rogis iuvenes ante ora parentum: 309 quam multa in silvis autumni frigore primo 310 lapsa cadunt folia, aut ad terram gurgite ab alto 311 quam multae glomerantur aves, ubi frigidus annus 312 trans pontum fugat, et terris immittit apricis. 313 Stabant orantes primi transmittere cursum, 314 tendebantque manus ripae ulterioris amore. 315 Navita sed tristis nunc hos nunc accipit illos, 316 ast alios longe submotos arcet harena. 317 Aeneas, miratus enim motusque tumultu, 318 Dic ait O virgo, quid volt concursus ad amnem?	310 After these toils, they hasten to fulfil 311 What else the Sibyl said. Straightway they find 312 A cave profound, of entrance gaping wide, 313 O'erhung with rock, in gloom of sheltering grove, 314 Near the dark waters of a lake, whereby 315 No bird might ever pass with scathless wing, 316 So dire an exhalation is breathed out 317 From that dark deep of death to upper air :— 318 Hence, in the Grecian tongue, Aornos called. 319 Here first four youthful bulls of swarthy hide 320 Were led for sacrifice; on each broad brow 321 The priestess sprinkled wine; 'twixt the two horns 322 Outplucked the lifted hair, and cast it forth 323 Upon the holy flames, beginning so 324 Her offerings; then loudly sued the power 325 of Hecate, a Queen in heaven and hell. 326 Some struck with knives, and caught in shallow bowls 327 The smoking blood. Aeneas' lifted hand 328 Smote with a sword a sable-fleeced ewe 329 To Night, the mother of th' Eumenides, 330 And Earth, her sister dread; next unto thee, 331 O Proserpine, a curst and barren cow; 332 Then unto Pluto, Stygian King, he built 333 An altar dark, and piled upon the flames 334 The ponderous entrails of the bulls, and poured 335 Free o'er the burning flesh the goodly oil. 336 Then lo! at dawn's dim, earliest beam began 337 Beneath their feet a groaning of the ground :

	319 Quidve petunt animae, vel quo discrimine ripas 320 hae linquunt, illae remis vada livida verrunt? 321 Olli sic breviter fata est longaeva sacerdos: 322 Anchisa generate, deum certissima proles, 323 Cocyti stagna alta vides Stygiamque paludem, 324 di cuius iurare timent et fallere numen. 325 Haec omnis, quam cernis, inops inhumataque turba est; 326 portitor ille Charon; hi, quos vehit unda, sepulti. 327 Nec ripas datur horrendas et rauca fluenta 328 transportare prius quam sedibus ossa quierunt. 329 Centum errant annos volitantque haec litora circum; 330 tum demum admissi stagna exoptata revisunt.	338 The wooded hill-tops shook, and, as it seemed, 339 She-hounds of hell howled viewless through the shade , 340 To hail their Queen. “Away, 0 souls profane! 341 Stand far away!” the priestess shrieked, “nor dare 342 Unto this grove come near! Aeneas, on! 343 Begin thy journey! Draw thy sheathed blade! 344 Now, all thy courage! now, th' unshaken soul!” 345 She spoke, and burst into the yawning cave 346 With frenzied step; he follows where she leads, 347 And strides with feet unfaltering at her side.
6.331	331 Constitit Anchisa satus et vestigia pressit, 332 multa putans, sortemque animo miseratus iniquam. 333 Cernit ibi maestos et mortis honore carentes 334 Leucaspim et Lyciae ductorem classis Oronten, 335 quos, simul ab Troia ventosa per aequora vectos, 336 obruit Auster, aqua involvens navemque virosque. 337 Ecce gubernator sese Palinurus agebat, 338 qui Libyco nuper cursu, dum sidera servat, 339 exciderat puppi mediis effusus in undis. 340 Hunc ubi vix multa maestum cognovit in umbra, 341 sic prior adloquitur: Quis te, Palinure, deorum 342 eripuit nobis, medioque sub aequore mersit? 343 Dic age. Namque mihi, fallax haud ante repertus, 344 hoc uno responso animum delusit Apollo, 345 qui fore te ponto incolumem, finesque canebat 346 venturum Ausonios. En haec promissa fides est? 347 Ille autem: Neque te Phoebi cortina fefellit,	348 Ye gods! who rule the spirits of the dead! 349 Ye voiceless shades and silent lands of night! 350 0 Phlegethon! 0 Chaos! let my song, 351 If it be lawful, in fit words declare 352 What I have heard; and by your help divine 353 Unfold what hidden things enshrouded lie 354 In that dark underworld of sightless gloom. 355 They walked exploring the unpeopled night, 356 Through Pluto's vacuous realms, and regions void, 357 As when one's path in dreary woodlands winds 358 Beneath a misty moon's deceiving ray, 359 When Jove has mantled all his heaven in shade, 360 And night seals up the beauty of the world. 361 In the first courts and entrances of Hell 362 Sorrows and vengeful Cares on couches lie : 363 There sad Old Age abides, Diseases pale, 364 And Fear, and Hunger, temptress to all crime; 365 Want, base and vile, and, two dread shapes to see, 366 Bondage and Death : then Sleep, Death's next of kin; 367 And dreams of guilty joy. Death-dealing War 368 Is ever at the doors, and hard thereby 369 The Furies' beds of steel, where wild-eyed Strife 370 Her snaky hair with blood-stained fillet binds.

	348 dux Anchisiade, nec me deus aequore mersit. 349 Namque gubernaclum multa vi forte revolsum, 350 cui datus haerebam custos cursusque regebam, 351 praecipitans traxi mecum. Maria aspera iuro 352 non ullum pro me tantum cepisse timorem, 353 quam tua ne, spoliata armis, excussa magistro, 354 deficeret tantis navis surgentibus undis. 355 Tris Notus hibernas immensa per aequora noctes 356 vexit me violentus aqua; vix lumine quarto 357 prospexi Italiam summa sublimis ab unda. 358 Paulatim adnabam terrae; iam tuta tenebam, 359 ni gens crudelis madida cum veste gravatum 360 prensantemque uncis manibus capita aspera montis
6.361	361 ferro invasisset, praedamque ignara putasset. 362 Nunc me fluctus habet, versantque in litore venti. 363 Quod te per caeli iucundum lumen et auras, 364 per genitorem oro, per spes surgentis Iuli, 365 eripe me his, invicte, malis: aut tu mihi terram 366 inice, namque potes, portusque require Velinos; 367 aut tu, si qua via est, si quam tibi diva creatrix 368 ostendit—neque enim, credo, sine numine divom 369 flumina tanta paras Stygiamque innare paludem— 370 da dextram misero, et tecum me tolle per undas, 371 sedibus ut saltem placidis in morte quiescam. 372 Talia fatus erat, coepit cum talia vates: 373 Unde haec, o Palinure, tibi tam dira cupido? 374 Tu Stygias inhumatus aquas amnemque severum 375 Eumenidum aspicies, ripamve iniussus adibis? 376 Desine fata deum flecti sperare precando.	371 There in the middle court a shadowy elm 372 Its ancient branches spreads, and in its leaves 373 Deluding visions ever haunt and cling. 374 Then come strange prodigies of bestial kind : 375 Centaurs are stabled there, and double shapes 376 Like Scylla, or the dragon Lerna bred, 377 With hideous scream; Briareus clutching far 378 His hundred hands, Chimaera girt with flame, 379 A crowd of Gorgons, Harpies of foul wing, 380 And giant Geryon's triple-monstered shade. 381 Aeneas, shuddering with sudden fear, 382 Drew sword and fronted them with naked steel; 383 And, save his sage conductress bade him know 384 These were but shapes and shadows sweeping by, 385 His stroke had cloven in vain the vacant air. 386 Hence the way leads to that Tartarean stream 387 Of Acheron, whose torrent fierce and foul 388 Disgorges in Cocytus all its sands. 389 A ferryman of gruesome guise keeps ward 390 Upon these waters,—Charon, foully garbed, 391 With unkempt, thick gray beard upon his chin, 392 And staring eyes of flame; a mantle coarse, 393 All stained and knotted, from his shoulder falls, 394 As with a pole he guides his craft, tends sail, 395 And in the black boat ferries

	377 Sed cape dicta memor, duri solatia casus. 378 Nam tua finitimi, longe lateque per urbes 379 prodigiis acti caelestibus, ossa piabunt, 380 et statuent tumulum, et tumulo sollemnia mittent, 381 aeternumque locus Palinuri nomen habebit. 382 His dictis curae emotae, pulsusque parumper 383 corde dolor tristi: gaudet cognomine terrae. 384 Ergo iter inceptum peragunt fluvioque propinquant. 385 Navita quos iam inde ut Stygia prospexit ab unda 386 per tacitum nemus ire pedemque advertere ripae, 387 sic prior adgreditur dictis, atque increpat ultro: 388 Quisquis es, armatus qui nostra ad flumina tendis, 389 fare age, quid venias, iam istinc, et comprime gressum. 390 Umbrarum hic locus est, somni noctisque soporae;	o'er his dead;— 396 Old, but a god's old age looks fresh and strong. 397 To those dim shores the multitude streams on— 398 Husbands and wives, and pale, unbreathing forms 399 Of high-souled heroes, boys and virgins fair, 400 And strong youth at whose graves fond parents mourned. 401 As numberless the throng as leaves that fall 402 When autumn's early frost is on the grove; 403 Or like vast flocks of birds by winter's chill 404 Sent flying o'er wide seas to lands of flowers. 405 All stood beseeching to begin their voyage 406 Across that river, and reached out pale hands, 407 In passionate yearning for its distant shore. 408 But the grim boatman takes now these, now those, 409 Or thrusts unpitying from the stream away. 410 Aeneas, moved to wonder and deep awe, 411 Beheld the tumult; “Virgin seer!” he cried, . 412 “Why move the thronging ghosts toward yonder stream? 413 What seek they there? Or what election holds 414 That these unwilling linger, while their peers 415 Sweep forward yonder o'er the leaden waves?”
6.391	391 corpora viva nefas Stygia vectare carina. 392 Nec vero Alciden me sum laetatus euntem 393 accepisse lacu, nec Thesea Pirithoumque, 394 dis quamquam geniti atque invicti viribus essent. 395 Tartareum ille manu custodem in vincla petivit, 396 ipsius a solio regis, traxitque trementem; 397 hi dominam Ditis thalamo deducere adorti. 398 Quae contra breviter fata est Amphrysia vates: 399 Nullae hic insidiae tales; absiste moveri; 400 nec vim tela ferunt; licet ingens ianitor antro 401 aeternum latrans exsanguis terreat umbras, 402 casta licet patrui servet Proserpina limen. 403 Troius Aeneas, pietate insignis et armis, 404 ad genitorem imas Erebi descendit ad umbras. 405 Si te nulla movet tantae pietatis	416 To him, in few, the aged Sibyl spoke : 417 “Son of Anchises, offspring of the gods, 418 Yon are Cocytus and the Stygian stream, 419 By whose dread power the gods themselves do fear 420 To take an oath in vain. Here far and wide 421 Thou seest the hapless throng that hath no grave. 422 That boatman Charon bears across the deep 423 Such as be sepulchred with holy care. 424 But over that loud flood and dreadful shore 425 No trav'ler may be borne, until in peace 426 His gathered ashes rest. A hundred years 427 Round this dark borderland some haunt and roam, 428 Then win late passage o'er the longed-for wave.” 429 Aeneas lingered for a little space, 430 Revolving in his soul with pitying prayer 431 Fate's partial way. But presently he sees 432 Leucaspis and the Lycian navy's lord, 433 Orontes; both of melancholy brow, 434 Both hapless and unhonored after death, 435 Whom, while from Troy they crossed the wind-swept seas, 436 A whirling tempest wrecked with ship and crew.

	imago, 406 at ramum hunc (aperit ramum, qui veste latebat) 407 adgnoscas. Tumida ex ira tum corda residunt. 408 Nec plura his. Ille admirans venerabile donum 409 fatalis virgae, longo post tempore visum, 410 caeruleam advertit puppim, ripaeque propinquat. 411 Inde alias animas, quae per iuga longa sedebant, 412 deturbat, laxatque foros; simul accipit alveo 413 ingentem Aenean. Gemuit sub pondere cymba 414 sutilis, et multam accepit rimosa paludem. 415 Tandem trans fluvium incolumis vatemque virumque 416 informi limo glaucaque exponit in ulva. 417 Cerberus haec ingens latratu regna trifauci 418 personat, adverso recubans immanis in antro. 419 Cui vates, horrere videns iam colla colubris, 420 melle soporatam et medicatis frugibus offam
6.421	421 obicit. Ille fame rabida tria guttura pandens 422 corripit obiectam, atque immania terga resolvit 423 fusus humi, totoque ingens extenditur antro. 424 Occupat Aeneas aditum custode sepulto, 425 evaditque celer ripam inremeabilis undae. 426 Continuo auditae voces, vagitus et ingens, 427 infantumque animae flentes in limine primo, 428 quos dulcis vitae exsortes et ab ubere raptos 429 abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo; 430 hos iuxta falso damnati crimine mortis. 431 Nec vero hae sine sorte datae, sine iudice, sedes: 432 quaesitor Minos urnam movet; ille silentum 433 conciliumque vocat vitasque et crimina discit. 434 Proxuma deinde tenent maesti	437 There, too, the helmsman Palinurus strayed : 438 Who, as he whilom watched the Libyan stars, 439 Had fallen, plunging from his lofty seat 440 Into the billowy deep. Aeneas now 441 Discerned his sad face through the blinding gloom, 442 And hailed him thus : “0 Palinurus, tell 443 What god was he who ravished thee away 444 From me and mine, beneath the o'crwhelming wave? 445 Speak on! for he who ne'er had spoke untrue, 446 Apollo's self, did mock my listening mind, 447 And chanted me a faithful oracle 448 That thou shouldst ride the seas unharmed, and touch 449 Ausonian shores. Is this the pledge divine?” 450 Then he, “0 chieftain of Anchises' race, 451 Apollo's tripod told thee not untrue. 452 No god did thrust me down beneath the wave, 453 For that strong rudder unto which I clung, 454 My charge and duty, and my ship's sole guide, 455 Wrenched from its place, dropped with me as I fell. 456 Not for myself—by the rude seas I swear— 457 Did I have terror, but lest loca, qui sibi letum 435 insontes peperere manu, lucemque perosi 436 proiecere animas. Quam vellent aethere in alto 437 nunc et pauperiem et duros perferre labores! 438 Fas obstat, tristisque palus inamabilis undae 439 alligat, et noviens Styx interfusa coërcet. 440 Nec procul hinc partem fusi monstrantur in omnem 441 lugentes campi: sic illos nomine dicunt. 442 Hic, quos durus amor crudeli tabe peredit, 443 secreti celant calles et myrtea circum 444 silva tegit; curae non ipsa in morte relinquunt. 445 His Phaedram Procrimque locis, maestamque Eriphylen 446 crudelis nati monstrantem volnera, cernit, 447 Evadnenque et Pasiphaën; his Laodamia 448 it comes, et iuvenis quondam, nunc femina, Caeneus, 449 rursus et in veterem fato revoluta figuram. 450 Inter quas Phoenissa recens a volnere Dido	thy good ship, 458 Stripped of her gear, and her poor pilot lost, 459 Should fail and founder in that rising flood. 460 Three wintry nights across the boundless main 461 The south wind buffeted and bore me on; 462 At the fourth daybreak, lifted from the surge, 463 I looked at last on Italy, and swam 464 With weary stroke on stroke unto the land. 465 Safe was I then. Alas! but as I climbed 466 With garments wet and heavy, my clenched hand

6.451	451 errabat silva in magna; quam Troius heros 452 ut primum iuxta stetit adgnovitque per umbras 453 obscuram, qualem primo qui surgere mense 454 aut videt, aut vidisse putat per nubila lunam, 455 demisit lacrimas, dulcique adfatus amore est: 456 Infelix Dido, verus mihi nuntius ergo 457 venerat exstinctam, ferroque extrema secutam? 458 Funeris heu tibi causa fui? Per sidera iuro, 459 per superos, et si qua fides tellure sub ima est, 460 invitus, regina, tuo de litore cessi. 461 Sed me iussa deum, quae nunc has ire per umbras, 462 per loca senta situ cogunt noctemque profundam, 463 imperiis egere suis; nec credere quivi	467 Grasping the steep rock, came a cruel horde 468 Upon me with drawn blades, accounting me— 469 So blind they were!—a wrecker's prize and spoil. 470 Now are the waves my tomb; and wandering winds 471 Toss me along the coast. 0, I implore, 472 By heaven's sweet light, by yonder upper air, 473 By thy lost father, by Iulus dear, 474 Thy rising hope and joy, that from these woes, 475 Unconquered chieftain, thou wilt set me free! 476 Give me a grave where Velia's haven lies, 477 For thou hast power! Or if some path there be, 478 If thy celestial mother guide thee here 479 (For not, I ween, without the grace of gods 480 Wilt cross yon rivers vast, you Stygian pool) 481 Reach me a hand! and bear with thee along! 482 Until (least gift!) death bring me peace and calm.” 483 Such words he spoke: the priestess thus replied: 484 “Why, Palinurus, these unblest desires? 485 Wouldst thou, unsepulchred, behold the wave 486 Of Styx, stern river of th'

	464 hunc tantum tibi me discessu ferre dolorem. 465 Siste gradum, teque aspectu ne subtrahe nostro. 466 Quem fugis? Extremum fato, quod te adloquor, hoc est. 467 Talibus Aeneas ardentem et torva tuentem 468 lenibat dictis animum, lacrimasque ciebat. 469 Illa solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat, 470 nec magis incepto voltum sermone movetur, 471 quam si dura silex aut stet Marpesia cautes. 472 tandem corripuit sese, atque inimica refugit 473 in nemus umbriferum, coniunx ubi pristinus illi 474 respondet curis aequatque Sychaeus amorem. 475 Nec minus Aeneas, casu concussus iniquo, 476 prosequitur lacrimis longe, et miseratur euntem. 477 Inde datum molitur iter. Iamque arva tenebant 478 ultima, quae bello clari secreta frequentant. 479 Hic illi occurrit Tydeus, hic inclutus armis 480 Parthenopaeus et Adrasti pallentis imago;	Eumenides? 487 Wouldst thou, unbidden, tread its fearful strand? 488 Hope not by prayer to change the laws of Heaven! 489 But heed my words, and in thy memory 490 Cherish and keep, to cheer this evil time. 491 Lo, far and wide, led on by signs from Heaven, 492 Thy countrymen from many a templed town 493 Shall consecrate thy dust, and build thy tomb, 494 A tomb with annual feasts and votive flowers, 495 To Palinurus a perpetual fame!” 496 Thus was his anguish stayed, from his sad heart
6.481	481 hic multum fleti ad superos belloque caduci 482 Dardanidae, quos ille omnes longo ordine cernens 483 ingemuit, Glaucumque Medontaque Thersilochumque, 484 tris Antenoridas, Cererique sacrum Polyphoeten, 485 Idaeumque, etiam currus, etiam arma tenentem. 486 circumstant animae dextra laevaque frequentes; 487 nec vidisse semel satis est; iuvat usque morari, 488 et conferre gradum, et veniendi discere causas. 489 At Danaum proceres Agamemnoniaeque phalanges 490 ut videre virum fulgentiaque arma per umbras, 491 ingenti trepidare metu; pars vertere terga, 492 ceu quondam petiere rates; pars tollere vocem	497 Grief ebbed awhile, and even to this day, 498 Our land is glad such noble name to wear. 499 The twain continue now their destined way 500 Unto the river's edge. The Ferryman, 501 Who watched them through still groves approach his shore, 502 Hailed them, at distance, from the Stygian wave, 503 And with reproachful summons thus began: 504 “Whoe'er thou art that in this warrior guise 505 Unto my river comest,—quickly tell 506 Thine errand! Stay thee where thou standest now! 507 This is ghosts' land, for sleep and slumbrous dark. 508 That flesh and blood my Stygian ship should bear 509 Were lawless wrong. Unwillingly I took 510 Alcides, Theseus, and Pirithous, 511 Though sons of gods, too mighty to be quelled. 512 One bound in chains yon warder of Hell's door, 513 And dragged him trembling from our monarch's throne: 514 The others, impious, would steal away 515

	493 exiguam, inceptus clamor frustratur hiantes. 494 Atque hic Priamiden laniatum corpore toto 495 Deiphobum videt et lacerum crudeliter ora, 496 ora manusque ambas, populataque tempora raptis 497 auribus, et truncas inhonesto volnere nares. 498 Vix adeo adgnovit pavitantem et dira tegentem 499 supplicia, et notis compellat vocibus ultro: 500 Deiphobe armipotens, genus alto a sanguine Teucri 501 quis tam crudeles optavit sumere poenas? 502 Cui tantum de te licuit? Mihi fama suprema 503 nocte tulit fessum vasta te caede Pelasgum 504 procubuisse super confusae stragis acervum. 505 Tunc egomet tumulum Rhoeteo litore inanem 506 constitui, et magna Manes ter voce vocavi. 507 Nomen et arma locum servant; te, amice, nequivi 508 conspicere, et patria decedens ponere terra. 509 Ad quae Priamides: Nihil O tibi amice relictum; 510 omnia Deiphobo solvisti et funeris umbris.	Out of her bride-bed Pluto's ravished Queen.” 516 Briefly th' Amphrysian priestess made reply: 517 “Not ours, such guile: Fear not! This warrior's arms 518 Are innocent. Let Cerberus from his cave 519 Bay ceaselessly, the bloodless shades to scare; 520 Let Proserpine immaculately keep 521 The house and honor of her kinsman King. 522 Trojan Aeneas, famed for faithful prayer 523 And victory in arms, descends to seek 524 His father in this gloomy deep of death. 525 If loyal goodness move not such as thee, 526 This branch at least” (she drew it from her breast) 527 “Thou knowest well.” 528 Then cooled his wrathful heart; 529 With silent lips he looked and wondering eyes 530 Upon that fateful, venerable wand, 531 Seen only once an age. Shoreward he turned, 532 And pushed their way his boat of leaden hue. 533 The rows of crouching ghosts along the thwarts 534 He scattered, cleared a passage, and gave room 535 To great Aeneas. The light shallop groaned 536 Beneath his weight, and, straining at each seam, 537 Took in the foul flood with unstinted flow. 538 At last the hero and his priestess-guide 539 Came safe across the river, and were moored 540 'mid sea-green sedges in the formless mire.
6.511	511 Sed me fata mea et scelus exitiale Lacaenae 512 his mersere malis; illa haec monumenta reliquit. 513 Namque ut supremam falsa inter gaudia noctem 514 egerimus, nosti; et nimium meminisse necesse est. 515 Cum fatalis equus saltu super ardua venit 516 Pergama, et armatum peditem gravis attulit alvo, 517 illa, chorum simulans, evantes orgia circum 518 ducebat Phrygias; flammam media ipsa tenebat 519 ingentem, et summa Danaos ex arce vocabat. 520 Tum me, confectum curis somnoque gravatum, 521 infelix habuit thalamus, pressitque iacentem

	522 dulcis et alta quies placidaeque simillima morti. 523 Egregia interea coniunx arma omnia tectis 524 amovet, et fidum capiti subduxerat ensem; 525 intra tecta vocat Menelaum, et limina pandit, 526 scilicet id magnum sperans fore munus amanti, 527 et famam exstingui veterum sic posse malorum. 528 Quid moror? Inrumpunt thalamo; comes additur una 529 hortator scelerum Aeolides. Di, talia Grais 530 instaurate, pio si poenas ore reposco! 531 Sed te qui vivum casus, age, fare vicissim, 532 attulerint. Pelagine venis erroribus actus, 533 an monitu divom? An quae te Fortuna fatigat, 534 ut tristes sine sole domos, loca turbida, adires? 535 Hac vice sermonum roseïs Aurora quadrigis 536 iam medium aetherio cursu traiecerat axem; 537 et fors omne datum traherent per talia tempus; 538 sed comes admonuit, breviterque adfata Sibylla est: 539 Nox ruit, Aenea; nos flendo ducimus horas. 540 Hic locus est, partes ubi se via findit in ambas:
6.541	541 dextera quae Ditis magni sub moenia tendit, 542 hac iter Elysium nobis; at laeva malorum 543 exercet poenas, et ad impia Tartara mittit. 544 Deiphobus contra: Ne saevi, magna sacerdos; 545 discedam, explebo numerum, reddarque tenebris. 546 I decus, i, nostrum; melioribus utere fatis! 547 Tantum effatus, et in verbo vestigia torsit. 548 Respicit Aeneas subito, et sub rupe sinistra 549 moenia lata videt, triplici circumdata muro, 550 quae rapidus flammis ambit torrentibus amnis,	541 Here Cerberus, with triple-throated roar, 542 Made all the region ring, as there he lay 543 At vast length in his cave. The Sibyl then, 544 Seeing the serpents writhe around his neck, 545 Threw down a loaf with honeyed herbs imbued 546 And drowsy essences: he, ravenous, 547 Gaped wide his three fierce mouths and snatched the bait, 548 Crouched with his large backs loose upon the ground, 549 And filled his cavern floor from end to end. 550 Aeneas through hell's portal moved, while sleep 551 Its warder buried; then he fled that shore 552 Of Stygian stream, whence travellers ne'er return. 553 Now hears he sobs, and piteous, lisping cries 554 Of souls of babes upon the threshold plaining; 555 Whom, ere they took their portion of sweet life,

	551 Tartareus Phlegethon, torquetque sonantia saxa. 552 Porta adversa ingens, solidoque adamante columnae, 553 vis ut nulla virum, non ipsi exscindere bello 554 caelicolae valeant; stat ferrea turris ad auras, 555 Tisiphoneque sedens, palla succincta cruenta, 556 vestibulum exsomnis servat noctesque diesque. 557 Hinc exaudiri gemitus, et saeva sonare 558 verbera; tum stridor ferri, tractaeque catenae. 559 Constitit Aeneas, strepitumque exterritus hausit. 560 Quae scelerum facies, O virgo, effare; quibusve 561 urguentur poenis? Quis tantus plangor ad auras? 562 Tum vates sic orsa loqui: Dux inclute Teucrum, 563 nulli fas casto sceleratum insistere limen; 564 sed me cum lucis Hecate praefecit Avernis, 565 ipsa deum poenas docuit, perque omnia duxit. 566 Gnosius haec Rhadamanthus habet, durissima regna, 567 castigatque auditque dolos, subigitque fateri, 568 quae quis apud superos, furto laetatus inani, 569 distulit in seram commissa piacula mortem. 570 Continuo sontes ultrix accincta flagello	556 Dark Fate from nursing bosoms tore, and plunged 557 In bitterness of death. Nor far from these, 558 The throng of dead by unjust judgment slain. 559 Not without judge or law these realms abide: 560 Wise Minos there the urn of justice moves, 561 And holds assembly of the silent shades, 562 Hearing the stories of their lives and deeds. 563 Close on this place those doleful ghosts abide, 564 Who, not for crime, but loathing life and light 565 With their own hands took death, and cast away 566 The vital essence. Willingly, alas! 567 They now would suffer need, or burdens bear, 568 If only life were given! But Fate forbids. 569 Around them winds the sad, unlovely wave 570 Of Styx: nine times it coils and interflows. 571 Not far from hence, on every side outspread, 572 The Fields of Sorrow lie,—such name they bear; 573 Here all whom ruthless love did waste away 574 Wander in paths unseen, or in the gloom 575 Of dark myrtle grove: not even in death 576 Have they forgot their griefs of long ago. 577 Here impious Phaedra and poor Procris bide; 578 Lorn Eriphyle bares the vengeful wounds 579 Her own son's dagger made; Evadne here, 580 And foul Pasiphae Pasiphaë are seen; hard by, 581 Laodamia, nobly fond and fair; 582 And Caeneus, not a boy, but maiden now,
6.571	571 Tisiphone quatit insultans, torvosque sinistra 572 intentans angues vocat agmina saeva sororum. 573 Tum demum horrisono stridentes cardine sacrae 574 panduntur portae. Cernis custodia qualis 575 vestibulo sedeat, facies quae limina servet? 576 Quinquaginta atris immanis hiatibus Hydra 577 saevior intus habet sedem. Tum Tartarus ipse 578 bis patet in praeceps tantum tenditque sub umbras, 579 quantus ad aetherium caeli suspectus Olympum.	583 By Fate remoulded to her native seeming. 584 Here Tyrian Dido, too, her wound unhealed, 585 Roamed through a mighty wood. The Trojan's eyes 586 Beheld her near him through the murky gloom, 587 As when, in her young month and crescent pale, 588 One sees th' o'er-clouded moon, or thinks he sees. 589 Down dropped his tears, and thus he fondly spoke: 590 “0 suffering Dido! Were those tidings true 591 That thou didst fling thee on the fatal steel? 592 Thy death, ah me! I dealt it. But I swear 593 By stars above us, by the powers in Heaven, 594 Or whatsoever oath ye dead believe, 595 That not by choice I fled thy shores, 0 Queen! 596 Divine decrees compelled

	580 Hic genus antiquum Terrae, Titania pubes, 581 fulmine deiecti fundo volvuntur in imo. 582 Hic et Aloidas geminos immania vidi 583 corpora, qui manibus magnum rescindere caelum 584 adgressi, superisque Iovem detrudere regnis. 585 Vidi et crudeles dantem Salmonea poenas, 586 dum flammas Iovis et sonitus imitatur Olympi. 587 Quattuor hic invectus equis et lampada quassans 588 per Graium populos mediaeque per Elidis urbem 589 ibat ovans, divomque sibi poscebat honorem,— 590 demens, qui nimbos et non imitabile fulmen 591 aere et cornipedum pulsu simularet equorum. 592 At pater omnipotens densa inter nubila telum 593 contorsit, non ille faces nec fumea taedis 594 lumina, praecipitemque immani turbine adegit. 595 Nec non et Tityon, Terrae omniparentis alumnum, 596 cernere erat, per tota novem cui iugera corpus 597 porrigitur, rostroque immanis voltur obunco 598 immortale iecur tondens fecundaque poenis 599 viscera, rimaturque epulis, habitatque sub alto 600 pectore, nec fibris requies datur ulla renatis.	me, even as now 597 Among these ghosts I pass, and thread my way 598 Along this gulf of night and loathsome land. 599 How could I deem my cruel taking leave 600 Would bring thee at the last to all this woe? 601 0, stay! Why shun me? Wherefore haste away? 602 Our last farewell! Our doom! I speak it now!” 603 Thus, though she glared with fierce, relentless gaze, 604 Aaeneas, with fond words and tearful plea, 605 Would soothe her angry soul. But on the ground 606 She fixed averted eyes. For all he spoke 607 Moved her no more than if her frowning brow 608 Were changeless flint or carved in Parian stone. 609 Then, after pause, away in wrath she fled, 610 And refuge took within the cool, dark grove, 611 Where her first spouse, Sichaeus, with her tears 612 Mingled his own in mutual love and true.
6.601	601 602 quos super atra silex iam iam lapsura cadentique 603 imminet adsimilis; lucent genialibus altis 604 aurea fulcra toris, epulaeque ante ora paratae 605 regifico luxu; Furiarum maxima iuxta 606 accubat, et manibus prohibet contingere mensas, 607 exsurgitque facem attollens, atque intonat ore. 608 Hic, quibus invisi fratres, dum vita manebat, 609 pulsatusve parens, et fraus innexa	613 Aeneas, none the less, her guiltless woe 614 With anguish knew, watched with dimmed eyes her way, 615 And pitied from afar the fallen Queen. 616 But now his destined way he must be gone; 617 Now the last regions round the travellers lie, 618 Where famous warriors in the darkness dwell: 619 Here Tydeus comes in view, with far-renowned 620 Parthenopaeus and Adrastus pale; 621 Here mourned in upper air with many a moan, 622 In battle fallen, the Dardanidae, 623 Whose long defile Aeneas groans to see: 624 Glaucus and Medon and Thersilochus, 625 Antenor's children

	clienti, 610 aut qui divitiis soli incubuere repertis, 611 nec partem posuere suis (quae maxima turba est), 612 quique ob adulterium caesi, quique arma secuti 613 impia nec veriti dominorum fallere dextras, 614 inclusi poenam exspectant. Ne quaere doceri 615 quam poenam, aut quae forma viros fortunave mersit. 616 Saxum ingens volvunt alii, radiisque rotarum 617 districti pendent; sedet, aeternumque sedebit, 618 infelix Theseus; Phlegyasque miserrimus omnis 619 admonet, et magna testatur voce per umbras: 620 Discite iustitiam moniti, et non temnere divos. 621 Vendidit hic auro patriam, dominumque potentem 622 imposuit; fixit leges pretio atque refixit; 623 hic thalamum invasit natae vetitosque hymenaeos; 624 ausi omnes immane nefas, ausoque potiti. 625 Non, mihi si linguae centum sint oraque centum, 626 ferrea vox, omnis scelerum comprendere formas, 627 omnia poenarum percurrere nomina possim. 628 Haec ubi dicta dedit Phoebi longaeva sacerdos: 629 Sed iam age, carpe viam et susceptum perfice munus; 630 adceleremus ait; Cyclopum educta caminis	three, and Ceres' priest, 626 That Polypoetes, and Idaeus still. 627 Keeping the kingly chariot and spear. 628 Around him left and right the crowding shades 629 Not only once would see, but clutch and cling 630 Obstructive, asking on what quest he goes. 631 Soon as the princes of Argolic blood, 632 With line on line of Agamemnon's men, 633 Beheld the hero and his glittering arms 634 Flash through the dark, they trembled with amaze, 635 Or turned in flight, as if once more they fled 636 To shelter of the ships; some raised aloft 637 A feeble shout, or vainly opened wide 638 Their gaping lips in mockery of sound.
6.631	631 moenia conspicio atque adverso fornice portas, 632 haec ubi nos praecepta iubent deponere dona. 633 Dixerat, et pariter, gressi per opaca viarum, 634 corripiunt spatium medium, foribusque propinquant. 635 Occupat Aeneas aditum, corpusque recenti 636 spargit aqua, ramumque adverso in limine figit. 637 His demum exactis, perfecto munere divae, 638 devenere locos laetos et amoena	639 Here Priam's son, with body rent and torn, 640 Deiphobus Deïphobus is seen,—his mangled face, 641 His face and bloody hands, his wounded head 642 Of ears and nostrils infamously shorn. 643 Scarce could Aeneas know the shuddering shade 644 That strove to hide its face and shameful scar; 645 But, speaking first, he said, in their own tongue: 646 “Deiphobus, strong warrior, nobly born 647 Of Teucer's royal stem, what ruthless foe 648 Could wish to wreak on thee this dire revenge? 649 Who ventured, unopposed, so vast a wrong? 650 The

	virecta 639 fortunatorum nemorum sedesque beatas. 640 Largior hic campos aether et lumine vestit 641 purpureo, solemque suum, sua sidera norunt. 642 Pars in gramineis exercent membra palaestris, 643 contendunt ludo et fulva luctantur harena; 644 pars pedibus plaudunt choreas et carmina dicunt. 645 Nec non Threïcius longa cum veste sacerdos 646 obloquitur numeris septem discrimina vocum, 647 iamque eadem digitis, iam pectine pulsat eburno. 648 Hic genus antiquum Teucri, pulcherrima proles, 649 magnanimi heroes, nati melioribus annis, 650 Ilusque Assaracusque et Troiae Dardanus auctor. 651 Arma procul currusque virum miratur inanes. 652 Stant terra defixae hastae, passimque soluti 653 per campum pascuntur equi. Quae gratia currum 654 armorumque fuit vivis, quae cura nitentis 655 pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos. 656 Conspicit, ecce, alios dextra laevaque per herbam 657 vescentis, laetumque choro paeana canentis 658 inter odoratum lauri nemus, unde superne 659 plurimus Eridani per silvam volvitur amnis. 660 Hic manus ob patriam pugnando volnera passi,	rumor reached me how, that deadly night, 651 Wearied with slaying Greeks, thyself didst fall 652 Prone on a mingled heap of friends and foes. 653 Then my own hands did for thy honor build 654 An empty tomb upon the Trojan shore, 655 And thrice with echoing voice I called thy shade. 656 Thy name and arms are there. But, 0 my friend, 657 Thee could I nowhere find, but launched away, 658 Nor o'er thy bones their native earth could fling.” 659 To him the son of Priam thus replied: 660 “Nay, friend, no hallowed rite was left undone, 661 But every debt to death and pity due 662 The shades of thy Deiphobus received. 663 My fate it was, and Helen's murderous wrong, 664 Wrought me this woe; of her these tokens tell. 665 For how that last night in false hope we passed, 666 Thou knowest,—ah, too well we both recall! 667 When up the steep of Troy the fateful horse 668 Came climbing, pregnant with fierce men-at-arms,
6.661	661 quique sacerdotes casti, dum vita manebat, 662 quique pii vates et Phoebo digna locuti, 663 inventas aut qui vitam excoluere per artes, 664 quique sui memores alios fecere merendo, 665 omnibus his nivea cinguntur tempora vitta. 666 Quos circumfusos sic est adfata Sybilla, 667 Musaeum ante omnes, medium	669 't was she, accurst, who led the Phrygian dames 670 In choric dance and false bacchantic song, 671 And, waving from the midst a lofty brand, 672 Signalled the Greeks from Ilium's central tower 673 In that same hour on my sad couch I lay, 674 Exhausted by long care and sunk in sleep, 675 That sweet, deep sleep, so close to tranquil death. 676 But my illustrious bride from all the house 677 Had stolen all arms; from 'neath my pillowed head 678 She stealthily bore off my trusty

	nam plurima turba 668 hunc habet, atque umeris exstantem suspicit altis: 669 Dicite, felices animae, tuque, optime vates, 670 quae regio Anchisen, quis habet locus? Illius ergo 671 venimus, et magnos Erebi transnavimus amnes. 672 Atque huic responsum paucis ita reddidit heros: 673 Nulli certa domus; lucis habitamus opacis, 674 riparumque toros et prata recentia rivis 675 incolimus. Sed vos, si fert ita corde voluntas, 676 hoc superate iugum; et facili iam tramite sistam. 677 Dixit, et ante tulit gressum, camposque nitentis 678 desuper ostentat; dehinc summa cacumina linquunt. 679 At pater Anchises penitus convalle virenti 680 inclusas animas superumque ad lumen ituras 681 lustrabat studio recolens, omnemque suorum 682 forte recensebat numerum carosque nepotes, 683 fataque fortunasque virum moresque manusque. 684 Isque ubi tendentem adversum per gramina videt 685 Aenean, alacris palmas utrasque tetendit, 686 effusaeque genis lacrimae, et vox excidit ore: 687 Venisti tandem, tuaque exspectata parenti 688 vicit iter durum pietas? Datur ora tueri, 689 nate, tua, et notas audire et reddere voces? 690 Sic equidem ducebam animo rebarque futurum,	sword; 679 Then loud on Menelaus did she call, 680 And with her own false hand unbarred the door; 681 Such gift to her fond lord she fain would send 682 To blot the memory of his ancient wrong! 683 Why tell the tale, how on my couch they broke, 684 While their accomplice, vile Aeolides, 685 Counselled to many a crime. 0 heavenly Powers! 686 Reward these Greeks their deeds of wickedness, 687 If with clean lips upon your wrath I call! 688 But, friend, what fortunes have thy life befallen? 689 Tell point by point. Did waves of wandering seas 690 Drive thee this way, or some divine command? 691 What chastisement of fortune thrusts thee on 692 Toward this forlorn abode of night and cloud?”
6.691	691 tempora dinumerans, nec me mea cura fefellit. 692 Quas ego te terras et quanta per aequora vectum 693 accipio! quantis iactatum, nate, periclis! 694 Quam metui, ne quid Libyae tibi regna nocerent! 695 Ille autem: Tua me, genitor, tua tristis imago, 696 saepius occurrens, haec limina	693 While thus they talked, the crimsoned car of Morn 694 Had wheeled beyond the midmost point of heaven, 695 On her ethereal road. The princely pair 696 Had wasted thus the whole brief gift of hours; 697 But Sibyl spoke the warning: “Night speeds by, 698 And we, Aeneas, lose it in lamenting. 699 Here comes the place where cleaves our way in twain. 700 Thy road, the right, toward Pluto's

	tendere adegit: 697 stant sale Tyrrheno classes. Da iungere dextram, 698 da, genitor, teque amplexu ne subtrahe nostro. 699 Sic memorans, largo fletu simul ora rigabat. 700 Ter conatus ibi collo dare brachia circum, 701 ter frustra comprensa manus effugit imago, 702 703 Interea videt Aeneas in valle reducta 704 seclusum nemus et virgulta sonantia silvis, 705 Lethaeumque, domos placidas qui praenatat, amnem. 706 Hunc circum innumerae gentes populique volabant; 707 ac—velut in pratis ubi apes aestate serena 708 floribus insidunt variis, et candida circum 709 lilia funduntur—strepit omnis murmure campus. 710 Horrescit visu subito, causasque requirit 711 inscius Aeneas, quae sint ea flumina porro, 712 quive viri tanto complerint agmine ripas. 713 Tum pater Anchises: Animae, quibus altera fato 714 corpora debentur, Lethaei ad fluminis undam 715 securos latices et longa oblivia potant. 716 717 iampridem hanc prolem cupio enumerare meorum, 718 quo magis Italia mecum laetere reperta. 719 O pater, anne aliquas ad caelum hinc ire putandum est 720 sublimis animas, iterumque ad tarda reverti	dwelling goes, 701 And leads us to Elysium. But the left 702 Speeds sinful souls to doom, and is their path 703 To Tartarus th' accurst.” Deiphobus Deïphobus 704 Cried out: “0 priestess, be not wroth with us! 705 Back to the ranks with yonder ghosts I go. 706 0 glory of my race, pass on! Thy lot 707 Be happier than mine!” He spoke, and fled. 708 Aeneas straightway by the leftward cliff 709 Beheld a spreading rampart, high begirt 710 With triple wall, and circling round it ran 711 A raging river of swift floods of flame, 712 Infernal Phlegethon, which whirls along 713 Loud-thundering rocks. A mighty gate is there 714 Columned in adamant; no human power, 715 Nor even the gods, against this gate prevail. 716 Tall tower of steel it has; and seated there 717 Tisiphone, in blood-flecked pall arrayed, 718 Sleepless forever, guards the entering way. 719 Hence groans are heard, fierce cracks of lash and scourge, 720 Loud-clanking iron links and trailing chains. 721 Aeneas motionless with horror stood 722 o'erwhelmed at such uproar. “0 virgin, say 723 What shapes of guilt are these? What penal woe 724 Harries them thus? What wailing smites the air?” 725 To whom the Sibyl, “Far-famed prince of Troy, 726 The feet of innocence may never pass 727 Into this house of sin. But Hecate, 728 When o'er th' Avernian groves she gave me power, 729 Taught me what penalties the gods decree, 730 And showed me all. There Cretan Rhadamanth 731 His kingdom keeps, and from unpitying throne 732 Chastises and lays bare the secret sins 733 Of mortals who, exulting in vain guile, 734 Elude till death, their expiation due. 735 There, armed forever with her vengeful scourge, 736 Tisiphone, with menace and affront, 737 The guilty swarm pursues; in her left hand 738 She lifts her angered serpents, while she calls 739 A troop of sister-furies fierce as she. 740 Then, grating loud on hinge of sickening sound, 741 Hell's portals open wide. 0, dost thou see 742 What sentinel upon that threshold sits, 743 What shapes of fear keep guard upon that gloom?
6.721	721 corpora? Quae lucis miseris tam dira cupido?	744 Far, far within the dragon Hydra broods 745 With half a hundred

	722 Dicam equidem, nec te suspensum, nate, tenebo 723 suscipit Anchises, atque ordine singula pandit. 724 Principio caelum ac terras camposque liquentis 725 lucentemque globum Lunae Titaniaque astra 726 spiritus intus alit, totamque infusa per artus 727 mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet. 728 Inde hominum pecudumque genus, vitaeque volantum, 729 et quae marmoreo fert monstra sub aequore pontus. 730 Igneus est ollis vigor et caelestis origo 731 seminibus, quantum non noxia corpora tardant, 732 terrenique hebetant artus moribundaque membra. 733 Hinc metuunt cupiuntque, dolent gaudentque, neque auras 734 dispiciunt clausae tenebris et carcere caeco. 735 Quin et supremo cum lumine vita reliquit, 736 non tamen omne malum miseris nec funditus omnes 737 corporeae excedunt pestes, penitusque necesse est 738 multa diu concreta modis inolescere miris. 739 Ergo exercentur poenis, veterumque malorum 740 supplicia expendunt: aliae panduntur inanes 741 suspensae ad ventos; aliis sub gurgite vasto 742 infectum eluitur scelus, aut exuritur igni; 743 quisque suos patimur Manes; exinde per amplum 744 mittimur Elysium, et pauci laeta arva tenemus; 745 donec longa dies, perfecto temporis orbe, 746 concretam exemit labem, purumque relinquit 747 aetherium sensum atque auraï simplicis ignem. 748 Has omnes, ubi mille rotam volvere per annos, 749 Lethaeum ad fluvium deus evocat agmine magno, 750 scilicet immemores supera ut convexa revisant,	mouths, gaping and black; 746 And Tartarus slopes downward to the dark 747 Twice the whole space that in the realms of light 748 Th' Olympian heaven above our earth aspires. — 749 Here Earth's first offspring, the Titanic brood, 750 Roll lightning-blasted in the gulf profound; 751 The twin Aloidae Aloïdae , colossal shades, 752 Came on my view; their hands made stroke at Heaven 753 And strove to thrust Jove from his seat on high. 754 I saw Salmoneus his dread stripes endure, 755 Who dared to counterfeit Olympian thunder 756 And Jove's own fire. In chariot of four steeds, 757 Brandishing torches, he triumphant rode 758 Through throngs of Greeks, o'er Elis' sacred way, 759 Demanding worship as a god. 0 fool! 760 To mock the storm's inimitable flash— 761 With crash of hoofs and roll of brazen wheel! 762 But mightiest Jove from rampart of thick cloud 763 Hurled his own shaft, no flickering, mortal flame, 764 And in vast whirl of tempest laid him low. 765 Next unto these, on Tityos I looked, 766 Child of old Earth, whose womb all creatures bears: 767 Stretched o'er nine roods he lies; a vulture huge 768 Tears with hooked beak at his immortal side, 769 Or deep in entrails ever rife with pain 770 Gropes for a feast, making his haunt and home 771 In the great Titan bosom; nor will give 772 To ever new-born flesh surcease of woe. 773 Why name Ixion and Pirithous,

6.751	751 rursus et incipiant in corpora velle reverti. 752 Dixerat Anchises, natumque unaque Sibyllam 753 conventus trahit in medios turbamque sonantem, 754 et tumulum capit, unde omnes longo ordine possit 755 adversos legere, et venientum discere vultus. 756 Nunc age, Dardaniam prolem quae deinde sequatur 757 gloria, qui maneant Itala de gente nepotes, 758 inlustris animas nostrumque in nomen ituras, 759 expediam dictis, et te tua fata docebo. 760 Ille, vides, pura iuvenis qui nititur hasta, 761 proxuma sorte tenet lucis loca, primus ad auras 762 aetherias Italo commixtus sanguine surget, 763 silvius, Albanum nomen, tua postuma proles, 764 quem tibi longaevo serum Lavinia coniunx 765 educet silvis regem regumque parentem, 766 unde genus Longa nostrum dominabitur Alba. 767 Proxumus ille Procas, Troianae gloria gentis, 768 et Capys, et Numitor, et qui te nomine reddet 769 Silvius Aeneas, pariter pietate vel armis 770 egregius, si umquam regnandam acceperit Albam. 771 Qui iuvenes! Quantas ostentant, aspice, vires, 772 atque umbrata gerunt civili tempora quercu! 773 Hi tibi Nomentum et Gabios urbemque Fidenam, 774 hi Collatinas imponent montibus arces, 775 Pometios Castrumque Inui Bolamque Coramque. 776 Haec tum nomina erunt, nunc sunt sine nomine terrae. 777 Quin et avo comitem sese Mavortius addet 778 Romulus, Assaraci quem sanguinis Ilia mater 779 educet. Viden, ut geminae stant vertice cristae,	774 The Lapithae, above whose impious brows 775 A crag of flint hangs quaking to its fall, 776 As if just toppling down, while couches proud, 777 Propped upon golden pillars, bid them feast 778 In royal glory: but beside them lies 779 The eldest of the Furies, whose dread hands 780 Thrust from the feast away, and wave aloft 781 A flashing firebrand, with shrieks of woe. 782 Here in a prison-house awaiting doom 783 Are men who hated, long as life endured, 784 Their brothers, or maltreated their gray sires, 785 Or tricked a humble friend; the men who grasped 786 At hoarded riches, with their kith and kin 787 Not sharing ever—an unnumbered throng; 788 Here slain adulterers be; and men who dared 789 To fight in unjust cause, and break all faith 790 With their own lawful lords. Seek not to know 791 What forms of woe they feel, what fateful shape 792 Of retribution hath o'erwhelmed them there. 793 Some roll huge boulders up; some hang on wheels, 794 Lashed to the whirling spokes; in his sad seat 795 Theseus is sitting, nevermore to rise; 796 Unhappy Phlegyas uplifts his voice 797 In warning through the darkness, calling loud, 798 ‘0, ere too late, learn justice and fear God!’ 799 Yon traitor sold his country, and for gold 800 Enchained her to a tyrant, trafficking 801 In laws, for bribes enacted or made void; 802 Another did incestuously take 803 His daughter for a wife in lawless bonds.

	780 et pater ipse suo superum iam signat honore?
6.781	781 En, huius, nate, auspiciis illa incluta Roma 782 imperium terris, animos aequabit Olympo, 783 septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces, 784 felix prole virum: qualis Berecyntia mater 785 invehitur curru Phrygias turrita per urbes, 786 laeta deum partu, centum complexa nepotes, 787 omnes caelicolas, omnes supera alta tenentes. 788 Huc geminas nunc flecte acies, hanc aspice gentem 789 Romanosque tuos. Hic Caesar et omnis Iuli 790 progenies magnum caeli ventura sub axem. 791 Hic vir, hic est, tibi quem promitti saepius audis, 792 Augustus Caesar, Divi genus, aurea condet 793 saecula qui rursus Latio regnata per arva 794 Saturno quondam, super et Garamantas et Indos 795 proferet imperium: iacet extra sidera tellus, 796 extra anni solisque vias, ubi caelifer Atlas 797 axem umero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum. 798 Huius in adventum iam nunc et Caspia regna 799 responsis horrent divom et Maeotia tellus, 800 et septemgemini turbant trepida ostia Nili. 801 Nec vero Alcides tantum telluris obivit, 802 fixerit aeripedem cervam licet, aut Erymanthi 803 pacarit nemora, et Lernam tremefecerit arcu; 804 nec, qui pampineis victor iuga flectit habenis, 805 Liber, agens celso Nysae de vertice tigres. 806 Et dubitamus adhuc virtute extendere vires, 807 aut metus Ausonia prohibet consistere terra? 808 Quis procul ille autem ramis insignis olivae	804 All ventured some unclean, prodigious crime; 805 And what they dared, achieved. I could not tell, 806 Not with a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues, 807 Or iron voice, their divers shapes of sin, 808 Nor call by name the myriad pangs they bear.” 809 So spake Apollo's aged prophetess. 810 “Now up and on!” she cried. “Thy task fulfil! 811 We must make speed. Behold yon arching doors 812 Yon walls in furnace of the Cyclops forged! 813 'T is there we are commanded to lay down 814 Th' appointed offering.” So, side by side, 815 Swift through the intervening dark they strode, 816 And, drawing near the portal-arch, made pause. 817 Aeneas, taking station at the door, 818 Pure, lustral waters o'er his body threw, 819 And hung for garland there the Golden Bough.

	809 sacra ferens? Nosco crines incanaque menta 810 regis Romani, primus qui legibus urbem
6.811	811 fundabit, Curibus parvis et paupere terra 812 missus in imperium magnum. Cui deinde subibit, 813 otia qui rumpet patriae residesque movebit 814 Tullus in arma viros et iam desueta triumphis 815 agmina. Quem iuxta sequitur iactantior Ancus, 816 nunc quoque iam nimium gaudens popularibus auris. 817 Vis et Tarquinios reges, animamque superbam 818 ultoris Bruti, fascesque videre receptos? 819 Consulis imperium hic primus saevasque secures 820 accipiet, natosque pater nova bella moventes 821 ad poenam pulchra pro libertate vocabit. 822 Infelix, utcumque ferent ea facta minores, 823 vincet amor patriae laudumque immensa cupido. 824 Quin Decios Drusosque procul saevumque securi 825 aspice Torquatum et referentem signa Camillum. 826 Illae autem, paribus quas fulgere cernis in armis, 827 concordes animae nunc et dum nocte premuntur, 828 heu quantum inter se bellum, si lumina vitae 829 attigerint, quantas acies stragemque ciebunt! 830 Aggeribus socer Alpinis atque arce Monoeci 831 descendens, gener adversis instructus Eois. 832 Ne, pueri, ne tanta animis adsuescite bella, 833 neu patriae validas in viscera vertite vires; 834 tuque prior, tu parce, genus qui ducis Olympo, 835 proice tela manu, sanguis meus!— 836 Ille triumphata Capitolia ad alta Corintho 837 victor aget currum, caesis insignis Achivis. 838 Eruet ille Argos Agamemnoniasque	820 Now, every rite fulfilled, and tribute due 821 Paid to the sovereign power of Proserpine, 822 At last within a land delectable 823 Their journey lay, through pleasurable bowers 824 Of groves where all is joy,—a blest abode! 825 An ampler sky its roseate light bestows 826 On that bright land, which sees the cloudless beam 827 Of suns and planets to our earth unknown. 828 On smooth green lawns, contending limb with limb, 829 Immortal athletes play, and wrestle long 830 'gainst mate or rival on the tawny sand; 831 With sounding footsteps and ecstatic song, 832 Some thread the dance divine: among them moves 833 The bard of Thrace, in flowing vesture clad, 834 Discoursing seven-noted melody, 835 Who sweeps the numbered strings with changeful hand, 836 Or smites with ivory point his golden lyre. 837 Here Trojans be of eldest, noblest race, 838 Great-hearted heroes, born in happier times, 839 Ilus, Assaracus, and Dardanus, 840 Illustrious builders of the Trojan town. 841 Their arms and shadowy chariots he views, 842 And lances fixed in earth, while through the fields 843 Their steeds without a bridle graze at will. 844 For if in life their darling passion ran 845 To chariots, arms, or glossy-coated steeds, 846 The self-same joy, though in their graves, they feel. 847 Lo! on the left and right at feast reclined 848 Are other blessed souls, whose chorus sings 849 Victorious paeans on the fragrant air

	Mycenas, 839 ipsumque Aeaciden, genus armipotentis Achilli, 840 ultus avos Troiae, templa et temerata Minervae.
6.841	841 Quis te, magne Cato, tacitum, aut te, Cosse, relinquat? 842 Quis Gracchi genus, aut geminos, duo fulmina belli, 843 Scipiadas, cladem Libyae, parvoque potentem 844 Fabricium vel te sulco Serrane, serentem? 845 quo fessum rapitis, Fabii? Tu Maxumus ille es, 846 unus qui nobis cunctando restituis rem. 847 Excudent alii spirantia mollius aera, 848 credo equidem, vivos ducent de marmore voltus, 849 orabunt causas melius, caelique meatus 850 describent radio, et surgentia sidera dicent: 851 tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento; 852 hae tibi erunt artes; pacisque imponere morem, 853 parcere subiectis, et debellare superbos. 854 Sic pater Anchises, atque haec mirantibus addit: 855 Aspice, ut insignis spoliis Marcellus opimis 856 ingreditur, victorque viros supereminet omnes! 857 Hic rem Romanam, magno turbante tumultu, 858 sistet, eques sternet Poenos Gallumque rebellem, 859 tertiaque arma patri suspendet capta Quirino. 860 Atque hic Aeneas; una namque ire videbat 861 egregium forma iuvenem et fulgentibus armis, 862 sed frons laeta parum, et deiecto lumina voltu: 863 Quis, pater, ille, virum qui sic comitatur euntem? 864 Filius, anne aliquis magna de stirpe nepotum? 865 Quis strepitus circa comitum! Quantum instar in ipso! 866 Sed nox atra caput tristi circumvolat umbra. 867 Tum pater Anchises, lacrimis	850 Of laurel groves; and hence to earth outpours 851 Eridanus, through forests rolling free. 852 Here dwell the brave who for their native land 853 Fell wounded on the field; here holy priests 854 Who kept them undefiled their mortal day; 855 And poets, of whom the true-inspired song 856 Deserved Apollo's name; and all who found 857 New arts, to make man's life more blest or fair; 858 Yea! here dwell all those dead whose deeds bequeath 859 Deserved and grateful memory to their kind. 860 And each bright brow a snow-white fillet wears. 861 Unto this host the Sibyl turned, and hailed 862 Musaeus, midmost of a numerous throng, 863 Who towered o'er his peers a shoulder higher: 864 “0 spirits blest! 0 venerable bard! 865 Declare what dwelling or what region holds 866 Anchises, for whose sake we twain essayed 867 Yon passage over the wide streams of hell.” 868 And briefly thus the hero made reply: 869 “No fixed abode is ours. In shadowy groves 870 We make our home, or meadows fresh and fair, 871 With streams whose flowery banks our couches be. 872 But you, if thitherward your wishes turn, 873 Climb yonder hill, where I your path may show.” 874 So saying, he strode forth and led them on, 875 Till from that vantage they had prospect fair 876 Of a wide, shining land; thence wending down, 877 They left the height they trod;for far below 878 Father Anchises in a pleasant vale 879 Stood pondering, while his eyes and thought surveyed ingressus obortis: 868 O gnate, ingentem luctum ne quaere tuorum; 869 ostendent terris hunc tantum fata, neque ultra 870 esse sinent. Nimium vobis Romana propago

6.871	871 visa potens, Superi, propria haec si dona fuissent. 872 Quantos ille virum magnam Mavortis ad urbem 873 campus aget gemitus, vel quae, Tiberine, videbis 874 funera, cum tumulum praeterlabere recentem! 875 Nec puer Iliaca quisquam de gente Latinos 876 in tantum spe tollet avos, nec Romula quondam 877 ullo se tantum tellus iactabit alumno. 878 Heu pietas, heu prisca fides, invictaque bello 879 dextera! Non illi se quisquam impune tulisset 880 obvius armato, seu cum pedes iret in hostem, 881 seu spumantis equi foderet calcaribus armos. 882 Heu, miserande puer, si qua fata aspera rumpas, 883 tu Marcellus eris. Manibus date lilia plenis, 884 purpureos spargam flores, animamque nepotis 885 his saltem adcumulem donis, et fungar inani 886 munere—Sic tota passim regione vagantur 887 aëris in campis latis, atque omnia lustrant. 888 Quae postquam Anchises natum per singula duxit, 889 incenditque animum famae venientis amore, 890 exin bella viro memorat quae deinde gerenda, 891 Laurentisque docet populos urbemque Latini, 892 et quo quemque modo fugiatque feratque laborem. 893 Sunt geminae Somni portae, quarum altera fertur 894 cornea, qua veris facilis datur exitus umbris; 895 altera candenti perfecta nitens elephanto, 896 sed falsa ad caelum mittunt	880 A host of prisoned spirits, who there abode 881 Awaiting entrance to terrestrial air. 882 And musing he reviewed the legions bright 883 Of his own progeny and offspring proud— 884 Their fates and fortunes, virtues and great deeds. 885 Soon he discerned Aeneas drawing nigh 886 o'er the green slope, and, lifting both his hands 887 In eager welcome, spread them swiftly forth. 888 Tears from his eyelids rained, and thus he spoke: 889 “Art here at last? Hath thy well-proven love 890 Of me thy sire achieved yon arduous way? 891 Will Heaven, beloved son, once more allow 892 That eye to eye we look? and shall I hear 893 Thy kindred accent mingling with my own? 894 I cherished long this hope. My prophet-soul 895 Numbered the lapse of days, nor did my thought 896 Deceive. 0, o'er what lands and seas wast driven 897 To this embrace! What perils manifold 898 Assailed thee, 0 my son, on every side! 899 How long I trembled, lest that Libyan throne 900 Should work thee woe!” 901 Aeneas thus replied: 902 “Thine image, sire, thy melancholy shade, 903 Came oft upon my vision, and impelled 904 My journey hitherward. Our fleet of ships 905 Lies safe at anchor in the Tuscan seas. 906 Come, clasp my hand! Come, father, I implore, 907 And heart to heart this fond embrace receive!” 908 So speaking, all his eyes suffused with tears; 909 Thrice would his arms in vain that shape enfold.

	insomnia Manes. 897 His ubi tum natum Anchises unaque Sibyllam 898 prosequitur dictis, portaque emittit eburna, 899 ille viam secat ad naves sociosque revisit: 900 tum se ad Caietae recto fert litore portum.
6.901	901
7.1	1 Tu quoque litoribus nostris, Aeneia nutrix, 2 aeternam moriens famam, Caieta, dedisti; 3 et nunc servat honos sedem tuus ossaque nomen 4 Hesperia in magna, siqua est ea gloria, signat. 5 At pius exsequiis Aeneas rite solutis, 6 aggere composito tumuli, postquam alta quierunt 7 aequora, tendit iter velis portumque relinquit. 8 Adspirant aurae in noctem nec candida cursus 9 Luna negat, splendet tremulo sub lumine pontus. 10 Proxima Circaeae raduntur litora terrae, 11 dives inaccessos ubi Solis filia lucos 12 adsiduo resonat cantu tectisque superbis 13 urit odoratam nocturna in lumina cedrum, 14 arguto tenuis percurrens pectine telas. 15 Hinc exaudiri gemitus iraeque leonum 16 vincla recusantum et sera sub nocte rudentum, 17 saetigerique sues atque in praesaepibus ursi 18 saevire ac formae magnorum ululare luporum, 19 quos hominum ex facie dea saeva potentibus herbis 20 induerat Circe in voltus ac terga ferarum. 21 Quae ne monstra pii paterentur talia Troes 22 delati in portus neu litora dira subirent, 23 Neptunus ventis implevit vela secundis 24 atque fugam dedit et praeter vada fervida vexit. 25 Iamque rubescebat radiis mare et	1 One more immortal name thy death bequeathed, 2 Nurse of Aeneas, to Italian shores, 3 Caieta; there thy honor hath a home; 4 Thy bones a name: and on Hesperia's breast 5 Their proper glory.When Aeneas now 6 The tribute of sepulchral vows had paid 7 Beside the funeral mound, and o'er the seas 8 Stillness had fallen, he flung forth his sails, 9 And leaving port pursued his destined way. 10 Freshly the night-winds breathe; the cloudless moon 11 Outpours upon his path unstinted beam, 12 And with far-trembling glory smites the sea. 13 Close to the lands of Circe soon they fare, 14 Where the Sun's golden daughter in far groves 15 Sounds forth her ceaseless song; her lofty hall 16 Is fragrant every night with flaring brands 17 Of cedar, giving light the while she weaves 18 With shrill-voiced shuttle at her linens fine. 19 From hence are heard the loud lament and wrath 20 Of lions, rebels to their linked chains 21 And roaring all night long; great bristly boars 22 And herded bears, in pinfold closely kept, 23 Rage horribly, and monster-wolves make moan; 24 Whom the dread goddess with foul juices strong 25 From forms of men drove forth, and bade to wear 26 the mouths and maws of beasts in Circe's thrall. 27 But lest the sacred Trojans should endure 28 such prodigy of doom, or anchor there 29 on that destroying shore, kind Neptune filled 30 their sails with winds of power, and sped them on 31 in safety past the perils of that sea.

	aethere ab alto 26 Aurora in roseis fulgebat lutea bigis: 27 cum venti posuere omnisque repente resedit 28 flatus et in lento luctantur marmore tonsae. 29 Atque hic Aeneas ingentem ex aequore lucum 30 prospicit. Hunc inter fluvio Tiberinus amoeno
7.31	31 verticibus rapidis et multa flavus arena 32 in mare prorumpit. Variae circumque supraque 33 adsuetae ripis volucres et fluminis alveo 34 aethera mulcebant cantu lucoque volabant. 35 flectere iter sociis terraeque advertere proras 36 imperat et laetus fluvio succedit opaco. 37 Nunc age, qui reges, Erato, quae tempora rerum, 38 quis Latio antiquo fuerit status, advena classem 39 cum primum Ausoniis exercitus appulit oris, 40 expediam et primae revocabo exordia pugnae. 41 tu vatem, tu, diva, mone. Dicam horrida bella, 42 dicam acies actosque animis in funera reges 43 Tyrrhenamque manum totamque sub arma coactam 44 Hesperiam. Maior rerum mihi nascitur ordo, 45 maius opus moveo.Rex arva Latinus et urbes 46 iam senior longa placidas in pace regebat. 47 Hunc Fauno et nympha genitum Laurente Marica 48 accipimus, Fauno Picus pater isque parentem 49 te, Saturne, refert, tu sanguinis ultimus auctor. 50 filius huic fato divom prolesque virilis 51 nulla fuit primaque oriens erepta iuventa est. 52 Sola domum et tantas servabat filia sedes, 53 iam matura viro, iam plenis nubilis annis. 54 Multi illam magno e Latio totaque petebant	32 Now morning flushed the wave, and saffron-garbed 33 Aurora from her rose-red chariot beamed 34 in highest heaven; the sea-winds ceased to stir; 35 a sudden calm possessed the air, and tides 36 of marble smoothness met the laboring oar. 37 Then, gazing from the deep, Aeneas saw 38 a stretch of groves, whence Tiber's smiling stream, 39 its tumbling current rich with yellow sands, 40 burst seaward forth: around it and above 41 shore-haunting birds of varied voice and plume 42 flattered the sky with song, and, circling far 43 o'er river-bed and grove, took joyful wing. 44 Thither to landward now his ships he steered, 45 and sailed, high-hearted, up the shadowy stream. 46 Hail, Erato! while olden kings and thrones 47 and all their sequent story I unfold! 48 How Latium's honor stood, when alien ships 49 brought war to Italy, and from what cause 50 the primal conflict sprang, O goddess, breathe 51 upon thy bard in song. Dread wars I tell, 52 array of battle, and high-hearted kings 53 thrust forth to perish, when Etruria's host 54 and all Hesperia gathered to the fray. 55 Events of grander march impel my song, 56 and loftier task I try. Latinus, then 57 an aged king, held long-accepted sway 58 o'er tranquil vales and towns. He was the son 59 of Faunus, so the legend tells, who wed 60 the nymph Marica of Laurentian stem. 61 Picus was Faunus' father, whence the line 62 to Saturn's Ioins ascends. O heavenly sire, 63 from thee the stem began! But Fate had given 64 to King Latinus' body no heirs male: 65 for taken in the dawning of his day 66 his only son had been; and now his home 67 and spacious palace one sole daughter kept, 68 who was grown ripe to wed and of full age 69 to take a husband. Many suitors tried 70 from all Ausonia and Latium's bounds; 71 but comeliest in all their princely throng 72

	55 Ausonia. Petit ante alios pulcherrimus omnis 56 Turnus, avis atavisque potens, quem regia coniunx 57 adiungi generum miro properabat amore; 58 sed variis portenta deum terroribus obstant. 59 Laurus erat tecti medio in penetralibus altis, 60 sacra comam multosque metu servata per annos,	came Turnus, of a line of mighty sires. 73 Him the queen mother chiefly loved, and yearned 74 to call him soon her son. But omens dire 75 and menaces from Heaven withstood her will.
7.61	61 quam pater inventam, primas cum conderet arces, 62 ipse ferebatur Phoebo sacrasse Latinus 63 Laurentisque ab ea nomen posuisse colonis. 64 Huius apes summum densae (mirabile dictu), 65 stridore ingenti liquidum trans aethera vectae, 66 obsedere apicem, ex pedibus per mutua nexis 67 examen subitum ramo frondente pependit. 68 Continuo vates: Externum cernimus, inquit, 69 adventare virum et partis petere agmen easdem 70 partibus ex isdem et summa dominarier arce. 71 Praeterea, castis adolet dum altaria taedis 72 et iuxta genitorem adstat Lavinia virgo, 73 visa (nefas) longis comprendere crinibus ignem, 74 75 regalisque accensa comas, accensa coronam 76 insignem gemmis, tum fumida lumine fulvo 77 involvi ac totis Volcanum spargere tectis. 78 Id vero horrendum ac visu mirabile ferri: 79 namque fore inlustrem fama fatisque canebant 80 ipsam, sed populo magnum portendere bellum. 81 At rex sollicitus monstris oracula Fauni, 82 fatidici genitoris, adit lucosque sub alta 83 consulit Albunea, nemorum quae maxima sacro 84 fonte sonat saevamque exhalat	76 A laurel-tree grew in the royal close, 77 of sacred leaf and venerated age, 78 which, when he builded there his wall and tower, 79 Father Latinus found, and hallowed it 80 to Phoebus' grace and power, wherefrom the name 81 Laurentian, which his realm and people bear. 82 Unto this tree-top, wonderful to tell, 83 came hosts of bees, with audible acclaim 84 voyaging the stream of air, and seized a place 85 on the proud, pointing crest, where the swift swarm, 86 with interlacement of close-clinging feet, 87 swung from the leafy bough. “Behold, there comes,” 88 the prophet cried, “a husband from afar! 89 To the same region by the self-same path 90 behold an arm'd host taking lordly sway 91 upon our city's crown!” Soon after this, 92 when, coming to the shrine with torches pure, 93 Lavinia kindled at her father's side 94 the sacrifice, swift seemed the flame to burn 95 along her flowing hair—O sight of woe! 96 Over her broidered snood it sparkling flew, 97 lighting her queenly tresses and her crown 98 of jewels rare: then, wrapt in flaming cloud, 99 from hall to hall the fire-god's gift she flung. 100 This omen dread and wonder terrible 101 was rumored far: for prophet-voices told 102 bright honors on the virgin's head to fall 103 by Fate's decree, but on her people, war.

	opaca mephitim. 85 Hinc Italae gentes omnisque Oenotria tellus 86 in dubiis responsa petunt; huc dona sacerdos 87 cum tulit et caesarum ovium sub nocte silenti 88 pellibus incubuit stratis somnosque petivit, 89 multa modis simulacra videt volitantia miris 90 et varias audit voces fruiturque deorum
7.91	91 conloquio atque imis Acheronta adfatur Avernis. 92 Hic et tum pater ipse petens responsa Latinus 93 centum lanigeras mactabat rite bidentis 94 atque harum effultus tergo stratisque iacebat 95 velleribus: subita ex alto vox reddita luco est: 96 Ne pete conubiis natam sociare Latinis, 97 O mea progenies, thalamis neu crede paratis: 98 externi venient generi, qui sanguine nostrum 99 nomen in astra ferant quorumque a stirpe nepotes 100 omnia sub pedibus, qua Sol utrumque recurrens 101 aspicit Oceanum, vertique regique videbunt. 102 Haec responsa patris Fauni monitusque silenti 103 nocte datos non ipse suo premit ore Latinus, 104 sed circum late volitans iam Fama per urbes 105 Ausonias tulerat, cum Laomedontia pubes 106 gramineo ripae religavit ab aggere classem. 107 Aeneas primique duces et pulcher Iulus 108 corpora sub ramis deponunt arboris altae 109 instituuntque dapes et adorea liba per herbam 110 subiciunt epulis (sic Iuppiter ipse monebat) 111 et Cereale solum pomis agrestibus augent. 112 Consumptis hic forte aliis ut vertere morsus 113 exiguam in Cererem penuria adegit	104 The King, sore troubled by these portents, sought 105 oracular wisdom of his sacred sire, 106 Faunus, the fate-revealer, where the groves 107 stretch under high Albunea, and her stream 108 roars from its haunted well, exhaling through 109 vast, gloomful woods its pestilential air. 110 Here all Oenotria's tribes ask oracles 111 in dark and doubtful days: here, when the priest 112 has brought his gifts, and in the night so still, 113 couched on spread fleeces of the offered flock, 114 awaiting slumber lies, then wondrously 115 a host of flitting shapes he sees, and hears 116 voices that come and go: with gods he holds 117 high converse, or in deep Avernian gloom 118 parleys with Acheron. Thither drew near 119 Father Latinus, seeking truth divine. 120 Obedient to the olden rite, he slew 121 a hundred fleecy sheep, and pillowed lay 122 upon their outstretched skins. Straightway a voice 123 out of the lofty forest met his prayer. 124 “Seek not in wedlock with a Latin lord 125 to join thy daughter, O my son and seed! 126 Beware this purposed marriage! There shall come 127 sons from afar, whose blood shall bear our name 128 starward; the children of their mighty loins, 129 as far as eve and morn enfold the seas, 130 shall see a subject world beneath their feet 131 submissive lie.” This admonition given 132 Latinus hid not. But on restless wing 133 rumor had spread it, when the men of Troy edendi 114 et violare manu malisque audacibus orbem 115 fatalis crusti patulis nec parcere quadris: 116 Heus ! etiam mensas consumimus, inquit Iulus, 117 nec plura adludens. Ea vox audita laborum 118 prima tulit finem, primamque loquentis ab ore 119 eripuit pater ac stupefactus numine pressit. 120 Continuo: Salve fatis mihi debita tellus

7.121	121 vosque, ait, O fidi Troiae salvete penates: 122 hic domus, haec patria est. Genitor mihi talia namque 123 (nunc repeto) Anchises fatorum arcana reliquit: 124 cum te, nate, fames ignota ad litora vectum 125 accisis coget dapibus consumere mensas, 126 tum sperare domos defessus ibique memento 127 prima locare manu molirique aggere tecta. 128 Haec erat illa fames; haec nos suprema manebat, 129 exiliis positura modum. 130 Quare agite et primo laeti cum lumine solis 131 quae loca, quive habeant homines, ubi moenia gentis, 132 vestigemus et a portu diversa petamus. 133 Nunc pateras libate Iovi precibusque vocate 134 Anchisen genitorem, et vina reponite mensis. 135 Sic deinde effatus frondenti tempora ramo 136 implicat et geniumque loci primamque deorum 137 Tellurem nymphasque et adhuc ignota precatur 138 flumina, tum Noctem Noctisque orientia signa 139 Idaeumque Iovem Phrygiamque ex ordine matrem 140 invocat et duplicis caeloque ereboque parentis. 141 Hic pater omnipotens ter caelo clarus ab alto 142 intonuit radiisque ardentem lucis et auro	134 along the river-bank of mounded green 135 their fleet made fast.Aeneas and his chiefs, 136 with fair Iulus, under spreading boughs 137 of one great tree made resting-place, and set 138 the banquet on. Thin loaves of altar-bread 139 along the sward to bear their meats were laid 140 (such was the will of Jove), and wilding fruits 141 rose heaping high, with Ceres' gift below. 142 Soon, all things else devoured, their hunger turned 143 to taste the scanty bread, which they attacked 144 with tooth and nail audacious, and consumed 145 both round and square of that predestined leaven. 146 “Look, how we eat our tables even!” cried 147 Iulus, in a jest. Such was the word 148 which bade their burdens fall. From his boy's lip 149 the father caught this utterance of Fate, 150 silent with wonder at the ways of Heaven; 151 then swift he spoke: “Hail! O my destined shore, 152 protecting deities of Ilium, hail! 153 Here is our home, our country here! This day 154 I publish the mysterious prophecy 155 by Sire Anchises given: ‘My son,’ said he, 156 ‘When hunger in strange lands shall bid devour 157 the tables of thy banquet gone, then hope 158 for home, though weary, and take thought to build 159 a dwelling and a battlement.’ Behold! 160 This was our fated hunger! This last proof 161 will end our evil days. Up, then! For now 162 by morning's joyful beam we will explore 163 what men, what cities, in this region be,

	143 ipse manu quatiens ostendit ab aethere nubem. 144 Diditur hic subito Troiana per agmina rumor 145 advenisse diem, quo debita moenia condant. 146 Certatim instaurant epulas atque omine magno 147 crateras laeti statuunt et vina coronant. 148 Postera cum prima lustrabat lampade terras 149 orta dies, urbem et finis et litora gentis 150 diversi explorant: haec fontis stagna Numici,
7.151	151 hunc Thybrim fluvium, hic fortis habitare Latinos. 152 Tum satus Anchisa delectos ordine ab omni 153 centum oratores augusta ad moenia regis 154 ire iubet, ramis velatos Palladis omnis, 155 donaque ferre viro pacemque exposcere Teucris. 156 Haud mora, festinant iussi rapidisque feruntur 157 passibus. Ipse humili designat moenia fossa 158 moliturque locum primasque in litore sedes 159 castrorum in morem pinnis atque aggere cingit. 160 Iamque iter emensi turris ac tecta Latinorum 161 ardua cernebant iuvenes muroque subibant. 162 Ante urbem pueri et primaevo flore iuventus 163 exercentur equis domitantque in pulvere currus 164 aut acris tendunt arcus aut lenta lacertis 165 spicula contorquent cursuque ictuque lacessunt: 166 cum praevectus equo longaevi regis ad auris 167 nuntius ingentis ignota in veste reportat 168 advenisse viros. Ille intra tecta vocari 169 imperat et solio medius consedit avito. 170 Tectum augustum ingens. centum sublime columnis, 171 urbe fuit summa, Laurentis regia Pici,	164 and, leaving ship, our several errands ply. 165 Your gift to Jove outpour! Make thankful prayer 166 unto Anchises' shade! To this our feast 167 bring back the flowing wine!” Thereat he bound 168 his forehead with green garland, calling loud 169 upon the Genius of that place, and Earth, 170 eldest of names divine; the Nymphs he called, 171 and river-gods unknown; his voice invoked 172 the night, the omen-stars through night that roll. 173 Jove, Ida's child, and Phrygia's fertile Queen: 174 he called his mother from Olympian skies, 175 and sire from Erebus. Lo, o'er his head 176 three times unclouded Jove omnipotent 177 in thunder spoke, and, with effulgent ray 178 from his ethereal tract outreaching far, 179 shook visibly the golden-gleaming air. 180 Swift, through the concourse of the Trojans, spread 181 news of the day at hand when they should build 182 their destined walls. So, with rejoicing heart 183 at such vast omen, they set forth a feast 184 with zealous emulation, ranging well 185 the wine-cups fair with many a garland crowned.

	172 horrendum silvis et religione parentum. 173 Hic sceptra accipere et primos attollere fasces 174 regibus omen erat, hoc illis curia templum, 175 hae sacris sedes epulis, hic ariete caeso 176 perpetuis soliti patres considere mensis. 177 Quin etiam veterum effigies ex ordine avorum 178 antiqua e cedro, Italusque paterque Sabinus 179 vitisator, curvam servans sub imagine falcem, 180 Saturnusque senex Ianique bifrontis imago
7.181	181 vestibulo astabant, aliique ab origine reges 182 Martiaque ob patriam pugnando volnera passi. 183 Multaque praeterea sacris in postibus arma, 184 captivi pendent currus curvaeque secures 185 et cristae capitum et portarum ingentia claustra 186 spiculaque clipeique ereptaque rostra carinis. 187 Ipse Quirinali lituo parvaque sedebat 188 succinctus trabea laevaque ancile gerebat 189 Picus, equum domitor; quem capta cupidine coniunx 190 aurea percussum virga versumque venenis 191 fecit avem Circe sparsitque coloribus alas. 192 Tali intus templo divom patriaque Latinus 193 sede sedens Teucros ad sese in tecta vocavit, 194 atque haec ingressis placido prior edidit ore: 195 Dicite, Dardanidae (neque enim nescimus et urbem 196 et genus, auditique advertitis aequore cursum), 197 quid petitis ? Quae causa rates aut cuius egentis 198 litus ad Ausonium tot per vada caerula vexit? 199 Sive errore viae seu tempestatibus acti, 200 qualia multa mari nautae patiuntur in alto,	186 Soon as the morrow with the lamp of dawn 187 looked o'er the world, they took their separate ways, 188 exploring shore and towns; here spread the pools 189 and fountain of Numicius; here they see 190 the river Tiber, where bold Latins dwell. 191 Anchises' son chose out from his brave band 192 a hundred envoys, bidding them depart 193 to the King's sacred city, each enwreathed 194 with Pallas' silver leaf; and gifts they bear 195 to plead for peace and friendship at his throne. 196 While on this errand their swift steps are sped, 197 Aeneas, by a shallow moat and small, 198 his future city shows, breaks ground, and girds 199 with mound and breastwork like a camp of war 200 the Trojans' first abode. Soon, making way 201 to where the Latin citadel uprose, 202 the envoys scanned the battlements, and paused 203 beneath its wall. Outside the city gates 204 fair youths and striplings in life's early bloom 205 course with swift steeds, or steer through dusty cloud 206 the whirling chariot, or stretch stout bows, 207 or hurl the seasoned javelin, or strive 208 in boxing-bout and foot-race: one of these 209 made haste on horseback to the aged King, 210 with tidings of a stranger company 211 in foreign garb approaching. The good King 212 bade call them to his house, and took his seat 213 in mid-court on his high, ancestral throne.

	201 fluminis intrastis ripas portuque sedetis, 202 ne fugite hospitium neve ignorate Latinos 203 Saturni gentem, haud vinclo nec legibus aequam, 204 sponte sua veterisque dei se more tenentem. 205 Atque equidem memini (fama est obscurior annis) 206 Auruncos ita ferre senes, his ortus ut agris 207 Dardanus Idaeas Phrygiae penetravit ad urbes 208 Threiciamque Samum, quae nunc Samothracia fertur. 209 Hinc illum, Corythi Tyrrhena ab sede profectum, 210 aurea nunc solio stellantis regia caeli
7.211	211 accipit et numerum divorum altaribus auget. 212 Dixerat, et dicta Ilioneus sic voce secutus: 213 Rex, genus egregium Fauni, nec fluctibus actos, 214 atra subegit hiemps vestris succedere terris 215 nec sidus regione viae litusve fefellit: 216 consilio hanc omnes animisque volentibus urbem, 217 adferimur, pulsi regnis, quae maxima quondam 218 extremo veniens Sol aspiciebat Olympo. 219 Ab Iove principium generis, Iove Dardana pubes 220 gaudet avo, rex ipse Iovis de gente suprema, 221 Troius Aeneas, tua nos ad limina misit. 222 Quanta per Idaeos saevis effusa Mycenis 223 tempestas ierit campos, quibus actus uterque 224 Europae atque Asiae fatis concurrerit orbis, 225 audiit et siquem tellus extrema refuso 226 summovet oceano et siquem extenta plagarum 227 quattuor in medio dirimit plaga solis iniqui. 228 Diluvio ex illo tot vasta per aequora vecti 229 dis sedem exiguam patriis litusque rogamus	214 Large and majestical the castle rose: 215 a hundred columns lifted it in air 216 upon the city's crown—the royal keep 217 of Picus of Laurentum; round it lay 218 deep, gloomy woods by olden worship blest. 219 Here kings took sceptre and the fasces proud 220 with omens fair; the selfsame sacred place 221 was senate-house and temple; here was found 222 a hall for hallowed feasting, where a ram 223 was offered up, and at long banquet-boards 224 the nation's fathers sat in due array. 225 Here ranged ancestral statues roughly hewn 226 of ancient cedar-wood: King Italus; 227 Father Sabinus, planter of the vine, 228 a curving sickle in his sculptured hand; 229 gray-bearded Saturn; and the double brow 230 of Janus' head; and other sires and kings 231 were wardens of the door, with many a chief 232 wounded in battle for his native land. 233 Trophies of arms in goodly order hung 234 along the columns: chariots of war 235 from foeman taken, axes of round blade, 236 plumed helmets, bolts and barriers of steel 237 from city-gates, shields, spears, and beaks of bronze 238 from captured galleys by the conqueror torn. 239 Here, wielding his Quirinal augur-staff, 240 girt in scant shift, and bearing on his left 241 the sacred oval shield, appeared enthroned 242 Picus, breaker of horses, whom his bride, 243 enamoured Circe, smote with golden wand, 244 and, raining o'er him potent poison-dew, 245 changed to a bird of

	230 innocuum et cunctis undamque auramque patentem. 231 Non erimus regno indecores, nec vestra feretur 232 fama levis tantique abolescet gratia facti, 233 nec Troiam Ausonios gremio excepisse pigebit. 234 Fata per Aeneae iuro dextramque potentem 235 sive fide seu quis bello est expertus et armis: 236 multi nos populi, multae (ne temne, quod ultro 237 praeferimus manibus vittas ac verba precantia) 238 et petiere sibi et voluere adiungere gentes; 239 sed nos fata deum vestras exquirere terras 240 imperiis egere suis. Hinc Dardanus ortus;	pied and dappled wings.
7.241	241 huc repetit iussisque ingentibus urguet Apollo 242 Tyrrhenum ad Thybrim et fontis vada sacra Numici. 243 Dat tibi praeterea fortunae parva prioris 244 munera, reliquias Troia ex ardente receptas. 245 Hoc pater Anchises auro libabat ad aras; 246 hoc Priami gestamen erat, cum iura vocatis 247 more daret populis, sceptrumque sacerque tiaras 248 Iliadumque labor vestes. 249 Talibus Ilionei dictis defixa Latinus 250 obtutu tenet ora soloque immobilis haeret 251 intentos volvens oculos. Nec purpura regem 252 picta movet nec sceptra movent Priameia tantum, 253 quantum in conubio natae thalamoque moratur, 254 et veteris Fauni voluit sub pectore sortem, 255 hunc illum fatis externa ab sede profectum 256 portendi generum paribusque in regna vocari 257 auspiciis, huic progeniem virtute futuram 258 egregiam et totum quae viribus occupet orbem. 259 tandem laetus ait: Di nostra incepta secundent	246 In such a temple of his gods did Sire 247 Latinus, on hereditary throne, 248 welcome the Trojans to his halls, and thus 249 with brow serene gave greeting as they came: 250 “O sons of Dardanus, think not unknown 251 your lineage and city! Rumored far 252 your venturous voyage has been. What seek ye here? 253 What cause, what quest, has brought your barks and you 254 o'er the blue waters to Ausonia's hills? 255 What way uncharted, or wild stress of storm, 256 or what that sailors suffer in mid-sea, 257 unto this river bank and haven bore? 258 Doubt not our welcome! We of Latin land 259 are Saturn's sons, whose equitable minds, 260 not chained by statute or compulsion, keep 261 in freedom what the god's good custom gave. 262 Now I bethink me our Ausonian seers 263 have dark, dim lore that 't was this land gave birth 264 to Dardanus, who after took his way 265 through Phrygian Ida's towns and Samothrace. 266 Once out of Tuscan Corythus he fared; 267 but now in golden house among the stars 268 he has a throne, and by his altars blest 269 adds to the number of the gods we praise.” 270 He spoke; Ilioneus this answer made: 271 “O King, great heir of Faunus! No dark storm 272 impelled us o'er the flood thy realm to find. 273 Nor star deceived, nor strange, bewildering shore 274 threw out of our true course; but we

	260 auguriumque suum; dabitur, Troiane, quod optas, 261 munera nec sperno. Non vobis rege Latino 262 divitis uber agri Troiaeve opulentia deerit. 263 Ipse modo Aeneas, nostri si tanta cupido est, 264 si iungi hospitio properat sociusque vocari, 265 adveniat voltus neve exhorrescat amicos: 266 illi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni. 267 vos contra regi mea nunc mandata referte. 268 Est mihi nata, viro gentis quam iungere nostrae 269 non patrio ex adyto sortes, non plurima caelo 270 monstra sinunt: generos externis adfore ab oris,	are come 275 by our free choice and with deliberate aim 276 to this thy town, though exiled forth of realms 277 once mightiest of all the sun-god sees 278 when moving from his utmost eastern bound. 279 From Jove our line began; the sons of Troy 280 boast Jove to be their sire, and our true King 281 is of Olympian seed. To thine abode 282 Trojan Aeneas sent us. How there burst 283 o'er Ida's vales from dread Mycenae's kings 284 a tempest vast, and by what stroke of doom 285 all Asia's world with Europe clashed in war, 286 that lone wight hears whom earth's remotest isle 287 has banished to the Ocean's rim, or he 288 whose dwelling is the ample zone that burns 289 betwixt the changeful sun-god's milder realms, 290 far severed from the world. We are the men 291 from war's destroying deluge safely borne 292 over the waters wide. We only ask 293 some low-roofed dwelling for our fathers' gods, 294 some friendly shore, and, what to all is free, 295 water and air. We bring no evil name 296 upon thy people; thy renown will be 297 but wider spread; nor of a deed so fair 298 can grateful memory die. Ye ne'er will rue 299 that to Ausonia's breast ye gathered Troy.
7.271	271 hoc Latio restare canunt, qui sanguine nostrum 272 nomen in astra ferant. Hunc illum poscere fata 273 et reor et, siquid veri mens augurat, opto. 274 haec effatus equos numero pater eligit omni 275 (stabant ter centum nitidi in praesaepibus altis): 276 omnibus extemplo Teucris iubet ordine duci 277 instratos ostro alipedes pictisque tapetis; 278 aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendent, 279 tecti auro fulvum mandunt sub dentibus aurum; 280 absenti Aeneae currum geminosque iugalis 281 semine ab aetherio, spirantis naribus ignem, 282 illorum de gente, patri quos daedala Circe 283 supposita de matre nothos furata creavit.	300 I swear thee by the favored destinies 301 of great Aeneas, by his strength of arm 302 in friendship or in war, that many a tribe 303 (O, scorn us not, that, bearing olive green, 304 with suppliant words we come), that many a throne 305 has sued us to be friends. But Fate's decree 306 to this thy realm did guide. Here Dardanus 307 was born; and with reiterate command 308 this way Apollo pointed to the stream 309 of Tiber and Numicius' haunted spring. 310 Lo, these poor tributes from his greatness gone 311 Aeneas sends, these relics snatched away 312 from Ilium burning: with this golden bowl 313 Anchises poured libation when he prayed; 314 and these were Priam's splendor, when he gave 315 laws to his gathered states; this sceptre his, 316 this diadem revered, and beauteous pall, 317 handwork of Asia's queens.” So ceased to speak 318 Ilioneus. But King Latinus gazed 319 unanswering on the ground, all motionless 320 save for his musing eyes. The broidered pall

	284 Talibus Aeneadae donis dictisque Latini 285 sublimes in equis redeunt pacemque reportant. 286 Ecce autem Inachiis sese referebat ab Argis 287 saeva Iovis coniunx aurasque invecta tenebat, 288 et laetum Aenean classemque ex aethere longe 289 Dardaniam Siculo prospexit ab usque Pachyno. 290 moliri iam tecta videt, iam fidere terrae, 291 deseruisse rates: stetit acri fixa dolore. 292 Tum quassans caput haec effundit pectore dicta: 293 Heu stirpem invisam et fatis contraria nostris 294 fata Phrygum ! Num Sigeis occumbere campis, 295 num capti potuere capi, num incensa cremavit 296 Troia viros ? Medias acies mediosque per ignis 297 invenere viam. At, credo, mea numina tandem 298 fessa iacent odiis aut exsaturata quievi. 299 Quin etiam patria excussos infesta per undas 300 ausa sequi et profugis toto me opponere ponto !	321 of purple, and the sceptre Priam bore, 322 moved little on his kingly heart, which now 323 pondered of giving to the bridal bed 324 his daughter dear. He argues in his mind 325 the oracle of Faunus:—might this be 326 that destined bridegroom from an alien land, 327 to share his throne, to get a progeny 328 of glorious valor, which by mighty deeds 329 should win the world for kingdom? So at last
7.301	301 Absumptae in Teucros vires caelique marisque. 302 Quid Syrtes aut Scylla mihi, quid vasta Charybdis 303 profuit? Optato conduntur Thybridis alveo, 304 securi pelagi atque mei. Mars perdere gentem 305 immanem Lapithum valuit, concessit in iras 306 ipse deum antiquam genitor Calydona Dianae, 307 quod scelus aut Lapithis tantum aut Calydona merentem? 308 Ast ego magna Iovis coniunx, nil linquere inausum 309 quae potui infelix, quae memet in omnia verti, 310 vincor ab Aenea. Quod si mea numina non sunt 311 magna satis, dubitem haud equidem implorare quod usquam est: 312 flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo.	330 with joyful brow he spoke: “Now let the gods 331 our purpose and their own fair promise bless! 332 Thou hast, O Trojan, thy desire. Thy gifts 333 I have not scorned; nor while Latinus reigns 334 shall ye lack riches in my plenteous land, 335 not less than Trojan store. But where is he, 336 Aeneas' self? If he our royal love 337 so much desire, and have such urgent mind 338 to be our guest and friend, let him draw near, 339 nor turn him from well-wishing looks away! 340 My offering and pledge of peace shall be 341 to clasp your monarch's hand. Bear back, I pray, 342 this answer to your King: my dwelling holds 343 a daughter, whom with husband of her blood 344 great signs in heaven and from my father's tomb 345 forbid to wed. A son from alien shores 346 they prophesy for Latium's heir, whose seed 347 shall lift our glory to the stars divine. 348 I am persuaded this is none but he, 349 that man of

	313 Non dabitur regnis, esto, prohibere Latinis, 314 atque immota manet fatis Lavinia coniunx: 315 at trahere atque moras tantis licet addere rebus, 316 at licet amborum populos exscindere regum. 317 Hac gener atque socer coeant mercede suorum: 318 sanguine Troiano et Rutulo dotabere, virgo, 319 et Bellona manet te pronuba. Nec face tantum 320 Cisseis praegnans ignis enixa iugalis 321 quin idem Veneri partus suus et Paris alter 322 funestaeque iterum recidiva in Pergama taedae. 323 Haec ubi dicta dedit, terras Horrenda petivit: 324 luctificam Allecto dirarum ab sede dearum 325 infernisque ciet tenebris, cui tristia bella 326 iraeque insidiaeque et crimina noxia cordi. 327 Odit et ipse pater Pluton, odere sorores 328 Tartareae monstrum: tot sese vertit in ora, 329 tam saevae facies, tot pullulat atra colubris. 330 Quam Iuno his acuit verbis ac talia fatur:	destiny; and if my heart 350 be no false prophet, I desire it so.” 351 Thus having said, the sire took chosen steeds 352 from his full herd, whereof, well-groomed and fair, 353 three hundred stood within his ample pale. 354 Of these to every Teucrian guest he gave 355 a courser swift and strong, in purple clad 356 and broidered housings gay; on every breast 357 hung chains of gold; in golden robes arrayed, 358 they champed the red gold curb their teeth between. 359 For offering to Aeneas, he bade send
7.331	331 Hunc mihi da proprium, virgo sata Nocte, laborem, 332 hanc operam, ne noster honos infractave cedat 333 fama loco, neu conubiis ambire Latinum 334 Aeneadae possint Italosve obsidere finis. 335 Tu potes unanimos armare in proelia fratres 336 atque odiis versare domos, tu verbera tectis 337 funereasque inferre faces, tibi nomina mille, 338 mille nocendi artes. Fecundum concute pectus, 339 disice compositam pacem, sere crimina belli: 340 arma velit poscatque simul rapiatque inventus. 341 Exin Gorgoneis Allecto infecta venenis	360 a chariot, with chargers twain of seed 361 ethereal, their nostrils breathing fire: 362 the famous kind which guileful Circe bred, 363 cheating her sire, and mixed the sun-god's team 364 with brood-mares earthly born. The sons of Troy, 365 such gifts and greetings from Latinus bearing, 366 rode back in pomp his words of peace to bring.

	342 principio Latium et Laurentis tecta tyranni 343 celsa petit tacitumque obsedit limen Amatae, 344 quam super adventu Teucrum Turnique hymenaeis 345 femineae ardentem curaeque iraeque coquebant. 346 Huic dea caeruleis unum de crinibus anguem 347 conicit inque sinum praecordia ad intuma subdit, 348 quo furibunda domum monstro permisceat omnem. 349 Ille inter vestes et levia pectora lapsus 350 volvitur attactu nullo fallitque furentem, 351 vipeream inspirans animam: fit tortile collo 352 aurum ingens coluber, fit longae taenia vittae 353 innectitque comas, et membris lubricus errat. 354 Ac dum prima lues udo sublapsa veneno 355 pertemptat sensus atque ossibus implicat ignem 356 necdum animus toto percepit pectore flammam, 357 mollius et solito matrum de more locuta est, 358 multa super nata lacrimans Phrygiisque hymenaeis: 359 Exsulibusne datur ducenda Lavinia Teucris, 360 O genitor, nec te miseret gnataeque tuique ?
7.361	361 Nec matris miseret, quam primo aquilone relinquet 362 perfidus alta petens abducta virgine praedo? 363 An non sic Phrygius penetrat Lacedaemona pastor 364 Ledaeamque Helenam Troianas vexit ad urbes ? 365 Quid tua sancta fides, quid cura antiqua tuorum 366 et consanguineo totiens data dextera Turno? 367 Si gener externa petitur de gente Latinis 368 idque sedet Faunique premunt te iussa parentis, 369 omnem equidem sceptris terram quae libera nostris 370 dissidet, externam reor et sic dicere divos.	367 But lo! from Argos on her voyage of air 368 rides the dread spouse of Jove. She, sky-enthroned 369 above the far Sicilian promontory, 370 pachynus, sees Dardania's rescued fleet, 371 and all Aeneas' joy. The prospect shows 372 houses a-building, lands of safe abode, 373 and the abandoned ships. With bitter grief 374 she stands at gaze: then with storm-shaken brows, 375 thus from her heart lets loose the wrathful word: 376 “O hated race! O Phrygian destinies — 377 to mine forevermore (unhappy me!) 378 a scandal and offense! Did no one die 379 on Troy's embattled plain? Could captured slaves 380 not be enslaved again? Was Ilium's flame 381 no warrior's funeral pyre? Did they walk safe 382 through serried swords and congregated fires? 383 At

	371 Et Turno, si prima domus repetatur origo, 372 Inachus Acrisiusque patres mediaeque Mycenae. 373 His ubi nequiquam dictis experta Latinum 374 contra stare videt penitusque in viscera lapsum 375 serpentis furiale malum totamque pererrat, 376 tum vero infelix, ingentibus excita monstris, 377 immensam sine more furit lymphata per urbem. 378 Ceu quondam torto volitans sub verbere turbo, 379 quem pueri magno in gyro vacua atria circum 380 intenti ludo exercent; ille actus habena 381 curvatis fertur spatiis; stupet inscia supra 382 inpubesque manus, mirata volubile buxum; 383 dant animos plagae: non cursu segnior illo 384 per medias urbes agitur populosque feroces. 385 Quin etiam in silvas, simulato numine Bacchi, 386 maius adorta nefas maioremque orsa furorem 387 evolat et natam frondosis montibus abdit, 388 quo thalamum eripiat Teucris taedasque moretur, 389 Euhoe Bacche, fremens, solum te virgine dignum 390 vociferans, etenim mollis tibi sumere thyrsos,	last, methought, my godhead might repose, 384 and my full-fed revenge in slumber lie. 385 But nay! Though flung forth from their native land, 386 I o'er the waves, with enmity unstayed, 387 dared give them chase, and on that exiled few 388 hurled the whole sea. I smote the sons of Troy 389 with ocean's power and heaven's. But what availed 390 Syrtes, or Scylla, or Charybdis' waves? 391 The Trojans are in Tiber; and abide 392 within their prayed-for land delectable, 393 safe from the seas and me! Mars once had power 394 the monstrous Lapithae to slay; and Jove 395 to Dian's honor and revenge gave o'er 396 the land of Calydon. What crime so foul
7.391	391 te lustrare choro, sacrum tibi pascere crinem. 392 Fama volat, furiisque accensas pectore matres 393 idem omnis simul ardor agit nova quaerere tecta: 394 deseruere domos, ventis dant colla comasque, 395 ast aliae tremulis ululatibus aethera complent, 396 pampineasque gerunt incinctae pellibus hastas; 397 ipsa inter medias flagrantem fervida pinum 398 sustinet ac natae Turnique canit hymenaeos, 399 sanguineam torquens aciem, torvumque repente	397 was wrought by Lapithae or Calydon? 398 But I, Jove's wife and Queen, who in my woes 399 have ventured each bold stroke my power could find, 400 and every shift essayed, —behold me now 401 outdone by this Aeneas! If so weak 402 my own prerogative of godhead be, 403 let me seek strength in war, come whence it will! 404 If Heaven I may not move, on Hell I call. 405 To bar him from his Latin throne exceeds 406 my fated power. So be it! Fate has given 407 Lavinia for his bride. But long delays 408 I still can plot, and to the high event 409 deferment and obstruction. I can smite 410 the subjects of both kings. Let sire and son 411 buy with

	400 clamat: Io matres, audite, ubi quaeque, Latinae: 401 Siqua piis animis manet infelicis Amatae 402 gratia, si iuris materni cura remordet, 403 solvite crinalis vittas, capite orgia mecum. 404 Talem inter silvas, inter deserta ferarum, 405 reginam Allecto stimulis agit undique Bacchi. 406 Postquam visa satis primos acuisse furores 407 consiliumque omnemque domum vertisse Latini, 408 protinus hinc fuscis tristis dea tollitur alis 409 audacis Rutuli ad muros, quam dicitur urbem 410 Acrisioneis Danae fundasse colonis, 411 praecipiti delata noto. Locus Ardea quondam 412 dictus avis, et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen, 413 sed fortuna fuit; tectis hic Turnus in altis 414 iam mediam nigra carpebat nocte quietem. 415 Allecto torvam faciem et furialia membra 416 exuit, in vultus sese transformat anilis; 417 et frontem obscenam rugis arat, induit albos 418 cum vitta crinis, tum ramum innectit olivae; 419 fit Calybe Iunonis anus templique sacerdos 420 et iuveni ante oculos his se cum vocibus offert:	their people's blood this marriage-bond! 412 Let Teucrian and Rutulian slaughter be 413 thy virgin dower, and Bellona's blaze 414 light thee the bridal bed! Not only teemed 415 the womb of Hecuba with burning brand, 416 and brought forth nuptial fires; but Venus, too, 417 such offspring bore, a second Paris, who 418 to their new Troy shall fatal wedlock bring." 419 So saying, with aspect terrible she sped 420 earthward her way; and called from gloom of hell 421 Alecto, woeful power, from cloudy throne 422 among the Furies, where her heart is fed 423 with horrid wars, wrath, vengeance, treason foul, 424 and fatal feuds. Her father Pluto loathes 425 the creature he engendered, and with hate 426 her hell-born sister-fiends the monster view. 427 A host of shapes she wears, and many a front 428 of frowning black brows viper-garlanded. 429 Juno to her this goading speech addressed: 430 "O daughter of dark Night, arouse for me 431 thy wonted powers and our task begin! 432 Lest now my glory fail, my royal name 433 be vanquished, while Aeneas and his crew 434 cheat with a wedlock bond the Latin King 435 and seize Italia's fields. Thou canst thrust on 436 two Ioving brothers to draw sword and slay, 437 and ruin homes with hatred, calling in 438 the scourge of Furies and avenging fires. 439 A thousand names thou bearest, and thy ways 440 of ruin multiply a thousand-fold. 441 Arouse thy fertile breast! Go, rend in twain 442 this plighted peace! Breed calumnies and sow 443 causes of battle, till yon warrior hosts 444 cry out for swords and leap to gird them on."
7.421	421 Turne, tot incassum fusos patiere labores 422 et tua Dardaniis transcribi sceptra colonis? 423 Rex tibi coniugium et quaesitas sanguine dotes 424 abnegat, externusque in regnum quaeritur heres. 425 I nunc, ingratis offer te, inrise, periclis; 426 Tyrrhenas, i, sterne acies; tege pace Latinos. 427 Haec adeo tibi me, placida cum nocte iaceres, 428 ipsa palam fari omnipotens Saturnia iussit.	445 Straightway Alecto, through whose body flows 446 the Gorgon poison, took her viewless way 447 to Latium and the lofty walls and towers 448 of the Laurentian King. Crouching she sate 449 in silence on the threshold of the bower 450 where Queen Amata in her fevered soul 451 pondered, with all a woman's wrath and fear, 452 upon the Trojans and the marriage-suit 453 of Turnus. From her Stygian hair the fiend 454 a single serpent flung, which stole its way 455 to the Queen's very heart, that, frenzy-driven, 456 she might on her whole house confusion pour. 457 Betwixt her smooth breast and her robe

	429 Quare age et armari pubem portisque moveri 430 laetus in arma para, et Phrygios qui flumine pulchro 431 consedere duces pictasque exure carinas. 432 Caelestum vis magna iubet. Rex ipse Latinus, 433 ni dare coniugium et dicto parere fatetur, 434 sentiat et tandem Turnum experiatur in armis. 435 Hic iuvenis vatem inridens sic orsa vicissim 436 ore refert: Classis invectas Thybridis undam 437 non, ut rere, meas effugit nuntius auris. 438 Ne tantos mihi finge metus; nec regia Iuno 439 inmemor est nostri. 440 Sed te victa situ verique effeta senectus, 441 o mater, curis nequiquam exercet et arma 442 regum inter falsa vatem formidine ludit. 443 Cura tibi divom effigies et templa tueri: 444 bella viri pacemque gerent, quis bella gerenda. 445 Talibus Allecto dictis exarsit in iras, 446 at iuveni oranti subitus tremor occupat artus, 447 deriguere oculi: tot Erinys sibilat hydris 448 tantaque se facies aperit; tum flammea torquens 449 lumina cunctantem et quaerentem dicere plura 450 reppulit et geminos erexit crinibus anguis	it wound 458 unfelt, unseen, and in her wrathful mind 459 instilled its viper soul. Like golden chain 460 around her neck it twined, or stretched along 461 the fillets on her brow, or with her hair 462 enwrithing coiled; then on from limb to limb 463 slipped tortuous. Yet though the venom strong 464 thrilled with its first infection every vein, 465 and touched her bones with fire, she knew it not, 466 nor yielded all her soul, but made her plea 467 in gentle accents such as mothers use; 468 and many a tear she shed, about her child, 469 her darling, destined for a Phrygian's bride: 470 “O father! can we give Lavinia's hand 471 to Trojan fugitives? why wilt thou show 472 no mercy on thy daughter, nor thyself; 473 nor unto me, whom at the first fair wind 474 that wretch will leave deserted, bearing far
7.451	451 verberaque insonuit rabidoque haec addidit ore: 452 En ego victa situ, quam veri effeta senectus 453 arma inter regum falsa formidine ludit. 454 Respice ad haec: adsum dirarum ab sede sororum, 455 bella manu letumque gero. 456 Sic effata facem iuveni coniecit et atro 457 lumine fumantis fixit sub pectore taedas. 458 Olli somnum ingens rumpit pavor, ossaque et artus	475 upon his pirate ship my stolen child? 476 Was it not thus that Phrygian shepherd came 477 to Lacedaemon, ravishing away 478 Helen, the child of Leda, whom he bore 479 to those false Trojan lands? Hast thou forgot 480 thy plighted word? Where now thy boasted love 481 of kith and kin, and many a troth-plight given 482 unto our kinsman Turnus? If we need 483 an alien son, and Father Faunus' words 484 irrevocably o'er thy spirit brood, 485 I tell thee every land not linked with ours 486 under one sceptre, but distinct and free, 487 is

	459 perfundit toto proruptus corpore sudor; 460 arma amens fremit, arma toro tectisque requirit; 461 saevit amor ferri et scelerata insania belli, 462 ira super: magno veluti cum flamma sonore 463 virgea suggeritur costis undantis aëni 464 exsultantque aestu latices, furit intus aquaï 465 fumidus atque alte spumis exuberat amnis, 466 nec iam se capit unda, volat vapor ater ad auras. 467 Ergo iter ad regem polluta pace Latinum 468 indicit primis iuvenum et iubet arma parari, 469 tutari Italiam, detrudere finibus hostem: 470 se satis ambobus Teucrisque venire Latinisque. 471 Haec ubi dicta dedit divosque in vota vocavit, 472 certatim sese Rutuli exhortantur in arma: 473 hunc decus egregium formae movet atque iuventae, 474 hunc atavi reges, hunc claris dextera factis. 475 Dum Turnus Rutulos animis audacibus implet, 476 Allecto in Teucros Stygiis se concitat alis, 477 arte nova speculata locum, quo litore pulcher 478 insidiis cursuque feras agitabat Iulus. 479 Hic subitam canibus rabiem Cocytia virgo 480 obicit et noto naris contingit odore,	alien; and 't is thus the gods intend. 488 Indeed, if Turnus' ancient race be told, 489 it sprang of Inachus, Acrisius, 490 and out of mid-Mycenae.” But she sees 491 her lord Latinus resolute, her words 492 an effort vain; and through her body spreads 493 the Fury's deeply venomed viper-sting. 494 Then, woe-begone, by dark dreams goaded on, 495 she wanders aimless, fevered and unstrung 496 along the public ways; as oft one sees 497 beneath the twisted whips a leaping top 498 sped in long spirals through a palace-close 499 by lads at play: obedient to the thong, 500 it weaves wide circles in the gaping view 501 of its small masters, who admiring see 502 the whirling boxwood made a living thing 503 under their lash. So fast and far she roved 504 from town to town among the clansmen wild.
7.481	481 ut cervum ardentes agerent; quae prima laborum 482 causa fuit belloque animos accendit agrestis. 483 Cervus erat forma praestanti et cornibus ingens, 484 Tyrrhidae pueri quem matris ab ubere raptum 485 nutribant Tyrrhusque pater, cui regia parent 486 armenta et late custodia credita campi. 487 Adsuetum imperiis soror omni Silvia cura 488 mollibus intexens ornabat cornua	505 Then to the wood she ran, feigning to feel 506 the madness Bacchus loves; for she essays 507 a fiercer crime, by fiercer frenzy moved. 508 Now in the leafy dark of mountain vales 509 she hides her daughter, ravished thus away 510 from Trojan bridegroom and the wedding-feast. 511 “Hail, Bacchus! Thou alone,” she shrieked and raved, 512 “art worthy such a maid. For thee she bears 513 the thyrsus with soft ivy-clusters crowned, 514 and trips ecstatic in thy beauteous choir. 515 For thee alone my daughter shall unbind 516 the glory of her virgin hair.” Swift runs 517

	sertis 489 pectebatque ferum puroque in fonte lavabat. 490 Ille, manum patiens mensaeque adsuetus erili, 491 errabat silvis rursusque ad limina nota 492 ipse domum sera quamvis se nocte ferebat. 493 Hunc procul errantem rabidae venantis Iuli 494 commovere canes, fluvio cum forte secundo 495 deflueret ripaque aestus viridante levaret. 496 Ipse etiam, eximiae laudis succensus amore, 497 Ascanius curvo direxit spicula cornu; 498 nec dextrae erranti deus afuit, actaque multo 499 perque uterum sonitu perque ilia venit harundo. 500 Saucius at quadrupes nota intra tecta refugit 501 successitque gemens stabulis questuque cruentus 502 atque imploranti similis tectum omne replebat. 503 Silvia prima soror, palmis percussa lacertos, 504 auxilium vocat et duros conclamat agrestis. 505 Olli, pestis enim tacitis latet aspera silvis, 506 inprovisi adsunt, hic torre armatus obusto, 507 stipitis hic gravidi nodis: quod cuique repertum 508 rimanti, telum ira facit. Vocat agmina Tyrrhus, 509 quadrifidam quercum cuneis ut forte coactis 510 scindebat, rapta spirans immane securi.	the rumor of her deed; and, frenzy-driven, 518 the wives of Latium to the forests fly, 519 enkindled with one rage. They leave behind 520 their desolated hearths, and let rude winds 521 o'er neck and tresses blow; their voices fill 522 the welkin with convulsive shriek and wail; 523 and, with fresh fawn-skins on their bodies bound, 524 they brandish vine-clad spears. The Queen herself 525 lifts high a blazing pine tree, while she sings 526 a wedding-song for Turnus and her child. 527 With bloodshot glance and anger wild, she cries: 528 “Ho! all ye Latin wives, if e'er ye knew 529 kindness for poor Amata, if ye care 530 for a wronged mother's woes, O, follow me! 531 Cast off the matron fillet from your brows, 532 and revel to our mad, voluptuous song.” 533 Thus, through the woodland haunt of creatures wild, 534 Alecto urges on the raging Queen
7.511	511 At saeva e speculis tempus dea nacta nocendi 512 ardua tecta petit stabuli et de culmine summo 513 pastorale canit signum cornuque recurvo 514 Tartaream intendit vocem, qua protinus omne 515 contremuit nemus et silvae insonuere profundae; 516 audiit et Triviae longe lacus, audiit amnis 517 sulfurea Nar albus aqua fontesque	535 with Bacchus' cruel goad. But when she deemed 536 the edge of wrath well whetted, and the house 537 of wise Latinus of all reason reft, 538 then soared the black-winged goddess to the walls 539 of the bold Rutule, to the city built 540 (So runs the tale) by beauteous Danae 541 and her Acrisian people, shipwrecked there 542 by south wind strong. Its name was Ardea 543 in language of our sires, and that proud name 544 of Ardea still it wears, though proud no more. 545 Here

	Velini, 518 et trepidae matres pressere ad pectora natos. 519 Tum vero ad vocem celeres, qua bucina signum 520 dira dedit, raptis concurrunt undique telis 521 indomiti agricolae; nec non et Troïa pubes 522 Ascanio auxilium castris effundit apertis. 523 Direxere acies. Non iam certamine agresti, 524 stipitibus duris agitur sudibusve praeustis, 525 sed ferro ancipiti decernunt atraque late 526 horrescit strictis seges ensibus aeraque fulgent 527 sole lacessita et lucem sub nubila iactant: 528 fluctus uti primo coepit cum albescere vento, 529 paulatim sese tollit mare et altius undas 530 erigit, inde imo consurgit ad aethera fundo. 531 Hic iuvenis primam ante aciem stridente sagitta, 532 natorum Tyrrhi fuerat qui maximus, Almo, 533 sternitur; haesit enim sub gutture volnus et udae 534 vocis iter tenuemque inclusit sanguine vitam. 535 Corpora multa virum circa seniorque Galaesus, 536 dum paci medium se offert, iustissimus unus 537 qui fuit Ausoniisque olim ditissimus arvis: 538 quinque greges illi balantum, quina redibant 539 armenta, et terram centum vertebat aratris. 540 Atque ea per campos aequo dum Marte geruntur,	Turnus in the gloom of midnight lay 546 half-sleeping in his regal hall. For him 547 Alecto her grim fury-guise put by, 548 and wore an old crone's face, her baleful brow 549 delved deep with wrinkled age, her hoary hair 550 in sacred fillet bound, and garlanded 551 with leaf of olive: Calybe she seemed, 552 an aged servitress ot Juno's shrine, 553 and in this seeming thus the prince addressed:— 554 “O Turnus, wilt thou tamely see thy toil 555 lavished in vain? and thy true throne consigned 556 to Trojan wanderers? The King repels 557 thy noble wooing and thy war-won dower. 558 He summons him a son of alien stem 559 to take his kingdom. Rouse thee now, and front, 560 scorned and without reward, these perilous days. 561 Tread down that Tuscan host! Protect the peace 562 of Latium from its foe! Such is the word 563 which, while in night and slumber thou wert laid, 564 Saturnia's godhead, visibly revealed,
7.541	541 promissi dea facta potens, ubi sanguine bellum 542 imbuit et primae commisit funera pugnae, 543 deserit Hesperiam et caeli convexa per auras 544 Iunonem victrix adfatur voce superba: 545 En, perfecta tibi bello discordia tristi: 546 dic in amicitiam coeant et foedera	565 bade me declare. Up, therefore, and array 566 thy warriors in arms! Swift sallying forth 567 from thy strong city-gates, on to the fray 568 exultant go! Assail the Phrygian chiefs 569 who tent them by thy beauteous river's marge, 570 and burn their painted galleys! 't is the will 571 of gods above that speaks. Yea, even the King 572 Latinus, if he will not heed thy plea, 573 or hear thy wooing, shall be taught iungant. 547 Quando quidem Ausonio respersi sanguine Teucros, 548 hoc etiam his addam, tua si mihi certa voluntas: 549 finitimas in bella feram rumoribus urbes 550 accendamque animos insani Martis amore, 551 undique ut auxilio veniunt; spargam arma per agros. 552 Tum contra Iuno; Terrorum et fraudis abunde est; 553 stant belli causae, pugnatur comminus armis, 554 quae fors prima dedit sanguis novus imbuit arma. 555 Talia coniugia et talis celebrent hymenaeos 556 egregium Veneris genus et rex ipse Latinus. 557 Te super aetherias errare licentius auras 558 haud pater ille velit, summi regnator Olympi: 559 cede locis; ego, siqua super fortuna laborum est, 560 ipsa regam. Talis dederat Saturnia voces. 561 Illa autem attollit stridentis anguibus alas 562 Cocytique petit sedem, supera ardua linquens. 563 Est locus Italiae medio sub montibus altis, 564 nobilis et fama multis memoratus in oris, 565 Amsancti valles: densis hunc frondibus atrum 566 urguet utrimque latus nemoris, medioque fragosus 567 dat sonitum saxis et torto vertice torrens. 568 Hic specus horrendum et saevi spiracula Ditis 569 monstrantur, ruptoque ingens Acheronte vorago 570 pestiferas aperit fauces, quis condita Erinys,	too late 574 what Turnus is in panoply of war.”

7.571	571 invisum numen, terras caelumque levabat. 572 Nec minus interea extremam Saturnia bello 573 imponit regina manum. Ruit omnis in urbem 574 pastorum ex acie numerus caesosque reportant 575 Almonem puerum foedatique ora	575 In mocking answer to the prophetess 576 the warrior thus replied: “That stranger fleet 577 in Tiber moored, not, as thy folly prates, 578 of me unnoted lies. Vex me no more 579 with thy fantastic terror. Juno's power 580 is watchful of my cause. 'T is mere old age, 581 gone to decay and dotage, fills thy breast 582

	Galaesi 576 implorantque deos obtestanturque Latinum. 577 Turnus adest medioque in crimine caedis et igni 578 terrorem ingeminat: Teucros in regna vocari, 579 stirpem admisceri Phrygiam, se limine pelli. 580 Tum quorum attonitae Baccho nemora avia matres 581 insultant thiasis (neque enim leve nomen Amatae), 582 undique collecti coeunt Martemque fatigant. 583 Ilicet infandum cuncti contra omina bellum, 584 contra fata deum perverso numine poscunt, 585 certatim regis circumstant tecta Latini. 586 Ille velut pelagi rupes immota resistit, 587 ut pelagi rupes magno veniente fragore, 588 quae sese multis circum latrantibus undis 589 mole tenet; scopuli nequiquam et spumea circum 590 saxa fremunt laterique inlisa refunditur alga. 591 Verum ubi nulla datur caecum exsuperare potestas 592 consilium et saevae nutu Iunonis eunt res, 593 multa deos aurasque pater testatus inanis: 594 Frangimur heu fatis, inquit, ferimurque procella! 595 Ipsi has sacrilego pendetis sanguine poenas, 596 O miseri. Te, Turne, nefas, te triste manebit 597 supplicium, votisque deos venerabere seris. 598 Nam mihi parta quies, omnisque in limine portus; 599 funere felici spolior. Nec plura locutus 600 saepsit se tectis rerumque reliquit habenas.	with vain foreboding, and, while kings contend, 583 scares and deceives thy visionary eye. 584 Guard thou in yonder temple's holy shade 585 the images divine! Of peace and war 586 let men and warriors the burden bear!” 587 So kindled he Alecto's wrath to flame; 588 and even as he spoke a shudder thrilled 589 the warrior's body, and his eyeballs stood 590 stonily staring at the hydra hair 591 which hissed and writhed above the grisly head 592 of the large-looming fiend. With eyes of fire 593 horribly rolling, she repelled him far, 594 while he but faltered speechless. She upraised 595 two coiling snakes out of her tresses, cracked 596 the lashes of her scourge, and wrathfully, 597 with raving lips replied: “Look well on me, 598 gone to decay and dotage of old age! 599 And mocked with foolish fear while kings contend! 600 Wilt hearken now! Behold me, hither flown 601 from where my sister-furies dwell! My hands 602 bring bloody death and war.” She spoke, and hurled 603 her firebrand at the hero, thrusting deep 604 beneath his heart her darkly smouldering flame. 605 Then horror broke his sleep, and fearful sweat 606 dripped from his every limb. He shrieked aloud 607 for arms; and seized the ready arms that lay 608 around his couch and hall. Then o'er his soul 609 the lust of battle and wild curse of war 610 broke forth in angry power, as when the flames 611 of faggots round the bubbling cauldron sing, 612 and up the waters leap; the close-kept flood 613 brims over, streaming, foaming, breaking bound, 614 and flings thick clouds in air. He, summoning 615 his chieftains, bade them on Latinus move, 616 break peace, take arms, and, over Italy 617 their shields extending, to thrust forth her foe: 618 himself for Teucrian with Latin joined 619 was more than match. He called upon the gods 620 in witness of his vows: while, nothing loth, 621 Rutulia's warriors rushed into array; 622 some by his youth and noble beauty moved, 623 some by his kingly sires and fame in arms.
7.601	601 Mos erat Hesperio in Latio, quem protinus urbes 602 Albanae coluere sacrum nunc maxima rerum	624 While Turnus stirred Rutulia's valiant souls, 625 Alecto on her Stygian pinions sped 626 to where the Teucrians lay. She scanned the ground

	603 Roma colit, cum prima movent in proelia Martem, 604 sive Getis inferre manu lacrimabile bellum 605 Hyrcanisve Arabisve parant seu tendere ad Indos 606 Auroramque sequi Parthosque reposcere signa. 607 Sunt geminae belli portae (sic nomine dicunt) 608 religione sacrae et saevi formidine Martis; 609 centum aerei claudunt vectes aeternaque ferri 610 robora, nec custos absistit limine Ianus: 611 has, ubi certa sedet patribus sententia pugnae, 612 ipse Quirinali trabea cinctuque Gabino 613 insignis reserat stridentia limina consul, 614 ipse vocat pugnas; sequitur tum cetera pubes, 615 aereaque adsensu conspirant cornua rauco. 616 Hoc et tum Aeneadis indicere bella Latinus 617 more iubebatur tristisque recludere portas. 618 Abstinuit tactu pater aversusque refugit 619 foeda ministeria et caecis se condidit umbris. 620 Tum regina deum caelo delapsa morantis 621 impulit ipsa manu portas, et cardine verso 622 belli ferratos rumpit Saturnia postes. 623 Ardet inexcita Ausonia atque immobilis ante; 624 Pars pedes ire parat campis, pars arduus altis 625 pulverulentus equis furit; omnes arma requirunt. 626 Pars levis clipeos et spicula lucida tergent 627 arvina pingui subiguntque in cote secures; 628 signaque ferre iuvat sonitusque audire tubarum. 629 Quinque adeo magnae positis incudibus urbes 630 tela novant, Atina potens Tiburque superbum,	627 with eager guile, where by the river's marge 628 fair-browed Iulus with his nets and snares 629 rode fiercely to the chase. Then o'er his hounds 630 that hell-born virgin breathed a sudden rage, 631 and filled each cunning nostril with the scent 632 of stags, till forth in wild pursuit they flew. 633 Here all the woe began, and here awoke 634 in rustic souls the swift-enkindling war. 635 For a fair stag, tall-antlered, stolen away 636 even from its mother's milk, had long been kept 637 by Tyrrhus and his sons —the shepherd he 638 of all the royal flocks, and forester 639 of a wide region round. With fondest care 640 their sister Silvia entwined its horns 641 with soft, fresh garlands, tamed it to run close, 642 and combed the creature, or would bring to bathe 643 at a clear, crystal spring. It knew the hands 644 of all its gentle masters, and would feed 645 from their own dish; or wandering through the wood, 646 come back unguided to their friendly door, 647 though deep the evening shade. Iulus' dogs 648 now roused this wanderer in their ravening chase, 649 as, drifted down-stream far from home it lay, 650 on a green bank a-cooling. From bent bow 651 Ascanius, eager for a hunter's praise, 652 let go his shaft; nor did Alecto fail 653 his aim to guide: but, whistling through the air,
7.631	631 Ardea Crustumerique et turrigerae Antemnae.	654 the light-winged reed pierced deep in flank and side. 655 Swift to its cover

	632 Tegmina tuta cavant capitum flectuntque salignas 633 umbonum cratis; alii thoracas aenos 634 aut levis ocreas lento ducunt argento; 635 vomeris huc et falcis honos, huc omnis aratri 636 cessit amor; recoquunt patrios fornacibus enses. 637 Classica iamque sonant; it bello tessera signum. 638 Hic galeam tectis trepidus rapit, ille frementis 639 ad iuga cogit equos clipeumque auroque trilicem 640 loricam induitur fidoque accingitur ense. 641 Pandite nunc Helicona, deae, cantusque movete, 642 qui bello exciti reges, quae quemque secutae 643 complerint campos acies, quibus Itala iam tum 644 floruerit terra alma viris, quibus arserit armis. 645 Et meministis enim, divae, et memorare potestis: 646 ad nos vix tenuis famae perlabitur aura. 647 Primus init bellum Tyrrhenis asper ab oris 648 contemptor divom Mezentius agminaque armat. 649 Filius huic iuxta Lausus, quo pulchrior alter 650 non fuit excepto Laurentis corpore Turni, 651 Lausus, equum domitor debellatorque ferarum, 652 ducit Agyllina nequiquam ex urbe secutos 653 mille viros, dignus, patriis qui laetior esset 654 imperiis et cui pater haud Mezentius esset. 655 Post hos insignem palma per gramina currum 656 victoresque ostentat equos satus Hercule pulchro 657 pulcher Aventinus, clipeoque insigne paternum 658 centum angues cinctamque gerit serpentibus hydram; 659 collis Aventini silva quem Rhea sacerdos 660 furtivum partu sub luminis edidit oras,	fled the wounded thing, 656 and crept loud-moaning to its wonted stall, 657 where, like a blood-stained suppliant, it seemed 658 to fill that shepherd's house with plaintive prayer. 659 Then Silvia the sister, smiting oft 660 on breast and arm, made cry for help, and called 661 the sturdy rustics forth in gathering throng. 662 These now (for in the silent forest couched 663 the cruel Fury) swift to battle flew. 664 One brandished a charred stake, another swung 665 a knotted cudgel, as rude anger shapes 666 its weapon of whate'er the searching eye 667 first haps to fall on. Tyrrhus roused his clans, 668 just when by chance he split with blows of wedge 669 an oak in four; and, panting giant breath, 670 shouldered his woodman's axe. Alecto then, 671 prompt to the stroke of mischief, soared aloft 672 from where she spying sate, to the steep roof 673 of a tall byre, and from its peak of straw 674 blew a wild signal on a shepherd's horn, 675 outflinging her infernal note so far 676 that all the forest shuddered, and the grove 677 throbbed to its deepest glen. Cold Trivia's lake 678 from end to end gave ear, and every wave 679 of the white stream of Nar, the lonely pools 680 of still Velinus heard: while at the sound 681 pale mothers to their breasts their children drew. 682 Swift to the signal of the dreadful horn, 683 snatching their weapons rude, the freeborn swains

7.661	661 mixta deo mulier, postquam Laurentia victor 662 Geryone extincto Tirynthius attigit arva 663 Tyrrhenoque boves in flumine lavit Hiberas. 664 Pila manu saevosque gerunt in bella dolones 665 et tereti pugnant mucrone veruque Sabello. 666 Ipse pedes, tegumen torquens immane leonis, 667 terribili impexum saeta cum dentibus albis 668 indutus capiti, sic regia tecta subibat, 669 horridus, Herculeoque umeros innexus amictu. 670 Tum gemini fratres Tiburtia moenia linquunt, 671 fratris Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem, 672 Catillusque acerque Coras, Argiva iuventus, 673 et primam ante aciem densa inter tela feruntur: 674 ceu duo nubigenae cum vertice montis ab alto 675 descendunt centauri, Homolen Othrymque nivalem 676 linquentes cursu rapido; dat euntibus ingens 677 silva locum et magno cedunt virgulta fragore. 678 Nec Praenestinae fundator defuit urbis, 679 Volcano genitum pecora inter agrestia regem 680 inventumque focis omnis quem credidit aetas 681 Caeculus. Hunc late legio comitatur agrestis: 682 quique altum Praeneste viri quique arva Gabinae 683 Iunonis gelidumque Anienem et roscida rivis 684 Hernica saxa colunt, quos dives Anagnia pascit, 685 quos, Amasene pater. Non illis omnibus arma, 686 nec clipei currusve sonant: pars maxima glandes 687 liventis plumbi spargit, pars spicula gestat 688 bina manu, fulvosque lupi de pelle galeros 689 tegmen habent capiti, vestigia nuda sinistri	684 assembled for the fray; the Trojan bands 685 poured from their bivouac with instant aid 686 for young Ascanius. In array of war 687 both stand confronting. Not mere rustic brawl 688 with charred oak-staff and cudgel is the fight, 689 but with the two-edged steel; the naked swords 690 wave like dark-bladed harvest-field, while far 691 the brazen arms flash in the smiting sun, 692 and skyward fling their beam: so some wide sea, 693 at first but whitened in the rising wind, 694 swells its slow-rolling mass and ever higher 695 its billows rears, until the utmost deep 696 lifts in one surge to heaven. The first to fall 697 was Almo, eldest-born of Tyrrhus' sons, 698 whom, striding in the van, a loud-winged shaft 699 laid low in death; deep in his throat it clung, 700 and silenced with his blood the dying cry 701 of his frail life. Around him fell the forms 702 of many a brave and strong; among them died 703 gray-haired Galaesus pleading for a truce: 704 righteous he was, and of Ausonian fields 705 a prosperous master; five full flocks had he 706 of bleating sheep, and from his pastures came 707 five herds of cattle home; his busy churls 708 turned with a hundred ploughs his fruitful glebe.

	690 instituere pedis, crudus tegit altera pero.
7.691	691 At Messapus, equum domitor, Neptunia proles, 692 quem neque fas igni cuiquam nec sternere ferro, 693 iam pridem resides populos desuetaque bello 694 agmina in arma vocat subito ferrumque retractat. 695 Hi Fescenninas acies Aequosque Faliscos. 696 Hi Soractis habent arces Flaviniaque arva 697 et Cimini cum monte lacum lucosque Capenos. 698 Ibant aequati numero regemque canebant, 699 ceu quondam nivei liquida inter nubila cycni, 700 cum sese e pastu referunt et longa canoros 701 dant per colla modos, sonat amnis et Asia longe 702 pulsa palus. 703 Nec quisquam aeratas acies ex agmine tanto 704 misceri putet, aeriam sed gurgite ab alto 705 urgueri volucrum raucarum ad litora nubem. 706 Ecce Sabinorum prisco de sanguine magnum 707 agmen agens Clausus magnique ipse agminis instar, 708 Claudia nunc a quo diffunditur et tribus et gens 709 per Latium, postquam in partem data Roma Sabinis. 710 Una ingens Amiterna cohors priscique Quirites, 711 Ereti manus omnis oliviferaeque Mutuscae; 712 qui Nomentum urbem, qui Rosea rura Velini, 713 qui Tetricae horrentis rupes montemque Severum 714 Casperiamque colunt Forulosque et flumen Himellae, 715 qui Tiberim Fabarimque bibunt, quos frigida misit 716 Nursia, et Hortinae classes populique Latini, 717 quosque secans infaustum interluit Allia nomen: 718 quam multi Libyco volvuntur marmore fluctus 719 saevus ubi Orion hibernis conditur	908 Messapus came, steed-tamer, Neptune's son, 909 by sword and fire invincible: this day, 910 though mild his people and unschooled in war, 911 he calls them to embattled lines, and draws 912 no lingering sword. Fescennia musters there, 913 Aequi Falisci, and what clans possess 914 Soracte's heights, Flavinia's fruitful farms, 915 Ciminian lake and mountain, and the groves 916 about Capena. Rank on rank they move, 917 loud singing of their chieftain's praise: as when 918 a flock of snowy swans through clouded air 919 return from feeding, and make tuneful cry 920 from their long throats, while Asia's rivers hear, 921 and lone Cayster's startled moorland rings: 922 for hardly could the listening ear discern 923 the war-cry of a mail-clad host; the sound 924 was like shrill-calling birds, when home from sea 925 their soaring flock moves shoreward like a cloud.

	undis; 720 vel cum sole novo densae torrentur aristae
7.721	721 aut Hermi campo aut Lyciae flaventibus arvis. 722 Scuta sonant pulsuque pedum conterrita tellus. 723 Hinc Agamemnonius, Troiani nominis hostis, 724 curru iungit Halaesus equos Turnoque ferocis 725 mille rapit populos, vertunt felicia Baccho 726 Massica qui rastris et quos de collibus altis 727 Aurunci misere patres, Sidicinaque iuxta 728 aequora quique Cales linquunt, amnisque vadosi 729 accola Volturni, pariterque Saticulus asper 730 Oscorumque manus. Teretes sunt aclydes illis 731 tela, sed haec lento mos est aptare flagello; 732 laevas caetra tegit, falcati comminus enses. 733 Nec tu carminibus nostris indictus abibis, 734 Oebale, quem generasse Telon Sebethide nympha 735 fertur, Teleboum Capreas cum regna teneret, 736 iam senior; patriis sed non et filius arvis 737 contentus late iam tum dicione premebat 738 Sarrastis populos et quae rigat aequora Sarnus 739 quique Rufras Batulumque tenent atque arva Celemnae 740 et quos maliferae despectant moenia Abellae, 741 Teutonico ritu soliti torquere cateias, 742 tegmina quis capitum raptus de subere cortex, 743 aerataeque micant peltae, micat aereus ensis. 744 Et te montosae misere in proelia Nersae, 745 Ufens, insignem fama et felicibus armis; 746 horrida praecipue cui gens adsuetaque multo 747 venatu nemorum, duris Aequicula glaebis. 748 Armati terram exercent,	709 While o'er the battle-field thus doubtful swung 710 the scales of war, the Fury (to her task 711 now equal proven) having dyed the day 712 a deep-ensanguined hue, and opened fight 713 with death and slaughter, made no tarrying 714 within Hesperia, but skyward soared, 715 and, Ioud in triumph, insolently thus 716 to Juno called: “See, at thy will, their strife 717 full-blown to war and woe! Could even thyself 718 command them now to truce and amity? 719 But I, that with Ausonia's blood befoul 720 their Trojan hands, yet more can do, if thou 721 shift not thy purpose. For with dire alarms 722 I will awake the bordering states to war 723 enkindling in their souls the frenzied lust 724 the war-god breathes; till from th' horizon round 725 the reinforcement pours—I scattering seeds 726 of carnage through the land.” In answer spoke 727 juno: “Enough of artifice and fear! 728 Thy provocation works. Now have they joined 729 in close and deadly combat, and warm blood 730 those sudden-leaping swords incarnadines, 731 which chance put in their hands. Such nuptial joys, 732 such feast of wedlock, let the famous son 733 of Venus with the King Latinus share! 734 But yon Olympian Sire and King no more 735 permits thee freely in our skies to roam. 736 Go, quit the field! Myself will take control 737 of hazards and of labors yet to be.” 738 Thus Saturn's daughter spoke. Alecto then, 739 unfolding far her hissing, viperous wings, 740 turned toward her Stygian home, and took farewell 741 of upper air. Deep in Italia lies 742 a region mountain-girded, widely famed, 743 and known in olden songs from land to land: 744 the valley of Amsanctus; deep, dark shades 745 enclose it between forest-walls, whereby 746 through thunderous stony channel serpentines 747 a roaring fall. Here in a monstrous cave 748 are breathing-holes of hell, a vast abyss 749 where Acheron opes wide its noisome jaws: 750 in this Alecto plunged, concealing so 751 her execrable godhead, while the air 752 of earth and heaven felt the curse semperque recentis 749 convectare iuvat praedas et vivere rapto. 750 Quin et Marruvia venit de gente sacerdos,	removed.

7.751	751 fronde super galeam et felici comptus oliva. 752 Archippi regis missu, fortissimus Umbro, 753 vipereo generi et graviter spirantibus hydris 754 spargere qui somnos cantuque manuque solebat 755 mulcebatque iras et morsus arte levabat. 756 Sed non Dardaniae medicari cuspidis ictum 757 evaluit, neque eum iuvere in volnera cantus 758 somniferi et Marsis quaesitae montibus herbae. 759 Te nemus Angitiae, vitrea te Fucinus unda, 760 te liquidi flevere lacus. 761 Ibat et Hippolyti proles pulcherrima bello, 762 Virbius, insignem quem mater Aricia misit, 763 eductum Egeriae lucis umentia circum 764 litora, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Dianae. 765 Namque ferunt fama Hippolytum, postquam arte novercae 766 occiderit patriasque explerit sanguine poenas 767 turbatis distractus equis, ad sidera rursus 768 aetheria et superas caeli venisse sub auras, 769 Paeoniis revocatum herbis et amore Dianae. 770 Tum pater omnipotens, aliquem indignatus ab umbris 771 mortalem infernis ad lumina surgere vitae, 772 ipse repertorem medicinae talis et artis 773 fulmine Phoebigenam Stygias detrusit ad undas. 774 At Trivia Hippolytum secretis alma recondit 775 sedibus et nymphae Egeriae nemorique relegat, 776 solus ubi in silvis Italis ignobilis aevom 777 exigeret versoque ubi nomine Virbius esset.	753 Forthwith the sovereign hands of Juno haste 754 to consummate the war. The shepherds bear 755 back from the field of battle to the town 756 the bodies of the slain: young Almo's corse 757 and gray Galaesus' bleeding head. They call 758 just gods in heaven to Iook upon their wrong, 759 and bid Latinus see it. Turnus comes, 760 and, while the angry mob surveys the slain, 761 adds fury to the hour. “Shall the land 762 have Trojan lords? Shall Phrygian marriages 763 debase our ancient, royal blood—and I 764 be spurned upon the threshold?” Then drew near 765 the men whose frenzied women-folk had held 766 bacchantic orgies in the pathless grove, 767 awed by Amata's name: these, gathering, 768 sued loud for war. Yea, all defied the signs 769 and venerable omens; all withstood 770 divine decrees, and clamored for revenge, 771 prompted by evil powers. They besieged 772 the house of King Latinus, shouting-loud 773 with emulous rage. But like a sea-girt rock 774 unmoved he stood; like sea-girt rock when surge 775 of waters o'er it sweeps, or howling waves 776 surround; it keeps a ponderous front of power, 777 though foaming cliffs around it vainly roar; 778 from its firm base the broken sea-weeds fall. 779 But when authority no whit could change 780 their counsels blind, and each event fulfilled 781 dread Juno's will, then with complaining prayer 782 the aged sire cried loud upon his gods 783 and on th' unheeding air: “Alas,” said he, 784 “My doom is shipwreck, and the tempest bears 785 my bark away! O wretches, your own blood 786 shall pay the forfeit for your impious crime. 787 O Turnus! O abominable deed! 788 Avenging woes pursue thee; to deaf gods 789 thy late and unavailing prayer shall rise. 790 Now was my time to rest. But as I come 791 close to my journey's end, thou spoilest me 792 of comfort in my death.” With this the King 793 fled to his house and ceased his realm to guide.

	778 Unde etiam templo Triviae lucisque sacratis 779 cornipedes arcentur equi, quod litore currum 780 et iuvenem monstris pavidi effudere marinis.
7.781	781 Filius ardentis haud setius aequore campi 782 exercebat equos curruque in bella ruebat. 783 Ipse inter primos praestanti corpore Turnus 784 vertitur arma tenens et toto vertice supra est. 785 Cui triplici crinita iuba galea alta Chimaeram 786 sustinet, Aetnaeos efflantem faucibus ignis: 787 tam magis illa fremens et tristibus effera flammis, 788 quam magis effuso crudescunt sanguine pugnae. 789 At levem clipeum sublatis cornibus Io 790 auro insignibat, iam saetis obsita, iam bos 791 (argumentum ingens), et custos virginis Argus 792 caelataque amnem fundens pater Inachus urna. 793 Insequitur nimbus peditum clipeataque totis 794 agmina densentur campis, Argivaque pubes 795 Auruncaeque manus, Rutuli veteresque Sicani 796 et Sacranae acies et picti scuta Labici; 797 qui saltus, Tiberine, tuos sacrumque Numici 798 litus arant Rutulosque exercent vomere colles 799 Circaeumque iugum, quis Iuppiter Anxurus arvis 800 praesidet et viridi gaudens Feronia luco; 801 qua Saturae iacet atra palus gelidusque per imas 802 quaerit iter vallis atque in mare conditur Ufens. 803 Hos super advenit Volsca de gente Camilla 804 agmen agens equitum et florentis aere catervas, 805 bellatrix, non illa colo calathisve Minervae 806 femineas adsueta manus, sed proelia virgo	794 A sacred custom the Hesperian land 795 of Latium knew, by all the Alban hills 796 honored unbroken, which wide-ruling Rome 797 keeps to this day, when to new stroke she stirs 798 the might of Mars; if on the Danube's wave 799 resolved to fling the mournful doom of war, 800 or on the Caspian folk or Arabs wild; 801 or chase the morning far as India's verge, 802 ind from the Parthian despot wrest away 803 our banners Iost. Twin Gates of War there be, 804 of fearful name, to Mars' fierce godhead vowed: 805 a hundred brass bars shut them, and the strength 806 of uncorrupting steel; in sleepless watch 807 Janus the threshold keeps. 'T is here, what time 808 the senate's voice is war, the consul grave 809 in Gabine cincture and Quirinal shift 810 himself the griding hinges backward moves, 811 and bids the Romans arm; obedient then 812 the legionary host makes Ioud acclaim, 813 and hoarse consent the brazen trumpets blow. 814 Thus King Latinus on the sons of Troy 815 was urged to open war, and backward roll 816 those gates of sorrow: but the aged king 817 recoiled, refused the loathsome task, and fled 818 to solitary shades. Then from the skies 819 the Queen of gods stooped down, and her sole hand 820 the lingering portal moved; Saturnia 821 swung on their hinges the barred gates of war. 822 ausonia from its old tranquillity 823 bursts forth in flame. Foot-soldiers through the field

	807 dura pati cursuque pedum praevertere ventos. 808 Illa vel intactae segetis per summa volaret 809 gramina nec teneras cursu laesisset aristas, 810 vel mare per medium fluctu suspensa tumenti
7.811	811 ferret iter celeris nec tingueret aequore plantas. 812 Illam omnis tectis agrisque effusa iuventus 813 turbaque miratur matrum et prospectat euntem, 814 attonitis inhians animis, ut regius ostro 815 velet honos levis umeros, ut fibula crinem 816 auro internectat, Lyciam ut gerat ipsa pharetram 817 et pastoralem praefixa cuspide myrtum.
8.1	1 Ut belli signum Laurenti Turnus ab arce 2 extulit et rauco strepuerunt cornua cantu, 3 utque acris concussit equos utque impulit arma, 4 extemplo turbati animi, simul omne tumultu 5 coniurat trepido Latium saevitque iuventus 6 effera. Ductores primi Messapus et Ufens 7 contemptorque deum Mezentius undique cogunt 8 auxilia et latos vastant cultoribus agros. 9 mittitur et magni Venulus Diomedis ad urbem, 10 qui petat auxilium et Latio consistere Teucros, 11 advectum Aenean classi victosque penatis 12 inferre et fatis regem se dicere posci 13 edoceat multasque viro se adiungere gentis 14 Dardanio et late Latio increbrescere nomen. 15 Quid struat his coeptis, quem, si Fortuna sequatur, 16 eventum pugnae cupiat, manifestius ipsi 17 quam Turno regi aut regi apparere Latino. 18 Talia per Latium. Quae Laomedontius heros	1 When Turnus from Laurentum's bastion proud 2 published the war, and roused the dreadful note 3 of the harsh trumpet's song; when on swift steeds 4 the lash he laid and clashed his sounding arms; 5 then woke each warrior soul; all Latium stirred 6 with tumult and alarm; and martial rage 7 enkindled youth's hot blood. The chieftains proud, 8 Messapus, Ufens, and that foe of Heaven, 9 Mezentius, compel from far and wide 10 their loyal hosts, and strip the field and farm 11 of husbandmen. To seek auxiliar arms 12 they send to glorious Diomed's domain 13 the herald Venulus, and bid him cry: 14 “Troy is to Latium come; Aeneas' fleet 15 has come to land. He brings his vanquished gods, 16 and gives himself to be our destined King. 17 Cities not few accept him, and his name 18 through Latium waxes large. But what the foe 19 by such attempt intends, what victory 20 is his presumptuous hope, if Fortune smile, 21 Aetolia's lord will not less wisely fear 22 than royal Turnus or our Latin King.”

	19 cuncta videns magno curarum fluctuat aestu, 20 atque animum nunc huc celerem, nunc dividit illuc. 21 In partisque rapit varias perque omnia versat: 22 sicut aquae tremulum labris ubi lumen aenis 23 sole repercussum aut radiantis imagine lunae 24 omnia pervolitat late loca iamque sub auras 25 erigitur summique ferit lacuaria tecti. 26 Nox erat, et terras animalia fessa per omnis 27 alituum pecudumque genus sopor altus habebat: 28 cum pater in ripa gelidique sub aetheris axe 29 Aeneas, tristi turbatus pectora bello, 30 procubuit seramque dedit per membra quietem.
8.31	31 Huic deus ipse loci fluvio Tiberinus amoeno 32 populeas inter senior se attollere frondes 33 visus; eum tenuis glauco velabat amictu 34 carbasus, et crinis umbrosa tegebat harundo, 35 tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 36 O sate gente deum, Troianam ex hostibus urbem 37 qui revehis nobis aeternaque Pergama servas, 38 exspectate solo Laurenti arvisque Latinis, 39 hic tibi certa domus, certi, ne absiste, penates; 40 neu belli terrere minis: tumor omnis et irae 41 concessere deum. 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 Nunc qua ratione quod instat 50 expedias victor, paucis (adverte) docebo. 51 Arcades his oris, genus a Pallante profectum, 52 qui regem Euandrum comites, qui signa secuti,	23 Thus Latium's cause moved on. Meanwhile the heir 24 of great Laomedon, who knew full well 25 the whole wide land astir, was vexed and tossed 26 in troubled seas of care. This way and that 27 his swift thoughts flew, and scanned with like dismay 28 each partial peril or the general storm. 29 Thus the vexed waters at a fountain's brim, 30 smitten by sunshine or the silver sphere 31 of a reflected moon, send forth a beam 32 of flickering light that leaps from wall to wall, 33 or, skyward lifted in ethereal flight, 34 glances along some rich-wrought, vaulted dome. 35 Now night had fallen, and all weary things, 36 all shapes of beast or bird, the wide world o'er, 37 lay deep in slumber. So beneath the arch 38 of a cold sky Aeneas laid him down 39 upon the river-bank, his heart sore tried 40 by so much war and sorrow, and gave o'er 41 his body to its long-delayed repose. 42 There, 'twixt the poplars by the gentle stream, 43 the River-Father, genius of that place, 44 old Tiberinus visibly uprose; 45 a cloak of gray-green lawn he wore, his hair 46 o'erhung with wreath of reeds. In soothing words 47 thus, to console Aeneas' cares, he spoke: 48 “Seed of the gods! who bringest to my shore 49 thy Trojan city wrested from her foe, 50 a stronghold everlasting, Latium's plain 51 and fair Laurentum long have looked

	53 delegere locum et posuere in montibus urbem 54 Pallantis proavi de nomine Pallanteum. 55 Hi bellum adsidue ducunt cum gente Latina; 56 hos castris adhibe socios et foedera iunge. 57 Ipse ego te ripis et recto flumine ducam, 58 adversum remis superes subvectus ut amnem. 59 Surge age, nate dea, primisque cadentibus astris 60 Iunoni fer rite preces iramque minasque	for thee. 52 Here truly is thy home. Turn not away. 53 Here the true guardians of thy hearth shall be. 54 Fear not the gathering war. The wrath of Heaven 55 has stilled its swollen wave. A sign I tell: 56 Lest thou shouldst deem this message of thy sleep 57 a vain, deluding dream, thou soon shalt find 58 in the oak-copses on my margent green, 59 a huge sow, with her newly-littered brood 60 of thirty young; along the ground she lies, 61 snow-white, and round her udders her white young. 62 There shall thy city stand, and there thy toil 63 shall find untroubled rest. After the lapse 64 of thrice ten rolling years, Ascanius 65 shall found a city there of noble name, 66 White-City, Alba; 't is no dream I sing! 67 But I instruct thee now by what wise way 68 th' impending wars may bring thee victory: 69 receive the counsel, though the words be few: 70 within this land are men of Arcady, 71 of Pallas' line, who, following in the train 72 of King Evander and his men-at-arms, 73 built them a city in the hills, and chose 74 (honoring Pallas, their Pelasgian sire), 75 the name of Pallanteum. They make war 76 incessant with the Latins. Therefore call 77 this people to thy side and bind them close 78 in federated power. My channel fair 79 and shaded shore shall guide thee where they dwell, 80 and thy strong oarsmen on my waters borne 81 shall mount my falling stream. Rise, goddess-born, 82 and ere the starlight fade give honor due 83 to Juno, and with supplicating vow 84 avert her wrath and frown. But unto me 85 make offering in thy victorious hour, 86 in time to come. I am the copious flood 87 which thou beholdest chafing at yon shores 88 and parting fruitful fields: cerulean stream 89 of Tiber, favored greatly of high Heaven. 90 here shall arise my house magnificent, 91 a city of all cities chief and crown.”
8.61	61 supplicibus supera votis. Mihi victor honorem 62 persolves. Ego sum pleno quem flumine cernis 63 stringentem ripas et pinguia culta secantem, 64 caeruleus Thybris, caelo gratissimus amnis. 65 Hic mihi magna domus, celsis caput

	urbibus, exit. 66 Dixit, deinde lacu fluvius se condidit alto, 67 ima petens; nox Aenean somnusque reliquit. 68 Surgit et aetherii spectans orientia solis 69 lumina rite cavis undam de flumine palmis 70 sustinet ac talis effundit ad aethera voces: 71 Nymphae, Laurentes nymphae, genus amnibus unde est, 72 tuque, o Thybri tuo genitor cum flumine sancto, 73 accipite Aenean et tandem arcete periclis. 74 Quo te cumque lacus miserantem incommoda nostra 75 fonte tenet, quocumque solo pulcherrimus exis, 76 semper honore meo, semper celebrabere donis 77 corniger hesperidum fluvius regnator aquarum. 78 Adsis o tantum et propius tua numina firmes. 79 sic memorat geminasque legit de classe biremis 80 remigioque aptat, socios simul instruit armis. 81 Ecce autem subitum atque oculis mirabile monstrum; 82 candida per silvam cum fetu concolor albo 83 procubuit viridique in litore conspicitur sus. 84 Quam pius Aeneas tibi enim, tibi, maxuma Iuno, 85 mactat sacra ferens et cum grege sistit ad aram. 86 Thybris ea fluvium, quam longa est, nocte tumentem 87 leniit, et tacita refluens ita substitit unda, 88 mitis ut in morem stagni placidaeque paludis 89 sterneret aequor aquis, remo ut luctamen abesset. 90 Ergo iter inceptum celerant rumore secundo;
8.91	91 labitur uncta vadis abies; mirantur et undae, 92 miratur nemus insuetum fulgentia longe 93 scuta virum fluvio pictasque innare carinas. 94 Olli remigio noctemque diemque	92 So spake the river-god, and sank from view 93 down to his deepest cave; then night and sleep 94 together from Aeneas fled away. 95 He rose, and to the orient beams of morn 96 his forehead gave; in both his hollowed palms 97 he held the sacred waters of

	fatigant 95 et longos superant flexus variisque teguntur 96 arboribus viridisque secant placido aequore silvas. 97 Sol medium caeli conscenderat igneus orbem, 98 cum muros arcemque procul ac rara domorum 99 tecta vident, quae nunc Romana potentia caelo 100 aequavit, tum res inopes Euandrus habebat: 101 ocius advertunt proras urbique propinquant. 102 Forte die sollemnem illo rex Arcas honorem 103 Amphitryoniadae magno divisque ferebat 104 ante urbem in luco. Pallas huic filius una, 105 una omnes iuvenum primi pauperque senatus 106 tura dabant, tepidusque cruor fumabat ad aras. 107 Ut celsas videre rates atque inter opacum 108 adlabi nemus et tacitis incumbere remis, 109 terrentur visu subito cunctique relictis 110 consurgunt mensis. Audax quos rumpere Pallas 111 sacra vetat raptoque volat telo obvius ipse 112 et procul e tumulo: Iuvenes, quae causa subegit 113 ignotas temptare vias, quo tenditis? inquit. 114 Qui genus? Unde domo? Pacemne huc fertis an arma? 115 Tum pater Aeneas puppi sic fatur ab alta 116 paciferaeque manu ramum praetendit olivae: 117 Troiugenas ac tela vides inimica Latinis, 118 quos illi bello profugos egere superbo. 119 Euandrum petimus. Ferte haec et dicite lectos 120 Dardaniae venisse duces socia arma rogantis.	the stream, 98 and called aloud: “O ye Laurentian nymphs, 99 whence flowing rills be born, and chiefly thou, 100 O Father Tiber, worshipped stream divine, 101 accept Aeneas, and from peril save! 102 If in some hallowed lake or haunted spring 103 thy power, pitying my woes, abides, 104 or wheresoe'er the blessed place be found 105 whence first thy beauty flows, there evermore 106 my hands shall bring thee gift and sacrifice. 107 O chief and sovereign of Hesperian streams, 108 O river-god that hold'st the plenteous horn, 109 protect us, and confirm thy words divine!” 110 He spoke; then chose twin biremes from the fleet, 111 gave them good gear and armed their loyal crews. 112 But, lo! a sudden wonder met his eyes: 113 white gleaming through the grove, with all her brood 114 white like herself, on the green bank the Sow 115 stretched prone. The good Aeneas slew her there, 116 Great Juno, for a sacrifice to thee, 117 himself the priest, and with the sucklings all 118 beside shine altar stood. So that whole night 119 the god of Tiber calmed his swollen wave, 120 ebbing or lingering in silent flow, 121 till like some gentle lake or sleeping pool 122 his even waters lay, and strove no more 123 against the oarsmen's toil. Upon their way 124 they speed with joyful sound; the well-oiled wood 125 slips through the watery floor; the wondering waves, 126 and all the virgin forests wondering, 127 behold the warriors in far-shining arms 128 their painted galleys up the current drive. 129 O'er the long reaches of the winding flood 130 their sturdy oars outweary the slow course 131 of night and day. Fair groves of changeful green 132 arch o'er their passage, and they seem to cleave 133 green forests in the tranquil wave below. 134 Now had the flaming sun attained his way 135 to the mid-sphere of heaven, when they discerned 136 walls and a citadel in distant view, 137 with houses few and far between; 't was there, 138 where sovran Rome to-day has rivalled Heaven, 139 Evander's realm its slender strength displayed: 140 swiftly they turned their prows and neared the town.
8.121	121 Obstipuit tanto percussus nomine	141 It chanced th' Arcadian King had

	Pallas: 122 Egredere o quicumque es ait coramque parentem 123 adloquere ac nostris succede penatibus hospes. 124 excepitque manu dextramque amplexus inhaesit. 125 Progressi subeunt luco fluviumque relinquunt. 126 Tum regem Aeneas dictis adfatur amicis: 127 Optume Graiugenum, cui me Fortuna precari 128 et vitta comptos voluit praetendere ramos, 129 non equidem extimui, Danaum quod ductor et Arcas 130 quodque a stirpe fores geminis coniunctus Atridis; 131 sed mea me virtus et sancta oracula divom 132 cognatique patres, tua terris didita fama, 133 coniunxere tibi et fatis egere volentem. 134 Dardanus, Iliacae primus pater urbis et auctor, 135 Electra, ut Grai perhibent, Atlantide cretus, 136 advehitur Teucros; Electram maxumus Atlas 137 edidit, aetherios umero qui sustinet orbes 138 vobis Mercurius pater est, quem candida Maia 139 Cyllenae gelido conceptum vertice fudit; 140 at Maiam, auditis si quicquam credimus, Atlas, 141 idem Atlas generat, caeli qui sidera tollit. 142 Sic genus amborum scindit se sanguine ab uno. 143 His fretus non legatos neque prima per artem 144 temptamenta tui pepigi: me, me ipse meumque 145 obieci caput et supplex ad limina veni. 146 Gens eadem, quae te, crudeli Daunia bello 147 insequitur; nos si pellant, nihil afore credunt, 148 quin omnem Hesperiam penitus sua sub iuga mittant 149 et mare quod supra teneant quodque adluit infra. 150 Accipe daque fidem: sunt nobis	come that day 142 to honor Hercules, Amphitryon's son, 143 and to the powers divine pay worship due 144 in groves outside the wall. Beside him stood 145 Pallas his son, his noblest men-at-arms, 146 and frugal senators, who at the shrines 147 burnt incense, while warm blood of victims flowed. 148 But when they saw the tall ships in the shade 149 of that dark forest plying noiseless oars, 150 the sudden sight alarmed, and all the throng 151 sprang to its feet and left the feast divine. 152 But dauntless Pallas bade them give not o'er 153 the sacred festival, and spear in hand 154 flew forward to a bit of rising ground, 155 and cried from far: “Hail, warriors! what cause 156 drives you to lands unknown, and whither bound? 157 Your kin, your country? Bring ye peace or war?” 158 Father Aeneas then held forth a bough 159 of peaceful olive from the lofty ship, 160 thus answering : “Men Trojan-born are we, 161 foes of the Latins, who have driven us forth 162 with insolent assault. We fain would see 163 Evander. Pray, deliver this, and say 164 that chosen princes of Dardania 165 sue for his help in arms.” So wonder fell 166 on Pallas, awestruck at such mighty name. 167 O, come, whoe'er thou art,” he said, “and speak 168 in presence of my father. Enter here, 169 guest of our hearth and altar.” He put forth 170 his right hand in true welcome, and they stood 171 with lingering clasp; then hand in hand advanced 172 up the steep woodland, leaving Tiber's wave.

	fortia bello
8.151	151 pectora, sunt animi et rebus spectata iuventus. 152 Dixerat Aeneas. Ille os oculosque loquentis 153 iamdudum et totum lustrabat lumine corpus. 154 Tum sic pauca refert: Ut te, fortissime Teucrum, 155 accipio agnoscoque libens! Ut verba parentis 156 et vocem Anchisae magni voltumque recordor! 157 Nam memini Hesionae visentem regna sororis 158 Laomedontiaden Priamum, Salamina petentem, 159 protinus Arcadiae gelidos invisere finis. 160 Tum mihi prima genas vestibat flore iuventas, 161 mirabarque duces Teucros, mirabar et ipsum 162 Laomedontiaden, sed cunctis altior ibat 163 Anchises: mihi mens iuvenali ardebat amore 164 compellare virum et dextrae coniungere dextram. 165 Accessi et cupidus Phenei sub moenia duxi. 166 Ille mihi insignem pharetram Lyciasque sagittas 167 discedens chlamydemque auro dedit intertextam 168 frenaque bina meus quae nunc habet aurea Pallas. 169 Ergo et quam petitis iuncta est mihi foedere dextra, 170 et lux cum primum terris se crastina reddet, 171 auxilio laetos dimittam opibusque iuvabo. 172 Interea sacra haec, quando huc venistis amici, 173 annua, quae differre nefas, celebrate faventes 174 nobiscum et iam nunc sociorum adsuescite mensis. 175 Haec ubi dicta, dapes iubet et sublata reponi 176 pocula gramineoque viros locat ipse sedili 177 praecipuumque toro et villosi pelle leonis 178 accipit Aenean solioque invitat acerno. 179 Tum lecti iuvenes certatim araeque	173 Aeneas to Evander speaking fair, 174 these words essayed: “O best of Grecian-born! 175 whom Fortune's power now bids me seek and sue, 176 lifting this olive-branch with fillets bound, 177 I have not feared thee, though I know thou art 178 a Greek, and an Arcadian king, allied 179 to the two sons of Atreus. For behold, 180 my conscious worth, great oracles from Heaven, 181 the kinship of our sires, thy own renown 182 spread through the world—all knit my cause with thine, 183 all make me glad my fates have so decreed. 184 The sire and builder of the Trojan town 185 was Dardanus; but he, Electra's child, 186 came over sea to Teucria; the sire 187 of fair Electra was great Atlas, he 188 whose shoulder carries the vast orb of heaven. 189 But thy progenitor was Mercury, 190 and him conceiving, Maia, that white maid, 191 on hoar Cyllene's frosty summit bore. 192 But Maia's sire, if aught of truth be told, 193 was Atlas also, Atlas who sustains 194 the weight of starry skies. Thus both our tribes 195 are one divided stem. Secure in this, 196 no envoys have I sent, nor tried thy mind 197 with artful first approaches, but myself, 198 risking my person and my life, have come 199 a suppliant here. For both on me and thee 200 the house of Daunus hurls insulting war. 201 If us they quell, they doubt not to obtain 202 lordship of all Hesperia, and subdue 203 alike the northern and the southern sea. 204 Accept good faith, and give! Behold, our hearts 205 quail not in battle; souls of fire are we, 206 and warriors proved in many an action brave.”

	sacerdos 180 viscera tosta ferunt taurorum onerantque canistris
8.181	181 dona laboratae Cereris Bacchumque ministrant. 182 Vescitur Aeneas simul et Troiana iuventus 183 perpetui tergo bovis et lustralibus extis. 184 Postquam exempta fames et amor compressus edendi, 185 rex Euandrus ait: Non haec sollemnia nobis, 186 has ex more dapes, hanc tanti numinis aram 187 vana superstitio veterumque ignara deorum 188 inposuit: saevis, hospes Troiane, periclis 189 servati facimus meritosque novamus honores. 190 Iam primum saxis suspensam hanc aspice rupem, 191 disiectae procul ut moles desertaque montis 192 stat domus et scopuli ingentem traxere ruinam. 193 Hic spelunca fuit, vasto summota recessu, 194 semihominis Caci facies quam dira tenebat 195 solis inaccessam radiis; semperque recenti 196 caede tepebat humus, foribusque adfixa superbis 197 ora virum tristi pendebant pallida tabo. 198 Huic monstro Volcanus erat pater: illius atros 199 ore vomens ignis magna se mole ferebat. 200 Attulit et nobis aliquando optantibus aetas 201 auxilium adventumque dei. Nam maximus ultor, 202 tergemini nece Geryonae spoliisque superbus 203 Alcides aderat taurosque hac victor agebat 204 ingentis, vallemque boves amnemque tenebant. 205 At furiis Caci mens effera, nequid inausum 206 aut intractatum scelerisve dolive fuisset, 207 quattuor a stabulis praestanti corpore tauros 208 avertit, totidem forma superante	207 Aeneas ceased. The other long had scanned 208 the hero's face, his eyes, and wondering viewed 209 his form and mien divine; in answer now 210 he briefly spoke: “With hospitable heart, 211 O bravest warrior of all Trojan- born, 212 I know and welcome thee. I well recall 213 thy sire Anchises, how he looked and spake. 214 For I remember Priam, when he came 215 to greet his sister, Queen Hesione, 216 in Salamis, and thence pursued his way 217 to our cool uplands of Arcadia. 218 The bloom of tender boyhood then was mine, 219 and with a wide-eyed wonder I did view 220 those Teucrian lords, Laomedon's great heir, 221 and, towering highest in their goodly throng, 222 Anchises, whom my warm young heart desired 223 to speak with and to clasp his hand in mine. 224 So I approached, and joyful led him home 225 to Pheneus' olden wall. He gave me gifts 226 the day he bade adieu; a quiver rare 227 filled with good Lycian arrows, a rich cloak 228 inwove with thread of gold, and bridle reins 229 all golden, now to youthful Pallas given. 230 Therefore thy plea is granted, and my hand 231 here clasps in loyal amity with thine. 232 To-morrow at the sunrise thou shalt have 233 my tribute for the war, and go thy way 234 my glad ally. But now this festival, 235 whose solemn rite 't were impious to delay, 236 I pray thee celebrate, and bring with thee 237 well-omened looks and words. Allies we are! 238 Use this our sacred feast as if your own.”

	iuvencas; 209 atque hos, nequa forent pedibus vestigia rectis, 210 cauda in speluncam tractos versisque viarum
8.211	211 indiciis raptos saxo occultabat opaco: 212 quaerenti nulla ad speluncam signa ferebant. 213 Interea, cum iam stabulis saturata moveret 214 Amphytrioniades armenta abitumque pararet, 215 discessu mugire boves atque omne querelis 216 impleri nemus et colles clamore relinqui. 217 reddidit una boum vocem vastoque sub antro 218 mugiit et Caci spem custodita fefellit. 219 Hic vero Alcidae furiis exarserat atro 220 felle dolor: rapit arma manu nodisque gravatum 221 robur et aerii cursu petit ardua montis. 222 Tum primum nostri Cacum videre timentem 223 turbatumque oculis: fugit ilicet ocior Euro 224 speluncamque petit, pedibus timor addidit alas. 225 Ut sese inclusit ruptisque immane catenis 226 deiecit saxum, ferro quod et arte paterna 227 pendebat, fultosque emuniit obice postis, 228 ecce furens animis aderat Tirynthius omnemque 229 accessum lustrans huc ora ferebat et illuc, 230 dentibus infrendens. Ter totum fervidus ira 231 lustrat Aventini montem, ter saxea temptat 232 limina nequiquam, ter fessus valle resedit. 233 Stabat acuta silex, praecisis undique saxis 234 speluncae dorso insurgens, altissima visu, 235 dirarum nidis domus opportuna volucrum. 236 Hanc, ut prona iugo laevum incumbebat in amnem, 237 dexter in adversum nitens	239 So saying, he bade his followers renew 240 th' abandoned feast and wine; and placed each guest 241 on turf-built couch of green, most honoring 242 Aeneas by a throne of maple fair 243 decked with a lion's pelt and flowing mane. 244 Then high-born pages, with the altar's priest, 245 bring on the roasted beeves and load the board 246 with baskets of fine bread; and wine they bring — 247 of Ceres and of Bacchus gift and toil. 248 While good Aeneas and his Trojans share 249 the long whole ox and meats of sacrifice.

	concussit et imis 238 avolsam solvit radicibus; inde repente 239 inpulit, inpulsu quo maximus intonat aether 240 dissultant ripae refluitque exterritus amnis.
8.241	241 At specus et Caci detecta apparuit ingens 242 regia, et umbrosae penitus patuere cavernae: 243 non secus ac siqua penitus vi terra dehiscens 244 infernas reseret sedes et regna recludat 245 pallida, dis invisa, superque immane barathrum 246 cernatur, trepident inmisso lumine manes. 247 Ergo insperata deprensum luce repente 248 inclusumque cavo saxo atque insueta rudentem 249 desuper Alcides telis premit omniaque arma 250 advocat et ramis vastisque molaribus instat. 251 Ille autem, neque enim fuga iam super ulla pericli, 252 faucibus ingentem fumum (mirabile dictu) 253 evomit involvitque domum caligine caeca, 254 prospectum eripiens oculis, glomeratque sub antro 255 fumiferam noctem commixtis igne tenebris. 256 Non tulit Alcides animis seque ipse per ignem 257 praecipiti iecit saltu, qua plurimus undam 258 fumus agit nebulaque ingens specus aestuat atra. 259 Hic Cacum in tenebris incendia vana vomentem 260 corripit in nodum complexus et angit inhaerens 261 elisos oculos et siccum sanguine guttur. 262 Panditur extemplo foribus domus atra revolsis, 263 abstractaeque boves abiurataeque rapinae 264 caelo ostenduntur, pedibusque informe cadaver 265 protrahitur. Nequeunt expleri corda tuendo 266 terribilis oculos, voltum villosaque	250 When hunger and its eager edge were gone, 251 Evander spoke: “This votive holiday, 252 yon tables spread and altar so divine, 253 are not some superstition dark and vain, 254 that knows not the old gods, O Trojan King! 255 But as men saved from danger and great fear 256 this thankful sacrifice we pay. Behold, 257 yon huge rock, beetling from the mountain wall, 258 hung from the cliff above. How lone and bare 259 the hollowed mountain looks! How crag on crag 260 tumbled and tossed in huge confusion lie! 261 A cavern once it was, which ran deep down 262 into the darkness. There th' half-human shape 263 of Cacus made its hideous den, concealed 264 from sunlight and the day. The ground was wet 265 at all times with fresh gore; the portal grim 266 was hung about with heads of slaughtered men, 267 bloody and pale—a fearsome sight to see. 268 Vulcan begat this monster, which spewed forth 269 dark-fuming flames from his infernal throat, 270 and vast his stature seemed. But time and tide 271 brought to our prayers the advent of a god 272 to help us at our need. For Hercules, 273 divine avenger, came from laying low 274 three-bodied Geryon, whose spoils he wore 275 exultant, and with hands victorious drove 276 the herd of monster bulls, which pastured free 277 along our river-valley. Cacus gazed 278 in a brute frenzy, and left not untried 279 aught of bold crime or stratagem, but stole saetis 267 pectora semiferi atque extinctos faucibus ignis. 268 Ex illo celebratus honos, laetique minores 269 servavere diem, primusque Potitius auctor 270 et domus Herculei custos Pinaria sacri.

8.271	271 Hanc aram luco statuit, quae maxuma semper 272 dicetur nobis et erit quae maxuma semper. 273 Quare agite, o iuvenes, tantarum in munere laudum 274 cingite fronde comas et pocula porgite dextris 275 communemque vocate deum et date vina volentes. 276 Dixerat, Herculea bicolor cum populus umbra 277 velavitque comas foliisque innexa pependit 278 et sacer implevit dextram scyphus. Ocius omnes 279 in mensam laeti libant divosque precantur. 280 Devexo interea propior fit Vesper Olympo, 281 iamque sacerdotes primusque Potitius ibant, 282 pellibus in morem cincti, flammasque ferebant. 283 Instaurant epulas et mensae grata secundae 284 dona ferunt cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras. 285 tum Salii ad cantus incensa altaria circum 286 populeis adsunt evincti tempora ramis, 287 hic iuvenum chorus, ille senum; qui carmine laudes 288 Herculeas et facta ferunt: ut prima novercae 289 monstra manu geminosque premens eliserit angues, 290 ut bello egregias idem disiecerit urbes, 291 Troiamque Oechaliamque, ut duros mille labores 292 rege sub Eurystheo fatis Iunonis iniquae 293 pertulerit. Tu nubigenas, invicte, bimembris 294 Hylaeeumque Pholumque, manu, tu Cresia mactas 295 prodigia et vastum Nemeae sub	280 four fine bulls as they fed, and heifers four, 281 all matchless; but, lest hoof-tracks point his way, 282 he dragged them cave-wards by the tails, confusing 283 the natural trail, and hid the stolen herd 284 in his dark den; and not a mark or sign 285 could guide the herdsmen to that cavern-door. 286 But after, when Amphitryon's famous son, 287 preparing to depart, would from the meads 288 goad forth the full-fed herd, his lingering bulls 289 roared loud, and by their lamentable cry 290 filled grove and hills with clamor of farewell: 291 one heifer from the mountain-cave lowed back 292 in answer, so from her close-guarded stall 293 foiling the monster's will. Then hadst thou seen 294 the wrath of Hercules in frenzy blaze 295 from his exasperate heart. His arms he seized, 296 his club of knotted oak, and climbed full-speed 297 the wind-swept hill. Now first our people saw 298 Cacus in fear, with panic in his eyes. 299 Swift to the black cave like a gale he flew, 300 his feet by terror winged. Scarce had he passed 301 the cavern door, and broken the big chains, 302 and dropped the huge rock which was pendent there 303 by Vulcan's well-wrought steel; scarce blocked and barred 304 the guarded gate: when there Tirynthius stood, 305 with heart aflame, surveying each approach, 306 rolling this way and that his wrathful eyes, 307 gnashing his teeth. Three times his ire surveyed 308 the slope of Aventine; three times he stormed 309 the rock-built gate in vain; and thrice withdrew rupe leonem. 296 Te Stygii tremuere lacus, te ianitor Orci 297 ossa super recubans antro semesa cruento; 298 nec te ullae facies, non terruit ipse Typhoeus, 299 arduus arma tenens; non te rationis egentem 300 Lernaeus turba capitum circumstetit anguis.

8.301	301 Salve, vera Iovis proles, decus addite divis, 302 et nos et tua dexter adi pede sacra secundo. 303 Talia carminibus celebrant; super omnia Caci 304 speluncam adiciunt spirantemque ignibus ipsum. 305 Consonat omne nemus strepitu collesque resultant. 306 Exim se cuncti divinis rebus ad urbem 307 perfectis referunt. Ibat rex obsitus aevo 308 et comitem Aenean iuxta natumque tenebat 309 ingrediens varioque viam sermone levabat. 310 miratur facilisque oculos fert omnia circum 311 Aeneas capiturque locis et singula laetus 312 exquiritque auditque virum monimenta priorum. 313 Tum rex Euandrus, Romanae conditor arcis: 314 Haec nemora indigenae fauni nymphaeque tenebant 315 gensque virum truncis et duro robore nata, 316 quis neque mos neque cultus erat, nec iungere tauros 317 aut componere opes norant aut parcere parto, 318 sed rami atque asper victu venatus alebat. 319 Primus ab aetherio venit Saturnus Olympo, 320 arma Iovis fugiens et regnis exsul ademptis. 321 Is genus indocile ac dispersum montibus altis 322 composuit legesque dedit Latiumque vocari 323 maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutis in oris. 324 Aurea quae perhibent illo sub rege	310 to rest him in the vale. But high above 311 a pointed peak arose, sheer face of rock 312 on every side, which towered into view 313 from the long ridge above the vaulted cave, 314 fit haunt for birds of evil-boding wing. 315 This peak, which leftward toward the river leaned, 316 he smote upon its right—his utmost blow — 317 breaking its bases Ioose; then suddenly 318 thrust at it: as he thrust, the thunder-sound 319 filled all the arching sky, the river's banks 320 asunder leaped, and Tiber in alarm 321 reversed his flowing wave. So Cacus' lair 322 lay shelterless, and naked to the day 323 the gloomy caverns of his vast abode 324 stood open, deeply yawning, just as if 325 the riven earth should crack, and open wide 326 th' infernal world and fearful kingdoms pale, 327 which gods abhor; and to the realms on high 328 the measureless abyss should be laid bare, 329 and pale ghosts shrink before the entering sun. 330 Now upon Cacus, startled by the glare, 331 caged in the rocks and howling horribly, 332 Alcides hurled his weapons, raining down 333 all sorts of deadly missiles—trunks of trees, 334 and monstrous boulders from the mountain torn. 335 But when the giant from his mortal strait 336 no refuge knew, he blew from his foul jaws 337 a storm of smoke—incredible to tell — 338 and with thick darkness blinding every eye, 339 concealed his cave, uprolling from below

	fuere 325 saecula. Sic placida populos in pace regebat, 326 deterior donec paulatim ac decolor aetas 327 et belli rabies et amor successit habendi. 328 Tum manus Ausonia et gentes venere Sicanae, 329 saepius et nomen posuit Saturnia tellus; 330 tum reges asperque immani corpore Thybris, 8.331	331 a quo post Itali fluvium cognomine Thybrim 332 diximus, amisit verum vetus Albula nomen; 333 me pulsum patria pelagique extrema sequentem 334 Fortuna omnipotens et ineluctabile fatum 335 his posuere locis matrisque egere tremenda 336 Carmentis nymphae monita et deus auctor Apollo. 337 Vix ea dicta: dehinc progressus monstrat et aram 338 et Carmentalem Romani nomine portam 339 quam memorant, nymphae priscum Carmentis honorem, 340 vatis fatidicae, cecinit quae prima futuros 341 Aeneadas magnos et nobile Pallanteum. 342 Hinc lucum ingentem quem Romulus acer Asylum 343 rettulit et gelida monstrat sub rupe Lupercal, 344 Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lycaei. 345 Nec non et sacri monstrat nemus Argileti 346 testaturque locum et letum docet hospitis Argi. 347 Hinc ad Tarpeiam sedem et Capitolia ducit, 348 aurea nunc, olim silvestribus horrida dumis. 349 Iam tum religio pavidos terrebat agrestis 350 dira loci, iam tum silvam saxumque tremebant. 351 Hoc nemus, hunc, inquit, frondoso vertice collem 352 (quis deus incertum est) habitat deus: Arcades ipsum 353 credunt se vidisse Iovem, cum	340 one pitch-black night of mingled gloom and fire. 341 This would Alcides not endure, but leaped 342 headlong across the flames, where densest hung 343 the rolling smoke, and through the cavern surged 344 a drifting and impenetrable cloud. 345 With Cacus, who breathed unavailing flame, 346 he grappled in the dark, locked limb with limb, 347 and strangled him, till o'er the bloodless throat 348 the starting eyeballs stared.Then Hercules 349 burst wide the doorway of the sooty den, 350 and unto Heaven and all the people showed 351 the stolen cattle and the robber's crimes, 352 and dragged forth by the feet the shapeless corpse 353 of the foul monster slain. The people gazed 354 insatiate on the grewsome eyes, the breast 355 of bristling shag, the face both beast and man, 356 and that fire-blasted throat whence breathed no more 357 the extinguished flame. 'T is since that famous day 358 we celebrate this feast, and glad of heart 359 each generation keeps the holy time. 360 Potitius began the worship due, 361 and our Pinarian house is vowed to guard 362 the rites of Hercules. An altar fair 363 within this wood they raised; 't is called ‘the Great,’ 364 and Ara Maxima its name shall be. 365 Come now, my warriors, and bind your brows 366 with garlands worthy of the gift of Heaven. 367 Lift high the cup in every thankful hand, 368 and praise our people's god with plenteous wine.” 369 He spoke; and of the poplar's changeful sheen, saepe nigrantem 354 aegida concuteret dextra nimbosque cieret. 355 Haec duo praeterea disiectis oppida muris, 356 reliquias veterumque vides monimenta virorum. 357 Hanc Ianus pater, hanc Saturnus condidit arcem: 358 Ianiculum huic, illi fuerat Saturnia nomen. 359 Talibus inter se dictis ad tecta subibant 360 pauperis Euandri passimque armenta videbant

8.361	361 Romanoque foro et lautis mugire Carinis. 362 Ut ventum ad sedes: Haec, inquit, limina victor 363 Alcides subiit, haec illum regia cepit. 364 Aude, hospes, contemnere opes et te quoque dignum 365 finge deo rebusque veni non asper egenis. 366 dixit et angusti subter fastigia tecti 367 ingentem Aenean duxit stratisque locavit 368 effultum foliis et pelle Libystidis ursae. 369 Nox ruit et fuscis tellurem amplectitur alis. 370 At Venus haud animo nequiquam exterrita mater 371 Laurentumque minis et duro mota tumultu 372 Volcanum adloquitur thalamoque haec coniugis aureo 373 incipit et dictis divinum adspirat amorem: 374 Dum bello Argolici vastabant Pergama reges 375 debita casurasque inimicis ignibus arces, 376 non ullum auxilium miseris, non arma rogavi 377 artis opisque tuae nec te, carissime coniunx, 378 incassumve tuos volui exercere labores, 379 quamvis et Priami deberem plurima natis 380 et durum Aeneae flevissem saepe laborem. 381 Nunc Iovis imperiis Rutulorum constitit oris: 382 ergo eadem supplex venio et sanctum mihi numen	370 sacred to Hercules, wove him a wreath 371 to shade his silvered brow. The sacred cup 372 he raised in his right hand, while all the rest 373 called on the gods and pure libation poured. 374 Soon from the travelling heavens the western star 375 glowed nearer, and Potitius led forth 376 the priest- procession, girt in ancient guise 377 with skins of beasts and carrying burning brands. 378 new feasts are spread, and altars heaped anew 379 with gifts and laden chargers. Then with song 380 the Salian choir surrounds the blazing shrine, 381 their foreheads wreathed with poplar. Here the youth, 382 the elders yonder, in proud anthem sing 383 the glory and the deeds of Hercules: 384 how first he strangled with strong infant hand 385 two serpents, Juno's plague; what cities proud, 386 Troy and Oechalia, his famous war 387 in pieces broke; what labors numberless 388 as King Eurystheus' bondman he endured, 389 by cruel Juno's will. “Thou, unsubdued, 390 didst strike the twy-formed, cloud- bred centaurs down, 391 Pholus and tall Hylaeus. Thou hast slain 392 the Cretan horror, and the lion huge 393 beneath the Nemean crag. At sight of thee 394 the Stygian region quailed, and Cerberus, 395 crouching o'er half- picked bones in gory cave. 396 Nothing could bid thee fear. Typhoeus towered 397 in his colossal Titan-panoply 398 o'er thee in vain; nor did thy cunning fail 399 when Lema's wonder-serpent round thee drew 400 its multudinous head. Hail, Jove's true son! 401 New glory to the gods above, come down, 402 and these thine altars and thy people bless!” 403 Such hymns they

	383 arma rogo genetrix nato. Te filia Nerei, 384 te potuit lacrimis Tithonia flectere coniunx. 385 Aspice qui coeant populi, quae moenia clausis 386 ferrum acuant portis in me exscidiumque meorum. 387 Dixerat et niveis hinc atque hinc diva lacertis 388 cunctantem amplexu molli fovet. Ille repente 389 accepit solitam flammam, notusque medullas 390 intravit calor et labefacta per ossa cucurrit:	chanted, telling oft the tale 404 of Cacus' cave and blasting breath of fire: 405 while hills and sacred grove the note prolong.
8.391	391 non secus atque olim tonitru cum rupta corusco 392 ignea rima micans percurrit lumine nimbos. 393 Sensit laeta dolis et formae conscia coniunx. 394 Tum pater aeterno fatur devinctus amore: 395 Quid causas petis ex alto? Fiducia cessit 396 quo tibi, diva, mei? Similis si cura fuisset, 397 tum quoque fas nobis Teucros armare fuisset: 398 nec pater omnipotens Troiam nec fata vetabant 399 stare decemque alios Priamum superesse per annos. 400 Et nunc, si bellare paras atque haec tibi mens est, 401 quidquid in arte mea possum promittere curae, 402 quod fieri ferro liquidove potest electro, 403 quantum ignes animaeque valent, absiste precando 404 viribus indubitare tuis. Ea verba locutus 405 optatos dedit amplexus placidumque petivit 406 coniugis infusus gremio per membra soporem. 407 Inde ubi prima quies medio iam noctis abactae 408 curriculo expulerat somnum, cum femina primum, 409 cui tolerare colo vitam tenuique Minerva 410 impositum, cinerem et sopitos suscitat ignes, 411 noctem addens operi, famulasque ad lumina longo	406 Such worship o'er, all take the homeward way 407 back to the town. The hospitable King, 408 though bowed with weight of years, kept at his side 409 Aeneas and his son, and as they fared, 410 with various discourse beguiled the way. 411 Aeneas scanned with quick-admiring eyes 412 the region wide, and lingered with delight 413 now here, now there, inquiring eagerly 414 of each proud monument of heroes gone. 415 Then King Evander, he who builded first 416 On Palatine, spoke thus: “These groves erewhile 417 their native nymphs and fauns enjoyed, with men 418 from trees engendered and stout heart of oak. 419 Nor laws nor arts they knew; nor how to tame 420 burls to the yoke, nor fill great barns with store 421 and hoard the gathered grain; but rudely fared 422 on wild fruits and such food as hunters find. 423 Then Saturn from Olympian realms came down, 424 in flight from Jove's dread arms, his sceptre lost, 425 and he an exiled King. That savage race 426 he gathered from the mountain slopes; and gave 427 wise laws and statutes; so that latent land 428 was Latium, ‘hid land’, where he hid so long. 429 The golden centuries by legends told 430 were under that good King, whose equal sway 431 untroubled peace to all his peoples gave. 432 But after slow decline arrived an age 433 degenerate and of a darker hue, 434 prone to insensate war and greed of gain. 435 Then came Sicanian and Ausonian tribes,

	412 exercet penso, castum ut servare cubile 413 coniugis et possit parvos educere natos: 414 haud secus Ignipotens nec tempore segnior illo 415 mollibus e stratis opera ad fabrilia surgit. 416 Insula Sicanium iuxta latus Aeoliamque 417 erigitur Liparen, fumantibus ardua saxis, 418 quam subter specus et Cyclopum exesa caminis 419 antra Aetnaea tonant validique incudibus ictus 420 auditi referunt gemitus striduntque cavernis
8.421	421 stricturae Chalybum et fornacibus ignis anhelat, 422 Volcani domus et Volcania nomine tellus. 423 Hoc tunc ignipotens caelo descendit ab alto. 424 Ferrum exercebant vasto Cyclopes in antro, 425 Brontesque Steropesque et nudus membra Pyragmon. 426 His informatum manibus iam parte polita 427 fulmen erat, toto genitor quae plurima caelo 428 deicit in terras, pars inperfecta manebat. 429 Tris imbris torti radios, tris nubis aquosae 430 addiderant, rutili tris ignis et alitis austri: 431 fulgores nunc horrificos sonitumque metumque 432 miscebant operi flammisque sequacibus iras. 433 Parte alia Marti currumque rotasque volucris 434 instabant, quibus ille viros, quibus excitat urbes; 435 aegidaque horriferam, turbatae Palladis arma, 436 certatim squamis serpentum auroque polibant 437 conexosque anguis ipsamque in pectore divae 438 Gorgona, desecto vertentem lumina collo. 439 Tollite cuncta, inquit, coeptosque auferte labores, 440 Aetnaei Cyclopes, et huc advertite mentem:	436 and oft the land of Saturn lost its name. 437 New chieftains rose, and Thybris, giant King 438 and violent, from whom th' Italians named 439 the flooding Tiber, which was called no more 440 the Albula, its true and ancient style. 441 Myself, in exile from my fatherland 442 sailing uncharted seas, was guided here 443 by all-disposing Chance and iron laws 444 of Destiny. With prophecy severe 445 Carmentis, my nymph-mother, thrust me on, 446 warned by Apollo's word.” He scarce had said, 447 when near their path he showed an altar fair 448 and the Carmental gate, where Romans see 449 memorial of Carmentis, nymph divine, 450 the prophetess of fate, who first foretold 451 what honors on Aeneas' sons should fall 452 and lordly Pallanteum, where they dwell. 453 Next the vast grove was seen, where Romulus 454 ordained inviolable sanctuary; 455 then the Lupercal under its cold crag, 456 Wolf-hill, where old Arcadians revered 457 their wolf-god, the Lycaean Pan. Here too 458 the grove of Argiletum, sacred name, 459 where good Evander told the crime and death 460 of Argus, his false guest. From this they climbed 461 the steep Tarpeian hill, the Capitol, 462 all gold to-day, but then a tangled wild 463 of thorny woodland. Even then the place 464 woke in the rustics a religious awe, 465 and bade them fear and tremble at the view

	441 arma acri facienda viro. Nunc viribus usus, 442 nunc manibus rapidis, omni nunc arte magistra. 443 Praecipitate moras. Nec plura effatus; at illi 444 ocius incubuere omnes pariterque laborem 445 sortiti. Fluit aes rivis aurique metallum, 446 volnificusque chalybs vasta fornace liquescit. 447 Ingentum clipeum informant, unum omnia contra 448 tela Latinorum, septenosque orbibus orbes 449 impediunt. Alii ventosis follibus auras 450 accipiunt redduntque, alii stridentia tingunt
8.451	451 aera lacu. Gemit impositis incudibus antrum. 452 Illi inter sese multa vi bracchia tollunt 453 in numerum versantque tenaci forcipe massam. 454 Haec pater Aeoliis properat dum Lemnius oris, 455 Euandrum ex humili tecto lux suscitat alma 456 et matutini volucrum sub culmine cantus. 457 Consurgit senior tunicaque inducitur artus 458 et Tyrrhena pedum circumdat vincula plantis; 459 tum lateri atque umeris Tegeaeum subligat ensem, 460 demissa ab laeva pantherae terga retorquens. 461 Nec non et gemini custodes limine ab alto 462 praecedunt gressumque canes comitantur erilem. 463 Hospitis Aeneae sedem et secreta petebat 464 sermonum memor et promissi muneris heros. 465 Nec minus Aeneas se matutinus agebat. 466 Filius huic Pallas, illi comes ibat Achates. 467 Congressi iungunt dextras mediisque residunt 468 aedibus et licito tandem sermone fruuntur. 469 Rex prior haec: 470 Maxume Teucrorum ductor, quo	466 of that dread rock and grove. “This leafy wood, 467 which crowns the hill-top, is the favored seat 468 of some great god,” said he, “but of his name 469 we know not surely. The Arcadians say 470 jove's dread right hand here visibly appears 471 to shake his aegis in the darkening storm, 472 the clouds compelling. Yonder rise in view 473 two strongholds with dismantled walls, which now 474 are but a memory of great heroes gone: 475 one father Janus built, and Saturn one; 476 their names, Saturnia and Janiculum.” 477 'Mid such good parley to the house they came 478 of King Evander, unadorned and plain, 479 whence herds of browsing cattle could be seen 480 ranging the Forum, and loud-bellowing 481 in proud Carinae. As they entered there, 482 “Behold,” said he, “the threshold that received 483 Alcides in his triumph! This abode 484 he made his own. Dare, O illustrious guest, 485 to scorn the pomp of power. Shape thy soul 486 to be a god's fit follower. Enter here, 487 and free from pride our frugal welcome share.” 488 So saying, 'neath his roof-tree scant and low 489 he led the great Aeneas, offering him 490 a couch of leaves with Libyan bear-skin spread. 491 Now night drew near, enfolding the wide world 492 in shadowy wings. But Venus, sore disturbed, 493 vexed not unwisely her maternal breast, 494 fearing Laurentum's menace and wild stir 495 of obstinate revolt, and made her plea sospite numquam 471 res equidem Troiae victas aut regna fatebor, 472 nobis ad belli auxilium pro nomine tanto 473 exiguae vires: hinc Tusco claudimur amni, 474 hinc Rutulus premit et murum circumsonat armis. 475 Sed tibi ego ingentis populos opulentaque regnis 476 iungere castra paro, quam fors inopina salutem 477 ostentat: fatis huc te poscentibus adfers. 478 Haud procul hinc saxo incolitur fundata vetusto 479 urbis Agyllinae sedes, ubi Lydia quondam 480 gens, bello praeclara, iugis insedit Etruscis.

8.481	481 Hanc multos florentem annos rex deinde superbo 482 imperio et saevis tenuit Mezentius armis. 483 Quid memorem infandas caedes, quid facta tyranni 484 effera? Di capiti ipsius generique reservent! 485 Mortua quin etiam iungebat corpora vivis 486 componens manibusque manus atque oribus ora, 487 tormenti genus, et sanie taboque fluentis 488 complexu in misero longa sic morte necabat. 489 at fessi tandem cives infanda furentem 490 armati circumsistunt ipsumque domumque, 491 obtruncant socios, ignem ad fastigia iactant. 492 Ille inter caedem Rutulorum elapsus in agros 493 confugere et Turni defendier hospitis armis. 494 Ergo omnis furiis surrexit Etruria iustis: 495 regem ad supplicium praesenti Marte reposcunt. 496 his ego te, Aenea, ductorem milibus addam. 497 Toto namque fremunt condensae litore puppes 498 Signaque ferre iubent; retinet longaevus haruspex 499 fata canens, O Maeoniae delecta	496 to Vulcan in their nuptial bower of gold, 497 outbreathing in the music of her words 498 celestial love: “When warring Argive kings 499 brought ruin on Troy's sacred citadel 500 and ramparts soon to sink in hostile flames, 501 I asked not thee to help that hopeless woe, 502 nor craved thy craft and power. For, dearest lord, 503 I would not tax in vain shine arduous toil, 504 though much to Priam's children I was bound, 505 and oft to see Aeneas burdened sore 506 I could but weep. But now by will of Jove 507 he has found foothold in Rutulian lands. 508 Therefore I come at last with lowly suit 509 before a godhead I adore, and pray 510 for gift of arms,—a mother for her son. 511 Thou wert not unrelenting to the tears 512 of Nereus' daughter or Tithonus' bride. 513 Behold what tribes conspire, what cities strong 514 behind barred gates now make the falchion keen 515 to ruin and blot out both me and mine!” 516 So spake the goddess, as her arms of snow 517 around her hesitating spouse she threw 518 in tender, close embrace. He suddenly 519 knew the familiar fire, and o'er his frame 520 its wonted ardor unresisted ran, 521 swift as the glittering shaft of thunder cleaves 522 the darkened air and on from cloud to cloud 523 the rift of lightning runs. She, joyful wife; 524 felt what her beauty and her guile could do; 525 as, thralled by love unquenchable, her spouse

	iuventus, 500 flos veterum virtusque virum, quos iustus in hostem 501 fert dolor et merita accendit Mezentius ira, 502 nulli fas Italo tantam subiungere gentem: 503 externos optate duces; tum Etrusca resedit 504 hoc acies campo, monitis exterrita divom. 505 Ipse oratores ad me regnique coronam 506 cum sceptro misit mandatque insignia Tarchon, 507 succedam castris Tyrrhenaque regna capessam. 508 Sed mihi tarda gelu saeclisque effeta senectus 509 invidet imperium seraeque ad fortia vires. 510 natum exhortarer, ni mixtus matre Sabella
8.511	511 hinc partem patriae traheret. Tu, cuius et annis 512 et generi fatum indulgent, quem numina poscunt, 513 ingredere, o Teucrum atque Italum fortissime ductor. 514 hunc tibi praeterea, spes et solacia nostri, 515 Pallanta adiungam; sub te tolerare magistro 516 militiam et grave Martis opus, tua cernere facta 517 adsuescat primis et te miretur ab annis. 518 Arcadas huic equites bis centum, robora pubis 519 lecta dabo totidemque suo tibi nomine Pallas. 520 Vix ea fatus erat, defixique ora tenebant 521 Aeneas Anchisiades et fidus Achates 522 multaque dura suo tristi cum corde putabant, 523 ni signum caelo Cytherea dedisset aperto. 524 Namque inproviso vibratus ab aethere fulgor 525 cum sonitu venit, et ruere omnia visa repente 526 Tyrrhenusque tubae mugire per aethera clangor. 527 Suspiciunt, iterum atque iterum fragor increpat ingens: 528 arma inter nubem caeli regione	526 thus answered fair: “Why wilt thou labor so 527 with far-fetched pleas? my goddess, hast thou lost 528 thy faith in me? Had such a prayer been shine, 529 I could have armed the Teucrians. Neither Jove 530 nor Destiny had grudged ten added years 531 of life to Troy and Priam. If to-day 532 thou hast a war in hand, and if thy heart 533 determine so, I willingly engage 534 to lend thee all my cunning; whatsoever 535 molten alloy or welded iron can, 536 whate'er my roaring forge and flames achieve, 537 I offer thee. No more in anxious prayer 538 distrust thy beauty's power.” So saying, he gave 539 embrace of mutual desire, and found 540 deep, peaceful sleep, on her fond heart reclined.

	serena 529 per sudum rutilare vident et pulsa tonare. 530 Obstipuere animis alii, sed Troius heros 531 agnovit sonitum et divae promissa parentis. 532 Tum memorat: Ne vero, hospes, ne quaere profecto, 533 quem casum portenta ferant: ego poscor Olympo. 534 Hoc signum cecinit missuram diva creatrix, 535 si bellum ingrueret, Volcaniaque arma per auras 536 laturam auxilio. 537 Heu quantae miseris caedes Laurentibus instant; 538 quas poenas mihi, Turne, dabis; quam multa sub undas 539 scuta virum galeasque et fortia corpora volves, 540 Thybri pater! Poscant acies et foedera rumpant.
8.541	541 Haec ubi dicta dedit, solio se tollit ab alto 542 et primum Herculeis sopitas ignibus aras 543 excitat hesternumque larem parvosque penatis 544 laetus adit: mactant lectas de more bidentis 545 Euandrus pariter, pariter Troiana iuventus. 546 Post hinc ad navis graditur sociosque revisit. 547 Quorum de numero qui sese in bella sequantur 548 praestantis virtute legit; pars cetera prona 549 fertur aqua segnisque secundo defluit amni, 550 nuntia ventura Ascanio rerumque patrisque. 551 Dantur equi Teucris Tyrrhena petentibus arva; 552 ducunt exsortem Aeneae, quem fulva leonis 553 pellis obit totum, praefulgens unguibus aureis. 554 Fama volat parvam subito volgata per urbem, 555 ocius ire equites Tyrrheni ad litora regis. 556 vota metu duplicant matres, propiusque periclo 557 it timor, et maior Martis iam apparet imago.	725 He said: and from the lofty throne uprose. 726 Straightway he roused anew the slumbering fire 727 sacred to Hercules, and glad at heart 728 adored, as yesterday, the household gods 729 revered by good Evander, at whose side 730 the Trojan company made sacrifice 731 of chosen lambs, with fitting rites and true. 732 Then to his ships he tried him, and rejoined 733 his trusty followers, of whom he took 734 the best for valor known, to lend him aid 735 in deeds of war. Others he bade return 736 down stream in easy course, and tidings bear 737 to young Ascanius of the new event, 738 and of his father. Horses then were brought 739 for all the Teucrians to Etruria bound; 740 and for Aeneas one of rarest breed, 741 o'er whom a tawny robe descended low, 742 of lion-skin, with claws of gleaming gold.

	558 tum pater Evandrus dextram complexus euntis 559 haeret inexpletus lacrimans, ac talia fatur: 560 O mihi praeteritos referat si Iuppiter annos, 561 (qualis eram, cum primam aciem Praeneste sub ipsa 562 stravi scutorumque incendi victor acervos 563 et regem hac Erulum dextra sub Tartara misi, 564 nascenti cui tris animas Feronia mater 565 (horrendum dictu) dederat; terna arma movenda, 566 ter Leto sternendus erat; cui tunc tamen omnis 567 abstulit haec animas dextra et totidem exuit armis: 568 non ego nunc dulci amplexu divellerer usquam, 569 nate, tuo, neque finitimo Mezentius umquam 570 huic capiti insultans tot ferro saeva dedisset
8.571	571 funera, tam multis viduasset civibus urbem. 572 At vos, o superi, et divom tu maxume rector 573 Iuppiter, Arcadii, quaeso, miserescite regis 574 et patrias audite preces. Si numina vestra 575 incolumem Pallanta mihi, si fata reservant, 576 si visurus eum vivo et venturus in unum: 577 vitam oro, patior quemvis durare laborem. 578 Sin aliquem infandum casum, Fortuna, minaris: 579 nunc O nunc liceat crudelem abrumpere vitam, 580 dum curae ambiguae, dum spes incerta futuri, 581 dum te, care puer, mea sera et sola voluptas, 582 complexu teneo, gravior neu nuntius auris 583 volneret. Haec genitor digressu dicta supremo 584 fundebat: famuli conlapsum in tecta ferebant. 585 Iamque adeo exierat portis equitatus apertis, 586 Aeneas inter primos et fidus Achates,	571 of bursting cloud, and three did interfuse 572 of ruddy-gleaming fires and winged winds; 573 then fearful lightnings on the skilful forge 574 they welded with loud horror, and with flames 575 that bear swift wrath from Jove. Elsewhere a crew 576 toiled at the chariot and winged wheel 577 wherewith the war-god wakens from repose 578 heroes and peopled cities. Others wrought 579 the awful Aegis, herald of dismay, 580 by angry Pallas worn; they burnished bright 581 the golden serpent-scales and wreathing snakes, 582 till from the corselet of the goddess glared 583 the Gorgon's severed head and rolling eyes. 584 “Cyclops of Aetna,” Vulcan cried, “have done! 585 Leave ev'ry task unfinished, and receive 586 my new command! Good armor must be forged 587 for warrior brave. For this I need to use 588 your utmost sinew and your swiftest hand, 589 with all your master skill. No lingering now!” 590 Swift the command, and swiftly they divide 591 to each his portion, and united urge 592 the common task. Forth fow the molten streams 593 of brass and gold, and, melted in fierce fiame, 594 the deeply-wounding steel like liquid flows. 595 A mighty shield took shape, its

	587 inde alii Troiae proceres, ipse agmine Pallas 588 in medio chlamyde et pictis conspectus in armis: 589 qualis ubi Oceani perfusus Lucifer unda, 590 quem Venus ante alios astrorum diligit ignis, 591 extulit os sacrum caelo tenebrasque resolvit. 592 Stant pavidae in muris matres oculisque sequuntur 593 pulveream nubem et fulgentis aere catervas. 594 Olli per dumos, qua proxuma meta viarum, 595 armati tendunt; it clamor, et agmine facto 596 quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum. 597 Est ingens gelidum lucus prope Caeritis amnem, 598 religione patrum late sacer; undique colles 599 inclusere cavi et nigra nemus abiete cingunt. 600 Silvano fama est veteres sacrasse Pelasgos,	single orb 596 sufficient to withstand the gathered shock 597 of all the Latin arms; for seven times 598 they welded ring with ring. Some deftly ply 599 the windy bellows, which receive and give 600 the roaring blasts; some plunge in cooling pond
8.601	601 arvorum pecorisque deo, lucumque diemque, 602 qui primi finis aliquando habuere Latinos: 603 haud procul hinc Tarcho et Tyrrheni tuta tenebant 604 castra locis, celsoque omnis de colle videri 605 iam poterat legio et latis tendebat in arvis. 606 Huc pater Aeneas et bello lecta iuventus 607 succedunt fessique et equos et corpora curant. 608 At Venus aetherios inter dea candida nimbos 609 dona ferens aderat; natumque in valle reducta 610 ut procul egelido secretum flumine vidit, 611 talibus adfata est dictis seque obtulit ultro: 612 En perfecta mei promissa coniugis arte 613 munera, ne mox aut Laurentis, nate, superbos 614 aut acrem dubites in proelia poscere Turnum. 615 Dixit et amplexus nati Cytherea petivit,	601 the hissing metal, while the smithy floor 602 groans with the anvil's weight, as side by side 603 they lift their giant arms in numbered blows 604 and roll with gripe of tongs the ponderous bars. 605 While thus the Lemnian god his labor sped 606 in far Aeolian isle, the cheerful morn 607 with voice of swallows round his lowly eaves 608 summoned Evander. From his couch arose 609 the royal sire, and o'er his aged frame 610 a tunic threw, tying beneath his feet 611 the Tuscan sandals: an Arcadian sword, 612 girt at his left, was over one shoulder slung, 613 his cloak of panther trailing from behind. 614 A pair of watch-dogs from the lofty door 615 ran close, their lord attending, as he sought 616 his guest Aeneas; for his princely soul 617 remembered faithfully his former word, 618 and promised gift. Aeneas with like mind 619 was stirring early. King Evander's son 620 Pallas was at his side; Achates too 621 accompanied his friend. All these conjoin 622 in hand-clasp and good-morrow, taking seats 623 in midcourt of the house, and give the hour 624 to converse unrestrained. First spoke the King: 625 “Great leader

	616 arma sub adversa posuit radiantia quercu. 617 Ille, deae donis et tanto laetus honore, 618 expleri nequit atque oculos per singula volvit 619 miraturque interque manus et bracchia versat 620 terribilem cristis galeam flammasque vomentem 621 fatiferumque ensem, loricam ex aere rigentem 622 sanguineam ingentem, qualis cum caerula nubes 623 solis inardescit radiis longeque refulget; 624 tum levis ocreas electro auroque recocto 625 hastamque et clipei non enarrabile textum. 626 Illic res Italas Romanorumque triumphos 627 haud vatum ignarus venturique inscius aevi 628 fecerat ignipotens, illic genus omne futurae 629 stirpis ab Ascanio. pugnataque in ordine bella. 630 Fecerat et viridi fetam Mavortis in antro	of the Teucrians, while thy life 626 in safety stands, I call not Trojan power 627 vanquished or fallen. But to help thy war 628 my small means match not thy redoubled name. 629 Yon Tuscan river is my bound. That way 630 Rutulia thrusts us hard and chafes our wall 631 with loud, besieging arms. But I propose 632 to league with thee a numerous array 633 of kings and mighty tribes, which fortune strange 634 now brings to thy defence. Thou comest here 635 because the Fates intend. Not far from ours 636 a city on an ancient rock is seen, 637 Agylla, which a warlike Lydian clan 638 built on the Tuscan hills. It prospered well 639 for many a year, then under the proud yoke 640 of King Mezentius it came and bore 641 his cruel sway. Why tell the loathsome deeds 642 and crimes unspeakable the despot wrought? 643 May Heaven requite them on his impious head 644 and on his children! For he used to chain 645 dead men to living, hand on hand was laid 646 and face on face,—torment incredible! 647 Till, locked in blood-stained, horrible embrace, 648 a lingering death they found. But at the last 649 his people rose in furious despair, 650 and while he blasphemously raged, assailed 651 his life and throne, cut down his guards 652 and fired his regal dwellings; he, the while, 653 escaped immediate death and fled away 654 to the Rutulian land, to find defence
8.631	631 procubuisse lupam, geminos huic ubera circum 632 ludere pendentis pueros et lambere matrem 633 impavidos, illam tereti cervice reflexa 634 mulcere alternos et corpora fingere lingua. 635 Nec procul hinc Romam et raptas sine more Sabinas 636 consessu caveae magnis circensibus actis 637 addiderat subitoque novum consurgere bellum 638 Romulidis Tatioque seni Curibusque severis. 639 Post idem inter se posito certamine reges 640 armati Iovis ante aram paterasque tenentes	655 in Turnus hospitality. To-day 656 Etruria, to righteous anger stirred, 657 demands with urgent arms her guilty King. 658 To their large host, Aeneas, I will give 659 an added strength, thyself. For yonder shores 660 re-echo with the tumult and the cry 661 of ships in close array; their eager lords 662 are clamoring for battle. But the song 663 of the gray omen-giver thus declares 664 their destiny: ‘O goodly princes born 665 of old Maeonian lineage! Ye that are 666 the bloom and glory of an ancient race, 667 whom just occasions now and noble rage 668 enflame against Mezentius your foe, 669 it is decreed that yonder nation proud 670 shall never submit to chiefs Italian-born. 671 Seek ye a king from far!’ So in the field 672 inert and fearful lies

	641 stabant et caesa iungebant foedera porca. 642 Haud procul inde citae Mettum in diversa quadrigae 643 distulerant, at tu dictis, Albane, maneres, 644 raptabatque viri mendacis viscera Tullus 645 per silvam, et sparsi rorabant sanguine vepres. 646 Nec non Tarquinium eiectum Porsenna iubebat 647 accipere ingentique urbem obsidione premebat: 648 Aeneadae in ferrum pro libertate ruebant. 649 Illum indignanti similem similemque minanti 650 aspiceres, pontem auderet quia vellere Cocles 651 et fluvium vinclis innaret Cloelia ruptis. 652 In summo custos Tarpeiae Manlius arcis 653 stabat pro templo et Capitolia celsa tenebat, 654 Romuleoque recens horrebat regia culmo. 655 Atque hic auratis volitans argenteus anser 656 porticibus Gallos in limine adesse canebat. 657 Galli per dumos aderant arcemque tenebant, 658 defensi tenebris et dono noctis opacae: 659 aurea caesaries ollis atque aurea vestis, 660 virgatis lucent sagulis, tum lactea colla	Etruria's force, 673 disarmed by oracles. Their Tarchon sent 674 envoys who bore a sceptre and a crown 675 even to me, and prayed I should assume 676 the sacred emblems of Etruria's king, 677 and lead their host to war. But unto me 678 cold, sluggish age, now barren and outworn, 679 denies new kingdoms, and my slow-paced powers 680 run to brave deeds no more. Nor could I urge 681 my son, who by his Sabine mother's line 682 is half Italian-born. Thyself art he, 683 whose birth illustrious and manly prime 684 fate favors and celestial powers approve.
8.661	661 auro innectuntur, duo quisque Alpina coruscant 662 gaesa manu, scutis protecti corpora longis. 663 Hic exsultantis Salios nudosque Lupercos 664 lanigerosque apices et lapsa ancilia caelo 665 extuderat, castae ducebant sacra per urbem 666 pilentis matres in mollibus. Hinc procul addit 667 Tartareas etiam sedes, alta ostia Ditis, 668 et scelerum poenas et te, Catilina, minaci 669 pendentem scopulo Furiarumque ora trementem,	685 Therefore go forth, O bravest chief and King 686 of Troy and Italy! To thee I give 687 the hope and consolation of our throne, 688 pallas, my son, and bid him find in thee 689 a master and example, while he learns 690 the soldier's arduous toil. With thy brave deeds 691 let him familiar grow, and reverence thee 692 with youthful love and honor. In his train 693 two hundred horsemen of Arcadia, 694 our choicest men-at-arms, shall ride; and he 695 in his own name an equal band shall bring 696 to follow only thee.” Such the discourse. 697 With meditative brows and downcast eyes 698 Aeneas and Achates, sad at heart, 699 mused on unnumbered perils yet to come. 700

	670 secretosque pios, his dantem iura Catonem. 671 Haec inter tumidi late maris ibat imago 672 aurea, sed fluctu spumabant caerula cano; 673 et circum argento clari delphines in orbem 674 aequora verrebant caudis aestumque secabant. 675 In medio classis aeratas, Actia bella, 676 cernere erat, totumque instructo Marte videres 677 fervere Leucaten auroque effulgere fluctus. 678 Hinc Augustus agens Italos in proelia Caesar 679 cum patribus populoque, penatibus et magnis dis, 680 stans celsa in puppi; geminas cui tempora flammas 681 laeta vomunt patriumque aperitur vertice sidus. 682 Parte alia ventis et dis Agrippa secundis 683 arduus agmen agens; cui, belli insigne superbum, 684 tempora navali fulgent rostrata corona. 685 Hinc ope barbarica variisque Antonius armis, 686 victor ab Aurorae populis et litore rubro, 687 Aegyptum viresque Orientis et ultima secum 688 Bactra vehit, sequiturque (nefas) Aegyptia coniunx. 689 Una omnes ruere, ac totum spumare reductis 690 convolsum remis rostrisque tridentibus aequor.	But out of cloudless sky Cythera's Queen 701 gave sudden signal: from th' ethereal dome 702 a thunder-peal and flash of quivering fire 703 tumultuous broke, as if the world would fall, 704 and bellowing Tuscan trumpets shook the air. 705 All eyes look up. Again and yet again 706 crashed the terrible din, and where the sky 707 looked clearest hung a visionary cloud, 708 whence through the brightness blazed resounding arms. 709 All hearts stood still. But Troy's heroic son 710 knew that his mother in the skies redeemed 711 her pledge in sound of thunder: so he cried, 712 “Seek not, my friend, seek not thyself to read 713 the meaning of the omen. 'T is to me 714 Olympus calls. My goddess-mother gave
8.691	691 alta petunt: pelago credas innare revolsas 692 Cycladas aut montis concurrere montibus altos, 693 tanta mole viri turritis puppibus instant. 694 stuppea flamma manu telisque volatile ferrum 695 spargitur, arva nova Neptunia caede rubescunt. 696 Regina in mediis patrio vocat agmina sistro 697 necdum etiam geminos a tergo respicit anguis. 698 omnigenumque deum monstra et latrator Anubis	715 long since her promise of a heavenly sign 716 if war should burst; and that her power would bring 717 a panoply from Vulcan through the air, 718 to help us at our need. Alas, what deaths 719 over Laurentum's ill-starred host impend! 720 O Turnus, what a reckoning thou shalt pay 721 to me in arms! O Tiber, in thy wave 722 what helms and shields and mighty soldiers slain 723 shall in confusion roll! Yea, let them lead 724 their lines to battle, and our league abjure!”

	699 contra Neptunum et Venerem contraque Minervam 700 tela tenent. Saevit medio in certamine Mavors 701 caelatus ferro tristesque ex aethere Dirae, 702 et scissa gaudens vadit Discordia palla, 703 quam cum sanguineo sequitur Bellona flagello. 704 Actius haec cernens arcum tendebat Apollo 705 desuper: omnis eo terrore Aegyptus et Indi, 706 omnis Arabs, omnes vertebant terga Sabaei. 707 Ipsa videbatur ventis regina vocatis 708 vela dare et laxos iam iamque inmittere funis. 709 Illam inter caedes pallentem morte futura 710 fecerat Ignipotens undis et Iapyge ferri, 711 contra autem magno maerentem corpore Nilum 712 pandentemque sinus et tota veste vocantem 713 caeruleum in gremium latebrosaque flumina victos. 714 At Caesar, triplici invectus Romana triumpho 715 moenia, dis Italis votum inmortale sacrabat, 716 maxuma tercentum totam delubra per urbem. 717 Laetitia ludisque viae plausuque fremebant; 718 omnibus in templis matrum chorus, omnibus arae; 719 ante aras terram caesi stravere iuvenci. 720 Ipse, sedens niveo candentis limine Phoebi,
8.721	721 dona recognoscit populorum aptatque superbis 722 postibus; incedunt victae longo ordine gentes, 723 quam variae linguis, habitu tam vestis et armis. 724 Hic Nomadum genus et discinctos Mulciber Afros, 725 hic Lelegas Carasque sagittiferosque Gelonos 726 finxerat; Euphrates ibat iam mollior undis, 727 extremique hominum Morini, Rhenusque bicornis,

	728 indomitique Dahae, et pontem indignatus Araxes. 729 Talia per clipeum Volcani, dona parentis, 730 miratur rerumque ignarus imagine gaudet, 731 attollens umero famamque et fata nepotum.
9.1	1 Atque ea diversa penitus dum parte geruntur, 2 Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno 3 audacem ad Turnum. Luco tum forte parentis 4 Pilumni Turnus sacrata valle sedebat. 5 Ad quem sic roseo Thaumantias ore locuta est: 6 Turne, quod optanti divom promittere nemo 7 auderet, volvenda dies en attulit ultro. 8 Aeneas urbe et sociis et classe relicta 9 sceptra Palatini sedemque petit Euandri. 10 Nec satis: extremas Corythi penetravit ad urbes 11 Lydorumque manum collectos armat agrestis. 12 Quid dubitas? Nunc tempus equos, nunc poscere currus. 13 Rumpe moras omnis et turbata arripe castra. 14 Dixit et in caelum paribus se sustulit alis 15 ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum. 16 Adgnovit iuvenis duplicisque ad sidera palmas 17 sustulit ac tali fugientem est voce secutus: 18 Iri, decus caeli, quis te mihi nubibus actam 19 detulit in terras? Unde haec tam clara repente 20 tempestas? Medium video discedere caelum 21 palantisque polo stellas. Sequor omina tanta, 22 quisquis in arma vocas. Et sic effatus ad undam 23 processit summoque hausit de gurgite lymphas, 24 multa deos orans, oneravitque aethera votis. 25 Iamque omnis campis exercitus ibat apertis, 26 dives equum, dives pictaï vestis et auri; 27 Messapus primas acies, postrema	1 While thus in distant region moves the war, 2 down to bold Turnus Saturn's daughter sends 3 celestial Iris. In a sacred vale, 4 the seat of worship at his grandsire's tomb, 5 Pilumnus, Faunus' son, the hero mused. 6 And thus the wonder-child of Thaumas called 7 with lips of rose: “O Turnus, what no god 8 dared give for reward of thy fondest vow, 9 has come unbidden on its destined day. 10 Behold, Aeneas, who has left behind 11 the city with his fleet and followers, 12 is gone to kingly Palatine, the home 13 of good Evander. Yea, his march invades 14 the far Etrurian towns, where now he arms 15 the Lydian rustics. Wilt thou longer muse? 16 Call for thy chariot and steeds! Away! 17 Take yonder tents by terror and surprise!” 18 She spoke; and heavenward on poising wings 19 soared, cleaving as she fled from cloud to cloud 20 a vast, resplendent bow. The warrior saw, 21 and, lifting both his hands, pursued with prayer 22 the fading glory: “Beauteous Iris, hail! 23 Proud ornament of heaven! who sent thee here 24 across yon cloud to earth, and unto me? 25 Whence may this sudden brightness fall? I see 26 the middle welkin lift, and many a star, 27 far-wandering in the sky. Such solemn sign 28 I shall obey, and thee, O god unknown!” 29 So saying, he turned him to a sacred stream, 30 took water from its brim, and offered Heaven 31 much prayer, with many an importuning vow.

	coercent 28 Tyrrhidae iuvenes, medio dux agmine Turnus, 29 30 Ceu septem surgens sedatis amnibus altus
9.31	31 per tacitum Ganges aut pingui flumine Nilus 32 cum refluit campis et iam se condidit alveo. 33 Hic subitam nigro glomerari pulvere nubem 34 prospiciunt Teucri ac tenebras insurgere campis. 35 Primus ab adversa conclamat mole Caicus: 36 Quis globus, o cives, caligine volvitur atra? 37 Ferte citi ferrum, date tela, ascendite muros, 38 hostis adest, heia! Ingenti clamore per omnis 39 condunt se Teucri portas et moenia complent. 40 Namque ita discedens praeceperat optumus armis 41 Aeneas: siqua interea fortuna fuisset, 42 neu struere auderent aciem neu credere campo; 43 castra modo et tutos servarent aggere muros. 44 Ergo etsi conferre manum pudor iraque monstrat, 45 obiciunt portas tamen et praecepta facessunt 46 armatique cavis expectant turribus hostem. 47 Turnus ut ante volans tardum praecesserat agmen 48 viginti lectis equitum comitatus, et urbi 49 improvisus adest; maculis quem Thracius albis 50 portat equus cristaque tegit galea aurea rubra. 51 Ecquis erit, mecum, iuvenes, qui primus in hostem? 52 En, ait et iaculum attorquens emittit in auras, 53 principium pugnae, et campo sese arduus infert. 54 Clamore excipiunt socii fremituque sequuntur 55 horrisono: Teucrum mirantur inertia corda, 56 non aequo dare se campo, non obvia ferre	32 Soon o'er the spreading fields in proud array 33 the gathered legions poured; no lack was there 34 of steeds all fire, and broidered pomp and gold. 35 Messapus led the van; in rearguard rode 36 the sons of Tyrrheus; kingly Turnus towered 37 from the mid-column eminent: the host 38 moved as great Ganges lifting silently 39 his seven peaceful streams, or when the flood 40 of fructifying Nile from many a field 41 back to his channel flows. A swift-blown cloud 42 of black, uprolling dust the Teucrians see 43 o'ershadowing the plain; Calcus calls 44 from lofty outpost: “O my countrymen, 45 I see a huge, black ball of rolling smoke. 46 Your swords and lances! Man the walls! To arms! 47 The foe is here! What ho!” With clamors loud 48 the Teucrians through the city-gates retire, 49 and muster on the walls. For, wise in war, 50 Aeneas, ere he went, had left command 51 they should not range in battle-line, nor dare, 52 whate'er might hap, to risk in open plain 53 the bold sortie, but keep them safe entrenched 54 in mounded walls. So now, though rage and shame 55 prick to a close fight, they defensive bar 56 each portal strong, and, patient of control, 57 from hollow towers expect th' encircling foe. 58 Turnus, at full speed, had outridden far 59 his laggard host, and, leading in his train 60 a score of chosen knights, dashed into view 61 hard by the walls. A barb of Thracian breed 62 dappled with white he rode; a crimson plume 63 flamed over his golden helmet. “Who,” he cries, 64 “Is foremost at the foe? Who follows me? 65 Behold!” And, with the word, he hurled in air 66 a javelin, provoking instant war: 67 and, towering from his horse, charged o'er the field. 68 With answering shout his men-at-arms pursue, 69 and war-cries terrible. They laugh to scorn 70 “the craven hearts of Troy, that cannot give 71 fair, equal vantage, matching man to man, 72 but cuddle into camp.” This way and that 73 Turnus careers, and

	57 arma viros, sed castra fovere. Huc turbidus atque huc 58 lustrat equo muros aditumque per avia quaerit. 59 Ac veluti pleno lupus insidiatus ovili 60 cum fremit ad caulas, ventos perpessus et imbris,	stormily surveys 74 the frowning rampart, and where way is none 75 some entering breach would find: so prowls a wolf 76 nigh the full sheepfold, and through wind and rain 77 stands howling at the postern all night long; 78 beneath the ewes their bleating lambs lie safe; 79 but he, with undesisting fury, more 80 rages from far, made frantic for his prey 81 by hunger of long hours, his foaming jaws 82 athirst for blood: not less the envy burned 83 of the Rutulian, as he scanned in vain 84 the stronghold of his foe. Indignant scorn 85 thrilled all his iron frame. But how contrive 86 to storm the fortress or by force expel 87 the Trojans from the rampart, and disperse 88 along the plain? Straightway he spied the ships, 89 in hiding near the camp, defended well 90 by mounded river-bank and fleeting wave. 91 On these he fell; while his exultant crew 92 brought firebrands, and he with heart aflame 93 grasped with a vengeful hand the blazing pine. 94 To the wild work his followers sped; for who 95 could prove him craven under Turnus' eye? 96 The whole troop for the weapon of their rage 97 seized smoking coals, of many a hearth the spoil; 98 red glare of fuming torches burned abroad, 99 and Vulcan starward flung a sparkling cloud.
9.61	61 nocte super media; tuti sub matribus agni 62 balatum exercent, ille asper et improbus ira 63 saevit in absentis, collecta fatigat edendi 64 ex longo rabies et siccae sanguine fauces: 65 haud aliter Rutulo muros et castra tuenti 66 ignescunt irae, duris dolor ossibus ardet. 67 Qua temptet ratione aditus et quae via clausos 68 excutiat Teucros vallo atque effundat in aequum? 69 Classem, quae lateri castrorum adiuncta latebat, 70 aggeribus saeptam circum et fluvialibus undis, 71 invadit sociosque incendia poscit ovantis 72 atque manum pinu flagranti fervidus implet.

	73 Tum vero incumbunt, urget praesentia Turni, 74 atque omnis facibus pubes accingitur atris. 75 Diripuere focos; piceum fert fumida lumen 76 taeda et commixtam Volcanus ad astra favillam. 77 Quis deus, o musae, tam saeva incendia Teucris 78 avertit? Tantos ratibus quis depulit ignes? 79 Dicite. Prisca fides facto, sed fama perennis. 80 Tempore quo primum Phrygia formabat in Ida 81 Aeneas classem et pelagi petere alta parabat, 82 ipsa deum fertur genetrix Berecyntia magnum 83 vocibus his adfata Iovem: Da, nate, petenti, 84 quod tua cara parens domito te poscit Olympo. 85 86 lucus in arce fuit summa, quo sacra ferebant, 87 nigranti picea trabibusque obscurus acernis: 88 has ego Dardanio iuveni, cum classis egeret, 89 laeta dedi; nunc sollicitam timor anxius angit. 90 Solve metus atque hoc precibus sine posse parentem:
9.91	91 ne cursu quassatae ullo neu turbine venti 92 vincantur, prosit nostris in montibus ortas. 93 Filius huic contra, torquet qui sidera mundi: 94 O genetrix, quo fata vocas, aut quid petis istis? 95 Mortaline manu factae immortale carinae 96 fas habeant certusque incerta pericula lustret 97 Aeneas? Cui tanta deo permissa potestas? 98 Immo ubi defunctae finem portusque tenebunt 99 Ausonios olim, quaecumque evaserit undis 100 Dardaniumque ducem Laurentia vexerit arva, 101 mortalem eripiam formam magnique iubebo 102 aequoris esse deas, qualis Nereia	100 What god, O Muses, saved the Trojans then 101 from wrathful flame? Who shielded then the fleet, 102 I pray you tell, from bursting storm of fire? 103 From hoary eld the tale, but its renown 104 sings on forever. When Aeneas first 105 on Phrygian Ida hewed the sacred wood 106 for rib and spar, and soon would put to sea, 107 that mighty mother of the gods, they say, 108 the Berecynthian goddess, thus to Jove 109 addressed her plea: “Grant, O my son, a boon, 110 which thy dear mother asks, who aided thee 111 to quell Olympian war. A grove I have 112 of sacred pine, long-loved from year to year. 113 On lofty hill it grew, and thither came 114 my worshippers with gifts, in secret gloom 115 of pine-trees dark and shadowing maple-boughs.; 116 these on the Dardan warrior at his need 117 I, not unwilling, for his fleet bestowed. 118 But I have fears. O, Iet a

	Doto 103 et Galatea secant spumantem pectore pontum. 104 Dixerat idque ratum Stygii per flumina fratris, 105 per pice torrentis atraque voragine ripas 106 adnuit et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum. 107 Ergo aderat promissa dies et tempora Parcae 108 debita complerant, cum Turni iniuria Matrem 109 admonuit ratibus sacris depellere taedas. 110 Hic primum nova lux oculis offulsit et ingens 111 visus ab Aurora caelum transcurrere nimbus 112 Idaeique chori; tum vox horrenda per auras 113 excidit et Troum Rutulorumque agmina complet: 114 Ne trepidate meas, Teucri, defendere navis 115 neve armate manus: maria ante exurere Turno 116 quam sacras dabitur pinus. Vos ite solutae, 117 ite deae pelagi: genetrix iubet. Et sua quaeque 118 continuo puppes abrumpunt vincula ripis 119 delphinumque modo demersis aequora rostris 120 ima petunt. Hinc virgineae (mirabile monstrum)	parent's prayer 119 in this prevail, and bid my care begone! 120 Let not rude voyages nor the shock of storm 121 my ships subdue, but let their sacred birth 122 on my charmed hills their strength and safety be!” 123 Then spake her son, who guides the wheeling spheres: 124 “Wouldst thou, my mother, strive to oversway 125 the course of Fate? What means this prayer of thine? 126 Can it be granted ships of mortal mould 127 to wear immortal being? Wouldst thou see 128 Aeneas pass undoubting and secure 129 through doubtful strait and peril? On what god 130 was e'er such power bestowed? Yet will I grant 131 a different boon. Whatever ships shall find 132 a safe Ausonian haven, and convey 133 safe through the seas to yon Laurentian plain 134 the Dardan King, from such I will remove 135 their perishable shapes, and bid them be 136 sea-nymphs divine, like Nereus' daughters fair, 137 Doto and Galatea, whose white breasts 138 divide the foaming wave.” He said, and swore 139 by his Tartarean brother's mournful stream, 140 the pitch-black floods and dark engulfing shore 141 of Styx; then great Jove bowed his head, and all 142 Olympus quaked at his consenting brow.
9.121	121 quot prius aeratae steterant ad litora prorae 122 reddunt se totidem facies pontoque feruntur. 123 Obstipuere animis Rutuli, conterritus ipse 124 turbatis Messapus equis, cunctatur et amnis 125 rauca sonans revocatque pedem Tiberinus ab alto. 126 At non audaci Turno fiducia cessit; 127 ultro animos tollit dictis atque increpat ultro: 128 Troianos haec monstra petunt, his Iuppiter ipse 129 auxilium solitum eripuit, non tela neque ignes 130 exspectans Rutulos. Ergo maria invia Teucris 131 nec spes ulla fugae: rerum pars altera adempta est.	143 Now was the promised day at hand (for Fate 144 had woven the web so far) when Turnus' rage 145 stirred the divine progenitress to save 146 her sacred ships from fire. Then sudden shone 147 a strange effulgence in the eastern air; 148 and in a storm-cloud wafted o'er the sky 149 were Corybantic choirs, whose dreadful song 150 smote both on Teucrian and Rutulian ear: 151 “O Teucrians, fear not for the sure defence 152 of all the ships, nor arm your mortal hands. 153 Yon impious Turnus shall burn up the seas 154 before my pine-trees blest. Arise! Be free, 155 ye goddesses of ocean, and obey 156 your mother's mighty word.” Then instant broke 157 the hawsers of the sterns; the beaked prows 158 went plunging like great dolphins from the shore 159 down to 132 Terra autem in nostris manibus, tot milia gentes 133 arma ferunt Italae. Nil me fatalia terrent, 134 siqua Phryges prae se iactant, responsa deorum: 135 sat fatis Venerique datum, tetigere quod arva 136 fertilis Ausoniae Troes. Sunt et mea contra 137 fata mihi, ferro sceleratam exscindere gentem, 138 coniuge praerepta: nec solos tangit Atridas 139 iste dolor solisque licet capere arma Mycenis. 140 Sed periisse semel satis est: peccare fuisset 141 ante satis penitus modo non genus omne perosos 142 femineum. Quibus haec medii fiducia valli 143 fossarumque morae, leti discrimina parva, 144 dant animos. At non viderunt moenia Troiae 145 Neptuni fabricata manu considere in ignis? 146 Sed vos, o lecti, ferro qui scindere vallum 147 apparat et mecum invadit trepidantia castra. 148 Non armis mihi Volcani, non mille carinis 149 est opus in Teucros; addant se protinus omnes 150 Etrusci socios, tenebras et inertia furta	the deeps, and, wonderful to tell, 160 the forms of virgin goddesses uprose, 161 one for each ship, and seaward sped away.

9.151	151 Palladii caesis summae custodibus arcis 152 ne timeant, nec equi caeca condemur in alvo: 153 luce palam certum est igni circumdare muros. 154 Haud sibi cum Danais rem faxo et pube Pelasga 155 esse ferant, decumum quos distulit Hector in annum. 156 Nunc adeo, melior quoniam pars acta diei, 157 quod superest, laeti bene gestis corpora rebus 158 procurate, viri, et pugnam sperate parari. 159 Interea vigilum excubiis obsidere portas 160 cura datur Messapo et moenia cingere flammis.	162 The hearts of the Rutulian host stood still 163 in panic, and Messapus terrified 164 his trembling horses reined; the sacred stream 165 of Father Tiber, harshly murmuring, 166 held back his flood and checked his seaward way. 167 But Turnus' courage failed not; he alone 168 his followers roused, and with reproachful words 169 alone spoke forth: “These signs and prodigies 170 threaten the Trojan only. Jove himself 171 has stripped them of their wonted strength: no more 172 can they abide our deadly sword and fire. 173 The Trojan path to sea is shut. What hope 174 of flight is left them now? The half their cause 175 is fallen. The possession of this land 176 is ours already; thousands of sharp swords 177 Italia's nations bring. Small fear have I

	161 Bis septem Rutuli, muros qui milite servent, 162 delecti; ast illos centeni quemque sequuntur 163 purpurei cristis iuvenes auroque corusci. 164 Discurrunt variantque vices fusique per herbam 165 indulgent vino et vertunt crateras aenos. 166 Conlucent ignes, noctem custodia ducit 167 insomnem ludo. 168 Haec super e vallo prospectant Troes et armis 169 alta tenent, nec non trepidi formidine portas 170 explorant pontisque et propugnacula iungunt, 171 tela gerunt. Instat Mnestheus acerque Serestus, 172 quos pater Aeneas, siquando adversa vocarent, 173 rectores iuvenum et rerum dedit esse magistros. 174 Omnis per muros legio, sortita periclum, 175 excubat exercetque vices, quod cuique tuendum est. 176 Nisus erat portae custos, acerrimus armis, 177 Hyrtacides, comitem Aeneae quem miserat Ida 178 venatrix iaculo celerem levibusque sagittis; 179 it iuxta comes Euryalus, quo pulchrior alter 180 non fuit Aeneadum Troiana neque induit arma,	178 of Phrygia's boasted omens. What to me 179 their oracles from heaven? The will of Fate 180 and Venus have achieved their uttermost 181 in casting on Ausonia's fruitful shore 182 yon sons of Troy. I too have destinies: 183 and mine, good match for theirs, with this true blade 184 will spill the blood of all the baneful brood, 185 in vengeance for my stolen wife. Such wrongs 186 move not on Atreus' sons alone, nor rouse 187 only Mycenae to a righteous war. 188 Say you, ‘Troy falls but once?’ One crime, say I, 189 should have contented them; and now their souls 190 should little less than loathe all womankind. 191 These are the sort of soldiers that be brave
9.181	181 ora puer prima signans intonsa iuventa. 182 His amor unus erat, pariterque in bella ruebant: 183 tum quoque communi portam statione tenebant. 184 Nisus ait: Dine hunc ardorem mentibus addunt, 185 Euryale, an sua cuique deus fit dira cupido? 186 Aut pugnam aut aliquid iamdudum invadere magnum 187 mens agitat mihi nec placida contenta quietest. 188 Cernis, quae Rutulos habeat fiducia rerum. 189 Lumina rara micant; somno vinoque soluti 190 procubuere; silent late loca:	192 behind entrenchment, where the moated walls 193 may stem the foe and make a little room 194 betwixt themselves and death. Did they not see 195 how Troy's vast bulwark built by Neptune's hand 196 crumbled in flame? Forward, my chosen brave! 197 Who follows me to cleave his deadly way 198 through yonder battlement, and leap like storm 199 upon its craven guard? I have no need 200 of arms from Vulcan's smithy; nor of ships 201 a thousand strong against our Teucrian foes, 202 though all Etruria's league enlarge their power. 203 Let them not fear dark nights, nor coward theft 204 of Pallas' shrine, nor murdered sentinels 205 on their acropolis. We shall not hide 206 in blinding belly of a horse. But I 207 in percipe porro, 191 quid dubitem et quae nunc animo sententia surgat. 192 Aenean acciri omnes, populusque patresque, 193 exposcunt mittique viros, qui certa reportent. 194 Si tibi quae posco promittunt (nam mihi facti 195 fama sat est), tumulo videor reperire sub illo 196 posse viam ad muros et moenia Pallantea. 197 Obstipuit magno laudum percussus amore 198 Euryalus; simul his ardentem adfatur amicum: 199 Mene igitur socium summis adiungere rebus, 200 Nise, fugis? Solum te in tanta pericula mittam? 201 Non ita me genitor, bellis adsuetus Opheltes, 202 Argolicum terrorem inter Troiaeque labores 203 sublatum erudiit, nec tecum talia gessi, 204 magnanimum Aenean et fata extrema secutus: 205 est hic, est animus lucis contemptor et istum 206 qui vita bene credat emi, quo tendis, honorem. 207 Nisus ad haec: Equidem de te nil tale verebar 208 nec fas, non, ita me referat tibi magnus ovantem 209 Iuppiter aut quicumque oculis haec aspicit aequis. 210 Sed siquis, quae multa vides discrimine tali,	public eye and open day intend 208 to compass their weak wall with siege and fire. 209 I'll prove them we be no Pelasgic band, 210 no Danaan warriors, such as Hector's arm 211 ten years withstood. But look! this day hath spent 212 its better part. In what remains, rejoice 213 in noble deeds well done; let weary flesh 214 have rest and food. My warriors, husband well 215 your strength against to-morrow's hopeful war.” 216 Meanwhile to block their gates with wakeful guard 217 is made Messapus' work, and to gird round 218 their camp with watchfires. Then a chosen band, 219 twice seven Rutulian chieftains, man the walls 220 with soldiery; each leads a hundred men 221 crested with crimson, armed with glittering gold.

9.211	211 siquis in adversum rapiat casusve deusve, 212 te superesse velim; tua vita dignior aetas. 213 Sit qui me raptum pugna pretiove redemptum 214 mandet humo solita aut siqua id Fortuna vetabit, 215 absenti ferat inferias decoretque sepulchro. 216 Neu matri miserae tanti sim causa doloris, 217 quae te sola, puer, multis e matribus ausa 218 persequitur magni nec moenia curat Acestae, 219 Ille autem: Causas nequiquam	222 Some post to separate sentries, and prepare 223 alternate vigil; others, couched on grass, 224 laugh round the wine and lift the brazen bowls. 225 The camp-fires cheerly burn; the jovial guard 226 spend the long, sleepless night in sport and game. 227 The Trojans peering from the lofty walls 228 survey the foe, and arm for sure defence 229 of every point exposed. They prove the gates 230 with fearful care, bind bridge with tower, and bring 231 good store of javelins. Serestus bold 232 and Mnestheus to their labors promptly fly, 233 whom Sire Aeneas bade in time of stress 234 to have authority and free command 235 over

	nectis inanis, 220 nec mea iam mutata loco sententia cedit: 221 adceleremus, ait. Vigiles simul excitat, illi 222 succedunt servantque vices: statione relicta 223 ipse comes Niso graditur, regemque requirunt. 224 Cetera per terras omnis animalia somno 225 laxabant curas et corda oblita laborum: 226 ductores Teucrum primi et delecta iuventus 227 consilium summis regni de rebus habebant, 228 quid facerent quisve Aeneae iam nuntius esset. 229 Stant longis adnixi hastis, et scuta tenentes, 230 castrorum et campi medio. Tum Nisus et una 231 Euryalus confestim alacres admittier orant: 232 rem magnam, pretiumque morae fore. Primus Iulus 233 accepit trepidos ac Nisum dicere iussit. 234 Tum sic Hyrtacides: Audite O mentibus aequis, 235 Aeneadae, neve haec nostris spectentur ab annis, 236 quae ferimus. Rutuli somno vinoque soluti 237 conticuere; locum insidiis conspeximus ipsi, 238 qui patet in bivio portae, quae proxuma ponto; 239 interrupti ignes, aterque ad sidera fumus 240 erigitur: si fortuna permittitis uti	his warriars. Along the walls 236 the legions, by the cast of lots, divide 237 the pain and peril, giving each his due 238 of alternating vigil and repose. 239 Nisus kept sentry at the gate: a youth 240 of eager heart for noble deeds, the son 241 of Hyrtacus, whom in Aeneas' train 242 Ida the huntress sent; swift could he speed 243 the spear or light-winged arrow to its aim. 244 Beside him was Euryalus, his friend: 245 of all th' Aeneadae no youth more fair 246 wore Trojan arms; upon his cheek unshorn 247 the tender bloom of boyhood lingered still. 248 Their loving hearts were one, and oft in war 249 they battled side by side, as in that hour 250 a common sentry at the gate they shared. 251 Said Nisus: “Is it gods above that breathe 252 this fever in my soul, Euryalus? 253 or is the tyrant passion of each breast 254 the god it serves? Me now my urgent mind 255 to battles or some mighty deed impels, 256 and will not give me rest. Look yonder, where 257 the Rutuli in dull security 258 the siege maintain. Yet are their lights but few. 259 They are asleep or drunk, and in their line 260 is many a silent space. O, hear my thought, 261 and what my heart is pondering. To recall 262 Aeneas is the dearest wish to-night 263 of all, both high and low. They need true men 264 to find him and bring tidings. If our chiefs 265 but grant me leave to do the thing I ask 266 (Claiming no reward save what honor gives), 267 methinks I could search out by yonder hill 268 a path to Pallanteum.” The amazed
9.241	241 quaesitum Aenean et moenia Pallantea, 242 mox hic cum spoliis ingenti caede peracta 243 adfore cernetis. Nec nos via fallit euntis: 244 vidimus obscuris primam sub vallibus urbem 245 venatu adsiduo et totum cognovimus amnem. 246 Hic annis gravis atque animi maturus Aletes: 247 Di patrii, quorum semper sub numine Troia est, 248 non tamen omnino Teucros delere paratis,	269 Euryalus, flushed warm with eager love 270 for deeds of glory, instantly replied 271 to his high-hearted friend: “Dost thou refuse, 272 my Nisus, to go with me hand in hand 273 when mighty deeds are done? Could I behold 274 thee venturing alone on danger? Nay! 275 Not thus my sire Opheltes, schooled in war, 276 taught me his true child, 'mid the woes of Troy 277 and Argive terrors reared; not thus with thee 278 have I proved craven, since we twain were leal 279 to great Aeneas, sharing all his doom. 280 In this breast also is a heart which knows 281 contempt of life, and deems such deeds,

	249 cum talis animos iuvenum et tam certa tulistis 250 pectora. Sic memorans umeros dextrasque tenebat 251 amborum et voltum lacrimis atque ora rigabat. 252 Quae vobis, quae digna, viri, pro laudibus istis 253 praemia posse rear solvi? Pulcherrima primum 254 di moresque dabunt vestri; tum cetera reddet 255 actutum pius Aeneas atque integer aevi 256 Ascanius, meriti tanti non immemor umquam. 257 Immo ego vos, cui sola salus genitore reducto, 258 excipit Ascanius, per magnos, Nise, penatis 259 Assaracique larem et canae penetralia Vestae 260 obtestor; quaecumque mihi fortuna fidesque est, 261 in vestris pono gremiis: revocate parentem, 262 reddite conspectum; nihil illo triste recepto. 263 Bina dabo argento perfecta atque aspera signis 264 pocula, devicta genitor quae cepit Arisba, 265 et tripodas geminos, auri duo magna talenta, 266 cratera antiquum, quem dat Sidonia Dido. 267 Si vero capere Italiam sceptrisque potiri 268 contigerit victori et praedae dicere sortem, 269 vidisti quo Turnus equo, quibus ibat in armis 270 aureus: ipsum illum, clipeum cristasque rubentis	such praise, 282 well worth a glorious death.” Nisus to him: 283 “I have not doubted thee, nor e'er could have 284 one thought disloyal. May almighty Jove, 285 or whatsoe'er good power my purpose sees, 286 bring me triumphant to thy arms once more! 287 But if, as oft in doubtful deeds befalls, 288 some stroke of chance, or will divine, should turn 289 to adverse, 't is my fondest prayer that thou 290 shouldst live the longer of us twain. Thy years 291 suit better with more life. Oh! let there be 292 one mourner true to carry to its grave 293 my corpse, recaptured in the desperate fray, 294 or ransomed for a price. Or if this boon 295 should be—'t is Fortune's common way—refused, 296 then pay the debt of grief and loyal woe 297 unto my far-off dust, and garlands leave 298 upon an empty tomb. No grief I give
9.271	271 excipiam sorti, iam nunc tua praemia, Nise. 272 Praeterea bis sex genitor lectissima matrum 273 corpora captivosque dabit suaque omnibus arma, 274 insuper his campi quod rex habet ipse Latinus. 275 Te vero, mea quem spatiis propioribus aetas 276 insequitur, venerande puer, iam pectore toto 277 accipio et comitem casus complector in omnis.	299 to any sorrowing mother; one alone, 300 of many Trojan mothers, had the heart 301 to follow thee, her child, and would not stay 302 in great Acestes' land.” His friend replied: 303 “Thou weavest but a web of empty words 304 and reasons vain, nor dost thou shake at all 305 my heart's resolve. Come, let us haste away!” 306 He answered so, and summoned to the gate 307 a neighboring watch, who, bringing prompt relief, 308 the sentry-station took; then quitted he 309 his post assigned; at Nisus' side he strode,

	278 Nulla meis sine te quaeretur gloria rebus; 279 seu pacem seu bella geram, tibi maxima rerum 280 verborumque fides. Contra quem talia fatur 281 Euryalus: Me nulla dies tam fortibus ausis 282 dissimilem arguerit; tantum, fortuna secunda 283 aut adversa cadat. Sed te super omnia dona 284 unum oro, genetrix Priami de gente vetusta 285 est mihi, quam miseram tenuit non Ilia tellus 286 mecum excedentem, non moenia regis Acestae. 287 Hanc ego nunc ignaram huius quodcumque pericli est 288 inque salutatam linquo: nox et tua testis 289 dextera, quod nequeam lacrumas perferre parentis 290 at tu, oro, solare inopem et succurre relictae. 291 Hanc sine me spem ferre tui: audentior ibo 292 in casus omnis. Percussa mente dedere 293 Dardanidae lacrimas; ante omnis pulcher Iulus, 294 atque animum patriae strinxit pietatis imago. 295 Tum sic effatur: 296 Sponde digna tuis ingentibus omnia coeptis. 297 Namque erit ista mihi genetrix nomenque Creusae 298 solum defuerit, nec partum gratia talem 299 parva manet. Casus factum quicumque sequentur, 300 per caput hoc iuro, per quod pater ante solebat:	310 and both impatient sped them to the King.
9.301	301 quae tibi polliceor reduci rebusque secundis, 302 haec eadem matrique tuae generique manebunt. 303 Sic ait inlacrimans; umero simul exuit ensem 304 auratum, mira quem fecerat arte Lycaon 305 Gnosius atque habilem vagina aptarat eburna. 306 Dat Niso Mnestheus pellem horrentisque leonis 307 exuvias; galeam fidus permutat	311 Now in all lands all creatures that have breath 312 lulled care in slumber, and each heart forgot 313 its load of toil and pain. But they who led 314 the Teucrian cause, with all their chosen brave, 315 took counsel in the kingdom's hour of need 316 what action to command or whom dispatch 317 with tidings to Aeneas. In mid-camp 318 on long spears leaning and with ready shield 319 to leftward slung, th' assembled warriors stood. 320 Thither in haste arrived the noble pair, 321

	Aletes. 308 Protinus armati incedunt; quos omnis euntis 309 primorum manus ad portas iuvenumque senumque 310 prosequitur votis. Nec non et pulcher Iulus, 311 ante annos animumque gerens curamque virilem, 312 multa patri mandata dabat portanda: sed aurae 313 omnia discerpunt et nubibus inrita donant. 314 Egressi superant fossas noctisque per umbram 315 castra inimica petunt, multis tamen ante futuri 316 exitio. Passim somno vinoque per herbam 317 corpora fusa vident, arrectos litore currus, 318 inter lora rotasque viros, simul arma iacere, 319 vina simul. Prior Hyrtacides sic ore locutus: 320 Euryale, audendum dextra; nunc ipsa vocat res. 321 Hac iter est. Tu, ne qua manus se attollere nobis 322 a tergo possit, custodi et consule longe; 323 haec ego vasta dabo et lato te limite ducam. 324 Sic memorat vocemque premit; simul ense superbum 325 Rhamnetem adgreditur, qui forte tapetibus altis 326 exstructus toto proflabat pectore somnum. 327 Rex idem et regi Turno gratissimus augur, 328 sed non augurio potuit depellere pestem. 329 Tris iuxta famulos temere inter tela iacentis 330 armigerumque Remi premit aurigamque sub ipsis	brave Nisus with Euryalus his friend, 322 and craved a hearing, for their suit, they said, 323 was urgent and well-worth a patient ear. 324 Iulus to the anxious striplings gave 325 a friendly welcome, bidding Nisus speak. 326 The son of Hyrtacus obeyed: “O, hear, 327 Princes of Teucria, with impartial mind, 328 nor judge by our unseasoned youth the worth 329 of what we bring. Yon Rutule watch is now 330 in drunken sleep, and all is silent there. 331 With our own eyes we picked out a good place 332 to steal a march, that cross-road by the gate 333 close-fronting on the bridge. Their lines of fire 334 are broken, and a murky, rolling smoke 335 fills all the region. If ye grant us leave 336 by this good luck to profit, we will find 337 Aeneas and the walls of Palatine, 338 and after mighty slaughter and huge spoil 339 ye soon shall see us back. Nor need ye fear 340 we wander from the way. Oft have we seen
9.331	331 nanctus equis ferroque secat pendentia colla; 332 tum caput ipsi aufert domino truncumque relinquit 333 sanguine singultantem; atro tepefacta cruore 334 terra torique madent. Nec non Lamyrumque Lamumque 335 et iuvenem Serranum, illa qui plurima nocte 336 luserat, insignis facie, multoque	341 that city's crest loom o'er the shadowy vales, 342 where we have hunted all day long and know 343 each winding of yon river.” Then uprose 344 aged Aletes, crowned with wisdom's years: 345 “Gods of our fathers, who forevermore 346 watch over Troy, ye surely had no mind 347 to blot out Teucria's name, when ye bestowed 348 such courage on young hearts, and bade them be 349 so steadfast and so

	iacebat 337 membra deo victus: felix, si protinus illum 338 aequasset nocti ludum in lucemque tulisset. 339 Impastus ceu plena leo per ovilia turbans 340 (suadet enim vesana fames) manditque trahitque 341 molle pecus mutumque metu, fremit ore cruento: 342 nec minor Euryali caedes; incensus et ipse 343 perfurit ac multam in medio sine nomine plebem, 344 Fadumque Herbesumque subit Rhoetumque Abarimque, 345 ignaros, Rhoetum vigilantem et cuncta videntem, 346 sed magnum metuens se post cratera tegebat; 347 pectore in adverso totum cui comminus ensem 348 condidit adsurgenti et multa morte recepit. 349 Purpuream vomit ille animam et cum sanguine mixta 350 vina refert moriens; hic furto fervidus instat. 351 Iamque ad Messapi socios tendebat; ibi ignem 352 deficere extremum et religatos rite videbat 353 carpere gramen equos: breviter cum talia Nisus. 354 sensit enim nimia caede atque cupidine ferri: 355 Absistamus, ait, nam lux inimica propinquat. 356 Poenarum exhaustum satis est, via facta per hostis. 357 Multa virum solido argento perfecta relinquunt 358 armaque craterasque simul pulchrosque tapetas. 359 Euryalus phaleras Rhamnetis et aurea bullis 360 cingula, Tiburti Remulo ditissimus olim	leal.” Joyful he clasped 350 their hands in his, and on their shoulders leaned, 351 his aged cheek and visage wet with tears. 352 “What reward worthy of such actions fair, 353 dear heroes, could be given? Your brightest prize 354 will come from Heaven and your own hearts. The rest 355 Aeneas will right soon bestow; nor will 356 Ascanius, now in youth's unblemished prime, 357 ever forget your praise.” Forthwith replied 358 Aeneas' son, “By all our household gods, 359 by great Assaracus, and every shrine 360 of venerable Vesta, I confide 361 my hopes, my fortunes, and all future weal 362 to your heroic hearts. O, bring me back 363 my father! Set him in these eyes once more! 364 That day will tears be dry; and I will give 365 two silver wine-cups graven and o'erlaid 366 with clear-cut figures, which my father chose 367 out of despoiled Arisbe; also two 368 full talents of pure gold, and tripods twain, 369 and ancient wine-bowl, Tyrian Dido's token. 370 But if indeed our destiny shall be
9.361	361 quae mittit dona hospitio cum iungeret absens 362 Caedicus, ille suo moriens dat habere nepoti, 363 364 haec rapit atque umeris nequiquam fortibus aptat. 365 Tum galeam Messapi habilem cristisque decoram	371 to vanquish Italy in prosperous war, 372 to seize the sceptre and divide the spoil, — 373 saw you that steed of Turnus and the arms 374 in which he rode, all golden? That same steed, 375 that glittering shield and haughty crimson crest 376 I will reserve thee, e'er the lots are cast, 377 and, Nisus, they are thine. Hereto my sire 378 will

	366 induit. Excedunt castris et tuta capessunt. 367 Interea praemissi equites ex urbe Latina, 368 cetera dum legio campis instructa moratur, 369 ibant et Turno regi responsa ferebant, 370 tercentum, scutati omnes, Volcente magistro. 371 Iamque propinquabant castris murosque subibant, 372 cum procul hos laevo flectentis limite cernunt 373 et galea Euryalum sublustri noctis in umbra 374 prodidit immemorem radiisque adversa refulsit. 375 Haud temere est visum. Conclamat ab agmine Volcens 376 State, viri. Quae causa viae? Quive estis in armis? 377 Quove tenetis iter? Nihil illi tendere contra, 378 sed celerare fugam in silvas et fidere nocti. 379 Obiciunt equites sese ad divortia nota 380 hinc atque hinc omnemque abitum custode coronant. 381 Silva fuit late dumis atque ilice nigra 382 horrida, quam densi complerant undique sentes; 383 rara per occultos lucebat semita calles. 384 Euryalum tenebrae ramorum onerosaque praeda 385 impediunt fallitque timor regione viarum; 386 Nisus abit, iamque imprudens evaserat hostis 387 atque locos, qui post Albae de nomine dicti 388 Albani, tum rex stabula alta Latinus habebat, 389 ut stetit et frustra absentem respexit amicum. 390 Euryale infelix, qua te regione reliqui?	add twelve captive maids of beauty rare, 379 and slaves in armor; last, thou hast the fields 380 which now Latinus holds. But as for thee, 381 to whom my youth but binds me closer still, 382 thee, kingly boy, my whole heart makes my own, 383 and through all changeful fortune we shall be 384 inseparable peers: nor will I seek 385 renown and glory, or in peace or war, 386 forgetting thee: but trust thee from this day 387 in deed and word.” To him in answer spoke 388 euryalus, “O, may no future show 389 this heart unworthy thy heroic call! 390 And may our fortune ever prosperous prove, 391 not adverse. But I now implore of thee 392 a single boon worth all beside. I have 393 a mother, from the venerated line 394 of Priam sprung, whom not the Trojan shore 395 nor King Acestes' city could detain, 396 alas! from following me. I leave her now 397 without farewell; nor is her love aware 398 of my supposed peril. For I swear 399 by darkness of this night and thy right hand, 400 that all my courage fails me if I see
9.391	391 Quave sequar, rursus perplexum iter omne revolvens 392 fallacis silvae? Simul et vestigia retro 393 observata legit dumisque silentibus errat. 394 Audit equos, audit strepitus et signa sequentum.	401 a mother's tears. O, therefore, I implore, 402 be thou her sorrow's comfort and sustain 403 her solitary day. Such grace from thee 404 equip me for my war, and I shall face 405 with braver heart whatever fortune brings.” 406 With sudden sorrow thrilled, the veteran lords 407 of

	395 Nec longum in medio tempus, cum clamor ad auris 396 pervenit ac videt Euryalum, quem iam manus omnis 397 fraude loci et noctis, subito turbante tumultu, 398 oppressum rapit et conantem plurima frustra. 399 Quid faciat? Qua vi iuvenem, quibus audeat armis 400 eripere? An sese medios moriturus in enses 401 inferat et pulchram properet per volnera mortem? 402 Ocius adducto torquens hastile lacerto, 403 suspiciens altam Lunam sic voce precatur: 404 Tu, dea, tu praesens nostro succurre labori, 405 astrorum decus et nemorum Latonia custos. 406 Siqua tuis umquam pro me pater Hyrtacus aris 407 dona tulit, siqua ipse meis venatibus auxi 408 suspendive tholo aut sacra ad fastigia fixi: 409 hunc sine me turbare globum et rege tela per auras. 410 Dixerat, et toto conixus corpore ferrum 411 conicit: hasta volans noctis diverberat umbras 412 et venit aversi in tergum Sulmonis ibique 413 frangitur ac fisso transit praecordia ligno. 414 Volvitur ille vomens calidum de pectore flumen 415 frigidus et longis singultibus ilia pulsat. 416 Diversi circumspiciunt. Hoc acrior idem 417 ecce aliud summa telum librabat ab aure. 418 Dum trepidant, it hasta Tago per tempus utrumque 419 stridens traiectoque haesit tepefacta cerebro. 420 Saevit atrox Volcens nec teli conspicit usquam	Teucria showed their tears. But most of all 408 such likeness of his own heart's filial love 409 on fair Iulus moved, and thus he spoke: 410 “Promise thyself what fits thy generous deeds. 411 Thy mother shall be mine, Creusa's name 412 alone not hers; nor is the womb unblest 413 that bore a child like thee. Whate'er success 414 may follow, I make oath immutable 415 by my own head, on which my father swore, 416 that all I promise thee of gift or praise 417 if home thou comest triumphing, shall be 418 the glory of thy mother and thy kin.” 419 Weeping he spoke, and from his shoulder drew 420 the golden sword, well-wrought and wonderful, 421 which once in Crete Lycaon's cunning made 422 and sheathed in ivory. On Nisus then 423 Mnestheus bestowed a shaggy mantle torn 424 from a slain lion; good Aletes gave 425 exchange of crested helms. In such array 426 they hastened forth; and all the princely throng, 427 young men and old, ran with them to the gates, 428 praying all gods to bless. Iulus then, 429 a fair youth, but of grave, heroic soul 430 beyond his years, gave them in solemn charge
9.421	421 auctorem nec quo se ardens inmittere possit. 422 Tu tamen interea calido mihi sanguine poenas 423 persolves amborum, inquit; simul ense recluso	431 full many a message for his sire, but these 432 the hazard of wild winds soon scattered far, 433 and flung them fruitless on the darkening storm. 434 Forth through the moat they climb, and steal away 435 through midnight

	424 ibat in Euryalum. Tum vero exterritus, amens 425 conclamat Nisus, nec se celare tenebris 426 amplius aut tantum potuit perferre dolorem. 427 Me me, adsum qui feci, in me convertite ferrum, 428 O Rutuli, mea fraus omnis; nihil iste nec ausus 429 nec potuit, caelum hoc et conscia sidera testor, 430 tantum infelicem nimium dilexit amicum. 431 Talia dicta dabat; sed viribus ensis adactus 432 transabiit costas et candida pectora rumpit. 433 Volvitur Euryalus leto, pulchrosque per artus 434 it cruor, inque umeros cervix conlapsa recumbit: 435 purpureus veluti cum flos succisus aratro 436 languescit moriens lassove papavera collo 437 demisere caput, pluvia cum forte gravantur. 438 At Nisus ruit in medios solumque per omnis 439 Volcentem petit in solo Volcente moratur. 440 Quem circum glomerati hostes hinc comminus atque hinc 441 proturbant. Instat non setius ac rotat ensem 442 fulmineum, donec Rutuli clamantis in ore 443 condidit adverso et moriens animam abstulit hosti. 444 Tum super exanimum sese proiecit amicum 445 confossus placidaque ibi demum morte quievit. 446 Fortunati ambo! Siquid mea carmina possunt, 447 nulla dies umquam memori vos eximet aevo, 448 dum domus Aeneae Capitoli immobile saxum 449 accolet imperiumque pater Romanus habebit. 450 Victores praeda Rutuli spoliisque potiti	shades, to where their foemen lie 436 encamped in arms; of whom, before these fall, 437 a host shall die. Along the turf were seen, 438 laid low in heavy slumber and much wine, 439 a prostrate troop; the horseless chariots 440 stood tilted on the shore, 'twixt rein and wheel 441 the drivers dozed, wine-cups and idle swords 442 strewn round them without heed. The first to speak 443 was Nisus. “Look, Euryalus,” he cried, 444 “Now boldly strike. The hour to do the deed 445 is here, the path this way. Keep wide-eyed watch 446 that no man smite behind us. I myself 447 will mow the mighty fieid, and lead thee on 448 in a wide swath of slaughter.” With this word 449 he shut his lips; and hurled him with his sword 450 on haughty Rhamnes, who lay propped at ease 451 on pillows huge, and from his heaving breast 452 poured slumber loud: of royal stem was he 453 and honored of King Turnus for his skill 454 in augury; yet could no augur's charm 455 that bloody stroke forefend. And Nisus slew 456 three slaves near by, that lay in reckless sleep 457 upon their spears; then him that bore the shield 458 of Remus, then the driver of his car 459 close to the horses caught; his sword cut through 460 their prostrate necks; then their great master's head 461 he lifted high, and left decapitate 462 the huge corpse spilling forth its crimson gore 463 o'er couch and ground. Like stroke on Lamus fell
9.451	451 Volcentem exanimum flentes in castra ferebant. 452 Nec minor in castris luctus Rhamnete reperto	464 and Lamyrus, with young Serranus, who 465 had gamed the midnight through and sleeping lay, 466 his fair young body to the wine-god given; 467

	453 exsangui et primis una tot caede peremptis, 454 Serranoque Numaque. Ingens concursus ad ipsa 455 corpora seminecisque viros tepidaque recentem 456 caede locum et plenos spumanti sanguine rivos. 457 Agnoscunt spolia inter se galeamque nitentem 458 Messapi et multo phaleras sudore receptas. 459 Et iam prima novo spargebat lumine terras 460 Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile: 461 iam sole infuso, iam rebus luce retectis 462 Turnus in arma viros, armis circumdatus ipse, 463 suscitat, aeratasque acies in proelia cogit 464 quisque suas variisque acuunt rumoribus iras. 465 Quin ipsa arrectis (visu miserabile) in hastis 466 praefigunt capita et multo clamore sequuntur 467 Euryali et Nisi. 468 Aeneadae duri murorum in parte sinistra 469 opposuere aciem, nam dextera cingitur amni, 470 ingentisque tenent fossas et turribus altis 471 stant maesti; simul ora virum praefixa movebant, 472 nota nimis miseris atroque fluentia tabo. 473 Interea pavidam volitans pennata per urbem 474 nuntia Fama ruit matrisque adlabitur auris 475 Euryali. At subitus miserae calor ossa reliquit, 476 excussi manibus radii revolutaque pensa. 477 Evolat infelix et femineo ululatu, 478 scissa comam, muros amens atque agmina cursu 479 prima petit, non illa virum, non illa pericli 480 telorumque memor; caelum dehinc questibus implet:	but happier now had that long-revelling night 468 been merry till the dawn! Thus round full folds 469 of sheep a famished lion fiercely prowls; 470 mad hunger moves him; he devours and rends 471 with bloody, roaring mouth, the feeble flock 472 that trembles and is dumb. Nor was the sword 473 of fair Euryalus less fatal found; 474 but fiercely raging on his path of death, 475 he pressed on through a base and nameless throng, 476 Rhoetus, Herbesus, Fadus, Abaris; 477 surprising all save Rhoetus, who awake 478 saw every stroke, and crouched in craven fear 479 behind a mighty wine-bowl; but not less 480 clean through his bare breast as he started forth 481 the youth thrust home his sword, then drew it back 482 death-dripping, while the bursting purple stream 483 of life outflowed, with mingling blood and wine. 484 Then, flushed with stealthy slaughter, he crept near 485 the followers of Messapus, where he saw 486 their camp-fire dying down, and tethered steeds 487 upon the meadow feeding. Nisus then 488 knew the hot lust of slaughter had swept on 489 too far, and cried, “Hold off! For, lo, 490 the monitory dawn is nigh. Revenge 491 has fed us to the full. We have achieved 492 clean passage through the foe.” Full many a prize 493 was left untaken: princely suits of mail
9.481	481 Hunc ego te, Euryale, aspicio? Tune illa senectae 482 sera meae requies, potuisti linquere solam,	494 enwrought with silver pure, huge drinking-bowls, 495 and broideries fair. Yet grasped Euryalus 496 the blazonry at Rhamnes' corselet hung, 497 and

	483 crudelis? Nec te, sub tanta pericula missum, 484 adfari extremum miserae data copia matri? 485 Heu, terra ignota canibus data praeda Latinis 486 alitibusque iaces, nec te, tua funera mater 487 produxi pressive oculos aut volnera lavi, 488 veste tegens, tibi quam noctes festina diesque 489 urgebam et tela curas solabar anilis. 490 Quo sequar, aut quae nunc artus avolsaque membra 491 et funus lacerum tellus habet? Hoc mihi de te, 492 nate, refers? Hoc sum terraque marique secuta? 493 Figite me, siqua est pietas, in me omnia tela 494 conicite, o Rutuli, me primam absumite ferro: 495 aut tu, magne pater divom, miserere tuoque 496 invisum hoc detrude caput sub Tartara telo, 497 quando aliter nequeo crudelem abrumpere vitam. 498 Hoc fletu concussi animi, maestusque per omnis 499 it gemitus: torpent infractae ad proelia vires. 500 Illam incendentem luctus Idaeus et Actor 501 Illionei monitu et multum lacrimantis Iuli 502 corripiunt interque manus sub tecta reponunt. 503 At tuba terribilem sonitum procul aere canoro 504 increpuit; sequitur clamor caelumque remugit. 505 Adcelerant acta pariter testudine Volsci 506 et fossas implere parant ac vellere vallum. 507 Quaerunt pars aditum et scalis ascendere muros, 508 qua rara est acies interlucetque corona 509 non tam spissa viris. Telorum effundere contra 510 omne genus Teucri ac duris detrudere contis,	belt adorned with gold: which were a gift 498 to Remulus of Tibur from the store 499 of opulent Caedicus, who sued from far 500 to be a friend; and these in death he gave 501 to his son's son, who slain in battle fell, 502 and proud Rutulians seized them with the spoil. 503 Euryalus about his shoulder strong 504 this booty slung—unprofitable gain! — 505 and fitted on a gorgeous, crested helm 506 which once Messapus wore. So from the camp, 507 escaping danger, the two champions ran. 508 But horsemen from the Latin city sent 509 to join the serried legions of the plain 510 had come at Turnus' call, three hundred strong 511 all bearing shields, and under the command 512 of Volscens. Nigh the camp and walls they drew; 513 and soon they spied upon the leftward path 514 th' heroic pair, where in dim shades of night 515 the helmet of Euryalus betrayed 516 the heedless boy, and with a glancing beam 517 flashed on the foe. Nor was it seen in vain. 518 Loud from the line the voice of Volscens called: 519 “Stand, gentlemen! What business brings you here? 520 Whose your allegiance? Whither speed so fast?” 521 No answer gave they save to fly in haste 522 to cover of the forest and deep gloom 523 of the defensive night. The horsemen then 524 blocked every crossway known, and, scattering wide, 525 kept sentry at the entrance. The great wood 526 was all of tangled brush and blinding shade 527 of flex-boughs. Impenetrable thorns 528 had thickly overgrown, and seldom showed 529 a pathway through the maze. Euryalus, 530 by the black branches and his ponderous spoil 531 impeded, groped along in fearful doubt, 532 deceived and quite astray. Nisus his friend 533 had quit him, and incautiously had forced 534 a sally through the close-encircling foe, 535 into that region which should after bear 536 the name of Alba—a rude shelter then 537 for King Latinus' herds. He stayed him there
9.511	511 adsueti longo muros defendere bello.	538 and looked, but vainly, for the comrade gone. 539 “Euryalus, ill-fated

	512 Saxa quoque infesto volvebant pondere, siqua 513 possent tectam aciem perrumpere: cum tamen omnis 514 ferre iuvat subter densa testudine casus; 515 nec iam sufficiunt. Nam qua globus imminet ingens, 516 immanem Teucri molem volvuntque ruuntque, 517 quae stravit Rutulos late armorumque resolvit 518 tegmina. Nec curant caeco contendere Marte 519 amplius audaces Rutuli, sed pellere vallo 520 missilibus certant. 521 Parte alia horrendus visu quassabat Etruscam 522 pinum et fumiferos infert Mezentius ignis; 523 at Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles, 524 rescindit vallum et scalas in moenia poscit. 525 Vos, o Calliope, precor, adspirate canenti, 526 quas ibi tum ferro strages, quae funera Turnus 527 ediderit, quem quisque virum demiserit Orco; 528 et mecum ingentis oras evolvite belli, 529 530 Turris erat vasto suspectu et pontibus altis, 531 opportuna loco, summis quam viribus omnes 532 expugnare Itali summaque evertere opum vi 533 certabant, Troes contra defendere saxis 534 perque cavas densi tela intorquere fenestras. 535 Princeps ardentem coniecit lampada Turnus 536 et flammam adfixit lateri, quae plurima vento 537 corripuit tabulas et postibus haesit adesis. 538 Turbati trepidare intus frustraque malorum 539 velle fugam. Dum se glomerant retroque residunt 540 in partem, quae peste caret, tum pondere turris	boy!” he cried, 540 “Where have I lost thee in the pathless wild? 541 How find thee? How retrace the blinding maze 542 of yonder treacherous wood?” Yet ere he said, 543 on his own path he turns him back, and scans 544 his own light footprints through the tangled thorn, 545 so dark and still. But suddenly he hears 546 the tread of horses, with confusing din 547 and tumult of pursuit. Nor was it long 548 he tarried ere upon his anguished ear 549 smote a great cry: and, lo! Euryalus, 550 trapped by the dark night, the deceptive ground, 551 faced the whole onset, and fell back o'erwhelmed 552 by a loud mob of foes, while his sole sword 553 tried many a thrust in vain. O, what defence 554 may Nisus bring? With what audacious arms 555 his chosen comrade save? Shall he make bare 556 his dying breast to all their swords, and run 557 to honorable death that bloody way? 558 he swung his spear with lifted arm, then looked 559 to the still moon, in heaven, and thus implored: 560 “O goddess, aid me in my evil case. 561 O glory of the stars, Latona's child! 562 O guardian of groves, if in my name 563 my father Hyrtacus made offerings 564 on burning altars, if my own right hand, 565 successful in the chase, ere hung its gift 566 beneath thy dome or on thy sacred wall, 567 grant me yon troop to scatter. Guide my spear
9.541	541 procubuit subito et caelum tonat omne fragore.	568 along its path in air.” He spoke, and hurled 569 with all his gathered

	542 Semineces ad terram, immani mole secuta, 543 confixique suis telis et pectora duro 544 transfossi ligno veniunt. Vix unus Helenor 545 et Lycus elapsi. Quorum primaevus Helenor, 546 Maeonio regi quem serva Licymnia furtim 547 sustulerat vetitisque ad Troiam miserat armis, 548 ense levis nudo parmaque inglorius alba; 549 isque ubi se Turni media inter milia vidit, 550 hinc acies atque hinc acies adstare Latinas: 551 ut fera, quae densa venantum saepta corona 552 contra tela furit seseque haud nescia morti 553 inicit et saltu supra venabula fertur, 554 haud aliter iuvenis medios moriturus in hostis 555 inruit et, qua tela videt densissima, tendit. 556 At pedibus longe melior Lycus inter et hostis 557 inter et arma fuga muros tenet altaque certat 558 prendere tecta manu sociumque attingere dextras. 559 Quem Turnus, pariter cursu teloque secutus, 560 increpat his victor: Nostrasne evadere, demens, 561 sperasti te posse manus? Simul adripit ipsum 562 pendentem et magna muri cum parte revellit. 563 Qualis ubi aut leporem aut candenti corpore cycnum 564 sustulit alta petens pedibus Iovis armiger uncis 565 quaesitum aut matri multis balatibus agnum 566 Martius a stabulis rapuit lupus. Undique clamor 567 tollitur: invadunt et fossas agere complent; 568 ardentis taedas alii ad fastigia iactant. 569 Ilioneus saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis 570 Lucetium portae subeuntem ignisque ferentem,	strength the shaft of steel. 570 the swift spear clove the shades of night, and struck 571 full in the back of Sulmo, where it split, 572 but tore through to his very heart. The breast 573 poured forth life's glowing stream, and he, o'erthrown 574 lay cold in death, while his huge, heaving sides 575 gave lingering throes. The men about him stared 576 this way and that. But Nisus, fiercer still, 577 poised level with his ear a second shaft, 578 and, while the foeman paused, the whizzing spear 579 straight through the brows of Tagus drove, and clung 580 deep in the cloven brain. In frenzy rose 581 Volscens, but nowhere could espy what hand 582 the shaft had hurled, nor whither his wild rage 583 could make reply. “But thou,” he cried, “shalt feed 584 with thy hot blood my honor and revenge 585 for both the slain.” Then with a sword unsheathed 586 upon Euryalus he fell. Loud shrieked 587 Nisus, of reason reft, who could not bear 588 such horror, nor in sheltering gloom of night 589 longer abide: “'T is I, 't is I!” he said. 590 look on the man who slew them! Draw on me 591 your swords, Rutulians! The whole stratagem 592 was mine, mine only, and the lad ye slay 593 dared not, and could not. O, by Heaven above 594 and by the all-beholding stars I swear, 595 he did but love his hapless friend too well.” 596 But while he spoke, the furious-thrusting sword 597 had pierced the tender body, and run through

9.571	571 Emathiona Liger, Corynaeum sternit Asilas, 572 hic iaculo bonus, hic longe fallente sagitta, 573 Ortygium Caeneus, victorem Caenea Turnus, 574 Turnus Ityn Cloniumque, Dioxippum Promolumque 575 et Sagarim et summis stantem pro turribus Idan, 576 Privernum Capys. Hunc primo levis hasta Themillae 577 strinxerat: ille manum proiecto tegmine demens 578 ad volnus tulit; ergo alis adlapsa sagitta 579 et laevo infixa est lateri manus abditaque intus 580 spiramenta animae letali volnere rupit. 581 Stabat in egregiis Arcentis filius armis, 582 pictus acu chlamydem et ferrugine clarus Hibera, 583 insignis facie, genitor quem miserat Arcens, 584 eductum Matris luco Symaethia circum 585 flumina, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Palici: 586 stridentem fundam positis Mezentius hastis 587 ipse ter adducta circum caput egit habena 588 et media adversi liquefacto tempora plumbo 589 diffidit ac multa porrectum extendit harena. 590 Tum primum bello celerem intendisse sagittam 591 dicitur ante feras solitus terrere fugaces 592 Ascanius fortemque manu fudisse Numanum, 593 cui Remulo cognomen erat, Turnique minorem 594 germanam nuper thalamo sociatus habebat. 595 Is primam ante aciem digna atque indigna relatu 596 vociferans tumidusque novo praecordia regno 597 ibat et ingentem sese clamore ferebat: 598 Non pudet obsidione iterum valloque teneri, 599 bis capti Phryges, et morti praetendere muros?	598 the bosom white as snow. Euryalus 599 sank prone in death; upon his goodly limbs 600 the life-blood ran unstopped, and low inclined 601 the drooping head; as when some purpled flower, 602 cut by the ploughshare, dies, or poppies proud 603 with stem forlorn their ruined beauty bow 604 before the pelting storm. Then Nisus flew 605 straight at his foes; but in their throng would find 606 Volscens alone, for none but Volscens stayed: 607 they gathered thickly round and grappled him 608 in shock of steel with steel. But on he plunged, 609 swinging in ceaseless circles round his head 610 his lightning-sword, and thrust it through the face 611 of shrieking Volscens, with his own last breath 612 striking his foeman down; then cast himself 613 upon his fallen comrade's breast; and there, 614 stabbed through, found tranquil death and sure repose.

	600 En qui nostra sibi bello conubia poscunt!
9.601	601 Quis deus Italiam, quae vos dementia adegit 602 Non hic Atridae nec fandi fictor Ulixes: 603 durum a stirpe genus natos ad flumina primum 604 deferimus saevoque gelu duramus et undis, 605 venatu invigilant pueri silvasque fatigant, 606 flectere ludus equos et spicula tendere cornu. 607 At patiens operum parvoque adsueta iuventus 608 aut rastris terram domat aut quatit oppida bello. 609 Omne aevum ferro teritur, versaque iuvencum 610 terga fatigamus hasta; nec tarda senectus 611 debilitat vires animi mutatque vigorem: 612 canitiem galea premimus, semperque recentis 613 comportare iuvat praedas et vivere rapto. 614 Vobis picta croco et fulgenti murice vestis, 615 desidiae cordi, iuvat indulgere choreis, 616 et tunicae manicas et habent redimicula mitrae. 617 O vere Phrygiae, neque enim Phryges, ite per alta 618 Dindyma ubi adsuetis biforem dat tibia cantum! 619 Tympana vos buxusque vocat Berecyntia Matris 620 Idaeae sinite arma viris et cedite ferro. 621 Talia iactantem dictis ac dira canentem 622 non tulit Ascanius nervoque obversus equino 623 contendit telum diversaque bracchia ducens 624 constitit, ante Iovem supplex per vota precatus: 625 Iuppiter omnipotens, audacibus adnue coeptis. 626 Ipse tibi ad tua templa feram sollemnia dona 627 et statuam ante aras aurata fronte iuvencum 628 candentem pariterque caput cum matre ferentem,	615 Heroic pair and blest! If aught I sing 616 have lasting music, no remotest age 617 shall blot your names from honor's storied scroll: 618 not while the altars of Aeneas' line 619 shall crown the Capitol's unshaken hill, 620 nor while the Roman Father's hand sustains 621 its empire o'er the world. 622 The Rutules seized the spoils of victory, 623 and slowly to their camp, with wail and cry, 624 bore Volscens' corse; and in the eamp they made 625 like wailing over Rhamnes lifeless found, 626 o'er Numa and Serranus, and a throng 627 of princes dead. The gazing people pressed 628 around the slain, the dying, where the earth 629 ran red with slaughter and full many a stream 630 of trickling gore; nor did they fail to know 631 Messapus' glittering helm, his baldric fair, 632 recaptured now with lavish sweat and pain.

	629 iam cornu petat et pedibus qui spargat harenam. 630 Audiit et caeli Genitor de parte serena
9.631	631 intonuit laevum, sonat una fatifer arcus: 632 effugit horrendum stridens adducta sagitta 633 perque caput Remuli venit et cava tempora ferro 634 traicit. I, verbis virtutem inlude superbis! 635 His capti Phryges haec Rutulis responsa remittunt. 636 Hoc tantum Ascanius. Teucri clamore sequuntur 637 laetitiaque fremunt animosque ad sidera tollunt. 638 Aetheria tum forte plaga crinitus Apollo 639 desuper Ausonias acies urbemque videbat, 640 nube sedens, atque his victorem adfatur Iulum: 641 Macte nova virtute, puer: sic itur ad astra, 642 dis genite et geniture deos. Iure omnia bella 643 gente sub Assaraci fato ventura resident, 644 nec te Troia capit. Simul haec effatus ab alto 645 aethere se misit, spirantis dimovet auras 646 Ascaniumque petit. Forma tum vertitur oris 647 antiquum in Buten; hic Dardanio Anchisae 648 armiger ante fuit fidusque ad limina custos, 649 tum comitem Ascanio pater addidit. Ibat Apollo 650 omnia longaevo similis, vocemque coloremque 651 et crinis albos et saeva sonoribus arma, 652 atque his ardentem dictis adfatur Iulum: 653 Sit satis, Aenide, telis impune Numanum 654 oppetiisse tuis; primam hanc tibi magnus, Apollo 655 concedit laudem et paribus non invidet armis: 656 cetera parce, puer, bello. Sic orsus Apollo 657 mortalis medio aspectus sermone reliquit	633 Now, from Tithonus' saffron couch set free, 634 Aurora over many a land outpoured 635 the rising morn; the sun's advancing beam 636 unveiled the world; and Turnus to his host 637 gave signal to stand forth, while he arrayed 638 himself in glorious arms. Then every chief 639 awoke his mail-clad company, and stirred 640 their slumbering wrath with tidings from the foe. 641 Tumultuously shouting, they impaled 642 on lifted spears—O pitiable sight! — 643 the heads of Nisus and Euryalus. 644 Th' undaunted Trojans stood in battle-line 645 along the wall to leftward (for the right 646 the river-front defended) keeping guard 647 on the broad moat; upon the ramparts high 648 sad-eyed they stood, and shuddered as they saw 649 the hero-faces thrust aloft; too well 650 their loyal grief the blood-stained features knew. 651 On restless pinions to the trembling town 652 had voiceful Rumor hied, and to the ears 653 of that lone mother of Euryalus 654 relentless flown. Through all her feeble frame 655 the chilling sorrow sped. From both her hands 656 dropped web and shuttle; she flew shrieking forth, 657 ill-fated mother! and with tresses torn, 658 to the wide ramparts and the battle-line 659 ran frantic, heeding naught of men-at-arms, 660 nor peril nor the rain of falling spears; 661 and thus with loud and lamentable cry 662 filled all the air: “Is it in yonder guise, 663 Euryalus, thou comest? Art thou he, 664 last comfort of my life? O cruel one! 665 Couldst thou desert me? When they thrust thee forth 666 to death and danger, did they dare refuse 667 a wretched mother's last embrace? But now — 668 O woe is me!—upon this alien shore 669 thou liest for a feast to Latin dogs 670 and carrion birds. Nor did thy mother lead 671 the mourners to thy grave, nor shut those eyes, 672 nor wash the dreadful wounds, nor cover thee 673 with the fair shroud, which many a night and day 674 I swiftly wove, and at my web and loom 675 forgot my years and sorrows. Whither now 676 to seek and follow

	658 et procul in tenuem ex oculis evanuit auram. 659 Agnovere deum proceres divinaque tela 660 Dardanidae pharetramque fuga sensere sonantem.	thee? What spot of earth 677 holds the torn body and the mangled limbs? 678 Is all the gift thou bringest home, dear child, 679 this? O, was this the prize for which I came 680 o'er land and sea? O, stab me very deep, 681 if ye have any pity; hurl on me 682 your every spear, Rutulians; make of me 683 your swords' first work. Or, Father of the gods! 684 Show mercy, thou! and with thy lightning touch 685 this head accurst, and let it fall by thee 686 down to the dark. For else what power is mine 687 my tortured life to end?” Her agony 688 smote on their listening souls; a wail of woe 689 along the concourse ran. Stern men-at-arms 690 felt valor for a moment sleep, and all 691 their rage of battle fail. But while she stirred 692 the passion of her grief, Ilioneus 693 and young Iulus, weeping filial tears, 694 bade Actor and Idaeus, lifting her 695 in both their reverent arms, to bear her home.
9.661	661 Ergo avidum pugnae dictis ac numine Phoebi 662 Ascanium prohibent, ipsi in certamina rursus 663 succedunt animasque in aperta pericula mittunt. 664 It clamor totis per propugnacula muris, 665 intendunt acris arcus amentaque torquent. 666 Sternitur omne solum telis, tum scuta cavaeque 667 dant sonitum flictu galeae, pugna aspera surgit: 668 quantus ab occasu veniens pluvialibus Haedis 669 verberat imber humum, quam multa grandine nimbi 670 in vada praecipitant, cum Iuppiter horridus austris 671 torquet aquosam hiemem et caelo cava nubila rumpit. 672 Pandarus et Bitias, Idaeo Alcanore creti, 673 quos Iovis eduxit luco silvestris Iaera 674 abietibus iuvenes patriis et montibus aequos, 675 portam, quae ducis imperio commissa, recludunt, 676 freti animis, ultroque invitant moenibus hostem. 677 Ipsi intus dextra ac laeva pro turribus adstant, 678 armati ferro et cristis capita alta corusci: 679 quales aëriae liquentia flumina circum, 680 sive Padi ripis Athesim seu propter amoenum, 681 consurgunt geminae quercus intonsaque caelo 682 attollunt capita et sublimi vertice nutant. 683 inrumpunt aditus Rutuli ut videre patentis 684 continuo Quercens et pulcher Aquiculus armis 685 et praeceps animi Tmarus et Mavortius Haemon 686 agminibus totis: at versi terga dedere 687 aut ipso portae posuere in limine vitam. 688 Tum magis increscunt animis discordibus irae; 689 et iam collecti Troes glomerantur eodem 690 et conferre manum et procurrere longius audent.

9.691	691 Ductori Turno diversa in parte furenti 692 turbantique viros perfertur nuntius, hostem 693 fervere caede nova et portas praebere patentis. 694 Deserit inceptum atque immani concitus ira 695 Dardaniam ruit ad portam fratresque superbos. 696 Et primum Antiphaten, is enim se primus agebat, 697 Thebana de matre nothum Sarpedonis alti, 698 coniecto sternit iaculo; volat Itala cornus 699 aëra per tenerum stomachoque infixa sub altum 700 pectus abit: reddit specus atri volneris undam 701 spumantem, et fixo ferrum in pulmone tepescit. 702 Tum Meropem atque Erymanta manu, tum sternit Aphidnum, 703 tum Bitian ardentem oculis animisque frementem 704 non iaculo, neque enim iaculo vitam ille dedisset, 705 sed magnum stridens contorta phalarica venit, 706 fulminis acta modo, quam nec duo taurea terga	951 To Turnus, who upon a distant field 952 was storming with huge havoc, came the news 953 that now his foe, before a gate thrown wide, 954 was red with slaughter. His own fight he stays, 955 and speeds him, by enormous rage thrust on, 956 to those proud brethren at the Dardan wall. 957 There first Antiphates, who made his war 958 far in the van (a Theban captive's child 959 to great Sarpedon out of wedlock born), 960 he felled to earth with whirling javelin: 961 th' Italic shaft of cornel lightly flew 962 along the yielding air, and through his throat 963 pierced deep into the breast; a gaping wound 964 gushed blood; the hot shaft to his bosom clung. 965 Then Erymas and Merops his strong hand 966 laid low: Aphidnus next, then came the turn 967 of Bitias, fiery-hearted, furious-eyed: 968 but not by javelin,—such cannot fall 969 by flying javelin,—the ponderous beam 970 of a phalaric spear, with mighty roar, 971 like thunderbolt upon him fell; such shock 972 neither the bull's-hides of his double shield 973 nor twofold corselet's golden scales could stay 974 but all his towering frame in ruin fell. 975 Earth groaned, and o'er him rang his ample shield. 976 so crashes down from Baiae's storied

	707 nec duplici squama lorica fidelis et auro 708 sustinuit: conlapsa ruunt immania membra. 709 Dat tellus gemitum, et clipeum super intonat ingens. 710 Talis in Euboico Baiarum litore quondam 711 saxea pila cadit, magnis quam molibus ante 712 constructam ponto iaciunt; sic illa ruinam 713 prona trahit penitusque vadis inlisa recumbit: 714 miscent se maria, et nigrae attolluntur harenae; 715 tum sonitu Prochyta alta tremit durumque cubile 716 Inarime Iovis imperiis imposta Typhoeo. 717 Hic Mars armipotens animum viresque Latinis 718 addidit et stimulos acris sub pectore vertit 719 immisitque Fugam Teucris atrumque Timorem. 720 Undique conveniunt, quoniam data copia pugnae	shore 977 a rock-built mole, whose mighty masonry, 978 piled up with care, men cast into the sea; 979 it trails its wreckage far, and fathoms down 980 lies broken in the shallows, while the waves 981 whirl every way, and showers of black sand 982 are scattered on the air: with thunder-sound 983 steep Prochyta is shaken, and that bed 984 of cruel stone, Inarime, which lies 985 heaped o'er Typhoeus by revenge of Jove.
9.721	721 bellatorque animo deus incidit. 722 Pandarus ut fuso germanum corpore cernit 723 et quo sit fortuna loco, qui casus agat res, 724 portam vi magna converso cardine torquet, 725 obnixus latis umeris, multosque suorum 726 moenibus exclusos duro in certamine linquit; 727 ast alios secum includit recipitque ruentis, 728 demens, qui Rutulum in medio non agmine regem 729 viderit inrumpentem ultroque incluserit urbi, 730 immanem veluti pecora inter inertia tigrim. 731 Continuo nova lux oculis effulsit, et arma 732 horrendum sonuere; tremunt in vertice cristae 733 sanguineae, clipeoque micantia fulmina mittit: 734 agnoscunt faciem invisam atque immania membra 735 turbati subito Aeneadae. Tum Pandarus ingens 736 emicat et mortis fraternae fervidus	696 But now the brazen trumpet's fearsome song 697 blares loud, and startled shouts of soldiery 698 spread through the roaring sky. The Volscian band 699 press to the siege, and, locking shield with shield, 700 fill the great trenches, tear the palisades, 701 or seek approach by ladders up the walls, 702 where'er the line of the defenders thins, and light 703 through their black circle shines. The Trojans pour 704 promiscuous missiles down, and push out hard 705 with heavy poles —so well have they been schooled 706 to fight against long sieges. They fling down 707 a crushing weight of rocks, in hope to break 708 th' assailing line, where roofed in serried shields 709 the foe each charge repels. But not for long 710 the siegers stand; along their dense array 711 the crafty Teucrians down the rampart roll 712 a boulder like a hill-top, laying low 713 the Rutule troop and crashing through their shields. 714 Nor may the bold Rutulian longer hope 715 to keep in cover, but essays to storm 716 only with far-flung shafts the bastion strong. 717 Here grim Mezentius, terrible to see, 718 waved an Etrurian pine, and made his

	ira 737 effatur: Non haec dotalis regia Amatae, 738 nec muris cohibet patriis media Ardea Turnum. 739 Castra inimica vides; nulla hinc exire potestas. 740 Olli subridens sedato pectore Turnus: 741 Incipe, siqua animo virtus, et consere dextram: 742 hic etiam inventum Priamo narrabis Achillem. 743 Dixerat. Ille rudem nodis et cortice crudo 744 intorquet summis adnixus viribus hastam: 745 excepere aurae volnus; Saturnia Iuno 746 detorsit veniens, portaeque infigitur hasta. 747 At non hoc telum, mea quod vi dextera versat, 748 effugies; neque enim is teli nec volneris auctor. 749 Sic ait et sublatum alte consurgit in ensem 750 et mediam ferro gemina inter tempora frontem	war 719 with smoking firebrands; there, in equal rage, 720 Messapus, the steed-tamer, Neptune's son, 721 ripped down the palisade, and at the breach 722 strung a steep path of ladders up the wall. 723 Aid, O Calliope, the martial song! 724 Tell me what carnage and how many deaths 725 the sword of Turnus wrought: what peer in arms 726 each hero to the world of ghosts sent down. 727 Unroll the war's great book before these eyes. 728 A tower was there, well-placed and looming large, 729 with many a lofty bridge, which desperately 730 th' Italians strove to storm, and strangely plied 731 besieging enginery to cast it down: 732 the Trojans hurled back stones, or, standing close, 733 flung through the loopholes a swift shower of spears. 734 But Turnus launched a firebrand, and pierced 735 the wooden wall with flame, which in the wind 736 leaped larger, and devoured from floor to floor, 737 burning each beam away. The trembling guards 738 sought flight in vain; and while they crowded close 739 into the side unkindled yet, the tower 740 bowed its whole weight and fell, with sudden crash 741 that thundered through the sky. Along the ground 742 half dead the warriors fell (the crushing mass 743 piled over them) by their own pointed spears 744 pierced to the heart, or wounded mortally 745 by cruel splinters of the wreck. Two men, 746 Helenor one, and Lyeus at his side, 747 alone get free. Helenor of the twain 748 was a mere youth; the slave Lycymnia 749 bore him in secret to the Lydian King, 750 and, arming him by stealth, had sent away 751 to serve the Trojan cause. One naked sword 752 for arms had he, and on his virgin shield 753 no blazon of renown; but when he saw 754 the hosts of Turnus front him, and the lines 755 this way and that of Latins closing round, — 756 as a fierce, forest-creature, brought to bay 757 in circling pack of huntsmen, shows its teeth
9.751	751 dividit inpubesque immani volnere malas. 752 Fit sonus, ingenti concussa est pondere tellus: 753 conlapsos artus atque arma cruenta cerebro 754 sternit humi moriens, atque illi	758 against the naked spears, and scorning death 759 leaps upward on the javelins,—even so, 760 not loth to die, the youthful soldier flew 761 straight at the centre of his foes, and where 762 the shining swords looked thickest, there he sprung. 763 But

	partibus aequis 755 huc caput atque illuc umero ex utroque pependit. 756 Diffugiunt versi trepida formidine Troes: 757 et si continuo victorem ea cura subisset, 758 rumpere claustra manu sociosque immittere portis, 759 ultimus ille dies bello gentique fuisset; 760 sed furor ardentem caedisque insana cupido 761 egit in adversos. 762 Principio Phalerim et succiso poplite Gygen 763 excipit; hinc raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas 764 in tergum, Iuno vires animumque ministrat; 765 addit Halym comitem et confixa Phegea parma, 766 ignaros deinde in muris Martemque cientis 767 Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque. 768 Lyncea tendentem contra sociosque vocantem 769 vibranti gladio conixus ab aggere dexter 770 occupat; huic uno desectum comminus ictu 771 cum galea longe iacuit caput. Inde ferarum 772 vastatorem Amycum, quo non felicior alter 773 ungere tela manu ferrumque armare veneno, 774 et Clytium Aeoliden et amicum Crethea Musis, 775 Crethea Musarum comitem, cui carmina semper 776 et citharae cordi numerosque intendere nervis. 777 778 Tandem ductores audita caede suorum 779 conveniunt Teucri, Mnestheus acerque Serestus, 780 palantisque vident socios hostemque receptum.	Lyeus, swifter-footed, forced his way 764 past the opposing spears and made escape 765 far as the ciity-wall, where he would fain 766 clutch at the coping and climb up to clasp 767 some friend above: but Turnus, spear in hand, 768 had hotly followed, and exulting loud 769 thus taunted him, “Hadst thou the hope, rash fool, 770 beyond this grasp to fly?” So, as he clung, 771 he tore him down; and with him broke and fell 772 a huge piece of the wall: not otherwise 773 a frail hare, or a swan of snow-white wing, 774 is clutched in eagle-talons, when the bird 775 of Jove soars skyward with his prey; or tender lamb 776 from bleating mother and the broken fold 777 is stolen by the wolf of Mars. Wild shouts 778 on every side resound. In closer siege 779 the foe press on, and heap the trenches full, 780 or hurl hot-flaming torches at the towers. 781 Ilioneus with mountain-mass of stone 782 struck down Lucetius, as he crept with fire 783 too near the city-gate. Emathion fell 784 by Liger's hand, and Corynteus' death 785 Asilas dealt: one threw the javelin well; 786 th' insidious arrow was Asilas' skill. 787 Ortygius was slain by Caeneus, then
9.781	781 Et Mnestheus: Quo deinde fugam, quo tenditis? inquit. 782 Quos alios muros, quae iam ultra moenia habetis? 783 Unus homo et vestris, o cives, undique saeptus 784 aggeribus tantas strages inpune	788 victorious Geneus fell by Turnus' ire. 789 Then smote he Dioxippus, and laid low 790 Itys and Promolus and Sagaris 791 and Clonius, and from the lofty tower 792 shot Idas down. The shaft of Capys pierced 793 Privernus, whom Themilla's javelin 794 but now per urbem 785 ediderit, iuvenum primos tot miserit Orco? 786 Non infelicis patriae veterumque deorum 787 et magni Aeneae, segnes, miseretque pudetque? 788 Talibus accensi firmantur et agmine denso 789 consistunt. Turnus paulatim excedere pugna 790 et fluvium petere ac partem, quae cingitur unda; 791 acrius hoc Teucri clamore incumbere magno 792 et glomerare manum. Ceu saevum turba leonem 793 cum telis premit infensis, at territus ille, 794 asper, acerba tuens, retro redit, et neque terga 795 ira dare aut virtus patitur, nec tendere contra 796 ille quidem hoc cupiens potis est per tela virosque: 797 haud aliter retro dubius vestigia Turnus 798 improperata refert, et mens exaestuat ira. 799 Quin etiam bis tum medios invaserat hostis, 800 bis confusa fuga per muros agmina vertit; 801 sed manus e castris propere coit omnis in unum, 802 nec contra vires audet Saturnia Iuno 803 sufficere, aëriam caelo nam Iuppiter Irim 804 demisit germanae haud mollia iussa ferentem, 805 ni Turnus cedat Teucrorum moenibus altis. 806 Ergo nec clipeo iuvenis subsistere tantum 807 nec dextra valet: iniectis sic undique telis 808 obruitur. Strepit adsiduo cava tempora circum 809 tinnitu galea, et saxis solida aera fatiscunt, 810 discussaeque iubae capiti, nec sufficit umbo	had lightly grazed, and he, too bold, 795 casting his shield far from him, had outspread 796 his left hand on the wound: then sudden flew 797 the feathered arrow, and the hand lay pinned 798 against his left side, while the fatal barb 799 was buried in his breathing life. The son 800 of Arcens now stood forth in glittering arms. 801 His broidered cloak was red Iberian stain, 802 and beautiful was he. Arcens his sire 803 had sent him to the war; but he was bred 804 in a Sicilian forest by a stream 805 to his nymph-mother dear, where rose the shrine 806 of merciful Palicus, blest and fair. 807 But, lo! Mezentius his spear laid by, 808 and whirled three times about his head the thong 809 of his loud sling: the leaden bullet clove 810 the youth's mid-forehead, and his towering form 811 fell prostrate its full length along the ground.

9.811	811 ictibus: ingeminant hastis et Troes et ipse 812 fulmineus Mnestheus. Tum toto corpore sudor 813 liquitur et piceum, nec respirare	812 'T was then Ascanius first shot forth in war 813 the arrow swift from which all creatures wild 814 were wont to fly in fear: and he struck down 815 with artful aim Numanus, sturdy foe, potestas, 814 flumen agit; fessos quatit aeger anhelitus artus. 815 Tum demum praeceps saltu sese omnibus armis 816 in fluvium dedit: ille suo cum gurgite flavo 817 accepit venientem ac mollibus extulit undis 818 et laetum sociis abluta caede remisit.	816 called Remulus, who lately was espoused 817 to Turnus' younger sister. He had stalked 818 before the van, and made vociferous noise 819 of truths and falsehoods foul and base, his heart 820 puffed up with new-found greatness. Up and down 821 he strode, and swelled his folly with loud words: 822 “No shame have ye this second time to stay 823 cooped close within a rampart's craven siege, 824 O Phrygians twice-vanquished? Is a wall 825 your sole defence from death? Are such the men 826 who ask our maids in marriage? Say what god, 827 what doting madness, rather, drove ye here 828 to Italy? This way ye will not find 829 the sons of Atreus nor the trickster tongue 830 of voluble Ulysses. Sturdy stock 831 are we; our softest new-born babes we dip 832 in chilling rivers, till they bear right well 833 the current's bitter cold. Our slender lads 834 hunt night and day and rove the woods at large, 835 or for their merriment break stubborn steeds, 836 or bend the horn-tipped bow. Our manly prime 837 in willing labor lives, and is inured 838 to poverty and scantness; we subdue 839 our lands with rake and mattock, or in war 840 bid strong-walled cities tremble. Our whole life 841 is spent in use of iron; and we goad

10.1	1 Panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi, 2 conciliumque vocat divom pater atque hominum rex 3 sideream in sedem, terras unde arduus omnis 4 castraque Dardanidum adspectat populosque Latinos. 5 Considunt tectis bipatentibus, incipit ipse: 6 Caelicolae magni, quianam sententia vobis 7 versa retro tantumque animis certatis iniquis? 8 Abnueram bello Italiam concurrere Teucris. 9 Quae contra vetitum discordia? Quis metus aut hos 10 aut hos arma sequi ferrumque lacessere suasit? 11 Adveniet iustum pugnae, ne arcessite, tempus, 12 cum fera Karthago Romanis arcibus olim 13 exitium magnum atque Alpes	1 Meanwhile Olympus, seat of sovereign sway, 2 threw wide its portals, and in conclave fair 3 the Sire of gods and King of all mankind 4 summoned th' immortals to his starry court, 5 whence, high-enthroned, the spreading earth he views— 6 and Teucria's camp and Latium's fierce array. 7 Beneath the double-gated dome the gods 8 were sitting; Jove himself the silence broke: 9 “O people of Olympus, wherefore change 10 your purpose and decree, with partial minds 11 in mighty strife contending? I refused 12 such clash of war 'twixt Italy and Troy. 13 Whence this forbidden feud? What fears 14 seduced to battles and injurious arms 15 either this folk or that? Th' appointed hour 16 for war shall be hereafter—speed it not!— 17 When cruel Carthage to the towers of Rome 18 shall bring vast ruin, streaming fiercely down 19 the opened Alp. Then hate with hate shall vie, 20 and havoc have no bound. Till then, immittet apertas: 14 tum certare odiis, tum res rapuisse licebit. 15 Nunc sinite et placitum laeti componite foedus. 16 Iuppiter haec paucis; at non Venus aurea contra 17 pauca refert: 18 O pater, O hominum rerumque aeterna potestas! 19 Namque aliud quid sit, quod iam implorare queamus? 20 Cernis ut insultent Rutulli Turnusque 21 secundo 22 Marte ruat? Non clausa tegunt iam moenia Teucros: 23 quin intra portas atque ipsis proelia miscent 24 aggeribus moerorum et inundant sanguine fossas. 25 Aeneas ignarus abest. Numquamne levari 26 obsidione sines? Muris iterum imminet hostis 27 nascentis Troiae 28 atque iterum in Teucros Aetolis surgit ab Arpis 29 Tydides. Equidem credo, mea volnera restant 30 et tua progenies mortalia demoror arma.	give o'er, 21 and smile upon the concord I decree!”

10.31	31 Si sine pace tua atque invito numine Troes 32 Italiam petiere, luant peccata neque illos 33 iuveris auxilio; sin tot responsa secuti, 34 quae superi manesque dabant: cur nunc tua quisquam 35 vertere iussa potest aut cur nova condere fata? 36 Quid repetem exustas Erycino in litore classes, 37 quid tempestatum regem ventosque furentis 38 Aeolia excitos aut actam nubibus Irim? 39 Nunc etiam manis, haec intemptata manebat 40 sors rerum, movet et superis immissa repente 41 Allecto, medias Italum bacchata per urbes. 42 Nil super imperio moveor: speravimus ista, 43 dum fortuna fuit; vincant quos vincere mavis.	22 Thus briefly, Jove. But golden Venus made 23 less brief reply. “O Father, who dost hold 24 o'er Man and all things an immortal sway! 25 Of what high throne may gods the aid implore 26 save thine? Behold of yonder Rutuli 27 th' insulting scorn! Among them Turnus moves 28 in chariot proud, and boasts triumphant war 29 in mighty words. Nor do their walls defend 30 my Teucrians now. But in their very gates, 31 and on their mounded ramparts, in close fight 32 they breast their foes and fill the moats with blood. 33 Aeneas knows not, and is far away. 34 Will ne'er the siege have done? A second time 35 above Troy's rising walls the foe impends; 36 another host is gathered, and once more 37 from his Aetolian Arpi wrathful speeds 38 a Diomed. I doubt not that for me 39 wounds are preparing. Yea, thy daughter dear 40 awaits a mortal sword! If by thy will 41 unblest and unapproved the Trojans came 42 to Italy, for such rebellious crime 43 give

	44 Si nulla est regio, Teucris quam det tua coniunx 45 dura, per eversae, genitor, fumantia Troiae 46 exscidia obtestor, liceat dimittere ab armis 47 incolumem Ascanium, liceat superesse nepotem. 48 Aeneas sane ignotis iactetur in undis 49 et, quamcumque viam dederit Fortuna, sequatur: 50 hunc tegere et dirae valeam subducere pugnae. 51 Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphus atque Cythera 52 Idaliaeque domus: positis inglorius armis 53 exigat hic aevum. Magna dicione iubeto 54 Karthago premat Ausoniam: nihil urbibus inde 55 obstabit Tyriis. Quid pestem evadere belli 56 iuvit et Argolicos medium fugisse per ignes 57 totque maris vastaeque exhausta pericula terrae, 58 dum Latium Teucri recidivaque Pergama quaerunt? 59 Non satius cineres patriae insedisse supremos 60 atque solum, quo Troia fuit? Xanthum et Simoenta	them their due, nor lend them succor, thou, 44 with thy strong hand! But if they have obeyed 45 unnumbered oracles from gods above 46 and sacred shades below, who now has power 47 to thwart thy bidding, or to weave anew 48 the web of Fate? Why speak of ships consumed 49 along my hallowed Erycinian shore? 50 Or of the Lord of Storms, whose furious blasts 51 were summoned from Aeolia? Why tell 52 of Iris sped from heaven? Now she moves 53 the region of the shades (one kingdom yet 54 from her attempt secure) and thence lets loose 55 Alecto on the world above, who strides 56 in frenzied wrath along th' Italian hills. 57 No more my heart now cherishes its hope 58 of domination, though in happier days 59 such was thy promise. Let the victory fall 60 to victors of thy choice! If nowhere lies 61 the land thy cruel Queen would deign accord 62 unto the Teucrian people,—O my sire, 63 I pray thee by yon smouldering wreck of Troy 64 to let Ascanius from the clash of arms 65 escape unscathed. Let my own offspring live! 66 Yea, let Aeneas, tossed on seas unknown, 67 find some chance way; let my right hand avail 68 to shelter him and from this fatal war 69 in safety bring. For Amathus is mine, 70 mine are Cythera and the Paphian hills 71 and temples in Idalium. Let him drop 72 the sword, and there live out inglorious days. 73 By thy decree let Carthage overwhelm 74 Ausonia's power; nor let defence be found 75 to stay the Tyrian arms! What profits it 76 that he escaped the wasting plague of war 77 and fled Argolic fires? or that he knew 78 so many perils of wide wilderness 79 and waters rude? The Teucrians seek in vain 80 new-born Troy in Latium. Better far 81 crouched on their country's ashes to abide,
10.61	61 redde, oro, miseris iterumque revolvere casus 62 da, pater, Iliacos Teucris. 62b Tum regia Iuno 63 acta furore gravi: Quid me alta silentia cogis 64 rumpere et obductum verbis volgare dolorem? 65 Aenean hominum quisquam divomque subegit 66 bella sequi aut hostem regi se	82 and keep that spot of earth where once was Troy! 83 Give back, O Father, I implore thee, give 84 Xanthus and Simois back! Let Teucer's sons 85 unfold once more the tale of Ilium's woe!” 86 Then sovereign Juno, flushed with solemn scorn, 87 made answer. “Dost thou bid me here profane 88 the silence of my heart, and gossip forth 89 of secret griefs? What will of god or man 90 impelled Aeneas on his path of

	inferre Latino? 67 Italiam petiit fatis auctoribus, esto, 68 Cassandrae inpulsus furiis: num linquere castra 69 hortati sumus aut vitam committere ventis? 70 Num puero summam belli, num credere muros 71 Tyrrhenamque fidem, aut gentis agitare quietas? 72 Quis deus in fraudem, quae dura potentia nostra 73 egit? Ubi hic Iuno demissave nubibus Iris? 74 Indignum est Italos Troiam circumdare flammis 75 nascentem et patria Turnum consistere terra, 76 cui Pilumnus avus, cui diva Venilia mater: 77 quid face Troianos atra vim ferre Latinis, 78 arva aliena iugo premere atque avertere praedas? 79 Quid soceros legere et gremiis abducere pactas, 80 pacem orare manu, praefigere puppibus arma? 81 Tu potes Aenean manibus subducere Graium 82 proque viro nebulam et ventos obtendere inanis, 83 tu potes in totidem classem convertere nymphas: 84 nos aliquid Rutulos contra iuvisse nefandum est? 85 Aeneas ignarus abest: ignarus et absit. 86 Est Paphus Idaliumque tibi, sunt alta Cythera: 87 quid gravidam bellis urbem et corda aspera temptas? 88 Nosne tibi fluxas Phrygiae res vertere fundo 89 conamur, nos, an miseros qui Troas Achivis	war, 91 or made him foeman of the Latin King? 92 Fate brought him to Italia? Be it so! 93 Cassandra's frenzy he obeyed. What voice — 94 say, was it mine?—urged him to quit his camp, 95 risk life in storms, or trust his war, his walls, 96 to a boy-captain, or stir up to strife 97 Etruria's faithful, unoffending sons? 98 What god, what pitiless behest of mine, 99 impelled him to such harm? Who traces here 100 the hand of Juno, or of Iris sped 101 from heaven? Is it an ignoble stroke 102 that Italy around the new-born Troy 103 makes circling fire, and Turnus plants his heel 104 on his hereditary earth, the son 105 of old Pilumnus and the nymph divine, 106 Venilia? For what offence would Troy 107 bring sword and fire on Latium, or enslave 108 lands of an alien name, and bear away 109 plunder and spoil? Why seek they marriages, 110 and snatch from arms of love the plighted maids? 111 An olive-branch is in their hands; their ships 112 make menace of grim steel. Thy power one day 113 ravished Aeneas from his Argive foes, 114 and gave them shape of cloud and fleeting air 115 to strike at for a man. Thou hast transformed
10.90	90 obiecit? Quae causa fuit, consurgere in arma 91 Europamque Asiamque et foedera solvere furto? 92 Me duce Dardanius Spartam expugnavit adulter, 93 aut ego tela dedi fovive cupidine bella? 94 Tum decuit metuisse tuis: nunc sera querelis 95 haud iustis adsurgis et inrita iurgia iactas.	116 his ships to daughters of the sea. What wrong 117 if I, not less, have lent the Rutuli 118 something of strength in war? Aeneas, then, 119 is far away and knows not! Far away 120 let him remain, not knowing! If thou sway'st 121 Cythera, Paphos, and Idalium, 122 why rouse a city pregnant with loud wars, 123 and fiery hearts provoke? That fading power 124 of Phrygia, do I, forsooth, essay 125 to ruin utterly? O, was it I 126 exposed ill-fated Troy to

	96 Talibus orabat Iuno, cunctique fremebant 97 caelicolae adsensu vario, ceu flamina prima 98 cum deprensa fremunt silvis et caeca volutant 99 murmura, venturos nautis prodentia ventos. 100 Tum pater omnipotens, rerum cui prima potestas, 101 infit; eo dicente deum domus alta silescit 102 et tremefacta solo tellus, silet arduus aether, 103 tum Zephyri posuere, premit placida aequora pontus: 104 Accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta. 105 Quandoquidem Ausonios coniungi foedere Teucris 106 haud licitum, nec vestra capit discordia finem: 107 quae cuique est fortuna hodie, quam quisque secat spem, 108 Tros Rutulusne fuat nullo discrimine habebo. 109 Seu fatis Italum castra obsidione tenentur 110 sive errore malo Troiae monitisque sinistris. 111 Nec Rutulos solvo: sua cuique exorsa laborem 112 fortunamque ferent. Rex Iuppiter omnibus idem. 113 Fata viam invenient. Stygii per flumina fratris, 114 per pice torrentis atraque voragine ripas 115 adnuit et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum. 116 Hic finis fandi. Solio tum Iuppiter aureo 117 surgit, caelicolae medium quem ad limina ducunt. 118 Interea Rutuli portis circum omnibus instant 119 sternere caede viros et moenia cingere flammis.	Argive foe? 127 For what offence in vast array of arms 128 did Europe rise and Asia, for a rape 129 their peace dissolving? Was it at my word 130 th' adulterous Dardan shepherd came to storm 131 the Spartan city? Did my hand supply 132 his armament, or instigate a war 133 for Cupid's sake? Then was thy decent hour 134 to tremble for thy children; now too late 135 the folly of thy long lament to Heaven, 136 and objurgation vain.” Such Juno's plea; 137 the throng of gods with voices loud or low 138 gave various reply: as gathering winds 139 sing through the tree-tops in dark syllables, 140 and fling faint murmur on the far-off sea, 141 to tell some pilot of to-morrow's storm. 142 Then Jupiter omnipotent, whose hands 143 have governance supreme, began reply; 144 deep silence at his word Olympus knew, 145 Earth's utmost cavern shook; the realms of light
10.120	120 At legio Aeneadum vallis obsessa tenetur, 121 nec spes ulla fugae. Miseri stant turribus altis 122 nequiquam et rara muros cinxere corona 123 Asius Imbrasides Hicetaoniusque Thymoetes 124 Assaracique duo et senior cum Castore Thymbris,	146 were silent; the mild zephyrs breathed no more, 147 and perfect calm o'erspread the levelled sea. 148 “Give ear, ye gods, and in your hearts record 149 my mandate and decree. Fate yet allows 150 no peace 'twixt Troy and Italy, nor bids 151 your quarrel end. Therefore, what Chance this day 152 to either foe shall bring, whatever hope 153 either may cherish, 125 prima acies; hos germani Sarpedonis ambo 126 et Clarus et Thaemon Lycia comitantur ab alta. 127 Fert ingens toto conixus corpore saxum, 128 haud partem exiguam montis, Lyrnesius Acmon, 129 nec Clytio genitore minor nec fratre Menestheo. 130 Hi iaculis, illi certant defendere saxis 131 molirique ignem nervoque aptare sagittas. 132 Ipse inter medios, Veneris iustissima cura, 133 Dardanius caput ecce puer detectus honestum, 134 qualis gemma micat, fulvum quae dividit aurum, 135 aut collo decus aut capiti; vel quale per artem 136 inclusum buxo aut Oricia terebintho 137 lucet ebur; fusos cervix cui lactea crinis 138 accipit et molli subnectens circulus auro. 139 Te quoque magnanimae viderunt, Ismare, gentes 140 volnera dirigere et calamos armare veneno, 141 Maeonia generose domo, ubi pinguia culta 142 exercentque viri Pactolusque inrigat auro. 143 Adfuit et Mnestheus, quem pulsi pristina Turni 144 aggere moerorum sublimem gloria tollit, 145 et Capys: hinc nomen Campanae ducitur urbi. 146 Illi inter sese duri certamina belli 147 contulerant: media Aeneas freta nocte secabat. 148 Namque ut ab Euandro castris ingressus Etruscis 149 regem adit et regi memorat nomenque genusque,	—the Rutulian cause 154 and Trojan have like favor in my eyes. 155 The destinies of Italy constrain 156 the siege; which for the fault of Troy fulfills 157 an oracle of woe. Yon Rutule host 158 I scatter not. But of his own attempt 159 let each the triumph and the burden bear; 160 for Jove is over all an equal King. 161 The Fates will find the way.” The god confirmed 162 his sentence by his Stygian brother's wave, 163 the shadowy flood and black, abysmal shore. 164 He nodded; at the bending of his brow 165 Olympus shook. It is the council's end. 166 Now from the golden throne uprises Jove; 167 the train of gods attend him to the doors.

10.150	150 quidve petat quidve ipse ferat, Mezentius arma 151 quae sibi conciliet, violentaque pectora Turni 152 edocet, humanis quae sit fiducia rebus 153 admonet immiscetque preces: haud fit mora, Tarchon 154 iungit opes foedusque ferit; tum	168 Meanwhile at every gate the Rutule foe 169 urges the slaughter on, and closes round 170 the battlements with ring of flame. The host 171 of Trojans, prisoned in the palisades, 172 lies in strict siege and has no hope to fly. 173 In wretched plight they man the turrets tall, 174 to no avail, and with scant garrison 175 the ramparts crown. In libera fati 155 classem conscendit iussis gens Lydia divom, 156 externo commissa duci. Aeneia puppis 157 prima tenet, rostro Phrygios subiuncta leones, 158 imminet Ida super, profugis gratissima Teucris. 159 Hic magnus sedet Aeneas secumque volutat 160 eventus belli varios, Pallasque sinistro 161 adfixus lateri iam quaerit sidera, opacae 162 noctis iter, iam quae passus terraque marique. 163 Pandite nunc Helicona, deae, cantusque movete, 164 quae manus interea Tuscis comitetur ab oris 165 Aenean armetque rates pelagoque vehatur. 166 Massicus aerata princeps secat aequora tigri: 167 sub quo mille manus iuvenum, qui moenia Clusi 168 quique urbem liquere Cosas, quis tela sagittae 169 gorytique leves umeris et letifer arcus. 170 Una torvus Abas: huic totum insignibus armis 171 agmen et aurato fulgebat Apolline puppis. 172 Sescentos illi dederat Populonia mater 173 expertos belli iuvenes, ast Ilva trecentos 174 insula inexhaustis Chalybum generosa metallis. 175 Tertius ille hominum divomque interpres Asilas, 176 cui pecudum fibrae, caeli cui sidera parent 177 et linguae volucrum et praesagi fulminis ignes, 178 mille rapit densos acie atque horrentibus hastis. 179 Hos parere iubent Alpheae ab origine Pisae,	foremost line of guard 176 are Asius Imbrasides, the twin 177 Assaraci, and Hicetaon's son 178 Thymoetes, and with Castor at his side 179 the veteran Thymbris; then the brothers both 180 of slain Sarpedon, and from Lycian steep 181 Clarus and Themon. With full-straining thews 182 lifting a rock, which was of some huge hill 183 no fragment small, Lyrnesian Acmon stood; 184 nor less than Clytius his sire he seemed, 185 nor Mnestheus his great brother. Some defend 186 the wall with javelins; some hurl down stones 187 or firebrands, or to the sounding string 188 fit arrows keen. But lo! amid the throng, 189 well worth to Venus her protecting care, 190 the Dardan boy, whose princely head shone forth 191 without a helm, like radiant jewel set 192 in burnished gold for necklace or for crown; 193 or like immaculate ivory inclosed 194 in boxwood or Orician terebinth; 195 his tresses o'er his white neck rippled down, 196 confined in circlet of soft twisted gold. 197 Thee, too, the warrior nations gaze upon, 198 high-nurtured Ismarus, inflicting wounds 199 with shafts of venomed reed: Maeonia's vale 200 thy cradle was, where o'er the fruitful fields 201 well-tilled and rich, Pactolus pours his gold. 202 Mnestheus was there, who, for his late repulse 203 of Turnus from the rampart, towered forth 204 in glory eminent; there Capys stood, 205 whose name the Capuan citadel shall bear.

10.180	180 urbs Etrusca solo. Sequitur pulcherrimus Astur, 181 Astur equo fidens et versicoloribus armis. 182 Tercentum adiciunt (mens omnibus una sequendi) 183 qui Caerete domo, qui sunt	206 While these in many a shock of grievous war 207 hotly contend, Aeneas cleaves his way 208 at midnight through the waters. He had fared 209 from old Evander to th' Etruscan folk, 210 addressed their King, and to him told the tale 211 of his own race and

	Minionis in arvis, 184 et Pyrgi veteres intempestaeque Graviscae. 185 Non ego te, Ligurum ductor fortissime bello, 186 transierim, Cinyre, et paucis comitate Cupavo, 187 cuius olorinae surgunt de vertice pennae, 188 crimen, Amor, vestrum formaeque insigne paternae. 189 Namque ferunt luctu Cycnum Phaethontis amati, 190 populeas inter frondes umbramque sororum 191 dum canit et maestum Musa solatur amorem, 192 canentem molli pluma duxisse senectam, 193 linquentem terras et sidera voce sequentem. 194 Filius, aequalis comitatus classe catervas, 195 ingentem remis Centaurum promovet: ille 196 instat aquae saxumque undis immane minatur 197 arduus et longa sulcat maria alta carina. 198 Ille etiam patriis agmen ciet Ocnus ab oris, 199 fatidicae Mantus et Tusci filius amnis, 200 qui muros matrisque dedit tibi, Mantua, nomen, 201 Mantua, dives avis; sed non genus omnibus unum: 202 gens illi triplex, populi sub gente quaterni, 203 ipsa caput populis, Tusco de sanguine vires. 204 Hinc quoque quingentos in se Mezentius armat, 205 quos patre Benaco velatus harundine glauca 206 Mincius infesta ducebat in aequora pinu. 207 It gravis Aulestes centenaque arbore fluctum 208 verberat adsurgens, spumant vada marmore verso. 209 Hunc vehit immanis Triton et caerula concha	name, his suit, his powers; 212 of what allies Mezentius had embraced, 213 and Turnus' lawless rage. He bids him know 214 how mutable is man, and warning gives, 215 with supplication joined. Without delay 216 Tarchon made amity and sacred league, 217 uniting with his cause. The Lydian tribe, 218 now destined from its tyrant to be free, 219 embarked, obedient to the gods, and gave 220 allegiance to the foreign King. The ship 221 Aeneas rode moved foremost in the line: 222 its beak a pair of Phrygian lions bore; 223 above them Ida rose, an emblem dear 224 to exiled Trojans. On his Iofty seat 225 was great Aeneas, pondering the events 226 of changeful war; and clinging to his side 227 the youthful Pallas fain would learn the lore 228 of stars, the highway of dark night, and asks 229 the story of his toils on land and sea.
10.210	210 exterrens freta, cui laterum tenus hispida nanti 211 frons hominem praefert, in pristim desinit alvus: 212 spumea semifero sub pectore	230 Now open Helicon and move my song, 231 ye goddesses, to tell what host in arms 232 followed Aeneas from the Tuscan shore, 233 and manned his ships and traveiled o'er the sea! 234

	murmurat unda. 213 Tot lecti proceres ter denis navibus ibant 214 subsidio Troiae et campos salis aera secabant. 215 Iamque dies caelo concesserat almaque curru 216 noctivago Phoebe medium pulsabat Olympum: 217 Aeneas (neque enim membris dat cura quietem) 218 ipse sedens clavumque regit velisque ministrat. 219 Atque illi medio in spatio chorus ecce suarum 220 occurrit comitum: nymphae, quas alma Cybebe 221 numen habere maris nymphasque e navibus esse 222 iusserat, innabant pariter fluctusque secabant, 223 quot prius aeratae steterant ad litora prorae. 224 Agnoscunt longe regem lustrantque choreis, 225 quarum quae fandi doctissima Cymodocea 226 pone sequens dextra puppim tenet ipsaque dorso 227 eminet ac laeva tacitis subremigat undis, 228 tum sic ignarum adloquitur: Vigilasne, deum gens, 229 Aenea? Vigila et velis immitte rudentis. 230 Nos sumus, Idaeae sacro de vertice pinus, 231 nunc pelagi nymphae, classis tua. Perfidus ut nos 232 praecipitis ferro Rutulus flammaque premebat, 233 rupimus invitae tua vincula teque per aequor 234 quaerimus. Hanc Genetrix faciem miserata refecit 235 et dedit esse deas aevumque agitare sub undis. 236 At puer Ascanius muro fossisque tenetur 237 tela inter media atque horrentis Marte Latinos. 238 Iam loca iussa tenent forti permixtus Etrusco 239 Arcas eques: medias illis opponere turmas,	First Massicus his brazen Tigress rode, 235 cleaving the brine; a thousand warriors 236 were with him out of Clusium's walls, or from 237 the citadel of Coste, who for arms 238 had arrows, quivers from the shoulder slung, 239 and deadly bows. Grim Abas near him sailed; 240 his whole band wore well-blazoned mail; his ship 241 displayed the form of Phoebus, all of gold: 242 to him had Populonia consigned 243 (His mother-city, she) six hundred youth 244 well-proven in war; three hundred Elba gave, 245 an island rich in unexhausted ores 246 of iron, like the Chalybes. Next came 247 Asilas, who betwixt the gods and men 248 interprets messages and reads clear signs 249 in victims' entrails, or the stars of heaven, 250 or bird-talk, or the monitory flames 251 of lightning: he commands a thousand men 252 close lined, with bristling spears, of Pisa all, 253 that Tuscan city of Alpheus sprung. 254 Then Astur followed, a bold horseman he, 255 Astur in gorgeous arms, himself most fair: 256 three hundred are his men, one martial mind 257 uniting all: in Caere they were bred 258 and Minio's plain, and by the ancient towers 259 of Pyrgo or Gravisca's storm-swept hill.
10.240	240 ne castris iungant, certast sententia Turno. 241 Surge age et Aurora socios	260 Nor thy renown may I forget, brave chief 261 of the Ligurians, Cinyrus; nor thine, 262 Cupavo, with few followers, veniente vocari 242 primus in arma iube et clipeum cape, quem dedit ipse 243 invictum Ignipotens atque oras ambiit auro. 244 Crastina lux, mea si non inrita dicta putaris, 245 ingentis Rutulae spectabit caedis acervos. 246 Dixerat, et dextra discedens impulit altam 247 haud ignara modi puppim: fugit illa per undas 248 ocior et iaculo et ventos aequante sagitta. 249 Inde aliae celerant cursus. Stupet inscius ipse 250 Tros Anchisiades; animos tamen omine tollit. 251 Tum breviter super adspectans convexa precatur: 252 Alma parens Idaea deum, cui Dindyma cordi 253 turrigeraeque urbis biiugique ad frena leones, 254 tu mihi nunc pugnae princeps, tu rite propinques 255 augurium Phrygibusque adsis pede, diva, secundo. 256 Tantum effatus. Et interea revoluta rubebat 257 matura iam luce dies noctemque fugarat: 258 principio sociis edicit, signa sequantur 259 atque animos aptent armis pugnaeque parent se. 260 Iamque in conspectu Teucros habet et sua castra, 261 stans celsa in puppi; clipeum cum deinde sinistra 262 extulit ardentem. Clamorem ad sidera tollunt 263 Dardanidae e muris, spes addita suscitat iras, 264 tela manu iaciunt: quales sub nubibus atris 265 Strymoniae dant signa grues atque aethera tranant 266 cum sonitu fugiuntque notos clamore secundo. 267 At Rutulo regi ducibusque ea mira videri 268 Ausoniis, donec versas ad litora puppes 269 respiciunt totumque adlabi classibus aequor.	thy crest 263 the tall swan-wings, of love unblest the sign 264 and of a father fair: for legends tell 265 that Cycnus, for his Phaethon so dear 266 lamenting loud beneath the poplar shade 267 of the changed sisters, made a mournful song 268 to soothe his grief and passion: but erewhile, 269 in his old age, there clothed him as he sang 270 soft snow-white plumes, and spurning earth he soared 271 on high, and sped in music through the stars. 272 His son with bands of youthful peers urged on 273 a galley with a Centaur for its prow, 274 which loomed high o'er the waves, and seemed to hurl 275 a huge stone at the water, as the keel 276 ploughed through the deep. Next Ocnus summoned forth 277 a war-host from his native shores, the son 278 of Tiber, Tuscan river, and the nymph 279 Manto, a prophetess: he gave good walls, 280 O Mantua, and his mother's name, to thee,— 281 to Mantua so rich in noble sires, 282 but of a blood diverse, a triple breed, 283 four stems in each; and over all enthroned 284 she rules her tribes: her strength is Tuscan born. 285 Hate of Mezentius armed against his name 286 five hundred men: upon their hostile prow 287 was Mincius in a cloak of silvery sedge,— 288 Lake Benacus the river's source and sire. 289 Last good Aulestes smites the depths below, 290 with forest of a hundred oars: the flood 291 like flowing marble foams; his Triton prow 292 threatens the blue waves with a trumpet-shell; 293 far as the hairy flanks its form is man, 294 but ends in fish below—the parting waves 295 beneath the half-brute bosom break in foam. 296 Such chosen chiefs in thirty galleys ploughed 297 the salt-wave, bringing help to Trojan arms.

10.270	270 Ardet apex capiti cristisque a	298 Day now had left the sky. The moon

	vertice flamma 271 funditur et vastos umbo vomit aureus ignes: 272 non secus ac liquida siquando nocte cometae 273 sanguinei lugubre rubent aut Sirius ardor, 274 ille sitim morbosque ferens mortalibus aegris, 275 nascitur et laevo contristat lumine caelum. 276 Haud tamen audaci Turno fiducia cessit 277 litora praecipere et venientis pellere terra. 278 279 Quod votis optastis, adest, perfringere dextra; 280 in manibus Mars ipse viris. Nunc coniugis esto 281 quisque suae tectique memor, nunc magna referto 282 facta, patrum laudes. Ultro occurramus ad undam, 283 dum trepidi egressisque labant vestigia prima. 284 Audentis Fortuna iuvat, 285 haec ait et secum versat, quos ducere contra 286 vel quibus obsessos possit concredere muros. 287 Interea Aeneas socios de puppibus altis 288 pontibus exponit. Multi servare recursus 289 languentis pelagi et brevibus se credere saltu, 290 per remos alii. Speculatus litora Tarchon, 291 qua vada non sperat nec fracta remurmurat unda, 292 sed mare inoffensum crescenti adlabitur aestu, 293 advertit subito proram sociosque precatur: 294 Nunc, o lecta manus, validis incumbite remis; 295 tollite, ferte rates; inimicam findite rostris 296 hanc terram, sulcumque sibi premat ipsa carina. 297 Frangere nec tali puppim statione recuso 298 arrepta tellure semel. Quae talia postquam 299 effatus Tarchon, socii consurgere tonsis	benign 299 had driven her night-wandering chariot 300 to the mid-arch of heaven. Aeneas sate, 301 for thought and care allowed him no repose, 302 holding the helm and tending his own sails. 303 but, as he sped, behold, the beauteous train, 304 lately his own, of nymphs, anon transformed 305 by kind Cybebe to sea-ruling powers. 306 In even ranks they swam the cloven wave, — 307 nymphs now, but once as brazen galleys moored 308 along the sandy shore. With joy they knew 309 their King from far, and with attending train 310 around him drew. Cymodocea then, 311 best skilled in mortal speech, sped close behind, 312 with her right hand upon the stern, uprose 313 breast-high, and with her left hand deeply plied 314 the silent stream, as to the wondering King 315 she called: “So late on watch, O son of Heaven, 316 Aeneas? Slack thy sail, but still watch on! 317 We were the pine-trees on the holy top 318 of Ida's mountain. Sea-nymphs now are we, 319 and thine own fleet. When, as we fled, the flames 320 rained o'er us from the false Rutulian's hand 321 't was all unwillingly we cast away 322 thy serviceable chains: and now once more 323 we follow thee across the sea. These forms 324 our pitying mother bade us take, with power 325 to haunt immortally the moving sea. 326 Lo, thy Ascanius lies close besieged 327 in moated walls, assailed by threatening arms
10.300	300 spumantisque rates arvis inferre	328 and Latium's front of war. Arcadia,

	Latinis, 301 donec rostra tenent siccum et sedere carinae 302 omnes innocuae, sed non puppis tua, Tarchon. 303 Namque inflicta vadis dorso dum pendet iniquo, 304 anceps sustentata diu fluctusque fatigat, 305 solvitur atque viros mediis exponit in undis 306 fragmina remorum quos et fluitantia transtra 307 impediunt, retrahitque pedem simul unda relabens. 308 Nec Turnum segnis retinet mora, sed rapit acer 309 totam aciem in Teucros et contra in litore sistit. 310 Signa canunt. Primus turmas invasit agrestis 311 Aeneas, omen pugnae, stravitque Latinos 312 occiso Therone, virum qui maximus ultro 313 Aenean petit: huic gladio perque aerea suta, 314 per tunicam squalentem auro latus haurit apertum. 315 Inde Lichan ferit, exsectum iam matre perempta 316 et tibi, Phoebe, sacrum: casus evadere ferri 317 quo licuit parvo? Nec longe Cissea durum 318 immanemque Gyan, sternentis agmina clava, 319 deiecit Leto: nihil illos Herculis arma 320 nec validae iuvere manus genitorque Melampus, 321 Alcidae comes usque gravis dum terra labores 322 praebuit. Ecce Pharo, voces dum iactat inertis, 323 intorquens iaculum clamanti sistit in ore. 324 Tu quoque, flaventem prima lanugine malas 325 dum sequeris Clytium infelix, nova gaudia, Cydon, 326 Dardania stratus dextra, securus amorum, 327 qui iuvenum tibi semper erant, miserande iaceres, 328 ni fratrum stipata cohors foret obvia, Phorci 329 progenies, septem numero,	329 her horsemen with the bold Etruscan joined, 330 stands at the place appointed. Turnus means, 331 with troop opposing, their advance to bar 332 and hold them from the camp. Arouse thee, then, 333 and with the rising beams of dawn call forth 334 thy captains and their followers. Take that shield 335 victorious, which for thee the Lord of Fire 336 forged for a gift and rimmed about with gold. 337 To-morrow's light—deem not my words be vain!— 338 shall shine on huge heaps of Rutulia's dead.” 339 So saying, she pushed with her right hand the stern 340 with skilful thrust, and vanished. The ship sped 341 swift as a spear, or as an arrow flies 342 no whit behind the wind: and all the fleet 343 quickened its course. Anchises' princely son, 344 dumb and bewildered stood, but took good heart 345 at such an omen fair. Then in few words 346 with eyes upturned to heaven he made his prayer: 347 “Mother of gods, O Ida's Queen benign, 348 who Iovest Dindymus and towns with towers, 349 and lion-yokes obedient to thy rein, 350 be thou my guide in battle, and fulfil 351 thine augury divine. In Phrygia's cause 352 be present evermore with favoring power!” 353 He spoke no more. For now the wheels of day 354 had sped full circle into perfect light, 355 the dark expelling. Then, for his first care, 356 he bade his captains heed the signal given, 357 equip their souls for war, and wait in arms

	septenaque tela
10.330	330 coniciunt; partim galea clipeoque resultant 331 inrita, deflexit partim stringentia corpus 332 alma Venus. Fidum Aeneas adfatur Achaten: 333 Suggere tela mihi: non ullum dextera frustra 334 torserit in Rutulos, steterunt quae in corpore Graium 335 Iliacis campis. Tum magnam corripit hastam 336 et iacit: illa volans clipei transverberat aera 337 Maeonis et thoraca simul cum pectore rumpit. 338 Huic frater subit Alcanor fratremque ruentem 339 sustentat dextra: traiecto missa lacerto 340 protinus hasta fugit servatque cruenta tenorem, 341 dexteraque ex umero nervis moribunda pependit. 342 Tum Numitor iaculo fratris de corpore rapto 343 Aenean petiit; sed non et figere contra 344 est licitum, magnique femur perstrinxit Achatae. 345 Hic Curibus fidens primaevo corpore Clausus 346 advenit et rigida Dryopem ferit eminus hasta 347 sub mentum graviter pressa pariterque loquentis 348 vocem animamque rapit traiecto gutture; at ille 349 fronte ferit terram et crassum vomit ore cruorem. 350 Tres quoque Threicios Boreae de gente suprema 351 et tris, quos Idas pater et patria Ismara mittit, 352 per varios sternit casus. Accurrit Halaesus 353 Auruncaeque manus, subit et Neptunia proles, 354 insignis Messapus equis. Expellere tendunt 355 nunc hi, nunc illi; certatur limine in ipso 356 Ausoniae. Magno discordes aethere venti 357 proelia ceu tollunt animis et viribus aequis; 358 non ipsi inter se, non nubila, non	358 the coming fray. Now holds he full in view 359 his Trojans and their fortress, as he stands 360 upon his towering ship. With his left hand 361 he lifts his radiant shield; then from the wall 362 the Dardan warriors send a battle-cry 363 that echoes to the stars, as kindling hope 364 their rage renews. A flight of spears they hurl: 365 't was like the cranes of Strymon, through dark clouds 366 each other calling, when they cleave the skies 367 vociferous, outwinging as they fly 368 the swift south winds—Ioud music them pursues. 369 Amazement on Ausonia's captains fell 370 and Turnus, as they gazed. But soon they saw 371 ships pointing shoreward and the watery plain 372 all stirring with a fleet. Aeneas' helm 373 uplifted its bright peak,—like streaming flame 374 the crimson crest; his shield of orbed gold 375 poured forth prodigious fire: it seemed as when 376 in cloudless night a comet's blood-red beam 377 makes mournful splendor, or the Dog-star glows, 378 which rises to bring drought and pestilence 379 to hapless men, and with ill-omened ray 380 saddens the sky. But Turnus, undismayed, 381 trusted not less to hurl th' invaders back 382 and hold the shore against them. “Look!” he cried, 383 your prayer is come to pass,—that sword in hand 384 ye now may shatter them. The might of Mars 385 is in a true man's blow. Remember well 386 each man his home and wife! Now call to mind 387 the glory and great deeds of all your sires!

	mare cedit; 359 anceps pugna diu, stant obnixa omnia contra:
10.360	360 haud aliter Troianae acies aciesque Latinae 361 concurrunt; haeret pede pes densusque viro vir. 362 At parte ex alia, qua saxa rotantia late 363 impulerat torrens arbustaque diruta ripis, 364 Arcadas insuetos acies inferre pedestris 365 ut vidit Pallas Latio dare terga sequaci 366 (aspera quis natura loci dimittere quando 367 suasit equos), unum quod rebus restat egenis, 368 nunc prece, nunc dictis virtutem accendit amaris: 369 Quo fugitis, socii? Per vos et fortia facta, 370 per ducis Evandri nomen devictaque bella 371 Opemque meam, patriae quae nunc subit aemula laudi, 372 fidite ne pedibus. Ferro rumpenda per hostis 373 est via. Qua globus ille virum densissimus urget, 374 hac vos et Pallanta ducem patria alta reposcit. 375 Numina nulla premunt, mortali urgemur ab hoste 376 mortales, totidem nobis animaeque manusque. 377 Ecce, maris magna claudit nos obice pontus, 378 deest iam terra fugae: pelagus Troiamne petemus? 379 Haec ait et medius densos prorumpit in hostis. 380 Obvius huic primum, fatis adductus iniquis, 381 fit Lagus. Hunc, magno vellit dum pondere saxum, 382 intorto figit telo, discrimina costis 383 per medium qua spina dabat, hastamque receptat 384 ossibus haerentem. Quem non super occupat Hisbo, 385 ille quidem hoc sperans: nam Pallas ante ruentem, 386 dum furit, incautum crudeli morte sodalis 387 excipit atque ensem tumido in pulmone recondit.	388 Charge to yon river-bank, while yet they take 389 with weak and fearful steps their shoreward way! 390 Fortune will help the brave.” With words like these, 391 he chose, well-weighing, who should lead the charge, 392 who at the leaguered walls the fight sustain.

	388 Hinc Sthenium petit et Rhoeti de gente vetusta 389 Anchemolum, thalamos ausum incestare novercae.
10.390	390 Vos etiam, gemini, Rutulis cecidistis in agris, 391 Daucia, Laride Thymberque, simillima proles, 392 indiscreta suis gratusque parentibus error; 393 at nunc dura dedit vobis discrimina Pallas: 394 nam tibi, Thymbre, caput Evandrius abstulit ensis; 395 te decisa suum, Laride, dextera quaerit 396 semianimesque micant digiti ferrumque retractant. 397 Arcadas accensos monitu et praeclara tuentis 398 facta viri mixtus dolor et pudor armat in hostis. 399 Tum Pallas biiugis fugientem Rhoetea praeter 400 traicit. Hoc spatium tantumque morae fuit Ilo; 401 Ilo namque procul validam direxerat hastam, 402 quam medius Rhoeteus intercipit, optime Teuthra, 403 te fugiens fratremque Tyren, curruque volutus 404 caedit semianimis Rutulorum calcibus arva. 405 Ac velut optato ventis aestate coortis 406 dispersa immittit silvis incendia pastor, 407 correptis subito mediis extenditur una 408 horrida per latos acies Volcania campos; 409 ille sedens victor flammas despectat ovantis: 410 non aliter socium virtus coit omnis in unum 411 teque iuvat, Palla. Sed bellis acer Halaesus 412 tendit in adversos seque in sua conligit arma. 413 Hic mactat Ladona Pheretaque Demodocumque, 414 Strymonio dextram fulgenti deripit ense 415 elatam in iugulum, saxo ferit ora Thoantis 416 ossaque dispersit cerebro permixta cruento.	393 Aeneas straightway from his lofty ships 394 lets down his troop by bridges. Some await 395 the ebbing of slack seas, and boldly leap 396 into the shallows; others ply the oar. 397 Tarchon a beach discovers, where the sands 398 sing not, nor waves with broken murmur fall, 399 but full and silent swells the gentle sea. 400 Steering in haste that way, he called his crews: 401 “Now bend to your stout oars, my chosen brave. 402 Lift each ship forward, till her beak shall cleave 403 yon hostile shore; and let her keel's full weight 404 the furrow drive. I care not if we break 405 our ship's side in so sure an anchorage, 406 if once we land.” While Tarchon urged them thus, 407 the crews bent all together to their blades 408 and sped their foaming barks to Latium's plain, 409 till each beak gripped the sand and every keel 410 lay on dry land unscathed:—all save thine own, 411 O Tarchon! dashed upon a sand-bar, she! 412 Long poised upon the cruel ridge she hung, 413 tilted this way or that and beat the waves, 414 then split, and emptied forth upon the tide 415 her warriors; and now the drifting wreck 416 of shattered oars and thwarts entangles them, 417 or ebb of swirling waters sucks them down. 418 Turnus no lingering knows, but fiercely hurls 419 his whole line on the Teucrians, and makes stand 420 along the shore. Now peals the trumpet's call. 421 Aeneas in the van led on his troop 422 against the rustic foe, bright augury 423 for opening war, and laid the Latins low, 424 slaughtering Theron, a huge chief who dared 425 offer Aeneas battle; through the scales 426 of brazen mail and corselet stiff with gold 427 the sword drove deep, and gored the gaping side. 428 Then smote he Lichas, from his mother's womb 429 ripped in her dying hour, and unto thee, 430 O Phoebus, vowed, because his infant days 431 escaped the fatal steel. Hard by him fell 432 stout Cisseus and gigantic Gyas; these 433 to death were hurled, while with their knotted clubs 434 they slew opposing hosts; but

	417 Fata canens silvis genitor celarat Halaesum: 418 ut senior leto canentia lumina solvit, 419 iniecere manum Parcae telisque sacrarunt	naught availed 435 Herculean weapons, nor their mighty hands, 436 or that Melampus was their sire, a peer 437 of Hercules, what time in heavy toils 438 through earth he roved. See next how Pharon boasts! 439 But while he vainly raves, the whirling spear 440 smites full on his loud mouth. And also thou, 441 Cydon, wast by the Trojan stroke o'erthrown, 442 while following in ill-omened haste the steps 443 of Clytius, thy last joy, whose round cheek wore 444 its youthful golden down: soon hadst thou lain 445 in death, unheeding of thy fancies fond 446 which ever turned to youth;—but now arose 447 the troop of all thy brothers, Phorcus' sons,
10.420	420 Evandri. Quem sic Pallas petit ante precatus: 421 Da nunc, Thybri pater, ferro, quod missile libro, 422 fortunam atque viam duri per pectus Halaesi. 423 Haec arma exuviasque viri tua quercus habebit. 424 Audiit illa deus: dum texit Imaona Halaesus, 425 Arcadio infelix telo dat pectus inermum. 426 At non caede viri tanta perterrita Lausus, 427 pars ingens belli, sinit agmina: primus Abantem 428 oppositum interimit, pugnae nodumque moramque. 429 Sternitur Arcadiae proles, sternuntur Etrusci 430 et vos, O Grais imperdita corpora, Teucri. 431 Agmina concurrunt ducibusque et viribus aequis. 432 Extremi addensent acies nec turba moveri 433 tela manusque sinit. Hinc Pallas instat et urget, 434 hinc contra Lausus, nec multum discrepat aetas: 435 egregii forma, sed quis Fortuna negarat 436 in patriam reditus. Ipsos concurrere passus 437 haud tamen inter se magni regnator Olympi: 438 mox illos sua fata manent maiore sub hoste. 439 Interea soror alma monet succedere Lauso	448 a close array of seven, and seven spears 449 they hurled: some from Aeneas' helm or shield 450 glanced off in vain; some Venus' kindly power, 451 just as they touched his body, turned away. 452 Aeneas then to true Achates cried: 453 “Bring on my spears: not one shall fruitless fly 454 against yon Rutules, even as they pierced 455 the breasts of Greeks upon the Ilian plain.” 456 Then one great shaft he seized and threw; it sped 457 straight into Maeon's brazen shield, and clove 458 his mail-clad heart. Impetuous to his aid 459 brother Alcanor came, and lifted up 460 with strong right hand his brother as he fell: 461 but through his arm a second skilful shaft 462 made bloody way, and by the sinews held 463 the lifeless right hand from the shoulder swung. 464 Then from his brother's body Numitor 465 the weapon plucked and hurled it, furious, 466 upon Aeneas; but it could not strike 467 the hero's self, and grazed along the thigh 468 of great Achates. Next into the fight 469 Clausus of Cures came, in youthful bloom 470 exulting, and with far-thrown javelin 471 struck Dryops at the chin, and took away 472 from the gashed, shrieking throat both life and voice; 473 the warrior's fallen forehead smote the dust; 474 his lips poured forth thick blood. There also fell 475 three Thracians, odspring of the lordly stem 476 of Boreas, and three of Idas' sons 477 from Ismara, by various doom struck down.

	440 Turnum, qui volucri curru medium secat agmen. 441 Ut vidit socios: Tempus desistere pugnae; 442 solus ego in Pallanta feror, soli mihi Pallas 443 debetur; cuperem ipse parens spectator adesset. 444 Haec ait, et socii cesserunt aequore iusso. 445 At Rutulum abscessu iuvenis tum iussa superba 446 miratus stupet in Turno corpusque per ingens 447 lumina volvit obitque truci procul omnia visu 448 talibus et dictis it contra dicta tyranni: 449 Aut spoliis ego iam raptis laudabor opimis
10.450	450 aut leto insigni: sorti pater aequus utrique est. 451 Tolle minas. Fatus medium procedit in aequor. 452 Frigidus Arcadibus coit in praecordia sanguis. 453 Desiluit Turnus biiugis, pedes apparat ire 454 comminus; utque leo, specula cum vidit ab alta 455 stare procul campis meditantem in proelia taurum, 456 advolat: haud alia est Turni venientis imago. 457 Hunc ubi contiguum missae fore credidit hastae, 458 ire prior Pallas, siqua fors adiuvet ausum 459 viribus imparibus, magnumque ita ad aethera fatur: 460 Per patris hospitium et mensas, quas advena adisti, 461 te precor, Alcide, coeptis ingentibus adsis. 462 Cernat semineci sibi me rapere arma cruenta 463 victoremque ferant morientia lumina Turni. 464 Audiit Alcides iuvenem magnumque sub imo 465 corde premit gemitum lacrimasque effundit inanis. 466 Tum Genitor natum dictis adfatur amicis: 467 Stat sua cuique dies, breve et inreparabile tempus 468 omnibus est vitae: sed famam extendere factis,	478 Halaesus here his wild Auruncans brings; 479 and flying to the fight comes Neptune's son, 480 Messapus, famous horseman. On both sides 481 each charges on the foe. Ausonia's strand 482 is one wide strife. As when o'er leagues of air 483 the envious winds give battle to their peers, 484 well-matched in rage and power; and neither they 485 nor clouds above, nor plunging seas below 486 will end the doubtful war, but each withstands 487 the onset of the whole—in such wild way 488 the line of Trojans on the Latian line 489 hurls itself, limb on limb and man on man.

	469 hoc virtutis opus. Troiae sub moenibus altis 470 tot nati cecidere deum; quin occidit una 471 Sarpedon, mea progenies. Etiam sua Turnum 472 fata vocant, metasque dati pervenit ad aevi. 473 Sic ait atque oculos Rutulorum reicit arvis. 474 At Pallas magnis emittit viribus hastam 475 vaginaque cava fulgentem deripit ensem. 476 Illa volans umeri surgunt qua tegmina summa 477 incidit atque viam clipei molita per oras 478 tandem etiam magno strinxit de corpore Turni. 479 Hic Turnus ferro praefixum robur acuto
10.480	480 in Pallanta diu librans iacit atque ita fatur: 481 Adspice, num mage sit nostrum penetrabile telum. 482 Dixerat; at clipeum, tot ferri terga, tot aeris, 483 quem pellis totiens obeat circumdata tauri, 484 vibranti cuspis medium transverberat ictu 485 loricaeque moras et pectus perforat ingens. 486 Ille rapit calidum frustra de volnere telum: 487 una eademque via sanguis animusque sequuntur. 488 Corruit in volnus, sonitum super arma dedere 489 et terram hostilem moriens petit ore cruento. 490 Quem Turnus super adsistens, 491 Arcades, haec, inquit, memores mea dicta referte 492 Euandro; qualem meruit, Pallanta remitto. 493 Quisquis honos tumuli, quidquid solamen humandi est, 494 largior. Haud illi stabunt Aeneia parvo 495 hospitia. Et laevo pressit pede talia fatus 496 exanimem, rapiens immania pondera baltei 497 impressumque nefas, una sub nocte iugali 498 caesa manus iuvenum foede	490 But at a distance where the river's flood 491 had scattered rolling boulders and torn trees 492 uprooted from the shore, young Pallas spied 493 th' Arcadian band, unused to fight on foot, 494 in full retreat, the Latins following close— 495 who also for the roughness of the ground 496 were all unmounted: he (the last resource 497 of men in straits) to wild entreaty turned 498 and taunts, enkindling their faint hearts anew: 499 “Whither, my men! O, by your own brave deeds, 500 O, by our lord Evander's happy wars, 501 the proud hopes I had to make my name 502 a rival glory,—think not ye can fly! 503 Your swords alone can carve ye the safe way 504 straight through your foes. Where yonder warrior-throng 505 is fiercest, thickest, there and only there 506 your Country's honor calls for men like you, 507 and for your captain Pallas. Nay, no gods 508 against us fight; we are but mortal men 509 pressed by a mortal foe. Not more than ours 510 the number of their lives or swords. Behold, 511 the barrier of yonder spreading sea 512 emprisons us, and for a craven flight 513 yon lands are all too small. Ha! Shall we steer 514 across the sea to Troy?” He said, and sprang 515 full in the centre of his gathered foes.

	thalamique cruenti, 499 quae Clonus Eurytides multo caelaverat auro; 500 quo nunc Turnus ovat spolio gaudetque potitus. 501 Nescia mens hominum fati sortisque futurae 502 et servare modum, rebus sublata secundis! 503 Turno tempus erit, magno cum optaverit emptum 504 intactum Pallanta et cum spolia ista diemque 505 oderit. At socii multo gemitu lacrimisque 506 impositum scuto referunt Pallanta frequentes. 507 O dolor atque decus magnum rediture parenti 508 haec te prima dies bello dedit, haec eadem aufert, 509 cum tamen ingentis Rutulorum linquis acervos.
10.510	510 Nec iam fama mali tanti, sed certior auctor 511 advolat Aeneae, tenui discrimine leti 512 esse suos, versis tempus succurrere Teucris. 513 Proxima quaeque metit gladio latumque per agmen 514 ardens limitem agit ferro, te, Turne, superbum 515 caede nova quaerens. Pallas, Euander, in ipsis 516 omnia sunt oculis, mensae, quas advena primas 517 tunc adiit, dextraeque datae. Sulmone creatos 518 quattuor hic iuvenes, totidem, quos educat Ufens, 519 viventis rapit, inferias quos immolet umbris 520 captivoque rogi perfundat sanguine flammas. 521 Inde Mago procul infensam contenderat hastam. 522 Ille astu subit ac tremibunda supervolat hasta, 523 et genua amplectens effatur talia supplex: 524 Per patrios manis et spes surgentis Iuli 525 te precor, hanc animam serves natoque patrique. 526 Est domus alta, iacent penitus defossa talenta 527 caelati argenti, sunt auri pondera	516 First in his path was Lagus, thither led 517 by evil stars; whom, as he tried to lift 518 a heavy stone, the shaft of Pallas pierced 519 where ribs and spine divide: backward he drew 520 the clinging spear; But Hisbo from above 521 surprised him not, though meaning it; for while 522 (In anger blind for friend unpitying slain) 523 at Pallas' face he flew:—he, standing firm, 524 plunged deep into that swelling breast the sword. 525 Then Sthenius he slew; and next Anchemolus 526 of Rhoetus' ancient line, who dared defile 527 his step-dame's bridal bed. And also ye, 528 fair Thymber and Larides, Daucus' twins, 529 fell on that Rutule field; so like were ye, 530 your own kin scarce discerned, and parents proud 531 smiled at the dear deceit; but now in death 532 cruel unlikeness Pallas wrought; thy head 533 fell, hapless Thymber, by Evander's sword; 534 and thy right hand, Larides, shorn away, 535 seemed feeling for its Iord; the fingers cold 536 clutched, trembling, at the sword. Now all the troop 537 of Arcady, their chief's great action seen, 538 and by his warning roused, made at their foes, 539 spurred on by grief and shame. Next Pallas pierced 540 the flying Rhoetus in his car; this gained 541 for Ilus respite and delay, for him 542 the stout spear aimed at; but its flight was stopped 543 by Rhoetus, as facti 528 infectique mihi. Non hic victoria Teucrum 529 vertitur aut anima una dabit discrimina tanta. 530 Dixerat. Aeneas contra cui talia reddit: 531 Argenti atque auri memoras quae multa talenta, 532 natis parce tuis. Belli commercia Turnus 533 sustulit ista prior iam tum Pallante perempto. 534 Hoc patris Anchisae manes, hoc sentit Iulus. 535 Sic fatus galeam laeva tenet atque reflexa 536 cervice orantis capulo tenus applicat ensem. 537 Nec procul Haemonides, Phoebi Triviaeque sacerdos, 538 infula cui sacra redimibat tempora vitta, 539 totus conlucens veste atque insignibus armis.	in swift retreat he rode, 544 by the two high-born brothers close pursued, 545 Teuthras and Tyres: from his car he rolled,

10.540	540 Quem congressus agit campo lapsumque superstans 541 immolat ingentique umbra tegit; arma Serestus 542 lecta refert umeris, tibi, rex Gradive, tropaeum. 543 Instaurant acies Volcani stirpe creatus 544 Caeculus et veniens Marsorum montibus Umbro: 545 Dardanides contra furit. Anxuris ense sinistram 546 et totum clipei ferro deiecerat orbem; 547 dixerat ille aliquid magnum vimque adfore verbo 548 crediderat caeloque animum fortasse ferebat 549 canitiemque sibi et longos promiserat annos: 550 Tarquitus exultans contra fulgentibus armis, 551 silvicolae Fauno Dryope quem nympha crearat, 552 obvius ardenti sese obtulit. Ille reducta 553 loricam clipeique ingens onus impedit hasta; 554 tum caput orantis nequiquam et multa parantis 555 dicere deturbat terrae truncumque tepentem 556 provolvens super haec inimico	546 making deep furrows with his lifeless heels 547 along the Rutule plain. Oft when the winds 548 of summer, long awaited, rise and blow, 549 a shepherd fires the forest, and the blaze 550 devours the dense grove, while o'er the fields, 551 in that one moment, swift and sudden spread 552 grim Vulcan's serried flames; from some high seat 553 on distant hill, the shepherd peering down 554 sees, glad at heart, his own victorious fires: 555 so now fierce valor spreads, uniting all 556 in one confederate rage, 'neath Pallas' eyes. 557 But the fierce warrior Halaesus next 558 led on the charge, behind his skilful shield 559 close-crouching. Ladon and Demodocus 560 and Pheres he struck down; his glittering blade 561 cut Strymon's hand, which to his neck was raised, 562 sheer off; with one great stone he crushed the brows 563 of Thoas, scattering wide the broken skull, 564 bones, brains, and gore. Halaesus' prophet-sire, 565 foreseeing doom, had hid him in dark groves; 566 but when the old man's fading eyes declined 567 in death, the hand of Fate reached forth and doomed 568 the young life to Evander's sword; him now 569 Pallas assailed, first offering this prayer: 570 “O Father Tiber, give my poising shaft pectore fatur: 557 Istic nunc, metuende, iace. Non te optima mater 558 condet humi patrioque onerabit membra sepulchro: 559 alitibus linquere feris aut gurgite mersum 560 unda feret piscesque impasti volnera lambent. 561 Protinus Antaeum et Lucam, prima agmina Turni, 562 persequitur fortemque Numam fulvumque Camertem, 563 magnanimo Volcente satum, ditissimus agri 564 qui fuit Ausonidum et tacitis regnavit Amyclis. 565 Aegaeon qualis, centum cui bracchia dicunt 566 centenasque manus, quinquaginta oribus ignem 567 pectoribusque arsisse, Iovis cum fulmina contra 568 tot paribus streperet clipeis, tot stringeret enses: 569 sic toto Aeneas desaevit in aequore victor,	571 through stout Halaesus' heart its lucky way! 572 The spoil and trophy of the hero slain 573 on thine own oak shall hang.” The god received 574 the vow, and while Halaesus held his shield 575 over Imaon, his ill-fated breast

10.570	570 ut semel intepuit mucro. Quin ecce Niphaei 571 quadriiugis in equos adversaque pectora tendit. 572 Atque illi longe gradientem et dira frementem 573 ut videre, metu versi retroque ruentes 574 effunduntque ducem rapiuntque ad litora currus. 575 Interea biiugis infert se Lucagus albis 576 in medios fraterque Liger; sed frater habenis 577 flectit equos, strictum rotat acer Lucagus ensem. 578 Haud tulit Aeneas tanto fervore furentis: 579 inruit adversaque ingens apparuit hasta. 580 Cui Liger: 581 Non Diomedis equos nec currum cernis Achillis 582 aut Phrygiae campos: nunc belli finis et aevi 583 his dabitur terris. Vesano talia late 584 dicta volant Ligeri. Sed non et Troïus heros 585 dicta parat contra: iaculum nam torquet in hostem. 586 Lucagus ut pronus pendens in	576 lay naked to th' Arcadian's hungry spear. 577 But Lausus, seeing such a hero slain, 578 bade his troop have no fear, for he himself 579 was no small strength in war; and first he slew 580 Abas, who fought hard, and had ever seemed 581 himself the sticking-point and tug of war. 582 Down went Arcadia's warriors, and slain 583 etruscans fell, with many a Trojan brave 584 the Greek had spared. Troop charges upon troop 585 well-matched in might, with chiefs of like renown; 586 the last rank crowds the first;—so fierce the press 587 scarce hand or sword can stir. Here Pallas stands, 588 and pushes back the foe; before him looms 589 Lausus, his youthful peer, conspicuous both 590 in beauty; but no star will them restore 591 to home and native land. Yet would the King 592 of high Olympus suffer not the pair 593 to close in battle, but each hero found 594 a later doom at hands of mightier foes. 595 Now Turnus' goddess-sister bids him haste 596 to Lausus' help. So he, in wheeling car, 597 cut through the lines; and when his friends he saw, 598 “Let the fight stop! “ he cried, “for none but I 599 may strike at Pallas; unto me alone 600 the prize of Pallas falls. I

	verbera telo 587 admonuit biiugos, proiecto dum pede laevo 588 aptet se pugnae, subit oras hasta per imas 589 fulgentis clipei, tum laevum perforat inguen: 590 excussus curru moribundus volvitur arvis. 591 Quem pius Aeneas dictis adfatur amaris: 592 Lucage, nulla tuos currus fuga segnis equorum 593 prodidit aut vanae vertere ex hostibus umbrae: 594 ipse rotis saliens iuga deseris. Haec ita fatus 595 arripuit biiugos; frater tendebat inertis 596 infelix palmas, curru delapsus eodem: 597 Per te, per qui te talem genuere parentes, 598 vir Troiane, sine hanc animam et miserere precantis. 599 Pluribus oranti Aeneas: Haud talia dudum	would his sire 601 stood by to see.” He spake: his troop withdrew 602 a fitting space. But as they made him room, 603 the young prince, wondering at the scornful words, 604 looked upon Turnus, glancing up and down 605 that giant frame, and with fierce-frowning brows 606 scanned him from far, hurling defiant words 607 in answer to the King's. “My honor now 608 shall have the royal trophy of this war, 609 or glorious death. For either fortune fair 610 my sire is ready. Threaten me no more!” 611 So saying, to the midmost space he strode, 612 and in Arcadian hearts the blood stood still. 613 Swift from his chariot Turnus leaped, and ran 614 to closer fight. As when some lion sees 615 from his far mountain-lair a raging bull 616 that sniffs the battle from the grassy field, 617 and down the steep he flies—such picture showed 618 grim Turnus as he came. But when he seemed 619 within a spear's cast, Pallas opened fight, 620 expecting Fortune's favor to the brave 621 in such unequal match; and thus he prayed: 622 “O, by my hospitable father's roof, 623 where thou didst enter as a stranger-guest, 624 hear me, Alcides, and give aid divine
10.600	600 dicta dabas. Morere et fratrem ne desere frater. 601 Tum latebras animae pectus mucrone recludit. 602 Talia per campos edebat funera ductor 603 Dardanius, torrentis aquae vel turbinis atri 604 more furens. Tandem erumpunt et castra relinquunt 605 Ascanius puer et nequiquam obsessa iuventus. 606 Iunonem interea compellat Iuppiter ultro: 607 O germana mihi atque eadem gratissima coniunx, 608 ut rebare, Venus, nec te sententia fallit, 609 Troianas sustentat opes, non vivida bello 610 dextra viris animusque ferox patiensque pericli. 611 Cui Iuno summissa Quid, o pulcherrime coniunx, 612 sollicitas aegram et tua tristia dicta timentem? 613 Si mihi, quae quondam fuerat	625 to this great deed. Let Turnus see these hands 626 strip from his half-dead breast the bloody spoil! 627 and let his eyes in death endure to see 628 his conqueror!” Alcides heard the youth: 629 but prisoned in his heart a deep-drawn sigh, 630 and shed vain tears; for Jove, the King and Sire, . 631 spoke with benignant accents to his son: 632 “To each his day is given. Beyond recall 633 man's little time runs by: but to prolong 634 life's glory by great deeds is virtue's power. 635 Beneath the lofty walls of fallen Troy 636 fell many a son of Heaven. Yea, there was slain 637 Sarpedon, my own offspring. Turnus too 638 is summoned to his doom, and nears the bounds 639 of his appointed span.” So speaking, Jove 640 turned from Rutulia's war his eyes away. 641 But Pallas hurled his lance with might and main, 642 and from its hollow scabbard flashed his sword. 643 The flying shaft touched where the plated steel 644 over the shoulders rose, and worked its way 645 through the shield's rim—then falling, quamque esse decebat, 614 vis in amore foret, non hoc mihi namque negares, 615 omnipotens, quin et pugnae subducere Turnum 616 et Dauno possem incolumem servare parenti. 617 Nunc pereat Teucrisque pio det sanguine poenas. 618 Ille tamen nostra deducit origine nomen 619 Pilumnusque illi quartus pater et tua larga 620 saepe manu multisque oneravit limina donis. 621 Cui rex aetherii breviter sic fatur Olympi: 622 Si mora praesentis leti tempusque caduco 623 oratur iuveni meque hoc ita ponere sentis, 624 tolle fuga Turnum atque instantibus eripe fatis 625 hactenus indulsisse vacat. Sin altior istis 626 sub precibus venia ulla latet totumque moveri 627 mutarive putas bellum, spes pascis inanis. 628 Et Iuno adlacrimans: Quid si, quae voce gravaris, 629 mente dares atque haec Turno rata vita maneret?	glanced aside 646 from Turnus' giant body. Turnus then 647 poised, without haste, his iron-pointed spear, 648 and, launching it on Pallas, cried, “Look now 649 will not this shaft a good bit deeper drive?” 650 He said: and through the mid-boss of the shield, 651 steel scales and brass with bull's-hide folded round, 652 the quivering spear-point crashed resistlessly, 653 and through the corselet's broken barrier 654 pierced Pallas' heart. The youth plucked out in vain

10.630	630 Nunc manet insontem gravis exitus, aut ego veri 631 vana feror. Quod ut O potius formidine falsa 632 ludar et in melius tua, qui potes, orsa reflectas! 633 Haec ubi dicta dedit, caelo se protinus alto 634 misit, agens hiemem nimbo succincta per auras, 635 Iliacamque aciem et Laurentia castra petivit. 636 Tum dea nube cava tenuem sine viribus umbram 637 in faciem Aeneae, visu mirabile monstrum, 638 Dardaniis ornat telis clipeumque iubasque 639 divini adsimulat capitis, dat inania verba, 640 dat sine mente sonum gressusque effingit euntis, 641 morte obita qualis fama est volitare figuras 642 aut quae sopitos deludunt somnia	655 the hot shaft from the wound; his life and blood 656 together ebbed away, as sinking prone 657 on his rent side he fell; above him rang 658 his armor; and from lips with blood defiled 659 he breathed his last upon his foeman's ground. 660 Over him Turnus stood: “Arcadians all,” 661 He cried, “take tidings of this feat of arms 662 to King Evander. With a warrior's wage 663 his Pallas I restore, and freely grant 664 what glory in a hero's tomb may lie, 665 or comfort in a grave. They dearly pay 666 who bid Aeneas welcome at their board.” 667 So saying, with his left foot he held down 668 the lifeless form, and raised the heavy weight 669 of graven belt, which pictured forth that crime 670 of youthful company by treason slain, 671 all on their wedding night, in bridal bowers 672 to horrid murder given,— which Clonus, son 673 of Eurytus, had wrought in lavish gold; 674 this Turnus in his triumph bore away, 675 exulting

	sensus. 643 At primas laeta ante acies exsultat imago 644 inritatque virum telis et voce lacessit. 645 Instat cui Turnus stridentemque eminus hastam 646 conicit: illa dato vertit vestigia tergo. 647 Tum vero Aenean aversum ut cedere Turnus 648 credidit atque animo spem turbidus hausit inanem, 649 Quo fugis, Aenea? Thalamos ne desere pactos; 650 hac dabitur dextra tellus quaesita per undas. 651 Talia vociferans sequitur strictumque coruscat 652 mucronem nec ferre videt sua gaudia ventos. 653 Forte ratis celsi coniuncta crepidine saxi 654 expositis stabat scalis et ponte parato, 655 qua rex Clusinis advectus Osinius oris. 656 Huc sese trepida Aeneae fugientis imago 657 conicit in latebras; nec Turnus segnior instat 658 exsuperatque moras et pontis transilit altos. 659 Vix proram attigerat: rumpit Saturnia funem	in the spoil. O heart of man, 676 not knowing doom, nor of events to be! 677 Nor, being lifted up, to keep thy bounds 678 in prosperous days! To Turnus comes the hour 679 when he would fain a prince's ransom give 680 had Pallas passed unscathed, and will bewail 681 cuch spoil of victory. With weeping now 682 and lamentations Ioud his comrades lay 683 young Pallas on his shield, and thronging close 684 carry him homeward with a mournful song:
10.660	660 avolsamque rapit revoluta per aequora navem. 661 Illum autem Aeneas absentem in praelia poscit; 662 obvia multa virum demittit corpora morti: 663 tum levis haud ultra latebras iam quaerit imago, 664 sed sublime volans nubi se immiscuit atrae. 665 Cum Turnum medio interea fert aequore turbo. 666 Respicit ignarus rerum ingratusque salutis 667 et duplicis cum voce manus ad sidera tendit: 668 Omnipotens genitor, tanton me crimine dignum 669 duxisti et talis voluisti expendere poenas? 670 Quo feror? Unde abii? Quae me fuga quemve reducit? 671 Laurentisne iterum muros aut	685 alas! the sorrow and the glorious gain 686 thy sire shall have in thee. For one brief day 687 bore thee to battle and now bears away; 688 yet leavest thou full tale of foemen slain. 689 No doubtful rumor to Aeneas breaks 690 the direful news, but a sure messenger 691 tells him his followers' peril, and implores 692 prompt help for routed Troy. His ready sword 693 reaped down the nearest foes, and through their line 694 clove furious path and broad; the valiant blade 695 through oft-repeated bloodshed groped its way, 696 proud Turnus, unto thee! His heart beholds 697 Pallas and Sire Evander, their kind board 698 in welcome spread, their friendly league of peace 699 proffered and sealed with him, the stranger-guest. 700 So Sulmo's sons, four warriors, and four 701 of Ufens sprung, he took alive—to slay 702 as victims to the shades, and pour a stream 703 of castra videbo? 672 Quid manus illa virum, qui me meaque arma secuti? 673 Quosne (nefas) omnis infanda in morte reliqui 674 et nunc palantis video gemitumque cadentum 675 accipio! Quid ago? Aut quae iam satis ima dehiscat 676 terra mihi? Vos O potius miserescite venti: 677 in rupes, in saxa, volens vos Turnus adoro 678 ferte ratem saevisque vadis immittite Syrtis, 679 quo neque me Rutuli nec conscia fama sequatur. 680 Haec memorans animo nunc huc, nunc fluctuat illuc, 681 an sese mucrone ob tantum dedecus amens 682 induat et crudum per costas exigat ensem, 683 fluctibus an iaciat mediis et litora nando 684 curva petat Teucrumque iterum se reddat in arma. 685 Ter conatus utramque viam, ter maxima Iuno 686 continuit iuvenemque animi miserata repressit. 687 Labitur alta secans fluctuque aestuque secundo 688 et patris antiquam Dauni defertur ad urbem. 689 At Iovis interea monitis Mezentius ardens	captives' blood upon a flaming pyre. 704 Next from afar his hostile shaft he threw 705 at Mago, who with wary motion bowed 706 beneath the quivering weapon, as it sped 707 clean over him; then at Aeneas' knees 708 he crouched and clung with supplicating cry: 709 “O, by thy father's spirit, by thy hope 710 in young Iulus, I implore thee, spare 711 for son and father's sake this life of mine. 712 A lofty house have I, where safely hid 713 are stores of graven silver and good weight 714 of wrought and unwrought gold. The fate of war 715 hangs not on me; nor can one little life 716 thy victory decide.” In answer spoke 717 Aeneas: “Hoard the silver and the gold 718 for thy own sons. Such bartering in war

10.690	690 succedit pugnae Teucrosque invadit ovantis. 691 Concurrunt Tyrrhenae acies atque omnibus uni, 692 uni odiisque viro telisque frequentibus instant. 693 Ille velut rupes, vastum quae prodit in aequor, 694 obvia ventorum furiis expostaque ponto, 695 vim cunctam atque minas perfert caelique marisque, 696 ipsa immota manens, prolem Dolichaonis Hebrum 697 sternit humi, cum quo Latagum Palmumque fugacem, 698 sed Latagum saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis 699 occupat os faciemque adversam, poplite Palmum 700 succiso volvi segnem sinit,	719 finished with Turnus, when fair Pallas fell. 720 Thus bids Anchises' shade, Iulus—thus!” 721 He spoke: and, grasping with his mighty left 722 the helmet of the vainly suppliant foe, 723 bent back the throat and drove hilt-deep his sword. 724 A little space removed, Haemonides, 725 priest of Phoebus and pale Trivia, stood, 726 whose ribboned brows a sacred fillet bound: 727 in shining vesture he, and glittering arms. 728 Him too the Trojan met, repelled, and towered 729 above the fallen form, o'ermantling it 730 in mortal shade; Serestus bore away 731 those famous arms a trophy vowed to thee, 732 Gradivus, Iord of war! Soon to fresh fight 733 came Caeculus, a child of Vulcan's line, 734 and Umbro on the Marsic mountains bred: 735 these met the Trojan's wrath. His sword

	armaque Lauso 701 donat habere umeris et vertice figere cristas. 702 Nec non Euanthen Phrygium Paridisque Mimanta 703 aequalem comitemque, una quem nocte Theano 704 in lucem genitori Amyco dedit et face praegnans 705 Cisseis regina Parin creat: urbe paterna 706 occubat, ignarum Laurens habet ora Mimanta. 707 Ac velut ille canum morsu de montibus altis 708 actus aper, multos Vesulus quem pinifer annos 709 defendit multosve palus Laurentia, silva 710 pastus harundinea, postquam inter retia ventum est, 711 substitit infremuitque ferox et inhorruit armos, 712 nec cuiquam irasci propiusque accedere virtus, 713 sed iaculis tutisque procul clamoribus instant; 717 ille autem impavidus partis cunctatur in omnis, 718 dentibus infrendens, et tergo decutit hastas. 714 haud aliter, iustae quibus est Mezentius irae, 715 non ulli est animus stricto concurrere ferro; 716 missilibus longe et vasto clamore lacessunt: 719 Venerat antiquis Corythi de finibus Acron,	shore off 736 Anxur's left hand, and the whole orbed shield 737 dropped earthward at the stroke: though Anxur's tongue 738 had boasted mighty things, as if great words 739 would make him strong, and lifting his proud heart 740 as high as heaven, had hoped perchance to see 741 gray hairs and length of days. Then Tarquitus 742 strode forth, exulting in his burnished arms 743 (Him Dryope, the nymph, to Faunus bore), 744 and dared oppose Aeneas' rage. But he 745 drew back his lance and, charging, crushed at once 746 corselet and ponderous shield; then off he struck 747 the supplicating head, which seemed in vain 748 preparing speech; while o'er the reeking corpse
10.720	720 Graius homo, infectos linquens profugus hymenaeos. 721 Hunc ubi miscentem longe media agmina vidit, 722 purpureum pennis et pactae coniugis ostro: 723 impastus stabula alta leo ceu saepe peragrans, 724 suadet enim vesana fames, si forte fugacem 725 conspexit capream aut surgentem in cornua cervum, 726 gaudet, hians immane, comasque arrexit et haeret 727 visceribus super accumbens, lavit inproba taeter 728 ora cruor, 729 sic ruit in densos alacer Mezentius hostis.	749 the victor stood, and thrusting it away 750 spoke thus with wrathful soul: “Now lie thou there, 751 thou fearsome sight! No noble mother's hand 752 shall hide thee in the ground, or give those limbs 753 to their ancestral tomb. Thou shalt be left 754 to birds of ravin; or go drifting far 755 along yon river to engulfing seas, 756 where starving fishes on those wounds shall feed.” 757 Antceus next and Lucas he pursues, 758 though all in Turnus' van; and Numa bold 759 and Camers tawny-tressed, the son and heir 760 of Volscens the stout-hearted, whose domain 761 surpassed the richest of Ausonia's lords, 762 when over hushed Amyclae he was king. 763 Like old Aegaeon of the hundred arms, 764 the

	730 Sternitur infelix Acron et calcibus atram 731 tundit humum expirans infractaque tela cruentat. 732 Atque idem fugientem haud est dignatus Oroden 733 sternere nec iacta caecum dare cuspide volnus: 734 obvius adversoque occurrit seque viro vir 735 contulit, haud furto melior, sed fortibus armis. 736 Tum super abiectum posito pede nixus et hasta: 737 Pars belli haud temnenda, viri, iacet altus Orodes. 738 Conclamant socii laetum paeana secuti. 739 Ille autem exspirans: Non me, quicumque es, inulto, 740 victor, nec longum laetabere: te quoque fata 741 prospectant paria atque eadem mox arva tenebis. 742 Ad quae subridens mixta Mezentius ira: 743 Nunc morere. Ast de me divom pater atque hominum rex 744 viderit. Hoc dicens eduxit corpore telum: 745 olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget 746 somnus, in aeternam clauduntur lumina noctem. 747 Caedicus Alcathoum obtruncat, Sacrator Hydaspen 748 Partheniumque Rapo et praedurum viribus Orsen, 749 Messapus Croniumque Lycaoniumque Erichaeten,	hundred-handed, from whose mouths and breasts 765 blazed fifty fiery blasts, as he made war 766 with fifty sounding shields and fifty swords 767 against Jove's thunder;—so Aeneas raged 768 victorious o'er the field, when once his steel 769 warmed to its work. But lo, he turns him now 770 where come Niphaeus' bold-advancing wheels 771 and coursers four, who, when at furious speed 772 they faced his giant stride and dreadful cry, 773 upreared in panic, and reversing spilled 774 their captain to the ground, and bore away 775 the chariot to the river's distant shore.
10.750	750 illum infrenis equi lapsu tellure iacentem, 751 hunc peditem. Pedes et Lycius processerat Agis, 752 quem tamen haud expers Valerus virtutis avitae 753 deicit; at Thronium Salius Saliumque Nealces 754 insidiis, iaculo et longe fallente sagitta. 755 Iam gravis aequabat luctus et mutua Mavors 756 funera: caedebant pariter pariterque ruebant 757 victores victique, neque his fuga nota neque illis. 758 Di Iovis in tectis iram miserantur inanem	776 Meanwhile, with two white coursers to their car, 777 the brothers Lucagus and Liger drove 778 into the heart of battle: Liger kept 779 with skilful hand the manage of the steeds; 780 bold Lucagus swung wide his naked sword. 781 Aeneas, by their wrathful brows defied, 782 brooked not the sight, but to the onset flew, 783 huge-looming, with adverse and threatening spear. 784 Cried Liger, “Not Achilles' chariot, ours! 785 Nor team of Diomed on Phrygia's plain! 786 The last of life and strife shall be thy meed 787 upon this very ground.” Such raving word 788 flowed loud from Liger's lip: not with a word 789 the Trojan hero answered him, but flung

	759 amborum et tantos mortalibus esse labores: 760 hinc Venus, hinc contra spectat Saturnia Iuno, 761 pallida Tisiphone media inter milia saevit. 762 At vero ingentem quatiens Mezentius hastam 763 turbidus ingreditur campo. Quam magnus Orion, 764 cum pedes incedit medii per maxima Nerei 765 stagna viam scindens, umero supereminet undas 766 aut summis referens annosam montibus ornum 767 ingrediturque solo et caput inter nubila condit: 768 talis se vastis infert Mezentius armis. 769 Huic contra Aeneas, speculatus in agmine longo, 770 obvius ire parat. Manet imperterritus ille, 771 hostem magnanimum opperiens, et mole sua stat; 772 atque oculis spatium emensus, quantum satis hastae: 773 Dextra mihi deus et telum, quod missile libro, 774 nunc adsint! Voveo praedonis corpore raptis 775 indutum spoliis ipsum te, Lause, tropaeum 776 Aeneae. Dixit stridentemque eminus hastam 777 iecit; at illa volans clipeo est excussa proculque 778 egregium Antoren latus inter et ilia figit, 779 Herculis Antoren comitem, qui missus ab Argis	790 his whirling spear; and even as Lucagus 791 leaned o'er the horses, goading them with steel, 792 and, left foot forward, gathered all his strength 793 to strike—the spear crashed through the under rim 794 of his resplendent shield and entered deep 795 in the left groin; then from the chariot fallen, 796 the youth rolled dying on the field, while thus 797 pious Aeneas paid him taunting words: 798 “O Lucagus, thy chariot did not yield 799 because of horses slow to fly, or scared 800 by shadows of a foe. It was thyself 801 leaped o'er the wheel and fled.” So saying, he grasped 802 the horses by the rein. The brother then, 803 spilled also from the car, reached wildly forth 804 his helpless hands: “O, by thy sacred head, 805 and by the parents who such greatness gave, 806 good Trojan, let me live! Some pity show 807 to prostrate me!” But ere he longer sued, 808 Aeneas cried, “Not so thy language ran 809 a moment gone! Die thou! Nor let this day 810 brother from brother part!” Then where the life 811 hides in the bosom, he thrust deep his sword. 812 Thus o'er the field of war the Dardan King 813 moved on, death-dealing: like a breaking flood 814 or cloudy whirlwind seemed his wrath. Straightway 815 the boy Ascanius from the ramparts came, 816 his warriors with him; for the siege had failed.
10.780	780 haeserat Euandro atque Itala consederat urbe. 781 Sternitur infelix alieno volnere caelumque 782 aspicit et dulcis moriens reminiscitur Argos 783 tum pius Aeneas hastam iacit: illa per orbem 784 aere cavum triplici, per linea terga tribusque 785 transit intextum tauris opus imaque sedit 786 inguine, sed viris haud pertulit. Ocius ensem 787 Aeneas, viso Tyrrheni sanguine laetus,

	788 eripit a femine et trepidanti fervidus instat. 789 Ingemuit cari graviter genitoris amore, 790 ut vidit, Lausus, lacrimaeque per ora volutae. 791 Hic mortis durae casum tuaque optima facta, 792 siqua fidem tanto est operi latura vetustas, 793 non equidem nec te, iuvenis memorande, silebo. 794 Ille pedem referens et inutilis inque ligatus 795 cedebat clipeoque inimicum hastile trahebat: 796 prorupit iuvenis seseque immiscuit armis 797 iamque adsurgentis dextra plagamque ferentis 798 Aeneae subiit mucronem ipsumque morando 799 sustinuit. Socii magno clamore sequuntur, 800 dum genitor nati parma protectus abiret, 801 telaque coniciunt proturbantque eminus hostem 802 missilibus. Furit Aeneas tectusque tenet se. 803 Ac velut effusa siquando grandine nimbi 804 praecipitant, omnis campis diffugit arator 805 omnis et agricola et tuta latet arce viator, 806 aut amnis ripis aut alti fornice saxi, 807 dum pluit in terris, ut possint sole reducto 808 exercere diem: sic obrutus undique telis 809 Aeneas nubem belli, dum detonet omnis,
10.810	810 sustinet et Lausum increpitat Lausoque minatur: 811 Quo moriture ruis maioraque viribus audes? 812 Fallit te incautum pietas tua. Nec minus ille 813 exsultat demens; saevae iamque altius irae 814 Dardanio surgunt ductori, extremaque Lauso 815 Parcae fila legunt: validum namque exigit ensem 816 per medium Aeneas iuvenem totumque recondit. 817 Transiit et parmam mucro, levia	817 Now Jupiter to Juno thus began: 818 “O ever-cherished spouse and sister dear, 819 surely 't is Venus—as thy mind misgave— 820 whose favor props—O, what discernment thine! 821 Yon Trojan power; not swift heroic hands, 822 or souls of fury facing perilous war!” 823 Juno made meek reply: “O noblest spouse! 824 Why vex one sick at heart, who humbly fears 825 thy stern command? If I could claim to-day 826 what once I had, my proper right and due, 827 love's induence, I should not plead in vain 828 to thee, omnipotent, to give me power 829 to arma minacis, 818 et tunicam, molli mater quam neverat auro, 819 implevitque sinum sanguis; tum vita per auras 820 concessit maesta ad manis corpusque reliquit. 821 At vero ut voltum vidit morientis et ora, 822 ora modis Anchisiades pallentia miris, 823 ingemuit miserans graviter dextramque tetendit, 824 et mentem patriae subiit pietatis imago. 825 Quid tibi nunc, miserande puer, pro laudibus istis, 826 quid pius Aeneas tanta dabit indole dignum? 827 Arma, quibus laetatus, habe tua, teque parentum 828 manibus et cineri, siqua est ea cura, remitto. 829 Hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem: 830 Aeneae magni dextra cadis. Increpat ultro 831 cunctantis socios et terra sublevat ipsum, 832 sanguine turpantem comptos de more capillos. 833 Interea genitor Tiberini ad fluminis undam 834 volnera siccabat lymphis corpusque levabat 835 arboris adclinis trunco. Procul aerea ramis 836 dependet galea et prato gravia arma quiescunt. 837 Stant lecti circum iuvenes: ipse aeger anhelans 838 colla fovet, fusus propexam in pectore barbam; 839 multa super Lauso rogitat multumque remittit	lead off Turnus from the fight unscathed, 830 and save him at his father Daunus' prayer. 831 Aye, let him die! And with his loyal blood 832 the Teucrians' vengeance feed! Yet he derives 833 from our Saturnian stem, by fourth remove 834 sprung from Pilumnus. Oft his liberal hands 835 have heaped unstinted offering at thy shrine.” 836 Thus in few words th' Olympian King replied: 837 “If for the fated youth thy prayer implores 838 delay and respite of impending doom, 839 if but so far thou bidst me interpose,— 840 go—favor Turnus' flight, and keep him safe 841 in this imperilled hour; I may concede 842 such boon. But if thy pleading words intend 843 some larger grace, and fain would touch or change 844 the issue of the war, then art thou fed 845 on expectation vain.” With weeping eyes 846 Juno made answer: “Can it be thy mind 847 gives what thy words refuse, and Turnus' life, 848 if rescued, may endure? Yet afterward 849 some cruel close his guiltless day shall see— 850 or far from truth I stray! O, that I were 851 the dupe of empty fears! and O, that thou 852 wouldst but refashion to some happier end 853 the things by thee begun—for thou hast power!”

10.840	840 qui revocent maestique ferant mandata parentis. 841 At Lausum socii exanimem super arma ferebant 842 flentes, ingentem atque ingenti volnere victum. 843 Agnovit longe gemitum praesaga mali mens: 844 canitiem multo deformat pulvere et ambas 845 ad caelum tendit palmas et corpore inhaeret. 846 Tantane me tenuit vivendi, nate,	854 She ceased; and swiftly from the peak of heaven 855 moved earthward, trailing cloud-wrack through the air, 856 and girdled with the storm. She took her way 857 to where Troy's warriors faced Laurentum's line. 858 There of a hollow cloud the goddess framed 859 a shape of airy, unsubstantial shade, 860 Aeneas' image, wonderful to see, 861 and decked it with a Dardan lance and shield, 862 a crested helmet on the godlike head; 863 and windy words she voluptas, 847 ut pro me hostili paterer succedere dextrae, 848 quem genui? Tuane haec genitor per volnera servor, 849 morte tua vivens? Heu, nunc misero mihi demum 850 exitium infelix, nunc alte volnus adactum! 851 Idem ego, nate, tuum maculavi crimine nomen, 852 pulsus ob invidiam solio sceptrisque paternis. 853 Debueram patriae poenas odiisque meorum: 854 omnis per mortis animam sontem ipse dedissem! 855 Nunc vivo neque adhuc homines lucemque relinquo. 856 Sed linquam. Simul hoc dicens attollit in aegrum 857 se femur et, quamvis dolor alto volnere tardet, 858 haud deiectus equum duci iubet. Hoc decus illi, 859 hoc solamen erat; bellis hoc victor abibat 860 omnibus. Adloquitur maerentem et talibus infit: 861 Rhaebe, diu, res siqua diu mortalibus ulla est, 862 viximus. Aut hodie victor spolia illa cruenti 863 et caput Aeneae referes Lausique dolorum 864 ultor eris mecum aut, aperit si nulla viam vis, 865 occumbes pariter; neque enim, fortissime, credo, 866 iussa aliena pati et dominos dignabere Teucros. 867 Dixit et exceptus tergo consueta locavit 868 membra manusque ambas iaculis oneravit acutis, 869 aere caput fulgens cristaque hirsutus equina.	gave of soulless sound, 864 and motion like a stride—such shapes, they say, 865 the hovering phantoms of the dead put on, 866 or empty dreams which cheat our slumbering eyes. 867 Forth to the front of battle this vain shade 868 stalked insolent, and with its voice and spear 869 challenged the warrior. At it Turnus flew, 870 and hurled a hissing spear with distant aim; 871 the thing wheeled round and fled. The foe forthwith, 872 thinking Aeneas vanquished, with blind scorn 873 flattered his own false hope: “Where wilt thou fly, 874 Aeneas? Wilt thou break a bridegroom's word? 875 This sword will give thee title to some land 876 thou hast sailed far to find!” So clamoring loud 877 he followed, flashing far his naked sword; 878 nor saw the light winds waft his dream away.

10.870	870 Sic cursum in medios rapidus dedit: aestuat ingens 871 uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu, 872 873 Atque hic Aenean magna ter voce vocavit. 874 Aeneas agnovit enim laetusque precatur: 875 Sic pater ille deum faciat, sic altus Apollo,	879 By chance in covert of a lofty crag 880 a ship stood fastened and at rest; her sides 881 showed ready bridge and stairway; she had brought 882 Osinius, king of Clusium. Thither came 883 Aeneas' counterfeit of flight and fear, 884 and dropped to darkness. Turnus, nothing loth, 885 gave close chase, overleaping every bar, 886 and scaling the high bridge; but scarce he reached 887 the vessel's prow, when Juno cut

	876 incipias conferre manum. 877 Tantum effatus et infesta subit obvius hasta. 878 Ille autem: Quid me erepto, saevissime, nato 879 terres? Haec via sola fuit, qua perdere posses. 880 Nec mortem horremus nec divom parcimus ulli. 881 Desine: nam venio moriturus et haec tibi porto 882 dona prius. Dixit telumque intorsit in hostem; 883 inde aliud super atque aliud figitque volatque 884 ingenti gyro, sed sustinet aureus umbo. 885 Ter circum adstantem laevos equitavit in orbes 886 tela manu iaciens, ter secum Troïus heros 887 immanem aerato circumfert tegmine silvam. 888 Inde ubi tot traxisse moras, tot spicula taedet 889 vellere et urgetur pugna congressus iniqua, 890 multa movens animo iam tandem erumpit et inter 891 bellatoris equi cava tempora conicit hastam. 892 Tollit se arrectum quadrupes et calcibus auras 893 verberat effusumque equitem super ipse secutus 894 implicat eiectoque incumbit cernuus armo. 895 Clamore incendunt caelum Troesque Latinique. 896 Advolat Aeneas vaginaque eripit ensem 897 et super haec: Ubi nunc Mezentius acer et illa 898 effera vis animi? Contra Tyrrhenus, ut auras 899 suspiciens hausit caelum mentemque recepit:	her loose, 888 the cables breaking, and along swift waves 889 pushed her to sea. Yet in that very hour 890 Aeneas to the battle vainly called 891 the vanished foe, and round his hard-fought path 892 stretched many a hero dead. No longer now 893 the mocking shadow sought to hide, but soared 894 visibly upward and was Iost in cloud, 895 while Turnus drifted o'er the waters wide 896 before the wind. Bewildered and amazed 897 he looked around him; little joy had he 898 in his own safety, but upraised his hands 899 in prayer to Heaven: “O Sire omnipotent! 900 Didst thou condemn me to a shame like this? 901 Such retribution dire? Whither now? 902 Whence came I here? What panic wafts away 903 this Turnus—if 't is he? Shall I behold 904 Laurentum's towers once more? But what of those 905 my heroes yonder, who took oath to me, 906 and whom—O sin and shame!—I have betrayed 907 to horrible destruction? Even now 908 I see them routed, and my ears receive
10.900	900 Hostis amare, quid increpitas mortemque minaris? 901 Nullum in caede nefas, nec sic ad proelia veni, 902 nec tecum meus haec pepigit mihi foedera Lausus. 903 Unum hoc per siqua est victis venia hostibus oro: 904 corpus humo patiare tegi. Scio acerba meorum 905 circumstare odia: hunc, oro, defende furorem 906 et me consortem nati concede sepulchro. 907 Haec loquitur iuguloque haud inscius accipit ensem 908 undantique animam diffundit in arva cruore.

11.1	1 Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit: 2 Aeneas, quamquam et sociis dare tempus humandis 3 praecipitant curae turbataque funere mens est, 4 vota deum primo victor solvebat Eoo. 5 Ingentem quercum decisis undique ramis 6 constituit tumulo fulgentiaque induit arma, 7 Mezenti ducis exuvias, tibi, magne, tropaeum, 8 bellipotens: aptat rorantis sanguine cristas 9 telaque trunca viri et bis sex thoraca petitum 10 perfossumque locis clipeumque ex aere sinistrae 11 subligat atque ensem collo suspendit eburnum. 12 Tum socios, namque omnis eum stipata tegebat 13 turba ducum, sic incipiens hortatur ovantis: 14 Maxima res effecta, viri; timor omnis abesto, 15 quod superest: haec sunt spolia et de rege superbo 16 primitiae, manibusque meis Mezentius hic est. 17 Nunc iter ad regem nobis murosque Latinos. 18 Arma parate animis et spe praesumite bellum, 19 nequa mora ignaros, ubi primum vellere signa 20 adnuerint superi pubemque educere castris, 21 impediat segnisve metu sententia tardet. 22 Interea socios inhumataque corpora terrae 23 mandemus, qui solus honos Acheronte sub imo est. 24 Ite, ait, egregias animas, quae sanguine nobis 25 hanc patriam peperere suo, decorate supremis 26 muneribus, maestamque Evandri primus ad urbem	1 Up from the sea now soared the dawning day: 2 Aeneas, though his sorrow bids him haste 3 to burial of the slain, and his sad soul 4 is clouded with the sight of death, fulfils, 5 for reward to his gods, a conqueror's vow, 6 at morning's earliest beam. A mighty oak 7 shorn of its limbs he sets upon a hill 8 and clothes it o'er with glittering arms, the spoil 9 of King Mezentius, and a trophy proud 10 to thee, great lord of war. The hero's plumes 11 bedewed with blood are there, and splintered spears; 12 there hangs the corselet, by the thrusting steel 13 twelve times gored through; upon the left he binds 14 the brazen shield, and from the neck suspends 15 the ivory-hilted sword. Aeneas thus, 16 as crowding close his train of captains throng, 17 addressed his followers: “Ye warriors mine, 18 our largest work is done. Bid fear begone 19 of what is left to do. Behold the spoils! 20 Yon haughty King was firstfruits of our war. 21 See this Mezentius my hands have made! 22 Now to the Latin town and King we go. 23 Arm you in soul! With heart of perfect hope 24 prepare the war! So when the gods give sign 25 to open battle and lead forth our brave 26 out of this stronghold, no bewilderment, 27 nor tarrying, nor fearful, faltering mind 28 shall slack our march. Meanwhile in earth we lay 29 our comrades fallen; for no honor else 30 in Acheron have they. Go forth,” said he, 31 “bring gifts of honor and of last farewell 32 to those high hearts by shedding of whose blood 33 our country lives. To sad Evander's town 34 bear Pallas first; who, though he did not fail 35 of virtue's crown, was seized by doom unblest, 36 and to the bitterness of death consigned.”

	27 mittatur Pallas, quem non virtutis egentem 28 abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo. 29 Sic ait inlacrimans recipitque ad limina gressum, 30 corpus ubi exanimi positum Pallantis Acoetes
11.31	31 servabat senior, qui Parrhasio Evandro 32 armiger ante fuit, sed non felicibus aeque 33 tum comes auspiciis caro datus ibat alumno. 34 Circum omnis famulumque manus Troianaque turba 35 et maestum Iliades crinem de more solutae. 36 Ut vero Aeneas foribus sese intulit altis, 37 ingentem gemitum tunsis ad sidera tollunt 38 pectoribus, maestoque immugit regia luctu. 39 Ipse caput nivei fultum Pallantis et ora 40 ut vidit levique patens in pectore vulnus 41 cuspidis Ausoniae, lacrimis ita fatur obortis. 42 Tene, inquit, miserande puer, cum laeta veniret, 43 invidit Fortuna mihi, ne regna videres 44 nostra neque ad sedes victor veherere paternas? 45 Non haec Evandro de te promissa parenti 46 discedens dederam, cum me complexus euntem 47 mitteret in magnum imperium metuensque moneret 48 acris esse viros, cum dura proelia gente. 49 Et nunc ille quidem spe multum captus inani 50 fors et vota facit cumulatque altaria donis: 51 nos iuvenem exanimum et nil iam caelestibus ullis 52 debentem vano maesti comitamur honore. 53 Infelix, nati funus crudele videbis! 54 Hi nostri reditus expectatique triumphi! 55 Haec mea magna fides! At non, Evandre, pudendis 56 vulneribus pulsum adspicies nec	37 Weeping he spoke, and slowly backward drew 38 to the tent-door, where by the breathless clay 39 of Pallas stood Acoetes, aged man, 40 once bearer of Evander's arms, but now 41 under less happy omens set to guard 42 his darling child. Around him is a throng 43 of slaves, with all the Trojan multitude, 44 and Ilian women, who the wonted way 45 let sorrow's tresses loosely flow. When now 46 Aeneas to the lofty doors drew near, 47 all these from smitten bosoms raised to heaven 48 a mighty moaning, till the King's abode 49 was loud with anguish. There Aeneas viewed 50 the pillowed head of Pallas cold and pale, 51 the smooth young breast that bore the gaping wound 52 of that Ausonian spear, and weeping said: 53 “Did Fortune's envy, smiling though she came, 54 refuse me, hapless boy, that thou shouldst see 55 my throne established, and victorious ride 56 beside me to thy father's house? Not this 57 my parting promise to thy King and sire, 58 Evander, when with friendly, fond embrace 59 to win imperial power he bade me go; 60 yet warned me anxiously I must resist 61 bold warriors and a stubborn breed of foes. 62 And haply even now he cheats his heart 63 with expectation vain, and offers vows, 64 heaping with gifts the altars of his gods. 65 But we with unavailing honors bring 66 this lifeless youth, who owes the gods of heaven sospite dirum 57 optabis nato funus pater. Ei mihi, quantum 58 praesidium Ausonia et quantum tu perdis, Iule! 59 Haec ubi deflevit, tolli miserabile corpus 60 imperat et toto lectos ex agmine mittit

11.61	61 mille viros, qui supremum comitentur honorem 62 intersintque patris lacrimis, solacia luctus 63 exigua ingentis, misero sed debita patri. 64 Haud segnes alii crates et molle feretrum 65 arbuteis texunt virgis et vimine querno 66 exstructosque toros obtentu frondis inumbrant. 67 Hic iuvenem agresti sublimem stramine ponunt, 68 qualem virgineo demessum pollice florem 69 seu mollis violae seu languentis hyacinthi, 70 cui neque fulgor adhuc necdum sua forma recessit: 71 non iam mater alit tellus viresque ministrat. 72 Tum geminas vestes auroque ostroque rigentis 73 extulit Aeneas, quas illi laeta laborum 74 ipsa suis quondam manibus Sidonia Dido 75 fecerat et tenui telas discreverat auro. 76 Harum unam iuveni supremum maestus honorem 77 induit arsurasque comas obnubit amictu, 78 multaque praeterea Laurentis praemia pugnae 79 aggerat et longo praedam iubet ordine duci. 80 Addit equos et tela, quibus spoliaverat hostem. 81 Vinxerat et post terga manus, quos mitteret umbris 82 inferias, caeso sparsuros sanguine flammas, 83 indutosque iubet truncos hostilibus armis 84 ipsos ferre duces inimicaque nomina figi. 85 Ducitur infelix aevo confectus	67 no more of gift and vow. O ill-starred King! 68 Soon shalt thou see thy son's unpitying doom! 69 What a home-coming! This is glory's day 70 so Iong awaited; this the solemn pledge 71 I proudly gave. But fond Evander's eyes 72 will find no shameful wounding on the slain, 73 nor for a son in coward safety kept 74 wilt thou, the sire, crave death. But woe is me! 75 How strong a bulwark in Ausonia falls! 76 What loss is thine, Iulus!” Thus lamenting, 77 he bids them lift the body to the bier, 78 and sends a thousand heroes from his host 79 to render the last tributes, and to share 80 father's tears:—poor solace and too small 81 for grief so great, but due that mournful sire. 82 Some busy them to build of osiers fine 83 the simple litter, twining sapling oaks 84 with evergreen, till o'er death's Iofty bed 85 the branching shade extends. Upon it lay, 86 as if on shepherd's couch, the youthful dead, 87 like fairest flower by virgin fingers culled, 88 frail violet or hyacinth forlorn, 89 of color still undimmed and leaf unmarred; 90 but from the breast of mother-earth no more 91 its life doth feed. Then good Aeneas brought 92 two broidered robes of scarlet and fine gold, 93 which with the gladsome labor of her hands 94 Sidonian Dido wrought him long ago, 95 the thin-spun gold inweaving. One of these 96 the sad prince o'er the youthful body threw

	Acoetes: 86 pectora nunc foedans pugnis, nunc unguibus ora 87 sternitur et toto proiectus corpore terrae.~.~. 88 Ducunt et Rutulo perfusos sanguine currus. 89 Post bellator equus positis insignibus Aethon 90 it lacrimans guttisque umectat grandibus ora.
11.91	91 Hastam alii galeamque ferunt, nam cetera Turnus 92 victor habet. Tum maesta phalanx Teucrique sequuntur 93 Tyrrhenique omnes et versis Arcades armis. 94 Postquam omnis longe comitum praecesserat ordo, 95 substitit Aeneas gemituque haec addidit alto: 96 Nos alias hinc ad lacrimas eadem horrida belli 97 fata vocant: salve aeternum mihi, maxime Palla, 98 aeternumque vale. Nec plura effatus ad altos 99 tendebat muros gressumque in castra ferebat. 100 Iamque oratores aderant ex urbe Latina, 101 velati ramis oleae veniamque rogantes: 102 corpora, per campos ferro quae fusa iacebant, 103 redderet ac tumulo sineret succedere terrae; 104 nullum cum victis certamen et aethere cassis; 105 parceret hospitibus quondam socerisque vocatis. 106 Quos bonus Aeneas haud aspernanda precantis 107 prosequitur venia et verbis haec insuper addit: 108 Quaenam vos tanto fortuna indigna, Latini, 109 implicuit bello, qui nos fugiatis amicos? 110 Pacem me exanimis et Martis sorte peremptis 111 oratis? Equidem et vivis concedere vellem. 112 Nec veni, nisi fata locum sedemque dedissent, 113 nec bellum cum gente gero: rex nostra reliquit 114 hospitia et Turni potius se credidit	97 for parting gift; and with the other veiled 98 those tresses from the fire; he heaped on high 99 Laurentum's spoils of war, and bade to bring 100 much tribute forth: horses and arms he gave, 101 seized from the fallen enemy; with hands 102 fettered behind them filed a captive train 103 doomed to appease the shades, and with the flames 104 to mix their flowing blood. He bade his chiefs 105 set up the trunks of trees and clothe them well 106 with captured arms, inscribing on each one 107 some foeman's name. Then came Acoetes forth, 108 a wretched, worn old man, who beat his breast 109 with tight-clenched hands, and tore his wrinkled face 110 with ruthless fingers; oft he cast him down 111 full length along the ground. Then lead they forth 112 the blood-stained Rutule chariots of war; 113 Aethon, the war-horse, of his harness bare, 114 walks mournful by; big teardrops wet his cheek. 115 Some bear the lance and helm; for all the rest 116 victorious Turnus seized. Then filed along 117 a mournful Teucrian cohort; next the host 118 Etrurian and the men of Arcady 119 with trailing arms reversed. Aeneas now, 120 when the long company had passed him by, 121 spoke thus and groaned aloud: “Ourselves from hence 122 are summoned by the same dread doom of war 123 to other tears. Farewell forevermore! 124 Heroic Pallas! be forever blest! 125 I bid thee hail, farewell!” In silence then 126 back to the stronghold's Iofty walls he moved.

	armis. 115 Aequius huic Turnum fuerat se opponere morti. 116 Si bellum finire manu, si pellere Teucros 117 apparat, his mecum decuit concurrere telis: 118 vixet, cui vitam deus aut sua dextra dedisset. 119 Nunc ite et miseris supponite civibus ignem. 120 Dixerat Aeneas. Illi obstipuere silentes
11.121	121 conversique oculos inter se atque ora tenebant. 122 Tum senior semperque odiis et crimine Drances 123 infensus iuveni Turno sic ore vicissim 124 orsa refert: O fama ingens, ingentior armis 125 vir Troiane, quibus caelo te laudibus aequem? 126 Iustitiaene prius mirer belline laborum? 127 Nos vero haec patriam grati referemus ad urbem 128 et te, siqua viam dederit fortuna, Latino 129 iungemus regi: quaerat sibi foedera Turnus. 130 Quin et fatalis murorum attollere moles 131 saxaque subvectare umeris Troiana iuvabit. 132 Dixerat haec, unoque omnes eadem ore fremebant. 133 Bis senos pepigere dies et pace sequestra 134 per silvas Teucri mixtique inpune Latini 135 erravere iugis. Ferro sonat alta bipenni 136 fraxinus, evertunt actas ad sidera pinus, 137 robora nec cuneis et olentem scindere cedrum 138 nec plaustris cessant vectare gementibus ornos. 139 Et iam Fama volans, tanti praenuntia luctus, 140 Evandrum Evandrique domos et moenia replet, 141 quae modo victorem Latio Pallanta ferebat. 142 Arcades ad portas ruere et de more vetusto 143 funereas rapuere faces; lucet via	127 Now envoys from the Latin citadel 128 came olive-crowned, to plead for clemency: 129 would he not yield those bodies of the dead 130 sword-scattered o'er the plain, and let them lie 131 beneath an earth-built tomb? Who wages war 132 upon the vanquished, the unbreathing slain? 133 To people once his hosts and kindred called, 134 would he not mercy show? To such a prayer, 135 deemed not unworthy, good Aeneas gave 136 the boon, and this benignant answer made: 137 “Ye Latins, what misfortune undeserved 138 has snared you in so vast a war, that now 139 you shun our friendship? Have you here implored 140 peace for your dead, by chance of battle fallen? 141 Pain would I grant it for the living too. 142 I sailed not hither save by Heaven's decree, 143 which called me to this land. I wage no war 144 with you, the people; 't was your King refused 145 our proffered bond of peace, and gave his cause 146 to Turnus' arms. More meet and just it were 147 had Turnus met this death that makes you mourn. 148 If he would end our quarrel sword in hand, 149 thrusting us Teucrians forth, 't was honor's way 150 to cross his blade with mine; that man to whom 151 the gods, or his own valor, had decreed 152 the longer life, had lived. But now depart! 153 Beneath your lost friends light the funeral fires!” 154 So spoke Aeneas; and with wonder mute 155 all stood at gaze, each turning to behold 156 his neighbor's face. Then Drances, full of years, longo 144 ordine flammarum et late discriminat agros. 145 Contra turba Phrygum veniens plangentia iungit 146 agmina. Quae postquam matres succedere tectis 147 viderunt, maestam incendunt clamoribus urbem. 148 At non Evandrum potis est vis ulla tenere, 149 sed venit in medios. Feretro Pallanta reposto 150 procubuit super atque haeret lacrimansque gemensque, 11.151	151 et via vix tandem vocis laxata dolore est. 152 Non haec, O Palla, dederas promissa parenti, 153 cautius ut saevo velles te credere Marti; 154 haud ignarus eram, quantum nova gloria in armis 155 et praedulce decus primo certamine posset. 156 Primitiae iuvenis miserae bellique propinqui 157 dura rudimenta et nulli exaudita deorum 158 vota precesque meae! Tuque, O sanctissima coniunx, 159 felix morte tua neque in hunc servata dolorem! 160 Contra ego vivendo vici mea fata, superstes 161 restarem ut genitor. Troum socia arma secutum 162 obruerent Rutuli telis! Animam ipse dedissem 163 atque haec pompa domum me, non Pallanta, referret, 164 nec vos arguerim, Teucri, nec foedera nec quas 165 iunximus hospitio dextras: sors ista senectae 166 debita erat nostrae. Quod si immatura manebat 167 mors natum, caesis Volscorum milibus ante 168 ducentem in Latium Teucros cecidisse iuvabit. 169 Quin ego non alio digner te funere, Palla, 170 quam pius Aeneas 171 172 Magna tropaea ferunt, quos dat tua dextera Leto: 173 tu quoque nunc stares immanis	157 and ever armed with spite and slanderous word 158 against young Turnus, made this answering plea: 159 “O prince of mighty name, whose feats of arms 160 are even mightier! Trojan hero, how 161 shall my poor praise exalt thee to the skies? 162 Is it thy rectitude or strenuous war 163 most bids me wonder? We will bear thy word 164 right gladly to the city of our sires; 165 and there, if Fortune favor it, contrive 166 a compact with the Latin King. Henceforth 167 let Turnus find his own allies! Ourselves 168 will much rejoice to see thy destined walls, 169 and our own shoulders will be proud to bear 170 the stone for building Troy.” Such speech he made, 171 and all the common voice consented loud. 172 So twelve days' truce they swore, and safe from harm 173 Latins and Teucrians unmolested roved 174 together o'er the wooded hills. Now rang 175 loud steel on ash-tree bole; enormous pines, 176 once thrusting starward, to the earth they threw; 177 and with industrious wedge asunder clove 178 stout oak and odorous cedar, piling high 179 harvest of ash-trees on the creaking wain. 180 Now Rumor, herald of prodigious woe, 181 to King Evander hied, Evander's house 182 and city filling, where, but late, her word 183 had told in Latium Pallas' victory. 184 th' Arcadians thronging to the city-gates 185 bear funeral torches, the accustomed way; 186 in lines of flame the long street flashes far, 187 lighting the fields beyond. To meet them moves 188 a Phrygian company, to join with theirs 189 its lamentation loud. The Latin wives, 190 soon as they saw them entering, aroused 191 the whole sad truncus in armis, 174 esset par aetas et idem si robur ab annis, 175 Turne. Sed infelix Teucros quid demoror armis? 176 Vadite et haec memores regi mandata referte: 177 quod vitam moror invisam Pallante perempto, 178 dextera causa tua est, Turnum natoque patrique 179 quam debere vides. Meritis vacat hic tibi solus 180 fortunaeque locus. Non vitae gaudia quaero,	city with shrill songs of woe. 192 No hand could stay Evander. Forth he flew 193 into the midmost tumult, and fell prone 194 on his dead Pallas, on the resting bier; 195 he clung to the pale corse with tears, with groans, 196 till anguish for a space his lips unsealed: 197 “Not this thy promise, Pallas, to thy sire, 198 to walk not rashly in the war-god's way. 199 I knew too well how honor's morning-star, 200 and sweet, foretasted glory tempt and woo 201 in a first battle. O first-fruit forlorn 202 of youth so fair! O prelude pitiless 203 of war approaching! O my vows and prayers, 204 which not one god would hear! My blessed wife, 205 how happy was the death that spared thee not 206 to taste this bitterness! But I, the while, 207 by living longer lived to meet my doom,— 208 a father sole-surviving. Would I myself 209 had perished by the Rutule's cruel spear,

11.181	181 nec fas, sed nato Manis perferre sub imos. 182 Aurora interea miseris mortalibus almam 183 extulerat lucem, referens opera atque labores: 184 iam pater Aeneas, iam curvo in litore Tarchon 185 constituere pyras. Huc corpora quisque suorum 186 more tulere patrum, subiectisque ignibus atris 187 conditur in tenebras altum caligine caelum. 188 Ter circum accensos cincti fulgentibus armis 189 decurrere rogos, ter maestum funeris ignem 190 lustravere in equis ululatusque ore dedere; 191 spargitur et tellus lacrimis, sparguntur et arma: 192 it caelo clamorque virum clangorque tubarum. 193 Hic alii spolia occisis derepta Latinis 194 coniciunt igni, galeas ensesque decoros 195 frenaque ferventisque rotas; pars munera nota, 196 ipsorum clipeos et non felicia tela. 197 Multa boum circa mactantur corpora Morti, 198 saetigerosque sues raptasque ex omnibus agris	210 the Trojan's cause espousing! This breath of life 211 how gladly had I given! And O, that now 212 yon black solemnity were bearing home 213 myself, not Pallas, dead! Yet blame I not, 214 O Teucrians, the hallowed pact we made, 215 nor hospitable bond and clasp of hands. 216 This doom ye bring me was writ long ago, 217 for my old age. And though my child is fallen 218 untimely, I take comfort that he fell 219 where thousands of the Volscians slaughtered lie, 220 and into Latium led the Teucrian arms. 221 What brighter glory could I crave in death 222 for thee, my Pallas, than Aeneas brings, 223 and Phrygian princes, and Etrurian lords 224 with all Etruria's legions? Lo, they bear 225 yon glittering spoils of victims of thy sword! 226 Thou, Turnus, too, wert now an effigy 227 in giant armor clad, if but his years 228 and strength full ripe had been fair match for thine! 229 But now my woes detain the Trojan host 230 from battle. I beseech ye haste away, 231 and bear this faithful message to your King: 232 since I but linger out a life I loathe, 233 without my Pallas, nothing but thy sword 234 can bid me live. Then let thy sword repay 235 its debt to sire and son by Turnus slain! 236 Such deed alone may with thy honor fit, 237 and happier fortunes. But my life to me 238 has no joy left to pray for, save to bring

	199 in flammam iugulant pecudes. Tum litore toto 200 ardentis spectant socios semustaque servant 201 busta neque avelli possunt, nox umida donec 202 invertit caelum stellis ardentibus aptum. 203 Nec minus et miseri diversa in parte Latini 204 innumeras struxere pyras, et corpora partim 205 multa virum terrae infodiunt avectaque partim 206 finitimos tollunt in agros urbique remittunt, 207 cetera confusaeque ingentem caedis acervum 208 nec numero nec honore cremant: tunc undique vasti 209 certatim crebris conlucent ignibus agri. 210 Tertia lux gelidam caelo dimoverat umbram:	239 my son that solace in the shadowy land.”
11.211	211 maerentes altum cinerem et confusa ruebant 212 ossa focis tepidoque onerabant aggere terrae. 213 Iam vero in tectis, praedivitis urbe Latini, 214 praecipuus fragor et longi pars maxima luctus. 215 Hic matres miseraeque nurus, hic cara sororum 216 pectora maerentum puerique parentibus orbi 217 dirum exsecrantur bellum Turnique hymenaeos: 218 ipsum armis ipsumque iubent decernere ferro, 219 qui regnum Italiae et primos sibi poscat honores. 220 ingravat haec saevus Drances solumque vocari 221 testatur, solum posci in certamina Turnum. 222 Multa simul contra variis sententia dictis 223 pro Turno, et magnum reginae nomen obumbrat, 224 multa virum meritis sustentat fama tropaeis. 225 Hos inter motus, medio in flagrante tumultu, 226 ecce super maesti magna Diomedis ab urbe 227 legati responsa ferunt: nihil omnibus actum	240 Meanwhile o'er sorrowing mortals the bright morn 241 had lifted her mild beam, renewing so 242 the burden of man's toil. Aeneas now 243 built funeral pyres along the winding shore, 244 King Tarchon at his side. Each thither brought 245 the bodies of his kin, observing well 246 all ancient ritual. The fuming fires 247 burned from beneath, till highest heaven was hid 248 in blackest, overmantling cloud. Three times 249 the warriors, sheathed in proud, resplendent steel, 250 paced round the kindling pyres; and three times 251 fair companies of horsemen circled slow, 252 with loud lamenting, round the doleful flame. 253 The wail of warriors and the trumpets' blare 254 the very welkin rend. Cast on the flames 255 are spoils of slaughtered Latins,—helms and blades, 256 bridles and chariot-wheels. Yet others bring 257 gifts to the dead familiar, their own shields 258 and unavailing spears. Around them slain 259 great herds of kine give tribute unto death: 260 swine, bristly-backed, from many a field are borne, 261 and slaughtered sheep bleed o'er the sacred fire. 262 So on the shore the wailing multitude 263 behold their comrades burning, and keep guard 264 o'er the consuming pyres, nor turn away 265 till cooling night re-shifts the globe of heaven, 266 thick-

	228 tantorum impensis operum, nil dona neque aurum 229 nec magnas valuisse preces, alia arma Latinis 230 quaerenda aut pacem Troiano ab rege petendum. 231 Deficit ingenti luctu rex ipse Latinus. 232 Fatalem Aenean manifesto numine ferri 233 admonet ira deum tumulique ante ora recentes. 234 Ergo concilium magnum primosque suorum 235 imperio accitos alta intra limina cogit. 236 olli convenere fluuntque ad regia plenis 237 tecta viis. Sedet in mediis et maximus aevo 238 et primus sceptris haud laeta fronte Latinus. 239 Atque hic legatos Aetola ex urbe remissos, 240 quae referant, fari iubet et responsa reposcit	strewn with numberless far-flaming stars.
11.241	241 ordine cuncta suo. Tum facta silentia linguis, 242 et Venulus dicto parens ita farier infit: 243 Vidimus, o cives, Diomedem Argivaque castra 244 atque iter emensi casus superavimus omnis 245 contigimusque manum, qua concidit Ilia tellus. 246 Ille urbem Argyripam patriae cognomine gentis 247 victor Gargani condebat Iapygis agris. 248 Postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi, 249 munera praeferimus, nomen patriamque docemus, 250 qui bellum intulerint, quae causa attraxerit Arpos. 251 Auditis ille haec placido sic reddidit ore: 252 O fortunatae gentes, Saturnia regna, 253 antiqui Ausonii, quae vos fortuna quietos 254 sollicitat suadetque ignota lacessere bella? 255 Quicumque Iliacos ferro violavimus agros, 256 mitto ea, quae muris bellando exhausta sub altis,	267 Likewise the mournful Latins far away 268 have built their myriad pyres. Yet of the slain 269 not few in graves are laid, and borne with tears 270 to neighboring country-side or native town; 271 the rest—promiscuous mass of dead unknown— 272 to nameless and unhonored ashes burn; 273 with multitude of fires the far-spread fields 274 blaze forth unweariedly. But when from heaven 275 the third morn had dispelled the dark and cold, 276 the mournful bands raked forth the mingled bones 277 and plenteous ashes from the smouldering pyres, 278 then heaped with earth the one sepulchral mound. 279 Now from the hearth-stones of the opulent town 280 of old Latinus a vast wail burst forth, 281 for there was found the chief and bitterest share 282 of all the woe. For mothers in their tears, 283 lone brides, and stricken souls of sisters fond, 284 and boys left fatherless, fling curses Ioud 285 on Turnus' troth-plight and the direful war: 286 “Let him, let Turnus, with his single sword 287 decide the strife,”—they cry,—“and who shall claim 288 Lordship of Italy and power supreme.” 289 Fierce Drances whets their fury, urging all 290 that Turnus singly must the challenge hear, 291 and 257 quos Simois premat ille viros, infanda per orbem 258 supplicia et scelerum poenas expendimus omnes, 259 vel Priamo miseranda manus: scit triste Minervae 260 sidus et Euboicae cautes ultorque Caphareus. 261 Militia ex illa diversum ad litus abacti 262 Atrides Protei Menelaus adusque columnas 263 exsulat, Aetnaeos vidit Cyclopas Ulixes. 264 Regna Neoptolemi referam versosque penates 265 Idomenei? Libycone habitantis litore Locros? 266 Ipse Mycenaeus magnorum ductor Achivom 267 coniugis infandae prima inter limina dextra 268 oppetiit: devictam Asiam subsedit adulter. 269 Invidisse deos, patriis ut redditus aris 270 coniugium optatum et pulchram Calydona viderem?	singly wage the war; but others plead 292 in Turnus' favor; the Queen's noble name 293 protects him, and his high renown in arms 294 defends his cause with well-won trophies fair.

11.271	271 Nunc etiam horribili visu portenta sequuntur, 272 et socii amissi petierunt aethera pennis 273 fluminibusque vagantur aves, heu dira meorum 274 supplicia, et scopulos lacrimosis vocibus implent. 275 Haec adeo ex illo mihi iam speranda fuerunt 276 tempore, cum ferro caelestia corpora demens 277 adpetii et Veneris violavi volnere dextram. 278 Ne vero, ne me ad talis impellite pugnas: 279 nec mihi cum Teucris ullum post eruta bellum 280 Pergama, nec veterum memini laetorve malorum. 281 Munera, quae patriis ad me portatis ab oris, 282 vertite ad Aenean. Stetimus tela aspera contra 283 contulimusque manus: experto credite, quantus 284 in clipeum adsurgat, quo turbine torqueat hastam. 285 Si duo praeterea talis Idaea tulisset 286 terra viros, ultro Inachias venisset	295 Amid these tumults of the wrathful throng, 296 lo, the ambassadors to Diomed 297 arrive with cloudy forehead from their quest 298 in his illustrious town; for naught availed 299 their toilsome errand, nor the gifts and gold, 300 nor strong entreaty. Other help in war 301 the Latins now must find, or humbly sue 302 peace from the Trojan. At such tidings dire 303 even Latinus trembles: Heaven's decrees 304 and influence of gods too visible 305 sustain Aeneas; so the wrath divine 306 and new-filled sepulchres conspicuous 307 give warning clear. Therefore the King convenes 308 a general council of his captains brave 309 beneath the royal towers. They, gathering, 310 throng the approaches thither, where their Iord, 311 gray-haired Latinus, takes the central throne, 312 wearing authority with mournful brow. 313 He bids the envoys from Aetolia's King 314 sent back, to speak and tell the royal words 315 in order due. Forthwith on every tongue 316 fell silence, while the princely Venulus, 317 heeding his Iord's behest, began the parle:

	ad urbes 287 Dardanus, et versis lugeret Graecia fatis. 288 Quidquid apud durae cessatum est moenia Troiae, 289 Hectoris Aeneaeque manu victoria Graium 290 haesit et in decimum vestigia rettulit annum. 291 Ambo animis, ambo insignes praestantibus armis 292 hic pietate prior. Coeant in foedera dextrae, 293 qua datur; ast armis concurrant arma cavete. 294 Et responsa simul quae sint, rex optime, regis 295 audisti et quae sit magno sententia bello. 296 Vix ea legati, variusque per ora cucurrit 297 Ausonidum turbata fremor: ceu saxa morantur 298 cum rapidos amnis, fit clauso gurgite murmur 299 vicinaeque fremunt ripae crepitantibus undis. 300 Ut primum placati animi et trepida ora quierunt, 11.301	301 praefatus divos solio rex infit ab alto: 302 Ante equidem summa de re statuisse, Latini, 303 et vellem et fuerat melius, non tempore tali 304 cogere concilium, cum muros adsidet hostis. 305 Bellum importunum, cives, cum gente deorum 306 invictisque viris gerimus, quos nulla fatigant 307 proelia: nec victi possunt absistere ferro. 308 Spem siquam adscitis Aetolum habuistis in armis, 309 ponite. Spes sibi quisque, sed haec quam angusta videtis; 310 cetera qua rerum iaceant perculsa ruina, 311 ante oculos interque manus sunt omnia vestras. 312 Nec quemquam incuso: potuit quae plurima virtus 313 esse, fuit; toto certatum est corpore regni. 314 Nunc adeo quae sit dubiae sententia menti 315 expediam et paucis, animos	318 “My countrymen,” he said, “our eyes have seen 319 strongholds of Greeks and Diomed the King. 320 We braved all perils to our journey's end 321 and clasped that hand whereof the dreadful stroke 322 wrought Ilium's fall. The hero built a town, 323 Argyripa, hereditary name, 324 near mount Garganus in Apulian land: 325 passing that city's portal and the King's, 326 we found free audience, held forth thy gifts, 327 and told our names and fatherland. We showed 328 what condict was enkindled, and what cause 329 brought us to Arpi's King. He, hearing all, 330 with brow benign made answer to our plea: 331 ‘O happy tribes in Saturn's kingdom born, 332 Ausonia's ancient stem! What fortune blind 333 tempts ye from peace away, and now ensnares 334 in wars unknown? Look how we men that dared 335 lay Ilium waste (I speak not of what woes 336 in battling neath her lofty walls we bore, 337 nor of dead warriors sunk in Simois' wave) 338 have paid the penalty in many a land 339 with chastisement accurst and changeful woe, 340 till Priam's self might pity. Let adhibete, docebo. 316 Est antiquus ager Tusco mihi proximus amni, 317 longus in occasum, finis super usque Sicanos; 318 Aurunci Rutulique serunt et vomere duros 319 exercent colles atque horum asperrima pascunt. 320 Haec omnis regio et celsi plaga pinea montis 321 cedat amicitiae Teucrorum, et foederis aequas 322 dicamus leges sociosque in regna vocemus. 323 Considant, si tantus amor, et moenia condant. 324 Sin alios finis aliamque capessere gentem 325 est animus possuntque solo decedere nostro: 326 bis denas Italo texamus robore navis 327 seu pluris complere valent, iacet omnis ad undam 328 materies, ipsi numerumque modumque carinis 329 praecipiant, nos aera manus navalia demus. 330 Praeterea qui dicta ferant et foedera firment	the star 341 of Pallas tell its tale of fatal storm, 342 off grim Caphereus and Eubcea's crags. 343 Driven asunder from one field of war, 344 Atrides unto farthest Egypt strayed, 345 and wise Ulysses saw from Aetna's caves 346 the Cyclops gathering. Why name the throne 347 of Pyrrhus, or the violated hearth

11.331	331 centum oratores prima de gente Latinos 332 ire placet pacisque manu praetendere ramos, 333 munera portantis aurique eborisque talenta 334 et sellam regni trabeamque insignia nostri. 335 Consulite in medium et rebus succurrite fessis. 336 Tum Drances idem infensus, quem gloria Turni 337 obliqua invidia stimulisque agitabat amaris, 338 largus opum et lingua melior, sed frigida bello 339 dextera, consiliis habitus non futilis auctor, 340 seditione potens (genus huic materna superbum 341 nobilitas dabat, incertum de patre ferebat), 342 surgit et his onerat dictis atque aggerat iras: 343 Rem nulli obscuram nostrae nec vocis egentem 344 consulis, O bone rex: cuncti se	348 whence fled Idomeneus? Or Locri cast 349 on Libya's distant shore? For even he, 350 Lord of Mycenae by the Greeks obeyed, 351 fell murdered on his threshold by the hand 352 of that polluted wife, whose paramour 353 trapped Asia's conqueror. The envious gods 354 withheld me also from returning home 355 to see once more the hearth-stone of my sires, 356 the wife I yearn for, and my Calydon, 357 the beauteous land. For wonders horrible 358 pursue me still. My vanished followers 359 through upper air take wing, or haunt and rove 360 in forms of birds the island waters o'er: 361 ah me, what misery my people feel! 362 The tall rocks ring with their lament and cry. 363 Naught else had I to hope for from that day 364 when my infatuate sword on gods I drew, 365 and outraged with abominable wound 366 the hand of Venus. Urge me not, I pray, 367 to conflicts in this wise. No more for me 368 of war with Trojans after Ilium's fall! 369 I take no joy in evils past, nor wish 370 such memory

	scire fatentur, 345 quid fortuna ferat populi, sed dicere mussant. 346 Det libertatem fandi flatusque remittat 347 cuius ob auspicium infaustum moresque sinistros 348 (dicam equidem, licet arma mihi mortemque minetur) 349 lumina tot cecidisse ducum totamque videmus 350 consedisse urbem luctu, dum Troia temptat 351 castra fugae fidens et caelum territat armis. 352 Unum etiam donis istis, quae plurima mitti 353 Dardanidis dicique iubes, unum, optime regum, 354 adicias nec te ullius violentia vincat, 355 quin natam egregio genero dignisque hymenaeis 356 des, pater, et pacem hanc aeterno foedere iungas. 357 Quod si tantus habet mentes et pectora terror, 358 ipsum obtestemur veniamque oremus ab ipso: 359 cedat, ius proprium regi patriaeque remittat. 360 Quid miseros totiens in aperta pericula cives	to renew. Go, lay these gifts, 371 brought to my honor from your ancient land, 372 at great Aeneas' feet. We twain have stood 373 confronting close with swords implacable 374 in mortal fray. Believe me, I have known 375 the stature of him when he lifts his shield, 376 and swings the whirlwind of his spear. If Troy 377 two more such sons had bred, the Dardan horde
11.361	361 proicis, O Latio caput horum et causa malorum? 362 Nulla salus bello: pacem te poscimus omnes, 363 Turne, simul pacis solum inviolabile pignus. 364 Primus ego, invisum quem tu tibi fingis, et esse 365 nil moror, en supplex venio. Miserere tuorum, 366 pone animos et pulsus abi. Sat funera fusi 367 vidimus ingentis et desolavimus agros. 368 Aut si fama movet, si tantum pectore robur 369 concipis et si adeo dotalis regia cordi est, 370 aude atque adversum fidens fer pectus in hostem. 371 Scilicet ut Turno contingat regia coniunx, 372 nos animae viles, inhumata infletaque turba, 373 sternamur campis. Etiam tu, siqua	378 had stormed at Argos' gates, and Greece to-day 379 were for her fallen fortunes grieving sore. 380 Our lingering at Ilium's stubborn wall, 381 our sluggard conquest halting ten years Iong, 382 was his and Hector's work. Heroic pair! 383 Each one for valor notable, and each 384 famous in enterprise of arms,—but he 385 was first in piety. Enclasp with his 386 your hands in plighted peace as best ye may: 387 but shock of steel on steel ye well may shun.’ 388 now hast thou heard, good King, a king's reply, 389 and how his wisdom sits in this vast war.” 390 Soon as the envoys ceased, an answering sound 391 of troubled voices through the council flowed 392 of various note, as when its rocky bed 393 impedes an arrowy stream, and murmurs break 394 from the strait-channelled flood; the fringing shores 395 repeat the tumult of the clamorous wave. 396 But when their hearts and troublous tongues were still, 397 the

	tibi vis, 374 si patrii quid Martis habes, illum aspice contra, 375 qui vocat. 376 Talibus exarsit dictis violentia Turni; 377 dat gemitum rumpitque has imo pectore voces 378 Larga quidem, Drance, semper tibi copia fandi 379 tum, cum bella manus poscunt, patribusque vocatis 380 primus ades. Sed non replenda est curia verbis, 381 quae tuto tibi magna volant, dum distinet hostem 382 agger murorum nec inundant sanguine fossae. 383 Proinde tona eloquio, solitum tibi, meque timoris 384 argue tu, Drance, quando tot stragis acervos 385 Teucrorum tua dextra dedit passimque tropaeis 386 insignis agros. Possit quid vivida virtus, 387 experiare licet; nec longe scilicet hostes 388 quaerendi nobis: circumstant undique muros. 389 Imus in adversos: quid cessas? An tibi Mavors 390 ventosa in lingua pedibusque fugacibus istis	King, invoking first the gods in heaven, 398 thus from a Iofty throne his sentence gave:
11.391	391 semper erit? 392 Pulsus ego? Aut quisquam merito, foedissime, pulsum 393 arguet, Iliaco tumidum qui crescere Thybrim 394 sanguine et Evandri totam cum stirpe videbit 395 procubuisse domum atque exutos Arcadas armis? 396 Haud ita me experti Bitias et Pandarus ingens 397 et quos mille die victor sub Tartara misi, 398 inclusus muris hostilique aggere saeptus. 399 Nulla salus bello. Capiti cane talia, demens, 400 Dardanio rebusque tuis. Proinde omnia magno 401 ne cessa turbare metu atque extollere vires 402 gentis bis victae, contra premere arma Latini. 403 Nunc et Myrmidonum proceres	399 “Less evil were our case, if long ago 400 ye had provided for your country's weal, 401 O Latins, as I urged. It is no time 402 to hold dispute, while, compassing our walls, 403 the foeman waits. Ill-omened war is ours 404 against a race of gods, my countrymen, 405 invincible, unwearied in the fray, 406 and who, though lost and fallen, clutch the sword. 407 If hope ye cherished of Aetolia's power, 408 dismiss it! For what hope ye have is found 409 in your own bosoms only. But ye know 410 how slight it is and small. What ruin wide 411 has fallen, is now palpable and clear. 412 No blame I cast. What valor's uttermost 413 may do was done; our kingdom in this war 414 strained its last thews. Now therefore I will tell 415 such project as my doubtful mind may frame, 416 and briefly, if ye give good heed, unfold: 417 an ancient tract have I, close-bordering 418 the river Tiber; it runs

	Phrygia arma tremescunt, 404 nunc et Tydides et Larissaeus Achilles, 405 amnis et Hadriacas retro fugit Aufidus undas. 406 Vel cum se pavidum contra mea iurgia fingit 407 artificis scelus et formidine crimen acerbat. 408 Numquam animam talem dextra hac, absiste moveri, 409 amittes: habitet tecum et sit pectore in isto. 410 Nunc ad te et tua magna, pater, consulta revertor. 411 Si nullam nostris ultra spem ponis in armis, 412 si tam deserti sumus et semel agmine verso 413 funditus occidimus neque habet Fortuna regressum? 414 oremus pacem et dextras tendamus inertis. 415 Quamquam O, si solitae quicquam virtutis adesset! 416 Ille mihi ante alios fortunatusque laborum 417 egregiusque animi, qui, nequid tale videret, 418 procubuit moriens et humum semel ore momordit. 419 Sin et opes nobis et adhuc intacta iuventus 420 auxilioque urbes Italae populique supersunt,	westward far 419 beyond Sicania's bound, and filth it bears 420 to Rutule and Auruncan husbandmen, 421 who furrow its hard hills or feed their flocks 422 along the stonier slopes. Let this demesne, 423 together with its pine-clad mountain tall, 424 be given the Teucrian for our pledge of peace, 425 confirmed by free and equitable league, 426 and full alliance with our kingly power. 427 Let them abide there, if it please them so, 428 and build their city's wall. But if their hearts
11.421	421 sin et Troianis cum multo gloria venit 422 sanguine, sunt illis sua funera parque per omnis 423 tempestas: cur indecores in limine primo 424 deficimus? Cur ante tubam tremor occupat artus? 425 Multa dies variisque labor mutabilis aevi 426 rettulit in melius, multos alterna revisens 427 lusit et in solido rursus Fortuna locavit. 428 Non erit auxilio nobis Aetolus et Arpi: 429 at Messapus erit felixque Tolumnius et quos 430 tot populi misere duces, nec parva sequetur 431 gloria delectos Latio et Laurentibus agris. 432 Est et Volscorum egregia de gente	429 for other land or people yearn, and fate 430 permits them hence to go, then let us build 431 twice ten good galleys of Italian oak, 432 or more, if they can man them. All the wood 433 lies yonder on the shore. Let them but say 434 how numerous and large the ships they crave, 435 and we will give the brass, the artisans, 436 and ship-supplies. Let us for envoys choose 437 a hundred of the Latins noblest born 438 to tell our message and arrange the peace, 439 bearing mild olive-boughs and weighty gifts 440 of ivory and gold, with chair of state 441 and purple robe, our emblems as a king. 442 But freely let this council speak; give aid 443 to our exhausted cause.” Then Drances rose, 444 that foe inveterate, whom Turnus' fame 445 to stinging hate and envy double-tongued 446 ever pricked on. Of liberal wealth was he 447 and flowing speech, but slack of hand in

	Camilla, 433 agmen agens equitum et florentis aere catervas. 434 Quod si me solum Teucri in certamina poscunt 435 idque placet tantumque bonis communibus obsto, 436 non adeo has exosa manus Victoria fugit, 437 ut tanta quicquam pro spe temptare recusem. 438 Ibo animis contra, vel magnum praestet Achillem 439 factaque Vulcani manibus paria induat arma 440 ille licet. Vobis animam hanc soceroque Latino 441 Turnus ego, haud ulli veterum virtute secundus, 442 devovi. Solum Aeneas vocat: et vocet oro, 443 nec Drances potius, sive est haec ira deorum, 444 morte luat, sive est virtus et gloria, tollat. 445 Illi haec inter se dubiis de rebus agebant 446 certantes; castra Aeneas aciemque movebat: 447 nuntius ingenti per regia tecta tumultu 448 ecce ruit magnisque urbem terroribus implet, 449 instructos acie Tiberino a flumine Teucros 450 Tyrrhenamque manum totis descendere campis.	war 448 at council board accounted no weak voice, 449 in quarrels stronger still; of lofty birth 450 in the maternal line, but by his sire's 451 uncertain and obscure. He, claiming place, 452 thus multiplies with words the people's ire: 453 “A course most clear, nor needing voice of mine, 454 thy council is, good King; for all men see 455 the way of public weal, but smother close 456 the telling of it. Turnus must concede 457 freedom to speak, and his own arrogance 458 diminish! Under his ill-boding star
11.451	451 Extemplo turbati animi concussaque vulgi 452 pectora et adrectae stimulis haud mollibus irae. 453 Arma manu trepidi poscunt, fremit arma iuventus, 454 flent maesti mussantque patres. Hic undique clamor 455 dissensu vario magnus se tollit in auras 456 haud secus atque alto in luco cum forte catervae 457 consedere avium piscosove amne Padusae 458 dant sonitum rauci per stagna loquacia cycni. 459 Immo, ait, O cives adrepto tempore, Turnus, 460 cogite concilium et pacem laudate sedentes: 461 illi armis in regna ruunt. Nec plura	459 and fatal conduct—yea, I speak it plain, 460 though with his naked steel my death he swear— 461 yon host of princes fell, and we behold 462 the whole land bowed with grief; while he assails 463 the Trojan camp (beating such bold retreats!) 464 and troubles Heaven with war. One gift the more, 465 among the many to the Trojans given, 466 one chiefly, best of kings, thy choice should be. 467 Let not wild violence thy will restrain 468 from granting, sire, thy virgin daughter's hand 469 to son-in-law illustrious, in a match 470 worthy of both,—and thus the lasting bond 471 of peace establish. But if verily 472 our hearts and souls be weak with craven fear, 473 let us on Turnus call, and grace implore 474 even of him. Let him no more oppose; 475 but to his country and his King locutus 462 corripuit sese et tectis citus extulit altis. 463 Tu, Voluse, armari Volscorum edice maniplos, 464 duc, ait, et Rutulos. Equitem Messapus in armis 465 et cum fratre Coras latis diffundite campis. 466 Pars aditus urbis firmet turrisque capessat, 467 cetera, qua iusso, mecum manus inferat arma. 468 Ilicet in muros tota discurritur urbe. 469 Consilium ipse pater et magna incepta Latinus 470 deserit ac tristi turbatus tempore differt 471 multaque se incusat, qui non adceperit ultro 472 Dardanium Aenean generumque adsciverit urbi. 473 Praefodiunt alii portas aut saxa sudesque 474 subvectant. Bello dat signum rauca cruentum 475 bucina. Tum muros varia cinxere corona 476 matronae puerique: vocat labor ultimus omnis. 477 Nec non ad templum summasque ad Palladis arces 478 subvehitur magna matrum regina caterva 479 dona ferens, iuxtaque comes Lavinia virgo, 480 causa mali tanti, oculos deiecta decoros.	concede 476 their natural right. Why wilt thou o'er and o'er 477 fling thy poor countrymen in danger's way, 478 O chief and fountain of all Latium's pain? 479 War will not save us. Not a voice but sues 480 for peace, O Turnus! and, not less than peace, 481 its one inviolable pledge. Behold, 482 I lead in this petition! even I 483 whom thou dost feign thy foe—(I waste no words 484 denying)—look! I supplicate of thee, 485 take pity on thy kindred; drop thy pride, 486 and get thee home defeated. We have seen 487 slaughter enough, enough of funeral flames, 488 and many a wide field waste and desolate.

11.481	481 Succedunt matres et templum ture vaporant 482 et maestas alto fundunt de limine voces: 483 Armipotens, praeses belli, Tritonia virgo, 484 frange manu telum Phrygii praedonis et ipsum 485 pronum sterne solo portisque effunde sub altis. 486 Cingitur ipse furens certatim in proelia Turnus. 487 Iamque adeo rutilum thoraca indutus aenis 488 horrebat squamis surasque incluserat auro, 489 tempora nudus adhuc, laterique adcinxerat ensem 490 fulgebatque alta decurrens aureus	489 If glory move thee, if thy martial breast 490 so swell with strength, and if a royal dower 491 be thy dear dream, go, pluck thy courage up, 492 and front thy own brave bosom to the foe. 493 for, lo, that Turnus on his wedding day 494 may win a princess, our cheap, common lives— 495 we the mere mob, unwept, unsepulchred— 496 must be spilled forth in battle! Thou, I say, 497 if there be mettle in thee and some drops 498 of thy undaunted sires, Iook yonder where 499 the Trojan chieftain waits thee in the field.” 500 By such discourse he stirred the burning blood 501 of Turnus, who groaned loud and from his heart 502 this utterance hurled: “O Drances, thou art rich 503 in large words, when the day of battle arce, 491 exsultatque animis et spe iam praecipit hostem: 492 qualis ubi abruptis fugit praesaepia vinclis 493 tandem liber equus campoque potitus aperto 494 aut ille in pastus armentaque tendit equarum 495 aut adsuetus aquae perfundi flumine noto 496 emicat adrectisque fremit cervicibus alte 497 luxurians, luduntque iubae per colla, per armos. 498 Obvia cui Volscorum acie comitante Camilla 499 occurrit portisque ab equo regina sub ipsis 500 desiluit, quam tota cohors imitata relictis 501 ad terram defluxit equis; tum talia fatur: 502 Turne, sui merito siqua est fiducia forti, 503 audeo et Aeneadum promitto occurrere turmae 504 solaque Tyrrhenos equites ire obvia contra. 505 Me sine prima manu temptare pericula belli 506 tu pedes ad muros subsiste et moenia serva. 507 Turnus ad haec, oculos horrenda in virgine fixus: 508 O decus Italiae virgo, quas dicere grates 509 quasve referre parem? Sed nunc, est omnia quando 510 iste animus supra, mecum partire laborem.	calls 504 for actions. If our senators convene 505 thou comest early. But the council hall 506 is not for swollen talk, such as thy tongue 507 in safety tosses forth; so long as walls 508 hold back thy foes, and ere the trenches flow 509 with blood of brave men slain. O, rattle on 510 in fluent thunder—thy habitual style! 511 Brand me a coward, Drances, when thy sword 512 has heaped up Trojan slain, and on the field 513 thy shining trophies rise. Now may we twain 514 our martial prowess prove. Our foe, forsooth, 515 is not so far to seek; around yon wall 516 he lies in siege: to front him let us fly! 517 Why art thou tarrying? Wilt thou linger here, 518 a soldier only in thy windy tongue, 519 and thy swift, coward heels? Defeated, I? 520 Foul wretch, what tongue that honors truth can tell 521 of my defeat, while Tiber overflows 522 with Trojan blood? while King Evander's house 523 in ruin dies, and his Arcadians lie 524 stripped naked on the field? O, not like thee 525 did Bitias or the giant Pandarus 526 misprize my honor; nor those men of Troy 527 whom this good sword to death and dark sent down, 528 a thousand in a day,—though I was penned 529 a prisoner in the ramparts of my foe.

11.511	511 Aeneas, ut fama fidem missique reportant 512 exploratores, equitum levia improbus arma 513 praemisit, quaterent campos; ipse ardua montis 514 per deserta iugo superans adventat ad urbem. 515 Furta paro belli convexo in tramite silvae, 516 ut bivias armato obsidam milite fauces. 517 Tu Tyrrhenum equitem conlatis excipe signis; 518 tecum acer Messapus erit turmaeque Latinae 519 Tiburtique manus, ducis et tu	530 War will not save us? Fling that prophecy 531 on the doomed Dardan's head, or on thy own, 532 thou madman! Aye, with thy vile, craven soul 533 disturb the general cause. Extol the power 534 of a twice-vanquished people, and decry 535 Latinus' rival arms. From this time forth 536 let all the Myrmidonian princes cower 537 before the might of Troy; let Diomed 538 and let Achilles tremble; let the stream 539 of Aufidus in panic backward flow 540 from Hadria's wave. But hear me when I say 541 that though his guilt and cunning feign to feel 542 fear of my vengeance, much embittering so 543 his taunts and insult

	concipe curam. 520 Sic ait, et paribus Messapum in proelia dictis 521 hortatur sociosque duces et pergit in hostem. 522 Est curvo anfractu valles, adcommoda fraudi 523 armorumque dolis, quam densis frondibus atrum 524 urget utrimque latus, tenuis quo semita ducit 525 angustaeque ferunt fauces aditusque maligni. 526 Hanc super in speculis summoque in vertice montis 527 planities ignota iacet tutique receptus, 528 seu dextra laevaque velis occurrere pugnae, 529 sive instare iugis et grandia volvere saxa. 530 Huc iuvenis nota fertur regione viarum 531 arripuitque locum et silvis insedit iniquis. 532 Velocem interea superis in sedibus Opim, 533 unam ex virginibus sociis sacraque caterva, 534 compellabat et has tristis Latonia voces 535 ore dabat: Graditur bellum ad crudele Camilla, 536 O virgo, et nostris nequiquam cingitur armis, 537 cara mihi ante alias. Neque enim novus iste Dianae 538 venit amor subitaque animum dulcedine movit. 539 Pulsus ob invidiam regno viresque superbas 540 Priverno antiqua Metabus cum excederet urbe,	—such a life as his 544 my sword disdains. O Drances, be at ease! 545 In thy vile bosom let thy breath abide! 546 But now of thy grave counsel and thy cause, 547 O royal sire, I speak. If from this hour 548 thou castest hope of armed success away, 549 if we be so unfriended that one rout 550 o'erwhelms us utterly, if Fortune's feet 551 never turn backward, let us, then, for peace 552 offer petition, lifting to the foe 553 our feeble, suppliant hands. Yet would I pray 554 some spark of manhood such as once we knew 555 were ours once more! I count him fortunate, 556 and of illustrious soul beyond us all, 557 who, rather than behold such things, has fallen 558 face forward, dead, his teeth upon the dust. 559 But if we still have power, and men-at-arms
11.541	541 infantem fugiens media inter proelia belli 542 sustulit exsilio comitem matrisque vocavit 543 nomine Casmillae mutata parte Camillam. 544 Ipse sinu prae se portans iuga longa petebat 545 solorum nemorum: tela undique saeva premebant 546 et circumfuso volitabant milite Volsci. 547 Ecce fugae medio summis Amasenus abundans 548 spumabat ripis: tantus se nubibus	560 unwasted and unscathed, if there survive 561 Italian tribes and towns for help in war, 562 aye! if the Trojans have but won success 563 at bloody cost,—for they dig graves, I ween, 564 storm-smitten not less than we,—O, wherefore now 565 stand faint and shameful on the battle's edge? 566 Why quake our knees before the trumpet call? 567 Time and the toil of shifting, changeful days 568 restore lost causes; ebbing tides of chance 569 deceive us oft, which after at their flood 570 do lift us safe to shore. If aid come not 571 from Diomed in Arpi, our allies 572

	imber 549 ruperat. Ille, innare parans, infantis amore 550 tardatur caroque oneri timet. Omnia secum 551 versanti subito vix haec sententia sedit. 552 Telum immane manu valida quod forte gerebat 553 bellator, solidum nodis et robore cocto, 554 huic natam, libro et silvestri subere clausam, 555 implicat atque habilem mediae circumligat hastae; 556 quam dextra ingenti librans ita ad aethera fatur: 557 Alma, tibi hanc, nemorum cultrix, Latonia virgo, 558 ipse pater famulam voveo; tua prima per auras 559 tela tenens supplex hostem fugit. Accipe, testor, 560 diva tuam, quae nunc dubiis committitur auris. 561 Dixit et adducto contortum hastile lacerto 562 immittit: sonuere undae, rapidum super amnem 563 infelix fugit in iaculo stridente Camilla. 564 At Metabus, magna propius iam urgente caterva, 565 dat sese fluvio atque hastam cum virgine victor 566 gramineo donum Triviae de caespite vellit. 567 Non illum tectis ullae, non moenibus urbes 568 accepere neque ipse manus feritate dedisset: 569 pastorum et solis exegit montibus aevom. 570 Hic natam in dumis interque horrentia lustra	shall be Mezentius and Tolumnius, 573 auspicious name, and many a chieftain sent 574 from many a tribe; not all inglorious 575 are Latium's warriors from Laurentian land! 576 Hither the noble Volscian stem sends down 577 Camilla with her beauteous cavalry 578 in glittering brass arrayed. But if, forsooth, 579 the Trojans call me singly to the fight, 580 if this be what ye will, and I so much 581 the public weal impair—when from this sword 582 has victory seemed to fly away in scorn? 583 I should not hopeless tread in honor's way 584 whate'er the venture. Dauntless will I go 585 though equal match for great Achilles, he, 586 and though he clothe him in celestial arms 587 in Vulcan's smithy wrought. I, Turnus, now, 588 not less than equal with great warriors gone, 589 vow to Latinus, father of my bride,
11.571	571 armentalis equae mammis et lacte ferino 572 nutribat, teneris immulgens ubera labris. 573 Utque pedum primis infans vestigia plantis 574 institerat, iaculo palmas armavit acuto 575 spiculaque ex umero parvae suspendit et arcum. 576 Pro crinali auro, pro longae tegmine pallae 577 tigridis exuviae per dorsum a	590 and to ye all, each drop of blood I owe. 591 Me singly doth Aeneas call? I crave 592 that challenge. Drances is not called to pay 593 the debt of death, if wrath from Heaven impend; 594 nor his a brave man's name and fame to share.” 595 Thus in their doubtful cause the chieftains strove. 596 Meanwhile Aeneas his assaulting line 597 moved forward. The ill tidings wildly sped 598 from royal hall to hall, and filled the town 599 with rumors dark: for now the Trojan host 600 o'er

	vertice pendent. 578 Tela manu iam tum tenera puerilia torsit 579 et fundam tereti circum caput egit habena 580 Strymoniamque gruem aut album deiecit olorem. 581 Multae illam frustra Tyrrhena per oppida matres 582 optavere nurum: sola contenta Diana 583 aeternum telorum et virginitatis amorem 584 intemerata colit. Vellem haud correpta fuisset 585 militia tali, conata lacessere Teucros: 586 cara mihi comitumque foret nunc una mearum. 587 Verum age, quandoquidem fatis urgetur acerbis, 588 abere, nympha, polo finisque invise Latinos, 589 tristis ubi infausto committitur omine pugna. 590 Haec cape et ultricem pharetra deprome sagittam: 591 hac quicumque sacrum violarit volnere corpus, 592 Tros Italusque, mihi pariter det sanguine poenas. 593 Post ego nube cava miserandae corpus et arma 594 inspoliata feram tumulo patriaeque reponam. 595 Dixit; at illa levis caeli delapsa per auras 596 insonuit, nigro circumdata turbine corpus. 597 At manus interea muris Troiana propinquat 598 Etruscique duces equitumque exercitus omnis, 599 compositi numero in turmas. Fremit aequore toto 600 insultans sonipes et pressis pugnat habenis	the wide plains from Tiber's wave was spread 601 in close array of war. The people's soul 602 was vexed and shaken, and its martial rage 603 rose to the stern compulsion. Now for arms 604 their terror calls; the youthful soldiery 605 clamor for arms; the sires of riper days 606 weep or repress their tears. On every side 607 loud shouts and cries of dissonant acclaim 608 trouble the air, as when in lofty grove 609 legions of birds alight, or by the flood 610 of Padus' fishy stream the shrieking swans 611 far o'er the vocal marish fling their song. 612 Then, seizing the swift moment, Turnus cried: 613 “Once more, my countrymen,—ye sit in parle, 614 lazily praising peace, while yonder foe 615 speeds forth in arms our kingdom to obtain.” 616 He spoke no more, but hied him in hot haste, 617 and from the housetop called, “Volusus, go! 618 Equip the Volscian companies! Lead forth 619 my Rutules also! O'er the spreading plain, 620 ye brothers Coras and Messapus range 621 our host of cavalry! Let others guard 622 the city's gates and hold the walls and towers: 623 I and my followers elsewhere oppose 624 the shock of arms.” Now to and fro they run
11.601	601 huc conversus et huc; tum late ferreus hastis 602 horret ager campique armis sublimibus ardent. 603 Nec non Messapus contra celeresque Latini 604 et cum fratre Coras et virginis ala Camillae 605 adversi campo apparent hastasque reductis 606 protendunt longe dextris et spicula	625 to man the walls. Father Latinus quits— 626 the place of council and his large design, 627 vexed and bewildered by the hour's distress. 628 He blames his own heart that he did not ask 629 Trojan Aeneas for his daughter's Iord, 630 and gain him for his kingdom's lasting friend. 631 They dig them trenches at the gates, or lift 632 burden of stakes and stones. The horn's harsh note 633 sounds forth its murderous vibrant, 607 adventusque virum fremitusque ardescit equorum. 608 Iamque intra iactum teli progressus uterque 609 substiterat: subito erumpunt clamore furentisque 610 exhortantur equos; fundunt simul undique tela 611 crebra nivis ritu caelumque obtexitur umbra. 612 Continuo adversis Tyrrhenus et acer Aconteus 613 conixi incurrunt hastis primique ruina 614 dant sonitum ingenti perfractaque quadrupedantum 615 pectora pectoribus rumpunt: excussus Aconteus 616 fulminis in morem aut tormento ponderis acti 617 praecipitat longe et vitam dispergit in auras. 618 Extemplo turbatae acies, versique Latini 619 reiciunt parmas et equos ad moenia vertunt. 620 Troes agunt, princeps turmas inducit Asilas. 621 Iamque propinquabant portis, rursusque Latini 622 clamorem tollunt et mollia colla reflectunt: 623 hi fugiunt penitusque datis referuntur habenis. 624 Qualis ubi alterno procurrens gurgite pontus 625 nunc ruit ad terram scopulusque superiacit unda 626 spumeus extremamque sinu perfundit arenam, 627 nunc rapidus retro atque aestu revoluta resorbens 628 saxa fugit litusque vado labente relinquit: 629 bis Tusci Rutulos egere ad moenia versos, 630 bis reiecti armis respectant terga tegentes.	signal for the war; 634 striplings and women, in a motley ring, 635 defend the ramparts; the decisive hour 636 lays tasks on all. Upon the citadel 637 a train of matrons, with the doleful Queen, 638 toward Pallas' temple moves, and in their hand 639 are gifts and offerings. See, at their side 640 the maid Lavinia, cause of all these tears, 641 drops down her lovely eyes! The incense rolls 642 in clouds above the altar; at the doors 643 with wailing voice the women make this prayer: 644 “Tritonian virgin, arbitress of war! 645 Break of thyself yon Phrygian robber's spear! 646 Hurl him down dying in the dust! Spill forth 647 his evil blood beneath our lofty towers!” 648 Fierce Turnus girds him, emulous to slay: 649 a crimson coat of mail he wears, with scales 650 of burnished bronze; beneath his knees are bound 651 the golden greaves; upon his naked brow 652 no helm he wears; but to his thigh is bound 653 a glittering sword. Down from the citadel 654 runs he, a golden glory, in his heart

11.631	631 Tertia sed postquam congressi in proelia totas 632 implicuere inter se acies legitque virum vir: 633 tum vero et gemitus morientum et sanguine in alto 634 armaque corporaque et permixti caede virorum 635 semianimes volvuntur equi, pugna	655 boldly exulting, while impatient hope 656 fore-counts his fallen foes. He seemed as when, 657 from pinfold bursting, breaking his strong chain, 658 th' untrammelled stallion ranges the wide field, 659 or tries him to a herd of feeding mares, 660 or to some cooling river-bank he knows, 661 most fierce and mettlesome; the streaming

	aspera surgit. 636 Orsilochus Remuli, quando ipsum horrebat adire, 637 hastam intorsit equo ferrumque sub aure reliquit. 638 Quo sonipes ictu furit arduus altaque iactat 639 vulneris impatiens arrecto pectore crura: 640 volvitur ille excussus humi. Catillus Iollan 641 ingentemque animis, ingentem corpore et armis 642 deicit Herminium, nudo cui vertice fulva 643 caesaries nudique umeri, nec vulnera terrent: 644 tantus in arma patet. Latos huic hasta per armos 645 acta tremit duplicatque virum transfixa dolore. 646 Funditur ater ubique cruor; dant funera ferro 647 certantes pulchramque petunt per vulnera mortem. 648 At medias inter caedes exsultat Amazon, 649 unum exserta latus pugnae, pharetrata Camilla, 650 et nunc lenta manu spargens hastilia denset, 651 nunc validam dextra rapit indefessa bipennem; 652 aureus ex umero sonat arcus et arma Dianae. 653 Illa etiam in tergum, siquando pulsa recessit, 654 spicula converso fugientia dirigit arcu. 655 At circum lectae comites, Larinaque virgo 656 Tullaque et aeratam quatiens Tarpeia securem, 657 Italides, quas ipsa decus sibi dia Camilla 658 delegit pacisque bonas bellique ministras: 659 quales Threiciae cum flumina Thermodontis 660 pulsant et pictis bellantur Amazones armis	mane 662 o'er neck and shoulder flies. Across his path 663 Camilla with her Volscian escort came, 664 and at the city-gate the royal maid 665 down from her charger leaped; while all her band 666 at her example glided to the ground, 667 their horses leaving. Thus the virgin spoke: 668 “Turnus, if confidence beseem the brave, 669 I have no fear; but of myself do vow 670 to meet yon squadrons of Aeneadae 671 alone, and front me to the gathered charge 672 of Tuscan cavalry. Let me alone 673 the war's first venture-prove. Take station, thou, 674 here at the walls, this rampart to defend.” 675 With fixed eyes on the terror-striking maid, 676 Turnus replied, “O boast of Italy, 677 O virgin bold! What praise, what gratitude 678 can words or deeds repay? But since thy soul 679 so large of stature shows, I bid thee share 680 my burden and my war. Our spies bring news 681 that now Aeneas with pernicious mind 682 sends light-armed horse before him, to alarm 683 the plains below, while through the wilderness 684 he climbs the steep hills, and approaches so
11.661	661 seu circum Hippolyten, seu cum se Martia curru 662 Penthesilea refert, magnoque ululante tumultu 663 feminea exsultant lunatis agmina peltis. 664 Quem telo primum, quem	685 our leaguered town. But I in sheltered grove 686 a stratagem prepare, and bid my men 687 in ambush at a mountain cross-road lie. 688 Meet thou the charge of Tuscan cavalry 689 with all thy banners. For auxiliar strength 690 take bold

	postremum, aspera virgo, 665 deicis? Aut quot humi morientia corpora fundis? 666 Eunaeum Clitio primum patre, cuius apertum 667 adversi longa transverberat abiete pectus: 668 sanguinis ille vomens rivos cadit atque cruentam 669 mandit humum moriensque suo se in volnere versat. 670 Tum Lirim Pagasumque super; quorum alter habenas 671 suffosso revolutus equo dum colligit, alter 672 dum subit ac dextram labenti tendit inermem, 673 praecipites pariterque ruunt. His addit Amastrum 674 Hippotaden, sequiturque incumbens eminus hasta 675 Tereaque Harpalycumque et Demophoonta Chrominque; 676 quotque emissa manu contorsit spicula virgo, 677 tot Phrygii cecidere viri. Procul Ornytus armis 678 ignotis et equo venator Iapyge fertur, 679 cui pellis latos umeros erepta iuvenco 680 pugnatori operit, caput ingens oris hiatus 681 et malae texere lupi cum dentibus albis, 682 agrestisque manus armat sparus; ipse catervis 683 vertitur in mediis et toto vertice supra est. 684 Hunc illa exceptum, neque enim labor agmine verso, 685 traicit et super haec inimico pectore fatur: 686 Silvis te, Tyrrhene, feras agitare putasti? 687 Advenit qui vestra dies muliebribus armis 688 verba redarguerit. Nomen tamen haud leve patrum 689 manibus hoc referes, telo cecidisse Camillae. 690 Protinus Orsilochum et Buten, duo maxima Teucrum	Messapus with his Latin troop 691 and King Tiburtus' men: but the command 692 shall be thy task and care.” He spoke, and urged 693 with like instruction for the coming fray 694 Messapus and his captains; then advanced 695 to meet the foe. There is a winding vale 696 for armed deception and insidious war 697 well fashioned, and by interlacing leaves 698 screened darkly in; a small path thither leads, 699 through strait defile-a passage boding ill. 700 Above it, on a mountain's lofty brow, 701 are points of outlook, level spaces fair, 702 and many a safe, invisible retreat 703 from whence on either hand to challenge war, 704 or, standing on the ridges, to roll down 705 huge mountain boulders. Thither Turnus fared, 706 and, ranging the familiar tract, chose out 707 his cunning ambush in the dangerous grove.
11.691	691 corpora, sed Buten aversum cuspide fixit 692 loricam galeamque inter, qua colla sedentis 693 lucent et laevo dependet parma	708 But now in dwellings of the gods on high, 709 Diana to fleet-footed Opis called, 710 a virgin from her consecrated train, 711 and thus in sorrow spoke: “O maiden mine! 712

	lacerto, 694 Orsilochum fugiens magnumque agitata per orbem 695 eludit gyro interior sequiturque sequentem, 696 tum validam perque arma viro perque ossa securim 697 altior exsurgens oranti et multa precanti 698 congeminat: vulnus calido rigat ora cerebro. 699 Incidit huic subitoque aspectu territus haesit 700 Appenninicolae bellator filius Auni, 701 haud Ligurum extremus, dum fallere fata sinebant. 702 Isque ubi se nullo iam cursu evadere pugnae 703 posse neque instantem reginam avertere cernit, 704 consilio versare dolos ingressus et astu 705 incipit haec: Quid tam egregium, si femina forti 706 fidis equo? Dimitte fugam et te comminus aequo 707 mecum crede solo pugnaeque adcinge pedestri: 708 iam nosces, ventosa ferat cui gloria fraudem. 709 Dixit, at illa furens acrique adcensa dolore 710 tradit equum comiti paribusque resistit in armis, 711 ense pedes nudo puraque interrita parma. 712 At iuvenis, vicisse dolo ratus, avolat ipse, 713 haud mora, conversisque fugax aufertur habenis 714 quadrupedemque citum ferrata calce fatigat. 715 Vane Ligus frustraque animis elate superbis, 716 nequiquam patrias temptasti lubricus artis, 717 nec fraus te incolumem fallaci perferet Auno, 718 haec fatur virgo et pernicibus ignea plantis 719 transit equum cursu frenisque adversa prehensis 720 congreditur poenasque inimico ex sanguine sumit:	Camilla now to cruel conflict flies; 713 with weapons like my own she girds her side, 714 in vain, though dearest of all nymphs to me. 715 Nor is it some new Iove that stirs to-day 716 with sudden sweetness in Diana's breast: 717 for long ago, when from his kingdom driven, 718 for insolent and envied power, her sire 719 King Metabus, from old Privernum's wall 720 was taking flight amidst opposing foes, 721 he bore a little daughter in his arms 722 to share his exile; and he called the child 723 (Changing Casmilla, her queen-mother's name) 724 Camilla. Bearing on his breast the babe, 725 he fled to solitary upland groves. 726 But hovering round him with keen lances, pressed 727 the Volscian soldiery. Across his path, 728 lo, Amasenus with full-foaming wave 729 o'erflowed its banks—so huge a rain had burst 730 but lately from the clouds. There would he fain 731 swim over, but the love of that sweet babe 732 restrained him, trembling for his burden dear. 733 In his perplexed heart suddenly arose 734 firm resolve. It chanced the warrior bore 735 huge spear in his brawny hand, strong shaft 736 of knotted, seasoned oak; to this he lashed 737 his little daughter with a withe of bark 738 pulled from a cork-tree, and with skilful bonds 739 fast bound her to the spear; then, poising it 740 high in his right hand, thus he called on Heaven:
11.721	721 quam facile accipiter saxo sacer ales ab alto 722 consequitur pennis sublimem in nube columbam	741 ‘Latona's daughter, whose benignant grace 742 protects this grove, behold, her father now 743 gives thee this babe for handmaid! Lo, thy

	723 comprensamque tenet pedibusque eviscerat uncis; 724 tum cruor et vulsae labuntur ab aethere plumae. 725 At non haec nullis hominum sator atque deorum 726 observans oculis summo sedet altus Olympo: 727 Tyrrhenum genitor Tarchonem in proelia saeva 728 suscitat et stimulis haud mollibus incitat iras. 729 Ergo inter caedes cedentiaque agmina Tarchon 730 fertur equo variisque instigat vocibus alas, 731 nomine quemque vocans, reficitque in proelia pulsos. 732 Quis metus, O numquam dolituri, O semper inertes 733 Tyrrheni, quae tanta animis ignavia venit? 734 Femina palantis agit atque haec agmina vertit! 735 Quo ferrum quidve haec gerimus tela inrita dextris? 736 At non in Venerem segnes nocturnaque bella 737 aut ubi curva choros indixit tibia Bacchi, 738 exspectate dapes et plenae pocula mensae, 739 hic amor, hoc studium, dum sacra secundus haruspex 740 nuntiet ac lucos vocet hostia pinguis in altos! 741 Haec effatus equum in medios, moriturus et ipse, 742 concitat et Venulo adversum se turbidus infert 743 dereptumque ab equo dextra complectitur hostem 744 et gremium ante suum multa vi concitus aufert. 745 Tollitur in caelum clamor, cunctique Latini 746 convertere oculos. Volat igneus aequore Tarchon 747 arma virumque ferens; tum summa ipsius ab hasta 748 defringit ferrum et partis rimatur apertas, 749 qua vulnus letale ferat; contra ille repugnans 750 sustinet a iugulo dextram et vim viribus exit.	spear 744 her infant fingers hold, as from her foes 745 she flies a suppliant to thee! Receive, 746 O goddess, I implore, what now I cast 747 upon the perilous air.’—He spoke, and hurled 748 with lifted arm the whirling shaft. The waves 749 roared loud, as on the whistling javelin 750 hapless Camilla crossed th' impetuous flood. 751 But Metabus, his foes in hot pursuit, 752 dared plunge him in mid-stream, and, triumphing, 753 soon plucked from grass-grown river-bank the spear, 754 the child upon it,—now to Trivia vowed, 755 a virgin offering. Him nevermore 756 could cities hold, nor would his wild heart yield 757 its sylvan freedom, but his days were passed 758 with shepherds on the solitary hills. 759 His daughter too in tangled woods he bred: 760 a brood-mare from the milk of her fierce breast 761 suckled the child, and to its tender lips 762 .Her udders moved; and when the infant feet 763 their first firm steps had taken, the small palms 764 were armed with a keen javelin; her sire 765 a bow and quiver from her shoulder slung. 766 Instead of golden combs and flowing pall, 767 she wore, from her girl-forehead backward thrown, 768 the whole skin of a tigress; with soft hands 769 she made her plaything of a whirling spear, 770 or, swinging round her head the polished thong
11.751	751 Utque volans alte raptum cum fulva draconem	771 of her good sling, she fetched from distant sky 772 Strymonian cranes or

	752 fert aquila implicuitque pedes atque unguibus haesit, 753 saucius at serpens sinuosa volumina versat 754 adrectisque horret squamis et sibilat ore, 755 arduus insurgens; illa haud minus urget obunco 756 luctantem rostro, simul aethera verberat alis: 757 haud aliter praedam Tiburtum ex agmine Tarchon 758 portat ovans. Ducis exemplum eventumque secuti 759 Maeonidae incurrunt. Tum fatis debitus Arruns 760 velocem iaculo et multa prior arte Camillam 761 circuit et quae sit fortuna facillima, temptat. 762 Qua se cumque furens medio tulit agmine virgo, 763 hac Arruns subit et tacitus vestigia lustrat; 764 qua victrix redit illa pedemque ex hoste reportat, 765 hac iuvenis furtim celeris detorquet habenas. 766 Hos aditus iamque hos aditus omnemque pererrat 767 undique circuitum et certam quatit improbus hastam. 768 Forte sacer Cybelo Chloreus olimque sacerdos 769 insignis longe Phrygiis fulgebat in armis 770 spumantemque agitabat equum, quem pellis aënis 771 in plumam squamis auro conserta tegebat. 772 Ipse, peregrina ferrugine clarus et ostro, 773 spicula torquebat Lycio Gortynia cornu; 774 aureus ex umeris erat arcus et aurea vati 775 cassida; tum croceam chlamydemque sinusque crepantis 776 carbaseos fulvo in nodum collegerat auro 777 pictus acu tunicas et barbara tegmina crurum. 778 Hunc virgo, sive ut templis praefigeret arma 779 Troïa, captivo sive ut se ferret in auro 780 venatrix, unum ex omni certamine pugnae	swans of spotless wing. 773 From Tuscan towns proud matrons oft in vain 774 sought her in marriage for their sons; but she 775 to Dian only turned her stainless heart, 776 her virgin freedom and her huntress' arms 777 with faithful passion serving. Would that now 778 this Iove of war had ne'er seduced her mind 779 the Teucrians to provoke! So might she be 780 one of our wood-nymphs still. But haste, I pray, 781 for bitter is her now impending doom. 782 Descend, dear nymph, from heaven, and explore 783 the country of the Latins, where the fight 784 with unpropitious omens now begins. 785 These weapons take, and from this quiver draw 786 a vengeful arrow, wherewith he who dares 787 to wound her sacred body, though he be 788 a Trojan or Italian, shall receive 789 bloody and swift reward at my command. 790 Then, in a cloud concealed, I will consign 791 her corpse, ill-fated but inviolate 792 unto the sepulchre, restoring so 793 the virgin to her native land.” Thus spake 794 the goddess; but her handmaid, gliding down, 795 took her loud pathway on the moving winds, 796 and mantled in dark storm her shape divine.

11.781	781 caeca sequebatur totumque incauta per agmen 782 femineo praedae et spoliorum ardebat amore, 783 telum ex insidiis cum tandem tempore capto 784 concitat et superos Arruns sic voce precatur: 785 Summe deum, sancti custos Soractis Apollo, 786 quem primi colimus, cui pineus ardor acervo 787 pascitur et medium freti pietate per ignem 788 cultores multa premimus vestigia pruna, 789 da, pater, hoc nostris aboleri dedecus armis, 790 omnipotens. Non exuvias pulsaeve tropaeum 791 virginis aut spolia ulla peto (mihi cetera laudem 792 facta ferent): haec dira meo dum vulnere pestis 793 pulsa cadat, patrias remeabo inglorius urbes. 794 Audiit et voti Phoebus succedere partem 795 mente dedit, partem volucris dispersit in auras: 796 sterneret ut subita turbatam morte Camillam, 797 adnuit oranti; reducem ut patria alta videret, 798 non dedit, inque Notos vocem vertere procellae. 799 Ergo ut missa manu sonitum dedit hasta per auras, 800 convertere animos acris oculosque tulere 801 cuncti ad reginam Volsci. Nihil ipsa nec aurae 802 nec sonitus memor aut venientis ab aethere teli, 803 hasta sub exsertam donec perlata papillam 804 haesit virgineumque alte bibit acta cruorem. 805 Concurrunt trepidae comites dominamque ruentem 806 suscipiunt. Fugit ante omnis exterritus Arruns, 807 laetitia mixtoque metu, nec iam amplius hastae 808 credere nec telis occurrere virginis audet. 809 Ac velut ille, prius quam tela inimica sequantur,	797 Meanwhile the Teucrian legions to the wall 798 draw near, with Tuscan lords and cavalry 799 in numbered troops arrayed. Loud-footed steeds 800 prance o'er the field, to manage of the rein 801 rebellious, but turned deftly here or there. 802 The iron harvest of keen spears spreads far, 803 and all the plain burns bright with lifted steel. 804 Messapus and swift Latin cavalry, 805 Coras his brother, and th' attending train 806 of the fair maid Camilla, form their lines 807 in the opposing field. Their poised right hands 808 point the long lances forward, and light shafts 809 are brandished in the air; the warrior hosts 810 on steeds of fire come kindling as they ride. 811 One instant, at a spear-throw's space, each line 812 its motion stays; then with one sudden cry 813 they rush forth, spurring on each frenzied steed. 814 From-every side the multitudinous spears 815 pour down like snowflakes, mantling heaven in shade. 816 Now with contending spears and straining thews, 817 Tyrrhenus, and Aconteus, champion bold, 818 ride forward; with the onset terrible 819 loudly their armor rings; their chargers twain 820 crash breast to breast, and like a thunderbolt 821 Aconteus drops, or like a ponderous stone 822 hurled from a catapult; full length he falls, 823 surrend'ring to the winds his fleeting soul.

	810 continuo in montis sese avius abdidit altos
11.811	811 occiso pastore lupus magnove iuvenco, 812 conscius audacis facti, caudamque remulcens 813 subiecit pavitantem utero silvasque petivit: 814 haud secus ex oculis se turbidus abstulit Arruns 815 contentusque fuga mediis se immiscuit armis. 816 Illa manu moriens telum trahit, ossa sed inter 817 ferreus ad costas alto stat vulnere mucro: 818 labitur exsanguis, labuntur frigida leto 819 lumina, purpureus quondam color ora reliquit. 820 Tum sic exspirans Accam ex aequalibus unam 821 adloquitur fidam ante alias, quae sola Camillae, 822 quicum partiri curas; atque haec ita fatur: 823 Hactenus, Acca soror, potui: nunc vulnus acerbum 824 conficit, et tenebris nigrescunt omnia circum. 825 Effuge et haec Turno mandata novissima perfer: 826 succedat pugnae Troianosque arceat urbe. 827 Iamque vale. Simul his dictis linquebat habenas, 828 ad terram non sponte fluens. Tum frigida toto 829 paulatim exsolvit se corpore lentaque colla 830 et captum leto posuit caput, arma relinquunt, 831 vitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras. 832 Tum vero immensus surgens ferit aurea clamor 833 sidera: deiecta crudescit pugna Camilla, 834 incurrunt densi simul omnis copia Teucrum 835 Tyrrhenique duces Evandrique Arcades alae. 836 At Triviae custos iamdudum in montibus Opis 837 alta sedet summis spectatque interrita pugnas. 838 Utque procul medio iuvenum in clamore furentum	824 Now all is panic: holding their light shields 825 behind their backs, the Latin horse wheel round, 826 retreating to the wall, the Trojan foe 827 in close pursuit. Asilas, chieftain proud, 828 led on th' assault. Hard by the city gates 829 the Latins wheeled once more and pressed the rein 830 strong on the yielding neck; the charging foe 831 took flight and hurried far with loose-flung rein. 832 'T was like the shock and onset of the sea 833 that landward hurls the alternating flood 834 and hides high cliffs in foam,—the tawny sands 835 upflinging as it rolls; then, suddenly 836 whirled backward on the reingulfing waves, 837 it quits the ledges, and with ebbing flow 838 far from the shore retires. The Tuscans twice 839 drive back the flying Rutules to the town; 840 and twice repulsed, with shields to rearward thrown, 841 glare back at the pursuer; but conjoined 842 in the third battle-charge, both armies merge 843 confusedly together in grim fight 844 of man to man; then follow dying groans, 845 armor blood-bathed and corpses, and strong steeds 846 inextricably with their masters slain, 847 so fierce the fray. Orsilochus—afraid 848 to front the warrior's arms—launched forth a spear 849 at Remulus' horse, and left the fatal steel 850 clinging below its ear; the charger plunged 851 madly, and tossed its trembling hoofs in air, 852 sustaining not the wound; the rider fell, 853 flung headlong to the ground. Catillus slew 854 Iollas; and then struck Herminius down, 855 great-bodied and great-hearted, who could wield 856 a monster weapon, and whose yellow hair 857 from naked head to naked shoulder flowed. 858 By wounds unterrified he dared oppose 859 his huge bulk to the foe: the quivering spear 860 pierced to his broad back, and with throes of pain 861 bowed the man double and clean clove him through. 862 Wide o'er the field th' ensanguined horror flowed, 863 where fatal swords were crossed and cut their way 864 through many a wound to famous death and fair.

	839 prospexit tristi multatam morte Camillam, 840 ingemuitque deditque has imo pectore voces:
11.841	841 Heu nimium, virgo, nimium crudele luisti 842 supplicium, Teucros conata lacessere bello! 843 Nec tibi desertae in dumis coluisse Dianam 844 profuit aut nostras umero gessisse sagittas. 845 Non tamen indecorem tua te regina reliquit 846 extrema iam in morte, neque hoc sine nomine letum 847 per gentis erit aut famam patieris inultae. 848 Nam quicumque tuum violavit vulnere corpus, 849 morte luet merita. Fuit ingens monte sub alto 850 regis Dercenni terreno ex aggere bustum 851 antiqui Laurentis opacaque ilice tectum: 852 hic dea se primum rapido pulcherrima nisu 853 sistit et Arruntem tumulo speculatur ab alto. 854 Ut vidit laetantem animis ac vana tumentem, 855 Cur, inquit, diversus abis? Huc dirige gressum, 856 huc periture veni, capias ut digna Camillae 857 praemia. Tune etiam telis moriere Dianae? 858 dixit, et aurata volucrem Threissa sagittam 859 deprompsit pharetra cornuque infensa tetendit 860 et duxit longe, donec curvata coirent 861 inter se capita et manibus iam tangeret aequis, 862 laeva aciem ferri, dextra nervoque papillam. 863 Extemplo teli stridorem aurasque sonantis 864 audiit una Arruns, haesitque in corpore ferrum. 865 Illum exspirantem socii atque extrema gementem 866 obliti ignoto camporum in pulvere linquunt, 867 Opis ad aetherium pennis aufertur Olympum.	865 Swift through the midmost slaughter proudly strides 866 the quiver-girt Camilla, with one breast 867 thrust naked to the fight, like Amazon. 868 Oft from her hand her pliant shafts she rains, 869 or whirls with indefatigable arm 870 a doughty battle-axe; her shoulder bears 871 Diana's sounding arms and golden bow. 872 Sometimes retreating and to flight compelled, 873 the maiden with a rearward-pointing bow 874 shoots arrows as she flies. Around her move 875 her chosen peers, Larina, virgin brave, 876 Tarpeia, brandishing an axe of bronze, 877 and Tulla, virgins out of Italy 878 whom the divine Camilla chose to be 879 her glory, each a faithful servitress 880 in days of peace or war. The maids of Thrace 881 ride thus along Thermodon's frozen flood, 882 and fight with blazoned Amazonian arms 883 around Hippolyta; or when returns 884 Penthesilea in triumphal car 885 'mid acclamations shrill, and all her host 886 of women clash in air the moon-shaped shield.

	868 Prima fugit domina amissa levis ala Camillae; 869 turbati fugiunt Rutuli, fugit acer Atinas 870 disiectique duces desolatique manipli
11.871	871 tuta petunt et equis aversi ad moenia tendunt. 872 Nec quisquam instantis Teucros letumque ferentis 873 sustentare valet telis aut sistere contra, 874 sed laxos referunt umeris languentibus arcus, 875 quadrupedumque putrem cursu quatit ungula campum. 876 Volvitur ad muros caligine turbidus atra 877 pulvis, et e speculis percussae pectora matres 878 femineum clamorem ad caeli sidera tollunt. 879 Qui cursu portas primi inrupere patentis, 880 hos inimica super mixto premit agmine turba; 881 nec miseram effugiunt mortem, sed limine in ipso, 882 moenibus in patriis atque inter tuta domorum 883 confixi exspirant animas. Pars claudere portas: 884 nec sociis aperire viam nec moenibus audent 885 accipere orantis, oriturque miserrima caedes 886 defendentum armis aditus inque arma ruentum. 887 Exclusi ante oculos lacrumantumque ora parentum 888 pars in praecipitis fossas urgente ruina 889 volvitur, immissis pars caeca et concita frenis 890 arietat in portas et duros obice postis. 891 Ipsae de muris summo certamine matres, 892 monstrat amor verus patriae, ut videre Camillam, 893 tela manu trepidae iaciunt ac robore duro 894 stipitibus ferrum sudibusque imitantur obustis 895 praecipites primaeque mori pro moenibus ardent. 896 Interea Turnum in silvis saevissimus implet	887 What warrior first, whom last, did thy strong spear, 888 fierce virgin, earthward fling? Or what thy tale 889 of prostrate foes laid gasping on the ground? 890 Eunaeus first, the child of Clytius' Ioins, 891 whose bared breast, as he faced his foe, she pierced 892 with fir-tree javelin; from his lips outpoured 893 the blood-stream as he fell; and as he bit 894 the gory dust, he clutched his mortal wound. 895 Then Liris, and upon him Pagasus 896 she slew: the one clung closer to the reins 897 of his stabbed horse, and rolled off on the ground; 898 the other, flying to his fallen friend, 899 reached out a helpless hand; so both of these 900 fell on swift death together. Next in line 901 she smote Amastrus, son of Hippotas; 902 then, swift-pursuing, pierced with far-flung spear 903 Tereus, Harpalycus, Demophoon, 904 and Chromis; every shaft the virgin threw 905 laid low its Phrygian warrior. From afar 906 rode Ornytus on his Apulian steed, 907 bearing a hunter's uncouth arms; for cloak 908 he wore upon his shoulders broad a hide 909 from some wild bull stripped off; his helmet was 910 a wolf's great, gaping mouth, with either jaw 911 full of white teeth; the weapon in his hand, 912 a farmer's pole. He strode into the throng, 913 head taller than them all. But him she seized 914 and clove him through (his panic-stricken troop 915 gave her advantage), and with wrathful heart 916 she taunted thus the fallen: “Didst thou deem 917 this was a merry hunting in the wood 918 in chase of game? Behold, thy fatal day 919 befalls thee at a woman's hand, and thus 920 thy boasting answers. No small glory thou 921 unto the ghosts of thy dead sires wilt tell, 922 that 't was Camilla's javelin struck thee down.”

	897 nuntius, et iuveni ingentem fert Acca tumultum: 898 deletas Volscorum acies, cecidisse Camillam, 899 ingruere infensos hostis et Marte secundo 900 omnia corripuisse, metum iam ad moenia ferri.
11.901	901 Ille furens, et saeva Iovis sic numina pellunt, 902 deserit obsessos collis, nemora aspera linquit. 903 Vix e conspectu exierat campumque tenebat, 904 cum pater Aeneas saltus ingressus apertos 905 exsuperatque iugum silvaque evadit opaca. 906 Sic ambo ad muros rapidi totoque feruntur 907 agmine nec longis inter se passibus absunt; 908 ac simul Aeneas fumantis pulvere campos 909 prospexit longe Laurentiaque agmina vidit, 910 et saevum Aenean adgnovit Turnus in armis 911 adventumque pedum flatusque audivit equorum. 912 Continuoque ineant pugnas et proelia temptent, 913 ni roseus fessos iam gurgite Phoebus Hibero 914 tinguat equos noctemque die labente reducat: 915 considunt castris ante urbem et moenia vallant.
12.1	1 Turnus ut infractos adverso Marte Latinos 2 defecisse videt, sua nunc promissa reposci, 3 se signari oculis, ultro implacabilis ardet 4 attollitque animos. Poenorum qualis in arvis 5 saucius ille gravi venantum vulnere pectus 6 tum demum movet arma leo gaudetque comantis 7 excutiens cervice toros fixumque latronis 8 inpavidus frangit telum et fremit ore cruento: 9 haud secus adcenso gliscit violentia Turno. 10 Tum sic adfatur regem atque ita	1 When Turnus marks how much the Latins quail 2 in adverse war, how on himself they call 3 to keep his pledge, and with indignant eyes 4 gaze all his way, fierce rage implacable 5 swells his high heart. As when on Libyan plain 6 a lion, gashed along his tawny breast 7 by the huntsman's grievous thrust, awakens him 8 unto his last grim fight, and gloriously 9 shaking the great thews of his maned neck, 10 shrinks not, but crushes the despoiler's spear 11 with blood-sprent, roaring mouth,— not less than so 12 burns the wild soul of Turnus and his ire. 13 Thus to the King he spoke with stormful brow: 14 “The war lags not for Turnus' sake. No cause 15 constrains the Teucrian cowards and their King 16 to eat their turbidus infit: 11 Nulla mora in Turno; nihil est quod dicta retractent 12 ignavi Aeneadae, nec quae pepigere recusent. 13 Congredior, fer sacra, pater, et concipe foedus. 14 Aut hac Dardanium dextra sub Tartara mittam, 15 desertorem Asiae (sedeant spectentque Latini), 16 et solus ferro crimen commune refellam, 17 aut habeat victos, cedat Lavinia coniunx. 18 Olli sedato respondit corde Latinus: 19 O praestans animi iuvenis, quantum ipse feroci 20 virtute exsuperas, tanto me impensius aequum est 21 consulere atque omnis metuentem expendere casus. 22 Sunt tibi regna patris Dauni, sunt oppida capta 23 multa manu, nec non aurumque animusque Latino est; 24 sunt aliae innuptae Latio et Laurentibus arvis, 25 nec genus indecores. Sine me haec haud mollia fatu 26 sublatis aperire dolis, simul hoc animo hauri. 27 Me natam nulli veterum sociare procorum 28 fas erat, idque omnes divique hominesque canebant. 29 Victus amore tui, cognato sanguine victus 30 coniugis et maestae lacrumis, vincla omnia rupi:	words and what they pledged refuse. 17 On his own terms I come. Bring forward, sire, 18 the sacrifice, and seal the pact I swear: 19 either to deepest hell this hand shall fling 20 yon Trojan runaway—the Latins all 21 may sit at ease and see!—and my sole sword 22 efface the general shame; or let him claim 23 the conquest, and Lavinia be his bride.”

12.31	31 promissam eripui genero, arma impia sumpsi. 32 Ex illo qui me casus, quae, Turne, sequantur 33 bella, vides, quantos primus patiare labores. 34 Bis magna victi pugna vix urbe tuemur 35 spes Italas; recalent nostro Thybrina fluenta 36 sanguine adhuc campique ingentes ossibus albent. 37 Quo referor totiens? Quae mentem insania mutat? 38 Si Turno exstincto socios sum adscire paratus, 39 cur non incolumi potius certamina tollo?	24 To him Latinus with unruffled mind 25 thus made reply: “O youth surpassing brave! 26 The more thy sanguinary valor burns 27 beyond its wont, the more with toilsome care 28 I ponder with just fear what chance may fall, 29 weighing it well. Thy father Daunus' throne, 30 and many a city by thy sword subdued, 31 are still thy own. Latinus also boasts 32 much golden treasure and a liberal hand. 33 Other unwedded maids of noble stem 34 in Latium and Laurentine land are found. 35 Permit me, then, to tell thee without guile 36 things hard to utter; let them deeply fill 37 thy listening soul. My sacred duty 'twas 38 to plight my daughter's hand to nonesoe'er 39 of all

	40 Quid consanguinei Rutuli, quid cetera dicet 41 Italia, ad mortem si te—Fors dicta refutet!— 42 prodiderim, natam et conubia nostra petentem? 43 Respice res bello varias; miserere parentis 44 longaevi, quem nunc maestum patria Ardea longe 45 dividit. Haudquaquam dictis violentia Turni 46 flectitur: exsuperat magis aegrescitque medendo. 47 Ut primum fari potuit, sic institit ore: 48 Quam pro me curam geris, hanc precor, optime, pro me 49 deponas letumque sinas pro laude pacisci: 50 et nos tela, pater, ferrumque haud debile dextra 51 spargimus; et nostro sequitur de volnere sanguis. 52 longe illi dea mater erit, quae nube fugacem 53 feminea tegat et vanis sese occulat umbris. 54 At regina, nova pugnae conterrita sorte, 55 flebat et ardentem generum monitura tenebat: 56 Turne, per has ego te lacrimas, per siquis Amatae 57 tangit honos animum (spes tu nunc una, senectae 58 tu requies miserae, decus imperiumque Latini 59 te penes, in te omnis domus inclinata recumbit). 60 unum oro: desiste manum committere Teucris.	her earlier wooers—so declared 40 the gods and oracles; but overcome 41 by love of thee, by thy dear, kindred blood, 42 and by the sad eyes of my mournful Queen, 43 I shattered every bond; I snatched away 44 the plighted maiden from her destined lord, 45 and took up impious arms. What evil case 46 upon that deed ensued, what hapless wars, 47 thou knowest, since thyself dost chiefly bear 48 the cruel burden. In wide-ranging fight 49 twice-conquered, our own city scarce upholds 50 the hope of Italy. Yon Tiber's wave 51 still runs warm with my people's blood; the plains 52 far round us glisten with their bleaching bones. 53 Why tell it o'er and o'er? What maddening dream 54 perverts my mind? If after Turnus slain 55 I must for friendship of the Trojan sue, 56 were it not better to suspend the fray 57 while Turnus lives? For what will be the word 58 of thy Rutulian kindred—yea, of all 59 Italia, if to death I give thee o'er— 60 (Which Heaven avert!) because thou fain wouldst win 61 my daughter and be sworn my friend and son? 62 Bethink thee what a dubious work is war; 63 have pity on thy father's reverend years, 64 who even now thy absence daily mourns 65 in Ardea, his native land and thine.” 66 But to this pleading Turnus' frenzied soul 67 yields not at all, but rather blazes forth 68 more wildly, and his fever fiercer burns 69 beneath the healer's hand. In answer he, 70 soon as his passion gathered voice, began: 71 “This keen solicitude for love of me, 72 I pray, good sire, for love of me put by! 73 And let me traffic in the just exchange 74 of death for glory. This right hand, O King, 75 can scatter shafts not few, nor do I wield 76 untempered steel. Whene'er I make a wound 77 blood follows. For my foeman when we meet 78 will find no goddess-mother near, with hand 79 to hide him in her woman's skirt of cloud, 80 herself in dim, deluding shade concealed.”
12.61	61 Qui te cumque manent isto certamine casus, 62 et me, Turne, manent: simul haec invisa relinquam 63 lumina nec generum Aenean captiva videbo. 64 Accepit vocem lacrimis Lavinia	81 But now the Queen, whose whole heart shrank in fear 82 from these new terms of duel, wept aloud, 83 and like one dying clasped her fiery son: 84 “O Turnus, by these tears-if in thy heart 85 thou honorest Amata still—O thou 86 who art of our distressful, dark old age

	matris 65 flagrantis perfusa genas, quoi plurimus ignem 66 subiecit rubor et calefacta per ora cucurrit. 67 Indum sanguineo veluti violaverit ostro 68 siquis ebur, aut mixta rubent ubi lilia multa 69 alba rosa: talis virgo dabat ore colores. 70 Illum turbat amor, figitque in virgine voltus: 71 ardet in arma magis paucisque adfatur Amatam. 72 Ne, quaeso, ne me lacrimis neve omine tanto 73 prosequere in duri certamina Martis euntem, 74 O mater; neque enim Turno mora libera mortis. 75 Nuntius haec Idmon Phrygio mea dicta tyranno 76 haud placitura refer: cum primum crastina caelo 77 puniceis invecta rotis Aurora rubebit, 78 non Teucros agat in Rutulos, Teucrum arma quiescant 79 et Rutuli; nostro dirimamus sanguine bellum, 80 illo quaeratur coniunx Lavinia campo. 81 Haec ubi dicta dedit rapidusque in tecta recessit. 82 poscit equos gaudetque tuens ante ora frementis, 83 Pilumno quos ipsa decus dedit Orithyia, 84 qui candore nives anteirent, cursibus auras. 85 Circumstant properi aurigae manibusque lacessunt 86 pectora plausa cavis et colla comantia pectunt. 87 Ipse dehinc auro squalentem alboque orichalco 88 circumdat loricam umeris; simul aptat habendo 89 ensemque clipeumque et rubrae cornua cristae. 90 ensem, quem Dauno ignipotens deus ipse parenti	87 the only hope and peace, the kingly name 88 and glory of Latinus rests in thee; 89 thou art the mighty prop whereon is stayed 90 our falling house. One favor I implore: 91 give o'er this fight with Trojans. In such strife 92 thy destined doom is destined to be mine 93 by the same fatal stroke. For in that hour 94 this hated life shall cease, nor will I look 95 with slave's eyes on Aeneas as my son.” 96 Lavinia heard her mother's voice, and tears 97 o'erflowed her scarlet cheek, where blushes spread 98 like flame along her warm, young face and brow: 99 as when the Indian ivory must wear 100 ensanguined crimson stain, or lilies pale 101 mingled with roses seem to blush, such hues 102 her virgin features bore; and love's desire 103 disturbed his breast, as, gazing on the maid, 104 his martial passion fiercer flamed; whereon 105 in brief speech he addressed the Queen: “No tears! 106 No evil omen, mother, I implore! 107 Make me no sad farewells, as I depart 108 to the grim war-god's game! Can Turnus' hand 109 delay death's necessary coming? Go, 110 Idmon, my herald, to the Phrygian King, 111 and tell him this—a word not framed to please: 112 soon as Aurora from her crimson car 113 flushes to-morrow's sky, let him no more 114 against the Rutule lead the Teucrian line; 115 let Teucrian swords and Rutule take repose, 116 while with our own spilt blood we twain will make 117 an end of war; on yonder mortal field 118 let each man woo Lavinia for his bride.”
12.91	91 fecerat et Stygia candentem tinxerat unda. 92 Exin quae mediis ingenti adnixa columnae 93 aedibus adstabat, validam vi corripit	119 So saying, he hied him to his lordly halls, 120 summoned his steeds, and with pleased eye surveyed 121 their action proud: them Orithyia, bride 122 of Boreas, to Sire Pilumnus gave, 123

	hastam, 94 Actoris Aurunci spolium, quassatque trementem 95 vociferans: Nunc, O numquam frustrata vocatus 96 hasta meos, nunc tempus adest: te maximus Actor 97 te Turni nunc dextra gerit. Da sternere corpus 98 loricamque manu valida lacerare revulsam 99 semiviri Phrygis et foedare in pulvere crinis 100 vibratos calido ferro murraque madentis. 101 His agitur furiis; totoque ardentis ab ore 102 scintillae absistunt, oculis micat acribus ignis: 103 mugitus veluti cum prima in proelia taurus 104 terrificos ciet atque irasci in cornua temptat, 105 arboris obnixus trunco, ventosque lacessit 106 ictibus aut sparsa ad pugnam proludit harena. 107 Nec minus interea maternis saevos in armis 108 Aeneas acuit Martem et se suscitat ira, 109 oblato gaudens componi foedere bellum, 110 tum socios maestique metum solatur Iuli, 111 fata docens, regique iubet responsa Latino 112 certa referre viros et pacis dicere leges. 113 Postera vix summos spargebat lumine montis 114 orta dies, cum primum alto se gurgite tollunt 115 solis equi lucemque elatis naribus efflant: 116 campum ad certamen magnae sub moenibus urbis 117 dimensi Rutulique viri Teucrique parabant 118 in medioque focos et dis communibus aras 119 gramineas. Alii fontemque ignemque ferebant, 120 velati limo et verbena tempora vincti.	which in their whiteness did surpass the snow 124 in speed the wind. The nimble charioteers 125 stood by and smote with hollowed hand and palm 126 the sounding chests, or combed the necks and manes. 127 But he upon his kingly shoulders clasped 128 his corselet, thick o'erlaid with blazoned gold 129 and silvery orichalch; he fitted him 130 with falchion, shield, and helm of purple plume, 131 that falchion which the Lord of Fire had made 132 for Daunus, tempering in the Stygian wave 133 when white it glowed; next grasped he the good spear 134 which leaned its weight against a column tall 135 in the mid-court, Auruncan Actor's spoil, 136 and waved it wide in air with mighty cry: 137 “O spear, that ne'er did fail me when I called, 138 the hour is come! Once mighty Actor's hand, 139 but now the hand of Turnus is thy lord. 140 Grant me to strike that carcase to the ground, 141 and with strong hand the corselet rip and rend 142 from off that Phrygian eunuch: let the dust 143 befoul those tresses, tricked to curl so fine 144 with singeing steel and sleeked with odorous oil.” 145 Such frenzy goads him: his impassioned brow 146 is all on flame, the wild eyes flash with fire. 147 Thus, bellowing loud before the fearful fray, 148 some huge bull proves the fury of his horns, 149 pushing against a tree-trunk; his swift thrusts 150 would tear the winds in pieces; while his hoofs 151 toss up the turf and sand, rehearsing war.
12.121	121 Procedit legio Ausonidum, pilataque plenis 122 agmina se fundunt portis. Hinc

	Troïus omnis 123 Tyrrhenusque ruit variis exercitus armis, 124 haud secus instructi ferro, quam si aspera Martis 125 pugna vocet; nec non mediis in milibus ipsi 126 ductores auro volitant ostroque decori, 127 et genus Assaraci Mnestheus et fortis Asilas 128 et Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles. 129 Utque dato signo spatia in sua quisque recessit, 130 defigunt tellure hastas et scuta reclinant. 131 Tum studio effusae matres et volgus inermum 132 invalidique senes turris ac tecta domorum 133 obsedere, alii portis sublimibus adstant. 134 At Iuno e summo, qui nunc Albanus habetur, 135 tum neque nomen erat nec honos aut gloria monti, 136 prospiciens tumulo campum aspectabat et ambas 137 Laurentum Troumque acies urbemque Latini. 138 Extemplo Turni sic est adfata sororem 139 diva deam, stagnis quae fluminibusque sonoris 140 praesidet (hunc illi rex aetheris altus honorem 141 Iuppiter erepta pro virginitate sacravit): 142 Nympha, decus fluviorum, animo gratissima nostro, 143 scis ut te cunctis unam, quaecumque Latinae 144 magnanimi Iovis ingratum ascendere cubile, 145 praetulerim caelique lubens in parte locarim: 146 disce tuum, ne me incuses, Iuturna, dolorem. 147 Qua visa est Fortuna pati Parcaeque sinebant 148 cedere res Latio, Turnum et tua moenia texi: 149 nunc iuvenem imparibus video concurrere fatis, 150 Parcarumque dies et vis inimica propinquat.
12.151	151 Non pugnam aspicere hanc oculis,	152 That self-same day with aspect non foedera possum. 152 Tu pro germano siquid praesentius audes, 153 perge: decet. Forsan miseros meliora sequentur. 154 Vix ea, cum lacrimas oculis Iuturna profudit 155 terque quaterque manu pectus percussit honestum. 156 Non lacrumis hoc tempus, ait Saturnia Iuno: 157 Adcelera et fratrem, siquis modus, eripe morti, 158 aut tu bella cie conceptumque excute foedus: 159 auctor ego audendi. Sic exhortata reliquit 160 incertam et tristi turbatam volnere mentis. 161 Interea reges, ingenti mole Latinus 162 quadriiugo vehitur curru, cui tempora circum 163 aurati bis sex radii fulgentia cingunt, 164 Solis avi specimen; bigis it Turnus in albis, 165 bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro; 166 hinc pater Aeneas, Romanae stirpis origo, 167 sidereo flagrans clipeo et caelestibus armis, 168 et iuxta Ascanius, magnae spes altera Romae, 169 procedunt castris, puraque in veste sacerdos 170 saetigeri fetum suis intonsamque bidentem 171 adtulit admovitque pecus flagrantibus aris. 172 Illi ad surgentem conversi lumina solem 173 dant fruges manibus salsas et tempora ferro 174 summa notant pecudum paterisque altaria libant. 175 Tum pius Aeneas stricto sic ense precatur: 176 Esto nunc Sol testis et haec mihi Terra vocanti, 177 quam propter tantos potui perferre labores, 178 et pater omnipotens et tu Saturnia coniunx, 179 iam melior, iam, diva, precor, tuque inclute Mavors, 180 cuncta tuo qui bella, pater, sub numine torques;	terrible 153 Aeneas girt him in the wondrous arms 154 his mother gave; made sharp his martial steel, 155 and roused his heart to ire; though glad was he 156 to seal such truce and end the general war. 157 Then he spoke comfort to his friends; and soothed 158 Iulus' fear, unfolding Heaven's intent; 159 but on Latinus bade his heralds lay 160 unyielding terms and laws of peace impose. 161 Soon as the breaking dawn its glory threw 162 along the hills, and from the sea's profound 163 leaped forth the horses of the sun-god's car, 164 from lifted nostrils breathing light and fire, 165 then Teucrian and Rutulian measured out 166 a place for duel, underneath the walls 167 of the proud city. In the midst were set 168 altars of turf and hearth-stones burning bright 169 in honor of their common gods. Some brought 170 pure waters and the hallowed flame, their thighs 171 in priestly skirt arrayed, and reverend brows 172 with vervain bound. Th' Ausonians, spear in hand, 173 out from the city's crowded portals moved 174 in ordered column: next the Trojans all, 175 with Tuscan host in various martial guise, 176 equipped with arms of steel, as if they heard 177 stern summons to the fight. Their captains, too, 178 emerging from the multitude, in pride 179 of gold and purple, hurried to and fro: 180 Mnestheus of royal stem, Asilas brave; 181 and Neptune's offspring, tamer of the steed, 182 Messapus. Either host, at signal given, 183 to its own ground retiring, fixed in earth 184 the long shafts of the spears and stacked the shields. 185 Then eagerly to tower and rampart fly 186 the women, the infirm old men, the throng 187 of the unarmed, and sit them there at gaze, 188 or on the columned gates expectant stand.

12.181	181 fontisque fluviosque voco, quaeque aetheris alti 182 religio et quae caeruleo sunt numina ponto: 183 cesserit Ausonio si fors victoria Turno, 184 convenit Evandri victos discedere ad urbem, 185 cedet Iulus agris, nec post arma ulla rebelles 186 Aeneadae referent ferrove haec regna lacessent, 187 sin nostrum adnuerit nobis Victoria Martem 188 (ut potius reor et potius di numine firment), 189 non ego nec Teucris Italos parere iubebo 190 nec mihi regna peto: paribus se legibus ambae 191 invictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant. 192 Sacra deosque dabo; socer arma Latinus habeto, 193 imperium sollemne socer; mihi moenia Teucri 194 constituent, urbique dabit Lavinia nomen. 195 Sic prior Aeneas; sequitur sic deinde Latinus 196 suspiciens caelum tenditque ad sidera dextram: 197 Haec eadem, Aenea, terram mare sidera iuro 198 Latonaeque genus duplex Ianumque bifrontem 199 vimque deum infernam et duri sacraria Ditis; 200 audiat haec genitor, qui foedera fulmine sancit. 201 Tango aras, medios ignis et numina testor: 202 nulla dies pacem hanc Italis nec foedera rumpet, 203 quo res cumque cadent; nec me vis ulla volentem 204 avertet, non, si tellurem effundat in undas 205 diluvio miscens caelumque in Tartara solvat; 206 ut sceptrum hoc (dextra sceptrum nam forte gerebat) 207 numquam fronde levi fundet virgulta nec umbras, 208 cum semel in silvis imo de stirpe recisum 209 matre caret posuitque comas et bracchia ferro,	189 But Juno, peering from that summit proud 190 which is to-day the Alban (though that time 191 nor name nor fame the hallowed mountain knew), 192 surveyed the plain below and fair array 193 of Trojan and Laurentine, by the walls 194 of King Latinus. Whereupon straightway 195 with Turnus' sister she began converse, 196 goddess with goddess; for that nymph divine 197 o'er Alba's calm lakes and loud rivers reigns; 198 Jove, the high monarch of th' ethereal sky, 199 gave her such glory when he stole away 200 her virgin zone. “O nymph“, she said, “who art 201 the pride of flowing streams, and much beloved 202 of our own heart! thou knowest thou alone 203 hast been my favorite of those Latin maids 204 that to proud Jove's unthankful bed have climbed; 205 and willingly I found thee place and share 206 in our Olympian realm. So blame not me, 207 but hear, Juturna, what sore grief is thine: 208 while chance and destiny conceded aught 209 of strength to Latium's cause, I shielded well 210 both Turnus and thy city's wall; but now 211 I see our youthful champion make his war 212 with fates adverse. The Parcae's day of doom 213 implacably impends. My eyes refuse 214 to look upon such fight, such fatal league. 215 If for thy brother's life thou couldst be bold 216 to venture some swift blow, go, strike it now! 217 'T is fit and fair! Some issue fortunate 218 may tread on sorrow's heel.” She scarce had said, 219 when rained the quick tears from Juturna's eyes. 220 Three times and yet again her desperate hand 221 smote on her comely breast. But Juno cried, 222 “No tears to-day! But haste thee, haste and find 223 what way, if way there be, from clutch of death 224 to tear thy brother free; arouse the war; 225 their plighted peace destroy. I grant thee leave 226 such boldness to essay.” With this command 227 she left the nymph dismayed and grieving sore.

	210 olim arbos, nunc artificis manus aere decoro
12.211	211 inclusit patribusque dedit gestare Latinis. 212 Talibus inter se firmabant foedera dictis 213 conspectu in medio procerum. Tum rite sacratas 214 in flammam iugulant pecudes et viscera vivis 215 eripiunt cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras. 216 At vero Rutulis inpar ea pugna videri 217 iamdudum et vario misceri pectora motu; 218 tum magis, ut propius cernunt non viribus aequis. 219 Adiuvat incessu tacito progressus et aram 220 suppliciter venerans demisso lumine Turnus 221 tabentesque genae et iuvenali in corpore pallor. 222 Quem simul ac Iuturna soror crebrescere vidit 223 sermonem et volgi variare labantia corda, 224 in medias acies, formam adsimulata Camerti, 225 cui genus a proavis ingens clarumque paternae 226 nomen erat virtutis, et ipse acerrimus armis, 227 in medias dat sese acies haud nescia rerum 228 rumoresque serit varios ac talia fatur: 229 Non pudet, O Rutuli, pro cunctis talibus unam 230 obiectare animam? Numerone an viribus aequi 231 non sumus? En omnes et Troes et Arcades hi sunt 232 fatalesque manus, infensa Etruria Turno: 233 vix hostem, alterni si congrediamur, habemus. 234 Ille quidem ad superos, quorum se devovet aris, 235 succedet fama vivusque per ora feretur: 236 nos patria amissa dominis parere superbis 237 cogemur, qui nunc lenti consedimus arvis. 238 Talibus incensa est iuvenum sententia dictis	228 Meanwhile the kings ride forth: Latinus first, 229 looming tall-statured from his four-horse car; 230 twelve rays of gold encircle his bright brow, 231 sign of the sun-god, his progenitor; 232 next Turnus, driving snow-white steeds, is seen,— 233 two bread-tipped javelins in his hand he bears; 234 Aeneas, of Rome's blood the source and sire, 235 with star-bright shield and panoply divine, 236 far-shining comes; Ascanius by his side— 237 of Roman greatness the next hope is he. 238 To camp they rode, where, garbed in blameless white, 239 with youngling swine and two-year sheep unshorn, 240 the priest before the flaming altars drove 241 his flock and offering: to the rising sun 242 all eyes are lifted, as with careful hand 243 the salted meal is scattered, while with knives 244 they mark each victim's brow, outpouring wine 245 from shallow bowls, the sacrifice to bless.

	239 iam magis atque magis, serpitque per agmina murmur; 240 ipsi Laurentes mutati ipsique Latini.
12.241	241 Qui sibi iam requiem pugnae rebusque salutem 242 sperabant, nunc arma volunt foedusque precantur 243 infectum et Turni sortem miserantur iniquam. 244 His aliud maius Iuturna adiungit et alto 245 dat signum caelo, quo non praesentius ullum 246 turbavit mentes Italas monstroque fefellit. 247 Namque volans rubra fulvus Iovis ales in aethra 248 litoreas agitabat aves turbamque sonantem 249 agminis aligeri, subito cum lapsus ad undas 250 cycnum excellentem pedibus rapit improbus uncis. 251 Adrexere animos Itali, cunctaeque volucres 252 convertunt clamore fugam, mirabile visu, 253 aetheraque obscurant pennis hostemque per auras 254 facta nube premunt, donec vi victus et ipso 255 pondere defecit, praedamque ex unguibus ales 256 proiecit fluvio penitusque in nubila fugit. 257 Tum vero augurium Rutuli clamore salutant 258 expediuntque manus; primusque Tolumnius augur 259 Hoc erat, hoc, votis, inquit, quod saepe petivi. 260 Adcipio adgnoscoque deos; me, me duce ferrum 261 corripite, O miseri, quos improbus advena bello 262 territat invalidas ut aves et litora vestra 263 vi populat: petet ille fugam penitusque profundo 264 vela dabit. Vos unanimi densete catervas 265 et regem vobis pugna defendite raptum. 266 Dixit et adversos telum contorsit in hostis 267 procurrens: sonitum dat stridula cornus et auras	246 Then good Aeneas, his sword drawn, put forth 247 this votive prayer: “O Sun in heaven; and thou, 248 Italia, for whom such toils I bear, 249 be witness of my orison. On thee, 250 Father omnipotent, I call; on thee, 251 his Queen Saturnia,—now may she be 252 more gracious to my prayer! O glorious Mars, 253 beneath whose godhead and paternity 254 all wars begin and end, on thee I call; 255 hail, all ye river-gods and haunted springs; 256 hail, whatsoever gods have seat of awe 257 in yonder distant sky, and ye whose power 258 is in the keeping of the deep, blue sea: 259 if victory to Ausonian Turnus fall, 260 then let my vanquished people take its way 261 unto Evander's city! From these plains 262 Iulus shall retire—so stands the bond; 263 nor shall the Trojans with rebellious sword 264 bring after-trouble on this land and King. 265 But if on arms of ours success shall shine, 266 as I doubt not it shall (may gods on high 267 their will confirm!), I purpose not to chain 268 Italian captive unto Teucrian lord, 269 nor seek I kingly power. Let equal laws 270 unite in federation without end 271 the two unconquered nations; both shall share 272 my worshipped gods. Latinus, as my sire, 273 shall keep his sword, and as my sire receive 274 inviolable power. The Teucrians 275 shall build my stronghold, but our citadel 276 shall bear forevermore Lavinia's name.”

	268 certa secat. Simul hoc, simul ingens clamor et omnes 269 turbati cunei calefactaque corda tumultu. 270 Hasta volans, ut forte novem pulcherrima fratrum
12.271	271 corpora constiterant contra, quos fida crearat 272 una tot Arcadio coniunx Tyrrhena Gylippo, 273 horum unum ad medium, teritur qua sutilis alvo 274 balteus et laterum iuncturas fibula mordet 275 egregium forma iuvenem et fulgentibus armis 276 transadigit costas fulvaque effundit harena. 277 At fratres, animosa phalanx accensaque luctu, 278 pars, gladios stringunt manibus, pars missile ferrum 279 corripiunt caecique ruunt. Quos agmina contra 280 procurrunt Laurentum, hinc densi rursus inundant 281 Troes Agyllinique et pictis Arcades armis: 282 sic omnis amor unus habet decernere ferro. 283 Diripuere aras, it toto turbida caelo 284 tempestas telorum ac ferreus ingruit imber, 285 craterasque focosque ferunt. Fugit ipse Latinus 286 pulsatos referens infecto foedere divos. 287 Infrenant alii currus aut corpora saltu 288 subiciunt in equos et strictis ensibus adsunt. 289 Messapus regem regisque insigne gerentem, 290 Tyrrhenum Aulesten, avidus confundere foedus, 291 adverso proterret equo: ruit ille recedens 292 et miser oppositis a tergo involvitur aris 293 in caput inque umeros. At fervidus advolat hasta 294 Messapus teloque orantem multa trabali 295 desuper altus equo graviter ferit atque ita fatur: 296 Hoc habet, haec melior magnis data victima divis. 297 Concurrunt Itali spoliantque	277 Aeneas thus: then with uplifted eyes 278 Latinus swore, his right hand raised to heaven: 279 “I too, Aeneas, take the sacred vow. 280 By earth and sea and stars in heaven I swear, 281 by fair Latona's radiant children twain, 282 and two-browed Janus; by the shadowy powers 283 of Hades and th' inexorable shrines 284 of the Infernal King; and may Jove hear, 285 who by his lightnings hallows what is sworn! 286 I touch these altars, and my lips invoke 287 the sacred altar-fires that 'twixt us burn: 288 we men of Italy will make this peace 289 inviolate, and its bond forever keep, 290 let come what will; there is no power can change 291 my purpose, not if ocean's waves o'erwhelm 292 the world in billowy deluge and obscure 293 the bounds of heaven and hell. We shall remain 294 immutable as my smooth sceptre is“ 295 (By chance a sceptre in his hand he bore), 296 “which wears no more light leaf or branching shade; 297 for long since in the grove 't was plucked away 298 from parent stem, and yielded to sharp steel 299 its leaves and limbs; erewhile 't was but a tree, 300 till the wise craftsman with fair sheath of bronze 301 encircled it and laid it in the hands 302 of Latium's royal sires.” With words like these 303 they swore the bond, in the beholding eyes 304 of gathered princes. Then they slit the throats 305 of hallowed victims o'er the altar's blaze, 306 drew forth the quivering vitals, and with flesh 307 on loaded chargers heaped the sacrifice.

	calentia membra. 298 Obvius ambustum torrem Corynaeus ab ara 299 corripit et venienti Ebuso plagamque ferenti 300 occupat os flammis: olli ingens barba reluxit
12.301	301 nidoremque ambusta dedit. Super ipse secutus 302 caesariem laeva turbati corripit hostis 303 inpressoque genu nitens terrae adplicat ipsum: 304 sic rigido latus ense ferit. Podalirius Alsum 305 pastorem primaque acie per tela ruentem, 306 ense sequens nudo superimminet: ille securi 307 adversi frontem mediam mentumque reducta 308 disicit et sparso late rigat arma cruore. 309 Olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget 310 somnus, in aeternam conduntur lumina noctem. 311 At pius Aeneas dextram tendebat inermem 312 nudato capite atque suos clamore vocabat: 313 Quo ruitis? Quaeve ista repens discordia surgit? 314 O cohibete iras! Ictum iam foedus et omnes 315 compositae leges; mihi ius concurrere soli; 316 me sinite atque auferte metus; ego foedera faxo 317 firma manu; Turnum debent haec iam mihi sacra. 318 Has inter voces, media inter talia verba 319 ecce viro stridens alis adlapsa sagitta est 320 incertum qua pulsa manu, quo turbine adacta, 321 quis tantam Rutulis laudem, casusne deusne, 322 adtulerit: pressa est insignis gloria facti. 323 nec sese Aeneae iactavit vulnere quisquam. 324 Turnus ut Aenean cedentem ex agmine vidit 325 turbatosque duces, subita spe fervidus ardet: 326 poscit equos atque arma simul	308 But to Rutulian eyes th' approaching joust 309 seemed all ill-matched; and shifting hopes and fears 310 disturbed their hearts the closer they surveyed 311 th' unequal risks: still worse it was to see 312 how Turnus, silent and with downcast eyes, 313 dejectedly drew near the place of prayer, 314 worn, pale, and wasted in his youthful bloom. 315 The nymph Juturna, with a sister's fear, 316 noted the growing murmur, and perceived 317 how all the people's will did shift and change; 318 she went from rank to rank, feigning the shape 319 of Camers, scion of illustrious line, 320 with heritage of valor, and himself 321 dauntless in war; unceasingly she ran 322 from rank to rank, spreading with skilful tongue 323 opinions manifold, and thus she spoke: 324 “Will ye not blush, Rutulians, so to stake 325 one life for many heroes? Are we not 326 their match in might and numbers? O, behold 327 those Trojan sons of Heaven making league 328 with exiled Arcady; see Tuscan hordes 329 storming at Turnus. Yet we scarce could find 330 one foe apiece, forsooth, if we should dare 331 fight them with half our warriors. Of a truth 332 your champion brave shall to those gods ascend 333 before whose altars his great heart he vows; 334 and lips of men while yet on earth he stays 335 will spread his glory far. Ourselves, instead, 336 must crouch to haughty masters, and resign 337 this fatherland upon whose fruitful fields saltuque superbus 327 emicat in currum et manibus molitur habenas. 328 Multa virum volitans dat fortia corpora Leto, 329 semineces volvit multos aut agmina curru 330 proterit aut raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas.

12.331	331 Qualis apud gelidi cum flumina concitus Hebri 332 sanguineus Mavors clipeo increpat atque furentis 333 bella movens immittit equos; illi aequore aperto 334 ante Notos Zephyrumque volant; gemit ultima pulsu 335 Thraca pedum; circumque atrae Formidinis ora 336 Iraeque Insidiaeque, dei comitatus, aguntur: 337 talis equos alacer media inter proelia Turnus 338 fumantis sudore quatit, miserabile caesis 339 hostibus insultans; spargit rapida ungula rores 340 sanguineos, mixtaque cruor calcatur harena. 341 Iamque neci Sthenelumque dedit Thamyrumque Pholumque, 342 hunc congressus et hunc, illum eminus; eminus ambo 343 Imbrasidas, Glaucum atque Laden, quos Imbrasus ipse 344 nutrierat Lycia paribusque ornaverat armis, 345 vel conferre manum vel equo praevertere ventos. 346 Parte alia media Eumedes in proelia fertur, 347 antiqui proles bello praeclara Dolonis, 348 nomine avum referens, animo manibusque parentem, 349 qui quondam, castra ut Danaum speculator adiret, 350 ausus Pelidae pretium sibi poscere currus; 351 illum Tydides alio pro talibus ausis 352 adfecit pretio, nec equis adspirat Achillis. 353 Hunc procul ut campo Turnus prospexit aperto, 354 ante levi iaculo longum per inane secutus 355 sistit equos biiugis et curru desilit atque	338 we dwell at ease.” So speaking, she inflamed 339 the warriors' minds, and through the legions ran 340 increasing whisper; the Laurentine host 341 and even Latium wavered. Those who late 342 prayed but for rest and safety, clamored loud 343 for arms, desired annulment of the league, 344 and pitied Turnus' miserable doom. 345 Whereon Juturna tried a mightier stroke, 346 a sign from heaven, which more than all beside 347 confused the Latins and deceived their hearts 348 with prodigy. For through the flaming skies 349 Jove's golden eagle swooped, and scattered far 350 a clamorous tribe of river-haunting birds; 351 then, swiftly to the waters falling, seized 352 one noble swan, which with keen, curving claws 353 he ruthless bore away: th' Italians all 354 watched eagerly, while the loud-screaming flock 355 wheeled upward (wondrous sight!), with host of wings 356 shadowed the sky, and in a legion-cloud 357 chased through the air the foe; till, overborne 358 by heavier odds, the eagle from his claws 359 flung back his victim to the waves, and fled 360 to the dim, distant heaven. The Rutules then 361 hailed the good omen with consenting cry, 362 and grasped the sword and shield. Tolumnius 363 the augur spake first: “Lo, the sign I sought 364 with many a prayer! I welcome and obey 365 the powers divine. Take me for captain, me! 366 And draw your swords, ye wretches, whom th' assault 367 of yonder foreign scoundrel puts in fear

	356 semianimi lapsoque supervenit et pede collo 357 impresso dextrae mucronem extorquet et alto 358 fulgentem tinguit iugulo atque haec insuper addit: 359 En agros et quam bello, Troiane, petisti, 360 Hesperiam metire iacens: haec praemia qui me
12.361	361 ferro ausi temptare ferunt, sic moenia condunt. 362 Huic comitem Asbyten coniecta cuspide mittit. 363 Chloreaque Sybarimque Daretaque Thersilochumque 364 et sternacis equi lapsum cervice Thymoeten. 365 Ac velut Edoni Boreae cum spiritus alto 366 insonat Aegaeo sequiturque ad litora fluctus, 367 qua venti incubuere, fugam dant nubila caelo: 368 sic Turno, quacumque viam secat, agmina cedunt 369 conversaeque ruunt acies; fert impetus ipsum, 370 et cristam adverso curru quatit aura volantem. 371 Non tulit instantem Phegeus animisque frementem: 372 obiecit sese ad currum et spumantia frenis 373 ora citatorum dextra detorsit equorum. 374 Dum trahitur pendetque iugis, hunc lata retectum 375 lancea consequitur rumpitque infixa bilicem 376 loricam et summum degustat volnere corpus. 377 Ille tamen clipeo obiecto conversus in hostem 378 ibat et auxilium ducto mucrone petebat: 379 cum rota praecipitem et procursu concitus axis 380 impulit effunditque solo, Turnusque secutus 381 imam inter galeam summi thoracis et oras 382 abstulit ense caput truncumque reliquit harenae. 383 Atque ea dum campis victor dat funera Turnus, 384 interea Aenean Mnestheus et fidus Achates	368 like feeble birds, and with his violence 369 lays waste your shore. He too shall fly away, 370 spreading his ships' wings on the distant seas. 371 Close up your ranks—one soul in all our breasts! 372 Defend in open war your stolen King.” 373 So saying, he hurled upon th' opposing foe 374 his javelin, running forward. The strong shaft 375 of corner whistled shrill, and clove the air 376 unerring. Instantly vast clamor rose, 377 and all th' onlookers at the spectacle 378 leaped up amazed, and every heart beat high. 379 The spear sped flying to the foeman's line, 380 where stood nine goodly brethren, pledges all 381 of one true Tuscan mother to her lord, 382 Gylippus of Arcadia; it struck full 383 on one of these at his gold-belted waist, 384 and where the clasp clung, pierced the rib clean through. 385 And stretched the fair youth in his glittering arms 386 full length and lifeless on the yellow sand. 387 His brothers then, bold band to wrath aroused 388 by sorrow, seize the sword or snatch the spear 389 and blindly charge. Opposing them, the host 390 Laurentine makes advance, and close-arrayed 391 the Trojans like a torrent pour, enforced 392 by Tuscans and the gay-accoutred clans 393 of Arcady. One passion moved in all 394 to try the judgment of the sword. They tore 395 the altars down: a very storm of spears 396 rose angrily to heaven, in iron rain 397 down-pouring: while the priests bore far away

	385 Ascaniusque comes castris statuere cruentum, 386 alternos longa nitentem cuspide gressus. 387 Saevit et infracta luctatur arundine telum 388 eripere auxilioque viam, quae proxima, poscit 389 ense secent lato vulnus telique latebram 390 rescindant penitus seseque in bella remittant.
12.391	391 Iamque aderat Phoebo ante alios dilectus Iapyx 392 Iasides, acri quondam cui captus amore 393 ipse suas artes, sua munera, laetus Apollo 394 augurium citharamque dabat celerisque sagittas. 395 Ille ut depositi proferret fata parentis, 396 scire potestates herbarum usumque medendi 397 maluit et mutas agitare inglorius artes. 398 Stabat acerba fremens, ingentem nixus in hastam 399 Aeneas magno iuvenum et maerentis Iuli 400 concursu, lacrimis immobilis. Ille retorto 401 Paeonium in morem senior succinctus amictu 402 multa manu medica Phoebique potentibus herbis 403 nequiquam trepidat, nequiquam spicula dextra 404 sollicitat prensatque tenaci forcipe ferrum. 405 Nulla viam Fortuna regit, nihil auctor Apollo 406 subvenit; et saevus campis magis ac magis horror 407 crebrescit propiusque malum est. Iam pulvere caelum 408 stare vident: subeunt equites, et spicula castris 409 densa cadunt mediis. It tristis ad aethera clamor 410 bellantum iuvenum et duro sub Marte cadentum. 411 Hic Venus, indigno nati concussa dolore, 412 dictamnum genetrix Cretaea carpit ab Ida, 413 puberibus caulem foliis et flore comantem	398 the sacrificial bowls and sacred fires. 399 Even Latinus fled; his stricken gods 400 far from his violated oath he bore. 401 Some leaped to horse or chariot and rode 402 with naked swords in air. Messapus, wild 403 to break the truce, assailed the Tuscan King, 404 Aulestes, dressed in kingly blazon fair, 405 with fearful shock of steeds; the Tuscan dropped 406 helplessly backward, striking as he fell 407 his head and shoulders on the altar-stone 408 that lay behind him. But Messapus flew, 409 infuriate, a javelin in his hand, 410 and, towering o'er the suppliant, smote him strong 411 with the great beam-like spear, and loudly cried: 412 “Down with him! Ah! no common victim he 413 to give the mighty gods!” Italia's men 414 despoiled the dead man ere his limbs were cold. 415 Then Corynaeus snatched a burning brand 416 out of the altar, and as Ebysus 417 came toward him for to strike, he hurled the flame 418 full in his face: the big beard quickly blazed 419 with smell of singeing; while the warrior bold 420 strode over him, and seized with firm left hand 421 his quailing foe's Iong hair; then with one knee 422 he pushed and strained, compelled him to the `ground— 423 and struck straight at his heart with naked steel. 424 The shepherd Alsus in the foremost line 425 came leaping through the spears; when o'er him towered 426 huge Podalirius with a flashing sword 427 in close pursuit; the mighty battle-axe 428 clove him with swinging stroke from brow to chin, 429 and spilt along his mail the streaming gore: 430 so stern repose and iron slumber fell

	414 purpureo; non illa feris incognita capris 415 gramina, cum tergo volucres haesere sagittae: 416 hoc Venus, obscuro faciem circumdata nimbo, 417 detulit; hoc fusum labris splendentibus amnem 418 inficit occulte medicans spargitque salubris 419 ambrosiae sucos et odoriferam panaceam. 420 Fovit ea volnus lympha longaevus Iapyx
12.421	421 ignorans, subitoque omnis de corpore fugit 422 quippe dolor, omnis stetit imo volnere sanguis; 423 iamque secuta manum nullo cogente sagitta 424 excidit, atque novae rediere in pristina vires. 425 Arma citi properate viro! Quid statis? Iapyx 426 conclamat primusque animos adcendit in hostem. 427 Non haec humanis opibus, non arte magistra 428 proveniunt neque te, Aenea, mea dextera servat: 429 maior agit deus atque opera ad maiora remittit. 430 Ille avidus pugnae suras incluserat auro 431 hinc atque hinc oditque moras hastamque coruscat. 432 Postquam habilis lateri clipeus loricaque tergo est, 433 Ascanium fusis circum complectitur armis 434 summaque per galeam delibans oscula fatur: 435 Disce, puer, virtutem ex me verumque laborem, 436 fortunam ex aliis. Nunc te mea dextera bello 437 defensum dabit et magna inter praemia ducet. 438 Tu facito, mox cum matura adoleverit aetas, 439 sis memor, et te animo repetentem exempla tuorum 440 et pater Aeneas et avunculus excitet Hector. 441 Haec ubi dicta dedit, portis sese extulit ingens, 442 telum immane manu quatiens; simul agmine denso	431 upon that shepherd's eyes, and sealed their gaze 432 in endless night. But good Aeneas now 433 stretched forth his unarmed hand, and all unhelmed 434 thus Ioudly to his people called: “What means 435 this frantic stir, this quarrel rashly bold? 436 Recall your martial rage! The pledge is given 437 and all its terms agreed. 'T is only I 438 do lawful battle here. So let me forth, 439 and tremble not. My own hand shall confirm 440 the solemn treaty. For these rites consign 441 Turnus to none but me.” Yet while he spoke, 442 behold, a winged arrow, hissing loud, 443 the hero pierced; but what bold hand impelled 444 its whirling speed, none knew; nor if it were 445 chance or some power divine that brought this fame 446 upon Rutulia; for the glorious deed 447 was covered o'er with silence: none would boast 448 an arrow guilty of Aeneas' wound. 449 When Turnus saw Aeneas from the line 450 retreating, and the captains in dismay, 451 with sudden hope he burned: he called for steeds, 452 for arms, and, leaping to his chariot, 453 rode insolently forth, the reins in hand. 454 Many strong heroes he dispatched to die, 455 as on he flew, and many stretched half-dead, 456 or from his chariot striking, or from far 457 raining his javelins on the recreant foe. 458 As Mars, forth-speeding by the wintry stream 459 of Hebrus, smites his sanguinary shield 460 and whips the swift steeds to the front of war,

	443 Antheusque Mnestheusque ruunt omnisque relictis 444 turba fluit castris: tum caeco pulvere campus 445 miscetur pulsuque pedum tremit excita tellus. 446 Vidit ab adverso venientis aggere Turnus, 447 videre Ausonii, gelidusque per ima cucurrit 448 ossa tremor: prima ante omnis Iuturna Latinos 449 audiit adgnovitque sonum et tremefacta refugit. 450 Ille volat campoque atrum rapit agmen aperto.
12.451	451 Qualis ubi ad terras abrupto sidere nimbus 452 it mare per medium; miseris heu praescia longe 453 horrescunt corda agricolis, dabit ille ruinas 454 arboribus stragemque satis, ruet omnia late; 455 ante volant sonitumque ferunt ad litora venti: 456 talis in adversos ductor Rhoeteius hostis 457 agmen agit, densi cuneis se quisque coactis 458 adglomerant. Ferit ense gravem Thymbraeus Osirim, 459 Archetium Mnestheus, Epulonem obtruncat Achates 460 Ufentemque Gyas; cadit ipse Tolumnius augur, 461 primus in adversos telum qui torserat hostis. 462 Tollitur in caelum clamor, versique vicissim 463 pulverulenta fuga Rutuli dant terga per agros. 464 Ipse neque aversos dignatur sternere Morti 465 nec pede congressos aequo nec tela ferentis 466 insequitur: solum densa in caligine Turnum 467 vestigat lustrans, solum in certamina poscit. 468 Hoc concussa metu mentem Iuturna virago 469 aurigam Turni media inter lora Metiscum 470 excutit et longe lapsum temone relinquit: 471 ipsa subit manibusque undantis flectit habenas,	461 who, flying past the winds of eve and morn, 462 scour the wide champaign; the bounds of Thrace 463 beneath their hoof-beats thunder; the dark shapes 464 of Terror, Wrath, and Treachery move on 465 in escort of the god: in such grim guise 466 bold Turnus lashed into the fiercest fray 467 his streaming steeds, that pitiful to see 468 trod down the slaughtered foe; each flying hoof 469 scattered a bloody dew; their path was laid 470 in mingled blood and sand. To death he flung 471 Pholus and Sthenelus and Thamyris: 472 two smitten in close fight and one from far: 473 also from far he smote with fatal spear 474 Glaucus and Lades, the Imbrasidae, 475 whom Imbrasus himself in Lycia bred, 476 and honored them with arms of equal skill 477 when grappling with a foe, or o'er the field 478 speeding a war-horse faster than the wind. 479 Elsewhere Eumedes through a throng of foes 480 to battle rode, the high-born Dolon's child, 481 famous in war, who bore his grandsire's name, 482 but seemed in might and courage like his sire: 483 that prince, who reconnoitring crept so near 484 the Argive camp, he dared to claim for spoil 485 the chariot of Achilles; but that day 486 great Diomed for such audacious deed 487 paid wages otherwise,—and he no more 488 dreamed to possess the steeds of Peleus' son. 489 When Turnus recognized in open field 490 this warrior, though far, he aimed and flung 491 his javelin through the spacious air; then stayed 492 his coursers twain, and, leaping from his car, 493 found the wretch helpless fallen; so planted

	472 cuncta gerens, vocemque et corpus et arma Metisci. 473 Nigra velut magnas domini cum divitis aedes 474 pervolat et pennis alta atria lustrat hirundo, 475 pabula parva legens nidisque loquacibus escas, 476 et nunc porticibus vacuis, nunc umida circum 477 stagna sonat: similis medios Iuturna per hostis 478 fertur equis rapidoque volans obit omnia curru 479 iamque hic germanum iamque hic ostentat ovantem 480 nec conferre manum patitur, volat avia longe.	he 494 his foot upon his neck, and from his hand 495 wrested the sword and thrust it glittering 496 deep in the throat, thus taunting as he slew: 497 “There's land for thee, thou Trojan! Measure there 498 th' Hesperian provinces thy sword would find. 499 Such reward will I give to all who dare 500 draw steel on me; such cities they shall build.” 501 To bear him company his spear laid low 502 Asbutes, Sybaris, Thersilochus, 503 Chloreus and Dares, and Thymoetes thrown 504 sheer off the shoulders of his balking steed. 505 As when from Thrace the north wind thunders down 506 the vast Aegean, flinging the swift flood 507 against the shore, and where his blasts assail 508 the cloudy cohorts vanish out of heaven:
12.481	481 Haud minus Aeneas tortos legit obvius orbes 482 vestigatque virum et disiecta per agmina magna 483 voce vocat. Quotiens oculos coniecit in hostem 484 alipedumque fugam cursu temptavit equorum, 485 aversos totiens currus Iuturna retorsit. 486 Heu quid agat? Vario nequiquam fluctuat aestu, 487 diversaeque vocant animum in contraria curae. 488 Huic Messapus, uti laeva duo forte gerebat 489 lenta levis cursu praefixa hastilia ferro, 490 horum unum certo contorquens dirigit ictu. 491 Substitit Aeneas et se collegit in arma, 492 poplite subsidens; apicem tamen incita summum 493 hasta tulit summasque excussit vertice cristas. 494 Tum vero adsurgunt irae; insidiisque subactus, 495 diversos ubi sensit equos currumque referri, 496 multa Iovem et laesi testatus foederis aras 497 iam tandem invadit medios et Marte secundo 498 terribilis saevam nullo discrimine caedem 499 suscitat irarumque omnis effundit habenas.	509 so before Turnus, where his path he clove, 510 the lines fell back, the wheeling legions fled. 511 The warrior's own wild impulse swept him on, 512 and every wind that o'er his chariot blew 513 shook out his plume in air. But such advance 514 so bold, so furious, Phegeus could not brook, 515 but, fronting the swift chariot's path, he seized 516 the foam-flecked bridles of its coursers wild, 517 while from the yoke his body trailed and swung; 518 the broad lance found his naked side, and tore 519 his double corselet, pricking lightly through 520 the outer flesh; but he with lifted shield 521 still fought his foe and thrust with falchion bare; 522 but the fierce pace of whirling wheel and pole 523 flung him down prone, and stretched him on the plain. 524 Then Turnus, aiming with relentless sword 525 between the corselet's edge and helmet's rim 526 struck off his whole head, leaving on the sands 527 the mutilated corpse. While thus afield 528 victorious Turnus dealt out death and doom, 529 Mnestheus, Achates true, and by their side 530 Ascanius, have carried to the camp 531 Aeneas, gashed and bleeding, whose long lance 532 sustained his limping step. With fruitless rage 533 he struggled with the spear-head's splintered barb, 534 and bade them help him by the swiftest way 535 to carve the wound out with a sword, to rip 536 the clinging weapon forth, and send him back 537 to meet the battle.

	500 Quis mihi nunc tot acerba deus, quis carmine caedes 501 diversas obitumque ducum, quos aequore toto 502 inque vicem nunc Turnus agit, nunc Troius heros, 503 expediat? Tanton placuit concurrere motu, 504 Iuppiter, aeterna gentis in pace futuras? 505 Aeneas Rutulum Sucronem, ea prima ruentis 506 pugna loco statuit Teucros, haud multa morantem 507 excipit in latus et, qua fata celerrima, crudum 508 transadigit costas et cratis pectoris ensem. 509 Turnus equo deiectum Amycum fratremque Dioren, 510 congressus pedes, hunc venientem cuspide longa,	Quickly to his side 538 came Iapyx, dear favorite and friend
12.511	511 hunc mucrone ferit curruque abscisa duorum 512 suspendit capita et rorantia sanguine portat. 513 Ille Talon Tanaimque neci fortemque Cethegum, 514 tris uno congressu, et maestum mittit Oniten, 515 nomen Echionium matrisque genus Peridiae, 516 hic fratres Lycia missos et Apollinis agris 517 et iuvenem exosum nequiquam bella Menoeten, 518 Arcada, piscosae cui circum flumina Lernae 519 ars fuerat pauperque domus nec nota potentum 520 munera conductaque pater tellure serebat. 521 Ac velut immissi diversis partibus ignes 522 arentem in silvam et virgulta sonantia lauro, 523 aut ubi decursu rapido de montibus altis 524 dant sonitum spumosi amnes et in aequora currunt 525 quisque suum populatus iter: non segnius ambo 526 Aeneas Turnusque ruunt per proelia; nunc nunc 527 fluctuat ira intus, rumpuntur nescia vinci 528 pectora, nunc totis in volnera viribus itur.	539 of Phoebus, upon whom the god bestowed 540 his own wise craft and power, Iove-impelled. 541 The gifts of augury were given, and song, 542 with arrows of swift wing: he when his sire 543 was carried forth to die, deferred the doom 544 for many a day, by herbs of virtue known 545 to leechcraft; and without reward or praise 546 his silent art he plied. Aeneas stood, 547 bitterly grieving, propped upon his spear; 548 a throng of warriors were near him, and 549 Iulus, sorrowing. The aged man 550 gathered his garments up as leeches do, 551 and with skilled hand and Phoebus' herbs of power 552 bustled in vain; in vain his surgery 553 pried at the shaft, and with a forceps strong 554 seized on the buried barb. But Fortune gave 555 no remedy, nor did Apollo aid 556 his votary. So more and more grim fear 557 stalks o'er the field of war, and nearer hies 558 the fatal hour; the very heavens are dust; 559 the horsemen charge, and in the midmost camp 560 a rain of javelins pours. The dismal cry 561 of men in fierce fight, and of men who fall 562 beneath relentless Mars, rends all the air.

	529 Murranum hic, atavos et avorum antiqua sonantem 530 nomina per regesque actum genus omne Latinos, 531 praecipitem scopulo atque ingentis turbine saxi 532 excutit effunditque solo: hunc lora et iuga subter 533 provolvere rotae, crebro super ungula pulsu 534 incita nec domini memorum proculcat equorum. 535 Ille ruenti Hyllo animisque immane frementi 536 occurrit telumque aurata ad tempora torquet: 537 olli per galeam fixo stetit hasta cerebro. 538 Dextera nec tua te, Graium fortissime Cretheu 539 eripuit Turno. Nec di texere Cupencum 540 Aenea veniente sui: dedit obvia ferro
12.541	541 pectora, nec misero clipei mora profuit aerei. 542 Te quoque Laurentes viderunt, Aeole, campi 543 oppetere et late terram consternere tergo. 544 Occidis, Argivae quem non potuere phalanges 545 sternere nec Priami regnorum eversor Achilles; 546 hic tibi mortis erant metae: domus alta sub Ida, 547 Lyrnesi domus alta, solo Laurente sepulchrum. 548 Totae adeo conversae acies, omnesque Latini, 549 omnes Dardanidae, Mnestheus acerque Serestus 550 et Messapus equum domitor et fortis Asilas 551 Tuscorumque phalanx Evandrique Arcades alae, 552 pro se quisque viri summa nituntur opum vi: 553 nec mora nec requies, vasto certamine tendunt. 554 Hic mentem Aeneae genetrix pulcherrima misit, 555 iret ut ad muros urbique adverteret agmen 556 ocius et subita turbaret clade Latinos. 557 Ille ut vestigans diversa per agmina Turnum	563 Then Venus, by her offspring's guiltless woe 564 sore moved, did cull from Cretan Ida's crest 565 some dittany, with downy leaf and stem 566 and flowers of purple bloom—a simple known 567 to mountain goats, when to their haunches clings 568 an arrow gone astray. This Venus brought, 569 mantling her shape in cloud; and this she steeped 570 in bowls of glass, infusing secretly 571 ambrosia's healing essence and sweet drops 572 of fragrant panacea. Such a balm 573 aged Iapyx poured upon the wound, 574 though unaware; and sudden from the flesh 575 all pain departed and the blood was staunched, 576 while from the gash the arrow uncompelled 577 followed the hand and dropped: his wonted strength 578 flowed freshly through the hero's frame. “Make haste! 579 Bring forth his arms! Why tarry any more?” 580 Iapyx shouted, being first to fire 581 their courage 'gainst the foe. “This thing is done 582 not of man's knowledge, nor by sovereign skill; 583 nor has my hand, Aeneas, set thee free. 584 Some mighty god thy vigor gives again 585 for mighty deeds.” Aeneas now put on, 586 all fever for the fight, his golden greaves, 587 and, brooking not delay, waved wide his spear. 588 Soon as the corselet and the shield were bound 589 on back and side, he

	558 huc atque huc acies circumtulit, aspicit urbem 559 immunem tanti belli atque impune quietam. 560 Continuo pugnae adcendit maioris imago: 561 Mnesthea Sergestumque vocat fortemque Serestum 562 ductores tumulumque capit, quo cetera Teucrum 563 concurrit legio nec scuta aut spicula densi 564 deponunt. Celso medius stans aggere fatur: 565 Nequa meis esto dictis mora; Iuppiter hac stat, 566 neu quis ob inceptum subitum mihi segnior ito. 567 Urbem hodie, causam belli, regna ipsa Latini, 568 ni frenum accipere et victi parere fatentur, 569 eruam et aequa solo fumantia culmina ponam. 570 Scilicet exspectem, libeat dum proelia Turno	clasped Ascanius 590 to his mailed breast, and through his helmet grim 591 tenderly kissed his son. “My boy", he cried, 592 “What valor is and patient, genuine toil 593 learn thou of me; let others guide thy feet 594 to prosperous fortune. Let this hand and sword 595 defend thee through the war and lead thee on 596 to high rewards. Thou also play the man! 597 And when thy riper vigor soon shall bloom, 598 forget not in thy heart to ponder well 599 the story of our line. Heed honor's call, 600 like Sire Aeneas and Hector thy close kin.”
12.571	571 nostra pati rursusque velit concurrere victus? 572 Hoc caput, O cives, haec belli summa nefandi: 573 ferte faces propere foedusque reposcite flammis. 574 Dixerat, atque animis pariter certantibus omnes 575 dant cuneum densaque ad muros mole feruntur. 576 Scalae improviso subitusque apparuit ignis. 577 Discurrunt alii ad portas primosque trucidant, 578 ferrum alii torquent et obumbrant aethera telis. 579 Ipse inter primos dextram sub moenia tendit 580 Aeneas magnaque incusat voce Latinum 581 testaturque deos, iterum se ad proelia cogi, 582 bis iam Italos hostis, haec altera foedera rumpi. 583 Exoritur trepidos inter discordia civis: 584 urbem alii reserare iubent et pandere portas 585 Dardanidis ipsumque trahunt in moenia regem, 586 arma ferunt alii et pergunt defendere muros.

	587 Inclusas ut cum latebroso in pumice pastor 588 vestigavit apes fumoque implevit amaro: 589 illae intus trepidae rerum per cerea castra 590 discurrunt magnisque acuunt stridoribus iras; 591 volvitur ater odor tectis, tum murmure caeco 592 intus saxa sonant, vacuas it fumus ad auras. 593 Accidit haec fessis etiam fortuna Latinis, 594 quae totam luctu concussit funditus urbem. 595 Regina ut tectis venientem prospicit hostem, 596 incessi muros, ignis ad tecta volare, 597 nusquam acies contra Rutulas, nulla agmina Turni: 598 infelix pugnae iuvenem in certamine credit 599 exstinctum et, subito mentem turbata dolore, 600 se causam clamat crimenque caputque malorum,
12.601	601 multaque per maestum demens effata furorem 602 purpureos moritura manu discindit amictus 603 et nodum informis leti trabe nectit ab alta. 604 Quam cladem miserae postquam accepere Latinae, 605 filia prima manu flavos Lavinia crinis 606 et roseas laniata genas, tum cetera circum 607 turba furit: resonant late plangoribus aedes. 608 Hinc totam infelix volgatur fama per urbem. 609 Demittunt mentes; it scissa veste Latinus, 610 coniugis attonitus fatis urbisque ruina, 611 canitiem immundo perfusam pulvere turpans. 612 613 614 Interea extremo bellator in aequore Turnus 615 palantis sequitur paucos iam segnior atque 616 iam minus atque minus successu laetus equorum	601 After such farewell word, he from the gates 602 in mighty stature strode, and swung on high 603 his giant spear. With him in serried line 604 Antheus and Mnestheus moved, and all the host 605 from the forsaken fortress poured. The plain 606 was darkened with their dust; the startled earth 607 shook where their footing fell. From distant hill 608 Turnus beheld them coming, and the eyes 609 of all Ausonia saw: a chill of fear 610 shot through each soldier's marrow; in their van 611 Juturna knew full well the dreadful sound, 612 and fled before it, shuddering. But he 613 hurried his murky cohorts o'er the plain. 614 As when a tempest from the riven sky 615 drives landward o'er mid-ocean, and from far 616 the hearts of husbandmen, foreboding woe, 617 quake ruefully,—for this will come and rend 618 their trees asunder, kill the harvests all, 619 and sow destruction broadcast; in its path 620 fly roaring winds, swift heralds of the storm: 621 such dire approach the Trojan chieftain showed 622 before his gathered foes. In close array 623 they wedge their ranks about him. With a sword 624 Thymbraeus

	617 attulit hunc illi caecis terroribus aura 618 commixtum clamorem adrectasque impulit aures 619 confusae sonus urbis et inlaetabile murmur. 620 Ei mihi! Quid tanto turbantur moenia luctu? 621 Quisve ruit tantus diversa clamor ab urbe? 622 Sic ait adductisque amens subsistit habenis. 623 Atque huic, in faciem soror ut conversa Metisci 624 aurigae currumque et equos et lora regebat, 625 talibus occurrit dictis: Hac, Turne, sequamur 626 Troiugenas, qua prima viam victoria pandit; 627 sunt alii, qui tecta manu defendere possint. 628 Ingruit Aeneas Italis et proelia miscet: 629 et nos saeva manu mittamus funera Teucris. 630 Nec numero inferior pugnae nec honore recedes.	cuts huge-limbed Osiris down; 625 Mnestheus, Arcetius; from Epulo 626 Achates shears the head; from Ufens, Gyas; 627 Tolumnius the augur falls, the same 628 who flung the first spear to the foeman's line. 629 Uprose to heaven the cries. In panic now 630 the Rutules in retreating clouds of dust 631 scattered across the plain. Aeneas scorned 632 either the recreant or resisting foe 633 to slaughter, or the men who shoot from far: 634 for through the war-cloud he but seeks the arms 635 of Turnus, and to single combat calls.
12.631	631 Turnus ad haec: 632 O soror, et dudum adgnovi, cum prima per artem 633 foedera turbasti teque haec in bella dedisti, 634 et nunc nequiquam fallis dea. Sed quis Olympo 635 demissam tantos voluit te ferre labores? 636 An fratris miseri letum ut crudele videres? 637 Nam quid ago? Aut quae iam spondet Fortuna salutem? 638 Vidi oculos ante ipse meos me voce vocantem 639 Murranum, quo non superat mihi carior alter, 640 oppetere ingentem atque ingenti volnere victum. 641 Occidit infelix nostrum ne dedecus Ufens 642 adspiceret; Teucri potiuntur corpore et armis. 643 Exscindine domos (id rebus defuit unum) 644 perpetiar, dextra nec Drancis dicta refellam? 645 Terga dabo et Turnum fugientem haec terra videbit? 646 Usque adeone mori miserum est?	636 The warrior-maid Juturna, seeing this, 637 distraught with terror, strikes down from his place 638 Metiscus, Turnus' charioteer, who dropped 639 forward among the reins and off the pole. 640 Him leaving on the field, her own hand grasped 641 the loosely waving reins, while she took on 642 Metiscus' shape, his voice, and blazoned arms. 643 As when through some rich master's spacious halls 644 speeds the black swallow on her lightsome wing, 645 exploring the high roof, or harvesting 646 some scanty morsel for her twittering brood, 647 round empty corridors or garden-pools 648 noisily flitting: so Juturna roams 649 among the hostile ranks, and wings her way 650 behind the swift steeds of the whirling car. 651 At divers points she lets the people see 652 her brother's glory, but not yet allows 653 the final tug of war; her pathless flight 654 keeps far away. Aeneas too must take 655 a course circuitous, and follows close 656 his foeman's track; Ioud o'er the scattered lines 657 he shouts his challenge. But whene'er his eyes 658 discern the foe, and fain he would confront 659 the flying-footed

	Vos O mihi Manes 647 este boni, quoniam superis aversa voluntas! 648 Sancta ad vos anima atque istius nescia culpae 649 descendam, magnorum haud umquam indignus avorum. 650 Vix ea fatus erat: medios volat ecce per hostis 651 vectus equo spumante Saces, adversa sagitta 652 saucius ora, ruitque implorans nomine Turnum: 653 Turne, in te suprema salus: miserere tuorum. 654 Fulminat Aeneas armis summasque minatur 655 deiecturum arces Italum exscidioque daturum; 656 iamque faces ad tecta volant. In te ora Latini, 657 in te oculos referunt; mussat rex ipse Latinus, 658 quos generos vocet aut quae sese ad foedera flectat. 659 Praeterea regina, tui fidissima, dextra 660 occidit ipsa sua lucemque exterrita fugit.	steeds, Juturna veers 660 the chariot round and flies. What can he do? 661 Aeneas' wrath storms vainly to and fro, 662 and wavering purposes his heart divide. 663 Against him lightly leaped Messapus forth, 664 bearing two pliant javelins tipped with steel; 665 and, whirling one in air, he aimed it well, 666 with stroke unfailing. Great Aeneas paused 667 in cover of his shield and crouched low down 668 upon his haunches. But the driven spear 669 battered his helmet's peak and plucked away 670 the margin of his plume. Then burst his rage: 671 his cunning foes had forced him; so at last, 672 while steeds and chariot in the distance fly, 673 he plunged him in the fray, and called on Jove 674 the altars of that broken oath to see. 675 Now by the war-god's favor he began 676 grim, never-pitying slaughter, and flung free 677 the bridle of his rage.
12.661	661 Soli pro portis Messapus et acer Atinas 662 sustentant aciem. Circum hos utrimque phalanges 663 stant densae, strictisque seges mucronibus horret 664 ferrea: tu currum deserto in gramine versas. 665 Obstipuit varia confusus imagine rerum 666 Turnus et obtutu tacito stetit. Aestuat ingens 667 uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu 668 et furiis agitatus amor et conscia virtus. 669 Ut primum discussae umbrae et lux reddita menti, 670 ardentis oculorum orbes ad moenia torsit 671 turbidus eque rotis magnam respexit ad urbem. 672 Ecce autem flammis inter tabulata volutus 673 ad caelum undabat vortex turrimque tenebat, 674 turrim, compactis trabibus quam eduxerat ipse 675 subdideratque rotas pontisque	678 What voice divine 679 such horror can make known? What song declare 680 the bloodshed manifold, the princes slain, 681 or flying o'er the field from Turnus' blade, 682 or from the Trojan King? Did Jove ordain 683 so vast a shock of arms should interpose 684 'twixt nations destined to perpetual bond? 685 Aeneas met the Rutule Sucro—thus 686 staying the Trojan charge—and with swift blow 687 struck at him sidewise, where the way of death 688 is quickest, cleaving ribs and rounded side 689 with reeking sword. Turnus met Amycus, 690 unhorsed him, though himself afoot, and slew 691 Diores, his fair brother (one was pierced 692 fronting the spear, the other felled to earth 693 by strike of sword), and both their severed heads 694 he hung all dripping to his chariot's rim. 695 But Talon, Tanais, and Cethegus brave, 696 three in one onset, unto death went down 697 at great Aeneas' hand; and he dispatched 698 ill-starred Onites of Echion's line, 699 fair Peridia's child. Then Turnus slew 700 two Lycian brothers unto Phoebus dear, 701 and young Menoetes, an instraverat altos. 676 Iam iam fata, soror, superant; absiste morari; 677 quo deus et quo dura vocat Fortuna, sequamur. 678 Stat conferre manum Aeneae, stat quidquid acerbi est 679 morte pati; neque me indecorem, germana, videbis 680 amplius. Hunc, oro, sine me furere ante furorem. 681 Dixit et e curru saltum dedit ocius arvis 682 perque hostis, per tela ruit maestamque sororem 683 deserit ac rapido cursu media agmina rumpit. 684 Ac veluti montis saxum de vertice praeceps 685 cum ruit avulsum vento, seu turbidus imber 686 proluit aut annis solvit sublapsa vetustas; 687 fertur in abruptum magno mons improbus actu 688 exsultatque solo, silvas armenta virosque 689 involvens secum: disiecta per agmina Turnus 690 sic urbis ruit ad muros, ubi plurima fuso	Arcadian, 702 who hated war (though vainly) when he plied 703 his native fisher-craft in Lerna's streams, 704 where from his mean abode he ne'er went forth 705 to wait at great men's doors, but with his sire 706 reaped the scant harvest of a rented glebe. 707 as from two sides two conflagrations sweep 708 dry woodlands or full copse of crackling bay, 709 or as, swift-leaping from the mountain-vales, 710 two flooded, foaming rivers seaward roar, 711 each on its path of death, not less uproused, 712 speed Turnus and Aeneas o'er the field; 713 now storms their martial rage; now fiercely swells 714 either indomitable heart; and now 715 each hero's full strength to the slaughter moves.

12.691	691 sanguine terra madet striduntque hastilibus aurae, 692 significatque manu et magno simul incipit ore: 693 Parcite iam, Rutuli, et vos tela inhibete, Latini; 694 quaecumque est Fortuna, mea est: me verius unum 695 pro vobis foedus luere et decernere ferro. 696 Discessere omnes medii spatiumque dedere. 697 At pater Aeneas audito nomine Turni 698 deserit et muros et summas deserit arces 699 praecipitatque moras omnis, opera omnia rumpit, 700 laetitia exsultans, horrendumque intonat armis; 701 quantus Athos aut quantus Eryx aut ipse coruscis 702 cum fremit ilicibus quantus gaudetque nivali 703 vertice se attollens pater Appenninus ad auras. 704 Iam vero et Rutuli certatim et	716 Behold Murranus, boasting his high birth 717 from far-descended sires of storied name, 718 the line of Latium's kings! Aeneas now 719 with mountain-boulder lays him low in dust, 720 smitten with whirlwind of the monster stone; 721 and o'er him fallen under yoke and rein 722 roll his own chariot wheels, while with swift tread 723 the mad hoofs of his horses stamp him down, 724 not knowing him their lord. But Turnus found 725 proud Hyllus fronting him with frantic rage, 726 and at his golden helmet launched the shaft 727 that pierced it; in his cloven brain it clung. 728 Nor could thy sword, O Cretheus, save thee then 729 from Turnus, though of bravest Greeks the peer; 730 nor did Cupencus' gods their priest defend 731 against Aeneas, but his breast he gave 732 unto the hostile blade; his brazen shield 733 delayed no whit his miserable doom. 734 Thee also, Aeolus, Laurentum saw 735 spread thy huge body dying on the ground; 736 yea, dying, thou whom Greeks in serried arms 737 subdued

	Troes et omnes 705 convertere oculos Itali, quique alta tenebant 706 moenia quique imos pulsabant ariete muros, 707 armaque deposuere umeris. Stupet ipse Latinus 708 ingentis, genitos diversis partibus orbis, 709 inter se coiisse viros et cernere ferro. 710 Atque illi, ut vacuo patuerunt aequore campi, 711 procursu rapido, coniectis eminus hastis, 712 invadunt Martem clipeis atque aere sonoro. 713 Dat gemitum tellus; tum crebros ensibus ictus 714 congeminant: fors et virtus miscentur in unum. 715 Ac velut ingenti Sila summove Taburno 716 cum duo conversis inimica in proelia tauri 717 frontibus incurrunt; pavidi cessere magistri, 718 stat pecus omne metu mutum mussantque iuvencae, 719 quis nemori imperitet, quem tota armenta sequantur; 720 illi inter sese multa vi volnera miscent	not, nor Achilles' hand that hurled 738 the throne of Priam down: here didst thou touch 739 thy goal of death; one stately house was thine 740 on Ida's mountain, at Lyrnessus, one; 741 Laurentum's hallowed earth was but thy grave. 742 Now the whole host contends; all Latium meets 743 all Ilium; Mnestheus and Serestus bold; 744 Messapus, the steed-breaker, and high-soured 745 Asilas; Tuscans in a phalanx proud; 746 Arcadian riders of Evander's train: 747 each warrior lifts him to his height supreme 748 of might and skill; no sloth nor lingering now, 749 but in one far-spread conflict all contend.
12.721	721 cornuaque obnixi infigunt et sanguine largo 722 colla armosque lavant; gemitu nemus omne remugit: 723 non alitur Tros Aeneas et Daunius heros 724 concurrunt clipeis; ingens fragor aethera complet. 725 Iuppiter ipse duas aequato examine lances 726 sustinet et fata imponit diversa duorum, 727 quem damnet labor et quo vergat pondere letum; 728 Emicat hic, impune putans, et corpore toto 729 alte sublatum consurgit Turnus in ensem 730 et ferit: exclamant Troes trepidique Latini, 731 arrectaeque amborum acies. At perfidus ensis 732 frangitur in medioque ardentem deserit ictu 733 ni fuga subsidio subeat. Fugit ocior	750 His goddess-mother in Aeneas' mind 751 now stirred the purpose to make sudden way 752 against the city-wall, in swift advance 753 of all his line, confounding Latium so 754 with slaughter and surprise. His roving glance, 755 seeking for Turnus through the scattered lines 756 this way and that, beholds in distant view 757 the city yet unscathed and calmly free 758 from the wide-raging fight. Then on his soul 759 rushed the swift vision of a mightier war. 760 Mnestheus, Sergestus, and Serestus brave, 761 his chosen chiefs, he summons to his side, 762 and stands upon a hillock, whither throng 763 the Teucrian legions, each man holding fast 764 his shield and spear. He, towering high, 765 thus from the rampart to his people calls: 766 “Perform my bidding swiftly: Jove's own hand 767 sustains our power. Be ye not slack, because 768 the thing I do is sudden. For this day 769 I will pluck out th' offending root of war,— 770 yon euro, 734 ut capulum ignotum dextramque aspexit inermem. 735 Fama est praecipitem, cum prima in proelia iunctos 736 conscendebat equos, patrio mucrone relicto, 737 dum trepidat, ferrum aurigae rapuisse Metisci. 738 Idque diu, dum terga dabant palantia Teucri, 739 suffecit: postquam arma dei ad Volcania ventumst, 740 mortalis mucro glacies ceu futilis ictu 741 dissiluit; fulva resplendent fragmina harena. 742 Ergo amens diversa fuga petit aequora Turnus 743 et nunc huc, inde huc incertos implicat orbes 744 undique enim densa Teucri inclusere corona, 745 atque hinc vasta palus, hinc ardua moenia cingunt. 746 Nec minus Aeneas, quamquam tardata sagitta 747 interdum genua impediunt cursumque recusant, 748 insequitur trepidique pedem pede fervidus urget: 749 inclusum veluti siquando flumine nanctus 750 cervum aut puniceae saeptum formidine pinnae	city where Latinus reigns. Unless 771 it bear our yoke and heed a conqueror's will, 772 will lay low in dust its blazing towers. 773 Must I wait Turnus' pleasure, till he deign 774 to meet my stroke, and have a mind once more, 775 though vanquished, to show fight? My countrymen, 776 see yonder stronghold of their impious war! 777 Bring flames; avenge the broken oath with fire!” 778 Scarce had he said, when with consenting souls, 779 they speed them to the walls in dense array, 12.751	751 venator cursu canis et latratibus instat; 752 ille autem, insidiis et ripa territus alta, 753 mille fugit refugitque vias; at vividus Umber 754 haeret hians, iam iamque tenet similisque tenenti 755 increpuit malis morsuque elusus inani est. 756 Tum vero exoritur clamor, ripaeque lacusque 757 responsant circa et caelum tonat omne tumultu. 758 Ille simul fugiens Rutulos simul increpat omnis, 759 nomine quemque vocans, notumque efflagitat ensem. 760 Aeneas mortem contra praesensque minatur 761 exitium, si quisquam adeat, terretque trementis 762 excisurum urbem minitans et	780 forming a wedge. Ladders now leap in air, 781 and sudden-blazing fires. In various war 782 some troops run charging at the city-gates, 783 and slay the guards; some fling the whirling spear 784 and darken heaven with arrows. In their van, 785 his right hand lifted to the wails and towers, 786 Aeneas, calling on the gods to hear, 787 loudly upbraids Latinus that once more 788 conflict is thrust upon him; that once more 789 Italians are his foes and violate 790 their second pledge of peace. So blazes forth 791 dissension 'twixt the frighted citizens: 792 some would give o'er the city and fling wide 793 its portals to the Trojan, or drag forth 794 the King himself to parley; others fly 795 to arms, and at the rampart make a stand. 796 'T is thus some shepherd from a caverned crag 797 stirs up the nested bees with plenteous fume 798 of bitter smoke;

	saucius instat. 763 Quinque orbis explent cursu totidemque retexunt 764 huc illuc; neque enim levia aut ludicra petuntur 765 praemia, sed Turni de vita et sanguine certant. 766 Forte sacer Fauno foliis oleaster amaris 767 hic steterat, nautis olim venerabile lignum, 768 servati ex undis ubi figere dona solebant 769 Laurenti divo et votas suspendere vestes, 770 sed stirpem Teucri nullo discrimine sacrum 771 sustulerant, puro ut possent concurrere campo. 772 Hic hasta Aeneae stabat, huc impetus illam 773 detulerat fixam et lenta in radice tenebat. 774 Incubuit voluitque manu convellere ferrum 775 Dardanides teloque sequi, quem prendere cursu 776 non poterat. Tum vero amens formidine Turnus 777 Faune, precor, miserere, inquit, tuque optima ferrum 778 terra tene, colui vestros si semper honores, 779 quos contra Aeneadae bello fecere profanos. 780 Dixit opemque dei non cassa in vota vocavit.	they, posting to and fro, 799 fly desperate round the waxen citadel, 800 and whet their buzzing fury; through their halls 801 the stench and blackness rolls; within the caves 802 noise and confusion ring; the fatal cloud 803 pours forth incessant on the vacant air.
12.781	781 Namque diu luctans lentoque in stirpe moratus 782 viribus haud ullis valuit discludere morsus 783 roboris Aeneas. Dum nititur acer et instat, 784 rursus in aurigae faciem mutata Metisci 785 procurrit fratrique ensem dea Daunia reddit. 786 Quod Venus audaci nymphae indignata licere 787 adcessit telumque alta ab radice revellit. 788 Olli sublimes armis animisque refecti, 789 hic gladio fidens, hic acer et arduus hasta, 790 adsistunt contra certamina Martis anheli. 791 Iunonem interea rex omnipotentis	804 But now a new adversity befell 805 the weary Latins, which with common woe 806 shook the whole city to its heart. The Queen, 807 when at her hearth she saw the close assault 808 of enemies, the walls beset, and fire 809 spreading from roof to roof, but no defence 810 from the Rutulian arms, nor front of war 811 with Turnus leading,—she, poor soul, believed 812 her youthful champion in the conflict slain; 813 and, mad with sudden sorrow, shrieked aloud 814 against herself, the guilty chief and cause 815 of all this ill; and, babbling her wild woe 816 in endless words, she rent her purple pall, 817 and with her own hand from the rafter swung 818 a noose for her foul death. The tidings dire 819 among the moaning wives of Latium spread, 820 and young Lavinia's frantic

	Olympi 792 adloquitur fulva pugnas de nube tuentem: 793 Qua iam finis erit, coniunx? Quid denique restat? 794 Indigetem Aenean scis ipsa et scire fateris 795 deberi caelo fatisque ad sidera tolli. 796 Quid struis, aut qua spe gelidis in nubibus haeres? 797 Mortalin decuit violari volnere divom, 798 aut ensem (quid enim sine te Iuturna valeret?) 799 ereptum reddi Turno et vim crescere victis? 800 Desine iam tandem precibusque inflectere nostris, 801 802 803 ventum ad supremum est. Terris agitare vel undis 804 Troianos potuisti, infandum adcendere bellum, 805 deformare domum et luctu miscere hymenaeos: 806 ulterius temptare veto. Sic Iuppiter orsus; 807 sic dea submisso contra Saturnia voltu: 808 Ista quidem quia nota mihi tua, magne, voluntas, 809 Iuppiter, et Turnum et terras invita reliqui; 810 nec tu me aeria solam nunc sede videres	fingers tore 821 her rose-red cheek and hyacinthine hair. 822 Then all her company of women shrieked 823 in anguish, and the wailing echoed far 824 along the royal seat; from whence the tale 825 of sorrow through the peopled city flew; 826 hearts sank; Latinus rent his robes, appalled 827 to see his consort's doom, his falling throne; 828 and heaped foul dust upon his hoary hair.
12.811	811 digna indigna pati, sed flammis cincta sub ipsa 812 starem acie traheremque inimica in proelia Teucros. 813 Iuturnam misero, fateor, succurrere fratri 814 suasi et pro vita maiora audere probavi, 815 non ut tela tamen, non ut contenderet arcum: 816 adiuro Stygii caput implacabile fontis, 817 una superstitio superis quae reddita divis. 818 Et nunc cedo equidem pugnasque exosa relinquo. 819 Illud te, nulla fati quod lege tenetur, 820 pro Latio obtestor, pro maiestate tuorum: 821 cum iam conubis pacem felicibus,	829 Meanwhile the warrior Turnus far afield 830 pursued a scattered few; but less his speed, 831 for less and less his worn steeds worked his will; 832 and now wind-wafted to his straining ear 833 a nameless horror came, a dull, wild roar, 834 the city's tumult and distressful cry. 835 “Alack,” he cried, “what stirs in yonder walls 836 such anguish? Or why rings from side to side 837 such wailing through the city?” Asking so, 838 he tightened frantic grasp upon the rein. 839 To him his sister, counterfeiting still 840 the charioteer Metiscus, while she swayed 841 rein, steeds, and chariot, this answer made: 842 “Hither, my Turnus, let our arms pursue 843 the sons of Troy. Here lies the nearest way 844 to speedy triumph. There be other swords 845 to keep yon city safe. Aeneas now

	esto, 822 component, cum iam leges et foedera iungent, 823 ne vetus indigenas nomen mutare Latinos 824 neu Troas fieri iubeas Teucrosque vocari 825 aut vocem mutare viros aut vertere vestem. 826 Sit Latium, sint Albani per saecula reges, 827 sit Romana potens Itala virtute propago: 828 occidit, occideritque sinas cum nomine Troia. 829 Olli subridens hominum rerumque repertor 830 Es germana Iovis Saturnique altera proles: 831 irarum tantos volvis sub pectore fluctus. 832 Verum age et inceptum frustra submitte furorem 833 do quod vis, et me victusque volensque remitto. 834 Sermonem Ausonii patrium moresque tenebunt, 835 utque est nomen erit; commixti corpore tantum 836 subsident Teucri. Morem ritusque sacrorum 837 adiciam faciamque omnis uno ore Latinos. 838 Hinc genus Ausonio mixtum quod sanguine surget, 839 supra homines, supra ire deos pietate videbis, 840 nec gens ulla tuos aeque celebrabit honores.	846 storms against Italy in active war; 847 we also on this Trojan host may hurl 848 grim havoc. Nor shalt thou the strife give o'er 849 in glory second, nor in tale of slain.” 850 Turnus replied, “O sister, Iong ago 851 I knew thee what thou wert, when guilefully 852 thou didst confound their treaty, and enlist 853 thy whole heart in this war. No Ionger now 854 thy craft divine deceives me. But what god 855 compelled thee, from Olympus fallen so far, 856 to bear these cruel burdens? Wouldst thou see 857 thy wretched brother slaughtered? For what else 858 is in my power? What flattering hazard still
12.841	841 Adnuit his Iuno et mentem laetata retorsit. 842 Interea excedit caelo nubemque relinquit. 843 His actis aliud genitor secum ipse volutat 844 Iuturnamque parat fratris dimittere ab armis. 845 Dicuntur geminae pestes cognomine Dirae, 846 quas et Tartaream Nox intempesta Megaeram 847 uno eodemque tulit partu paribusque revinxit 848 serpentum spiris ventosasque addidit alas. 849 Hae Iovis ad solium saevique in limine regis 850 adparent acuuntque metum	859 holds forth deliverance? My own eyes have seen 860 Murranus (more than any now on earth 861 my chosen friend) who, calling on my name, 862 died like a hero by a hero's sword. 863 Ill-fated Ufens fell, enduring not 864 to Iook upon my shame; the Teucrians 865 divide his arms for spoil and keep his bones. 866 Shall I stand tamely, till my hearth and home 867 are levelled with the ground? For this would be 868 the only blow not fallen. Shall my sword 869 not give the lie to Drances' insolence? 870 Shall I take flight and let my country see 871 her Turnus renegade? Is death a thing 872 so much to weep for? O propitious dead, 873 O spirits of the dark, receive and bless 874 me whom yon gods of light have mortalibus aegris, 851 siquando letum horrificum morbosque deum rex 852 molitur meritas aut bello territat urbes. 853 Harum unam celerem demisit ab aethere summo 854 Iuppiter inque omen Iuturnae occurrere iussit. 855 Illa volat celerique ad terram turbine fertur. 856 Non secus ac nervo per nubem impulsa sagitta, 857 armatam saevi Parthus quam felle veneni, 858 Parthus sive Cydon, telum immedicabile, torsit, 859 stridens et celeris incognita transilit umbras: 860 talis se sata Nocte tulit terrasque petivit. 861 Postquam acies videt Iliacas atque agmina Turni, 862 alitis in parvae subitam conlecta figuram, 863 quae quondam in bustis aut culminibus desertis 864 nocte sedens serum canit importuna per umbras, 865 hanc versa in faciem Turni se pestis ob ora 866 fertque refertque sonans clipeumque everberat alis. 867 Olli membra novus solvit formidine torpor, 868 adrectaeque horrore comae, et vox faucibus haesit. 869 At procul ut Dirae stridorem adgnovit et alas, 870 infelix crinis scindit Iuturna solutos,	cast away! 875 Sacred and guiltless shall my soul descend 876 to join your company; I have not been 877 unworthy offspring of my kingly sires.”

12.871	871 unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnis: 872 Quid nunc te tua, Turne, potest germana iuvare? 873 Aut quid iam durae superat mihi? Qua tibi lucem 874 arte morer? Talin possum me opponere monstro? 875 Iam iam linquo acies. Ne me terrete timentem, 876 obscenae volucres: alarum verbera nosco 877 letalemque sonum, nec fallunt iussa superba 878 magnanimi Iovis. Haec pro virginitate reponit? 879 Quo vitam dedit aeternam? Cur	878 Scarce had he said, when through the foeman's line 879 Saces dashed forth upon a foaming steed, 880 his face gashed by an arrow. He cried loud 881 on Turnus' name: “O Turnus, but in thee 882 our last hope lies. Have pity on the woe 883 of all thy friends and kin! Aeneas hurls 884 his thunderbolt of war, and menaces 885 to crush the strongholds of all Italy, 886 and lay them low; already where we dwell 887 his firebrands are raining. Unto thee 888 the Latins Iook, and for thy valor call. 889 The King sits dumb and helpless, even he, 890 in doubt which son-in-law, which cause to choose. 891 Yea, and the Queen, thy truest friend, is mortis ademptast 880 condicio? Possem tantos finire dolores 881 nunc certe et misero fratri comes ire per umbras! 882 Immortalis ego? Aut quicquam mihi dulce meorum 883 te sine, frater, erit? O quae satis ima dehiscet 884 terra mihi Manisque deam demittet ad imos? 885 Tantum effata caput glauco contexit amictu 886 multa gemens et se fluvio dea condidit alto. 887 Aeneas instat contra telumque coruscat 888 ingens arboreum et saevo sic pectore fatur: 889 Quae nunc deinde mora est? Aut quid iam, Turne, retractas? 890 Non cursu, saevis certandum est comminus armis. 891 Verte omnis tete in facies et contrahe quidquid 892 sive animis sive arte vales; opta ardua pennis 893 astra sequi clausumve cava te condere terra. 894 Ille caput quassans Non me tua fervida terrent 895 dicta, ferox: di me terrent et Iuppiter hostis. 896 Nec plura effatus saxum circumspicit ingens, 897 saxum antiquum ingens, campo quod forte iacebat, 898 limes agro positus, litem ut discerneret arvis. 899 Vix illud lecti bis sex cervice subirent, 900 qualia nunc hominum producit corpora tellus:	fallen 892 by her own hand; gone mad with grief and fear, 893 she fled the light of day. At yonder gates 894 Messapus only and Atinas bear 895 the brunt of battle; round us closely draw 896 the serried ranks; their naked blades of steel 897 are thick as ripening corn; wilt thou the while 898 speed in thy chariot o'er this empty plain?” 899 Dazed and bewildered by such host of ills, 900 Turnus stood dumb; in his pent bosom stirred 901 shame, frenzy, sorrow, a despairing love 902 goaded to fury, and a warrior's pride 903 of valor proven.

12.901	901 ille manu raptum trepida torquebat in hostem 902 altior insurgens et cursu concitus heros. 903 Sed neque currentem se nec cognoscit euntem 904 tollentemve manus saxumve immane moventem; 905 genua labant, gelidus concrevit frigore sanguis. 906 Tum lapis ipse viri, vacuum per inane volutus, 907 nec spatium evasit totum neque pertulit ictum. 908 Ac velut in somnis, oculos ubi	904 But when first the light 905 of reason to his blinded soul returned, 906 he strained his flaming eyeballs to behold 907 the distant wall, and from his chariot gazed 908 in wonder at the lordly citadel. 909 For, lo, a pointed peak of flame uprolled 910 from tier to tier, and surging skyward seized 911 a tower—the very tower his own proud hands 912 had built of firm-set beams and wheeled in place, 913 and slung its Iofty bridges high in air. 914 “Fate is too strong, my sister! Seek no more 915 to stay the stroke. But let me hence pursue 916 that path where Heaven

	languida pressit 909 nocte quies, nequiquam avidos extendere cursus 910 velle videmur et in mediis conatibus aegri 911 succidimus, non lingua valet, non corpore notae 912 sufficiunt vires, nec vox aut verba sequuntur: 913 sic Turno, quacumque viam virtute petivit, 914 successum dea dira negat. Tum pectore sensus 915 vertuntur varii. Rutulos aspectat et urbem 916 cunctaturque metu letumque instare tremescit; 917 nec quo se eripiat, nec qua vi tendat in hostem, 918 nec currus usquam videt aurigamve sororem. 919 Cunctanti telum Aeneas fatale coruscat, 920 sortitus fortunam oculis, et corpore toto 921 eminus intorquet. Murali concita numquam 922 tormento sic saxa fremunt, nec fulmine tanti 923 dissultant crepitus. Volat atri turbinis instar 924 exitium dirum hasta ferens orasque recludit 925 loricae et clipei extremos septemplicis orbes. 926 Per medium stridens transit femur. Incidit ictus 927 ingens ad terram duplicato poplite Turnus. 928 Consurgunt gemitu Rutuli, totusque remugit 929 mons circum, et vocem late nemora alta remittunt. 930 Ille humilis supplexque oculos, dextramque precantem	and cruel Fortune call. 917 Aeneas I must meet; and I must bear 918 the bitterness of death, whate'er it be. 919 O sister, thou shalt look upon my shame 920 no longer. But first grant a madman's will!” 921 He spoke; and leaping from his chariot, sped 922 through foes and foemen's spears, not seeing now 923 his sister's sorrow, as in swift career 924 he burst from line to line. Thus headlong falls 925 a mountain-boulder by a whirlwind flung 926 from lofty peak, or loosened by much rain, 927 or by insidious lapse of seasons gone; 928 the huge, resistless crag goes plunging down 929 by leaps and bounds, o'erwhelming as it flies 930 tall forests, Bocks and herds, and mortal men: 931 so through the scattered legions Turnus ran 932 straight to the city walls, where all the ground 933 was drenched with blood, and every passing air 934 shrieked with the noise of spears. His lifted hand 935 made sign of silence as he loudly called: 936 “Refrain, Rutulians! O ye Latins all, 937 your spears withhold! The issue of the fray 938 is all my own. I only can repair 939 our broken truce by judgment of the sword.” 940 Back fell the hostile lines, and cleared the field.
12.931	931 protendens, Equidem merui nec deprecor, inquit: 932 utere sorte tua. Miseri te siqua parentis 933 tangere cura potest, oro (fuit et tibi talis 934 Anchises genitor), Dauni miserere senectae 935 et me seu corpus spoliatum lumine mavis 936 redde meis. Vicisti, et victum tendere palmas 937 Ausonii videre; tua est Lavinia	941 But Sire Aeneas, hearing Turnus' name, 942 down the steep rampart from the citadel 943 unlingering tried, all lesser task laid by, 944 with joy exultant and dread-thundering arms. 945 Like Athos' crest he loomed, or soaring top 946 of Eryx, when the nodding oaks resound, 947 or sovereign Apennine that lifts in air 948 his forehead of triumphant snow. All eyes 949 of Troy, Rutulia, and Italy 950 were fixed his way; and all who kept a guard 951 on lofty rampart, or in siege below

	coniunx: 938 ulterius ne tende odiis. Stetit acer in armis 939 Aeneas, volvens oculos, dextramque repressit; 940 et iam iamque magis cunctantem flectere sermo 941 coeperat, infelix umero cum apparuit alto 942 balteus et notis fulserunt cingula bullis 943 Pallantis pueri, victum quem volnere Turnus 944 straverat atque umeris inimicum insigne gerebat. 945 Ille, oculis postquam saevi monimenta doloris 946 exuviasque hausit, furiis accensus et ira 947 terribilis, Tune hinc spoliis indute meorum 948 eripiare mihi? Pallas te hoc volnere, Pallas 949 immolat et poenam scelerato ex sanguine sumit, 950 hoc dicens ferrum adverso sub pectore condit 951 fervidus. Ast illi solvuntur frigore membra 952 vitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.	952 were battering the foundations, now laid by 953 their implements and arms. Latinus too 954 stood awestruck to behold such champions, born 955 in lands far-sundered, met upon one field 956 for one decisive stroke of sword with sword. 957 Swift striding forth where spread the vacant plain, 958 they hurled their spears from far; then in close fight 959 the brazen shields rang. Beneath their tread 960 Earth groaned aloud, as with redoubling blows 961 their falchions fell; nor could a mortal eye 962 'twixt chance and courage the dread work divide. 963 As o'er Taburnus' top, or spacious hills 964 of Sila, in relentless shock of war, 965 two bulls rush brow to brow, while terror-pale 966 the herdsmen fly; the herd is hushed with fear; 967 the heifers dumbly marvel which shall be 968 true monarch of the grove, whom all the kine 969 obedient follow; but the rival twain, 970 commingling mightily wound after wound, 971 thrust with opposing horns, and bathe their necks 972 in streams of blood; the forest far and wide 973 repeats their bellowing rage: not otherwise 974 Trojan Aeneas and King Daunus' son 975 clashed shield on shield, till all the vaulted sky 976 felt the tremendous sound. The hand of Jove 977 held scales in equipoise, and threw thereon 978 th' unequal fortunes of the heroes twain: 979 one to vast labors doomed and one to die.