Ovidio · Metamorfosis

Texto en latín y traducción inglesa alineados por pasaje; cada sección de la traducción figura una sola vez, junto al primer pasaje que abarca.

Fuente: Perseus Digital Library (Tufts University), urn:cts:latinLit:phi0959.phi006. Texto crítico y traducción tomados sin cambios de los archivos TEI del repositorio.

Licencia CC BY-SA 4.0 (se comparte con la misma licencia). Edición de lectura generada por Vitruvius Digital Library (Diego Kurilo), 2026. Lectura en línea: https://diegoalonsok-png.github.io/vitruvius-digital-library/lector-clasico.html?obra=phi0959.phi006

Locus	Latín	Traducción inglesa
1.1	1 In nova fert animus mutatas dicere formas 2 corpora; di, coeptis (nam vos mutastis et illas) 3 adspirate meis primaque ab origine mundi 4 ad mea perpetuum deducite tempora carmen. 5 Ante mare et terras et quod tegit omnia caelum 6 unus erat toto naturae vultus in orbe, 7 quem dixere chaos: rudis indigestaque moles 8 nec quicquam nisi pondus iners congestaque eodem 9 non bene iunctarum discordia semina rerum. 10 nullus adhuc mundo praebebat lumina Titan, 11 nec nova crescendo reparabat cornua Phoebe, 12 nec circumfuso pendebat in aere tellus 13 ponderibus librata suis, nec bracchia longo 14 margine terrarum porrexerat Amphitrite; 15 utque aer, tellus illic et pontus et aether. 16 Sic erat instabilis tellus, innabilis unda, 17 lucis egens aer: nulli sua forma manebat, 18 obstabatque aliis aliud, quia corpore in uno 19 frigida pugnabant calidis, umentia siccis, 20 mollia cum duris, sine pondere habentia pondus. 21 Hanc deus et melior litem natura diremit. 22 Nam caelo terras et terris abscidit undas, 23 et liquidum spisso secrevit ab aere caelum.	1 My soul is wrought to sing of forms transformed 2 to bodies new and strange! Immortal Gods 3 inspire my heart, for ye have changed yourselves 4 and all things you have changed! Oh lead my song 5 in smooth and measured strains, from olden days 6 when earth began to this completed time!

	24 Quae postquam evolvit caecoque exemit acervo, 25 dissociata locis concordi pace ligavit. 26 Ignea convexi vis et sine pondere caeli 27 emicuit summaque locum sibi fecit in arce: 28 proximus est aer illi levitate locoque: 29 densior his tellus, elementaque grandia traxit 30 et pressa est gravitate sua: circumfluus umor
1.31	31 ultima possedit solidumque coercuit orbem. 32 Sic ubi dispositam quisquis fuit ille deorum 33 congeriem secuit sectamque in membra redegit, 34 principio terram, ne non aequalis ab omni 35 parte foret, magni speciem glomeravit in orbis. 36 Tum freta diffudit rapidisque tumescere ventis 37 iussit et ambitae circumdare litora terrae. 38 Addidit et fontes et stagna inmensa lacusque 39 fluminaque obliquis cinxit declivia ripis, 40 quae, diversa locis, partim sorbentur ab ipsa, 41 in mare perveniunt partim campoque recepta 42 liberioris aquae pro ripis litora pulsant. 43 Iussit et extendi campos, subsidere valles, 44 fronde tegi silvas, lapidosos surgere montes. 45 Utque duae dextra caelum totidemque sinistra 46 parte secant zonae, quinta est ardentior illis, 47 sic onus inclusum numero distinxit eodem 48 cura dei, totidemque plagae tellure premuntur. 49 Quarum quae media est, non est habitabilis aestu: 50 nix tegit alta duas: totidem inter utrumque locavit 51 temperiemque dedit mixta cum frigore flamma. 52 Inminet his aer. Qui quanto est pondere terrae,	7 Before the ocean and the earth appeared— 8 before the skies had overspread them all— 9 the face of Nature in a vast expanse 10 was naught but Chaos uniformly waste. 11 It was a rude and undeveloped mass, 12 that nothing made except a ponderous weight; 13 and all discordant elements confused, 14 were there congested in a shapeless heap. 15 As yet the sun afforded earth no light, 16 nor did the moon renew her crescent horns; 17 the earth was not suspended in the air 18 exactly balanced by her heavy weight. 19 Not far along the margin of the shores 20 had Amphitrite stretched her lengthened arms,— 21 for all the land was mixed with sea and air. 22 The land was soft, the sea unfit to sail, 23 the atmosphere opaque, to naught was given 24 a proper form, in everything was strife, 25 and all was mingled in a seething mass— 26 with hot the cold parts strove, and wet with dry 27 and soft with hard, and weight with empty void. 28 But God, or kindly Nature, ended strife— 29 he cut the land from skies, the sea from land, 30 the heavens ethereal from material air; 31 and when were all evolved from that dark mass 32 he bound the fractious parts in tranquil peace. 33 The fiery element of convex heaven 34 leaped from the mass devoid of dragging weight, 35 and chose the summit arch to which the air 36 as next in quality was next in place. 37 The earth more dense attracted grosser parts 38 and moved by gravity sank underneath; 39 and last of all the wide surrounding waves 40 in deeper channels rolled around the globe. 41 And when this God —which one is yet unknown— 42 had carved asunder that discordant mass, 43 had thus reduced it

	53 pondere aquae levior tanto est onerosior igni. 54 Illic et nebulas, illic consistere nubes 55 iussit et humanas motura tonitrua mentes 56 et cum fulminibus facientes fulgura ventos. 57 His quoque non passim mundi fabricator habendum 58 aera permisit: vix nunc obsistitur illis, 59 cum sua quisque regant diverso flamina tractu, 60 quin lanient mundum: tanta est discordia fratrum.	to its elements, 44 that every part should equally combine, 45 when time began He rounded out the earth 46 and moulded it to form a mighty globe. 47 Then poured He forth the deeps and gave command 48 that they should billow in the rapid winds, 49 that they should compass every shore of earth. 50 he also added fountains, pools and lakes, 51 and bound with shelving banks the slanting streams, 52 which partly are absorbed and partly join 53 the boundless ocean. Thus received amid 54 the wide expanse of uncontrolled waves, 55 they beat the shores instead of crooked banks. 56 At His command the boundless plains extend, 57 the valleys are depressed, the woods are clothed 58 in green, the stony mountains rise. And as 59 the heavens are intersected on the right 60 by two broad zones, by two that cut the left, 61 and by a fifth consumed with ardent heat, 62 with such a number did the careful God 63 mark off the compassed weight, and thus the earth 64 received as many climes.—Such heat consumes 65 the middle zone that none may dwell therein; 66 and two extremes are covered with deep snow;
1.61	61 Eurus ad Auroram Nabataeaque regna recessit 62 Persidaque et radiis iuga subdita matutinis; 63 vesper et occiduo quae litora sole tepescunt, 64 proxima sunt Zephyro: Scythiam septemque triones 65 horrifer invasit Boreas: contraria tellus 66 nubibus adsiduis pluviaque madescit ab Austro. 67 Haec super inposuit liquidum et gravitate carentem 68 aethera nec quicquam terrenae faecis habentem. 69 Vix ita limitibus dissaepserat omnia certis, 70 cum, quae pressa diu massa latuere sub illa, 71 sidera coeperunt toto effervescere caelo. 72 Neu regio foret ulla suis animalibus orba, 73 astra tenent caeleste solum formaeque deorum, 74 cesserunt nitidis habitandae piscibus undae,	67 and two are placed betwixt the hot and cold, 68 which mixed together give a temperate clime; 69 and over all the atmosphere suspends 70 with weight proportioned to the fiery sky, 71 exactly as the weight of earth compares 72 with weight of water. 73 And He ordered mist 74 to gather in the air and spread the clouds. 75 He fixed the thunders that disturb our souls, 76 and brought the lightning on destructive winds 77 that also waft the cold. Nor did the great 78 Artificer permit these mighty winds 79 to blow unbounded in the pathless skies, 80 but each discordant brother fixed in space, 81 although His power can scarce restrain their rage 82 to rend the universe. At His command 83 to far Aurora, Eurus took his way, 84 to Nabath, Persia, and that mountain range 85 first gilded by the dawn; and Zephyr's flight 86 was towards the evening star and peaceful shores, 87 warm with the setting sun; and Boreas 88 invaded Scythia and the northern snows; 89 and Auster wafted to the distant south 90 where clouds and rain encompass his abode.— 91 and

	75 terra feras cepit, volucres agitabilis aer. 76 Sanctius his animal mentisque capacius altae 77 deerat adhuc et quod dominari in cetera posset. 78 Natus homo est, sive hunc divino semine fecit 79 ille opifex rerum, mundi melioris origo, 80 sive recens tellus seductaque nuper ab alto 81 aethere cognati retinebat semina caeli; 82 quam satus Iapeto mixtam pluvialibus undis 83 finxit in effigiem moderantum cuncta deorum. 84 Pronaque cum spectent animalia cetera terram, 85 os homini sublime dedit, caelumque videre 86 iussit et erectos ad sidera tollere vultus. 87 Sic, modo quae fuerat rudis et sine imagine, tellus 88 induit ignotas hominum conversa figuras. 89 Aurea prima sata est aetas, quae vindice nullo, 90 sponte sua, sine lege fidem rectumque colebat.	over these He fixed the liquid sky, 92 devoid of weight and free from earthly dross. 93 And scarcely had He separated these 94 and fixed their certain bounds, when all the stars, 95 which long were pressed and hidden in the mass, 96 began to gleam out from the plains of heaven,
1.91	91 Poena metusque aberant, nec verba minantia fixo 92 aere legebantur, nec supplex turba timebat 93 iudicis ora sui, sed erant sine vindice tuti. 94 Nondum caesa suis, peregrinum ut viseret orbem, 95 montibus in liquidas pinus descenderat undas, 96 nullaque mortales praeter sua litora norant. 97 Nondum praecipites cingebant oppida fossae; 98 non tuba directi, non aeris cornua flexi, 99 non galeae, non ensis erat: sine militis usu 100 mollia securae peragebant otia gentes. 101 ipsa quoque inmunis rastroque intacta nec ullis 102 saucia vomeribus per se dabat omnia tellus; 103 contentique cibis nullo cogente creatis	97 and traversed, with the Gods, bright ether fields: 98 and lest some part might be bereft of life 99 the gleaming waves were filled with twinkling fish; 100 the earth was covered with wild animals; 101 the agitated air was filled with birds. 102 But one more perfect and more sanctified, 103 a being capable of lofty thought, 104 intelligent to rule, was wanting still 105 man was created! Did the Unknown God 106 designing then a better world make man 107 of seed divine? or did Prometheus 108 take the new soil of earth (that still contained 109 some godly element of Heaven's Life) 110 and use it to create the race of man; 111 first mingling it with water of new streams; 112 so that his new creation, upright man, 113 was made in image of commanding Gods? 114 On earth the brute creation bends its gaze, 115 but man was given a lofty countenance 116 and was commanded to behold the skies; 117 and with an upright face may view the stars:— 118 and so it was that

	104 arbuteos fetus montanaque fraga legebant 105 cornaque et in duris haerentia mora rubetis 106 et quae deciderant patula Iovis arbore glandes. 107 Ver erat aeternum, placidique tepentibus auris 108 mulcebant zephyri natos sine semine flores. 109 Mox etiam fruges tellus inarata ferebat, 110 nec renovatus ager gravidis canebat aristis; 111 flumina iam lactis, iam flumina nectaris ibant, 112 flavaque de viridi stillabant ilice mella. 113 Postquam, Saturno tenebrosa in Tartara misso, 114 sub Iove mundus erat, subiit argentea proles, 115 auro deterior, fulvo pretiosior aere. 116 Iuppiter antiqui contraxit tempora veris 117 perque hiemes aestusque et inaequalis autumnos 118 et breve ver spatiis exegit quattuor annum. 119 Tum primum siccis aer fervoribus ustus 120 canduit, et ventis glacies adstricta pependit.	shapeless clay put on 119 the form of man till then unknown to earth. 120 First was the Golden Age. Then rectitude 121 spontaneous in the heart prevailed, and faith. 122 Avengers were not seen, for laws unframed 123 were all unknown and needless. Punishment 124 and fear of penalties existed not. 125 No harsh decrees were fixed on brazen plates. 126 No suppliant multitude the countenance 127 of Justice feared, averting, for they dwelt 128 without a judge in peace. Descended not 129 the steeps, shorn from its height, the lofty pine, 130 cleaving the trackless waves of alien shores, 131 nor distant realms were known to wandering men. 132 The towns were not entrenched for time of war; 133 they had no brazen trumpets, straight, nor horns 134 of curving brass, nor helmets, shields nor swords. 135 There was no thought of martial pomp —secure 136 a happy multitude enjoyed repose. 137 Then of her own accord the earth produced 138 a store of every fruit. The harrow touched 139 her not, nor did the plowshare wound 140 her fields. And man content with given food, 141 and none compelling, gathered arbute fruits 142 and wild strawberries on the mountain sides, 143 and ripe blackberries clinging to the bush, 144 and corners and sweet acorns on the ground, 145 down fallen from the spreading tree of Jove. 146 Eternal Spring! Soft breathing zephyrs soothed 147 and warmly cherished buds and blooms, produced 148 without a seed. The valleys though unplowed 149 gave many fruits; the fields though not renewed
1.121	121 Tum primum subiere domus (domus antra fuerunt 122 et densi frutices et vinctae cortice virgae). 123 Semina tum primum longis Cerealia sulcis 124 obruta sunt, pressique iugo gemuere iuvenci. 125 Tertia post illam successit aenea proles, 126 saevior ingeniis et ad horrida promptior arma, 127 non scelerata tamen. De duro est ultima ferro. 128 Protinus inrupit venae peioris in aevum	150 white glistened with the heavy bearded wheat: 151 rivers flowed milk and nectar, and the trees, 152 the very oak trees, then gave honey of themselves. 153 When Saturn had been banished into night 154 and all the world was ruled by Jove supreme, 155 the Silver Age, though not so good as gold 156 but still surpassing yellow brass, prevailed. 157 Jove first reduced to years the Primal Spring, 158 by him divided into periods four, 159 unequal, —summer, autumn, winter, spring.— 160 then glowed with tawny heat the parched air, 161 or pendent icicles in winter froze 162 and man stopped

	129 omne nefas: fugere pudor verumque fidesque; 130 In quorum subiere locum fraudesque dolique 131 insidiaeque et vis et amor sceleratus habendi. 132 Vela dabat ventis (nec adhuc bene noverat illos) 133 navita; quaeque diu steterant in montibus altis, 134 fluctibus ignotis insultavere carinae, 135 communemque prius ceu lumina solis et auras 136 cautus humum longo signavit limite mensor. 137 Nec tantum segetes alimentaque debita dives 138 poscebatur humus, sed itum est in viscera terrae: 139 quasque recondiderat Stygiisque admoverat umbris, 140 effodiuntur opes, inritamenta malorum. 141 Iamque nocens ferrum ferroque nocentius aurum 142 prodierat: prodit bellum, quod pugnat utroque, 143 sanguineaque manu crepitantia concutit arma. 144 Vivitur ex rapto: non hospes ab hospite tutus, 145 non socer a genero; fratrum quoque gratia rara est. 146 Inminet exitio vir coniugis, illa mariti; 147 lurida terribiles miscent aconita novercae; 148 filius ante diem patrios inquirit in annos. 149 Victa iacet pietas, et virgo caede madentis, 150 ultima caelestum terras Astraea reliquit.	crouching in crude caverns, while 163 he built his homes of tree rods, bark entwined. 164 Then were the cereals planted in long rows, 165 and bullocks groaned beneath the heavy yoke. 166 The third Age followed, called The Age of Bronze, 167 when cruel people were inclined to arms 168 but not to impious crimes. And last of all 169 the ruthless and hard Age of Iron prevailed, 170 from which malignant vein great evil sprung; 171 and modesty and faith and truth took flight, 172 and in their stead deceits and snares and frauds 173 and violence and wicked love of gain, 174 succeeded.—Then the sailor spread his sails 175 to winds unknown, and keels that long had stood 176 on lofty mountains pierced uncharted waves. 177 Surveyors anxious marked with metes and bounds 178 the lands, created free as light and air: 179 nor need the rich ground furnish only crops,
1.151	151 Neve foret terris securior arduus aether, 152 adfectasse ferunt regnum caeleste Gigantas 153 altaque congestos struxisse ad sidera montes. 154 Tum pater omnipotens misso perfregit Olympum 155 fulmine et excussit subiectae Pelion Ossae. 156 Obruta mole sua cum corpora dira iacerent, 157 perfusam multo natorum sanguine Terram	180 and give due nourishment by right required,— 181 they penetrated to the bowels of earth 182 and dug up wealth, bad cause of all our ills,— 183 rich ores which long ago the earth had hid 184 and deep removed to gloomy Stygian caves: 185 and soon destructive iron and harmful gold 186 were brought to light; and War, which uses both, 187 came forth and shook with sanguinary grip 188 his clashing arms. Rapacity broke forth— 189 the guest was not protected from his host, 190 the father in law from his own son in law; 191

	158 inmaduisse ferunt calidumque animasse cruorem, 159 et, ne nulla suae stirpis monimenta manerent, 160 in faciem vertisse hominum. Sed et illa propago 161 contemptrix superum saevaeque avidissima caedis 162 et violenta fuit: scires e sanguine natos. 163 Quae pater ut summa vidit Saturnius arce, 164 ingemit et, facto nondum vulgata recenti, 165 foeda Lycaoniae referens convivia mensae, 166 ingentes animo et dignas Iove concipit iras, 167 conciliumque vocat: tenuit mora nulla vocatos. 168 Est via sublimis, caelo manifesta sereno: 169 lactea nomen habet, candore notabilis ipso. 170 Hac iter est superis ad magni tecta Tonantis 171 regalemque domum. Dextra laevaque deorum 172 atria nobilium valvis celebrantur apertis 173 (plebs habitat diversa locis): hac parte potentes 174 caelicolae clarique suos posuere penates. 175 Hic locus est, quem, si verbis audacia detur, 176 haud timeam magni dixisse Palatia caeli. 177 Ergo ubi marmoreo superi sedere recessu, 178 celsior ipse loco sceptroque innixus eburno 179 terrificam capitis concussit terque quaterque 180 caesariem, cum qua terram, mare, sidera movit.	even brothers seldom could abide in peace. 192 The husband threatened to destroy his wife, 193 and she her husband: horrid step dames mixed 194 the deadly henbane: eager sons inquired 195 their fathers, ages. Piety was slain: 196 and last of all the virgin deity, 197 Astraea vanished from the blood-stained earth. 198 And lest ethereal heights should long remain 199 less troubled than the earth, the throne of Heaven 200 was threatened by the Giants; and they piled 201 mountain on mountain to the lofty stars. 202 But Jove, omnipotent, shot thunderbolts 203 through Mount Olympus, and he overturned 204 from Ossa huge, enormous Pelion. 205 And while these dreadful bodies lay overwhelmed 206 in their tremendous bulk, (so fame reports) 207 the Earth was reeking with the copious blood 208 of her gigantic sons; and thus replete 209 with moisture she infused the steaming gore
1.181	181 Talibus inde modis ora indignantia solvit: 182 “Non ego pro mundi regno magis anxius illa 183 tempestate fui, qua centum quisque parabat 184 inicere anguipedum captivo bracchia caelo. 185 Nam quamquam ferus hostis erat, tamen illud ab uno 186 corpore et ex una pendebat origine bellum.	210 with life renewed. So that a monument 211 of such ferocious stock should be retained, 212 she made that offspring in the shape of man; 213 but this new race alike despised the Gods, 214 and by the greed of savage slaughter proved 215 a sanguinary birth.

	187 Nunc mihi, qua totum Nereus circumsonat orbem, 188 perdendum est mortale genus: per flumina iuro 189 infera, sub terras Stygio labentia luco! 190 cuncta prius temptata: sed inmedicabile corpus 191 ense recidendum est, ne pars sincera trahatur. 192 Sunt mihi semidei, sunt rustica numina, nymphae 193 faunique satyrique et monticolae silvani: 194 quos quoniam caeli nondum dignamur honore, 195 quas dedimus certe terras habitare sinamus. 196 An satis, o superi, tutos fore creditis illos, 197 cum mihi, qui fulmen, qui vos habeoque regoque, 198 struxerit insidias notus feritate Lycaon?” 199 Confremuere omnes studiisque ardentibus ausum 200 talia deposcunt. Sic, cum manus inpia saevit 201 sanguine Caesareo Romanum exstinguere nomen, 202 attonitum tanto subitae terrore ruinae 203 humanum genus est totusque perhorruit orbis: 204 nec tibi grata minus pietas, Auguste, tuorum est, 205 quam fuit illa Iovi. Qui postquam voce manuque 206 murmura conpressit, tenuere silentia cuncti. 207 Substitit ut clamor pressus gravitate regentis, 208 Iuppiter hoc iterum sermone silentia rupit: 209 “Ille quidem poenas, curam hanc dimittite, solvit. 210 Quod tamen admissum, quae sit vindicta, docebo.
1.211	211 Contigerat nostras infamia temporis aures; 212 quam cupiens falsam summo delabor Olympo 213 et deus humana lustro sub imagine terras. 214 Longa mora est, quantum noxae sit ubique repertum, 215 enumerare: minor fuit ipsa infamia vero.	216 When, from his throne 217 supreme, the Son of Saturn viewed their deeds, 218 he deeply groaned: and calling to his mind 219 the loathsome feast Lycaon had prepared, 220 a recent deed not common to report, 221 his soul conceived great anger —worthy Jove— 222 and he convened a council. No delay 223 detained the chosen Gods. 224 When

	216 Maenala transieram latebris horrenda ferarum 217 et cum Cyllene gelidi pineta Lycaei: 218 Arcadis hinc sedes et inhospita tecta tyranni 219 ingredior, traherent cum sera crepuscula noctem. 220 Signa dedi venisse deum, vulgusque precari 221 coeperat: inridet primo pia vota Lycaon, 222 mox ait ”experiar deus hic, discrimine aperto, 223 an sit mortalis. Nec erit dubitabile verum.” 224 Nocte gravem somno necopina perdere morte 225 me parat: haec illi placet experientia veri. 226 Nec contentus eo est: missi de gente Molossa 227 obsidis unius iugulum mucrone resolvit, 228 atque ita semineces partim ferventibus artus 229 mollit aquis, partim subiecto torruit igni. 230 Quod simul inposuit mensis, ego vindice flamma 231 in domino dignos everti tecta penates. 232 Territus ipse fugit, nactusque silentia ruris 233 exululat frustraque loqui conatur: ab ipso 234 conligit os rabiem, solitaeque cupidine caedis 235 vertitur in pecudes et nunc quoque sanguine gaudet. 236 In villos abeunt vestes, in crura lacerti: 237 fit lupus et veteris servat vestigia formae. 238 Canities eadem est, eadem violentia vultus, 239 idem oculi lucent, eadem feritatis imago est. 240 Occidit una domus. Sed non domus una perire	skies are clear 225 a path is well defined on high, which men, 226 because so white, have named the Milky Way. 227 It makes a passage for the deities 228 and leads to mansions of the Thunder God, 229 to Jove's imperial home. On either side 230 of its wide way the noble Gods are seen, 231 inferior Gods in other parts abide, 232 but there the potent and renowned of Heaven 233 have fixed their homes.—It is a glorious place, 234 our most audacious verse might designate 235 the “Palace of High Heaven.” When the Gods 236 were seated, therefore, in its marble halls 237 the King of all above the throng sat high, 238 and leaning on his ivory scepter, thrice, 239 and once again he shook his awful locks, 240 wherewith he moved the earth, and seas and stars,— 241 and thus indignantly began to speak; 242 “The time when serpent footed giants strove 243 to fix their hundred arms on captive Heaven, 244 not more than this event could cause alarm 245 for my dominion of the universe.
1.241	241 digna fuit: qua terra patet, fera regnat Erinys. 242 In facinus iurasse putes. Dent ocius omnes 243 quas meruere pati (sic stat sententia) poenas.” 244 Dicta Iovis pars voce probant stimulosque frementi	246 Although it was a savage enemy, 247 yet warred we with a single source derived 248 of one. Now must I utterly destroy 249 this mortal race wherever Nereus roars 250 around the world. Yea, by the Infernal Streams 251 that glide through Stygian groves beneath the world, 252 I swear it. Every method

	245 adiciunt, alii partes adsensibus inplent. 246 Est tamen humani generis iactura dolori 247 omnibus, et, quae sit terrae mortalibus orbae 248 forma futura, rogant, quis sit laturus in aras 249 tura, ferisne paret populandas tradere terras. 250 Talia quaerentes (sibi enim fore cetera curae) 251 rex superum trepidare vetat subolemque priori 252 dissimilem populo promittit origine mira. 253 Iamque erat in totas sparsurus fulmina terras: 254 sed timuit, ne forte sacer tot ab ignibus aether 255 conciperet flammas longusque ardesceret axis: 256 esse quoque in fatis reminiscitur, adfore tempus, 257 quo mare, quo tellus correptaque regia caeli 258 ardeat et mundi moles obsessa laboret. 259 Tela reponuntur manibus fabricata Cyclopum: 260 poena placet diversa, genus mortale sub undis 261 perdere et ex omni nimbos demittere caelo. 262 Protinus Aeoliis Aquilonem claudit in antris 263 et quaecumque fugant inductas flamina nubes 264 emittitque Notum. Madidis Notus evolat alis, 265 terribilem picea tectus caligine vultum: 266 barba gravis nimbis, canis fluit unda capillis; 267 fronte sedent nebulae, rorant pennaeque sinusque. 268 Utque manu late pendentia nubila pressit, 269 fit fragor: hinc densi funduntur ab aethere nimbi. 270 Nuntia Iunonis varios induta colores	has been tried. 253 The knife must cut immedicable wounds, 254 lest maladies infect untainted parts. 255 “Beneath my sway are demi gods and fauns, 256 nymphs, rustic deities, sylvans of the hills, 257 satyrs;—all these, unworthy Heaven's abodes, 258 we should at least permit to dwell on earth 259 which we to them bequeathed. What think ye, Gods, 260 is safety theirs when I, your sovereign lord, 261 the Thunder-bolt Controller, am ensnared 262 by fierce Lycaon?” Ardent in their wrath, 263 the astonished Gods demand revenge overtake 264 this miscreant; he who dared commit such crimes. 265 'Twas even thus when raged that impious band 266 to blot the Roman name in sacred blood 267 of Caesar, sudden apprehensive fears 268 of ruin absolute astonished man, 269 and all the world convulsed. Nor is the love 270 thy people bear to thee, Augustus, less 271 than these displayed to Jupiter whose voice 272 and gesture all the murmuring host restrained: 273 and as indignant clamour ceased, suppressed 274 by regnant majesty, Jove once again 275 broke the deep silence with imperial words;
1.271	271 concipit Iris aquas alimentaque nubibus adfert. 272 Sternuntur segetes et deplorata coloni 273 vota iacent, longique perit labor inritus anni.	276 “Dismiss your cares; he paid the penalty 277 however all the crime and punishment 278 now learn from this:—An infamous report 279 of this unholy age had reached my ears, 280 and wishing it were false, I sloped my

	274 Nec caelo contenta suo est Iovis ira, sed illum 275 caeruleus frater iuvat auxiliaribus undis. 276 Convocat hic amnes. Qui postquam tecta tyranni 277 intravere sui, “non est hortamine longo 278 nunc” ait “utendum. Vires effundite vestras: 279 sic opus est! aperite domos ac mole remota 280 fluminibus vestris totas inmittite habenas!” 281 Iusserat; hi redeunt ac fontibus ora relaxant 282 et defrenato volvuntur in aequora cursu. 283 Ipse tridente suo terram percussit: at illa 284 intremuit motuque vias patefecit aquarum. 285 Exspatiata ruunt per apertos flumina campos 286 cumque satis arbusta simul pecudesque virosque 287 tectaque cumque suis rapiunt penetralia sacris. 288 Siqua domus mansit potuitque resistere tanto 289 indeiecta malo, culmen tamen altior huius 290 unda tegit, pressaeque latent sub gurgite turres. 291 Iamque mare et tellus nullum discrimen habebant: 292 omnia pontus erant; deerant quoque litora ponto. 293 Occupat hic collem, cumba sedet alter adunca 294 et ducit remos illic, ubi nuper ararat, 295 ille supra segetes aut mersae culmina villae 296 navigat, hic summa piscem deprendit in ulmo. 297 Figitur in viridi, si fors tulit, ancora prato, 298 aut subiecta terunt curvae vineta carinae; 299 et, modo qua graciles gramen carpsere capellae, 300 nunc ibi deformes ponunt sua corpora phocae.	course 281 from high Olympus, and— although a God— 282 disguised in human form I viewed the world. 283 It would delay us to recount the crimes 284 unnumbered, for reports were less than truth. 285 “I traversed Maenalus where fearful dens 286 abound, over Lycaeus, wintry slopes 287 of pine tree groves, across Cyllene steep; 288 and as the twilight warned of night's approach, 289 I stopped in that Arcadian tyrant's realms 290 and entered his inhospitable home:— 291 and when I showed his people that a God 292 had come, the lowly prayed and worshiped me, 293 but this Lycaon mocked their pious vows 294 and scoffing said; ‘A fair experiment 295 will prove the truth if this be god or man.’ 296 and he prepared to slay me in the night,— 297 to end my slumbers in the sleep of death. 298 So made he merry with his impious proof; 299 but not content with this he cut the throat 300 of a Molossian hostage sent to him, 301 and partly softened his still quivering limbs 302 in boiling water, partly roasted them 303 on fires that burned beneath. And when this flesh 304 was served to me on tables, I destroyed 305 his dwelling and his worthless Household Gods,
1.301	301 Mirantur sub aqua lucos urbesque domosque 302 Nereides, silvasque tenent delphines et altis	306 with thunder bolts avenging. Terror struck 307 he took to flight, and on the silent plains 308 is howling in his vain attempts to speak; 309 he raves

	303 incursant ramis agitataque robora pulsant. 304 Nat lupus inter oves, fulvos vehit unda leones, 305 unda vehit tigres, nec vires fulminis apro, 306 crura nec ablato prosunt velocia cervo. 307 Quaesitisque diu terris, ubi sistere possit, 308 in mare lassatis volucris vaga decidit alis. 309 Obruerat tumulos inmensa licentia ponti, 310 pulsabantque novi montana cacumina fluctus. 311 Maxima pars unda rapitur; quibus unda pepercit, 312 illos longa domant inopi ieiunia victu. 313 Separat Aonios Oetaeis Phocis ab arvis, 314 terra ferax, dum terra fuit, sed tempore in illo 315 pars maris et latus subitarum campus aquarum. 316 Mons ibi verticibus petit arduus astra duobus, 317 nomine Parnasus, superantque cacumina nubes. 318 Hic ubi Deucalion (nam cetera texerat aequor) 319 cum consorte tori parva rate vectus adhaesit, 320 Corycidas nymphas et numina montis adorant 321 fatidicamque Themin, quae tunc oracla tenebat. 322 Non illo melior quisquam nec amantior aequi 323 vir fuit aut illa metuentior ulla deorum. 324 Iuppiter ut liquidis stagnare paludibus orbem 325 et superesse virum de tot modo milibus unum, 326 et superesse videt de tot modo milibus unam, 327 innocuos ambo, cultores numinis ambo, 328 nubila disiecit nimbisque aquilone remotis 329 et caelo terras ostendit et aethera terris. 330 Nec maris ira manet, positoque tricuspide telo	and rages and his greedy jaws, 310 desiring their accustomed slaughter, turn 311 against the sheep—still eager for their blood. 312 His vesture separates in shaggy hair, 313 his arms are changed to legs; and as a wolf 314 he has the same grey locks, the same hard face, 315 the same bright eyes, the same ferocious look. 316 “Thus fell one house, but not one house alone 317 deserved to perish; over all the earth 318 ferocious deeds prevail,—all men conspire 319 in evil. Let them therefore feel the weight 320 of dreadful penalties so justly earned, 321 for such hath my unchanging will ordained.” 322 with exclamations some approved the words 323 of Jove and added fuel to his wrath, 324 while others gave assent: but all deplored 325 and questioned the estate of earth deprived 326 of mortals. Who could offer frankincense 327 upon the altars? Would he suffer earth 328 to be despoiled by hungry beasts of prey? 329 Such idle questions of the state of man 330 the King of Gods forbade, but granted soon 331 to people earth with race miraculous, 332 unlike the first.
1.331	331 mulcet aquas rector pelagi supraque profundum	333 And now his thunder bolts 334 would Jove wide scatter, but he feared

	332 exstantem atque umeros innato murice tectum 333 caeruleum Tritona vocat conchaeque sonanti 334 inspirare iubet fluctusque et flumina signo 335 iam revocare dato. Cava bucina sumitur illi, 336 tortilis, in latum quae turbine crescit ab imo, 337 bucina, quae medio concepit ubi aera ponto, 338 litora voce replet sub utroque iacentia Phoebo. 339 Tunc quoque, ut ora dei madida rorantia barba 340 contigit et cecinit iussos inflata receptus, 341 omnibus audita est telluris et aequoris undis, 342 et quibus est undis audita, coercuit omnes. 343 Iam mare litus habet, plenos capit alveus amnes, 344 flumina subsidunt collesque exire videntur, 345 surgit humus, crescunt loca decrescentibus undis, 346 postque diem longam nudata cacumina silvae 347 ostendunt limumque tenent in fronde relictum. 348 Redditus orbis erat. Quem postquam vidit inanem 349 et desolatas agere alta silentia terras, 350 Deucalion lacrimis ita Pyrrham adfatur obortis: 351 “O soror, o coniunx, o femina sola superstes, 352 quam commune mihi genus et patruelis origo, 353 deinde torus iunxit, nunc ipsa pericula iungunt, 354 terrarum, quascumque vident occasus et ortus, 355 nos duo turba sumus; possedit cetera pontus. 356 Haec quoque adhuc vitae non est fiducia nostrae 357 certa satis; terrent etiam nunc nubila mentem. 358 Quis tibi, si sine me fatis erepta fuisses, 359 nunc animus, miseranda, foret? quo sola timorem 360 ferre modo posses? quo consolante doleres?	the flames, 335 unnumbered, sacred ether might ignite 336 and burn the axle of the universe: 337 and he remembered in the scroll of fate, 338 there is a time appointed when the sea 339 and earth and Heavens shall melt, and fire destroy 340 the universe of mighty labour wrought. 341 Such weapons by the skill of Cyclops forged, 342 for different punishment he laid aside— 343 for straightway he preferred to overwhelm 344 the mortal race beneath deep waves and storms 345 from every raining sky. And instantly 346 he shut the Northwind in Aeolian caves, 347 and every other wind that might dispel 348 the gathering clouds. He bade the Southwind blow:— 349 the Southwind flies abroad with dripping wings, 350 concealing in the gloom his awful face: 351 the drenching rain descends from his wet beard 352 and hoary locks; dark clouds are on his brows 353 and from his wings and garments drip the dews: 354 his great hands press the overhanging clouds; 355 loudly the thunders roll; the torrents pour; 356 Iris, the messenger of Juno, clad 357 in many coloured raiment, upward draws 358 the steaming moisture to renew the clouds. 359 The standing grain is beaten to the ground, 360 the rustic's crops are scattered in the mire, 361 and he bewails the long year's fruitless toil. 362 The wrath of Jove was not content with powers

1.361	361 Namque ego (crede mihi) si te quoque pontus haberet, 362 te sequerer, coniunx, et me quoque pontus haberet. 363 O utinam possim populos reparare paternis 364 artibus atque animas formatae infundere terrae! 365 Nunc genus in nobis restat mortale duobus 366 (sic visum superis) hominumque exempla manemus.” 367 Dixerat, et flebant. Placuit caeleste precari 368 numen et auxilium per sacras quaerere sortes. 369 Nulla mora est: adeunt pariter Cephisidas undas, 370 ut nondum liquidas, sic iam vada nota secantes. 371 Inde ubi libatos inroravere liquores 372 vestibus et capiti, flectunt vestigia sanctae 373 ad delubra deae, quorum fastigia turpi 374 pallebant musco stabantque sine ignibus arae. 375 Ut templi tetigere gradus, procumbit uterque 376 pronus humi gelidoque pavens dedit oscula saxo 377 atque ita “si precibus” dixerunt “numina iustis 378 victa remollescunt, si flectitur ira deorum, 379 dic, Themi, qua generis damnum reparabile nostri 380 arte sit, et mersis fer opem, mitissima, rebus.” 381 Mota dea est sortemque dedit: “Discedite templo 382 et velate caput cinctasque resolvite vestes 383 ossaque post tergum magnae iactate parentis.” 384 Obstipuere diu, rumpitque silentia voce 385 Pyrrha prior iussisque deae parere recusat, 386 detque sibi veniam pavido rogat ore, pavetque 387 laedere iactatis maternas ossibus umbras. 388 Interea repetunt caecis obscura latebris 389 verba datae sortis secum inter seque volutant. 390 Inde Promethides placidis	363 that emanate from Heaven; he brought to aid 364 his azure brother, lord of flowing waves, 365 who called upon the Rivers and the Streams: 366 and when they entered his impearled abode, 367 Neptune, their ancient ruler, thus began; 368 “A long appeal is needless; pour ye forth 369 in rage of power; open up your fountains; 370 rush over obstacles; let every stream 371 pour forth in boundless floods.” Thus he commands, 372 and none dissenting all the River Gods 373 return, and opening up their fountains roll 374 tumultuous to the deep unfruitful sea. 375 And Neptune with his trident smote the Earth, 376 which trembling with unwonted throes heaved up 377 the sources of her waters bare; and through 378 her open plains the rapid rivers rushed 379 resistless, onward bearing the waving grain, 380 the budding groves, the houses, sheep and men,— 381 and holy temples, and their sacred urns. 382 The mansions that remained, resisting vast 383 and total ruin, deepening waves concealed 384 and whelmed their tottering turrets in the flood 385 and whirling gulf. And now one vast expanse, 386 the land and sea were mingled in the waste 387 of endless waves—a sea without a shore. 388 One desperate man seized on the nearest hill; 389 another sitting in his curved boat, 390 plied the long oar where he was wont to plow; 391 another sailed above his grain, above 392 his hidden dwelling; and another hooked

	Epimethida dictis
1.391	391 mulcet et “aut fallax” ait “est sollertia nobis, 392 aut pia sunt nullumque nefas oracula suadent. 393 Magna parens terra est, lapides in corpore terrae 394 ossa reor dici; iacere hos post terga iubemur.” 395 Coniugis augurio quamquam Titania mota est, 396 spes tamen in dubio est: adeo caelestibus ambo 397 diffidunt monitis. Sed quid temptare nocebit? 398 Discedunt velantque caput tunicasque recingunt 399 et iussos lapides sua post vestigia mittunt. 400 Saxa (quis hoc credat, nisi sit pro teste vetustas?) 401 ponere duritiem coepere suumque rigorem 402 mollirique mora mollitaque ducere formam. 403 Mox ubi creverunt naturaque mitior illis 404 contigit, ut quaedam, sic non manifesta, videri 405 forma potest hominis, sed, uti de marmore coepta, 406 non exacta satis rudibusque simillima signis. 407 Quae tamen ex illis aliquo pars umida suco 408 et terrena fuit, versa est in corporis usum; 409 quod solidum est flectique nequit, mutatur in ossa; 410 quae modo vena fuit, sub eodem nomine mansit; 411 inque brevi spatio superorum numine saxa 412 missa viri manibus faciem traxere virorum, 413 et de femineo reparata est femina iactu. 414 Inde genus durum sumus experiensque laborum 415 et documenta damus qua simus origine nati. 416 Cetera diversis tellus animalia formis 417 sponte sua peperit, postquam vetus umor ab igne 418 percaluit solis, caenumque udaeque paludes 419 intumuere aestu, fecundaque	393 a fish that sported in a leafy elm. 394 Perchance an anchor dropped in verdant fields, 395 or curving keels were pushed through tangled vines; 396 and where the gracile goat enjoyed the green, 397 unsightly seals reposed. Beneath the waves 398 were wondering Nereids, viewing cities, groves 399 and houses. Dolphins darting mid the trees, 400 meshed in the twisted branches, beat against 401 the shaken oak trees. There the sheep, affrayed, 402 swim with the frightened wolf, the surging waves 403 float tigers and lions: availeth naught 404 his lightning shock the wild boar, nor avails 405 the stag's fleet footed speed. The wandering bird, 406 seeking umbrageous groves and hidden vales, 407 with wearied pinion droops into the sea. 408 The waves increasing surge above the hills, 409 and rising waters dash on mountain tops. 410 Myriads by the waves are swept away, 411 and those the waters spare, for lack of food, 412 starvation slowly overcomes at last. 413 A fruitful land and fair but now submerged 414 beneath a wilderness of rising waves, 415 'Twixt Oeta and Aonia, Phocis lies, 416 where through the clouds Parnassus' summits twain 417 point upward to the stars, unmeasured height, 418 save which the rolling billows covered all: 419 there in a small and fragile boat, arrived, 420 Deucalion and the consort of his couch, 421 prepared to worship the Corycian Nymphs, 422 the mountain deities, and Themis kind,

	semina rerum 420 vivaci nutrita solo ceu matris in alvo
1.421	421 creverunt faciemque aliquam cepere morando. 422 Sic ubi deseruit madidos septemfluus agros 423 Nilus et antiquo sua flumina reddidit alveo 424 aetherioque recens exarsit sidere limus, 425 plurima cultores versis animalia glaebis 426 inveniunt, et in his quaedam modo coepta per ipsum 427 nascendi spatium, quaedam inperfecta suisque 428 trunca vident numeris; et eodem in corpore saepe 429 altera pars vivit, rudis est pars altera tellus. 430 Quippe ubi temperiem sumpsere umorque calorque, 431 concipiunt, et ab his oriuntur cuncta duobus; 432 cumque sit ignis aquae pugnax, vapor umidus omnes 433 res creat, et discors concordia fetibus apta est. 434 Ergo ubi diluvio tellus lutulenta recenti 435 solibus aetheriis altoque recanduit aestu, 436 edidit innumeras species, partimque figuras 437 rettulit antiquas, partim nova monstra creavit. 438 Illa quidem nollet, sed te quoque, maxime Python, 439 tum genuit, populisque novis, incognite serpens, 440 terror eras: tantum spatii de monte tenebas. 441 Hunc deus arquitenens, et numquam talibus armis 442 ante nisi in dammis capreisque fugacibus usus, 443 mille gravem telis exhausta paene pharetra 444 perdidit effuso per vulnera nigra veneno. 445 Neve operis famam posset delere vetustas, 446 instituit sacros celebri certamine ludos, 447 Pythia perdomitae serpentis nomine dictos. 448 Hic iuvenum quicumque manu	423 who in that age revealed in oracles 424 the voice of fate. As he no other lived 425 so good and just, as she no other feared 426 the Gods. 427 When Jupiter beheld the globe 428 in ruin covered, swept with wasting waves, 429 and when he saw one man of myriads left, 430 one helpless woman left of myriads lone, 431 both innocent and worshiping the Gods, 432 he scattered all the clouds; he blew away 433 the great storms by the cold northwind. 434 Once more 435 the earth appeared to heaven and the skies 436 appeared to earth. The fury of the main 437 abated, for the Ocean ruler laid 438 his trident down and pacified the waves, 439 and called on azure Triton.—Triton arose 440 above the waving seas, his shoulders mailed 441 in purple shells.—He bade the Triton blow, 442 blow in his sounding shell, the wandering streams 443 and rivers to recall with signal known: 444 a hollow wreathed trumpet, tapering wide 445 and slender stemmed, the Triton took amain 446 and wound the pearly shell at midmost sea. 447 Betwixt the rising and the setting suns 448 the wildered notes resounded shore to shore, 449 and as it touched his lips, wet with the brine 450 beneath his dripping beard, sounded retreat: 451 and all the waters of the land and sea 452 obeyed. Their fountains heard and ceased to flow; 453 their waves subsided; hidden hills uprose; 454 emerged the shores of ocean; channels filled 455 with flowing streams; the soil appeared; the land 456 increased its surface as the waves decreased: 457 and after length of days the trees put forth, 458 with ooze on bending boughs, their naked tops. 459 And all the wasted globe was now restored, 460 but as he viewed the vast and silent world 461 Deucalion wept and thus to Pyrrha spoke; 462 “O sister! wife! alone of woman left! 463 My kindred in descent and origin!

	pedibusve rotave 449 vicerat, aesculeae capiebat frondis honorem: 450 nondum laurus erat, longoque decentia crine
1.451	451 tempora cingebat de qualibet arbore Phoebus. 452 Primus amor Phoebi Daphne Peneia, quem non 453 fors ignara dedit, sed saeva Cupidinis ira. 454 Delius hunc, nuper victa serpente superbus, 455 viderat adducto flectentem cornua nervo 456 “quid” que “tibi, lascive puer, cum fortibus armis?” 457 dixerat, “ista decent umeros gestamina nostros, 458 qui dare certa ferae, dare vulnera possumus hosti, 459 qui modo pestifero tot iugera ventre prementem 460 stravimus innumeris tumidum Pythona sagittis. 461 Tu face nescio quos esto contentus amores 462 inritare tua, nec laudes adsere nostras.” 463 Filius huic Veneris “figat tuus omnia, Phoebe, 464 te meus arcus:” ait “quantoque animalia cedunt 465 cuncta deo tanto minor est tua gloria nostra.” 466 Dixit et eliso percussis aere pennis 467 inpiger umbrosa Parnasi constitit arce 468 eque sagittifera prompsit duo tela pharetra 469 diversorum operum: fugat hoc, facit illud amorem. 470 Quod facit, auratum est et cuspide fulget acuta; 471 quod fugat, obtusum est et habet sub harundine plumbum. 472 Hoc deus in nympha Peneide fixit, at illo 473 laesit Apollineas traiecta per ossa medullas. 474 Protinus alter amat, fugit altera nomen amantis 475 silvarum tenebris captivarumque ferarum 476 exuviis gaudens innuptaeque aemula Phoebes. 477 Vitta coercebat positos sine lege capillos.	464 Dearest companion of my marriage bed, 465 doubly endeared by deepening dangers borne,— 466 of all the dawn and eve behold of earth, 467 but you and I are left—for the deep sea 468 has kept the rest! And what prevents the tide 469 from overwhelming us? Remaining clouds 470 affright us. How could you endure your fears 471 if you alone were rescued by this fate, 472 and who would then console your bitter grief? 473 Oh be assured, if you were buried in the waves, 474 that I would follow you and be with you! 475 Oh would that by my father's art I might 476 restore the people, and inspire this clay 477 to take the form of man. Alas, the Gods 478 decreed and only we are living!”, Thus 479 Deucalion's plaint to Pyrrha;—and they wept. 480 And after he had spoken, they resolved 481 to ask the aid of sacred oracles,— 482 and so they hastened to Cephissian waves 483 which rolled a turbid flood in channels known. 484 Thence when their robes and brows were sprinkled well, 485 they turned their footsteps to the goddess' fane: 486 its gables were befouled with reeking moss 487 and on its altars every fire was cold. 488 But when the twain had reached the temple steps 489 they fell upon the earth, inspired with awe, 490 and kissed the cold stone with their trembling lips, 491 and said; “If righteous prayers appease the Gods, 492 and if the wrath of high celestial powers 493 may thus be turned, declare, O Themis! whence 478 Multi illam petiere, illa aversata petentes 479 inpatiens expersque viri nemora avia lustrat, 480 nec quid Hymen, quid Amor, quid sint conubia curat.

1.481	481 Saepe pater dixit “generum mihi, filia, debes,” 482 saepe pater dixit “debes mihi nata, nepotes:” 483 illa, velut crimen taedas exosa iugales, 484 pulchra verecundo suffunditur ora rubore, 485 inque patris blandis haerens cervice lacertis 486 “da mihi perpetua, genitor carissime,” dixit 487 “virginitate frui: dedit hoc pater ante Dianae.” 488 Ille quidem obsequitur, sed te decor iste quod optas 489 esse vetat. Votoque tuo tua forma repugnat: 490 Phoebus amat visaeque cupit conubia Daphnes, 491 quodque cupit, sperat, suaque illum oracula fallunt. 492 Utque leves stipulae demptis adolentur aristis, 493 ut facibus saepes ardent, quas forte viator 494 vel nimis admovit vel iam sub luce reliquit, 495 sic deus in flammas abiit, sic pectore toto 496 uritur et sterilem sperando nutrit amorem. 497 Spectat inornatos collo pendere capillos 498 et “quid, si comantur?” ait. Videt igne micantes 499 sideribus similes oculos, videt oscula, quae non 500 est vidisse satis; laudat digitosque manusque 501 bracchiaque et nudos media plus parte lacertos. 502 Siqua latent, meliora putat. Fugit ocior aura 503 illa levi neque ad haec revocantis verba resistit: 504 “Nympha, precor, Penei, mane! Non insequor hostis: 505 nympha, mane! sic agna lupum, sic cerva leonem, 506 sic aquilam penna fugiunt trepidante columbae,	494 and what the art may raise humanity? 495 O gentle goddess help the dying world!” 496 Moved by their supplications, she replied; 497 “Depart from me and veil your brows; ungird 498 your robes, and cast behind you as you go, 499 the bones of your great mother.” Long they stood 500 in dumb amazement: Pyrrha, first of voice, 501 refused the mandate and with trembling lips 502 implored the goddess to forgive—she feared 503 to violate her mother's bones and vex 504 her sacred spirit. Often pondered they 505 the words involved in such obscurity, 506 repeating oft: and thus Deucalion 507 to Epimetheus' daughter uttered speech 508 of soothing import; “ Oracles are just 509 and urge not evil deeds, or naught avails 510 the skill of thought. Our mother is the Earth, 511 and I may judge the stones of earth are bones 512 that we should cast behind us as we go.” 513 And although Pyrrha by his words was moved 514 she hesitated to comply; and both amazed 515 doubted the purpose of the oracle, 516 but deemed no harm to come of trial. They, 517 descending from the temple, veiled their heads 518 and loosed their robes and threw some stones 519 behind them. It is much beyond belief, 520 were not receding ages witness, hard 521 and rigid stones assumed a softer form, 522 enlarging as their brittle nature changed 523 to milder substance,—till the shape of man

	507 hostes quaeque suos: amor est mihi causa sequendi. 508 Me miserum! ne prona cadas indignave laedi 509 crura notent sentes et sim tibi causa doloris. 510 Aspera, qua properas, loca sunt. Moderatius, oro,
1.511	511 curre fugamque inhibe; moderatius insequar ipse. 512 Cui placeas, inquire tamen. Non incola montis, 513 non ego sum pastor, non hic armenta gregesque 514 horridus observo. Nescis, temeraria, nescis 515 quem fugias, ideoque fugis. Mihi Delphica tellus 516 et Claros et Tenedos Patareaque regia servit, 517 Iuppiter est genitor; per me quod eritque fuitque 518 estque patet; per me concordant carmina nervis. 519 Certa quidem nostra est, nostra tamen una sagitta 520 certior, in vacuo quae vulnera pectore fecit. 521 Inventum medicina meum est, opiferque per orbem 522 dicor, et herbarum subiecta potentia nobis: 523 ei mihi, quod nullis amor est sanabilis herbis 524 nec prosunt domino, quae prosunt omnibus, artes.” 525 Plura locuturum timido Peneia cursu 526 fugit cumque ipso verba inperfecta reliquit, 527 tum quoque visa decens. Nudabant corpora venti, 528 obviaque adversas vibrabant flamina vestes, 529 et levis inpulsos retro dabat aura capillos, 530 auctaque forma fuga est. Sed enim non sustinet ultra 531 perdere blanditias iuvenis deus, utque monebat 532 ipse Amor, admisso sequitur vestigia passu. 533 Ut canis in vacuo leporem cum Gallicus arvo 534 vidit, et hic praedam pedibus petit, ille salutem: 535 alter inhaesuro similis iam iamque tenere	524 appeared, imperfect, faintly outlined first, 525 as marble statue chiseled in the rough. 526 The soft moist parts were changed to softer flesh, 527 the hard and brittle substance into bones, 528 the veins retained their ancient name. And now 529 the Gods supreme ordained that every stone 530 Deucalion threw should take the form of man, 531 and those by Pyrrha cast should woman's form 532 assume: so are we hardy to endure 533 and prove by toil and deeds from what we sprung. 534 And after this the Earth spontaneous 535 produced the world of animals, when all 536 remaining moistures of the mirey fens 537 fermented in the sun, and fruitful seeds 538 in soils nutritious grew to shapes ordained. 539 So when the seven streamed Nile from oozy fields 540 returneth duly to her ancient bed, 541 the sun's ethereal rays impregn the slime, 542 that haply as the peasants turn the soil 543 they find strange animals unknown before: 544 some in the moment of their birth, and some 545 deprived of limbs, imperfect; often part 546 alive and part of slime inanimate 547 are fashioned in one body. Heat combined 548 with moisture so conceives and life results 549 from these two things. For though the flames may be 550 the foes of water, everything that lives 551 begins in humid vapour, and it seems 552 discordant concord is the means of life. 553 When Earth, spread over with diluvian ooze, 554 felt heat ethereal from the glowing sun, 555 unnumbered species to the light she gave, 556 and gave to being many an ancient form, 557 or monster new created. Unwilling she 558 created thus enormous Python. —Thou 559 unheard of serpent spread so far athwart 560 the side of a vast mountain, didst fill with fear 561 the race of new created man. The God 562 that bears the bow (a weapon used till then 563 only to hunt the deer and

	536 sperat et extento stringit vestigia rostro, 537 alter in ambiguo est, an sit conprensus, et ipsis 538 morsibus eripitur tangentiaque ora relinquit: 539 sic deus et virgo est hic spe celer, illa timore. 540 Qui tamen insequitur pennis adiutus Amoris,	agile goat) 564 destroyed the monster with a myriad darts, 565 and almost emptied all his quiver, till 566 envenomed gore oozed forth from livid wounds. 567 Lest in a dark oblivion time should hide 568 the fame of this achievement, sacred sports 569 he instituted, from the Python called 570 “The Pythian Games.” In these the happy youth 571 who proved victorious in the chariot race, 572 running and boxing, with an honoured crown 573 of oak leaves was enwreathed. The laurel then 574 was not created, wherefore Phoebus, bright 575 and godlike, beauteous with his flowing hair, 576 was wont to wreathe his brows with various leaves.
1.541	541 ocior est requiemque negat tergoque fugacis 542 inminet et crinem sparsum cervicibus adflat. 543 Viribus absumptis expalluit illa citaeque 544 victa labore fugae spectans Peneidas undas 545 “fer pater” inquit “opem si flumina numen habetis. 546 547 547 Qua nimium placui, mutando perde figuram!” 548 Vix prece finita torpor gravis occupat artus: 549 mollia cinguntur tenui praecordia libro, 550 in frondem crines, in ramos bracchia crescunt, 551 pes modo tam velox pigris radicibus haeret, 552 ora cacumen habet; remanet nitor unus in illa. 553 Hanc quoque Phoebus amat, positaque in stipite dextra 554 sentit adhuc trepidare novo sub cortice pectus 555 conplexusque suis ramos, ut membra, lacertis 556 oscula dat ligno: refugit tamen oscula lignum. 557 Cui deus “at quoniam coniunx mea non potes esse, 558 arbor eris certe” dixit “mea. Semper habebunt 559 te coma, te citharae, te nostrae, laure, pharetrae: 560 tu ducibus Latiis aderis, cum laeta triumphum

	561 vox canet et visent longas Capitolia pompas: 562 postibus Augustis eadem fidissima custos 563 ante fores stabis mediamque tuebere quercum, 564 utque meum intonsis caput est iuvenale capillis, 565 tu quoque perpetuos semper gere frondis honores.” 566 Finierat Paean: factis modo laurea ramis 567 adnuit utque caput visa est agitasse cacumen. 568 Est nemus Haemoniae, praerupta quod undique claudit 569 silva: vocant Tempe. Per quae Peneus ab imo
1.570	570 effusus Pindo spumosis volvitur undis, 571 deiectuque gravi tenues agitantia fumos 572 nubila conducit summisque adspergine silvis 573 inpluit et sonitu plus quam vicina fatigat. 574 Haec domus, haec sedes, haec sunt penetralia magni 575 amnis; in his residens facto de cautibus antro, 576 undis iura dabat nymphisque colentibus undas. 577 Conveniunt illuc popularia flumina primum, 578 nescia, gratentur consolenturne parentem, 579 populifer Sperchios et inrequietus Enipeus 580 Apidanusque senex lenisque Amphrysos et Aeas, 581 moxque amnes alii, qui, qua tulit impetus illos, 582 in mare deducunt fessas erroribus undas. 583 Inachus unus abest imoque reconditus antro 584 fletibus auget aquas natamque miserrimus Io 585 luget ut amissam. Nescit, vitane fruatur, 586 an sit apud manes; sed quam non invenit usquam. 587 esse putat nusquam atque animo peiora veretur. 588 Viderat a patrio redeuntem Iuppiter illam 589 flumine et “o virgo Iove digna tuoque beatum	577 Daphne, the daughter of a River God 578 was first beloved by Phoebus, the great God 579 of glorious light. 'Twas not a cause of chance 580 but out of Cupid's vengeful spite that she 581 was fated to torment the lord of light. 582 For Phoebus, proud of Python's death, beheld 583 that impish god of Love upon a time 584 when he was bending his diminished bow, 585 and voicing his contempt in anger said; 586 “What, wanton boy, are mighty arms to thee, 587 great weapons suited to the needs of war? 588 The bow is only for the use of those 589 large deities of heaven whose strength may deal 590 wounds, mortal, to the savage beasts of prey; 591 and who courageous overcome their foes.— 592 it is a proper weapon to the use 593 of such as slew with arrows Python, huge, 594 whose pestilential carcase vast extent 595 covered. Content thee with the flames thy torch 596 enkindles (fires too subtle for my thought) 597 and leave to me the glory that is mine.” 598 to him, undaunted, Venus, son replied; 599 “O Phoebus, thou canst conquer all the world 600 with thy strong bow and arrows, but with this 601 small arrow I shall pierce thy vaunting breast! 602 And by the measure that thy might exceeds 603 the broken powers of thy defeated foes, 604 so is thy glory less than mine.” No more 605 he said, but with his wings expanded thence 606 flew lightly to Parnassus, lofty peak.

	590 nescio quem factura toro, pete” dixerat “umbras 591 altorum nemorum” (et nemorum monstraverat umbras), 592 “dum calet et medio sol est altissimus orbe. 593 Quodsi sola times latebras intrare ferarum, 594 praeside tuta deo nemorum secreta subibis, 595 nec de plebe deo, sed qui caelestia magna 596 sceptra manu teneo, sed qui vaga fulmina mitto. 597 Ne fuge me!”—fugiebat enim. Iam pascua Lernae 598 consitaque arboribus Lyrcea reliquerat arva, 599 cum deus inducta latas caligine terras
1.600	600 occuluit tenuitque fugam rapuitque pudorem. 601 Interea medios Iuno despexit in agros 602 et noctis faciem nebulas fecisse volucres 603 sub nitido mirata die, non fluminis illas 604 esse, nec umenti sensit tellure remitti; 605 atque suus coniunx ubi sit circumspicit, ut quae 606 deprensi totiens iam nosset furta mariti. 607 Quem postquam caelo non repperit, “aut ego fallor, 608 aut ego laedor” ait, delapsaque ab aethere summo 609 constitit in terris nebulasque recedere iussit. 610 Coniugis adventum praesenserat inque nitentem 611 Inachidos vultus mutaverat ille iuvencam. 612 Bos quoque formosa est. Speciem Saturnia vaccae, 613 quamquam invita, probat, nec non et cuius et unde 614 quove sit armento, veri quasi nescia quaerit. 615 Iuppiter e terra genitam mentitur, ut auctor 616 desinat inquiri. Petit hanc Saturnia munus. 617 Quid faciat? crudele suos addicere amores, 618 non dare suspectum est. Pudor est qui suadeat illinc,	607 There, from his quiver he plucked arrows twain, 608 most curiously wrought of different art; 609 one love exciting, one repelling love. 610 The dart of love was glittering, gold and sharp, 611 the other had a blunted tip of lead; 612 and with that dull lead dart he shot the Nymph, 613 but with the keen point of the golden dart 614 he pierced the bone and marrow of the God. 615 Immediately the one with love was filled, 616 the other, scouting at the thought of love, 617 rejoiced in the deep shadow of the woods, 618 and as the virgin Phoebe (who denies 619 the joys of love and loves the joys of chase) 620 a maiden's fillet bound her flowing hair,— 621 and her pure mind denied the love of man. 622 Beloved and wooed she wandered silent paths, 623 for never could her modesty endure 624 the glance of man or listen to his love. 625 Her grieving father spoke to her, “Alas, 626 my daughter, I have wished a son in law, 627 and now you owe a grandchild to the joy 628 of my old age.” But Daphne only hung 629 her head to hide her shame. The nuptial torch 630 seemed criminal to her. She even clung, 631 caressing, with her arms around his neck, 632 and pled, “My dearest father let me live 633 a virgin always, for remember Jove 634 did grant it to Diana at her birth.” 635 But though her father promised her desire, 636 her loveliness prevailed against their will;

	619 hinc dissuadet amor. Victus pudor esset amore; 620 sed leve si munus sociae generisque torique 621 vacca negaretur, poterat non vacca videri. 622 Paelice donata non protinus exuit omnem 623 diva metum timuitque Iovem et fuit anxia furti, 624 donec Arestoridae servandam tradidit Argo. 625 Centum luminibus cinctum caput Argus habebat: 626 inde suis vicibus capiebant bina quietem, 627 cetera servabant atque in statione manebant. 628 Constiterat quocumque modo, spectabat ad Io: 629 ante oculos Io, quamvis aversus, habebat.
1.630	630 Luce sinit pasci; cum sol tellure sub alta est, 631 claudit et indigno circumdat vincula collo. 632 frondibus arboreis et amara pascitur herba, 633 proque toro terrae non semper gramen habenti 634 incubat infelix limosaque flumina potat. 635 Illa etiam supplex Argo cum bracchia vellet 636 tendere, non habuit, quae bracchia tenderet Argo, 637 et conata queri mugitus edidit ore 638 pertimuitque sonos propriaque exterrita voce est. 639 Venit et ad ripas, ubi ludere saepe solebat, 640 Inachidas ripas; novaque ut conspexit in unda 641 cornua, pertimuit seque exsternata refugit. 642 Naides ignorant, ignorat et Inachus ipse, 643 quae sit; at illa patrem sequitur sequiturque sorores 644 et patitur tangi seque admirantibus offert. 645 Decerptas senior porrexerat Inachus herbas: 646 illa manus lambit patriisque dat oscula palmis 647 nec retinet lacrimas et, si modo verba sequantur, 648 oret opem nomenque suum	637 for, Phoebus when he saw her waxed distraught, 638 and filled with wonder his sick fancy raised 639 delusive hopes, and his own oracles 640 deceived him.—As the stubble in the field 641 flares up, or as the stacked wheat is consumed 642 by flames, enkindled from a spark or torch 643 the chance pedestrian may neglect at dawn; 644 so was the bosom of the god consumed, 645 and so desire flamed in his stricken heart. 646 He saw her bright hair waving on her neck;— 647 “How beautiful if properly arranged! ” 648 He saw her eyes like stars of sparkling fire, 649 her lips for kissing sweetest, and her hands 650 and fingers and her arms; her shoulders white 651 as ivory;—and whatever was not seen 652 more beautiful must be. 653 Swift as the wind 654 from his pursuing feet the virgin fled, 655 and neither stopped nor heeded as he called; 656 “O Nymph! O Daphne! I entreat thee stay, 657 it is no enemy that follows thee— 658 why, so the lamb leaps from the raging wolf, 659 and from the lion runs the timid faun, 660 and from the eagle flies the trembling dove, 661 all hasten from their natural enemy 662 but I alone pursue for my dear love. 663 Alas, if thou shouldst fall and mar thy face, 664 or tear upon the bramble thy soft thighs, 665 or should I prove unwilling cause of pain! 666 “The wilderness is casusque loquatur. 649 Littera pro verbis, quam pes in pulvere duxit, 650 corporis indicium mutati triste peregit. 651 “Me miserum!” exclamat pater Inachus inque gementis 652 cornibus et niveae pendens cervice iuvencae 653 “me miserum!” ingeminat, “tune es quaesita per omnes 654 nata, mihi terras? tu non inventa reperta 655 luctus eras levior. Retices nec mutua nostris 656 dicta refers, alto tantum suspiria ducis 657 pectore, quodque unum potes, ad mea verba remugis. 658 At tibi ego ignarus thalamos taedasque parabam, 659 spesque fuit generi mihi prima, secunda nepotum.	rough and dangerous, 1.660	660 De grege nunc tibi vir, nunc de grege natus habendus. 661 Nec finire licet tantos mihi morte dolores, 662 sed nocet esse deum, praeclusaque ianua leti 663 aeternum nostros luctus extendit in aevum?” 664 Talia maerentem stellatus submovet Argus 665 ereptamque patri diversa in pascua natam 666 abstrahit. Ipse procul montis sublime cacumen 667 occupat, unde sedens partes speculatur in omnes. 668 Nec superum rector mala tanta Phoronidos ultra 669 ferre potest natumque vocat, quem lucida partu 670 Pleias enixa est, letoque det imperat Argum. 671 Parva mora est alas pedibus virgamque potenti 672 somniferam sumpsisse manu tegimenque capillis. 673 Haec ubi disposuit, patria Iove natus ab arce 674 desilit in terras. Illic tegimenque removit 675 et posuit pennas, tantummodo virga retenta est. 676 Hac agit, ut pastor, per devia rura capellas, 677 dum venit, adductas et structis	667 and I beseech thee be more careful —I 668 will follow slowly.—Ask of whom thou wilt, 669 and thou shalt learn that I am not a churl— 670 I am no mountain dweller of rude caves, 671 nor clown compelled to watch the sheep and goats; 672 and neither canst thou know from whom thy feet 673 fly fearful, or thou wouldst not leave me thus. 674 “The Delphic Land, the Pataraean Realm, 675 Claros and Tenedos revere my name, 676 and my immortal sire is Jupiter. 677 The present, past and future are through me 678 in sacred oracles revealed to man, 679 and from my harp the harmonies of sound 680 are borrowed by their bards to praise the Gods. 681 My bow is certain, but a flaming shaft 682 surpassing mine has pierced my heart— 683 untouched before. The art of medicine 684 is my invention, and the power of herbs; 685 but though the world declare my useful works 686 there is no herb to medicate my wound, 687 and all the arts that save have failed their lord.,” 688 But even as he made his plaint, the Nymph 689 with timid footsteps fled from his approach, 690 and left him to his murmurs and his pain. 691 Lovely the virgin seemed as the soft wind 692 exposed her limbs, and as the zephyrs fond 693 fluttered amid her garments, and the breeze 694 fanned lightly in her flowing hair. She

	cantat avenis. 678 Voce nova captus custos Iunonius “at tu, 679 quisquis es, hoc poteras mecum considere saxo,” 680 Argus ait, “neque enim pecori fecundior ullo 681 herba loco est, aptamque vides pastoribus umbram.” 682 Sedit Atlantiades et euntem multa loquendo 683 detinuit sermone diem iunctisque canendo 684 vincere harundinibus servantia lumina temptat. 685 Ille tamen pugnat molles evincere somnos 686 et, quamvis sopor est oculorum parte receptus, 687 parte tamen vigilat. Quaerit quoque (namque reperta 688 fistula nuper erat), qua sit ratione reperta. 689 Tum deus “Arcadiae gelidis in montibus” inquit	seemed 695 most lovely to his fancy in her flight; 696 and mad with love he followed in her steps, 697 and silent hastened his increasing speed. 698 As when the greyhound sees the frightened hare 699 flit over the plain: —With eager nose outstretched, 700 impetuous, he rushes on his prey, 701 and gains upon her till he treads her feet, 702 and almost fastens in her side his fangs; 703 but she, whilst dreading that her end is near, 704 is suddenly delivered from her fright; 705 so was it with the god and virgin: one 706 with hope pursued, the other fled in fear; 707 and he who followed, borne on wings of love, 708 permitted her no rest and gained on her, 709 until his warm breath mingled in her hair. 710 Her strength spent, pale and faint, with pleading eyes 711 she gazed upon her father's waves and prayed, 712 “Help me my father, if thy flowing streams 713 have virtue! Cover me, O mother Earth! 714 Destroy the beauty that has injured me, 715 or change the body that destroys my life.” 716 Before her prayer was ended, torpor seized 717 on all her body, and a thin bark closed
1.690	690 “inter hamadryadas celeberrima Nonacrinas 691 naias una fuit; nymphae Syringa vocabant. 692 Non semel et satyros eluserat illa sequentes 693 et quoscumque deos umbrosaque silva feraxque 694 rus habet. Ortygiam studiis ipsaque colebat 695 virginitate deam. Ritu quoque cincta Dianae 696 falleret et posset credi Latonia, si non 697 corneus huic arcus, si non foret aureus illi. 698 Sic quoque fallebat. Redeuntem colle Lycaeo 699 Pan videt hanc pinuque caput praecinctus acuta 700 talia verba refert”—restabat verba referre 701 et precibus spretis fugisse per avia nympham, 702 donec harenosi placidum Ladonis ad amnem 703 venerit. Hic illam cursum inpedientibus undis, 704 ut se mutarent liquidas orasse	718 around her gentle bosom, and her hair 719 became as moving leaves; her arms were changed 720 to waving branches, and her active feet 721 as clinging roots were fastened to the ground— 722 her face was hidden with encircling leaves.— 723 Phoebus admired and loved the graceful tree, 724 (For still, though changed, her slender form remained) 725 and with his right hand lingering on the trunk 726 he felt her bosom throbbing in the bark. 727 He clung to trunk and branch as though to twine. 728 His form with hers, and fondly kissed the wood 729 that shrank from every kiss. 730 And thus the God; 731 “Although thou canst not be my bride, thou shalt 732 be called my chosen tree, and thy green leaves, 733 O Laurel! shall forever crown my brows, 734 be wreathed around my quiver and my lyre; 735 the Roman heroes shall be crowned with thee, 736 as long processions climb the Capitol 737 and chanting throngs proclaim their victories; 738 and as a faithful warden thou shalt guard 739 the civic crown of oak leaves fixed between 740 thy branches, and before

	sorores, 705 Panaque, cum prensam sibi iam Syringa putaret, 706 corpore pro nymphae calamos tenuisse palustres. 707 Dumque ibi suspirat, motos in harundine ventos 708 effecisse sonum tenuem similemque querenti. 709 Arte nova vocisque deum dulcedine captum 710 “hoc mihi concilium tecum” dixisse “manebit!“ 711 atque ita disparibus calamis conpagine cerae 712 inter se iunctis nomen tenuisse puellae. 713 Talia dicturus vidit Cyllenius omnes 714 succubuisse oculos adopertaque lumina somno. 715 Supprimit extemplo vocem firmatque soporem 716 languida permulcens medicata lumina virga. 717 Nec mora, falcato nutantem vulnerat ense 718 qua collo est confine caput, saxoque cruentum 719 deicit et maculat praeruptam sanguine rupem.	Augustan gates. 741 And as my youthful head is never shorn, 742 so, also, shalt thou ever bear thy leaves 743 unchanging to thy glory.,” 744 Here the God, 745 Phoebus Apollo, ended his lament, 746 and unto him the Laurel bent her boughs, 747 so lately fashioned; and it seemed to him
1.720	720 Arge, iaces, quodque in tot lumina lumen habebas, 721 exstinctum est, centumque oculos nox occupat una. 722 Excipit hos volucrisque suae Saturnia pennis 723 collocat et gemmis caudam stellantibus inplet. 724 Protinus exarsit nec tempora distulit irae 725 horriferamque oculis animoque obiecit Erinyn 726 paelicis Argolicae stimulosque in pectore caecos 727 condidit et profugam per totum terruit orbem. 728 Ultimus inmenso restabas, Nile, labori. 729 Quem simul ac tetigit, positis in margine ripae 730 procubuit genibus resupinoque ardua collo, 731 quos potuit solos, tollens ad sidera vultus 732 et gemitu et lacrimis et luctisono mugitu 733 cum Iove visa queri finemque orare	748 her graceful nod gave answer to his love. 749 There is a grove in Thessaly, enclosed 750 on every side with crags, precipitous,— 751 on which a forest grows—and this is called 752 the Vale of Tempe—through this valley flows 753 the River Peneus, white with foaming waves, 754 that issue from the foot of Pindus, whence 755 with sudden fall up gather steamy clouds 756 that sprinkle mist upon the circling trees, 757 and far away with mighty roar resound. 758 It is the abode, the solitary home, 759 that mighty River loves, where deep in gloom 760 of rocky cavern, he resides and rules 761 the flowing waters and the water nymphs 762 abiding there. All rivers of that land 763 now hasten thither, doubtful to console 764 or flatter Daphne's parent: poplar crowned 765 Sperchios, swift Enipeus and the wild 766 Amphrysos, old Apidanus and Aeas, 767 with all their kindred streams that wandering maze 768 and wearied seek the ocean. Inachus 769 alone is absent, hidden in his cave 770 obscure, malorum. 734 Coniugis ille suae conplexus colla lacertis, 735 finiat ut poenas tandem, rogat “in” que “futurum 736 pone metus” inquit; “numquam tibi causa doloris 737 haec erit:” et Stygias iubet hoc audire paludes. 738 Ut lenita dea est, vultus capit illa priores 739 fitque quod ante fuit: fugiunt e corpore saetae, 740 cornua decrescunt, fit luminis artior orbis, 741 contrahitur rictus, redeunt umerique manusque, 742 ungulaque in quinos dilapsa absumitur ungues: 743 de bove nil superest formae nisi candor in illa. 744 Officioque pedum nymphe contenta duorum 745 erigitur metuitque loqui, ne more iuvencae 746 mugiat, et timide verba intermissa retemptat. 747 Nunc dea linigera colitur celeberrima turba, 748 nunc Epaphus magni genitus de semine tandem 749 creditur esse Iovis, perque urbes iuncta parenti	deepening his waters with his tears— 771 most wretchedly bewailing, for he deems 772 his daughter Io lost. If she may live 773 or roam a spirit in the nether shades 774 he dares not even guess but dreads 775 for Jove not long before had seen her while 776 returning from her father's stream, and said; 777 “O virgin, worthy of immortal Jove, 778 although some happy mortal's chosen bride,—

1.750	750 templa tenet. Fuit huic animis aequalis et annis 751 Sole satus Phaethon. Quem quondam magna loquentem 752 nec sibi cedentem Phoeboque parente superbum 753 non tulit Inachides, “matri” que ait “omnia demens 754 credis et es tumidus genitoris imagine falsi.” 755 Erubuit Phaethon iramque pudore repressit 756 et tulit ad Clymenen Epaphi convicia matrem; 757 “quo” que “magis doleas genetrix,” ait “ille ego liber, 758 ille ferox tacui. Pudet haec opprobria nobis 759 et dici potuisse et non potuisse refelli. 760 At tu, si modo sum caelesti stirpe creatus, 761 ede notam tanti generis meque adsere caelo.” 762 Dixit et inplicuit materno bracchia	779 behold these shades of overhanging trees, 780 and seek their cool recesses while the sun 781 is glowing in the height of middle skies—” 782 and as he spoke he pointed out the groves— 783 “But should the dens of wild beasts frighten you, 784 with safety you may enter the deep woods, 785 conducted by a God—not with a God 786 of small repute, but in the care of him 787 who holds the heavenly scepter in his hand 788 and fulminates the trackless thunder bolts.— 789 forsake me not! ” For while he spoke she fled, 790 and swiftly left behind the pasture fields 791 of Lerna, and Lyrcea's arbours, where 792 the trees are planted thickly. But the God 793 called forth a heavy shadow which involved 794 the wide extended earth, and stopped her flight 795 and ravished in that cloud her chastity. 796 Meanwhile, the goddess Juno gazing down 797 on earth's expanse, with wonder saw the clouds 798 as dark as

	collo 763 perque suum Meropisque caput taedasque sororum 764 traderet oravit veri sibi signa parentis. 765 Ambiguum, Clymene, precibus Phaethontis an ira 766 mota magis dicti sibi criminis utraque caelo 767 bracchia porrexit spectansque ad lumina solis 768 “per iubar hoc” inquit “radiis insigne coruscis, 769 nate, tibi iuro, quod nos auditque videtque, 770 hoc te, quem spectas, hoc te, qui temperat orbem, 771 Sole satum. Si ficta loquor, neget ipse videndum 772 se mihi, sitque oculis lux ista novissima nostris. 773 Nec longus patrios labor est tibi nosse penates: 774 unde oritur, domus est terrae contermina nostrae. 775 Si modo fert animus, gradere et scitabere ab ipso.” 776 Emicat extemplo laetus post talia matris 777 dicta suae Phaethon et concipit aethera mente, 778 Aethiopasque suos positosque sub ignibus Indos 779 sidereis transit patriosque adit inpiger ortus.	night enfold those middle fields 799 while day was bright above. She was convinced 800 the clouds were none composed of river mist 801 nor raised from marshy fens. Suspicious now, 802 from oft detected amours of her spouse, 803 she glanced around to find her absent lord, 804 and quite convinced that he was far from heaven, 805 she thus exclaimed; “This cloud deceives my mind, 806 or Jove has wronged me.” From the dome of heaven 807 she glided down and stood upon the earth, 808 and bade the clouds recede. But Jove had known
2.1	1 Regia Solis erat sublimibus alta columnis, 2 clara micante auro flammasque imitante pyropo: 3 cuius ebur nitidum fastigia summa tegebat, 4 argenti bifores radiabant lumine valvae. 5 Materiam superabat opus: nam Mulciber illic 6 aequora caelarat medias cingentia terras, 7 terrarumque orbem, caelumque quod inminet orbi. 8 Caeruleos habet unda deos, Tritona canorum 9 Proteaque ambiguum, balaenarumque prementem 10 Aegaeona suis inmania terga lacertis, 11 Doridaque et natas, quarum pars nare videtur, 12 pars in mole sedens virides siccare	1 Glowing with gold, flaming with carbuncles 2 on stately columns raised, refulgent shone 3 the palace of the Sun, with polished dome 4 of ivory gleaming, and with portals twain 5 of burnished silver. And the workmanship 6 exceeded all the wealth of gems and gold; 7 for there had Mulciber engraved the seas 8 encircling middle earth; the round of earth, 9 and heaven impending over the land. 10 And there 11 amid the waves were azure deities: 12 melodious Triton and elusive Proteus; there 13 Aegeaan pressing with his arms the backs. 14 Of monstrous whales; and Doris in the sea 15 and all her daughters; some amid the waves 16 and others sitting on the bank to dry 17 their sea-green hair, and others borne about 18 by fishes. Each was made to show a fair 19 resemblance to her sisters—yet not one 20 appearance was assigned to all—they seemed 21 as near

	capillos, 13 pisce vehi quaedam: facies non omnibus una, 14 non diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum. 15 Terra viros urbesque gerit silvasque ferasque 16 fluminaque et nymphas et cetera numina ruris. 17 Haec super imposita est caeli fulgentis imago 18 signaque sex foribus dextris totidemque sinistris. 19 Quo simul acclivi Clymeneia limite proles 20 venit et intravit dubitati tecta parentis, 21 protinus ad patrios sua fert vestigia vultus 22 consistitque procul: neque enim propiora ferebat 23 lumina. Purpurea velatus veste sedebat 24 in solio Phoebus claris lucente smaragdis. 25 A dextra laevaque Dies et Mensis et Annus 26 Saeculaque et positae spatiis aequalibus Horae 27 Verque novum stabat cinctum florente corona, 28 stabat nuda Aestas et spicea serta gerebat, 29 stabat et Autumnus, calcatis sordidus uvis, 30 et glacialis Hiems, canos hirsuta capillos.	alike as sisters should in truth. 22 And men and cities, woods and savage beasts, 23 and streams and nymphs, and sylvan deities 24 were carved upon the land; and over these 25 an image of the glittering sky was fixed;— 26 six signs were on the right, six on the left. 27 Here when audacious Phaethon arrived 28 by steep ascending paths, without delay 29 he entered in the shining palace-gates 30 of his reputed parent, making haste
2.31	31 Inde loco medius rerum novitate paventem 32 Sol oculis iuvenem, quibus adspicit omnia, vidit 33 “quae” que “viae tibi causa? quid hac” ait “arce petisti, 34 progenies, Phaethon, haud infitianda parenti?” 35 Ille refert “o lux inmensi publica mundi, 36 Phoebe pater, si das usum mihi nominis huius 37 nec falsa Clymene culpam sub imagine celat, 38 pignera da, genitor, per quae tua vera propago 39 credar, et hunc animis errorem detrahe nostris.” 40 Dixerat: at genitor circum caput omne micantes 41 deposuit radios propiusque	31 to stand in his paternal presence. There, 32 unable to endure the dazzling light, 33 he waited at a distance. 34 Phoebus sat, 35 arrayed in royal purple, on a throne 36 that glittered with the purest emeralds.— 37 there to the left and right, Day, Month and Year, 38 time and the Hours, at equal distance stood; 39 and vernal Spring stood crowned with wreathed flowers; 40 and naked Summer stood with sheaves of wheat; 41 and Autumn stood besmeared with trodden grapes; 42 and icy Winter rough with hoary hair. 43 And from the midst, with orbs that view the world, 44 Phoebus beheld the trembling youth, fear-struck, 45 in mute amazement, and he said; “Declare 46 the reason of thy journey. What wilt thou 47 in this my palace, Phaethon my child 48 beloved?” 49 And to him

	accedere iussit; 42 amplexuque dato “nec tu meus esse negari 43 dignus es, et Clymene veros” ait “edidit ortus. 44 Quoque minus dubites, quodvis pete munus, ut illud 45 me tribuente feras. Promissis testis adesto 46 dis iuranda palus, oculis incognita nostris.” 47 Vix bene desierat, currus rogat ille paternos 48 inque diem alipedum ius et moderamen equorum. 49 Paenituit iurasse patrem. Qui terque quaterque 50 concutiens inlustre caput “temeraria” dixit 51 vox mea facta tua est. Utinam promissa liceret 52 non dare! confiteor, solum hoc tibi, nate, negarem. 53 Dissuadere licet. Non est tua tuta voluntas. 54 Magna petis, Phaethon, et quae nec viribus istis 55 munera conveniant nec tam puerilibus annis. 56 Sors tua mortalis, non est mortale quod optas. 57 Plus etiam, quam quod superis contingere possit, 58 nescius adfectas. Placeat sibi quisque licebit, 59 non tamen ignifero quisquam consistere in axe 60 me valet excepto. Vasti quoque rector Olympi,	replied the youth; 50 “O universal light of all the world, 51 my father Phoebus, if thy name be mine, 52 if Clymene has not concealed her sin 53 beneath some pretext, give to me, my sire, 54 a token to declare thy fatherhood 55 which may establish my assured descent, 56 and leave no dark suspicions in our minds.”— 57 then Phoebus from his shining brows cast down 58 his circling rays; called Phaethon to him, 59 and as he held him to his breast replied; 60 “O child most worthy of thy sire, the truth
2.61	61 qui fera terribili iaculatur fulmina dextra, 62 non agat hos currus: et quid Iove maius habemus? 63 Ardua prima via est et qua vix mane recentes 64 enitantur equi: medio est altissima caelo, 65 unde mare et terras ipsi mihi saepe videre 66 fit timor, et pavida trepidat formidine pectus. 67 Ultima prona via est et eget moderamine certo: 68 tunc etiam quae me subiectis excipit undis, 69 ne ferar in praeceps, Tethys solet ipsa vereri. 70 Adde quod adsidua rapitur vertigine	61 was told thee by thy mother; wherefore doubts 62 to dissipate, consider thy desire, 63 and ask of me that I may freely give: 64 yea, let the Nether Lake, beyond our view, 65 (which is the oath of Gods inviolate) 66 be witness to my word.” 67 When this was said 68 the happy youth at once began to plead 69 command and guidance of his father's steeds, 70 wing-footed, and his chariot for a day. 71 But Phoebus much repented that he sware, 72 and thrice and four times shook his radiant head; 73 “Ah, would I might refuse my plighted word; 74 and oh, that it were lawful to deny 75 the promised boon.—For I confess, O son, 76 this only I should keep from thee— and yet 77 'Tis lawful to dissuade. It is

	caelum 71 sideraque alta trahit celerique volumine torquet. 72 Nitor in adversum, nec me, qui cetera, vincit 73 impetus, et rapido contrarius evehor orbi. 74 Finge datos currus: quid ages? poterisne rotatis 75 obvius ire polis, ne te citus auferat axis? 76 Forsitan et lucos illic urbesque deorum 77 concipias animo delubraque ditia donis 78 esse? per insidias iter est formasque ferarum. 79 Utque viam teneas nulloque errore traharis, 80 per tamen adversi gradieris cornua tauri 81 Haemoniosque arcus violentique ora leonis 82 saevaque circuitu curvantem bracchia longo 83 scorpion atque aliter curvantem bracchia cancrum. 84 Nec tibi quadrupedes animosos ignibus illis, 85 quos in pectore habent, quos ore et naribus efflant, 86 in promptu regere est: vix me patiuntur, ubi acres 87 incaluere animi, cervixque repugnat habenis. 88 At tu, funesti ne sim tibi muneris auctor, 89 nate, cave, dum resque sinit, tua corrige vota. 90 Scilicet ut nostro genitum te sanguine credas,	unsafe 78 to satisfy thy will. It is a great 79 request, O Phaethon, which neither suits 80 thy utmost strength nor tender years; for thou 81 art mortal, and thou hast aspired to things 82 immortal. Ignorance has made thy thought 83 transcend the province of the Gods. I vaunt 84 no vain exploits; but only I can stand 85 securely on the flame-fraught axle-tree: 86 even the Ruler of Olympian Gods, 87 who hurls fierce lightnings with his great right hand, 88 may never dare to drive this chariot, 89 and what art thou to equal mighty Jove? 90 “The opening path is steep and difficult,
2.91	91 pignera certa petis? do pignera certa timendo 92 et patrio pater esse metu probor. Adspice vultus 93 ecce meos; utinamque oculos in pectora posses 94 inserere et patrias intus deprendere curas! 95 Denique quidquid habet dives, circumspice, mundus, 96 eque tot ac tantis caeli terraeque marisque 97 posce bonis aliquid: nullam patiere repulsam. 98 Deprecor hoc unum, quod vero nomine poena, 99 non honor est: poenam, Phaethon,	91 for scarcely can the steeds, refreshed at dawn, 92 climb up the steeps: and when is reached the height, 93 extreme of midmost Heaven, and sea and earth 94 are viewed below, my trembling breast is filled 95 with fearful apprehensions: and requires 96 the last precipitous descent a sure 97 command. Then, also, Tethys, who receives 98 me in her subject waves, is wont to fear 99 lest I should fall disastrous. And around 100 the hastening sky revolves in constant whirl, 101 drawing the lofty stars with rapid twist. 102 “I struggle on. The force that overcomes 103 the heavenly bodies overwhelms me not, 104 and I

	pro munere poscis. 100 Quid mea colla tenes blandis, ignare, lacertis? 101 ne dubita, dabitur (Stygias iuravimus undas) 102 quodcumque optaris: sed tu sapientius opta.” 103 Finierat monitus: dictis tamen ille repugnat 104 propositumque premit flagratque cupidine currus. 105 Ergo qua licuit genitor cunctatus ad altos 106 deducit iuvenem, Vulcania munera, currus. 107 Aureus axis erat, temo aureus, aurea summae 108 curvatura rotae, radiorum argenteus ordo; 109 per iuga chrysolithi positaeque ex ordine gemmae 110 clara repercusso reddebant lumina Phoebo. 111 Dumque ea magnanimus Phaethon miratur opusque 112 perspicit, ecce vigil nitido patefecit ab ortu 113 purpureas Aurora fores et plena rosarum 114 atria. Diffugiunt stellae, quarum agmina cogit 115 Lucifer et caeli statione novissimus exit. 116 Quem petere ut terras mundumque rubescere vidit 117 cornuaque extremae velut evanescere lunae, 118 iungere equos Titan velocibus imperat Horis. 119 Iussa deae celeres peragunt, ignemque vomentes, 120 ambrosiae suco saturos, praesepibus altis	am borne against that rapid globe. 105 Suppose the chariot thine: what canst thou do? 106 Canst thou drive straight against the twisted pole 107 and not be carried from the lofty path 108 by the swift car? Art thou deceived to think 109 there may be groves and cities of the Gods, 110 and costly temples wondrously endowed? 111 “The journey is beset with dreadful snares 112 and shapes of savage animals. If thou 113 shouldst hold upon thy way without mistake 114 yet must thy journey be through Taurus' horns, 115 and through the Bow Haemonian, and the jaws 116 of the fierce Lion, and the cruel arms 117 of Scorpion, bent throughout a vast expanse,— 118 and Cancer's curving arms reversely bent. 119 “It is no easy task for thee to rule 120 the mettled four-foot steeds, enflamed in fires
2.121	121 quadrupedes ducunt adduntque sonantia frena. 122 Tum pater ora sui sacro medicamine nati 123 contigit et rapidae fecit patientia flammae 124 imposuitque comae radios, praesagaque luctus 125 pectore sollicito repetens suspiria dixit: 126 “Si potes his saltem monitis parere parentis, 127 parce, puer, stimulis et fortius utere loris: 128 sponte sua properant; labor est	121 that kindle in their breasts, forth issuing 122 in breathings from their mouths and nostrils hot;— 123 I scarce restrain them, as their struggling necks 124 pull on the harness, when their heated fires 125 are thus aroused. 126 “And, O my son, lest I 127 may be the author of a baneful gift, 128 beware, and as the time permits recall 129 thy rash request. Forsooth thou hast besought 130 undoubted signs of thy descent from me? 131 My fears for thee are certain signs that thou 132 art of my race—by my paternal fears 133 'Tis manifest I am thy father. Lo! 134

	inhibere volentes. 129 Nec tibi directos placeat via quinque per arcus: 130 sectus in obliquum est lato curvamine limes, 131 zonarumque trium contentus fine polumque 132 effugit australem iunctamque aquilonibus arcton. 133 Hac sit iter: manifesta rotae vestigia cernes. 134 Utque ferant aequos et caelum et terra calores, 135 nec preme nec summum molire per aethera currum. 136 Altius egressus caelestia tecta cremabis, 137 inferius terras: medio tutissimus ibis. 138 Neu te dexterior tortum declinet ad anguem, 139 neve sinisterior pressam rota ducat ad aram: 140 inter utrumque tene. Fortunae cetera mando, 141 quae iuvet et melius quam tu tibi, consulat opto. 142 Dum loquor, Hesperio positas in litore metas 143 umida nox tetigit. Non est mora libera nobis: 144 poscimur: effulget tenebris aurora fugatis. 145 Corripe lora manu, vel, si mutabile pectus 146 est tibi, consiliis, non curribus utere nostris, 147 dum potes et solidis etiamnunc sedibus adstas 148 dumque male optatos nondum premis inscius axes. 149 Quae tutus spectes, sine me dare lumina terris!” 150 Occupat ille levem iuvenali corpore currum,	Behold my countenance! and oh, that thou 135 couldst even pierce my bosom with thine eyes, 136 and so discover my paternal cares! 137 “Look round thee on the treasured world's delights 138 and ask the greatest blessing of the sky, 139 or sea or land, and thou shalt suffer no 140 repulse: but only this I must deplore, 141 which rightly named would be a penalty 142 and not an honour.—Thou hast made request 143 of punishment and not a gift indeed. 144 O witless boy! why dost thou hold my neck 145 with thy caressing arms? For, doubt it not, 146 as I have sworn it by the Stygian Waves, 147 whatever thou shalt wish, it shall be given— 148 but thou shouldst wish more wisely.” 149 So were all 150 his admonitions said, availing naught; 151 for Phaethon resisted his advice, 152 and urged again his claim, and eagerly burned 153 to use the chariot. Wherefore, Phoebus long 154 delaying and reluctant, took the youth 155 to view the spacious chariot, gift of Vulcan.— 156 gold was the axle and the beam was gold, 157 the great Wheel had a golden tire and spokes 158 of silver; chrysolites and diamonds 159 reflected from the spangled yoke the light 160 of Phoebus. 161 While aspiring Phaethon admired 162 the glittering chariot and its workmanship, 163 the vigilant Aurora opened forth 164 her purple portals from the ruddy east, 165 disclosing halls replete with roses. All 166 the stars took flight, while Lucifer, the last 167 to quit his vigil, gathered that great host 168 and disappeared from his celestial watch. 169 And when his father, Phoebus, saw the earth 170 and the wide universe in glowing tints 171 arrayed, as waned the Moon's diminished horns, 172 far-distant, then he bade the nimble Hours 173 to yoke the steeds.—At once the Deities 174 accomplished his commands, and led the steeds, 175 ambrosia-fed and snorting flames, from out 176 their spacious stalls; and fixed their sounding bits. 177 Then with a hallowed drug the father touched 178 the stripling's face, to make him proof against
2.151	151 statque super manibusque datas contingere habenas 152 gaudet et invito grates agit inde parenti.	179 the rapid flame, and wrought around his hair 180 the sun-rays. But, foreboding grief, he said, 181 while many a sigh heaved from his anxious

	153 Interea volucres Pyrois et Eous et Aethon, 154 Solis equi, quartusque Phlegon, hinnitibus auras 155 flammiferis implent pedibusque repagula pulsant. 156 Quae postquam Tethys, fatorum ignara nepotis 157 reppulit, et facta est inmensi copia caeli, 158 corripuere viam pedibusque per aera motis 159 obstantes scindunt nebulas pennisque levati 160 praetereunt ortos isdem de partibus Euros. 161 Sed leve pondus erat, nec quod cognoscere possent 162 Solis equi, solitaque iugum gravitate carebat; 163 utque labant curvae iusto sine pondere naves 164 perque mare instabiles nimia levitate feruntur, 165 sic onere adsueto vacuus dat in aera saltus 166 succutiturque alte similisque est currus inani. 167 Quod simulac sensere, ruunt tritumque relinquunt 168 quadriiugi spatium, nec quo prius ordine currunt. 169 Ipse pavet nec qua commissas flectat habenas, 170 nec scit, qua sit iter; nec, si sciat, imperet illis. 171 Tum primum radiis gelidi caluere triones 172 et vetito frustra temptarunt aequore tingi, 173 quaeque polo posita est glaciali proxima serpens, 174 frigore pigra prius nec formidabilis ulli, 175 incaluit sumpsitque novas fervoribus iras. 176 Te quoque turbatum memorant fugisse, Boote, 177 quamvis tardus eras et te tua plaustra tenebant. 178 Ut vero summo despexit ab aethere terras 179 infelix Phaethon penitus penitusque iacentes, 180 palluit et subito genua intremuere timore,	breast; 182 “If thou canst only heed thy father's voice— 183 be sparing of the whip and use with nerve 184 the reins; for of their own accord the steeds 185 will hasten. Difficult are they to check 186 in full career. Thou must not drive the car 187 directly through five circles, for the track 188 takes a wide curve, obliquely, and is bound 189 by the extreme edge of three zones.—It avoids 190 the Southern Pole, and it avoids the Bear 191 that roams around the north. The way is plain; 192 the traces of the Wheel are manifest. 193 “Observe with care that both the earth and sky 194 have their appropriate heat —Drive not too low, 195 nor urge the chariot through the highest plane; 196 for if thy course attain too great a height 197 thou wilt consume the mansions of the sky, 198 and if too low the land will scorch with heat. 199 “Take thou the middle plane, where all is safe; 200 nor let the Wheel turn over to the right 201 and bear thee to the twisted Snake! nor let 202 it take thee to the Altar on the left— 203 so close to earth—but steer the middle course.— 204 to Fortune I commit thy fate, whose care 205 for thee so reckless of thyself I pray. 206 “While I am speaking humid night has touched 207 the margin of Hesperian shores. 'Tis not 208 for us to idle; we are called away;—
2.181	181 suntque oculis tenebrae per tantum lumen obortae.	209 when bright Aurora shines the darkness flies. 210 Take up the reins!

	182 Et iam mallet equos numquam tetigisse paternos, 183 iam cognosse genus piget et valuisse rogando, 184 iam Meropis dici cupiens ita fertur, ut acta 185 praecipiti pinus borea, cui victa remisit 186 frena suus rector, quam dis votisque reliquit. 187 Quid faciat? multum caeli post terga relictum, 188 ante oculos plus est! animo metitur utrumque, 189 et modo quos illi fatum contingere non est, 190 prospicit occasus, interdum respicit ortus: 191 quidque agat ignarus stupet et nec frena remittit 192 nec retinere valet nec nomina novit equorum. 193 Sparsa quoque in vario passim miracula caelo 194 vastarumque videt trepidus simulacra ferarum. 195 Est locus, in geminos ubi bracchia concavat arcus 196 scorpius et cauda flexisque utrimque lacertis 197 porrigit in spatium signorum membra duorum. 198 Hunc puer ut nigri madidum sudore veneni 199 vulnera curvata minitantem cuspide vidit, 200 mentis inops gelida formidine lora remisit. 201 Quae postquam summum tetigere iacentia tergum, 202 exspatiantur equi, nulloque inhibente per auras 203 ignotae regionis eunt, quaque impetus egit, 204 hac sine lege ruunt altoque sub aethere fixis 205 incursant stellis rapiuntque per avia currum. 206 Et modo summa petunt, modo per declive viasque 207 praecipites spatio terrae propiore feruntur. 208 Inferiusque suis fraternos currere Luna 209 admiratur equos, ambustaque nubila fumant; 210 corripitur flammis ut quaeque altissima, tellus	But if thy stubborn breast 211 be capable of change use not our car, 212 but heed my counsel while the time permits, 213 and while thy feet are on a solid base, 214 but not, according to thy foolish wish, 215 pressing the axle. Rather let me light 216 the world beneath thy safe and wondering gaze.” 217 But Phaethon with youthful vigor leaped, 218 and in the light-made chariot lightly stood: 219 and he rejoiced, and with the reins in hand 220 thanked his reluctant parent. 221 Instantly 222 Eous, Aethon, Pyrois and Phlegon, 223 the winged horses of the Sun, gave vent 224 to flame-like neighs that filled the shaking air; 225 they pawed the barriers with their shining hoofs. 226 Then Tethys, witless of her grandson's fate 227 let back the barriers,—and the universe 228 was theirs to traverse. Taking the well-known road, 229 and moving through the air with winged feet, 230 they pierced resisting clouds, and spreading wide 231 their pinions soared upon the eastern wind, 232 far-wafted from that realm. But Phaethon, 233 so easy of their yoke, lost all control, 234 and the great car was tossed,—as tapered ships 235 when lightened of their ballast toss and heave 236 unsteady in the surging seas: the car 237 leaped lightly in the air, and in the heights 238 was tossed unsteady as an empty shell.

2.211	211 fissaque agit rimas et sucis aret ademptis. 212 Pabula canescunt, cum frondibus uritur arbor, 213 materiamque suo praebet seges arida damno. 214 Parva queror: magnae pereunt cum moenibus urbes, 215 cumque suis totas populis incendia gentes 216 in cinerem vertunt. Silvae cum montibus ardent, 217 ardet Athos Taurusque Cilix et Tmolus et Oete 218 et tum sicca, prius creberrima fontibus, Ide, 219 virgineusque Helicon et nondum Oeagrius Haemus; 220 ardet in inmensum geminatis ignibus Aetna 221 Parnasusque biceps et Eryx et Cynthus et Othrys, 222 et tandem nivibus Rhodope caritura, Mimasque 223 Dindymaque et Mycale natusque ad sacra Cithaeron. 224 Nec prosunt Scythiae sua frigora: Caucasus ardet 225 Ossaque cum Pindo maiorque ambobus Olympus 226 aeriaeque Alpes et nubifer Appenninus. 227 Tum vero Phaethon cunctis e partibus orbem 228 adspicit accensum nec tantos sustinet aestus, 229 ferventesque auras velut e fornace profunda 230 ore trahit currusque suos candescere sentit; 231 et neque iam cineres eiectatamque favillam 232 ferre potest calidoque involvitur undique fumo, 233 quoque eat, aut ubi sit, picea caligine tectus 234 nescit et arbitrio volucrum raptatur equorum. 235 Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa vocato 236 Aethiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem. 237 Tum facta est Libye raptis umoribus aestu 238 arida, tum nymphae passis fontesque lacusque 239 deflevere comis: quaerit Boeotia Dircen,	239 Soon as the steeds perceived it, with a rush 240 impetuous, they left the beaten track; 241 regardless of all order and control; 242 and Phaethon filled with fear, knew not to guide 243 with trusted reins, nor where the way might be— 244 nor, if he knew, could he control their flight. 245 Warmed in the sunshine, never felt before, 246 the gelid Triones attempted vain 247 to bathe in seas forbid: the Serpent cold 248 and torpid by the frozen Pole, too cold 249 for contest, warmed, and rage assumed from heat 250 bootes, troubled by the heat, took flight, 251 impeded by his wain. 252 And as from skies 253 of utmost height unhappy Phaethon 254 beheld the earth receding from his view, 255 a pallor spread his cheeks with sudden fear; 256 his knees began to quake; and through the flare 257 of vast effulgence darkness closed his eyes. 258 Now vainy he regrets he ever touched 259 his father's steeds, and he is stunned with grief 260 that so entreating he prevailed to know 261 his true descent. He rather would be called 262 the son of Merops. As a ship is tossed 263 by raging Boreas, when the conquered helm 264 has been abandoned, and the pilot leaves 265 the vessel to his vows and to the Gods; 266 so, helpless, he is borne along the sky. 267 What can he? Much of heaven remains behind; 268 a longer distance is in front of him—

	240 Argos Amymonen, Ephyre Pirenidas undas.
2.241	241 Nec sortita loco distantes flumina ripas 242 tuta manent: mediis Tanais fumavit in undis 243 Peneusque senex Teuthranteusque Caicus 244 et celer Ismenos cum Phegiaco Erymantho 245 arsurusque iterum Xanthus flavusque Lycormas, 246 quique recurvatis ludit Maeandrus in undis. 247 Mygdoniusque Melas et Taenarius Eurotas. 248 Arsit et Euphrates Babylonius, arsit Orontes 249 Thermodonque citus Gangesque et Phasis et Hister. 250 Aestuat Alpheus, ripae Spercheides ardent, 251 quodque suo Tagus amne vehit, fluit ignibus aurum, 252 et quae Maeonias celebrabant carmine ripas 253 flumineae volucres, medio caluere Caystro. 254 Nilus in extremum fugit perterritus orbem 255 occuluitque caput, quod adhuc latet: ostia septem 256 pulverulenta vacant, septem sine flumine valles. 257 Fors eadem Ismarios Hebrum cum Strymone siccat 258 Hesperiosque amnes Rhenum Rhodanumque Padumque, 259 cuique fuit rerum promissa potentia, Thybrin. 260 Dissilit omne solum, penetratque in Tartara rimis 261 lumen et infernum terret cum coniuge regem. 262 Et mare contrahitur, siccaeque est campus harenae 263 quod modo pontus erat: quosque altum texerat aequor, 264 exsistunt montes et sparsas Cycladas augent. 265 Ima petunt pisces, nec se super aequora curvi 266 tollere consuetas audent delphines in auras; 267 corpora phocarum summo resupina profundo 268 exanimata natant. Ipsum quoque Nerea fama est	269 each way is measured in his anxious mind.— 270 at first his gaze is fixed upon the west, 271 which fate has destined he shall never reach, 272 and then his eyes turn backward to the east. — 273 so, stupefied and dazed he neither dares 274 to loose the bits, nor tighten on the reins, 275 and he is ignorant of the horses' names.

	269 Doridaque et natas tepidis latuisse sub antris. 270 Ter Neptunus aquis cum torvo bracchia vultu
2.271	271 exserere ausus erat, ter non tulit aeris ignes. 272 Alma tamen Tellus, ut erat circumdata ponto, 273 inter aquas pelagi contractosque undique fontes, 274 qui se condiderant in opacae viscera matris, 275 sustulit oppressos collo tenus arida vultus 276 opposuitque manum fronti magnoque tremore 277 omnia concutiens paulum subsedit et infra 278 quam solet esse fuit, siccaque ita voce locuta est: 279 “Si placet hoc, meruique, quid o tua fulmina cessant, 280 summe deum? liceat periturae viribus ignis 281 igne perire tuo clademque auctore levare. 282 Vix equidem fauces haec ipsa in verba resolvo” 283 (presserat ora vapor): “tostos en adspice crines 284 inque oculis tantum, tantum super ora favillae. 285 Hosne mihi fructus, hunc fertilitatis honorem 286 officiique refers, quod adunci vulnera aratri 287 rastrorumque fero totoque exerceor anno, 288 quod pecori frondes, alimentaque mitia, fruges, 289 humano generi, vobis quoque tura ministro? 290 Sed tamen exitium fac me meruisse: quid undae, 291 quid meruit frater? cur illi tradita sorte 292 aequora decrescunt et ab aethere longius absunt? 293 Quodsi nec fratris nec te mea gratia tangit, 294 at caeli miserere tui. Circumspice utrumque, 295 fumat uterque polus. Quos si vitiaverit ignis, 296 atria vestra ruent. Atlas en ipse laborat 297 vixque suis umeris candentem sustinet axem.	276 He sees horrific wonders scattered round, 277 and images of hideous animals.— 278 and there's a spot where Scorpion bends his claws 279 in double circles, and with tail and arms 280 on either side, stretches his limbs throughout 281 the space of two Celestial Signs; and when 282 the lad beheld him, steeped in oozing slime 283 of venom, swart, and threatening to strike 284 grim wounds with jagged spear-points, he was lost; 285 and, fixed in chills of horror, dropped the reins. 286 When these they felt upon their rising backs, 287 the startled steeds sprang forthwith; and, unchecked, 288 through atmospheres of regions unexplored, 289 thence goaded by their unchecked violence, 290 broke through the lawful bounds, and rushed upon 291 the high fixed stars. They dragged the chariot 292 through devious ways, and soared amid the heights; 293 dashed down deep pathways, far, precipitous, 294 and gained a level near the scorching earth. 295 Phoebe is wondering that her brother's steeds 296 run lower than her own, and sees the smoke 297 of scorching clouds. The highest altitudes 298 are caught in flames, and as their moistures dry 299 they crack in chasms. The grass is blighted; trees 300 are burnt up with their leaves; the ripe brown crops 301 give fuel for self destruction—Oh what small 302 complaints! Great cities perish with their walls, 303 and peopled nations are consumed to dust— 304 the forests and the mountains are destroyed. 305 Cilician Taurus, Athos and Tmolus, 298 Si freta, si terrae pereunt, si regia caeli, 299 in chaos antiquum confundimur. Eripe flammis, 300 siquid adhuc superest, et rerum consule summae.”

2.301	301 Dixerat haec Tellus: neque enim tolerare vaporem 302 ulterius potuit nec dicere plura: suumque 303 rettulit os in se propioraque manibus antra. 304 At pater omnipotens, superos testatus et ipsum, 305 qui dederat currus, nisi opem ferat, omnia fato 306 interitura gravi, summam petit arduus arcem, 307 unde solet nubes latis inducere terris, 308 unde movet tonitrus vibrataque fulmina iactat. 309 Sed neque quas posset terris inducere nubes 310 tunc habuit, nec quos caelo demitteret imbres. 311 Intonat et dextra libratum fulmen ab aure 312 misit in aurigam pariterque animaque rotisque 313 expulit et saevis compescuit ignibus ignes. 314 Consternantur equi et saltu in contraria facto 315 colla iugo eripiunt abruptaque lora relinquunt. 316 Illic frena iacent, illic temone revulsus 317 axis, in hac radii fractarum parte rotarum, 318 sparsaque sunt late laceri vestigia currus. 319 At Phaethon rutilos flamma populante capillos, 320 volvitur in praeceps longoque per aera tractu 321 fertur, ut interdum de caelo stella sereno 322 etsi non cecidit, potuit cecidisse videri. 323 Quem procul a patria diverso maximus orbe 324 excipit Eridanus fumantiaque abluit ora. 325 Naïdes Hesperiae trifida fumantia flamma 326 corpora dant tumulo, signant quoque carmine saxum:	306 and Oeta are burning; and the far-famed Ida 307 and all her cooling rills are dry and burning, 308 and virgin Helicon, and Hoemos—later 309 Oeagrius called—and Aetna with tremendous, 310 redoubled flames, and double-peaked Parnassus, 311 Sicilian Eryx, Cynthus—Othrys, pine-clad, 312 and Rhodope, deprived his snowy mantle, 313 and Dindyma and Mycale and Mimas, 314 and Mount Cithaeron, famed for sacred rites: 315 and Scythia, though a land of frost, is burning, 316 and Caucasus,—and Ossa burns with Pindus,— 317 and greater than those two Olympus burns— 318 the lofty Alps, the cloud-topped Apennines. 319 And Phaethon, as he inhaled the air, 320 burning and scorching as a furnace blast, 321 and saw destruction on the flaming world, 322 and his great chariot wreathed in quenchless fires, 323 was suddenly unable to endure the heat, 324 the smoke and cinders, and he swooned away.— 325 if he had known the way, those winged steeds 326 would rush as wild unguided.— 327 then the skin 328 of Ethiopians took a swarthy hue, 329 the hot blood tingling to the surface: then 330 the heat dried up the land of Libya; 331 dishevelled, the lorn Nymphs, lamenting, sought 332 for all their emptied springs and lakes in vain; 333 Boeotia wailed for Dirce's cooling wave, 334 and Argos wailed for Amymone's stream— 335 and even Corinth for the clear Pyrene.

	327 HIC SITUS EST PHAETHON, CURRUS AURIGA PATERNI: 328 QUEM SI NON TENUIT, MAGNIS TAMEN EXCIDIT AUSIS. 329 Nam pater obductos, luctu miserabilis aegro 330 condiderat vultus: et, si modo credimus, unum
2.331	331 isse diem sine sole ferunt: incendia lumen 332 praebebant aliquisque malo fuit usus in illo. 333 At Clymene postquam dixit quaecumque fuerunt 334 in tantis dicenda malis, lugubris et amens 335 et laniata sinus totum percensuit orbem, 336 exanimesque artus primo, mox ossa requirens 337 repperit (ossa tamen peregrina condita ripa!), 338 incubuitque loco nomenque in marmore lectum 339 perfudit lacrimis et aperto pectore fovit. 340 Nec minus Heliades lugent et inania morti 341 munera dant lacrimas, et caesae pectora palmis 342 non auditurum miseras Phaethonta querellas 343 nocte dieque vocant adsternunturque sepulcro. 344 Luna quater iunctis implerat cornibus orbem: 345 illae more suo (nam morem fecerat usus) 346 plangorem dederant. E quis Phaethusa, sororum 347 maxima, cum vellet terra procumbere, questa est 348 deriguisse pedes. Ad quam conata venire 349 candida Lampetie subita radice retenta est. 350 Tertia cum crinem manibus laniare pararet, 351 avellit frondes; haec stipite crura teneri, 352 illa dolet fieri longos sua bracchia ramos. 353 Dumque ea mirantur, complectitur inguina cortex, 354 perque gradus uterum pectusque umerosque manusque 355 ambit et exstabant tantum ora vocantia matrem.	336 Not safer from the flames were distant streams;— 337 the Tanais in middle stream was steaming 338 and old Peneus and Teuthrantian Caicus, 339 Ismenus, rapid and Arcadian Erymanthus; 340 and even Xanthus destined for a second burning, 341 and tawny-waved Lycormas, and Meander, 342 turning and twisting, and Thracian Melas burns, 343 and the Laconian Eurotas burns, 344 the mighty Babylonian Euphrates, 345 Orontes and the Ganges, swift Thermodon, 346 Ister and Phasis and Alpheus boil. 347 The banks of Spercheus burn, the gold of Tagus 348 is melting in the flames. The swans whose songs 349 enhanced the beauties of Maeonian banks 350 are scalded in the Cayster's middle wave. 351 The Nile affrighted fled to parts remote, 352 and hid his head forever from the world: 353 now empty are his seven mouths, and dry 354 without or wave or stream; and also dry 355 Ismenian Hebrus, Strymon and the streams 356 of Hesper-Land, the rivers Rhine and Rhone, 357 and Po, and Tiber, ruler of the world. 358 And even as the ground asunder burst, 359 the light amazed in gloomy Tartarus 360 the King Infernal and his Spouse. The sea 361 contracted and his level waste became 362 a sandy desert. The huge mountain tops, 363 once covered by the ocean's waves, reared up, 364 by which the scattered Cyclades increased. 365 Even the fishes sought for deeper pools; —

	356 Quid faciat mater, nisi, quo trahat impetus illam, 357 huc eat atque illuc, et, dum licet, oscula iungat? 358 Non satis est; truncis avellere corpora temptat, 359 et teneros manibus ramos abrumpit; at inde 360 sanguineae manant, tamquam de vulnere, guttae.
2.361	361 “Parce, precor, mater”, quaecumque est saucia, clamat, 362 “parce, precor: nostrum laceratur in arbore corpus. 363 iamque vale” —cortex in verba novissima venit. 364 Inde fluunt lacrimae, stillataque sole rigescunt 365 de ramis electra novis, quae lucidus amnis 366 excipit et nuribus mittit gestanda Latinis. 367 Adfuit huic monstro proles Stheneleia Cycnus, 368 qui tibi materno quamvis a sanguine iunctus, 369 mente tamen, Phaethon, propior fuit. Ille relicto 370 (nam Ligurum populos et magnas rexerat urbes) 371 imperio ripas virides amnemque querellis 372 Eridanum implerat silvamque sororibus auctam, 373 cum vox est tenuata viro, canaeque capillos 374 dissimulant plumae, collumque a pectore longe 375 porrigitur, digitosque ligat iunctura rubentes, 376 penna latus velat, tenet os sine acumine rostrum. 377 Fit nova Cycnus avis, nec se caeloque Iovique 378 credit, ut iniuste missi memor ignis ab illo: 379 stagna petit patulosque lacus, ignemque perosus 380 quae colat elegit contraria flumina flammis. 381 Squalidus interea genitor Phaethontis et expers 382 ipse sui decoris, qualis, cum deficit orbem, 383 esse solet, lucemque odit seque ipse diemque, 384 datque animum in luctus; et luctibus adicit iram	366 the crooked dolphins dared not skip the waves; 367 the lifeless sea-calves floated on the top; 368 and it is even famed that Nereus hid 369 with Doris and her daughters, deep below 370 in seething caverns. With a dauntless mien 371 thrice Neptune tried to thrust his arms above 372 the waters;—thrice the heated air overcame 373 his courage. 374 Then the genial Earth, although 375 surrounded by the waters of the sea, 376 was parched and dry; for all her streams had hid 377 deep in the darkness of her winding caves.— 378 she lifted her productive countenance, 379 up to her rounded neck, and held her palms 380 on her sad brows; and as the mountains huge 381 trembled and tottered, beneath her wonted plane 382 declined she for a space—and thus began, 383 with parched voice; 384 “If this is thy decree, 385 O, Highest of the Gods,—if I have sinned 386 why do thy lightnings linger? For if doomed 387 by fires consuming I to perish must, 388 let me now die in thy celestial flames— 389 hurled by thine arm—and thus alleviate, 390 by thine omnipotence, this agony. 391 “How difficult to open my parched mouth, 392 and speak these words! (the vapours choking her), 393 behold my scorching hair, and see the clouds 394 of ashes falling on my blinded eyes, 395 and on my features! What a recompense

	385 officiumque negat mundo. “Satis” inquit “ab aevi 386 sors mea principiis fuit inrequieta, pigetque 387 actorum sine fine mihi, sine honore, laborum. 388 Quilibet alter agat portantes lumina currus! 389 Si nemo est omnesque dei non posse fatentur, 390 ipse agat ut saltem, dum nostras temptat habenas, 2.391	391 orbatura patres aliquando fulmina ponat. 392 Tum sciet, ignipedum vires expertus equorum, 393 non meruisse necem, qui non bene rexerit illos.” 394 Talia dicentem circumstant omnia Solem 395 numina, neve velit tenebras inducere rebus, 396 supplice voce rogant: missos quoque Iuppiter ignes 397 excusat precibusque minas regaliter addit. 398 Conligit amentes et adhuc terrore paventes 399 Phoebus equos stimuloque dolens et verbere saevit: 400 saevit enim, natumque obiectat et imputat illis. 401 At pater omnipotens ingentia moenia caeli 402 circuit et ne quid labefactum viribus ignis 403 corruat explorat. Quae postquam firma suique 404 roboris esse videt terras hominumque labores 405 perspicit. Arcadiae tamen est impensior illi 406 cura suae: fontes et nondum audentia labi 407 flumina restituit dat terrae gramina, frondes 408 arboribus, laesasque iubet revirescere silvas. 409 Dum redit itque frequens, In virgine Nonacrina 410 haesit et accepti caluere sub ossibus ignes. 411 Non erat huius opus lanam mollire trahendo 412 nec positu variare comas; ubi fibula vestem, 413 vitta coercuerat neglectos alba capillos,	396 for my fertility! How often I 397 have suffered from the wounds of crooked plows 398 and rending harrows—tortured year by year! 399 For this I give to cattle juicy leaves 400 and fruits to man and frankincense to thee! 401 “Suppose destruction is my just award 402 what have the waters and thy brother done? 403 Why should thy brother's cooling waves decrease 404 and thus recede so distant from the skies? 405 If not thy brother's good nor mine may touch 406 thy mercy, let the pity of thy Heaven, 407 for lo, the smoking poles on either side 408 attest, if flames consume them or destroy, 409 the ruin of thy palace. Atlas, huge, 410 with restive shoulders hardly can support 411 the burning heavens. If the seas and lands 412 together perish and thy palace fall, 413 the universe confused will plunge once more 414 to ancient Chaos. Save it from this wreck — 415 if anything survive the fury of the flames.” 416 So made the tortured Earth an end of speech; 417 and she was fain to hide her countenance 418 in caves that border on the nether night. 419 But now the Almighty Father, having called 420 to witness all the Gods of Heaven, and him 421 who gave the car, that, else his power be shown, 422 must perish all in dire confusion, high 423 he mounted to the altitude from which 424 he spreads the mantling clouds, and fulminates 425 his dreadful thunders and swift lightning-bolts 426 terrific.—Clouds were none to find on the earth, 427 and the surrounding skies were void of rain.— 428 Jove, having reached that summit, stood and poised 429 in his almighty hand a flashing dart, 430 and, hurling it, deprived of life and seat 431 the youthful charioteer, and struck with fire 432 the raging flames— and by the

	414 et modo leve manu iaculum, modo sumpserat arcum, 415 miles erat Phoebes: nec Maenalon attigit ulla 416 gratior hac Triviae. Sed nulla potentia longa est. 417 Ulterius medio spatium sol altus habebat, 418 cum subit illa nemus, quod nulla ceciderat aetas. 419 Exuit hic umero pharetram lentosque retendit 420 arcus, inque solo, quod texerat herba, iacebat	same great force 433 those flames enveloping the earth were quenched, 434 and he who caused their fury lost his life. 435 Frantic in their affright the horses sprang 436 across the bounded way and cast their yokes, 437 and through the tangled harness lightly leaped. 438 And here the scattered harness lay, and there 439 the shattered axle, wrenched from off the pole, 440 and various portions of the broken car; 441 spokes of the broken Wheel were scattered round. 442 And far fell Phaethon with flaming hair; 443 as haply from the summer sky appears 444 a falling star, although it never drops 445 to startled earth.—Far distant from his home
2.421	421 et pictam posita pharetram cervice premebat. 422 Iuppiter ut vidit fessam et custode vacantem, 423 “hoc certe furtum coniunx mea nesciet” inquit, 424 “aut si rescierit sunt o sunt iurgia tanti.” 425 Protinus induitur faciem cultumque Dianae 426 atque ait: “O comitum, virgo, pars una mearum, 427 in quibus es venata iugis?” De caespite virgo 428 se levat et “salve numen, me indice”, dixit 429 “audiat ipse licet maius Iove.” Ridet et audit, 430 et sibi praeferri se gaudet et oscula iungit 431 nec moderata satis nec sic a virgine danda. 432 Qua venata foret silva, narrare parantem 433 impedit amplexu, nec se sine crimine prodit. 434 Illa quidem contra, quantum modo femina possit 435 (adspiceres utinam, Saturnia: mitior esses !), 436 illa quidem pugnat: sed quem superare puella, 437 quisve Iovem poterat? — Superum petit aethera victor 438 Iuppiter: huic odio nemus est et conscia silva. 439 Unde pedem referens paene est oblita pharetram 440 tollere cum telis et quem suspenderat arcum.	446 the deep Eridanus received the lad 447 and bathed his foaming face. His body charred 448 by triple flames Hesperian Naiads bore, 449 still smoking, to a tomb, and this engraved 450 upon the stone; “Here Phaethon's remains 451 lie buried. He who drove his father's car 452 and fell, although he made a great attempt.” 453 Filled with consuming woe, his father hid 454 his countenance which grief had overcast. 455 And now, surpassing our belief, they say 456 a day passed over with no glowing sun;— 457 but light-affording flames appeared to change 458 disaster to the cause of good. 459 Amazed, 460 the woeful Clymene, when she had moaned 461 in grief, amid her lamentations tore 462 her bosom, as across the world she roamed, 463 at first to seek his lifeless corpse, and then 464 his bones. She wandered to that distant land 465 and found at last his bones ensepulchred. 466 There, clinging to the grave she fell and bathed 467 with many tears his name on marble carved, 468 and with her bosom warmed the freezing 469 stone. 470 And all the daughters of the Sun went there 471 giving their tears, alas a useless gift;— 472 they wept and beat their breasts, and day and night 473 called, “Phaethon,” who heard not any sound 474 of their complaint:—and there they lay foredone, 475 all scattered round the tomb.

	441 Ecce, suo comitata choro Dictynna per altum 442 Maenalon ingrediens et caede superba ferarum 443 adspicit hanc visamque vocat: clamata refugit, 444 et timuit primo, ne Iuppiter esset in illa. 445 Sed postquam pariter nymphas incedere vidit, 446 sensit abesse dolos numerumque accessit ad harum. 447 Heu quam difficile est crimen non prodere vultu! 448 Vix oculos attollit humo, nec, ut ante solebat, 449 iuncta deae lateri, nec toto est agmine prima, 450 sed silet et laesi dat signa rubore pudoris;
2.451	451 et nisi quod virgo est poterat sentire Diana 452 mille notis culpam; nymphae sensisse feruntur. 453 Orbe resurgebant lunaria cornua nono, 454 cum dea venatu, fraternis languida flammis, 455 nacta nemus gelidum, de quo cum murmure labens 456 ibat et attritas versabat rivus harenas. 457 Ut loca laudavit, summas pede contigit undas: 458 his quoque laudatis “procul est” ait “arbiter omnis; 459 nuda superfusis tingamus corpora lymphis.” 460 Parrhasis erubuit. Cunctae velamina ponunt: 461 una moras quaerit. Dubitanti vestis adempta est; 462 qua posita nudo patuit cum corpore crimen. 463 Attonitae manibusque uterum celare volenti 464 “i procul hinc” dixit “nec sacros pollue fontes” 465 Cynthia; deque suo iussit secedere coetu. 466 Senserat hoc olim magni matrona Tonantis 467 distuleratque graves in idonea tempora poenas. 468 Causa morae nulla est, et iam puer Arcas (id ipsum 469 indoluit Iuno) fuerat de paelice natus.	476 The silent moon 477 had four times joined her horns and filled her disk, 478 while they, according to an ancient rite, 479 made lamentation. Prone upon the ground, 480 the eldest, Phaethusa, would arise 481 from there, but found her feet were growing stiff; 482 and uttered moan. Lampetia wished to aid 483 her sister but was hindered by new roots; 484 a third when she would tear her hair, plucked forth 485 but leaves: another wailed to find her legs 486 were fastened in a tree; another moaned 487 to find her arms to branches had been changed. 488 And while they wondered, bark enclosed their thighs, 489 and covered their smooth bellies, and their breasts, 490 and shoulders and their hands, but left untouched 491 their lips that called upon their mother's name. 492 What can she do for them? Hither she runs 493 and thither runs, wherever frenzy leads. 494 She kisses them, alas, while yet she may! 495 But not content with this, she tried to hale 496 their bodies from the trees; and she would tear 497 the tender branches with her hands, but lo! 498 The blood oozed out as from a bleeding wound; 499 and as she wounded them they shrieked aloud, 500 “Spare me! O mother spare me; in the tree 501 my flesh is torn! farewell! farewell! farewell!” 502 And as they spoke the bark enclosed their lips. 503 Their tears flow forth, and from the new-formed 504 boughs 505 amber distils and slowly hardens in the sun;

	470 Quo simul obvertit saevam cum lumine mentem, 471 “scilicet hoc etiam restabat, adultera” dixit, 472 “ut fecunda fores, fieretque iniuria partu 473 nota, Iovisque mei testatum dedecus esset. 474 Haud impune feres: adimam tibi nempe figuram, 475 qua tibi, quaque places nostro, importuna, marito.” 476 Dixit et adversa prensis a fronte capillis 477 stravit humi pronam. Tendebat bracchia supplex: 478 bracchia coeperunt nigris horrescere villis 479 curvarique manus et aduncos crescere in ungues 480 officioque pedum fungi, laudataque quondam
2.481	481 ora Iovi lato fieri deformia rictu. 482 Neve preces animos et verba precantia flectant 483 posse loqui eripitur; vox iracunda minaxque 484 plenaque terroris rauco de gutture fertur. 485 Mens antiqua tamen facta quoque mansit in ursa, 486 adsiduoque suos gemitu testata dolores 487 qualescumque manus ad caelum et sidera tollit 488 ingratumque Iovem, nequeat cum dicere, sentit. 489 A quotiens, sola non ausa quiescere silva, 490 ante domum quondamque suis erravit in agris! 491 A quotiens per saxa canum latratibus acta est 492 venatrixque metu venantum territa fugit! 493 Saepe feris latuit visis, oblita quid esset, 494 ursaque conspectos in montibus horruit ursos 495 pertimuitque lupos, quamvis pater esset in illis. 496 Ecce, Lycaoniae proles, ignara parentis, 497 Arcas adest, ter quinque fere natalibus actis: 498 dumque feras sequitur, dum saltus eligit aptos 499 nexilibusque plagis silvas	506 and far from there upon the waves is borne 507 to deck the Latin women. 508 Cycnus, son 509 of Sthenelus, by his maternal house 510 akin to Phaethon, and thrice by love 511 allied, beheld this wonderful event.— 512 he left his kingdom of Liguria, 513 and all its peopled cities, to lament 514 where the sad sisters had increased the woods, 515 beside the green banks of Eridanus. 516 There, as he made complaint, his manly voice 517 began to pipe a treble, shrill; and long 518 gray plumes concealed his hair. A slender neck 519 extended from his breast, and reddening toes 520 were joined together by a membrane. Wings 521 grew from his sides, and from his mouth was made 522 a blunted beak. Now Cycnus is a swan, 523 and yet he fears to trust the skies and Jove, 524 for he remembers fires, unjustly sent, 525 and therefore shuns the heat that he abhors, 526 and haunts the spacious lakes and pools and streams 527 that quench the fires. 528 In squalid garb, meanwhile, 529 and destitute of all his rays, the sire 530 of Phaethon, as dark as when eclipse bedims 531 his Wheel, abhors himself and hates the light, 532 shuns the bright day, gives up his mind to grief, 533 adds passion to his woe, denies the earth 534 his countenance, and thus laments; “My lot 535 was ever restless from the dawn of time,

	Erymanthidas ambit, 500 incidit in matrem; quae restitit Arcade viso 501 et cognoscenti similis fuit. Ille refugit 502 inmotosque oculos in se sine fine tenentem 503 nescius extimuit propiusque accedere aventi 504 vulnifico fuerat fixurus pectora telo. 505 Arcuit omnipotens pariterque ipsosque nefasque 506 sustulit, et celeri raptos per inania vento 507 imposuit caelo vicinaque sidera fecit. 508 Intumuit Iuno, postquam inter sidera paelex 509 fulsit et ad canam descendit in aequora Tethyn 510 Oceanumque senem, quorum reverentia movit
2.511	511 saepe deos, causamque viae scitantibus infit: 512 “Quaeritis, aetheriis quare regina deorum 513 sedibus huc adsim? pro me tenet altera caelum. 514 Mentiar, obscurum nisi nox cum fecerit orbem, 515 nuper honoratas summo, mea vulnera, caelo 516 videritis stellas illic, ubi circulus axem 517 ultimus extremum spatioque brevissimus ambit. 518 Est vero, cur quis Iunonem laedere nolit 519 offensamque tremat, quae prosum sola nocendo? 520 O ego quantum egi! quam vasta potentia nostra est! 521 Esse hominem vetui: facta est dea. Sic ego poenas 522 sontibus impono, sic est mea magna potestas. 523 Vindicet antiquam faciem vultusque ferinos 524 detrahat, Argolica quod in ante Phoronide fecit. 525 Cur non et pulsa ducit Iunone meoque 526 collocat in thalamo socerumque Lycaona sumit? 527 At vos si laesae tangit contemptus alumnae, 528 gurgite caeruleo septem prohibete	536 and I am weary of this labour, void 537 and endless. Therefore, let who will urge forth 538 my car, light-bearing, and if none may dare, 539 when all the Gods of Heaven acknowledge it, 540 let Jove himself essay the task. Perchance, 541 when he takes up the reins, he may forget 542 his dreadful lightning that bereaves of child 543 a father's love; and as he tries the strength 544 of those flame-footed steeds will know, in truth, 545 the lad who failed to guide my chariot 546 deserved not death.” 547 But all the Deities 548 encircle Phoebus as he makes complaint, 549 and with their supplications they entreat 550 him not to plunge the world in darkness. Jove 551 would find excuses for the lightning-bolt, 552 hurled from his hand, and adds imperious threats 553 to his entreaties. Phoebus calls his steeds, 554 frenzied with their maddening fires, and 555 breaks 556 their fury, as he vents with stinging lash 557 his rage upon them, and in passion lays 558 on them the death of Phaethon his son.

	triones 529 sideraque in caelo, stupri mercede, recepta 530 pellite, ne puro tingatur in aequore paelex.” 531 Di maris adnuerant: habili Saturnia curru 532 ingreditur liquidum pavonibus aethera pictis, 533 tam nuper pictis caeso pavonibus Argo, 534 quam tu nuper eras, cum candidus ante fuisses, 535 corve loquax, subito nigrantes versus in alas. 536 Nam fuit haec quondam niveis argentea pennis 537 ales ut aequaret totas sine labe columbas 538 nec servaturis vigili Capitolia voce 539 cederet anseribus nec amanti flumina cycno. 540 Lingua fuit damno; lingua faciente loquaci
2.541	541 qui color albus erat, nunc est contrarius albo. 542 Pulchrior in tota, quam Larisaea Coronis, 543 non fuit Haemonia: placuit tibi, Delphice, certe, 544 dum vel casta fuit vel inobservata. Sed ales 545 sensit adulterium Phoebeius, utque latentem 546 detegeret culpam, non exorabilis index, 547 ad dominum tendebat iter. Quem garrula motis 548 consequitur pennis, scitetur ut omnia, cornix, 549 auditaque viae causa “non utile carpis” 550 inquit “iter: ne sperne meae praesagia linguae. 551 Quid fuerim quid simque vide, meritumque require: 552 invenies nocuisse fidem. Nam tempore quodam 553 Pallas Erichthonium, prolem sine matre creatam, 554 clauserat Actaeo texta de vimine cista 555 virginibusque tribus gemino de Cecrope natis 556 et legem dederat, sua ne secreta viderent. 557 Abdita fronde levi densa speculabar ab ulmo,	559 Now after Phaethon had suffered death 560 for the vast ruin wrought by scorching flames, 561 all the great walls of Heaven's circumference, 562 unmeasured, views the Father of the Gods, 563 with searching care, that none impaired by heat 564 may fall in ruins. Well assured they stand 565 in self-sustaining strength, his view, at last, 566 on all the mundane works of man is turned;— 567 his loving gaze long resting on his own 568 Arcadia. And he starts the streams and springs 569 that long have feared to flow; paints the wide earth 570 with verdant fields; covers the trees with leaves, 571 and clothes the injured forests in their green. 572 While wandering in the world, he stopped amazed, 573 when he beheld the lovely Nymph, Calisto, 574 and fires of love were kindled in his breast. 575 Calisto was not clothed in sumptuous robes, 576 nor did she deck her hair in artful coils; 577 but with a buckle she would gird her robe, 578 and bind her long hair with a fillet white. 579 She bore a slender javelin in her hand, 580 or held the curving bow; and thus in arms 581 as chaste Diana, none of Maenalus 582 was loved by that fair goddess more than she. 583 But everything must change. When bright the sun 584 rolled down the sky, beyond his middle course, 585 she

	558 quid facerent. Commissa duae sine fraude tuentur, 559 Pandrosos atque Herse; timidas vocat una sorores 560 Aglauros nodosque manu diducit, et intus 561 infantemque vident adporrectumque draconem. 562 Acta deae refero. Pro quo mihi gratia talis 563 redditur, ut dicar tutela pulsa Minervae 564 et ponar post noctis avem. Mea poena volucres 565 admonuisse potest ne voce pericula quaerant. 566 At, puto, non ultro nec quicquam tale rogantem 567 me petiit? ipsa licet hoc a Pallade quaeras: 568 quamvis irata est, non hoc irata negabit. 569 Nam me Phocaica clarus tellure Coroneus 570 (nota loquor) genuit fueramque ego regia virgo	pierced a secret thicket, known to her, 586 and having slipped the quiver from her arm, 587 she loosed the bended bow, and softly down 588 upon the velvet turf reclining, pressed
2.571	571 divitibusque procis (ne me contemne) petebar. 572 Forma mihi nocuit. Nam cum per litora lentis 573 passibus, ut soleo, summa spatiarer harena, 574 vidit et incaluit pelagi deus; utque precando 575 tempora cum blandis absumpsit inania verbis, 576 vim parat et sequitur. Fugio densumque relinquo 577 litus et in molli nequiquam lassor harena. 578 Inde deos hominesque voco; nec contigit ullum 579 vox mea mortalem: mota est pro virgine virgo 580 auxiliumque tulit. Tendebam bracchia caelo: 581 bracchia coeperunt levibus nigrescere pennis. 582 Reicere ex umeris vestem molibar: at illa 583 pluma erat inque cutem radices egerat imas. 584 Plangere nuda meis conabar pectora palmis: 585 sed neque iam palmas nec pectora nuda gerebam. 586 Currebam: nec, ut ante, pedes retinebat harena,	589 her white neck on the quiver while she slept. 590 When Jupiter beheld her, negligent 591 and beautiful, he argued thus, “How can 592 my consort, Juno, learn of this? And yet, 593 if chance should give her knowledge, what care I? 594 Let gain offset the scolding of her tongue!” 595 This said, the god transformed himself and took 596 Diana's form—assumed Diana's dress 597 and imitating her awoke the maid, 598 and spoke in gentle tones, “What mountain slope, 599 O virgin of my train, hath been thy chase?” 600 Which, having heard, Calisto, rose and said, 601 “Hail, goddess! greater than celestial Jove! 602 I would declare it though he heard the words.” 603 Jove heard and smiled, well pleased to be preferred 604 above himself, and kissed her many times, 605 and strained her in his arms, while she began 606 to tell the varied fortunes of her hunt.— 607 but when his ardent love was known to her, 608 she struggled to escape from his embrace: 609 ah, how could she, a tender maid, resist 610 almighty Jove? —Be sure, Saturnia 611 if thou hadst only witnessed her thy heart 612 had shown more pity!— 613 Jupiter on wings, 614 transcendent, sought his glorious heights; 615 but she, in haste

	587 sed summa tollebar humo. Mox alta per auras 588 evehor et data sum comes inculpata Minervae. 589 Quid tamen hoc prodest, si diro facta volucris 590 crimine Nyctimene nostro successit honori? 591 An quae per totam res est notissima Lesbon, 592 non audita tibi est, patrium temerasse cubile 593 Nyctimenen? avis illa quidem, sed conscia culpae 594 conspectum lucemque fugit tenebrisque pudorem 595 celat et a cunctis expellitur aethere toto.” 596 Talia dicenti “tibi” ait “revocamina” corvus 597 “sint precor ista malo: nos vanum spernimus omen.” 598 Nec coeptum dimittit iter, dominoque iacentem 599 cum iuvene Haemonio vidisse Coronida narrat. 600 Laurea delapsa est audito crimine amanti,	departing from that grove, 616 almost forgot her quiver and her bow. 617 Behold, Diana, with her virgin train, 618 when hunting on the slopes of Maenalus,
2.601	601 et pariter vultusque deo plectrumque colorque 602 excidit. Utque animus tumida fervebat ab ira, 603 arma adsueta rapit flexumque a cornibus arcum 604 tendit et illa suo totiens cum pectore iuncta 605 indevitato traiecit pectora telo. 606 Icta dedit gemitum, tractoque a corpore ferro 607 candida puniceo perfudit membra cruore, 608 et dixit: “Potui poenas tibi, Phoebe, dedisse, 609 sed peperisse prius: duo nunc moriemur in una.” 610 Hactenus, et pariter vitam cum sanguine fudit. 611 Corpus inane animae frigus letale secutum est. 612 Paenitet heu sero poenae crudelis amantem, 613 seque, quod audierit, quod sic exarserit, odit; 614 odit avem, per quam crimen causamque dolendi 615 scire coactus erat, nec non arcumque manumque 616 odit, cumque manu temeraria tela	619 amidst the pleasures of exciting sport, 620 espied the Nymph and called her, who, afraid 621 that Jove apparelled in disguise deceived, 622 drew backward for a moment, till appeared 623 to her the lovely Nymphs that followed: thus, 624 assured deceit was none, she ventured near. 625 Alas, how difficult to hide disgrace! 626 She could not raise her vision from the ground, 627 nor as the leader of the hunting Nymphs, 628 as was her wont, walk by the goddess' side. 629 Her silence and her blushes were the signs 630 of injured honour. Ah Diana, thou, 631 if thou wert not a virgin, wouldst perceive 632 and pity her unfortunate distress. 633 The Moon's bent horns were rising from their ninth 634 sojourn, when, fainting from Apollo's flames, 635 the goddess of the Chase observed a cool 636 umbrageous grove, from which a murmuring stream 637 ran babbling gently over golden sands. 638 When she approved the spot, lightly she struck 639 her foot against the ripples of the stream, 640 and praising it began; “Far from the gaze 641 of all the curious we may bathe our limbs, 642 and sport in this clear

	sagittas 617 conlapsamque fovet seraque ope vincere fata 618 nititur et medicas exercet inaniter artes. 619 Quae postquam frustra temptata, rogumque parari 620 vidit et arsuros supremis ignibus artus, 621 tum vero gemitus (neque enim caelestia tingi 622 ora licet lacrimis) alto de corde petitos 623 edidit, haud aliter quam cum spectante iuvenca 624 lactentis vituli, dextra libratus ab aure 625 tempora discussit claro cava malleus ictu. 626 Ut tamen ingratos in pectora fudit odores 627 et dedit amplexus iniustaque iusta peregit, 628 non tulit in cineres labi sua Phoebus eosdem 629 semina, sed natum flammis uteroque parentis 630 eripuit geminique tulit Chironis in antrum;	water.” Quickly they 643 undid their garments,—but Calisto hid 644 behind the others, till they knew her state.— 645 Diana in a rage exclaimed, “Away! 646 Thou must not desecrate our sacred springs!” 647 And she was driven thence.
2.631	631 sperantemque sibi non falsae praemia linguae 632 inter aves albas vetuit consistere corvum. 633 Semifer interea divinae stirpis alumno 634 laetus erat mixtoque oneri gaudebat honore. 635 Ecce venit rutilis umeros protecta capillis 636 filia Centauri, quam quondam nympha Chariclo 637 fluminis in rapidi ripis enixa vocavit 638 Ocyroen. Non haec artes contenta paternas 639 edidicisse fuit: fatorum arcana canebat. 640 Ergo ubi vaticinos concepit mente furores 641 incaluitque deo, quem clausum pectore habebat, 642 adspicit infantem “toto” que “salutifer orbi 643 cresce puer” dixit: “tibi se mortalia saepe 644 corpora debebunt; animas tibi reddere ademptas 645 fas erit; idque semel dis	648 Ere this transpired, 649 observed the consort of the Thunder-God 650 her altered mien; but she for ripening time 651 withheld severe resentment. Now delay 652 was needless for distracted Juno heard 653 Calisto of the god of Heaven had borne 654 a boy called Arcas. Full of jealous rage, 655 her eyes and thoughts enkindled as she cried; 656 “And only this was wanting to complete 657 your wickedness, that you should bear a son 658 and flaunt abroad the infamy of Jove! 659 Unpunished you shall not escape, for I 660 will spoil the beauty that has made you proud 661 and dazzled Jupiter with wanton art.” 662 So saying, by her forehead's tresses seized 663 the goddess on her rival; and she dragged 664 her roughly to the ground. Pleading she raised 665 her suppliant arms and begged for mercy.—While 666 she pled, black hair spread over her white limbs; 667 her hands were lengthened into feet, and claws 668 long-curving tipped them; snarling jaws deformed 669 the mouth that Jove had kissed. And lest her prayers 670 and piteous words might move some listening God, 671

	indignantibus ausus 646 posse dare hoc iterum flamma prohibebere avita 647 eque deo corpus fies exsangue, deusque, 648 qui modo corpus eras, et bis tua fata novabis. 649 Tu quoque, care pater, nunc inmortalis et aevis 650 omnibus ut maneas nascendi lege creatus, 651 posse mori cupies, tum cum cruciabere dirae 652 sanguine serpentis per saucia membra recepto; 653 teque ex aeterno patientem numina mortis 654 efficient, triplicesque deae tua fila resolvent.” 655 Restabat fatis aliquid. Suspirat ab imis 656 pectoribus, lacrimaeque genis labuntur obortae, 657 atque ita “praevertunt” inquit “me fata, vetorque 658 plura loqui, vocisque meae praecluditur usus. 659 Non fuerant artes tanti, quae numinis iram 660 contraxere mihi; mallem nescisse futura.	and give remembrance, speech was so denied, 672 that only from her throat came angry growls, 673 now uttered hoarse and threatening. 674 Still remains 675 her understanding, though her body, thus 676 transformed, makes her appear a savage bear.— 677 her sorrows are expressed in many a groan,
2.661	661 Iam mihi subduci facies humana videtur, 662 iam cibus herba placet, iam latis currere campis 663 impetus est: in equam cognataque corpora vertor. 664 Tota tamen quare? pater est mihi nempe biformis.” 665 Talia dicenti pars est extrema querellae 666 intellecta parum, confusaque verba fuerunt. 667 Mox nec verba quidem nec equae sonus ille videtur, 668 sed simulantis equam, parvoque in tempore certos 669 edidit hinnitus et bracchia movit in herbas. 670 Tum digiti coeunt et quinos adligat ungues 671 perpetuo cornu levis ungula, crescit et oris 672 et colli spatium, longae pars maxima pallae 673 cauda fit, utque vagi crines per colla iacebant, 674 in dextras abiere iubas: pariterque	678 repeated as she lifts her hands—if we 679 may call them so—repeated as she lifts 680 them towards the stars and skies, ungrateful Jove 681 regarding; but her voice accuses not. 682 Afraid to rest in unfrequented woods, 683 she wandered in the fields that once were hers, 684 around her well-known dwelling. Over crags, 685 in terror, she was driven by the cries 686 of hounds; and many a time she fled in fear, 687 a huntress from the hunters, or she hid 688 from savage animals; forgetting her 689 transformed condition. Changed into a bear, 690 she fled affrighted from the bears that haunt 691 the rugged mountains; and she feared and fled 692 the wolves,—although her father was a wolf. 693 When thrice five birthdays rounded out the youth 694 of Arcas, offspring of Lycaon's child, 695 he hunted in the forest of his choice; 696 where, hanging with his platted nets the trees 697 of Erymanthian forest, he espied 698 his transformed mother,—but he knew her not; 699 no one had told him of his novata est 675 et vox et facies nomen quoque monstra dedere. 676 Flebat opemque tuam frustra Philyreius heros, 677 Delphice, poscebat. Nam nec rescindere magni 678 iussa Iovis poteras, nec, si rescindere posses, 679 tunc aderas: Elin Messeniaque arva colebas. 680 Illud erat tempus, quo te pastoria pellis 681 texit onusque fuit baculum silvestre sinistrae, 682 alterius dispar septenis fistula cannis. 683 Dumque amor est curae, dum te tua fistula mulcet, 684 incustoditae Pylios memorantur in agros 685 processisse boves. Videt has Atlantide Maia 686 natus et arte sua silvis occultat abactas. 687 Senserat hoc furtum nemo nisi notus in illo 688 rure senex; Battum vicinia tota vocabant. 689 Divitis hic saltus herbosaque pascua Nelei 690 nobiliumque greges custos servabat equarum.	parentage. 700 Knowing her child, she stood with levelled gaze, 701 amazed and mute as he began approach; 702 but Arcas, frightened at the sight drew back 703 to pierce his mother's breast with wounding spear.— 704 but not permitting it the god of Heaven 705 averted, and removed them from that crime. 706 He, in a mighty wind— through vacant space, 707 upbore them to the dome of starry heaven,

2.691	691 Hunc timuit blandaque manu seduxit et illi 692 “quisquis es, hospes” ait, “si forte armenta requiret 693 haec aliquis, vidisse nega; neu gratia facto 694 nulla rependatur, nitidam cape praemia vaccam” — 695 et dedit. Accepta voces has reddidit hospes: 696 “Tutus eas: lapis iste prius tua furta loquetur”, 697 et lapidem ostendit. Simulat Iove natus abire, 698 mox redit, et versa pariter cum voce figura 699 “rustice, vidisti siquas hoc limite” dixit 700 “ire boves, fer opem furtoque silentia deme: 701 iuncta suo pariter dabitur ubi femina tauro.” 702 At senior, postquam est merces geminata, “sub illis 703 montibus” inquit “erunt”: et erant	708 and fixed them, Constellations, bright amid 709 the starry host. 710 Juno on high beheld 711 Calisto crowned with glory—great with rage 712 her bosom heaved. She flew across the sea, 713 to hoary Tethys and to old Oceanus, 714 whom all the Gods revere, and thus to them 715 in answer to their words she made address; 716 “And is it wondered that the Queen of Gods 717 comes hither from ethereal abodes? 718 My rival sits upon the Throne of Heaven: 719 yea, when the wing of Night has darkened 720 let my fair word be deemed of no repute, 721 if you behold not in the height of Heaven 722 those new made stars, now honoured to my shame, 723 conspicuous; fixed in the highest dome of space 724 that circles the utmost axis of the world. 725 “Who, then, should hesitate to put affront 726 on Juno? matchless goddess! each offense 727 redounds in benefit! Who dreads her rage? 728 Oh boundless powers!

	sub montibus illis. 704 Risit Atlantiades et “me mihi, perfide, prodis? 705 me mihi prodis?” ait, periuraque pectora vertit 706 in durum silicem, qui nunc quoque dicitur index, 707 inque nihil merito vetus est infamia saxo. 708 Hinc se sustulerat paribus caducifer alis, 709 Munychiosque volans agros gratamque Minervae 710 despectabat humum cultique arbusta Lycei. 711 Illa forte die castae de more puellae 712 vertice supposito festas in Palladis arces 713 pura coronatis portabant sacra canistris. 714 Inde revertentes deus adspicit ales iterque 715 non agit in rectum, sed in orbem curvat eundem. 716 Ut volucris visis rapidissima miluus extis, 717 dum timet et densi circumstant sacra ministri, 718 flectitur in gyrum nec longius audet abire 719 spemque suam motis avidus circumvolat alis, 720 sic super Actaeas agilis Cyllenius arces	Oh unimagined deeds! 729 My enemy assumes a goddess' form 730 when my decree deprives her human shape;— 731 and thus the guilty rue their chastisement! 732 “Now let high Jove to human shape transform 733 this hideous beast, as once before he changed 734 his Io from a heifer.—Let him now 735 divorce his Juno and consort with her, 736 and lead Calisto to his couch, and take 737 that wolf, Lycaon, for a father-in-law!
2.721	721 inclinat cursus et easdem circinat auras. 722 Quanto splendidior quam cetera sidera fulget 723 Lucifer, et quanto quam Lucifer aurea Phoebe, 724 tanto virginibus praestantior omnibus Herse 725 ibat, eratque decus pompae comitumque suarum. 726 Obstipuit forma Iove natus, et aethere pendens 727 non secus exarsit, quam cum Balearica plumbum 728 funda iacit: volat illud et incandescit eundo 729 et quos non habuit, sub nubibus invenit ignes. 730 Vertit iter caeloque petit terrena relicto 731 nec se dissimulat: tanta est fiducia formae. 732 Quae quamquam iusta est, cura	738 “Oh, if an injury to me, your child, 739 may move your pity! drive the Seven Stars 740 from waters crystalline and azure-tint, 741 and your domain debar from those that shine 742 in Heaven, rewarded for Jove's wickedness.— 743 bathe not a concubine in waters pure.”— 744 the Gods of Ocean granted her request. 745 High in her graceful chariot through the air, 746 translucent, wends the goddess, glorious child 747 of Saturn, with her peacocks many-hued: 748 her peacocks, by the death of Argus limned, 749 so gay were made when black as midnight turned 750 thy wings, O chattering raven! white of yore. 751 For, long ago the ravens were not black — 752 their plumage then was white as any dove— 753 white-feathered, snow-white as the geese that guard 754 with watchful cries the Capitol: as white 755 as swans that haunt the streams.

	tamen adiuvat illam 733 permulcetque comas chlamydemque, ut pendeat apte, 734 collocat, ut limbus totumque appareat aurum, 735 ut teres in dextra, qua somnos ducit et arcet, 736 virga sit, ut tersis niteant talaria plantis. 737 Pars secreta domus ebore et testudine cultos 738 tres habuit thalamos: quorum tu, Pandrose, dextrum, 739 Aglauros laevum, medium possederat Herse. 740 Quae tenuit laevum, venientem prima notavit 741 Mercurium nomenque dei scitarier ausa est 742 et causam adventus. Cui sic respondit Atlantis 743 Pleionesque nepos: “Ego sum, qui iussa per auras 744 verba patris porto: pater est mihi Iuppiter ipse. 745 Nec fingam causas; tu tantum fida sorori 746 esse velis prolisque meae matertera dici. 747 Herse causa viae. Faveas oramus amanti.” 748 Adspicit hunc oculis isdem, quibus abdita nuper 749 viderat Aglauros flavae secreta Minervae, 750 proque ministerio magni sibi ponderis aurum	Disgrace reversed 756 the raven's hue from white to black, because 757 offense was given by his chattering tongue. 758 O glorious Phoebus! dutiful to thee, 759 Coronis of Larissa, fairest maid 760 of all Aemonia, was a grateful charm, 761 a joy to thee whilst faithful to thy love,— 762 while none defamed her chastity. But when 763 the Raven, bird of Phoebus, learned the Nymph 764 had been unfaithful, mischief-bent that bird, 765 spreading his white wings, hastened to impart 766 the sad news to his master. After him 767 the prattling Crow followed with flapping wings, 768 eager to learn what caused the Raven's haste. 769 Concealing nothing, with his busy tongue 770 the Raven gave the scandal to that bird: 771 and unto him the prattling Crow replied; 772 “A fruitless errand has befooled thy wits! 773 Take timely warning of my fateful cries:
2.751	751 postulat: interea tectis excedere cogit. 752 Vertit ad hanc torvi dea bellica luminis orbem 753 et tanto penitus traxit suspiria motu, 754 ut pariter pectus positamque in pectore forti 755 aegida concuteret. Subit, hanc arcana profana 756 detexisse manu tum cum sine matre creatam 757 Lemnicolae stirpem contra data foedera vidit, 758 et gratamque deo fore iam gratamque sorori 759 et ditem sumpto, quod avara poposcerat, auro. 760 Protinus Invidiae nigro squalentia tabo 761 tecta petit. Domus est imis in	774 consider what I was and what I am: 775 was justice done? 'Twas my fidelity 776 that caused my downfall. For, it came to pass, 777 within a basket, fashioned of small twigs, 778 Minerva had enclosed that spawn; begot 779 without a mother, Ericthonius; 780 which to the wardship of three virgins, born 781 of double-natured Cecrops, she consigned 782 with this injunction, ‘Look ye not therein, 783 nor learn the secret.’— 784 “But I saw their deeds 785 while hidden in the leaves of a great tree 786 two of the sisters, Herse and Pandrosos, 787 observed the charge, but scoffing at their fears, 788 the third, Aglauros, with her nimble hands 789 untied the knotted cords, and there disclosed 790 a serpent and an infant. This I told 791 Minerva; but in turn, she took away 792 her long

	vallibus huius 762 abdita, sole carens, non ulli pervia vento, 763 tristis et ignavi plenissima frigoris, et quae 764 igne vacet semper, caligine semper abundet. 765 Huc ubi pervenit belli metuenda virago, 766 constitit ante domum (neque enim succedere tectis 767 fas habet) et postes extrema cuspide pulsat. 768 Concussae patuere fores. Videt intus edentem 769 vipereas carnes, vitiorum alimenta suorum, 770 Invidiam, visaque oculos avertit. At illa 771 surgit humo pigre semesarumque relinquit 772 corpora serpentum passuque incedit inerti; 773 utque deam vidit formaque armisque decoram, 774 ingemuit vultumque ima ad suspiria duxit. 775 Pallor in ore sedet, macies in corpore toto, 776 nusquam recta acies, livent rubigine dentes, 777 pectora felle virent, lingua est suffusa veneno. 778 Risus abest, nisi quem visi movere dolores. 779 Nec fruitur somno, vigilacibus excita curis, 780 sed videt ingratos intabescitque videndo	protection, and degraded me 793 beneath the boding Owl.—My punishment 794 should warn the birds how many dangers they 795 incur from chattering tongues. 796 “Not my desire 797 impelled me to report to her, nor did 798 I crave protection; which, if thou wilt ask 799 Minerva, though enraged she must confirm. 800 And when is told to thee what lately fame 801 established, thou wilt not despise the Crow. 802 “Begot by Coronaeus, who was lord 803 of all the land of Phocis, I was once
2.781	781 successus hominum, carpitque et carpitur una, 782 suppliciumque suum est. Quamvis tamen oderat illam, 783 talibus adfata est breviter Tritonia dictis: 784 “Infice tabe tua natarum Cecropis unam. 785 Sic opus est. Aglauros ea est.” Haud plura locuta 786 fugit et impressa tellurem reppulit hasta. 787 Illa deam obliquo fugientem lumine cernens 788 murmura parva dedit, successurumque Minervae 789 indoluit, baculumque capit, quod spinea totum 790 vincula cingebant, adopertaque	804 a royal virgin, sought by suitors rich 805 and powerful. But beauty proved the cause 806 of my misfortune; for it came to pass, 807 as I was slowly walking on the sands 808 that skirt the merge of ocean, where was oft 809 my wont to roam, the god of Ocean gazed 810 impassioned, and with honied words implored 811 my love—but finding that I paid no heed, 812 and all his words despised, he fumed with rage 813 and followed me. 814 “I fled from that sea-shore, 815 to fields of shifting sands that all my steps 816 delayed: and in despair upon the Gods 817 and all mankind I called for aid, but I 818 was quite alone and helpless. Presently 819 the chaste Minerva, me, a virgin, heard 820 and me assistance gave: for

	nubibus atris, 791 quacumque ingreditur, florentia proterit arva 792 exuritque herbas et summa cacumina carpit, 793 adflatuque suo populos urbesque domosque 794 polluit. Et tandem Tritonida conspicit arcem 795 ingeniis opibusque et festa pace virentem, 796 vixque tenet lacrimas, quia nil lacrimabile cernit. 797 Sed postquam thalamos intravit Cecrope natae, 798 iussa facit pectusque manu ferrugine tincta 799 tangit et hamatis praecordia sentibus implet, 800 inspiratque nocens virus, piceumque per ossa 801 dissipat et medio spargit pulmone venenum. 802 Neve mali causae spatium per latius errent, 803 germanam ante oculos fortunatumque sororis 804 coniugium pulchraque deum sub imagine ponit, 805 cunctaque magna facit. Quibus inritata dolore 806 Cecropis occulto mordetur et anxia nocte, 807 anxia luce gemit, lentaque miserrima tabe 808 liquitur ut glacies incerto saucia sole. 809 Felicisque bonis non lenius uritur Herses, 810 quam cum spinosis ignis supponitur herbis,	as my arms 821 implored the Heavens, downy feathers grew 822 from out the flesh; and as I tried to cast 823 my mantle from my shoulders, wings appeared 824 upon my tender sides; and as I strove 825 to beat my naked bosom with my hands, 826 nor hands remained nor naked breast to beat. 827 “I ran, and as I sped the sands no more 828 delayed me; I was soaring from the ground; 829 and as I winged the air, Minerva chose 830 me for a life-companion; but alas, 831 although my life was blameless, fate or chance 832 deprived me of Minerva's loving aid; 833 for soon Nictimene succeeded me
2.811	811 quae neque dant flammas lenique tepore cremantur. 812 Saepe mori voluit, ne quicquam tale videret, 813 saepe velut crimen rigido narrare parenti; 814 denique in adverso venientem limine sedit 815 exclusura deum. Cui blandimenta precesque 816 verbaque iactanti mitissima “desine” dixit: 817 “hinc ego me non sum nisi te motura repulso.” 818 “Stemus” ait “pacto” velox Cyllenius “isto”: 819 caelestique fores virga patefecit.	834 to her protection and deserved esteem.— 835 it happened in this way, —Nictimene 836 committed the most wicked crimes, for which 837 Minerva changed her to the bird of night— 838 and ever since has claimed her as her own 839 instead of me; and this despite the deed 840 for which she shuns the glorious light of day, 841 and conscious of her crime conceals her shame 842 in the dark night—Minerva's Owl now called. 843 All the glad birds of day, indignant shun, 844 and chase her from the skies.” 845 But now replied 846 the Raven to the Crow, that talked so much, 847 “A mischief fall upon your prating head 848 for this detention of my flight.

	At illi 820 surgere conanti partes, quascumque sedendo 821 flectimus, ignava nequeunt gravitate moveri. 822 Illa quidem pugnat recto se attollere trunco, 823 sed genuum iunctura riget, frigusque per inguen 824 labitur, et callent amisso sanguine venae. 825 Utque malum late solet inmedicabile cancer 826 serpere et inlaesas vitiatis addere partes, 827 sic letalis hiems paulatim in pectora venit 828 vitalesque vias et respiramina clausit. 829 Nec conata loqui est, nec, si conata fuisset, 830 vocis habebat iter: saxum iam colla tenebat, 831 oraque duruerant, signumque exsangue sedebat. 832 Nec lapis albus erat: sua mens infecerat illam. 833 Has ubi verborum poenas mentisque profanae 834 cepit Atlantiades, dictas a Pallade terras 835 linquit et ingreditur iactatis aethera pennis. 836 Sevocat hunc genitor. Nec causam fassus amoris 837 “fide minister” ait “iussorum, nate, meorum, 838 pelle moram solitoque celer delabere cursu, 839 quaeque tuam matrem tellus a parte sinistra 840 suspicit (indigenae Sidonida nomine dicunt),	Your words 849 and warnings I despise.” With which retort 850 he winged upon his journey, swiftly thence 851 in haste, despite the warning to inform 852 his patron, Phoebus, how he saw the fair 853 Coronis with a lad of Thessaly. 854 And when Apollo, Phoebus, heard the tale 855 the busy Raven made such haste to tell, 856 he dropped his plectrum and his laurel wreath, 857 and his bright countenance went white with rage. 858 He seized his trusted arms, and having bent 859 his certain bow, pierced with a deadly shaft 860 that bosom which so often he had pressed 861 against his own. 862 Coronis moaned in pain,— 863 and as she drew the keen shaft from the wound,
2.841	841 hanc pete, quodque procul montano gramine pasci 842 armentum regale vides, ad litora verte.” 843 Dixit, et expulsi iamdudum monte iuvenci 844 litora iussa petunt, ubi magni filia regis 845 ludere virginibus Tyriis comitata solebat. 846 Non bene conveniunt nec in una sede morantur 847 maiestas et amor: sceptri gravitate relicta 848 ille pater rectorque deum, cui	864 her snow-white limbs were bathed in purple blood: 865 and thus she wailed, “Ah, Phoebus! punishment 866 is justly mine! but wherefore didst thou not 867 await the hour of birth? for by my death 868 an innocent is slain.” This said, her soul 869 expired with her life- blood, and death congealed 870 her drooping form. 871 Sadly the love-lore God 872 repents his jealous deed; regrets too late 873 his ready credence to the Raven's tale. 874 Mourning his thoughtless deed, blaming himself, 875 he vents his rage upon the talking bird; 876 he hates his bow, the string, his

	dextra trisulcis 849 ignibus armata est, qui nutu concutit orbem, 850 induitur faciem tauri mixtusque iuvencis 851 mugit et in teneris formosus obambulat herbis. 852 Quippe color nivis est, quam nec vestigia duri 853 calcavere pedis nec solvit aquaticus auster. 854 Colla toris exstant, armis palearia pendent, 855 cornua parva quidem, sed quae contendere possis 856 facta manu, puraque magis perlucida gemma. 857 Nullae in fronte minae, nec formidabile lumen; 858 pacem vultus habet. Miratur Agenore nata, 859 quod tam formosus, quod proelia nulla minetur. 860 Sed quamvis mitem metuit contingere primo: 861 mox adit et flores ad candida porrigit ora. 862 Gaudet amans et, dum veniat sperata voluptas, 863 oscula dat manibus; vix iam, vix cetera differt. 864 Et nunc adludit viridique exsultat in herba, 865 nunc latus in fulvis niveum deponit harenis; 866 paulatimque metu dempto modo pectora praebet 867 virginea plaudenda manu, modo cornua sertis 868 impedienda novis. Ausa est quoque regia virgo 869 nescia quem premeret, tergo considere tauri, 870 cum deus a terra siccoque a litore sensim	own right hand, 877 the fateful arrow. As a last resource, 878 and thus to overcome her destiny, 879 he strove to cherish her beloved form; 880 for vain were all his medicinal arts. 881 But when he saw upraised the funeral pyre, 882 where wreathed in flames her body should be burnt, 883 the sorrow of his heart welled forth in sighs; 884 but tearless orbed, for no celestial face 885 may tide of woe bedew. So grieves the poor dam, 886 when, swinging from his right the flashing ax, 887 the butcher with a sounding blow divides 888 the hollow temples of her sucking calf. 889 Yet, after Phoebus poured the fragrant myrrh, 890 sweet perfumes on her breast, that now once more 891 against his own he pressed, and after all 892 the prematurely hastened rites were done, 893 he would not suffer the offspring of his loins
2.871	871 falsa pedum primis vestigia ponit in undis: 872 inde abit ulterius mediique per aequora ponti 873 fert praedam. Pavet haec litusque ablata relictum 874 respicit, et dextra cornum tenet, altera dorso 875 imposita est; tremulae sinuantur flamine vestes.
3.1	1 Iamque deus posita fallacis imagine tauri	1 Now Jupiter had not revealed himself, 2 nor laid aside the semblance of a bull,

	2 se confessus erat Dictaeaque rura tenebat, 3 cum pater ignarus Cadmo perquirere raptam 4 imperat et poenam, si non invenerit, addit 5 exilium, facto pius et sceleratus eodem. 6 Orbe pererrato (quis enim deprendere possit 7 furta Iovis?) profugus patriamque iramque parentis 8 vitat Agenorides Phoebique oracula supplex 9 consulit et, quae sit tellus habitanda, requirit. 10 “Bos tibi” Phoebus ait “solis occurret in arvis, 11 nullum passa iugum curvique inmunis aratri. 12 Hac duce carpe vias et qua requieverit herba 13 moenia fac condas, Boeotiaque ma vocato.” 14 Vix bene Castalio Cadmus descenderat antro, 15 incustoditam lente videt ire iuvencam 16 nullum servitii signum cervice gerentem. 17 Subsequitur pressoque legit vestigia gressu, 18 auctoremque viae Phoebum taciturnus adorat. 19 Iam vada Cephisi Panopesque evaserat arva: 20 bos stetit et tollens speciosam cornibus altis 21 ad caelum frontem mugitibus impulit auras, 22 atque ita, respiciens comites sua terga sequentes, 23 procubuit teneraque latus submisit in herba. 24 Cadmus agit grates peregrinaeque oscula terrae 25 figit et ignotos montes agrosque salutat. 26 Sacra Iovi facturus erat. Iubet ire ministros 27 et petere e vivis libandas fontibus undas. 28 Silva vetus stabat, nulla violata securi, 29 et specus in medio, virgis ac vimine densus, 30 efficiens humilem lapidum compagibus arcum,	3 until they stood upon the plains of Crete. 4 But not aware of this, her father bade 5 her brother Cadmus search through all the world, 6 until he found his sister, and proclaimed 7 him doomed to exile if he found her not;— 8 thus was he good and wicked in one deed. 9 When he had vainly wandered over the earth 10 (for who can fathom the deceits of Jove?) 11 Cadmus, the son of King Agenor, shunned 12 his country and his father's mighty wrath. 13 But he consulted the famed oracles 14 of Phoebus, and enquired of them what land 15 might offer him a refuge and a home. 16 And Phoebus answered him; “When on the plains 17 a heifer, that has never known the yoke, 18 shall cross thy path go thou thy way with her, 19 and follow where she leads; and when she lies, 20 to rest herself upon the meadow green, 21 there shalt thou stop, as it will be a sign 22 for thee to build upon that plain the walls 23 of a great city: and its name shall be 24 the City of Boeotia.” 25 Cadmus turned; 26 but hardly had descended from the cave, 27 Castalian, ere he saw a heifer go 28 unguarded, gentle-paced, without the scars 29 of labour on her neck. He followed close 30 upon her steps (and silently adored

3.31	31 uberibus fecundus aquis, ubi conditus antro 32 Martius anguis erat, cristis praesignis et auro; 33 igne micant oculi, corpus tumet omne venenis, 34 tres vibrant linguae, triplici stant ordine dentes. 35 Quem postquam Tyria lucum de gente profecti 36 infausto tetigere gradu, demissaque in undas 37 urna dedit sonitum, longo caput extulit antro 38 caeruleus serpens horrendaque sibila misit. 39 Effluxere urnae manibus sanguisque reliquit 40 corpus, et attonitos subitus tremor occupat artus. 41 Ille volubilibus squamosos nexibus orbes 42 torquet et inmensos saltu sinuatur in arcus, 43 ac media plus parte leves erectus in auras 44 despicit omne nemus, tantoque est corpore, quanto 45 si totum spectes, geminas qui separat arctos. 46 Nec mora, Phoenicas, sive illi tela parabant, 47 sive fugam, sive ipse timor prohibebat utrumque, 48 occupat: hos morsu, longis complexibus illos, 49 hos necat adfiatu funesti tabe veneni. 50 Fecerat exiguas iam sol altissimus umbras: 51 quae mora sit sociis, miratur Agenore natus, 52 vestigatque viros. Tegimen derepta leoni 53 pellis erat, telum splendenti lancea ferro 54 et iaculum, teloque animus praestantior omni. 55 Ut nemus intravit letataque corpora vidit 56 victoremque supra spatiosi corporis hostem 57 tristia sanguinea lambentem vulnera lingua, 58 “aut ultor vestrae, fidissima corpora, mortis, 59 aut comes” inquit “ero.” Dixit, dextraque molarem	31 celestial Phoebus, author of his way) 32 till over the channel that Cephissus wears 33 he forded to the fields of Panope 34 and even over to Boeotia.— 35 there stood the slow-paced heifer, and she raised 36 her forehead, broad with shapely horns, towards Heaven; 37 and as she filled the air with lowing, stretched 38 her side upon the tender grass, and turned 39 her gaze on him who followed in her path. 40 Cadmus gave thanks and kissed the foreign soil, 41 and offered salutation to the fields 42 and unexplored hills. Then he prepared 43 to make large sacrifice to Jupiter, 44 and ordered slaves to seek the living springs 45 whose waters in libation might be poured. 46 There was an ancient grove, whose branching trees 47 had never known the desecrating ax, 48 where hidden in the undergrowth a cave, 49 with oziers bending round its low-formed arch, 50 was hollowed in the jutting rocks— deep-found 51 in the dark center of that hallowed grove— 52 beneath its arched roof a beauteous stream 53 of water welled serene. Its gloom concealed 54 a dragon, sacred to the war-like Mars; 55 crested and gorgeous with radescent scales, 56 and eyes that sparkled as the glow of coals. 57 A deadly venom had puffed up his bulk, 58 and from his jaws he darted forth three tongues, 59 and in a triple row his sharp teeth stood. 60 Now those who ventured of the Tyrian race,

	60 sustulit et magnum magno conamine misit.
3.61	61 Illius impulsu cum turribus ardua celsis 62 moenia mota forent: serpens sine vulnere mansit 63 loricaeque modo squamis defensus et atrae 64 duritia pellis validos cute reppulit ictus. 65 At non duritia iaculum quoque vicit eadem: 66 quod medio lentae spinae curvamine fixum 67 constitit et totum descendit in ilia ferrum. 68 Ille dolore ferox caput in sua terga retorsit 69 vulneraque adspexit fixumque hastile momordit 70 idque, ubi vi multa partem labefecit in omnem, 71 vix tergo eripuit; ferrum tamen ossibus haesit. 72 Tum vero, postquam solitas accessit ad iras 73 causa recens, plenis tumuerunt guttura venis, 74 spumaque pestiferos circumfluit albida rictus, 75 terraque rasa sonat squamis, quique halitus exit 76 ore niger Stygio, vitiatas inficit auras. 77 Ipse modo inmensum spiris facientibus orbem 78 cingitur, interdum longa trabe rectior adstat 79 impete nunc vasto ceu concitus imbribus amnis 80 fertur et obstantes proturbat pectore silvas. 81 Cedit Agenorides paulum spolioque leonis 82 sustinet incursus instantiaque ora retardat 83 cuspide praetenta. Furit ille et inania duro 84 vulnera dat ferro figitque in acumine dentes. 85 Iamque venenifero sanguis manare palato 86 coeperat et virides adspergine tinxerat herbas: 87 sed leve vulnus erat, quia se retrahebat ab ictu 88 laesaque colla dabat retro plagamque sedere	61 misfortuned followers of Cadmus, took 62 the path that led them to this grove; and when 63 they cast down-splashing in the springs an urn, 64 the hidden dragon stretched his azure head 65 out from the cavern's gloom, and vented forth 66 terrific hissings. Horrified they dropped 67 their urns. A sudden trembling shook their knees; 68 and their life-blood was ice within their veins. 69 The dragon wreathed his scales in rolling knots, 70 and with a spring, entwisted in great folds, 71 reared up his bulk beyond the middle rings, 72 high in the air from whence was given his gaze 73 the extreme confines of the grove below. 74 A size prodigious, his enormous bulk, 75 if seen extended where was naught to hide, 76 would rival in its length the Serpent's folds, 77 involved betwixt the planes of the Twin Bears. 78 The terrified Phoenicians, whether armed 79 for conflict, or in flight precipitate, 80 or whether held incapable from fear, 81 he seized with sudden rage; stung them to death, 82 or crushed them in the grasp of crushing folds, 83 or blasted with the poison of his breath. 84 High in the Heavens the sun small shadow made 85 when Cadmus, wondering what detained his men, 86 prepared to follow them. Clothed in a skin 87 torn from a lion, he was armed, complete, 88 with lance of glittering steel; and with a dart: 89 but passing these he had a dauntless soul. 90 When he explored the grove and there beheld

	89 cedendo arcebat nec longius ire sinebat, 90 donec Agenorides coniectum in guttura ferrum
3.91	91 usque sequens pressit, dum retro quercus eunti 92 obstitit, et fixa est pariter cum robore cervix. 93 Pondere serpentis curvata est arbor et ima 94 parte flagellari gemuit sua robora caudae. 95 Dum spatium victor victi considerat hostis, 96 vox subito audita est; neque erat cognoscere promptum 97 unde, sed audita est: “Quid, Agenore nate, peremptum 98 serpentem spectas? et tu spectabere serpens.” 99 Ille diu pavidus pariter cum mente colorem 100 perdiderat, gelidoque comae terrore rigebant. 101 Ecce viri fautrix, superas delapsa per auras, 102 Pallas adest motaeque iubet supponere terrae 103 vipereos dentes, populi incrementa futuri. 104 Paret et, ut presso sulcum patefecit aratro, 105 spargit humi iussos, mortalia semina, dentes. 106 Inde (fide maius) glaebae coepere moveri, 107 primaque de sulcis acies apparuit hastae, 108 tegmina mox capitum picto nutantia cono, 109 mox umeri pectusque onerataque bracchia telis 110 exsistunt, crescitque seges clipeata virorum. 111 Sic ubi tolluntur festis aulaea theatris, 112 surgere signa solent primumque ostendere vultus, 113 cetera paulatim, placidoque educta tenore 114 tota patent imoque pedes in margine ponunt. 115 Territus hoste novo Cadmus capere arma parabat: 116 “ne cape”, de populo, quem terra creaverat, unus 117 exclamat “nec te civilibus insere bellis.”	91 the lifeless bodies, and above them stretched 92 the vast victorious dragon licking up 93 the blood that issued from their ghastly wounds; 94 his red tongues dripping gore; then Cadmus filled 95 with rage and grief; “Behold, my faithful ones! 96 I will avenge your deaths or I will share it!” 97 He spoke; and lifted up a mill-stone huge, 98 in his right hand, and having poised it, hurled 99 with a tremendous effort dealing such 100 a blow would crush the strongest builded walls; 101 yet neither did the dragon flinch the shock 102 nor was he wounded, for his armour-scales, 103 fixed in his hard and swarthy hide, repelled 104 the dreadful impact. Not the javelin thus, 105 so surely by his armoured skin was foiled, 106 for through the middle segment of his spine 107 the steel point pierced, and sank beneath the flesh, 108 deep in his entrails. Writhing in great pain 109 he turned his head upon his bleeding back, 110 twisting the shaft, with force prodigious shook 111 it back and forth, and wrenched it from the wound; 112 with difficulty wrenched it. But the steel 113 remained securely fastened in his bones. 114 Such agony but made increase of rage: 115 his throat was swollen with great knotted veins; 116 a white froth gathered on his poisonous jaws; 117 the earth resounded with his rasping scales; 118 he breathed upon the grass a pestilence, 119 steaming mephitic from his Stygian mouth. 120 His body writhes up in tremendous gyres;

	118 Atque ita terrigenis rigido de fratribus unum 119 comminus ense ferit; iaculo cadit eminus ipse. 120 Hunc quoque qui leto dederat, non longius illo
3.121	121 vivit et exspirat modo quas acceperat auras; 122 exemploque pari furit omnis turba, suoque 123 Marte cadunt subiti per mutua vulnera fratres. 124 Iamque brevis vitae spatium sortita iuventus 125 sanguineam tepido plangebat pectore matrem, 126 quinque superstitibus, quorum fuit unus Echion. 127 Is sua iecit humo monitu Tritonidis arma 128 fraternaeque fidem pacis petiitque deditque. 129 Hos operis comites habuit Sidonius hospes, 130 cum posuit iussam Phoebeis sortibus urbem. 131 Iam stabant Thebae: poteras iam, Cadme, videri 132 exsilio felix. Soceri tibi Marsque Venusque 133 contigerant: huc adde genus de coniuge tanta, 134 tot natos natasque et pignera cara nepotes, 135 hos quoque iam iuvenes. Sed scilicet ultima semper 136 exspectanda dies homini est, dicique beatus 137 ante obitum nemo supremaque funera debet. 138 Prima nepos inter tot res tibi, Cadme, secundas 139 causa fuit luctus, alienaque cornua fronti 140 addita, vosque canes satiatae sanguine erili. 141 At bene si quaeras, fortunae crimen in illo, 142 non scelus invenies: quod enim scelus error habebat? 143 Mons erat infectus variarum caede ferarum; 144 iamque dies medius rerum contraxerat umbras 145 et sol ex aequo meta distabat utraque, 146 cum iuvenis placido per devia lustra vagantes	121 his folds, now straighter than a beam, untwist; 122 he rushes forward on his vengeful foe, 123 his great breast crushing the deep-rooted trees. 124 Small space gave Cadmus to the dragon's rage, 125 for by the lion's spoil he stood the shock, 126 and thrusting in his adversary's jaws 127 the trusted lance gave check his mad career. 128 Wild in his rage the dragon bit the steel 129 and fixed his teeth on the keen-biting point: 130 out from his poisoned palate streams of gore 131 spouted and stained the green with sanguine spray. 132 Yet slight the wound for he recoiled in time, 133 and drew his wounded body from the spear; 134 by shrinking from the sharp steel saved his throat 135 a mortal wound. But Cadmus as he pressed 136 the spear-point deeper in the serpent's throat, 137 pursued him till an oak-tree barred the way; 138 to this he fixed the dragon through the neck: 139 the stout trunk bending with the monster's weight, 140 groaned at the lashing of his serpent tail. 141 While the brave victor gazed upon the bulk 142 enormous of his vanquished foe, a voice 143 was heard—from whence was difficult to know, 144 but surely heard —“Son of Agenor, why 145 art thou here standing by this carcase-worm, 146 for others shall behold thy body changed 147 into a serpent?” Terrified, amazed, 148 he lost his colour and his self-control; 149 his hair stood upright from the dreadful fright. 150 But lo, the hero's watchful Deity, 151 Minerva, from the upper realms of air 152 appeared before him. She commanded him 153 to sow the dragon's teeth in mellowed soil, 154 from which might spring another race of men. 155 And he obeyed: and as he plowed the land, 156 took care to scatter in the furrowed soil 157 the dragon's teeth; a seed to raise up man. 158 'Tis marvelous but true, when this was done 159 the clods began to move. A spear-point first 160 appeared above the furrows, followed next 161 by helmet-covered heads,

	147 participes operum compellat Hyantius ore: 148 “Lina madent, comites, ferrumque cruore ferarum, 149 fortunamque dies habuit satis. Altera lucem 150 cum croceis invecta rotis Aurora reducet,	nodding their cones; 162 their shoulders, breasts and arms weighted with spears; 163 and largely grew the shielded crop of men.— 164 so is it in the joyful theaters 165 when the gay curtains, rolling from the floor, 166 are upward drawn until the scene is shown, — 167 it seems as if the figures rise to view: 168 first we behold their faces, then we see 169 their bodies, and their forms by slow degrees 170 appear before us on the painted cloth.
3.151	151 propositum repetemus opus; nunc Phoebus utraque 152 distat idem terra finditque vaporibus arva. 153 Sistite opus praesens nodosaque tollite lina.” 154 Iussa viri faciunt intermittuntque laborem. 155 Vallis erat piceis et acuta densa cupressu, 156 nomine Gargaphie, succinctae sacra Dianae. 157 Cuius in extremo est antrum nemorale recessu, 158 arte laboratum nulla: simulaverat artem 159 ingenio natura suo; nam pumice vivo 160 et levibus tofis nativum duxerat arcum. 161 Fons sonat a dextra, tenui perlucidus unda, 162 margine gramineo patulos succinctus hiatus. 163 Hic dea silvarum venatu fessa solebat 164 virgineos artus liquido perfundere rore. 165 Quo postquam subiit, nympharum tradidit uni 166 armigerae iaculum pharetramque arcusque retentos; 167 altera depositae subiecit bracchia pallae, 168 vincla duae pedibus demunt; nam doctior illis 169 Ismenis Crocale sparsos per colla capillos 170 conligit in nodum, quamvis erat ipsa solutis. 171 Excipiunt laticem Nepheleque Hyaleque Rhanisque 172 et Psecas et Phiale funduntque capacibus urnis. 173 Dumque ibi perluitur solita Titania lympha,	171 Cadmus, affrighted by this host, prepared 172 to arm for his defence; but one of those 173 from earth created cried; “Arm not! Away 174 from civil wars!” And with his trenchant sword 175 he smote an earth-born brother, hand to hand; 176 even as the vanquished so the victor fell, 177 pierced by a dart some distant brother hurled; 178 and likewise he who cast that dart was slain: 179 both breathing forth their lives upon the air 180 so briefly theirs, expired together. All 181 as if demented leaped in sudden rage, 182 each on the other, dealing mutual wounds. 183 So, having lived the space allotted them, 184 the youthful warriors perished as they smote 185 the earth (their blood-stained mother) with their breasts: 186 and only five of all the troop remained; 187 of whom Echion, by Minerva warned, 188 called on his brothers to give up the fight, 189 and cast his arms away in pledge of faith.— 190 when Cadmus, exiled from Sidonia's gates, 191 builded the city by Apollo named, 192 these five were trusted comrades in his toil. 193 Now Thebes is founded, who can deem thy days 194 unhappy in shine exile, Cadmus? Thou, 195 the son-in-law of Mars and Venus; thou, 196 whose glorious wife has borne to shine embrace 197 daughters and sons? And thy grandchildren join 198 around thee, almost grown to man's estate.— 199 nor should we say, “He leads a happy life,” 200 Till after death the funeral rites are paid.

	174 ecce nepos Cadmi dilata parte laborum 175 per nemus ignotum non certis passibus errans 176 pervenit in lucum: sic illum fata ferebant. 177 Qui simul intravit rorantia fontibus antra, 178 sicut erant, viso nudae sua pectora nymphae 179 percussere viro, subitisque ululatibus omne 180 implevere nemus circumfusaeque Dianam
3.181	181 corporibus texere suis; tamen altior illis 182 ipsa dea est colloque tenus supereminet omnes. 183 Qui color infectis adversi solis ab ictu 184 nubibus esse solet aut purpureae aurorae, 185 is fuit in vultu visae sine veste Dianae. 186 Quae quamquam comitum turba est stipata suarum, 187 in latus obliquum tamen adstitit oraque retro 188 flexit, et ut vellet promptas habuisse sagittas, 189 quas habuit sic hausit aquas vultumque virilem 190 perfudit, spargensque comas ultricibus undis 191 addidit haec cladis praenuntia verba futurae: 192 “Nunc tibi me posito visam velamine narres, 193 si poteris narrare, licet.” Nec plura minata 194 dat sparso capiti vivacis cornua cervi, 195 dat spatium collo summasque cacuminat aures, 196 cum pedibusque manus, cum longis bracchia mutat 197 cruribus et velat maculoso vellere corpus. 198 Additus et pavor est. Fugit Autonoeius heros 199 et se tam celerem cursu miratur in ipso. 200 Ut vero vultus et cornua vidit in unda, 201 “me miserum!” dicturus erat: vox nulla secuta est. 202 Ingemuit: vox illa fuit, lacrimaeque per ora	201 Thy grandson, Cadmus, was the first to cast 202 thy dear felicity in sorrow's gloom. 203 Oh, it was pitiful to witness him, 204 his horns outbranching from his forehead, chased 205 by dogs that panted for their master's blood! 206 If thou shouldst well inquire it will be shown 207 his sorrow was the crime of Fortune—not 208 his guilt—for who maintains mistakes are crimes? 209 Upon a mountain stained with slaughtered game, 210 the young Hyantian stood. Already day, 211 increasing to meridian, made decrease 212 the flitting shadows, and the hot sun shone 213 betwixt extremes in equal distance. Such 214 the hour, when speaking to his fellow friends, 215 the while they wandered by those lonely haunts, 216 actaeon of Hyantis kindly thus; 217 “Our nets and steel are stained with slaughtered game, 218 the day has filled its complement of sport; 219 now, when Aurora in her saffron car 220 brings back the light of day, we may again 221 repair to haunts of sport. Now Phoebus hangs 222 in middle sky, cleaving the fields with heat.— 223 enough of toil; take down the knotted nets.”— 224 all did as he commanded; and they sought 225 their needed rest. 226 There is a valley called 227 Gargaphia; sacred to Diana, dense 228 with pine trees and the pointed cypress, where, 229 deep in the woods that fringed the valley's edge, 230 was hollowed in frail sandstone and the soft

	203 non sua fluxerunt; mens tantum pristina mansit. 204 Quid faciat? repetatne domum et regalia tecta 205 an lateat silvis? pudor hoc, timor impedit illud. 206 Dum dubitat, videre canes. Primumque Melampus 207 Ichnobatesque sagax latratu signa dedere, 208 Gnosius Ichnobates, Spartana gente Melampus. 209 Inde ruunt alii rapida velocius aura, 210 Pamphagus et Dorceus et Oribasus, Arcades omnes,
3.211	211 Nebrophonusque valens et trux cum Laelape Theron 212 et pedibus Pterelas et naribus utilis Agre, 213 Hylaeusque ferox, nuper percussus ab apro, 214 deque lupo concepta Nape, pecudesque secuta 215 Poemenis et natis comitata Harpyia duobus, 216 et substricta gerens Sicyonius ilia Ladon, 217 et Dromas et Canache Sticteque et Tigris et Alce 218 et niveis Leucon et villis Asbolus atris 219 praevalidusque Lacon et cursu fortis Aello 220 et Thous et Cyprio velox cum fratre Lycisce, 221 et nigram medio frontem distinctus ab albo 222 Harpalos, et Melaneus hirsutaque corpore Lachne, 223 et patre Dictaeo, sed matre Laconide nati 224 Labros et Argiodus, et acutae vocis Hylactor, 225 quosque referre mora est. Ea turba cupidine praedae 226 per rupes scopulosque adituque carentia saxa, 227 quaque est difficilis quaque est via nulla, sequuntur. 228 Ille fugit per quae fuerat loca saepe secutus, 229 heu famulos fugit ipse suos. Clamare libebat 230 “Actaeon ego sum, dominum cognoscite vestrum!” 231 Verba animo desunt: resonat latratibus aether.	231 white pumice of the hills an arch, so true 232 it seemed the art of man; for Nature's touch 233 ingenious had so fairly wrought the stone, 234 making the entrance of a grotto cool. 235 Upon the right a limpid fountain ran, 236 and babbled, as its lucid channel spread 237 into a clear pool edged with tender grass. 238 Here, when a-wearied with exciting sport, 239 the Sylvan goddess loved to come and bathe 240 her virgin beauty in the crystal pool. 241 After Diana entered with her nymphs, 242 she gave her javelin, quiver and her bow 243 to one accustomed to the care of arms; 244 she gave her mantle to another nymph 245 who stood near by her as she took it off; 246 two others loosed the sandals from her feet; 247 but Crocale, the daughter of Ismenus, 248 more skillful than her sisters, gathered up 249 the goddess' scattered tresses in a knot;— 250 her own were loosely wantoned on the breeze. 251 Then in their ample urns dipt up the wave 252 and poured it forth, the cloud-nymph Nephele, 253 the nymph of crystal pools called Hyale, 254 the rain-drop Rhanis, Psecas of the dews, 255 and Phyale the guardian of their urns. 256 And while they bathed Diana in their streams, 257 Actaeon, wandering through the unknown woods, 258 entered the precincts of that sacred grove; 259 with steps uncertain wandered he as fate 260 directed, for his sport must wait till morn.—

	232 Prima Melanchaetes in tergo vulnera fecit, 233 proxima Therodamas, Oresitrophus haesit in armo: 234 tardius exierant, sed per compendia montis 235 anticipata via est. Dominum retinentibus illis, 236 cetera turba coit confertque in corpore dentes. 237 Iam loca vulneribus desunt. Gemit ille sonumque, 238 etsi non hominis, quem non tamen edere possit 239 cervus habet, maestisque replet iuga nota querellis. 240 Et genibus pronis supplex similisque roganti
3.241	241 circumfert tacitos tamquam sua bracchia vultus. 242 At comites rapidum solitis hortatibus agmen 243 ignari instigant oculisque Actaeona quaerunt 244 et velut absentem certatim Actaeona clamant 245 (ad nomen caput ille refert), et abesse queruntur 246 nec capere oblatae segnem spectacula praedae. 247 Vellet abesse quidem, sed adest; velletque videre, 248 non etiam sentire canum fera facta suorum. 249 Undique circumstant mersisque in corpore rostris 250 dilacerant falsi dominum sub imagine cervi. 251 252 253 Rumor in ambiguo est: aliis violentior aequo 254 visa dea est, alii laudant dignamque severa 255 virginitate vocant; pars invenit utraque causas. 256 Sola Iovis coniunx non tam culpetne probetne 257 eloquitur, quam clade domus ab Agenore ductae 258 gaudet et a Tyria conlectum paelice transfert 259 in generis socios odium. Subit ecce priori 260 causa recens, gravidamque dolet de semine magni 261 esse Iovis Semelen. Dum linguam ad iurgia solvit,	261 soon as he entered where the clear springs welled 262 or trickled from the grotto's walls, the nymphs, 263 now ready for the bath, beheld the man, 264 smote on their breasts, and made the woods resound, 265 suddenly shrieking. Quickly gathered they 266 to shield Diana with their naked forms, but she 267 stood head and shoulders taller than her guards.— 268 as clouds bright-tinted by the slanting sun, 269 or purple-dyed Aurora, so appeared 270 Diana's countenance when she was seen. 271 Oh, how she wished her arrows were at hand! 272 But only having water, this she took 273 and dashed it on his manly countenance, 274 and sprinkled with the avenging stream his hair, 275 and said these words, presage of future woe; 276 “Go tell it, if your tongue can tell the tale, 277 your bold eyes saw me stripped of all my robes.” 278 No more she threatened, but she fixed the horns 279 of a great stag firm on his sprinkled brows; 280 she lengthened out his neck; she made his ears 281 sharp at the top; she changed his hands and feet; 282 made long legs of his arms, and covered him 283 with dappled hair —his courage turned to fear. 284 The brave son of Autonoe took to flight, 285 and marveled that he sped so swiftly on.— 286 he saw his horns reflected in a stream 287 and would have said, “Ah, wretched me!” but now 288 he had no voice, and he could only groan: 289 large tears ran trickling down his face, transformed 290 in every feature.—Yet, as clear remained

	262 “profeci quid enim totiens per iurgia?” dixit: 263 “ipsa petenda mihi est, ipsam, si maxima Iuno 264 rite vocor, perdam, si me gemmantia dextra 265 sceptra tenere decet, si sum regina Iovisque 266 et soror et coniunx, certe soror. At, puto, furto est 267 contenta, et thalami brevis est iniuria nostri: 268 concipit, id deerat! manifestaque crimina pleno 269 fert utero, et mater, quod vix mihi contigit uno 270 de Iove vult fieri: tanta est fiducia formae.
3.271	271 Fallat eam faxo; nec sum Saturnia, si non 272 ab Iove mersa suo Stygias penetrabit in undas.” 273 Surgit ab his solio fulvaque recondita nube 274 limen adit Semeles. Nec nubes ante removit, 275 quam simulavit anum posuitque ad tempora canos 276 sulcavitque cutem rugis et curva trementi 277 membra tulit passu; vocem quoque fecit anilem, 278 ipsaque erat Beroe, Semeles Epidauria nutrix. 279 Ergo ubi captato sermone diuque loquendo 280 ad nomen venere Iovis, suspirat et “opto, 281 Iuppiter ut sit” ait: “metuo tamen omnia: multi 282 nomine divorum thalamos iniere pudicos. 283 Nec tamen esse Iovem satis est: det pignus amoris, 284 si modo verus is est, quantusque et qualis ab alta 285 Iunone excipitur, tantus talisque, rogato, 286 det tibi complexus suaque ante insignia sumat.” 287 Talibus ignaram Iuno Cadmeida dictis 288 formarat. Rogat illa Iovem sine nomine munus. 289 Cui deus “elige” ait: “nullam patiere repulsam. 290 Quoque magis credas, Stygii quoque conscia sunto	291 his understanding, and he wondered what 292 he should attempt to do: should he return 293 to his ancestral palace, or plunge deep 294 in vast vacuities of forest wilds? 295 Fear made him hesitate to trust the woods, 296 and shame deterred him from his homeward way. 297 While doubting thus his dogs espied him there: 298 first Blackfoot and the sharp nosed Tracer raised 299 the signal: Tracer of the Gnossian breed, 300 and Blackfoot of the Spartan: swift as wind 301 the others followed. Glutton, Quicksight, Surefoot, 302 three dogs of Arcady; then valiant Killbuck, 303 Tempest, fierce Hunter, and the rapid Wingfoot; 304 sharp-scented Chaser, and Woodranger wounded 305 so lately by a wild boar; savage Wildwood, 306 the wolf-begot with Shepherdess the cow-dog; 307 and ravenous Harpy followed by her twin whelps; 308 and thin-girt Ladon chosen from Sicyonia; 309 racer and Barker, brindled Spot and Tiger; 310 sturdy old Stout and white haired Blanche and black Smut 311 lusty big Lacon, trusty Storm and Quickfoot; 312 active young Wolfet and her Cyprian brother 313 black headed Snap, blazed with a patch of white hair 314 from forehead to his muzzle; swarthy Blackcoat 315 and shaggy Bristle, Towser and Wildtooth, 316 his sire of Dicte and his dam of Lacon; 317 and yelping Babbler: these and others, more 318 than patience leads us to recount or name. 319 All eager for their prey the pack surmount 320 rocks, cliffs and crags, precipitous—where paths

	291 numina torrentis: timor et deus ille deorum est“. 292 Laeta malo nimiumque potens perituraque amantis 293 obsequio Semele “qualem Saturnia” dixit 294 “te solet amplecti, Veneris cum foedus initis, 295 da mihi te talem.” Voluit deus ora loquentis 296 opprimere: exierat iam vox properata sub auras. 297 Ingemuit; neque enim non haec optasse, neque ille 298 non iurasse potest. Ergo maestissimus altum 299 aethera conscendit vultuque sequentia traxit 300 nubila, quis nimbos inmixtaque fulgura ventis
3.301	301 addidit et tonitrus et inevitabile fulmen. 302 Qua tamen usque potest, vires sibi demere temptat; 303 nec, quo centimanum deiecerat igne Typhoea, 304 nunc armatur eo: nimium feritatis in illo est. 305 Est aliud levius fulmen, cui dextra Cyclopum 306 saevitiae flammaeque minus, minus addidit irae; 307 tela secunda vocant superi. Capit illa, domumque 308 intrat Agenoream. Corpus mortale tumultus 309 non tulit aetherios donisque iugalibus arsit. 310 Imperfectus adhuc infans genetricis ab alvo 311 eripitur, patrioque tener (si credere dignum est) 312 insuitur femori maternaque tempora complet. 313 Furtim illum primis Ino matertera cuuis 314 educat: inde datum nymphae Nyseides antris 315 occuluere suis lactisque alimenta dedere. 316 Dumque ea per terras fatali lege geruntur 317 tutaque bis geniti sunt incunabula Bacchi, 318 forte Iovem memorant, diffusum nectare, curas 319 seposuisse graves vacuumque agitasse remissos	321 are steep, where roads are none. He flies by routes 322 so oft pursued but now, alas, his flight 323 is from his own!—He would have cried, “Behold 324 your master!—It is I—Actaeon!” Words 325 refused his will. The yelping pack pressed on. 326 First Blackmane seized and tore his master's back, 327 Savage the next, then Rover's teeth were clinched 328 deep in his shoulder. —These, though tardy out, 329 cut through a by-path and arriving first 330 clung to their master till the pack came up. 331 The whole pack fastened on their master's flesh 332 till place was none for others. Groaning he 333 made frightful sounds that not the human voice 334 could utter nor the stag; and filled the hills 335 with dismal moans; and as a suppliant fell 336 down to the ground upon his trembling knees; 337 and turned his stricken eyes on his own dogs, 338 entreating them to spare him from their fangs. 339 But his companions, witless of his plight, 340 urged on the swift pack with their hunting cries. 341 They sought Actaeon and they vainly called, 342 “Actaeon! Hi! Actaeon!” just as though 343 he was away from them. Each time they called 344 he turned his head. And when they chided him, 345 whose indolence denied the joys of sport, 346 how much he wished an indolent desire 347 had haply held him from his ravenous pack. 348 Oh, how much;better 'tis to see the hunt, 349 and the fierce dogs, than feel their

	320 cum Iunone iocos et “maior vestra profecto est, 321 quam quae contingit maribus” dixisse “voluptas.” 322 Illa negat. Placuit quae sit sententia docti 323 quaerere Tiresiae: venus huic erat utraque nota. 324 Nam duo magnorum viridi coeuntia silva 325 corpora serpentum baculi violaverat ictu; 326 deque viro factus (mirabile) femina septem 327 egerat autumnos. Octavo rursus eosdem 328 vidit, et “est vestrae si tanta potentia plagae” 329 dixit “ut auctoris sortem in contraria mutet, 330 nunc quoque vos feriam.” Percussis anguibus isdem	savage deeds! 350 They gathered round him, and they fixed their snouts
3.331	331 forma prior rediit genetivaque venit imago. 332 Arbiter hic igitur sumptus de lite iocosa 333 dicta Iovis firmat. Gravius Saturnia iusto 334 nec pro materia fertur doluisse, suique 335 iudicis aeterna damnavit lumina nocte. 336 At pater omnipotens (neque enim licet inrita cuiquam 337 facta dei fecisse deo) pro lumine adempto 338 scire futura dedit, poenamque levavit honore. 339 Ille per Aonias fama celeberrimus urbes 340 inreprehensa dabat populo responsa petenti. 341 Prima fide vocisque ratae temptamina sumpsit 342 caerula Liriope. Quam quondam flumine curvo 343 implicuit clausaeque suis Cephisus in undis 344 vim tulit. Enixa est utero pulcherrima pleno 345 infantem, nymphis iam tunc qui posset amari, 346 Narcissumque vocat. De quo consultus, an esset 347 tempora maturae visurus longa senectae, 348 fatidicus vates “si se non noverit” inquit.	351 deep in his flesh: tore him to pieces, he 352 whose features only as a stag appeared.— 353 'Tis said Diana's fury raged with none 354 abatement till the torn flesh ceased to live. 355 Hapless Actaeon's end in various ways 356 was now regarded; some deplored his doom, 357 but others praised Diana's chastity; 358 and all gave many reasons. But the spouse 359 of Jove, alone remaining silent, gave 360 nor praise nor blame. Whenever calamity 361 befell the race of Cadmus she rejoiced, 362 in secret, for she visited her rage 363 on all Europa's kindred. 364 Now a fresh 365 occasion has been added to her grief, 366 and wild with jealousy of Semele, 367 her tongue as ever ready to her rage, 368 lets loose a torrent of abuse; 369 “Away! 370 Away with words! Why should I speak of it? 371 Let me attack her! Let me spoil that jade! 372 Am I not Juno the supreme of Heaven? 373 Queen of the flashing scepter? Am I not 374 sister and wife of Jove omnipotent? 375 She even wishes to be known by him 376 a mother of a Deity, a joy 377 almost denied to me! Great confidence 378 has she in her great beauty—nevertheless, 379 I shall so weave the web the bolt of Jove 380 would fail to save her.—Let the Gods deny 381 that I am Saturn's daughter, if her shade 382 descend not stricken to the Stygian wave.” 383 She rose up quickly from her shining

	349 Vana diu visa est vox auguris: exitus illam 350 resque probat letique genus novitasque furoris. 351 Namque ter ad quinos unum Cephisius annum 352 addiderat poteratque puer iuvenisque videri: 353 multi illum iuvenes, multae cupiere puellae. 354 Sed fuit in tenera tam dura superbia forma: 355 nulli illum iuvenes, nullae tetigere puellae. 356 Adspicit hunc trepidos agitantem in retia cervos 357 vocalis nymphe, quae nec reticere loquenti, 358 nec prior ipsa loqui didicit, resonabilis Echo. 359 Corpus adhuc Echo, non vox erat; et tamen usum 360 garrula non alium, quam nunc habet, oris habebat,	throne, 384 and hidden in a cloud of fiery hue
3.361	361 reddere de multis ut verba novissima posset. 362 Fecerat hoc Iuno, quia, cum deprendere posset 363 cum Iove saepe suo nymphas in monte iacentes, 364 illa deam longo prudens sermone tenebat, 365 dum fugerent nymphae. Postquam Saturnia sensit 366 “huius” ait “linguae, qua sum delusa, potestas 367 parva tibi dabitur vocisque brevissimus usus”: 368 reque minas firmat. Tamen haec in fine loquendi 369 ingeminat voces auditaque verba reportat. 370 Ergo ubi Narcissum per devia rura vagantem 371 vidit et incaluit, sequitur vestigia furtim, 372 quoque magis sequitur, flamma propiore calescit, 373 non aliter, quam cum summis circumlita taedis 374 admotas rapiunt vivacia sulphura flammas. 375 O quotiens voluit blandis accedere dictis 376 et molles adhibere preces: natura repugnat 377 nec sinit incipiat. Sed, quod sinit, illa parata est	385 descended to the home of Semele; 386 and while encompassed by the cloud, transformed 387 her whole appearance as to counterfeit 388 old Beroe, an Epidaurian nurse, 389 who tended Semele. 390 Her tresses changed 391 to grey, her smooth skin wrinkled and her step 392 grown feeble as she moved with trembling limbs;— 393 her voice was quavering as an ancient dame's, 394 as Juno, thus disguised, began to talk 395 to Semele. When presently the name 396 of Jove was mentioned—artful Juno thus; 397 (doubtful that Jupiter could be her love) — 398 “When Jove appears to pledge his love to you, 399 implore him to assume his majesty 400 and all his glory, even as he does 401 in presence of his stately Juno—Yea, 402 implore him to caress you as a God.” 403 With artful words as these the goddess worked 404 upon the trusting mind of Semele, 405 daughter of Cadmus, till she begged of Jove 406 a boon, that only hastened her sad death; 407 for Jove not knowing her design replied, 408 “Whatever thy wish, it shall not be denied, 409 and that thy heart shall suffer no distrust, 410 I pledge me by that Deity, the Waves 411 of the deep Stygian Lake,—oath of the Gods.” 412 All overjoyed at her misfortune, proud 413 that she prevailed, and pleased

	378 exspectare sonos, ad quos sua verba remittat. 379 Forte puer comitum seductus ab agmine fido, 380 dixerat “ecquis adest?” et “adest!” responderat Echo. 381 Hic stupet, utque aciem partes dimittit in omnes, 382 voce “veni!” magna clamat: vocat illa vocantem. 383 Respicit et rursus nullo veniente “quid” inquit 384 “me fugis?” et totidem, quot dixit, verba recepit. 385 Perstat et, alternae deceptus imagine vocis, 386 “huc coeamus!” ait: nullique libentius umquam 387 responsura sono “coeamus” rettulit Echo, 388 et verbis favet ipsa suis egressaque silva 389 ibat, ut iniceret sperato bracchia collo. 390 Ille fugit fugiensque “manus complexibus aufer:	that she secured 414 of him a promise, that could only cause
3.391	391 ante” ait “emoriar, quam sit tibi copia nostri.” 392 Rettulit illa nihil nisi “sit tibi copia nostri.” 393 Spreta latet silvis pudibundaque frondibus ora 394 protegit et solis ex illo vivit in antris. 395 Sed tamen haeret amor crescitque dolore repulsae. 396 Extenuant vigiles corpus miserabile curae, 397 adducitque cutem macies et in aera sucus 398 corporis omnis abit. Vox tantum atque ossa supersunt: 399 vox manet; ossa ferunt lapidis traxisse figuram. 400 401 402 Sic hanc, sic alias undis aut montibus ortas 403 luserat hic nymphas, sic coetus ante viriles. 404 Inde manus aliquis despectus ad aethera tollens 405 “sic amet ipse licet sic non potiatur amato!” 406 dixerat. Adsensit precibus Rhamnusia iustis. 407 Fons erat inlimis, nitidis argenteus undis,	415 her own disaster, Semele addressed 416 almighty Jove; “Come unto me in all 417 the splendour of thy glory, as thy might 418 is shown to Juno, goddess of the skies.” 419 Fain would he stifle her disastrous tongue; 420 before he knew her quest the words were said; 421 and, knowing that his greatest oath was pledged, 422 he sadly mounted to the lofty skies, 423 and by his potent nod assembled there 424 the deep clouds: and the rain began to pour, 425 and thunder-bolts resounded. 426 But he strove 427 to mitigate his power, and armed him not 428 with flames overwhelming as had put to flight 429 his hundred-handed foe Typhoeus—flames 430 too dreadful. Other thunder-bolts he took, 431 forged by the Cyclops of a milder heat, 432 with which insignia of his majesty, 433 sad and reluctant, he appeared to her. — 434 her mortal form could not endure the shock 435 and she was burned to ashes in his sight. 436 An unformed babe was rescued from her side, 437 and, nurtured in the thigh of Jupiter, 438 completed Nature's time until his birth. 439 Ino, his aunt, in secret nursed the boy 440 and cradled him. And him Nyseian nymphs 441 concealed in caves and fed with needful

	408 quem neque pastores neque pastae monte capellae 409 contigerant aliudve pecus, quem nulla volucris 410 nec fera turbarat nec lapsus ab arbore ramus. 411 Gramen erat circa, quod proximus umor alebat, 412 silvaque sole locum passura tepescere nullo. 413 Hic puer, et studio venandi lassus et aestu, 414 procubuit faciemque loci fontemque secutus. 415 416 Dumque bibit, visae correptus imagine formae 417 418 adstupet ipse sibi, vultuque inmotus eodem 419 haeret, ut e Pario formatum marmore signum. 420 Spectat humi positus geminum, sua lumina, sidus	milk.
3.421	421 et dignos Baccho, dignos et Apolline crines 422 impubesque genas et eburnea colla decusque 423 oris et in niveo mixtum candore ruborem, 424 cunctaque miratur, quibus est mirabilis ipse. 425 Se cupit imprudens et qui probat, ipse probatur, 426 dumque petit, petitur, pariterque accendit et ardet. 427 Inrita fallaci quotiens dedit oscula fonti! 428 In mediis quotiens visum captantia collum 429 bracchia mersit aquis, nec se deprendit in illis! 430 Quid videat, nescit: sed quod videt, uritur illo, 431 atque oculos idem, qui decipit, incitat error. 432 Credule, quid frusta simulacra fugacia captas? 433 quod petis, est nusquam; quod amas, avertere, perdes. 434 Ista repercussae, quam cernis, imaginis umbra est: 435 nil habet ista sui; tecum venitque manetque, 436 tecum discedet, si tu discedere possis. 437 Non illum Cereris, non illum cura quietis	442 While these events according to the laws 443 of destiny occurred, and while the child, 444 the twice-born Bacchus, in his cradle lay, 445 'Tis told that Jupiter, a careless hour, 446 indulged too freely in the nectar cup; 447 and having laid aside all weighty cares, 448 jested with Juno as she idled by. 449 Freely the god began; “Who doubts the truth? 450 The female's pleasure is a great delight, 451 much greater than the pleasure of a male.” 452 Juno denied it; wherefore 'twas agreed 453 to ask Tiresias to declare the truth, 454 than whom none knew both male and female joys: 455 for wandering in a green wood he had seen 456 two serpents coupling; and he took his staff 457 and sharply struck them, till they broke and fled. 458 'Tis marvelous, that instant he became 459 a woman from a man, and so remained 460 while seven autumns passed. When eight were told, 461 again he saw them in their former plight, 462 and thus he spoke; “Since such a power was wrought, 463 by one stroke of a staff my sex was changed— 464 again I strike!” And even as he struck 465 the same two snakes, his former sex returned; 466 his manhood was restored.— 467 as both agreed 468 to choose him umpire of the sportive strife, 469 he gave decision in support of Jove; 470 from this the 438 abstrahere inde potest, sed opaca fusus in herba 439 spectat inexpleto mendacem lumine formam, 440 perque oculos perit ipse suos; paulumque levatus 441 ad circumstantes tendens sua bracchia silvas 442 “ecquis, io silvae, crudelius” inquit “amavit? 443 Scitis enim, et multis latebra opportuna fuistis. 444 Ecquem, cum vestrae tot agantur saecula vitae, 445 qui sic tabuerit, longo meministis in aevo? 446 Et placet et video; sed quod videoque placetque, 447 non tamen invenio: tantus tenet error amantem. 448 Quoque magis doleam, nec nos mare separat ingens, 449 nec via nec montes nec clausis moenia portis: 450 exigua prohibemur aqua. Cupit ipse teneri:	disappointment Juno felt 471 surpassed all reason, and enraged, decreed 472 eternal night should seal Tiresias' eyes. — 473 immortal Deities may never turn 474 decrees and deeds of other Gods to naught, 475 but Jove, to recompense his loss of sight, 476 endowed him with the gift of prophecy.

3.451	451 nam quotiens liquidis porreximus oscula lymphis, 452 hic totiens ad me resupino nititur ore. 453 Posse putes tangi: minimum est, quod amantibus obstat. 454 Quisquis es, huc exi! quid me, puer unice, fallis, 455 quove petitus abis? certe nec forma nec aetas 456 est mea quam fugias, et amarunt me quoque nymphae. 457 Spem mihi nescio quam vultu promittis amico, 458 cumque ego porrexi tibi bracchia, porrigis ultro: 459 cum risi, adrides; lacrimas quoque saepe notavi 460 me lacrimante tuas, nutu quoque signa remittis, 461 et quantum motu formosi suspicor oris, 462 verba refers aures non pervenientia nostras. 463 Iste ego sum: sensi, nec me mea fallit imago. 464 Uror amore mei, flammas moveoque feroque. 465 Quid faciam? roger, anne rogem? quid deinde rogabo? 466 quod cupio mecum est: inopem me copia fecit.	477 Tiresias' fame of prophecy was spread 478 through all the cities of Aonia, 479 for his unerring answers unto all 480 who listened to his words. And first of those 481 that harkened to his fateful prophecies, 482 a lovely Nymph, named Liriope, came 483 with her dear son, who then fifteen, might seem 484 a man or boy—he who was born to her 485 upon the green merge of Cephissus' stream— 486 that mighty River-God whom she declared 487 the father of her boy.— 488 she questioned him. 489 Imploring him to tell her if her son, 490 unequalled for his beauty, whom she called 491 Narcissus, might attain a ripe old age. 492 To which the blind seer answered in these words, 493 “If he but fail to recognize himself, 494 a long life he may have, beneath the sun,”— 495 so, frivolous the prophet's words appeared; 496 and yet the event, the manner of his death, 497 the strange delusion of his frenzied love, confirmed it. 498 Three times five years so were passed. 499 Another five-years, and the lad might seem 500 a young man or a boy. And many a youth, 501 and many a damsel sought to gain his love; 502 but such his mood and spirit and his pride, 503 none gained his favour. 504 Once a noisy Nymph,

	467 O utinam a nostro secedere corpore possem! 468 Votum in amante novum: vellem quod amamus abesset! — 469 Iamque dolor vires adimit, nec tempora vitae 470 longa meae superant, primoque exstinguor in aevo. 471 Nec mihi mors gravis est posituro morte dolores: 472 hic, qui diligitur, vellem diuturnior esset. 473 Nunc duo concordes anima moriemur in una.” 474 Dixit et ad faciem rediit male sanus eandem 475 et lacrimis turbavit aquas, obscuraque moto 476 reddita forma lacu est. Quam cum vidisset abire, 477 “quo refugis? remane, nec me, crudelis, amantem 478 desere!” clamavit: “liceat, quod tangere non est, 479 adspicere et misero praebere alimenta furori.” 480 Dumque dolet, summa vestem deduxit ab ora	505 (who never held her tongue when others spoke, 506 who never spoke till others had begun)
3.481	481 nudaque marmoreis percussit pectora palmis. 482 Pectora traxerunt tenuem percussa ruborem, 483 non aliter quam poma solent, quae candida parte, 484 parte rubent, aut ut variis solet uva racemis 485 ducere purpureum nondum matura colorem. 486 Quae simul adspexit liquefacta rursus in unda, 487 non tulit ulterius, sed ut intabescere flavae 488 igne levi cerae matutinaeque pruinae 489 sole tepente solent, sic attenuatus amore 490 liquitur et tecto paulatim carpitur igni. 491 Et neque iam color est mixto candore rubori, 492 nec vigor et vires et quae modo visa placebant, 493 nec corpus remanet, quondam quod amaverat Echo. 494 Quae tamen ut vidit, quamvis irata memorque, 495 indoluit, quotiensque puer miserabilis “eheu”	507 mocking Echo, spied him as he drove, 508 in his delusive nets, some timid stags.— 509 for Echo was a Nymph, in olden time,— 510 and, more than vapid sound,—possessed a form: 511 and she was then deprived the use of speech, 512 except to babble and repeat the words, 513 once spoken, over and over. 514 Juno confused 515 her silly tongue, because she often held 516 that glorious goddess with her endless tales, 517 till many a hapless Nymph, from Jove's embrace, 518 had made escape adown a mountain. But 519 for this, the goddess might have caught them. Thus 520 the glorious Juno, when she knew her guile; 521 “Your tongue, so freely wagged at my expense, 522 shall be of little use; your endless voice, 523 much shorter than your tongue.” At once the Nymph 524 was stricken as the goddess had decreed;— 525 and, ever since, she only mocks the sounds 526 of others' voices, or, perchance, returns 527 their final words. 528 One day, when she observed 529 Narcissus wandering in the pathless woods, 530 she loved him and she followed him, with soft 531 and stealthy tread.—The more she followed

	496 dixerat, haec resonis iterabat vocibus “eheu”; 497 cumque suos manibus percusserat ille lacertos, 498 haec quoque reddebat sonitum plangoris eundem. 499 Ultima vox solitam fuit haec spectantis in undam, 500 “heu frustra dilecte puer!” totidemque remisit 501 verba locus, dictoque vale “vale!” inquit et Echo. 502 Ille caput viridi fessum submisit in herba; 503 lumina mors clausit domini mirantia formam. 504 Tunc quoque se, postquam est inferna sede receptus, 505 in Stygia spectabat aqua. Planxere sorores 506 naides et sectos fratri posuere capillos, 507 planxerunt dryades: plangentibus adsonat Echo. 508 Iamque rogum quassasque faces feretrumque parabant: 509 nusquam corpus erat; croceum pro corpore florem 510 inveniunt, foliis medium cingentibus albis.	him 532 the hotter did she burn, as when the flame 533 flares upward from the sulphur on the torch. 534 Oh, how she longed to make her passion known! 535 To plead in soft entreaty! to implore his love! 536 But now, till others have begun, a mute
3.511	511 Cognita res meritam vati per Achaidas urbes 512 attulerat famam, nomenque erat auguris ingens. 513 Spernit Echionides tamen hunc ex omnibus unus, 514 contemptor superum, Pentheus, praesagaque ridet 515 verba senis tenebrasque et cladem lucis ademptae 516 obicit. Ille movens albentia tempora canis 517 “quam felix esses, si tu quoque luminis huius 518 orbus” ait “fieres, ne Bacchica sacra videres! 519 Namque dies aderit, quam non procul auguror esse, 520 qua novus huc veniat, proles Semeleia, Liber; 521 quem nisi templorum fueris dignatus honore, 522 mille lacer spargere locis et sanguine silvas 523 foedabis matremque tuam matrisque sorores. 524 Evenient; neque enim dignabere numen honore,	537 of Nature she must be. She cannot choose 538 but wait the moment when his voice may give 539 to her an answer. 540 Presently the youth, 541 by chance divided from his trusted friends, 542 cries loudly, “Who is here?” and Echo, “Here!” 543 Replies. Amazed, he casts his eyes around, 544 and calls with louder voice, “Come here!” “Come here!” 545 She calls the youth who calls.—He turns to see 546 who calls him and, beholding naught exclaims, 547 “Avoid me not!” “Avoid me not!” returns. 548 He tries again, again, and is deceived 549 by this alternate voice, and calls aloud; 550 “Oh let us come together!” Echo cries, 551 “Oh let us come together!” Never sound 552 seemed sweeter to the Nymph, and from the woods 553 she hastens in accordance with her words, 554 and strives to wind her arms around his neck. 555 He flies from her and as he leaves her says, 556 “Take off your hands! you shall not fold your arms 557 around me. Better death than such a one 558 should ever caress me!” Naught she answers save, 559 “Caress

	525 meque sub his tenebris nimium vidisse quereris.” 526 Talia dicentem proturbat Echione natus. 527 Dicta fides sequitur, responsaque vatis aguntur: 528 Liber adest, festisque fremunt ululatibus agri; 529 turba ruit, mixtaeque viris matresque nurusque 530 vulgusque proceresque ignota ad sacra feruntur. 531 “Quis furor, anguigenae, proles Mavortia, vestras 532 attonuit mentes?” Pentheus ait: “aerane tantum 533 aere repulsa valent et adunco tibia cornu 534 et magicae fraudes, ut, quos non bellicus ensis, 535 non tuba terruerit, non strictis agmina telis, 536 femineae voces et mota insania vino 537 obscenique greges et inania tympana vincant? 538 Vosne, senes, mirer, qui longa per aequora vecti 539 hac Tyron, hac profugos posuistis sede penates, 540 nunc sinitis sine Marte capi? vosne, acrior aetas,	me!” 560 Thus rejected she lies hid 561 in the deep woods, hiding her blushing face 562 with the green leaves; and ever after lives 563 concealed in lonely caverns in the hills. 564 But her great love increases with neglect; 565 her miserable body wastes away, 566 wakeful with sorrows; leanness shrivels up
3.541	541 o iuvenes, propiorque meae, quos arma tenere, 542 non thyrsos, galeaque tegi, non fronde, decebat? 543 Este, precor, memores, qua sitis stirpe creati, 544 illiusque animos, qui multos perdidit unus, 545 sumite serpentis! Pro fontibus ille lacuque 546 interiit: at vos pro fama vincite vestra! 547 Ille dedit leto fortes, vos pellite molles 548 et patrium retinete decus. Si fata vetabant 549 stare diu Thebas, utinam tormenta virique 550 moenia diruerent, ferrumque ignisque sonarent! 551 Essemus miseri sine crimine, sorsque querenda, 552 non celanda foret, lacrimaeque pudore carerent. 553 At nunc a puero Thebae capientur inermi,	567 her skin, and all her lovely features melt, 568 as if dissolved upon the wafting winds— 569 nothing remains except her bones and voice— 570 her voice continues, in the wilderness; 571 her bones have turned to stone. She lies concealed 572 in the wild woods, nor is she ever seen 573 on lonely mountain range; for, though we hear 574 her calling in the hills, 'tis but a voice, 575 a voice that lives, that lives among the hills. 576 Thus he deceived the Nymph and many more, 577 sprung from the mountains or the sparkling waves; 578 and thus he slighted many an amorous youth.— 579 and therefore, some one whom he once despised, 580 lifting his hands to Heaven, implored the Gods, 581 “If he should love deny him what he loves!” 582 and as the prayer was uttered it was heard 583 by Nemesis, who granted her assent. 584 There was a fountain silver-clear and bright, 585 which neither shepherds nor the wild she-goats, 586 that range the hills, nor any cattle's mouth 587 had touched—its

	554 quem neque bella iuvant nec tela nec usus equorum, 555 sed madidi murra crines mollesque coronae 556 purpuraque et pictis intextum vestibus aurum. 557 Quem quidem ego actutum (modo vos absistite) cogam 558 adsumptumque patrem commentaque sacra fateri. 559 An satis Acrisio est animi contemnere vanum 560 numen et Argolicas venienti claudere portas, 561 Penthea terrebit cum totis advena Thebis? 562 Ite citi" (famulis hoc imperat), "ite ducemque 563 attrahite huc vinctum! iussis mora segnis abesto." 564 Hunc avus, hunc Athamas, hunc cetera turba suorum 565 corripiunt dictis frustraque inhibere laborant. 566 Acrior admonitu est, inritaturque retenta 567 et crescit rabies, remoraminaque ipsa nocebant. 568 Sic ego torrentem, qua nil obstabat eunti, 569 lenius et modico strepitu decurrere vidi: 570 at quacumque trabes obstructaque saxa tenebant,	waters were unsullied—birds 588 disturbed it not; nor animals, nor boughs 589 that fall so often from the trees. Around 590 sweet grasses nourished by the stream grew; trees 591 that shaded from the sun let balmy airs 592 temper its waters. Here Narcissus, tired 593 of hunting and the heated noon, lay down, 594 attracted by the peaceful solitudes 595 and by the glassy spring. There as he stooped 596 to quench his thirst another thirst increased.
3.571	571 spumeus et fervens et ab obice saevior ibat. 572 Ecce cruentati redeunt et, Bacchus ubi esset, 573 quaerenti domino Bacchum vidisse negarunt; 574 "hunc" dixere "tamen comitem famulumque sacrorum 575 cepimus"; et tradunt manibus post terga ligatis 576 sacra dei quondam Tyrrhena gente secutum. 577 Adspicit hunc Pentheus oculis, quos ira tremendos 578 fecerat, et quamquam poenae vix tempora differt, 579 "o periture tuaque aliis documenta dature 580 morte" ait, "ede tuum nomen nomenque parentum 581 et patriam, morisque novi cur sacra frequentes." 582 Ille metu vacuus "nomen mihi" dixit "Acoetes,	597 While he is drinking he beholds himself 598 reflected in the mirrored pool—and loves; 599 loves an imagined body which contains 600 no substance, for he deems the mirrored shade 601 a thing of life to love. He cannot move, 602 for so he marvels at himself, and lies 603 with countenance unchanged, as if indeed 604 a statue carved of Parian marble. Long, 605 supine upon the bank, his gaze is fixed 606 on his own eyes, twin stars; his fingers shaped 607 as Bacchus might desire, his flowing hair 608 as glorious as Apollo's, and his cheeks 609 youthful and smooth; his ivory neck, his mouth 610 dreaming in sweetness, his complexion fair 611 and blushing as the rose in snow-drift white. 612 All that is lovely in himself he loves, 613 and in his witless way he wants himself:— 614 he who approves is equally approved; 615 he seeks, is sought, he burns and he is burnt. 616 And how he kisses the 583 patria Maeonia est, humili de plebe parentes. 584 Non mihi quae duri colerent pater arva iuvenci, 585 lanigerosve greges, non ulla armenta reliquit; 586 pauper et ipse fuit, linoque solebat et hamis 587 decipere et calamo salientes ducere pisces. 588 Ars illi sua census erat. Cum traderet artem, 589 “accipe quas habeo, studii successor et heres,” 590 dixit “opes.” Moriensque mihi nil ille reliquit 591 praeter aquas: unum hoc possum appellare paternum. 592 Mox ego, ne scopulis haererem semper in isdem, 593 addidici regimen dextra moderante carinae 594 flectere et Oleniae sidus pluviale capellae 595 Taygetenque hyadasque oculis arctonque notavi 596 ventorumque domos et portus puppibus aptos. 597 Forte petens Delum Chiae telluris ad oras 598 applicor et dextris adducor litora remis, 599 doque leves saltus udaeque inmittor harenae. 600 Nox ubi consumpta est (aurora rubescere prima	deceitful fount; 617 and how he thrusts his arms to catch the neck 618 that's pictured in the middle of the stream! 619 Yet never may he wreathe his arms around 620 that image of himself. He knows not what 621 he there beholds, but what he sees inflames 622 his longing, and the error that deceives 623 allures his eyes. But why, O foolish boy, 624 so vainly catching at this flitting form? 625 The cheat that you are seeking has no place. 626 Avert your gaze and you will lose your love,

3.601	601 coeperat), exsurgo, laticesque inferre recentes 602 admoneo monstroque viam, quae ducat ad undas. 603 Ipse, quid aura mihi tumulo promittat ab alto 604 prospicio comitesque voco repetoque carinam. 605 “Adsumus en!” inquit sociorum primus Opheltes, 606 utque putat, praedam deserto nactus in agro, 607 virginea puerum ducit per litora forma. 608 Ille mero somnoque gravis titubare videtur 609 vixque sequi. Specto cultum faciemque gradumque: 610 nil ibi quod credi posset mortale videbam. 611 Et sensi et dixi sociis: “Quod numen in isto	627 for this that holds your eyes is nothing save 628 the image of yourself reflected back to you. 629 It comes and waits with you; it has no life; 630 it will depart if you will only go.

	612 corpore sit, dubito; sed corpore numen in isto est. 613 Quisquis es, o faveas nostrisque laboribus adsis. 614 His quoque des veniam.” — “Pro nobis mitte precari” 615 Dictys ait, quo non alius conscendere summas 616 ocior antemnas prensoque rudente relabi. 617 Hoc Libys, hoc flavus, prorae tutela, Melanthus, 618 hoc probat Alcimedon, et qui requiemque modumque 619 voce dabat remis, animorum hortator Epopeus, 620 hoc omnes alii: praedae tam caeca cupido est. 621 “Non tamen hanc sacro violari pondere pinum 622 perpetiar” dixi: “pars hic mihi maxima iuris”; 623 inque aditu obsisto. Furit audacissimus omni 624 de numero Lycabas, qui Tusca pulsus ab urbe 625 exsilium dira poenam pro caede luebat. 626 Is mihi, dum resto, iuvenali guttura pugno 627 rupit et excussum misisset in aequora, si non 628 haesissem, quamvis amens, in fune retentus. 629 Impia turba probat factum. Tum denique Bacchus 630 (Bacchus enim fuerat), veluti clamore solutus
3.631	631 sit sopor aque mero redeant in pectora sensus, 632 “quid facitis? quis clamor?” ait “qua, dicite, nautae, 633 huc ope perveni? quo me deferre paratis?” 634 “Pone metum”, Proreus “et quos contingere portus 635 ede velis” dixit: “terra sistere petita.” — 636 “Naxon” ait Liber “cursus advertite vestros. 637 Illa mihi domus est, vobis erit hospita tellus.” 638 Per mare fallaces perque omnia numina iurant 639 sic fore, meque iubent pictae dare vela carinae. 640 Dextera Naxos erat. Dextra mihi lintea danti	631 Nor food nor rest can draw him thence—outstretched 632 upon the overshadowed green, his eyes 633 fixed on the mirrored image never may know 634 their longings satisfied, and by their sight 635 he is himself undone. Raising himself 636 a moment, he extends his arms around, 637 and, beckoning to the murmuring forest; “Oh, 638 ye aisled wood was ever man in love 639 more fatally than I? Your silent paths 640 have sheltered many a one whose love was told, 641 and ye have heard their voices. Ages vast 642 have rolled away since your forgotten birth, 643 but who is he through all those weary years 644 that ever pined away as I? Alas, 645 this fatal image wins my love, as I 646 behold it. But I cannot press my arms 647 around the

	641 “quid facis, o demens? quis te furor —?” inquit Opheltes. 642 Pro se quisque timet: “laevam pete” maxima nutu 643 pars mihi significat, pars quid velit aure susurrat. 644 Obstipui “capiat” que “aliquis moderamina” dixi 645 meque ministerio scelerisque artisque removi. 646 Increpor a cunctis, totumque inmurmurat agmen. 647 E quibus Aethalion “te scilicet omnis in uno 648 nostra salus posita est” ait, et subit ipse meumque 649 explet opus, Naxoque petit diversa relicta. 650 Tum deus inludens, tamquam modo denique fraudem 651 senserit, e puppi pontum prospectat adunca 652 et flenti similis “non haec mihi litora, nautae, 653 promisistis” ait, “non haec mihi terra rogata est. 654 Quo merui poenam facto? quae gloria vestra est, 655 si puerum iuvenes, si multi fallitis unum?” 656 Iamdudum flebam: lacrimas manus impia nostras 657 ridet et impellit properantibus aequora remis. 658 Per tibi nunc ipsum (nec enim praesentior illo 659 est deus) adiuro, tam me tibi vera referre, 660 quam veri maiora fide: stetit aequore puppis	form I see, the form that gives 648 me joy. What strange mistake has intervened 649 betwixt us and our love? It grieves me more 650 that neither lands nor seas nor mountains, no, 651 nor walls with closed gates deny our loves, 652 but only a little water keeps us far 653 asunder. Surely he desires my love 654 and my embraces, for as oft I strive 655 to kiss him, bending to the limpid stream 656 my lips, so often does he hold his face 657 fondly to me, and vainly struggles up. 658 It seems that I could touch him. 'Tis a strange 659 delusion that is keeping us apart. 660 “Whoever thou art, Come up! Deceive me not!
3.661	661 haud aliter quam si siccum navale teneret. 662 Illi admirantes remorum in verbere perstant 663 velaque deducunt geminaque ope currere temptant. 664 Impediunt hederae remos nexuque recurvo 665 serpunt et gravidis distinguunt vela corymbis. 666 Ipse racemiferis frontem circumdatus uvis 667 pampineis agitat velatam frondibus hastam. 668 Quem circa tigres simulacraque inania lyncum 669 pictarumque iacent fera corpora pantherarum.	661 Oh, whither when I fain pursue art thou? 662 Ah, surely I am young and fair, the Nymphs 663 have loved me; and when I behold thy smiles 664 I cannot tell thee what sweet hopes arise. 665 When I extend my loving arms to thee 666 thine also are extended me — thy smiles 667 return my own. When I was weeping, I 668 have seen thy tears, and every sign I make 669 thou cost return; and often thy sweet lips 670 have seemed to move, that, peradventure words, 671 which I have never heard, thou hast returned. 672 “No more my shade deceives me, I perceive 673 'Tis I in thee—I love myself—the flame 674 arises in my breast and burns my heart— 675 what

	670 Exsiluere viri, sive hoc insania fecit, 671 sive timor, primusque Medon nigrescere coepit 672 corpore et expresso spinae curvamine flecti. 673 Incipit huic Lycabas: “In quae miracula” dixit 674 “verteris?” et lati rictus et panda loquenti 675 naris erat, squamamque cutis durata trahebat. 676 At Libys obstantes dum vult obvertere remos, 677 in spatium resilire manus breve vidit et illas 678 iam non esse manus, iam pinnas posse vocari. 679 Alter, ad intortos cupiens dare bracchia funes, 680 bracchia non habuit, truncoque repandus in undas 681 corpore desiluit: falcata novissima cauda est, 682 qualia dimidiae sinuantur cornua lunae. 683 Undique dant saltus multaque adspergine rorant 684 emerguntque iterum redeuntque sub aequora rursus 685 inque chori ludunt speciem lascivaque iactant 686 corpora et acceptum patulis mare naribus efflant. 687 De modo viginti (tot enim ratis illa ferebat) 688 restabam solus. Pavidum gelidumque trementi 689 corpore vixque meum firmat deus “excute” dicens 690 “corde metum Diamque tene.” Delatus in illam	shall I do? Shall I at once implore? 676 Or should I linger till my love is sought? 677 What is it I implore? The thing that I 678 desire is mine—abundance makes me poor. 679 Oh, I am tortured by a strange desire 680 unknown to me before, for I would fain 681 put off this mortal form; which only means 682 I wish the object of my love away. 683 Grief saps my strength, the sands of life are run, 684 and in my early youth am I cut off; 685 but death is not my bane—it ends my woe.— 686 I would not death for this that is my love, 687 as two united in a single soul 688 would die as one.” 689 He spoke; and crazed with love, 690 returned to view the same face in the pool;
3.691	691 accessi sacris Baccheaque sacra frequento.” 692 “Praebuimus longis” Pentheus “ambagibus aures” 693 inquit “ut ira mora vires absumere posset. 694 Praecipitem famuli rapite hunc cruciataque diris 695 corpora tormentis Stygiae demittite nocti.” 696 Protinus abstractus solidis Tyrrhenus Acoetes 697 clauditur in tectis; et dum crudelia iussae 698 instrumenta necis ferrumque ignesque parantur,	691 and as he grieved his tears disturbed the stream, 692 and ripples on the surface, glassy clear, 693 defaced his mirrored form. And thus the youth, 694 when he beheld that lovely shadow go; 695 “Ah whither cost thou fly? Oh, I entreat 696 thee leave me not. Alas, thou cruel boy 697 thus to forsake thy lover. Stay with me 698 that I may see thy lovely form, for though 699 I may not touch thee I shall feed my eyes 700 and soothe my wretched pains.” And while he spoke 701 he rent his garment from the upper edge, 702 and beating on his naked breast, all white 703 as marble, every stroke

	699 sponte sua patuisse fores lapsasque lacertis 700 sponte sua fama est nullo solvente catenas. 701 Perstat Echionides. Nec iam iubet ire, sed ipse 702 vadit, ubi electus facienda ad sacra Cithaeron 703 cantibus et clara bacchantum voce sonabat. 704 Ut fremit acer equus, cum bellicus aere canoro 705 signa dedit tubicen, pugnaeque adsumit amorem, 706 Penthea sic ictus longis ululatibus aether 707 movit, et audito clamore recanduit ira. 708 Monte fere medio est, cingentibus ultima silvis, 709 purus ab arboribus, spectabilis undique campus. 710 Hic oculis illum cernentem sacra profanis 711 prima videt, prima est insano concita cursu, 712 prima suum misso violavit Penthea thyrso 713 mater. “Io, geminae” clamavit “adeste sorores! 714 ille aper, in nostris errat qui maximus agris, 715 ille mihi feriendus aper.” Ruit omnis in unum 716 turba furens; cunctae coeunt trepidumque sequuntur, 717 iam trepidum, iam verba minus violenta loquentem, 718 iam se damnantem, iam se peccasse fatentem. 719 Saucius ille tamen “fer opem, matertera” dixit 720 “Autonoë! moveant animos Actaeonis umbrae.”	produced a tint 704 as lovely as the apple streaked with red, 705 or as the glowing grape when purple bloom 706 touches the ripening clusters. 707 When as glass 708 again the rippling waters smoothed, and when 709 such beauty in the stream the youth observed, 710 no more could he endure. As in the flame 711 the yellow wax, or as the hoar-frost melts 712 in early morning 'neath the genial sun; 713 so did he pine away, by love consumed, 714 and slowly wasted by a hidden flame. 715 No vermeil bloom now mingled in the white 716 of his complexion fair; no strength has he, 717 no vigor, nor the comeliness that wrought 718 for love so long: alas, that handsome form 719 by Echo fondly loved may please no more. 720 But when she saw him in his hapless plight,
3.721	721 Illa, quis Actaeon, nescit dextramque precantis 722 abstulit: Inoo lacerata est altera raptu. 723 Non habet infelix quae matri bracchia tendat, 724 trunca sed ostendens deiectis vulnera membris 725 “adspice, mater!” ait. Visis ululavit Agaue 726 collaque iactavit movitque per aera crinem 727 avulsumque caput digitis complexa cruentis	721 though angry at his scorn, she only grieved. 722 As often as the love-lore boy complained, 723 “Alas!” “Alas!” her echoing voice returned; 724 and as he struck his hands against his arms, 725 she ever answered with her echoing sounds. 726 And as he gazed upon the mirrored pool 727 he said at last, “Ah, youth beloved in vain!” 728 “In vain, in vain!” the spot returned his words; 729 and when he breathed a sad “farewell!” “Farewell!” 730 sighed Echo too. He laid his wearied head, 731 and rested on the verdant grass; and those 732

	728 clamat “io comites, opus haec victoria nostrum est!” 729 Non citius frondes autumni frigore tactas 730 iamque male haerentes alta rapit arbore ventus, 731 quam sunt membra viri manibus direpta nefandis. 732 Talibus exemplis monitae nova sacra frequentant 733 turaque dant sanctasque colunt Ismenides aras.	bright eyes, which had so loved to gaze, entranced, 733 on their own master's beauty, sad Night closed. 734 And now although among the nether shades 735 his sad sprite roams, he ever loves to gaze 736 on his reflection in the Stygian wave. 737 His Naiad sisters mourned, and having clipped 738 their shining tresses laid them on his corpse: 739 and all the Dryads mourned: and Echo made 740 lament anew. And these would have upraised 741 his funeral pyre, and waved the flaming torch, 742 and made his bier; but as they turned their eyes 743 where he had been, alas he was not there! 744 And in his body's place a sweet flower grew, 745 golden and white, the white around the gold.
4.1	1 At non Alcithoe Minyeias orgia censet 2 accipienda dei, sed adhuc temeraria Bacchum 3 progeniem negat esse Iovis, sociasque sorores 4 inpietatis habet. Festum celebrare sacerdos 5 inmunesque operum famulas dominasque suorum 6 pectora pelle tegi, crinales solvere vittas, 7 serta coma, manibus frondentes sumere thyrsos 8 iusserat, et saevam laesi fore numinis iram 9 vaticinatus erat. Parent matresque nurusque 10 telasque calathosque infectaque pensa reponunt, 11 turaque dant Bacchumque vocant Bromiumque Lyaeumque 12 ignigenamque satumque iterum solumque bimatrem: 13 additur his Nyseus indetonsusque Thyoneus, 14 et cum Lenaeo genialis consitor uvae, 15 Nycteliusque Eleleusque parens et Iacchus et Euhan, 16 et quae praeterea per Graias plurima gentes 17 nomina, Liber, habes. Tibi enim inconsumpta iuventa est, 18 tu puer aeternus, tu formosissimus alto 19 conspiceris caelo, tibi, cum sine cornibus adstas, 20 virgineum caput est. Oriens tibi victus, adusque 21 decolor extremo qua tingitur India	1 Alcithoe, daughter of King Minyas, 2 consents not to the orgies of the God; 3 denies that Bacchus is the son of Jove, 4 and her two sisters join her in that crime. 5 'Twas festal-day when matrons and their maids, 6 keeping it sacred, had forbade all toil.— 7 And having draped their bosoms with wild skins, 8 they loosed their long hair for the sacred wreaths, 9 and took the leafy thyrsus in their hands;— 10 for so the priest commanded them. Austere 11 the wrath of Bacchus if his power be scorned. 12 Mothers and youthful brides obeyed the priest; 13 and putting by their wickers and their webs, 14 dropt their unfinished toils to offer up 15 frankincense to the God; invoking him 16 with many names:—“O Bacchus! O Twice-born! 17 O Fire-begot! Thou only child Twice-mothered! 18 God of all those who plant the luscious grape! 19 O Liber!” All these names and many more, 20 for ages known—throughout the lands of Greece. 21 “Thy youth is not consumed by wasting time; 22 and lo, thou art an ever-youthful boy, 23 most beautiful of all the Gods of Heaven, 24 smooth as a virgin when thy horns are hid.— 25 The distant east to tawny India's clime, 26 where rolls remotest Ganges to the sea, 27 was conquered by thy might.—O Most-revered! 28 Thou didst destroy the doubting Pentheus, 29 and hurled the sailors' bodies in the deep, 30 and smote Lycurgus, wielder of the ax.

	Gange: 22 Penthea tu, venerande, bipenniferumque Lycurgum 23 sacrilegos mactas, Tyrrhenaque mittis in aequor 24 corpora, tu biiugum pictis insignia frenis 25 colla premis lyncum; bacchae satyrique sequuntur, 26 quique senex ferula titubantes ebrius artus 27 sustinet et pando non fortiter haeret asello. 28 Quacumque ingrederis, clamor iuvenalis et una 29 femineae voces inpulsaque tympana palmis 30 concavaque aera sonant longoque foramine buxus.
4.31	31 “Placatus mitisque” rogant Ismenides “adsis,” 32 iussaque sacra colunt. Solae Minyeides intus 33 intempestiva turbantes festa Minerva 34 aut ducunt lanas, aut stamina pollice versant, 35 aut haerent telae famulasque laboribus urgent. 36 E quibus una levi deducens pollice filum 37 “dum cessant aliae commentaque sacra frequentant, 38 nos quoque, quas Pallas, melior dea, detinet” inquit, 39 “utile opus manuum vario sermone levemus: 40 perque vices aliquid, quod tempora longa videri 41 non sinat, in medium vacuas referamus ad aures.” 42 Dicta probant primamque iubent narrare sorores. 43 Illa, quid e multis referat (nam plurima norat), 44 cogitat et dubia est, de te, Babylonia, narret, 45 Derceti, quam versa squamis velantibus artus 46 stagna Palaestini credunt motasse figura; 47 an magis, ut sumptis illius filia pennis 48 extremos albis in turribus egerit annos; 49 nais an ut cantu nimiumque potentibus herbis 50 verterit in tacitos iuvenalia corpora	31 “And thou dost guide thy lynxes, double-yoked, 32 with showy harness.—Satyrs follow thee; 33 and Bacchanals, and old Silenus, drunk, 34 unsteady on his staff; jolting so rough 35 on his small back-bent ass; and all the way 36 resounds a youthful clamour; and the screams 37 of women! and the noise of tambourines! 38 And the hollow cymbals! and the boxwood flutes,— 39 fitted with measured holes.—Thou art implored 40 by all Ismenian women to appear 41 peaceful and mild; and they perform thy rites.” 42 Only the daughters of King Minyas 43 are carding wool within their fastened doors, 44 or twisting with their thumbs the fleecy yarn, 45 or working at the web. So they corrupt 46 the sacred festival with needless toil, 47 keeping their hand-maids busy at the work. 48 And one of them, while drawing out the thread 49 with nimble thumb, anon began to speak; 50 “While others loiter and frequent these rites 51 fantastic, we the wards of Pallas, much 52 to be preferred, by speaking novel thoughts 53 may lighten labour. Let us each in turn, 54 relate to an attentive audience, 55 a novel tale; and so the hours may glide.” 56 it pleased her sisters, and they ordered her 57 to tell the story that she loved the most. 58 So, as she counted in her well-stored mind 59 the many tales she knew, first doubted she 60 whether to tell the tale of Derceto,— pisces, 51 donec idem passa est; an, quae poma alba ferebat, 52 ut nunc nigra ferat contactu sanguinis arbor. 53 Hoc placet, hanc, quoniam vulgaris fabula non est, 54 talibus orsa modis, lana sua fila sequente: 55 “Pyramus et Thisbe, iuvenum pulcherrimus alter, 56 altera, quas oriens habuit, praelata puellis, 57 contiguas tenuere domos, ubi dicitur altam 58 coctilibus muris cinxisse Semiramis urbem. 59 Notitiam primosque gradus vicinia fecit: 60 tempore crevit amor. Taedae quoque iure coissent:

4.61	61 sed vetuere patres. Quod non potuere vetare, 62 ex aequo captis ardebant mentibus ambo. 63 Conscius omnis abest: nutu signisque loquuntur, 64 quoque magis tegitur, tectus magis aestuat ignis. 65 Fissus erat tenui rima, quam duxerat olim, 66 cum fieret paries domui communis utrique. 67 Id vitium nulli per saecula longa notatum 68 (quid non sentit amor?) primi vidistis amantes, 69 et vocis fecistis iter; tutaeque per illud 70 murmure blanditiae minimo transire solebant. 71 Saepe, ubi constiterant hinc Thisbe, Pyramus illinc, 72 inque vices fuerat captatus anhelitus oris, 73 “invide” dicebant “paries, quid amantibus obstas? 74 quantum erat, ut sineres toto nos corpore iungi, 75 aut hoc si nimium est, vel ad oscula danda pateres? 76 Nec sumus ingrati: tibi nos debere fatemur, 77 quod datus est verbis ad amicas transitus aures.” 78 Talia diversa nequiquam sede locuti 79 sub noctem dixere ”vale” partique dedere	61 that Babylonian, who, aver the tribes 62 of Palestine, in limpid ponds yet lives,— 63 her body changed, and scales upon her limbs; 64 or how her daughter, having taken wings, 65 passed her declining years in whitened towers. 66 Or should she tell of Nais, who with herbs, 67 too potent, into fishes had transformed 68 the bodies of her lovers, till she met 69 herself the same sad fate; or of that tree 70 which sometime bore white fruit, but now is changed 71 and darkened by the blood that stained its roots.— 72 Pleased with the novelty of this, at once 73 she tells the tale of Pyramus and Thisbe;— 74 and swiftly as she told it unto them, 75 the fleecy wool was twisted into threads. 76 When Pyramus and Thisbe, who were known 77 the one most handsome of all youthful men, 78 the other loveliest of all eastern girls,— 79 lived in adjoining houses, near the walls 80 that Queen Semiramis had built of brick 81 around her famous city, they grew fond, 82 and loved each other— meeting often there— 83 and as the days went by their love increased. 84 They wished to join in marriage, but that joy 85 their fathers had forbidden them to hope; 86 and yet the passion that with equal strength 87 inflamed their minds no parents could forbid. 88 No relatives had guessed their secret love, 89 for all their converse was by nods and signs; 90 and as a smoldering fire may gather heat, 91 the more 'tis

	80 oscula quisque suae non pervenientia contra. 81 Postera nocturnos aurora removerat ignes, 82 solque pruinosas radiis siccaverat herbas: 83 ad solitum coiere locum. Tum murmure parvo 84 multa prius questi, statuunt, ut nocte silenti 85 fallere custodes foribusque excedere temptent, 86 cumque domo exierint, urbis quoque tecta relinquant; 87 neve sit errandum lato spatiantibus arvo, 88 conveniant ad busta Nini lateantque sub umbra 89 arboris. Arbor ibi, niveis uberrima pomis 90 ardua morus, erat, gelido contermina fonti.	smothered, so their love increased. 92 Now, it so happened, a partition built 93 between their houses, many years ago, 94 was made defective with a little chink; 95 a small defect observed by none, although 96 for ages there; but what is hid from love? 97 Our lovers found the secret opening, 98 and used its passage to convey the sounds 99 of gentle, murmured words, whose tuneful note 100 passed oft in safety through that hidden way. 101 There, many a time, they stood on either side, 102 thisbe on one and Pyramus the other, 103 and when their warm breath touched from lip to lip, 104 their sighs were such as this: “Thou envious wall 105 why art thou standing in the way of those
4.91	91 Pacta placent. Et lux, tarde discedere visa, 92 praecipitatur aquis, et aquis nox exit ab isdem. 93 Callida per tenebras versato cardine Thisbe 94 egreditur fallitque suos, adopertaque vultum 95 pervenit ad tumulum, dictaque sub arbore sedit. 96 Audacem faciebat amor. Venit ecce recenti 97 caede leaena boum spumantes oblita rictus, 98 depositura sitim vicini fontis in unda. 99 Quam procul ad lunae radios Babylonia Thisbe 100 vidit et obscurum timido pede fugit in antrum, 101 dumque fugit, tergo velamina lapsa reliquit. 102 Ut lea saeva sitim multa conpescuit unda, 103 dum redit in silvas, inventos forte sine ipsa 104 ore cruentato tenues laniavit amictus. 105 Serius egressus vestigia vidit in alto 106 pulvere certa ferae totoque expalluit ore 107 Pyramus: ut vero vestem quoque sanguine tinctam 108 repperit, “una duos” inquit “nox perdet amantes.	106 who die for love? What harm could happen thee 107 shouldst thou permit us to enjoy our love? 108 But if we ask too much, let us persuade 109 that thou wilt open while we kiss but once: 110 for, we are not ungrateful; unto thee 111 we own our debt; here thou hast left a way 112 that breathed words may enter loving ears.,” 113 so vainly whispered they, and when the night 114 began to darken they exchanged farewells; 115 made presence that they kissed a fond farewell 116 vain kisses that to love might none avail. 117 When dawn removed the glimmering lamps of night, 118 and the bright sun had dried the dewy grass 119 again they met where they had told their love; 120 and now complaining of their hapless fate, 121 in murmurs gentle, they at last resolved, 122 away to slip upon the quiet night, 123 elude their parents, and, as soon as free, 124 quit the great builded city and their homes. 125 Fearful to wander in the pathless fields, 126 they chose a trysting place, the tomb of Ninus, 127 where safely they might hide unseen, beneath 128 the shadow of a tall mulberry tree, 129 covered with snow-white fruit, close by a spring. 130 All is arranged according to their hopes: 131 and now the daylight, seeming slowly moved, 132 sinks in the deep waves, and the tardy night 133 arises from the spot where day declines. 134 Quickly, the clever

	109 E quibus illa fuit longa dignissima vita, 110 nostra nocens anima est: ego te, miseranda, peremi, 111 in loca plena metus qui iussi nocte venires, 112 nec prior huc veni. Nostrum divellite corpus, 113 et scelerata fero consumite viscera morsu, 114 o quicumque sub hac habitatis rupe, leones. 115 Sed timidi est optare necem.” Velamina Thisbes 116 tollit et ad pactae secum fert arboris umbram; 117 utque dedit notae lacrimas, dedit oscula vesti, 118 “accipe nunc” inquit “nostri quoque sanguinis haustus!” 119 quoque erat accinctus, demisit in ilia ferrum, 120 nec mora, ferventi moriens e vulnere traxit.	Thisbe having first 135 deceived her parents, opened the closed door.
4.121	121 Ut iacuit resupinus humo: cruor emicat alte, 122 non aliter quam cum vitiato fistula plumbo 123 scinditur et tenui stridente foramine longas 124 eiaculatur aquas atque ictibus aera rumpit. 125 Arborei fetus adspergine caedis in atram 126 vertuntur faciem, madefactaque sanguine radix 127 purpureo tingit pendentia mora colore. 128 Ecce metu nondum posito, ne fallat amantem, 129 illa redit iuvenemque oculis animoque requirit, 130 quantaque vitarit narrare pericula gestit. 131 Utque locum et visa cognoscit in arbore formam, 132 sic facit incertam pomi color: haeret, an haec sit. 133 Dum dubitat, tremebunda videt pulsare cruentum 134 membra solum, retroque pedem tulit, oraque buxo 135 pallidiora gerens exhorruit aequoris instar, 136 quod tremit, exigua cum summum stringitur aura. 137 Sed postquam remorata suos cognovit amores,	136 She flitted in the silent night away; 137 and, having veiled her face, reached the great tomb, 138 and sat beneath the tree; love made her bold. 139 There, as she waited, a great lioness 140 approached the nearby spring to quench her thirst: 141 her frothing jaws incarnadined with blood 142 of slaughtered oxen. As the moon was bright, 143 Thisbe could see her, and affrighted fled 144 with trembling footstep to a gloomy cave; 145 and as she ran she slipped and dropped her veil, 146 which fluttered to the ground. She did not dare 147 to save it. Wherefore, when the savage beast 148 had taken a great draft and slaked her thirst, 149 and thence had turned to seek her forest lair, 150 she found it on her way, and full of rage, 151 tore it and stained it with her bloody jaws: 152 but Thisbe, fortunate, escaped unseen. 153 Now Pyramus had not gone out so soon 154 as Thisbe to the tryst; and, when he saw 155 the certain traces of that savage beast, 156 imprinted in the yielding dust, his face 157 went white with fear; but when he found the veil 158 covered with blood, he cried; “Alas, one night 159 has caused the ruin of two lovers! Thou 160 wert most deserving of completed days, 161 but as for me, my heart is guilty! I 162 destroyed thee! O my love! I bade thee

	138 percutit indignos claro plangore lacertos, 139 et laniata comas amplexaque corpus amatum 140 vulnera supplevit lacrimis fletumque cruori 141 miscuit et gelidis in vultibus oscula figens 142 “Pyrame” clamavit “quis te mihi casus ademit? 143 Pyrame, responde: tua te carissima Thisbe 144 nominat: exaudi vultusque attolle iacentes!” 145 Ad nomen Thisbes oculos iam morte gravatos 146 Pyramus erexit, visaque recondidit illa. 147 Quae postquam vestemque suam cognovit et ense 148 vidit ebur vacuum, “tua te manus” inquit “amorque 149 perdidit, infelix. Est et mihi fortis in unum 150 hoc manus, est et amor: dabit hic in vulnera vires.	come 163 out in the dark night to a lonely haunt, 164 and failed to go before. Oh! whatever lurks 165 beneath this rock, though ravenous lion, tear
4.151	151 Persequar exstinctum letique miserrima dicar 152 causa comesque tui; quique a me morte revelli 153 heu sola poteras, poteris nec morte revelli. 154 Hoc tamen amborum verbis estote rogati, 155 o multum miseri meus illiusque parentes, 156 ut quos certus amor, quos hora novissima iunxit, 157 conponi tumulo non invideatis eodem. 158 At tu quae ramis arbor miserabile corpus 159 nunc tegis unius, mox es tectura duorum, 160 signa tene caedis pullosque et luctibus aptos 161 semper habe fetus, gemini monimenta cruoris.” 162 Dixit, et aptato pectus mucrone sub imum 163 incubuit ferro, quod adhuc a caede tepebat. 164 Vota tamen tetigere deos, tetigere parentes: 165 nam color in pomo est, ubi permaturuit, ater, 166 quodque rogis superest, una requiescit in urna.”	166 my guilty flesh, and with most cruel jaws 167 devour my cursed entrails! What? Not so; 168 it is a craven's part to wish for death!” 169 So he stopped briefly; and took up the veil; 170 went straightway to the shadow of the tree; 171 and as his tears bedewed the well-known veil, 172 he kissed it oft and sighing said, “Kisses 173 and tears are thine, receive my blood as well.” 174 And he imbrued the steel, girt at his side, 175 deep in his bowels; and plucked it from the wound, 176 a-faint with death. As he fell back to earth, 177 his spurting blood shot upward in the air; 178 so, when decay has rift a leaden pipe 179 a hissing jet of water spurts on high.— 180 By that dark tide the berries on the tree 181 assumed a deeper tint, for as the roots 182 soaked up the blood the pendent mulberries 183 were dyed a purple tint. 184 Thisbe returned, 185 though trembling still with fright, for now she thought 186 her lover must await her at the tree, 187 and she should haste before he feared for her. 188 Longing to tell him of her great escape 189 she sadly looked for him with faithful eyes; 190 but when she saw the spot and the changed tree, 191 she doubted could they be the same, for so 192 the colour

	167 Desierat, mediumque fuit breve tempus, et orsa est 168 dicere Leuconoe: vocem tenuere sorores. 169 “Hunc quoque, siderea qui temperat omnia luce, 170 cepit amor Solem: Solis referemus amores. 171 Primus adulterium Veneris cum Marte putatur 172 hic vidisse deus: videt hic deus omnia primus. 173 Indoluit facto, Iunonigenaeque marito 174 furta tori furtique locum monstravit. At illi 175 et mens et quod opus fabrilis dextra tenebat 176 excidit. Extemplo graciles ex aere catenas 177 retiaque et laqueos, quae lumina fallere possent, 178 elimat (non illud opus tenuissima vincant 179 stamina, non summo quae pendet aranea tigno), 180 utque leves tactus momentaque parva sequantur	of the hanging fruit deceived. 193 While doubt dismayed her, on the ground she saw 194 the wounded body covered with its blood;— 195 she started backward, and her face grew pale
4.181	181 efficit et lecto circumdata collocat arte. 182 Ut venere torum coniunx et adulter in unum, 183 arte viri vinclisque nova ratione paratis 184 in mediis ambo deprensi amplexibus haerent. 185 Lemnius extemplo valvas patefecit eburnas 186 admisitque deos: illi iacuere ligati 187 turpiter; atque aliquis de dis non tristibus optat 188 sic fieri turpis: superi risere, diuque 189 haec fuit in toto notissima fabula caelo. 190 Exigit indicii memorem Cythereia poenam, 191 inque vices illum, tectos qui laesit amores, 192 laedit amore pari. Quid nunc, Hyperione nate, 193 forma colorque tibi radiataque lumina prosunt? 194 Nempe tuis omnes qui terras ignibus uris, 195 ureris igne novo; quique omnia cernere debes, 196 Leucothoen spectas, et virgine figis	196 and ashen; and she shuddered like the sea, 197 which trembles when its face is lightly skimmed 198 by the chill breezes;—and she paused a space;— 199 but when she knew it was the one she loved, 200 she struck her tender breast and tore her hair. 201 Then wreathing in her arms his loved form, 202 she bathed the wound with tears, mingling her grief 203 in his unquenched blood; and as she kissed 204 his death-cold features wailed; “Ah Pyramus, 205 what cruel fate has taken thy life away? 206 Pyramus! Pyramus! awake! awake! 207 It is thy dearest Thisbe calls thee! Lift 208 thy drooping head! Alas,”—At Thisbe's name 209 he raised his eyes, though languorous in death, 210 and darkness gathered round him as he gazed. 211 And then she saw her veil; and near it lay 212 his ivory sheath—but not the trusty sword 213 and once again she wailed; “Thy own right hand, 214 and thy great passion have destroyed thee!— 215 And I? my hand shall be as bold as thine— 216 my love shall nerve me to the fatal deed— 217 thee, I will follow to eternity — 218 though I be censured for the wretched cause, 219 so surely I shall in una, 197 quos mundo debes oculos. Modo surgis Eoo 198 temperius caelo, modo serius incidis undis, 199 spectandique mora brumales porrigis horas, 200 deficis interdum, vitiumque in lumina mentis 201 transit et obscurus mortalia pectora terres. 202 Nec, tibi quod lunae terris propioris imago 203 obstiterit, palles: facit hunc amor iste colorem. 204 Diligis hanc unam; nec te Clymeneque Rhodosque 205 nec tenet Aeaeae genetrix pulcherrima Circes, 206 quaeque tuos Clytie quamvis despecta petebat 207 concubitus ipsoque illo grave vulnus habebat 208 tempore: Leucothoe multarum oblivia fecit, 209 gentis odoriferae quam formosissima partu 210 edidit Eurynome. Sed postquam filia crevit,	share thy wretched fate:— 220 alas, whom death could me alone bereave, 221 thou shalt not from my love be reft by death! 222 And, O ye wretched parents, mine and his, 223 let our misfortunes and our pleadings melt 224 your hearts, that ye no more deny to those 225 whom constant love and lasting death unite—teste relicto 226 “ille ego sum” dixit, “qui longum metior annum, 227 omnia qui video, per quem videt omnia tellus, 228 mundi oculus. Mihi, crede, places.” Pavet illa, metuque 229 et colus et fusus digitis cecidere remissis. 230 Ipse timor decuit. Nec longius ille moratus 231 in veram rediit speciem solitumque nitorem: 232 at virgo, quamvis inopino territa visu, 233 victa nitore dei posita vim passa querella est. 234 Invidit Clytie (neque enim moderatus in illa 235 Solis amor fuerat), stimulataque paelicis ira 236 vulgat adulterium diffamatumque parenti 237 indicat. Ille ferox inmansuetusque precantem 238 tendentemque manus ad lumina Solis et “ille 239 vim tulit invitae” dicentem defodit alta 240 crudus humo, tumulumque super gravis addit harenae.

4.211	211 quam mater cunctas, tam matrem filia vicit. 212 Rexit Achaemenias urbes pater Orchamus, isque 213 septimus a prisco numeratur origine Belo. 214 Axe sub Hesperio sunt pascua Solis equorum. 215 Ambrosiam pro gramine habent: ea fessa diurnis 216 membra ministeriis nutrit reparatque labori. 217 Dumque ibi quadrupedes caelestia pabula carpunt, 218 noxque vicem peragit, thalamos deus intrat amatos, 219 versus in Eurynomes faciem genetricis, et inter 220 bis sex Leucothoen famulas ad lumina cernit 221 levia versato ducentem stamina fuso. 222 Ergo ubi ceu mater carae dedit oscula natae, 223 “res” ait “arcana est. Famulae, discedite neve 224 eripite arbitrium matri secreta loquendi.” 225 Paruerant: thalamoque deus sine	226 entomb us in a single sepulchre. 227 “And, O thou tree of many-branching boughs, 228 spreading dark shadows on the corpse of one, 229 destined to cover twain, take thou our fate 230 upon thy head; mourn our untimely deaths; 231 let thy fruit darken for a memory, 232 an emblem of our blood.” No more she said; 233 and having fixed the point below her breast, 234 she fell on the keen sword, still warm with his red blood. 235 But though her death was out of Nature's law 236 her prayer was answered, for it moved the Gods 237 and moved their parents. Now the Gods have changed 238 the ripened fruit which darkens on the branch: 239 and from the funeral pile their parents sealed 240 their gathered ashes in a single urn.

4.241	241 Dissipat hunc radiis Hyperione natus iterque 242 dat tibi, qua possis defossos promere vultus. 243 Nec tu iam poteras enectum pondere terrae 244 tollere, nympha, caput corpusque exsangue iacebas. 245 Nil illo fertur volucrum moderator equorum 246 post Phaethonteos vidisse dolentius ignes. 247 Ille quidem gelidos radiorum viribus artus 248 si queat in vivum temptat revocare calorem: 249 sed quoniam tantis fatum conatibus obstat, 250 nectare odorato sparsit corpusque locumque, 251 multaque praequestus “tanges tamen aethera” dixit. 252 Protinus inbutum caelesti nectare corpus 253 dilicuit terramque suo madefecit odore: 254 virgaque per glaebas sensim	241 So ended she; at once Leuconoe 242 took the narrator's thread; and as she spoke 243 her sisters all were silent. 244 “Even the Sun 245 that rules the world was captive made of Love. 246 My theme shall be a love-song of the Sun. 247 'Tis said the Lord of Day, whose wakeful eye 248 beholds at once whatever may transpire, 249 witnessed the loves of Mars and Venus. Grieved 250 to know the wrong, he called the son of Juno, 251 Vulcan, and gave full knowledge of the deed, 252 showing how Mars and Venus shamed his love, 253 as they defiled his bed. Vulcan amazed,— 254 the nimble-thoughted Vulcan lost his wits, 255 so that he dropped the work his right hand held. 256 But turning from all else at once he set 257 to file out chains of brass, delicate, fine, 258 from which to fashion nets invisible, 259 filmy of mesh and airy as the thread 260 of insect-web, that from the rafter swings.— 261 Implicit woven that they yielded soft 262 the slightest movement or the gentlest touch, 263 with cunning skill

	radicibus actis 255 turea surrexit tumulumque cacumine rupit. 256 At Clytien, quamvis amor excusare dolorem, 257 indiciumque dolor poterat, non amplius auctor 258 lucis adit venerisque modum sibi fecit in illa. 259 Tabuit ex illo dementer amoribus usa 260 nympha larum inpatiens, et sub Iove nocte dieque 261 sedit humo nuda, nudis incompta capillis, 262 perque novem luces expers undaeque cibique 263 rore mero lacrimisque suis ieiunia pavit 264 nec se movit humo: tantum spectabat euntis 265 ora dei vultusque suos flectebat ad illum. 266 Membra ferunt haesisse solo, partemque coloris 267 luridus exsangues pallor convertit in herbas; 268 est in parte rubor, violaeque simillimus ora 269 flos tegit. Illa suum, quamvis radice tenetur, 270 vertitur ad Solem, mutataque servat amorem.”	he drew them round the bed 264 where they were sure to dally. Presently 265 appeared the faithless wife, and on the couch 266 lay down to languish with her paramour.— 267 Meshed in the chains they could not thence arise, 268 nor could they else but lie in strict embrace,— 269 cunningly thus entrapped by Vulcan's wit.— 270 At once the Lemnian cuckold opened wide
4.271	271 Dixerat, et factum mirabile ceperat aures. 272 Pars fieri potuisse negant, pars omnia veros 273 posse deos memorant: sed non et Bacchus in illis. 274 Poscitur Alcithoe, postquam siluere sorores. 275 Quae radio stantis percurrens stamina telae 276 “vulgatos taceo” dixit “pastoris amores 277 Daphnidis Idaei, quem nymphe paelicis ira 278 contulit in saxum (tantus dolor urit amantes). 279 Nec loquor, ut quondam naturae iure novato 280 ambiguus fuerit modo vir, modo femina Sithon. 281 Te quoque, nunc adamas, quondam fidissime parvo, 282 Celmi, Iovi, largoque satos Curetas ab imbri 283 et Crocon in parvos versum cum	271 the folding ivory doors and called the Gods,— 272 to witness. There they lay disgraced and bound. 273 I wot were many of the lighter Gods 274 who wished themselves in like disgraceful bonds.— 275 The Gods were moved to laughter: and the tale 276 was long most noted in the courts of Heaven. 277 The Cytherean Venus brooded on 278 the Sun's betrayal of her stolen joys, 279 and thought to torture him in passion's pains, 280 and wreak requital for the pain he caused. 281 Son of Hyperion! what avails thy light? 282 What is the profit of thy glowing heat? 283 Lo, thou whose flames have parched innumerous lands, 284 thyself art burning with another flame! 285 And thou whose orb should joy the universe 286 art gazing only on Leucothea's charms. 287 Thy glorious eye on one fair maid is fixed, 288 forgetting all besides. Too early thou 289 art rising from thy bed of orient skies, 290 too late thy setting in the

	Smilace flores 284 praetereo, dulcique animos novitate tenebo. 285 Unde sit infamis, quare male fortibus undis 286 Salmacis enervet tactosque remolliat artus, 287 discite. Causa latet, vis est notissima fontis. 288 Mercurio puerum diva Cythereide natum 289 naides Idaeis enutrivere sub antris; 290 cuius erat facies, in qua materque paterque 291 cognosci possent; nomen quoque traxit ab illis. 292 Is tria cum primum fecit quinquennia, montes 293 deseruit patrios, Idaque altrice relicta 294 ignotis errare locis, ignota videre 295 flumina gaudebat, studio minuente laborem. 296 Ille etiam Lycias urbes Lyciaeque propinquos 297 Caras adit. Videt hic stagnum lucentis ad imum 298 usque solum lymphae. Non illic canna palustris 299 nec steriles ulvae nec acuta cuspide iunci: 300 perspicuus liquor est; stagni tamen ultima vivo	western waves; 291 so taking time to gaze upon thy love, 292 thy frenzy lengthens out the wintry hour! 293 And often thou art darkened in eclipse, 294 dark shadows of this trouble in thy mind, 295 unwonted aspect, casting man perplexed 296 in abject terror. Pale thou art, though not 297 betwixt thee and the earth the shadowous moon 298 bedims thy devious way. Thy passion gives 299 to grief thy countenance—for her thy heart 300 alone is grieving—Clymene and Rhodos,
4.301	301 caespite cinguntur semperque virentibus herbis. 302 Nympha colit, sed nec venatibus apta, nec arcus 303 flectere quae soleat nec quae contendere cursu, 304 solaque naiadum celeri non nota Dianae. 305 Saepe suas illi fama est dixisse sorores: 306 “Salmaci, vel iaculum vel pictas sume pharetras, 307 et tua cum duris venatibus otia misce.” 308 Nec iaculum sumit nec pictas illa pharetras, 309 nec sua cum duris venatibus otia miscet, 310 sed modo fonte suo formosos perluit artus, 311 saepe Cytoriaco deducit pectine crines 312 et, quid se deceat, spectatas consulit undas; 313 nunc perlucenti circumdata corpus	301 and Persa, mother of deluding Circe, 302 are all forgotten for thy doting hope; 303 even Clytie, who is yearning for thy love, 304 no more can charm thee; thou art so foredone. 305 Leucothea is the cause of many tears, 306 Leucothea, daughter of Eurynome, 307 most beauteous matron of Arabia's strand, 308 where spicey odours blow. Eurynome 309 in youthful prime excelled her mother's grace, 310 and, save her daughter, all excelled besides. 311 Leucothea's father, Orchamas was king 312 where Achaemenes whilom held the sway; 313 and Orchamas from ancient Belus' death 314 might count his reign the seventh in descent. 315 The dark-night pastures of Apollo's steeds 316 are hid below the western skies; when there, 317 and spent with toil, in lieu of nibbling herbs 318 they take ambrosial food: it gives their limbs 319 restoring strength and nourishes anew. 320 Now while these coursers eat celestial food 321 and Night

	amictu 314 mollibus aut foliis aut mollibus incubat herbis; 315 saepe legit flores. Et tunc quoque forte legebat, 316 cum puerum vidit visumque optavit habere. 317 Nec tamen ante adiit, etsi properabat adire, 318 quam se conposuit, quam circumspexit amictus, 319 et finxit vultum et meruit formosa videri. 320 Tum sic orsa loqui: “Puer o dignissime credi 321 esse deus, seu tu deus es, potes esse Cupido, 322 sive es mortalis, qui te genuere, beati, 323 et frater felix, et fortunata profecto, 324 siqua tibi soror est, et quae dedit ubera nutrix: 325 sed longe cunctis longeque beatior illa, 326 siqua tibi sponsa est, siquam dignabere taeda. 327 Haec tibi sive aliqua est, mea sit furtiva voluptas, 328 seu nulla est, ego sim, thalamumque ineamus eundem.” 329 Nais ab his tacuit. Pueri rubor ora notavit 330 (nescit enim, quid amor), sed et erubuisse decebat.	resumes his reign, the god appears 322 disguised, unguessed, as old Eurynome 323 to fair Leucothea as she draws the threads, 324 all smoothly twisted from her spindle. There 325 she sits with twice six hand-maids ranged around, 326 and as the god beholds her at the door 327 he kisses her, as if a child beloved 328 and he her mother. And he spoke to her: 329 “Let thy twelve hand-maids leave us undisturbed, 330 for I have things of close import to tell,
4.331	331 Hic color aprica pendentibus arbore pomis 332 aut ebori tincto est, aut sub candore rubenti, 333 cum frustra resonant aera auxiliaria, lunae. 334 Poscenti nymphae sine fine sororia saltem 335 oscula iamque manus ad eburnea colla ferenti 336 “desinis? aut fugio, tecumque” ait “ista relinquo.” 337 Salmacis extimuit “loca” que “haec tibi libera trado, 338 hospes” ait, simulatque gradu discedere verso, 339 tunc quoque respiciens, fruticumque recondita silva 340 delituit, flexuque genu submisit. At ille, 341 scilicet ut vacuis et inobservatus in herbis, 342 huc it et hinc illuc, et in	331 and seemly, from a mother to her child.”, 332 so when they all withdrew the god began, 333 “Lo, I am he who measures the long year; 334 I see all things, and through me the wide world 335 may see all things; I am the glowing eye 336 of the broad universe! Thou art to me 337 the glory of the earth!” Filled with alarm, 338 from her relaxed fingers she let fall 339 the distaff and the spindle, but, her fear 340 so lovely in her beauty seemed, the God 341 no longer brooked delay: he changed his form 342 back to his wonted beauty and resumed 343 his bright celestial. Startled at the sight 344 the maid recoiled a space; but presently 345 the glory of the god inspired her love; 346 and all her timid doubts dissolved away; 347 without complaint she melted in his arms. 348 So ardently the bright Apollo loved, 349 that Clytie, envious of Leucothea's joy, adludentibus undis 343 summa pedum taloque tenus vestigia tingit; 344 nec mora, temperie blandarum captus aquarum 345 mollia de tenero velamina corpore ponit. 346 Tum vero placuit, nudaeque cupidine formae 347 Salmacis exarsit: flagrant quoque lumina nymphae, 348 non aliter quam cum puro nitidissimus orbe 349 opposita speculi referitur imagine Phoebus. 350 Vixque moram patitur, vix iam sua gaudia differt, 351 iam cupit amplecti, iam se male continet amens. 352 Ille cavis velox adplauso corpore palmis 353 desilit in latices, alternaque bracchia ducens 354 in liquidis translucet aquis, ut eburnea siquis 355 signa tegat claro vel candida lilia vitro. 356 “Vicimus et meus est!” exclamat nais et omni 357 veste procul iacta mediis inmittitur undis, 358 pugnantemque tenet luctantiaque oscula carpit, 359 subiectatque manus invitaque pectora tangit, 360 et nunc hac iuveni, nunc circumfunditur illac;	350 where evil none was known, a scandal made; 351 and having published wide their secret love, 352 leucothea's father also heard the tale. 353 Relentlessly and fierce, his cruel hand 354 buried his living daughter in the ground, 355 who, while her arms implored the glowing Sun, 356 complained. “For love of thee my life is lost.” 357 And as she wailed her father sowed her there. 358 Hyperion's Son began with piercing heat 359 to scatter the loose sand, a way to open, 360 that she might look with beauteous features forth

4.361	361 denique nitentem contra elabique volentem 362 inplicat, ut serpens, quam regia sustinet ales 363 sublimemque rapit: pendens caput illa pedesque 364 adligat et cauda spatiantes inplicat alas: 365 utve solent hederae longos intexere truncos, 366 utque sub aequoribus deprensum polypus hostem 367 continet, ex omni dimissis parte flagellis. 368 Perstat Atlantiades, speratаque gaudia nymphae 369 denegat. Illa premit, commissaque corpore toto 370 sicut inhaerebat, “pugnes licet, inprobe” dixit, 371 “non tamen effugies. Ita di	361 too late! for smothered by the compact earth, 362 thou canst not lift thy drooping head; alas! 363 A lifeless corse remains. 364 No sadder sight 365 since Phaethon was blasted by the bolt, 366 down-hurled by Jove, had ever grieved the God 367 who daily drives his winged steeds. In vain 368 he strives with all the magic of his rays 369 to warm her limbs anew. — The deed is done— 370 what vantage gives his might if fate deny? 371 He sprinkles fragrant nectar on her grave, 372 and lifeless corse, and as he wails exclaims, 373 “But naught shall hinder you to reach the skies.” 374 At once the maiden's body, steeped in dews 375 of nectar, sweet and odourate, dissolves 376 and adds its fragrant juices to the earth: 377 slowly from this a sprout of Frankincense 378 takes root in riched iubeatis! et istum 372 nulla dies a me nec me diducat ab isto.” 373 Vota suos habuere deos: nam mixta duorum 374 corpora iunguntur, faciesque inducitur illis 375 una, velut, siquis conducat cortice ramos, 376 crescendo iungi pariterque adolescere cernit. 377 Sic ubi conplexu coierunt membra tenaci, 378 nec duo sunt et forma duplex, nec femina dici 379 nec puer ut possit: neutrumque et utrumque videntur. 380 Ergo ubi se liquidas, quo vir descenderat, undas 381 semimarem fecisse videt, mollitaque in illis 382 membra, manus tendens, sed non iam voce virili, 383 Hermaphroditus ait: “Nato date munera vestro, 384 et pater et genetrix, amborum nomen habenti: 385 quisquis in hos fontes vir venerit, exeat inde 386 semivir et tactis subito mollescat in undis.” 387 Motus uterque parens nati rata verba biformis 388 fecit et incesto fontem medicamine tinxit.” 389 Finis erat dictis. Sed adhuc Minyeia proles 390 urget opus spernitque deum festumque profanat,	soil, and bursting through 379 the sandy hillock shows its top. 380 No more 381 to Clytie comes the author of sweet light, 382 for though her love might make excuse of grief, 383 and grief may plead to pardon jealous words, 384 his heart disdains the schemist of his woe; 385 and she who turned to sour the sweet of love, 386 from that unhallowed moment pined away. 387 Envious and hating all her sister Nymphs, 388 day after day,—and through the lonely nights, 389 all unprotected from the chilly breeze, 390 her hair dishevelled, tangled, unadorned, 4.391	391 tympana cum subito non adparentia raucis 392 obstrepuere sonis, et adunco tibia cornu 393 tinnulaque aera sonant; redolent murraeque crocique, 394 resque fide maior, coepere virescere telae 395 inque hederae faciem pendens frondescere vestis. 396 Pars abit in vites, et quae modo fila fuerunt, 397 palmite mutantur; de stamine pampinus exit; 398 purpura fulgorem pictis adcommodat uvis. 399 Iamque dies exactus erat, tempusque subibat, 400 quod tu nec tenebras nec possis	391 she sat unmoved upon the bare hard ground. 392 Nine days the Nymph was nourished by the dews, 393 or haply by her own tears' bitter brine;— 394 all other nourishment was naught to her.— 395 She never raised herself from the bare ground, 396 though on the god her gaze was ever fixed;— 397 she turned her features towards him as he moved: 398 they say that afterwhile her limbs took root 399 and fastened to the around. 400 A pearly white 401 overspread her countenance, that turned as pale 402 and bloodless as the dead; but here and there 403 a blushing tinge resolved in violet tint; 404 and something like the blossom of that name 405 a flower concealed her face. Although a root 406 now holds her fast

	dicere lucem, 401 sed cum luce tamen dubiae confinia noctis: 402 tecta repente quati pinguesque ardere videntur 403 lampades et rutilis conlucere ignibus aedes 404 falsaque saevarum simulacra ululare ferarum. 405 Fumida iamdudum latitant per tecta sorores, 406 diversaeque locis ignes ac lumina vitant; 407 dumque petunt tenebras, parvos membrana per artus 408 porrigitur tenuique includit bracchia pinna. 409 Nec qua perdiderint veterem ratione figuram 410 scire sinunt tenebrae. Non illas pluma levavit, 411 sustinuere tamen se perlucentibus alis; 412 conataeque loqui minimam et pro corpore vocem 413 emittunt, peraguntque leves stridore querellas. 414 Tectaque, non silvas celebrant lucemque perosae 415 nocte volant, seroque tenent a vespere nomen. 416 Tum vero totis Bacchi memorabile Thebis 417 numen erat, magnasque novi matertera vires 418 narrat ubique dei, de totque sororibus expers 419 una doloris erat, nisi quem fecere sorores. 420 Adspicit hanc natis thalamoque Athamantis habentem	to earth, the Heliotrope 407 turns ever to the Sun, as if to prove 408 that all may change and love through all remain. 409 Thus was the story ended. All were charmed 410 to hear recounted such mysterious deeds. 411 While some were doubting whether such were true 412 others affirmed that to the living Gods 413 is nothing to restrain their wondrous works, 414 though surely of the Gods, immortal, none 415 accorded Bacchus even thought or place. 416 When all had made an end of argument, 417 they bade Alcithoe take up the word: 418 she, busily working on the pendent web, 419 still shot the shuttle through the warp and said; 420 “The amours of the shepherd Daphnis, known 421 to many of you, I shall not relate; 422 the shepherd Daphnis of Mount Ida, who 423 was turned to stone obdurate, for the Nymph 424 whose love he slighted —so the rivalry 425 of love neglected rouses to revenge: 426 neither shall I relate the story told 427 of Scython, double-sexed, who first was man, 428 then altered to a woman: so I pass 429 the tale of Celmus turned to adamant, 430 who reared almighty Jove from tender youth: 431 so, likewise the Curetes whom the rain 432 brought forth to life: Smilax and Crocus, too, 433 transpeciated into little flowers: 434 all these I pass to tell a novel tale, 435 which haply may resolve in pleasant thoughts. 436 Learn how the fountain, Salmacis, became 437 so infamous; learn how it enervates 438 and softens the limbs of those who chance to bathe.
4.421	421 sublimes animos et alumno numine Iuno, 422 nec tulit, et secum “potuit de paelice natus 423 vertere Maeonios pelagoque inmergere nautas 424 et laceranda suae nati dare viscera matri 425 et triplices operire novis Minyeidas alis: 426 nil poterit Iuno nisi inultos flere dolores? 427 idque mihi satis est? haec una potentia nostra est? 428 ipse docet, quid agam (fas est et ab hoste doceri), 429 quidque furor valeat, Penthea	439 Although the fountain's properties are known, 440 the cause is yet unknown. The Naiads nursed 441 an infant son of Hermes, surely his 442 of Aphrodite gotten in the caves 443 of Ida, for the child resembled both 444 the god and goddess, and his name was theirs. 445 The years passed by, and when the boy had reached 446 the limit of three lustrums, he forsook 447 his native mountains; for he loved to roam 448 through unimagined places, by the banks 449 of undiscovered rivers; and the joy 450 of finding wonders made his labour light. 451 Leaving Mount Ida, where his youth was spent, 452 he reached the land of Lycia, and from

	caede satisque 430 ac super ostendit: cur non stimuletur eatque 431 per cognata suis exempla furoribus Ino?” 432 Est via declivis funesta nubila taxo, 433 ducit ad infernas per muta silentia sedes. 434 Styx nebulas exhalat iners, umbraeque recentes 435 descendunt illac simulacraque functa sepulcris. 436 437 438 439 Mille capax aditus et apertas undique portas 440 urbs habet, utque fretum de tota flumina terra, 441 sic omnes animas locus accipit ille, nec ulli 442 exiguus populo est, turbamve accedere sentit. 443 Errant exsangues sine corpore et ossibus umbrae, 444 parsque forum celebrant, pars imi tecta tyranni, 445 pars aliquas artes, antiquae imitamina vitae. 446 447 Sustinet ire illuc caelesti sede relicta 448 (tantum odiis iraeque dabat) Saturnia Iuno. 449 Quo simul intravit sacroque a corpore pressum 450 ingemuit limen, tria Cerberus extulit ora	thence 453 the verge of Caria, where a pretty pool 454 of soft translucent water may be seen, 455 so clear the glistening bottom glads the eye: 456 no barren sedge, no fenny reeds annoy, 457 no rushes with their sharpened arrow-points, 458 but all around the edges of that pool 459 the softest grass engirdles with its green. 460 A Nymph dwells there, unsuited to the chase, 461 unskilled to bend the bow, slothful of foot, 462 the only Naiad in the world unknown 463 to rapid-running Dian. Whensoever 464 her Naiad sisters pled in winged words, 465 “Take up the javelin, sister Salmacis, 466 take up the painted quiver and unite 467 your leisure with the action of the chase;” 468 she only scorned the javelin and the quiver,
4.451	451 et tres latratus semel edidit. Illa sorores 452 Nocte vocat genitas, grave et inplacabile numen. 453 Carceris ante fores clausas adamante sedebant 454 deque suis atros pectebant crinibus angues. 455 Quam simul agnorunt inter caliginis umbras, 456 surrexere deae. Sedes scelerata vocatur: 457 viscera praebebat Tityos lanianda novemque 458 iugeribus distentus erat; tibi, Tantale, nullae 459 deprenduntur aquae, quaeque inminet, effugit arbor; 460 aut petis aut urges rediturum, Sisyphe, saxum;	469 nor joined her leisure to the active chase. 470 Rather she bathes her smooth and shapely limbs; 471 or combs her tresses with a boxwood comb, 472 Citorian; or looking in the pool 473 consults the glassed waters of effects 474 increasing beauty; or she decks herself 475 in gauzy raiment, and reposing lolls 476 on cushioned leaves, or grass-enverdured beds; 477 or gathers posies from the spangled lawns. 478 Now, haply as she culled the sweetest flowers 479 she saw the youth, and longing in her heart 480 made havoc as her greedy eyes beheld. 481 Although her love could scarcely brook delay, 482 she waited to enhance her loveliness, 483 in beauty hoping to allure his love. 484 All richly dight she scanned herself and robes, 485 to know

	461 volvitur Ixion et se sequiturque fugitque; 462 molirique suis letum patruelibus ausae 463 adsiduae repetunt, quas perdant, Belides undas. 464 Quos omnes acie postquam Saturnia torva 465 vidit et ante omnes Ixiona, rursus ab illo 466 Sisyphon adspiciens “cur hic e fratribus” inquit 467 “perpetuas patitur poenas, Athamanta superbum 468 regia dives habet, qui me cum coniuge semper 469 sprevit?” et exponit causas odiique viaeque, 470 quidque velit. Quod vellet, erat, ne regia Cadmi 471 staret, et in facinus traherent Athamanta sorores. 472 Imperium, promissa, preces confundit in unum 473 sollicitatque deas. Sic haec Iunone locuta, 474 Tisiphone, canos ut erat turbata capillos, 475 movit et obstantes reiecit ab ore colubras 476 atque ita “non longis opus est ambagibus” inquit: 477 “facta puta, quaecumque iubes. Inamabile regnum 478 desere teque refer caeli melioris ad auras.” 479 Laeta redit Iuno, quam caelum intrare parantem 480 roratis lustravit aquis Thaumantias Iris.	that every charm should fair appear, 486 and she be worthy: wherefore she began: 487 “O godlike youth! if thou art of the skies, 488 thou art no other than the god of Love; 489 if mortal, blest are they who gave thee birth; 490 happy thy brother; happy, fortunate 491 thy sister; happy, fortunate and blest 492 the nurse that gave her bosom; but the joys 493 surpassing all, dearest and tenderest, 494 are hers whom thou shalt wed. So, let it be 495 if thou so young have deigned to marry, let 496 my joys be stolen; if unmarried, join 497 with me in wedlock.” So she spoke, and stood 498 in silence waiting for the youth's reply.
4.481	481 Nec mora, Tisiphone madefactam sanguine sumit 482 inportuna facem, fluidoque cruore rubentem 483 induitur pallam tortoque incingitur angue 484 egrediturque domo. Luctus comitatur euntem 485 et Pavor et Terror trepidoque Insania vultu. 486 Limine constiterat: postes tremuisse feruntur 487 Aeolii pallorque fores infecit acernas, 488 solque locum fugit. Monstris exterrita coniunx, 489 territus est Athamas. Tectoque exire parabant:	499 He knows nor cares for love—with loveliness 500 the mounting blushes tinge his youthful cheeks, 501 as blush-red tint of apples on the tree, 502 ripe in the summer sun, or as the hue 503 of painted ivory, or the round moon 504 red-blushing in her splendour, when the clash 505 of brass resounds in vain. And long the Nymph 506 implored; almost clung on his neck, as smooth 507 and white as ivory; unceasingly 508 imploring him to kiss her, though as chaste 509 as kisses to a sister; but the youth 510 outwearied, thus: 511 “I do beseech you make 512 an end of this; or must I fly the place 513 and leave you to your tears?” Affrighted then 514 said Salmacis, “To you I freely give—

	490 obstitit infelix aditumque obsedit Erinys, 491 nexaque vipereis distendens bracchia nodis 492 caesariem excussit. Motae sonuere colubrae, 493 parsque iacent umeris, pars circum pectora lapsae 494 sibila dant saniemque vomunt linguisque coruscant. 495 Inde duos mediis abrumpit crinibus angues 496 pestiferaque manu raptos inmisit. At illi 497 Inoosque sinus Athamanteosque pererrant 498 inspirantque graves animas. Nec vulnera membris 499 ulla ferunt: mens est, quae diros sentiat ictus. 500 Attulerat secum liquidi quoque monstra veneni, 501 oris Cerberei spumas et virus Echidnae 502 erroresque vagos caecaeque oblivia mentis 503 et scelus et lacrimas rabiemque et caedis amorem, 504 omnia trita simul; quae sanguine mixta recenti 505 coxerat aere cavo viridi versata cicuta. 506 Dumque pavent illi, vergit furiale venenum 507 pectus in amborum praecordiaque intima movit. 508 Tum face iactata per eundem saepius orbem 509 consequitur motis velociter ignibus ignes. 510 Sic victrix iussique potens ad inania magni	515 good stranger here remain.” Although she made 516 fair presence to retire, she hid herself, 517 that from a shrub-grown covert, on her knees 518 she might observe unseen. 519 As any boy 520 that heedless deems his mischief unobserved, 521 now here now there, he rambled on the green; 522 now in the bubbly ripples dipped his feet, 523 now dallied in the clear pool ankle-deep;— 524 the warm-cool feeling of the liquid then, 525 so pleased him, that without delay he doffed 526 his fleecy garments from his tender limbs. 527 Ah, Salmacis, amazement is thy meed! 528 Thou art consumed to know his naked grace!
4.511	511 regna redit Ditis sumptumque recingitur anguem. 512 Protinus Aeolides media furibundus in aula 513 clamat “io, comites, his retia tendite silvis! 514 hic modo cum gemina visa est mihi prole leaena:” 515 utque ferae sequitur vestigia coniugis amens 516 deque sinu matris ridentem et parva Learchum 517 bracchia tendentem rapit et bis terque per auras 518 more rotat fundae rigidoque infantia saxo	529 As the hot glitters of the round bright sun 530 collected, sparkle from the polished plate, 531 thine eyes are glistened with delirious fires. 532 Delay she cannot; panting for his joy, 533 languid for his caressing, crazed, distract, 534 her passion difficult is held in check.— 535 He claps his body with his hollow palms 536 and lightly vaults into the limped wave, 537 and darting through the water hand over hand 538 shines in the liquid element, as though 539 should one enhance a statue's ivorine, 540 or glaze the lily in a lake of glass. 541 And thus the Naiad, “I have gained my suit; 542 his love is

	519 discutit ora ferox. Tum denique concita mater, 520 seu dolor hoc fecit seu sparsi causa veneni, 521 exululat passisque fugit male sana capillis 522 teque ferens parvum nudis, Melicerta, lacertis 523 “euhoe Bacche” sonat. Bacchi sub nomine Iuno 524 risit et “hos usus praestet tibi” dixit “alumnus.” 525 Inminet aequoribus scopulus: pars ima cavatur 526 fluctibus et tectas defendit ab imbribus undas, 527 summa riget frontemque in apertum porrigit aequor. 528 Occupat hunc (vires insania fecerat) Ino, 529 seque super pontum nullo tardata timore 530 mittit onusque suum; percussa recanduit unda. 531 At Venus, inmeritae neptis miserata labores, 532 sic patruo blandita suo est: “O numen aquarum, 533 proxima cui caelo cessit, Neptune, potestas, 534 magna quidem posco, sed tu miserere meorum, 535 iactari quos cernis in Ionio inmenso, 536 et dis adde tuis. Aliqua et mihi gratia ponto est, 537 si tamen in medio quondam concreta profundo 538 spuma fui Graiumque manet mihi nomen ab illa.” 539 Adnuit oranti Neptunus et abstulit illis, 540 quod mortale fuit, maiestatemque verendam	mine,—is mine!” Quickly disrobed, 543 she plunged into the yielding wave—seized him, 544 caressed him, clung to him a thousand ways, 545 kissed him, thrust down her hands and touched his breast: 546 reluctant and resisting he endeavours 547 to make escape, but even as he struggles 548 she winds herself about him, as entwines 549 the serpent which the royal bird on high 550 holds in his talons; —as it hangs, it coils 551 in sinuous folds around the eagle's feet;— 552 twisting its coils around his head and wings: 553 or as the ivy clings to sturdy oaks; 554 or as the polypus beneath the waves, 555 by pulling down, with suckers on all sides, 556 tenacious holds its prey. And yet the youth, 557 descendant of great Atlas, not relents 558 nor gives the Naiad joy. Pressing her suit
4.541	541 inposuit nomenque simul faciemque novavit 542 Leucothoeque deum cum matre Palaemona dixit. 543 Sidoniae comites, quantum valuere secutae 544 signa pedum, primo videre novissima saxo; 545 nec dubium de morte ratae Cadmeida palmis 546 deplanxere domum, scissae cum veste capillos, 547 utque parum iustae nimiumque in paelice saevae	559 she winds her limbs around him and exclaims, 560 “You shall not scape me, struggle as you will, 561 perverse and obstinate! Hear me, ye Gods! 562 Let never time release the youth from me; 563 time never let me from the youth release!” 564 Propitious deities accord her prayers: 565 the mingled bodies of the pair unite 566 and fashion in a single human form. 567 So one might see two branches underneath 568 a single rind uniting grow as one: 569 so, these two bodies in a firm embrace 570 no more are twain, but

	548 invidiam fecere deae. Convicia Iuno 549 non tulit et “faciam vos ipsas maxima” dixit 550 “saevitiae monimenta meae.” Res dicta secuta est. 551 Nam quae praecipue fuerat pia, “persequar” inquit 552 “in freta reginam” saltumque datura moveri 553 haud usquam potuit scopuloque adfixa cohaesit. 554 Altera, dum solito temptat plangore ferire 555 pectora, temptatos sensit riguisse lacertos; 556 illa, manus ut forte tetenderat in maris undas, 557 saxea facta manus in easdem porrigit undas; 558 huius, ut arreptum laniabat vertice crinem, 559 duratos subito digitos in crine videres: 560 quo quaeque in gestu deprensa est, haesit in illo. 561 Pars volucres factae; quae nunc quoque gurgite in illo 562 aequora destringunt summis Ismenides alis. 563 Nescit Agenorides natam parvumque nepotem 564 aequoris esse deos: luctu serieque malorum 565 victus et ostentis, quae plurima viderat, exit 566 conditor urbe sua, tamquam fortuna locorum, 567 non sua se premeret; longisque erroribus actus 568 contigit Illyricos profuga cum coniuge fines. 569 Iamque malis annisque graves, dum prima retractant 570 fata domus releguntque suos sermone labores,	with a two-fold form 571 nor man nor woman may be called—Though both 572 in seeming they are neither one of twain. 573 When that Hermaphroditus felt the change, 574 so wrought upon him by the languid fount, 575 considered that he entered it a man, 576 and now his limbs relaxing in the stream 577 he is not wholly male, but only half,— 578 he lifted up his hands and thus implored, 579 albeit with no manly voice; “Hear me 580 O father! hear me mother! grant to me 581 this boon; to me whose name is yours, your son; 582 whoso shall enter in this fount a man 583 must leave its waters only half a man.” 584 Moved by the words of their bi-natured son 585 both parents yield assent: they taint the fount 586 with essences of dual-working powers. 587 Now though the daughters of King Minyas 588 have made an end of telling tales, they make 589 no end of labour; for they so despise 590 the deity, and desecrate his feast. 591 While busily engaged, with sudden beat 592 they hear resounding tambourines; and pipes 593 and crooked horns and tinkling brass renew,
4.571	571 “num sacer ille mea traiectus cuspide serpens” 572 Cadmus ait “fuerat, tum, cum Sidone profectus 573 vipereos sparsi per humum, nova semina, dentes? 574 Quem si cura deum tam certa vindicat ira, 575 ipse precor serpens in longam porrigar alvum.” 576 Dixit, et ut serpens in longam tenditur alvum	594 unseen, the note; saffron and myrrh dissolve 595 in dulcet odours; and, beyond belief, 596 the woven webs, dependent on the loom, 597 take tints of green, put forth new ivy leaves, 598 or change to grape-vines verdant. There the thread 599 is twisted into tendrils, there the warp 600 is fashioned into many-moving leaves— 601 the purple lends its splendour to the grape. 602 And now the day is past; it is the hour 603 when night

	577 durataeque cuti squamas increscere sentit 578 nigraque caeruleis variari corpora guttis. 579 In pectusque cadit pronus. Commissaque in unum 580 paulatim tereti tenuantur acumine crura. 581 Bracchia iam restant: quae restant bracchia tendit 582 et lacrimis per adhuc humana fluentibus ora 583 “accede, o coniunx, accede, miserrima,” dixit 584 “dumque aliquid superest de me, me tange manumque 585 accipe, dum manus est, dum non totum occupat anguis!” 586 Ille quidem vult plura loqui, sed lingua repente 587 in partes est fissa duas: nec verba volenti 588 sufficiunt, quotiensque aliquos parat edere questus, 589 sibilat: hanc illi vocem natura reliquit. 590 Nuda manu feriens exclamat pectora coniunx 591 “Cadme, mane, teque, infelix, his exue monstris! 592 Cadme, quid hoc? ubi pes, ubi sunt umerique manusque 593 et color et facies et, dum loquor, omnia? cur non 594 me quoque, caelestes, in eandem vertitis anguem?” 595 Dixerat: ille suae lambebat coniugis ora 596 inque sinus caros, veluti cognosceret, ibat 597 et dabat amplexus adsuetaque colla petebat. 598 Quisquis adest (aderant comites), terretur: at illa 599 lubrica permulcet cristati colla draconis. 600 Et subito duo sunt iunctoque volumine serpunt,	ambiguous merges into day, 604 which dubious owns nor light nor dun obscure; 605 and suddenly the house begins to shake, 606 and torches oil-dipped seem to flare around, 607 and fires a-glow to shine in every room, 608 and phantoms, feigned of savage beasts, to howl.— 609 Full of affright amid the smoking halls 610 the sisters vainly hide, and wheresoever 611 they deem security from flaming fires, 612 fearfully flit. And while they seek to hide, 613 a membrane stretches over every limb, 614 and light wings open from their slender arms. 615 In the weird darkness they are unaware 616 what measure wrought to change their wonted shape. 617 No plumous vans avail to lift their flight, 618 yet fair they balance on membraneous wing. 619 Whenever they would speak a tiny voice, 620 diminutive, apportioned to their size, 621 in squeaking note complains. Adread the light, 622 their haunts avoid by day the leafy woods, 623 for sombre attics, where secure they rest
4.601	601 donec in adpositi nemoris subiere latebras. 602 Nunc quoque nec fugiunt hominem nec vulnere laedunt 603 quidque prius fuerint, placidi meminere dracones. 604 Sed tamen ambobus versae solacia formae 605 magna nepos dederat, quem debellata colebat	624 till forth the dun obscure their wings may stretch 625 at hour of Vesper;—this accords their name. 626 Throughout the land of Thebes miraculous 627 the power of Bacchus waxed; and far and wide 628 Ino, his aunt, reported the great deeds 629 by this divinity performed. Of all 630 her sisters only she escaped unharmed, 631 when Fate destroyed them, and she

	606 India, quem positis celebrabat Achaia templis. 607 Solus Abantiades ab origine cretus eadem 608 Acrisius superest, qui moenibus arceat urbis 609 Argolicae contraque deum ferat arma genusque 610 non putet esse Iovis; neque enim Iovis esse putabat 611 Persea, quem pluvio Danae conceperat auro. 612 Mox tamen Acrisium (tanta est praesentia veri) 613 tam violasse deum quam non agnosse nepotem 614 paenitet: inpositus iam caelo est alter, at alter 615 viperei referens spolium memorabile monstri 616 aera carpebat tenerum stridentibus alis. 617 Cumque super Libycas victor penderet harenas, 618 Gorgonei capitis guttae cecidere cruentae. 619 Quas humus exceptas varios animavit in angues: 620 unde frequens illa est infestaque terra colubris. 621 Inde per inmensum ventis discordibus actus 622 nunc huc, nunc illuc exemplo nubis aquosae 623 fertur et ex alto seductas aethere longe 624 despectat terras totumque supervolat orbem. 625 Ter gelidas Arctos, ter Cancri bracchia vidit: 626 saepe sub occasus, saepe est ablatus in ortus. 627 Iamque cadente die, veritus se credere nocti, 628 constitit Hesperio, regnis Atlantis, in orbe, 629 exiguamque petit requiem, dum Lucifer ignes 630 evocet Aurorae, currus Aurora diurnos.	knew not grief— 632 only for sorrow of her sisters' woes.— 633 While Ino vaunted of her mother-joys, 634 and of her kingly husband, Athamas, 635 and of the mighty God, her foster-child; 636 Juno, disdaining her in secret, said; 637 “How shall the offspring of a concubine 638 transform Maeonian mariners, overwhelm 639 them in the ocean, sacrifice a son 640 to his deluded mother, who insane, 641 tears out his entrails; how shall he invent 642 wings for three daughters of King Minyas, 643 while Juno unavenged, bewails despite? — 644 Is it the end? the utmost of my power? 645 His deeds instruct the way; true wisdom heeds 646 an enemy's device; by the strange death 647 of Pentheus, all that madness could perform 648 was well revealed to all; what then denies 649 a frenzy may unravel Ino's course 650 to such a fate as wrought her sisters' woe?” 651 A shelving path in shadows of sad yew 652 through utter silence to the deep descends, 653 infernal, where the languid Styx exhales 654 vapours; and there the shadows of the dead, 655 descend, after they leave their sacred urns,
4.631	631 Hic hominum cunctis ingenti corpore praestans 632 Iapetionides Atlas fuit. Ultima tellus 633 rege sub hoc et pontus erat, qui Solis anhelis 634 aequora subdit equis et fessos excipit axes.	656 and ghostly forms invade: and far and wide, 657 those dreary regions Horror and bleak Cold 658 obtain. 659 The ghosts, arrived, not know the way, — 660 which leadeth to the Stygian city-gates,— 661 not know the melancholy palace where 662 the swarthy Pluto stays, though streets and

	635 Mille greges illi totidemque armenta per herbas 636 errabant, et humum vicinia nulla premebant. 637 Arboreae frondes auro radiante nitentes 638 ex auro ramos, ex auro poma tegebant. 639 “Hospes,” ait Perseus illi, “seu gloria tangit 640 te generis magni, generis mihi Iuppiter auctor; 641 sive es mirator rerum, mirabere nostras. 642 Hospitium requiemque peto.” Memor ille vetustae 643 sortis erat: Themis hanc dederat Parnasia sortem: 644 “Tempus, Atla, veniet, tua quo spoliabitur auro 645 arbor, et hunc praedae titulum Iove natus habebit.” 646 Id metuens solidis pomaria clauserat Atlas 647 moenibus et vasto dederat servanda draconi 648 arcebatque suis externos finibus omnes. 649 Huic quoque “vade procul, ne longe gloria rerum, 650 quam mentiris” ait, “longe tibi Iuppiter absit!” 651 vimque minis addit manibusque expellere temptat 652 cunctantem et placidis miscentem fortia dictis. 653 Viribus inferior (quis enim par esset Atlantis 654 viribus?) “at quoniam parvi tibi gratia nostra est, 655 accipe munus!” ait, laevaque a parte Medusae 656 ipse retro versus squalentia protulit ora. 657 Quantus erat, mons factus Atlas: nam barba comaeque 658 in silvas abeunt, iuga sunt umerique manusque, 659 quod caput ante fuit, summo est in monte cacumen, 660 ossa lapis fiunt: tum partes auctus in omnes	ways 663 a thousand to that city lead, and gates 664 out-swing from every side: and as the sea 665 with never-seen increase engulfs the streams 666 unnumbered of the world, that realm enfolds 667 the souls of men, nor ever is it filled. 668 Around the shadowy spirits go; bloodless 669 boneless and bodiless; they throng the place 670 of judgment, or they haunt the mansion where 671 abides the Utmost Tyrant, or they tend 672 to various callings, as their whilom way; — 673 appropriate punishment confines to pain 674 the multitude condemned. 675 To this abode, 676 impelled by rage and hate, from habitation 677 celestial, Juno, of Saturn born, descends, 678 submissive to its dreadful element. 679 No sooner had she entered the sad gates, 680 than groans were uttered by the threshold, pressed 681 by her immortal form, and Cerberus 682 upraising his three-visaged mouths gave vent 683 to triple-barking howls.—She called to her 684 the sisters, Night-begot, implacable, 685 terrific Furies. They did sit before
4.661	661 crevit in inmensum (sic, di, statuistis) et omne 662 cum tot sideribus caelum requievit in illo. 663 Clauserat Hippotades aeterno carcere ventos,	686 the prison portals, adamant confined, 687 combing black vipers from their horrid hair. 688 When her amid the night-surrounding shades 689 they recognized, those Deities uprose. 690 O dread confines! dark seat of

	664 admonitorque operum caelo clarissimus alto 665 Lucifer ortus erat. Pennis ligat ille resumptis 666 parte ab utraque pedes teloque accingitur unco 667 et liquidum motis talaribus aera findit. 668 Gentibus innumeris circumque infraque relictis 669 Aethiopum populos Cepheaque conspicit arva. 670 Illic inmeritam maternae pendere linguae 671 Andromedan poenas iniustus iusserat Ammon. 672 Quam simul ad duras religatam bracchia cautes 673 vidit Abantiades (nisi quod levis aura capillos 674 moverat et tepido manabant lumina fletu, 675 marmoreum ratus esset opus), trahit inscius ignes 676 et stupet et visae correptus imagine formae 677 paene suas quatere est oblitus in aere pennas. 678 Ut stetit, “o” dixit “non istis digna catenis, 679 sed quibus inter se cupidi iunguntur amantes, 680 pande requirenti nomen terraeque tuumque, 681 et cur vincla geras.” Primo silet illa, nec audet 682 adpellare virum virgo; manibusque modestos 683 celasset vultus, si non religata fuisset: 684 lumina, quod potuit, lacrimis inplevit obortis. 685 Saepius instanti, sua ne delicta fateri 686 nolle videretur, nomen terraeque suumque, 687 quantaque maternae fuerit fiducia formae, 688 indicat. Et nondum memoratis omnibus unda 689 insonuit, veniensque inmenso belua ponto 690 inminet et latum sub pectore possidet aequor.	wretched vice! 691 Where stretched athwart nine acres, Tityus, 692 must thou endure thine entrails to be torn! 693 O Tantalus, thou canst not touch the wave, 694 and from thy clutch the hanging branches rise! 695 O Sisyphus, thou canst not stay the stone, 696 catching or pushing, it must fall again! 697 O thou Ixion! whirled around, around, 698 thyself must follow to escape thyself! 699 And, O Belides, (plotter of sad death 700 upon thy cousins) thou art always doomed 701 to dip forever ever-spilling waves! 702 When that the daughter of Saturnus fixed 703 a stern look on those wretches, first her glance 704 arrested on Ixion; but the next 705 on Sisyphus; and thus the goddess spoke;— 706 “For why should he alone of all his kin 707 suffer eternal doom, while Athamas, 708 luxurious in a sumptuous palace reigns; 709 and, haughty with his wife, despises me.” 710 So grieved she, and expressed the rage of hate 711 that such descent inspired, beseeching thus, 712 no longer should the House of Cadmus stand, 713 so that the sister Furies plunge in crime 714 overweening Athamas.—Entreating them, 715 she mingled promises with her commands.—
4.691	691 Conclamat virgo: genitor lugubris et una 692 mater adest, ambo miseri, sed iustius illa.	716 When Juno ended speech, Tisiphone, 717 whose locks entangled are not ever smooth, 718 tossed them around, that backward from her face

	693 Nec secum auxilium, sed dignos tempore fletus 694 plangoremque ferunt vinctoque in corpore adhaerent, 695 cum sic hospes ait: “Lacrimarum longa manere 696 tempora vos poterunt: ad opem brevis hora ferendam est. 697 Hanc ego si peterem Perseus Iove natus et illa, 698 quam clausam inplevit fecundo Iuppiter auro, 699 Gorgonis anguicomae Perseus superator et alis 700 aerias ausus iactatis ire per auras, 701 praeferrer cunctis certe gener. Addere tantis 702 dotibus et meritum, faveant modo numina, tempto: 703 ut mea sit servata mea virtute, paciscor.” 704 Accipiunt legem (quis enim dubitaret?) et orant 705 promittuntque super regnum dotale parentes. 706 Ecce velut navis praefixo concita rostro 707 sulcat aquas, iuvenum sudantibus acta lacertis, 708 sic fera dimotis inpulsu pectoris undis 709 tantum aberat scopulis, quantum Balearica torto 710 funda potest plumbo medii transmittere caeli: 711 cum subito iuvenis pedibus tellure repulsa 712 arduus in nubes abiit. Ut in aequore summo 713 umbra viri visa est, visa fera saevit in umbra. 714 Utque Iovis praepes, vacuo cum vidit in arvo 715 praebentem Phoebo liventia terga draconem, 716 occupat aversum, neu saeva retorqueat ora, 717 squamigeris avidos figit cervicibus ungues, 718 sic celeri missus praeceps per inane volatu 719 terga ferae pressit dextroque frementis in armo 720 Inachides ferrum curvo tenus abdidit hamo.	719 such crawling snakes were thrown; —then answered she: 720 “Since what thy will decrees may well be done, 721 why need we to consult with many words? 722 Leave thou this hateful region and convey 723 thyself, contented, to a better realm.” 724 Rejoicing Juno hastens to the clouds— 725 before she enters her celestial home, 726 Iris, the child of Thaumas, purifies 727 her limbs in sprinkled water.
4.721	721 Vulnere laesa gravi modo se sublimis in auras 722 attollit, modo subdit aquis, modo	728 Waiting not, 729 Tisiphone, revengeful, takes a torch;— 730 besmeared with blood, and vested in a more ferocis 723 versat apri, quem turba canum circumsona terret. 724 Ille avidos morsus velocibus effugit alis 725 quaque patet, nunc terga cavis super obsita conchis, 726 nunc laterum costas, nunc qua tenuissima cauda 727 desinit in piscem, falcato vulnerat ense. 728 Belua puniceo mixtos cum sanguine fluctus 729 ore vomit: maduere graves adspergine pennae. 730 Nec bibulis ultra Perseus talaribus ausus 731 credere, conspexit scopulum, qui vertice summo 732 stantibus exstat aquis, operitur ab aequore moto. 733 Nixus eo rupisque tenens iuga prima sinistra 734 ter quater exegit repetita per ilia ferrum. 735 Litora cum plausu clamor superasque deorum 736 inplevere domos: gaudent generumque salutant 737 auxiliumque domus servatoremque fatentur 738 Cassiope Cepheusque pater. Resoluta catenis 739 incedit virgo, pretiumque et causa laboris. 740 Ipse manus hausta victrices abluit unda, 741 anguiferumque caput dura ne laedat harena, 742 mollit humum foliis natasque sub aequore virgas 743 sternit et inponit Phorcynidos ora Medusae. 744 Virga recens bibulaque etiamnum viva medulla 745 vim rapuit monstri tactuque induruit huius 746 percepitque novum ramis et fronde rigorem. 747 At pelagi nymphae factum mirabile temptant 748 pluribus in virgis et idem contingere gaudent 749 seminaque ex illis iterant iactata per undas. 750 Nunc quoque curaliis eadem natura remansit,	robe, 731 dripping with crimson gore, and twisting-snakes 732 engirdled, she departs her dire abode— 733 with twitching Madness, Terror, Fear and Woe: 734 and when she had arrived the destined house, 735 the door-posts shrank from her, the maple doors 736 turned ashen grey: the Sun amazed fled. 737 Affrighted, Athamas and Ino viewed 738 and fled these prodigies; but suddenly 739 that baneful Fury stood across the way, 740 blocking the passage— There she stands with arms 741 extended, and alive with twisting vipers.— 742 She shakes her hair; the moving serpents hiss; 743 they cling upon her shoulders, and they glide 744 around her temples, dart their fangs, and vomit 745 corruption.—Plucking from the midst two snakes, 746 she hurls them with her pestilential hand 747 upon her victims, Athamas and Ino, whom, 748 although the vipers strike upon their breasts, 749 no injury attacks their mortal parts;— 750 only their minds are stricken with wild rage, 751 inciting to mad violence and crime. 752 And with a monstrous composite of foam— 753 once gathered from the mouth of Cerberus, 754 the venom of Echidna, purposeless 755 aberrances, crimes, tears, hatred—the lust 756 of homicide, and the dark vapourings 757 of foolish brains; a liquid poison, mixed, 4.751	751 duritiam tacto capiant ut ab aere,	758 and mingled with fresh blood, in

	quodque 752 vimen in aequore erat, fiat super aequora saxum. 753 Dis tribus ille focos totidem de caespite ponit, 754 laevum Mercurio, dextrum tibi, bellica virgo, 755 ara Iovis media est. Mactatur vacca Minervae, 756 alipedi vitulus, taurus tibi, summe deorum. 757 protinus Andromedan et tanti praemia facti 758 indotata rapit: taedas Hymenaeus Amorque 759 praecutiunt, largis satiantur odoribus ignes, 760 sertaque dependent tectis et ubique lyraeque 761 tibiaque et cantus, animi felicia laeti 762 argumenta, sonant. Reseratis aurea valvis 763 atria tota patent, pulchroque instructa paratu 764 Cepheni proceres ineunt convivia regis. 765 Postquam epulis functi generosi munere Bacchi 766 diffudere animos, cultusque genusque locorum 767 quaerit Lyncides moresque animumque virorum. 767 768 769 Quae simul edocuit, “nunc, o fortissime,” dixit 770 “fare, precor, Perseu, quanta virtute quibusque 771 artibus abstuleris crinita draconibus ora.” 772 Narrat Agenorides gelido sub Atlante iacentem 773 esse locum solidae tutum munimine molis; 774 cuius in introitu geminas habitasse sorores 775 Phorcidas, unius partitas luminis usum. 776 Id se sollerti furtim, dum traditur, astu 777 supposita cepisse manu perque abdita longe 778 deviaque et silvis horrentia saxa fragosis 779 Gorgoneas tetigisse domos, passimque per agros	hollow brass, 759 and boiled, and stirred up with a slip of hemlock— 760 she took of it, and as they trembled, threw 761 that mad-mixed poison on them; and it scorched 762 their inmost vitals—and she waved her torch 763 repeatedly, within a circle's rim— 764 and added flame to flame.— 765 Then, confident 766 of having executed her commands, 767 the Fury hastened to the void expanse 768 where Pluto reigns, and swiftly put aside 769 the serpents that were wreathed around her robes. 770 At once, the son of Aeolus, enraged, 771 shouts loudly in his palace; “Ho, my lads! 772 Spread out your nets! a savage lioness 773 and her twin whelps are lurking in the wood;— 774 behold them!” In his madness he believes 775 his wife a savage beast. He follows her, 776 and quickly from her bosom snatches up 777 her smiling babe, Learchus, holding forth 778 his tiny arms, and whirls him in the air, 779 times twice and thrice, as whirls the whizzing sling, 780 and dashes him in pieces on the rocks; — 781 cracking his infant bones. 782 The mother, roused 783 to frenzy (who can tell if grief the cause, 784 or fires of scattered poison?) yells aloud, 785 and with her torn hair tangled, running mad, 786 she carries swiftly in her clutching arms, 787 her little Melicerta! and begins
4.780	780 perque vias vidisse hominum	788 to shout, “Evoe, Bacche!”—Juno

	simulacra ferarumque 781 in silicem ex ipsis visa conversa Medusa. 782 Se tamen horrendae clipei, quem laeva gerebat, 783 aere repercusso formam adspexisse Medusae, 784 dumque gravis somnus colubrasque ipsamque tenebat, 785 eripuisse caput collo; pennisque fugacem 786 Pegason et fratrem matris de sanguine natos 787 addidit et longi non falsa pericula cursus, 788 quae freta, quas terras sub se vidisset ab alto 789 et quae iactatis tetigisset sidera pennis. 790 Ante exspectatum tacuit tamen. Excipit unus 791 ex numero procerum quaerens, cur sola sororum 792 gesserit alternis inmixtos crinibus angues. 793 Hospes ait: “Quoniam scitaris digna relatu, 794 accipe quaesiti causam. Clarissima forma 795 multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum 796 illa: neque in tota conspectior ulla capillis 797 pars fuit. Inveni, qui se vidisse referret. 798 Hanc pelagi rector templo vitiasse Minervae 799 dicitur. Aversa est et castos aegide vultus 800 nata Iovis texit; neve hoc inpune fuisset, 801 Gorgoneum crinem turpes mutavit in hydros. 802 803	hears 789 the shouted name of Bacchus, and she laughs, 790 and taunts her;—“Let thy foster-child award!” 791 There is a crag, out-jutting on the deep, 792 worn hollow at the base by many waves, 793 where not the rain may ripple on that pool;— 794 high up the rugged summit overhangs 795 its ragged brows above the open sea: 796 there, Ino climbs with frenzy-given strength, 797 and fearless, with her burden in her arms, 798 leaps in the waves where whitening foams arise. 799 Venus takes pity on her guiltless child, 800 unfortunate grand-daughter, and begins 801 to soothe her uncle Neptune with these words;— 802 “O Neptune, ruler of the deep, to whom, 803 next to the Power in Heaven, was given sway, 804 consider my request! Open thy heart 805 to my descendants, which thine eyes behold, 806 tossed on the wild Ionian Sea! I do implore thee, 807 remember they are thy true Deities — 808 are thine as well as mine—for it is known 809 my birth was from the white foam of thy sea;— 810 a truth made certain by my Grecian name.” 811 Neptune regards her prayer: he takes from them 812 their mortal dross: he clothes in majesty, 813 and hallows their appearance. Even their names 814 and forms are altered; Melicerta, changed, 815 is now Palaemon called, and Ino, changed, 816 Leucothoe called, are known as Deities. 817 When her Sidonian attendants traced
5.1	1 Dumque ea Cephenum medio Danaeius heros 2 agmine commemorat, fremida regalia turba 3 atria complentur: nec coniugialia festa 4 qui canat est clamor, sed qui fera nuntiet arma. 5 Inque repentinos convivia versa tumultus 6 adsimilare freto possis, quod saeva quietum 7 ventorum rabies motis exasperat	1 While Perseus, the brave son of Jupiter, 2 surrounded at the feast by Cepheus' lords, 3 narrated this, a raging multitude 4 with sudden outcry filled the royal courts— 5 not with the clamours of a wedding feast 6 but boisterous rage, portentous of dread war. 7 As when the fury of a great wind strikes 8 a tranquil sea, tempestuous billows roll 9 across the peaceful bosom of the deep; 10 so were the pleasures at the banquet changed 11 to sudden tumult. 12 Foremost of that throng, 13

	undis. 8 Primus in his Phineus, belli temerarius auctor, 9 fraxineam quatiens aeratae cuspidis hastam, 10 “en” ait, “en adsum praereptae coniugis ultor, 11 nec mihi te pennae, nec falsum versus in aurum 12 Iuppiter eripiet.” Conanti mittere Cepheus 13 “quid facis?” exclamat, “quae te, germane, furentem 14 mens agit in facinus? meritisne haec gratia tantis 15 redditur? hac vitam servatae dote rependis? 16 Quam tibi non Perseus, verum si quaeris, ademit, 17 sed grave Nereidum numen, sed corniger Ammon, 18 sed quae visceribus veniebat belua ponti 19 exsaturanda meis. Illo tibi tempore rapta est, 20 quo peritura fuit: nisi si crudelis id ipsum 21 exigis, ut pereat, luctuque levabere nostro. 22 Scilicet haud satis est, quod te spectante revincta est 23 et nullam quod opem patruus sponsusve tulisti: 24 insuper, a quoquam quod sit servata, dolebis 25 praemiaque eripies? Quae si tibi magna videntur, 26 ex illis scopulis, ubi erant adfixa, petisses. 27 Nunc sine, qui petiit, per quem haec non orba senectus, 28 ferre quod et meritis et voce est pactus, eumque 29 non tibi, sed certae praelatum intellege morti!” 30 Ille nihil contra: sed et hunc et Persea vultu	the rash ring-leader, Phineus, shook his spear, 14 brass-tipped of ash, and shouted, “Ha, 'tis I! 15 I come avenger of my ravished bride! 16 Let now your flittering wings deliver you, 17 or even Jupiter, dissolved in showers 18 of imitation gold.” So boasted he, 19 aiming his spear at Perseus. 20 Thus to him 21 cried Cepheus: “Hold your hand, and strike him not! 22 What strange delusions, O my brother, have 23 compelled you to this crime? Is it the just 24 requital of heroic worth? A fair 25 reguerdon for the life of her you loved? 26 “If truth were known, not Perseus ravished her 27 from you; but, either 'twas the awful God 28 that rules the Nereides; or Ammon, crowned 29 with crescent horns; or that monstrosity 30 of Ocean's vast abyss, which came to glut
5.31	31 alterno spectans petat hunc ignorat, an illum, 32 cunctatusque brevi contortam viribus hastam, 33 quantas ira dabat, nequiquam in Persea misit. 34 Ut stetit illa toro, stratis tunc denique Perseus 35 exsiluit; teloque ferox inimica remisso 36 pectora rupisset, nisi post altaria	31 his famine on the issue of my loins. 32 Nor was your suit abandoned till the time 33 when she must perish and be lost to you. 34 So cruel are you, seeking my daughter's death, 35 rejoicing lightly in our deep despair.— 36 “And was it not enough for you to stand 37 supinely by, while she was bound in chains, 38 and offer no assistance, though you were 39 her lover and betrothed? And will you grieve 40 that

	Phineus 37 isset: et (indignum!) scelerato profuit ara. 38 Fronte tamen Rhoeti non inrita cuspis adhaesit. 39 Qui postquam cecidit ferrumque ex osse revulsum est, 40 calcitrat et positas adspergit sanguine mensas. 41 Tum vero indomitas ardescit vulgus in iras, 42 telaque coniciunt, et sunt, qui Cephea dicunt 43 cum genero debere mori. Sed limine tecti 44 exierat Cepheus, testatus iusque fidemque 45 hospitiique deos, ea se prohibente moveri. 46 Bellica Pallas adest et protegit aegide fratrem 47 datque animos. Erat Indus Athis, quem flumine Gange 48 edita Limnaee vitreis peperisse sub undis 49 creditur, egregius forma, quam divite cultu 50 augebat, bis adhuc octonis integer annis, 51 indutus chlamydem Tyriam, quam limbus obibat 52 aureus; ornabant aurata monilia collum 53 et madidos murra curvum crinale capillos. 54 Ille quidem iaculo quamvis distantia misso 55 figere doctus erat, sed tendere doctior arcus. 56 Tunc quoque lenta manu flectentem cornua Perseus 57 stipite, qui media positus fumabat in ara, 58 perculit et fractis confudit in ossibus ora. 59 Hunc ubi laudatos iactantem in sanguine vultus 60 Assyrius vidit Lycabas, iunctissimus illi	she was rescued from a dreadful fate, 41 and spoil her champion of his just rewards? 42 Rewards that now may seem magnificent, 43 but not denied to you if you had won 44 and saved, when she was fettered to the rock. 45 “Let him, whose strength to my declining years 46 restored my child, receive the merit due 47 his words and deeds; and know his suit was not 48 preferred to yours, but granted to prevent 49 her certain death.” 50 not deigning to reply, 51 against them Phineus stood; and glancing back 52 from him to Perseus, with alternate looks, 53 as doubtful which should feel his first attack, 54 made brief delay. Then vain at Perseus hurled 55 his spear, with all the force that rage inspired, 56 but, missing him it quivered in a couch. 57 Provoked beyond endurance Perseus leaped 58 forth from the cushioned seats, and fiercely sent 59 that outwrenched weapon back. It would have pierced 60 his hostile breast had not the miscreant crouched
5.61	61 et comes et veri non dissimulator amoris, 62 postquam exhalantem sub acerbo vulnere vitam 63 deploravit Athin, quos ille tetenderat arcus 64 arripit et “mecum tibi sint certamina” dixit: 65 “nec longum pueri fato laetabere,	61 behind the altars. Oh perverted good, 62 that thus an altar should abet the wrong! 63 But, though the craven Phineus escaped, 64 not vainly flew the whizzing point, but struck 65 in Rhoetus' forehead. As the barb was torn 66 out of the bone, the victim's heels began 67 to kick upon the floor, and spouting blood 68 defiled the festal

	quo plus 66 invidiae, quam laudis habes.” Haec omnia nondum 67 dixerat, emicuit nervo penetrabile telum 68 vitatumque tamen sinuosa veste pependit. 69 Vertit in hunc harpen spectatam caede Medusae 70 Acrisioniades adigitque in pectus: at ille 71 iam moriens, oculis sub nocte natantibus atra 72 circumspexit Athin seque acclinavit ad illum 73 et tulit ad manes iunctae solacia mortis. 74 Ecce Syenites, genitus Metione, Phorbas 75 et Libys Amphimedon, avidi committere pugnam, 76 sanguine, quo late tellus madefacta tepebat, 77 conciderant lapsi: surgentibus obstitit ensis, 78 alterius costis, iugulo Phorbantis adactus. 79 At non Actoriden Erytum, cui lata bipennis 80 telum erat, hamato Perseus petit ense, sed altis 81 exstantem signis multaeque in pondere massae 82 ingentem manibus tollit cratera duabus 83 infligitque viro; rutilum vomit ille cruorem 84 et resupinus humum moribundo vertice pulsat. 85 Inde Semiramio Polydegmona sanguine cretum 86 Caucasiumque Abarin Sperchionidenque Lycetum 87 intonsumque comas Helicen Phlegyanque Clytumque 88 sternit et exstructos morientum calcat acervos. 89 Nec Phineus ausus concurrere comminus hosti, 90 intorquet iaculum: quod detulit error in Idan,	board. Then truly flame 69 in uncontrolled rage the vulgar crowd, 70 and hurl their harmful darts. 71 And there are some 72 who hold that Cepheus and his son-in-law 73 deserved to die; but Cepheus had passed forth 74 the threshold of his palace: having called 75 on all the Gods of Hospitality 76 and Truth and Justice to attest, he gave 77 no comfort to the enemies of Peace. 78 Unconquered Pallas is at hand and holds 79 her Aegis to protect her brother's life; 80 she lends him dauntless courage. At the feast 81 was one from India's distant shores, whose name 82 was Athis. It was said that Limnate, 83 the daughter of the River Ganges, him 84 in vitreous caverns bright had brought to birth; 85 and now at sixteen summers in his prime, 86 the handsome youth was clad in costly robes. 87 A purple mantle with a golden fringe 88 covered his shoulders, and a necklace, carved 89 of gold, enhanced the beauty of his throat. 90 His hair encompassed with a coronal, 5.91	91 expertem frustra belli et neutra arma secutum. 92 Ille tuens oculis inmitem Phinea torvis 93 “quandoquidem in partes” ait “abstrahor, accipe, Phineu, 94 quem fecisti hostem pensaque hoc	91 delighted with sweet myrrh. Well taught was he 92 to hurl the javelin at a distant mark, 93 and none with better skill could stretch the bow. 94 No sooner had he bent the pliant horns 95 than Perseus, with a smoking billet, seized 96 from the mid-altar, struck him

	vulnere vulnus”; 95 iamque remissurus tractum de vulnere telum 96 sanguine defectos cecidit conlapsus in artus. 97 Hic quoque Cephenum post regem primus Hodites 98 ense iacet Clymeni; Prothoenora percutit Hypseus, 99 Hypsea Lyncides. Fuit et grandaevus in illis 100 Emathion, aequi cultor timidusque deorum; 101 qui, quoniam prohibent anni bellare, loquendo 102 pugnat et incessit sceleratagque devovet arma. 103 Huic Chromis amplexo tremulis altaria palmis 104 decutit ense caput; quod protinus incidit arae 105 atque ibi semianimi verba exsecrantia lingua 106 edidit, et medios animam exspiravit in ignes. 107 Hinc gemini fratres Broteasque et caestibus Ammon 108 invicti, vinci si possent caestibus enses, 109 Phinea cecidere manu, Cererisque sacerdos 110 Ampycus, albenti velatus tempora vitta. 111 Tu quoque, Lampetide, non hos adhibendus ad usus, 112 sed qui, pacis opus, citharam cum voce moveres, 113 iussus eras celebrare dapes festumque canendo. 114 Quem procul adstantem plectrumque imbelle tenentem 115 Pettalus inridens “Stygiis cane cetera” dixit 116 “manibus” et laevo mucronem tempore fixit. 117 Concidit et digitis morientibus ille retemptat 118 fila lyrae, casuque fuit miserabile carmen. 119 Nec sinit hunc impune ferox cecidisse Lycormas 120 raptaque de dextro robusta repagula posti	on the face, 97 and smashed his features in his broken skull. 98 And when Assyrian Lycabas had seen 99 his dear companion, whom he truly loved, 100 beating his handsome countenance in blood. 101 And when he had bewailed his lost life, 102 that ebbed away from that unpiteous wound, 103 he snatched the bow that Athis used, and said; 104 “Let us in single combat seek revenge; 105 not long will you rejoice the stripling's fate; 106 a deed most worthy shame.” So speaking, forth 107 the piercing arrow bounded from the cord, 108 which, though avoided, struck the hero's cloak 109 and fastened in its folds.— 110 Then Perseus turned 111 upon him, with the trusted curving sword, 112 cause of Medusa's death, and drove the blade 113 deep in his breast. The dying victim's eyes, 114 now swimming in a shadowous night, looked 'round 115 for Athis, whom, beholding, he reclined 116 upon, and ushered to the other world,— 117 sad consolation of united death. 118 And Phorbas the descendant of Methion. 119 Who hailed from far Syene, with his friend 120 Amphimedon of Libya, in their haste 121 to join the battle, slipped up in the blood 122 and fell together: just as they arose 123 that glittering sword was driven through the throat 124 of Phorbas into the ribs of his companion. 125 But Erithus, the son of Actor, swung 126 a battle-ax, so weighty, Perseus chose 127 not combat with his curving blade. He seized 128 in his two hands a huge bowl, wrought around 129 with large design, outstanding from its mass. 130 This, lifting up, he dashes on his foe, 131 who vomits crimson blood, and falling back 132 beats on the hard floor with his dying head. 133 And next he slew Caucasian Abaris, 134 and Polydaemon —from Semiramis 135 nobly descended —and Sperchius, son, 136 Lycetus, long-haired Elyces, unshorn, 137 Clytus and Phlegias, the hero slew;— 138 and trampled on the dying heaped around. 139 Not daring to engage his enemy 140 in open contest, Phineus held aloof, 141 and hurled his javelin. Badly aimed —by some 142 mischance or turned—it wounded Idas, who 143 had followed neither side; vain-hoping thus 144 to shun the conflict. 145 Idas, filled with rage, 146 on Phineus gazed with futile hate, and said, 147 “Since I am forced unwilling to such deeds, 5.121	121 ossibus inlisit mediae cervicis: at ille 122 procubuit terrae mactati more iuvenci. 123 Demere temptabat laevi quoque robora postis 124 Cinyphius Pelates: temptanti dextera fixa est 125 cuspide Marmaridae Corythi lignoque cohaesit. 126 Haerenti latus hausit Abas: nec corruit ille, 127 sed retinente manum moriens e poste pependit. 128 Sternitur et Menaleus, Perseia castra secutus, 129 et Nasamoniaci Dorylas ditissimus agri, 130 dives agri Dorylas, quo non possederat alter 131 latius aut totidem tollebat turis acervos. 132 Huius in obliquo missum stetit inguine ferrum: 133 letifer ille locus. Quem postquam vulneris auctor 134 singultantem animam et versantem lumina vidit 135 Bactrius Halcyoneus “hoc, quod premis” inquit, “habeto 136 de tot agris terrae” corpusque exsangue reliquit. 137 Torquet in hunc hastam calido de vulnere raptam 138 ultor Abantiades; media quae nare recepta 139 cervice exacta est in partesque eminet ambas. 140 Dumque manum Fortuna iuvat, Clytiumque Claninque, 141 matre satos una, diverso vulnere fudit: 142 nam Clytii per utrumque gravis librata lacerto 143 fraxinus acta femur, iaculum Clanis ore momordit. 144 Occidit et Celadon Mendesius, occidit Astreus, 145 matre Palaestina, dubio genitore creatus, 146 Aethionque sagax quondam ventura videre 147 (tunc ave deceptus falsa), regisque Thoactes 148 armiger et caeso genitore infamis	148 behold, whom you have made your enemy, 149 O savage Phineus! Let your recompense 150 be stroke for stroke.” So speaking, from the wound 151 he drew the steel, but, faint from loss of blood, 152 before his arm could hurl the weapon back, 153 he sank upon his knees. 154 Here, also, lies 155 Odytes, —noblest of the Cephenes, 156 save Cepheus only,—slaughtered by the sword 157 of Clymenus. And Prothoenor lies 158 the victim of Hypseus; by his side 159 Hypseus slaughtered by Lyncidas falls. 160 And in the midst of this destruction stood 161 Emathion, now an aged man, revered, 162 who feared the Gods, and stood for upright deeds. 163 And, since his years denied him strength for war, 164 he battled with his tongue, and railed, and cursed 165 their impious weapons. As that aged man 166 clings to the altar with his trembling hands, 167 Chromis with ruthless sword cuts off his head, 168 which straightway falls upon the altar, whence 169 his dying tongue denounces them in words 170 of execration: and his soul expires 171 amid the altar flames. 172 Then Broteas 173 and Ammon, his twin brother, who not knew 174 their equals at the cestus, by the hand 175 of Phineus fell; for what avails in deed 176 the cestus as a weapon matched with swords. 177 Ampycus by the same hand fell,—the priest

	Agyrtes. 149 Plus tamen exhausto superest: namque omnibus unum 150 opprimere est animus, coniurata undique pugnant
5.151	151 agmina pro causa meritum impugnante fidemque: 152 hac pro parte socer frustra pius et nova coniunx 153 cum genetrice favent ululatuque atria complent. 154 Sed sonus armorum superat gemitusque cadentum, 155 pollutosque semel multo Bellona penates 156 sanguine perfundit renovataque proelia miscet. 157 Circueunt unum Phineus et mille secuti 158 Phinea: tela volant hiberna grandine plura 159 praeter utrumque latus praeterque et lumen et aures. 160 Applicat hic umeros ad magnae saxa columnae, 161 tutaque terga gerens adversaque in agmina versus 162 sustinet instantes. Instabat parte sinistra 163 Chaonius Molpeus, dextra Nabataeus Echemmon. 164 Tigris ut auditis diversa valle duorum 165 exstimulata fame mugitibus armentorum 166 nescit, utro potius ruat, et ruere ardet utroque, 167 sic dubius Perseus, dextra laevane feratur, 168 Molpea traiecti submovit vulnere cruris, 169 contentusque fuga est: neque enim dat tempus Echemmon, 170 sed furit et, cupiens saltu dare vulnera collo, 171 non circumspectis exactum viribus ensem 172 fregit, et extrema percussae parte columnae 173 lammina dissiluit dominique in gutture fixa est. 174 Non tamen ad letum causas satis illa valentes 175 plaga dedit: trepidum Perseus et inermia frustra 176 bracchia tendentem Cyllenide confodit harpe. 177 Verum ubi virtutem turbae	178 of Ceres, with his temples wreathed in white. 179 And O, Iapetides not for this 180 did you attend the feast! Your voice attuned 181 melodious to the harp, was in request 182 to celebrate the wedding- day with song,— 183 a work of peace; as you did stand aside, 184 holding the peaceful plectrum in your hand, 185 the mocking Pettalus in ridicule said, 186 “Go sing your ditties to the Stygian shades.” 187 And, mocking thus, he drove his pointed sword 188 in your right temple. As your limbs gave way, 189 your dying fingers swept the tuneful strings: 190 and falling you did chant a mournful dirge.— 191 You to avenge enraged Lycormas tore 192 a huge bar from the door-post, on the right, 193 and dashing it against the mocker crushed 194 his neck-bones: as a slaughtered bullock falls— 195 he tumbled to the ground. 196 Then on the left. 197 Cinyphian Pelates began to wrench 198 an oak plank from the door- post, but the spear 199 of Corythus, the son of Marmarus, 200 pinioned his right hand to the wooden post; 201 and while he struggled Abas pierced his side.— 202 He fell not to the floor, but dying hung 203 suspended from the door-post by his hand. 204 And of the friends of Perseus, Melaneus 205 was slain, and Dorylas whose wealth was large 206 in Nasamonian land. No other lord, 207 as Dorylas, such vast estates possessed;

	succumbere vidit, 178 “auxilium” Perseus “quoniam sic cogitis ipsi” 179 dixit “ab hoste petam. Vultus avertite vestros, 180 siquis amicus adest!” et Gorgonis extulit ora.
5.181	181 “Quaere alium, tua quem moveant miracula” dixit 182 Thescelus; utque manu iaculum fatale parabat 183 mittere, in hoc haesit signum de marmore gestu. 184 Proximus huic Ampyx animi plenissima magni 185 pectora Lyncidae gladio petit; inque petendo 186 dextera deriguit nec citra mota nec ultra est. 187 At Nileus, qui se genitum septemplice Nilo 188 mentitus erat, clipeo quoque flumina septem 189 argento partim, partim caelaverat auro, 190 “adspice” ait, “Perseu, nostrae primordia gentis: 191 magna feres tacitas solacia mortis ad umbras, 192 a tanto cecidisse viro”: pars ultima vocis 193 in medio suppressa sono est, adapertaque velle 194 ora loqui credas, nec sunt ea pervia verbis. 195 Increpat hos “vitio” que “animi, non viribus” inquit 196 “Gorgoneis torpetis” Eryx: “incurrite mecum 197 et prosternite humi iuvenem magica arma moventem!” 198 Incursurus erat: tenuit vestigia tellus, 199 inmotusque silex armataque mansit imago. 200 Hi tamen ex merito poenas subiere; sed unus 201 miles erat Persei, pro quo dum pugnat, Aconteus, 202 Gorgone conspecta saxo concrevit oborto. 203 Quem ratus Astyages etiamnum vivere, longo 204 ense ferit: sonuit tinnitibus ensis acutis. 205 Dum stupet Astyages, naturam traxit eandem, 206 marmoreoque manet vultus	208 no other owned so many heaps of corn. 209 The missile steel stood fastened in his groin, 210 obliquely fixed,—a fatal spot—and when 211 the author of his wound, Halcyoneus 212 the Bactrian, beheld his victim thus, 213 rolling his eyes and sobbing forth his soul, 214 he railed; “Keep for yourself of all your lands 215 as much as you can cover.” And he left 216 the bleeding corpse. 217 But Perseus in revenge 218 hurled after him a spear, which, in his need, 219 he ripped out from the wound, yet warm, and struck 220 the boaster on the middle of his nose. 221 The piercing steel, passed through his nose and neck,— 222 remained projecting from the front and back. 223 And while good fortune helped his hand, he slew 224 Clanis and Clytius, of one mother born, 225 but with a different wound he slaughtered each: 226 for, leveled by a mighty arm, his ashen spear 227 drove through the thighs of Clytius, right and left, 228 and Clanis bit the javelin with his teeth. 229 And by his might, Mendesian Celadon 230 and Atreus fell, his mother of the tribes 231 of Palestine, his father was unknown. 232 Aethion, also, who could well foresee 233 the things to come, but was at last deceived 234 by some false omen. And Thoactes fell, 235 the armour-bearer of the king; and, next, 236 the infamous Agyrtes who had slain 237 his father. These he slew; and though his strength mirantis in ore. 207 Nomina longa mora est media de plebe virorum 208 dicere: bis centum restabant corpora pugnae, 209 Gorgone bis centum riguerunt corpora visa. 210 Paenitet iniusti tunc denique Phinea belli.

5.211	211 Sed quid agat? simulacra videt diversa figuris 212 agnoscitque suos et nomine quemque vocatum 213 poscit opem, credensque parum sibi proxima tangit 214 corpora: marmor erant. Avertitur, atque ita supplex 215 confessasque manus obliquaque bracchia tendens, 216 “vincis” ait, “Perseu. Remove tua monstra tuaeque 217 saxificos vultus, quaecumque ea, tolle Medusae, 218 tolle, precor. Non nos odium regnique cupido 219 compulit ad bellum: pro coniuge movimus arma. 220 Causa fuit meritis melior tua, tempore nostra. 221 Non cessisse piget. Nihil, o fortissime, praeter 222 hanc animam concede mihi: tua cetera sunto.” 223 Talia dicenti neque eum, quem voce rogabat 224 respicere audenti “quod” ait, “timidissime Phineu, 225 et possum tribuisse et magnum est munus inerti, 226 (pone metum) tribuam: nullo violabere ferro. 227 Quin etiam mansura dabo monimenta per aevum, 228 inque domo soceri semper spectabere nostri, 229 ut mea se sponsi soletur imagine coniunx?” 230 Dixit et in partem Phorcynida transtulit illam, 231 ad quam se trepido Phineus obverterat ore. 232 Tunc quoque conanti sua vertere lumina cervix 233 deriguit, saxoque oculorum induruit umor. 234 Sed tamen os timidum vultusque in marmore supplex 235 submissaeque manus faciesque	238 was nearly spent, so many more remained: 239 for now the multitude with one accord 240 conspired to slaughter him. From every side 241 the raging troops assailed the better cause. 242 In vain the pious father and the bride, 243 together with her mother, fill the halls 244 with lamentations; for the clash of arms, 245 the groans of fallen heroes drown their cries.— 246 Bellona in a sea of blood has drenched 247 their Household Gods, polluted by these deeds, 248 and she endeavours to renew the strife. 249 Perseus, alone against that raging throng, 250 is now surrounded by a myriad men, 251 led on by Phineus; and their flying darts, 252 as thick as wintry tail, are showered around 253 on every side, grazing his eyes and ears.— 254 Quickly he fixed his shoulder firm against 255 the rock of a great pillar, which secured 256 his back from danger, and he faced his foes, 257 and baffled their attack. 258 Upon his left 259 Chaonian Molpeus pressed, and on his right 260 a Nabathe an called Ethemon pressed.— 261 As when a tiger from a valley hears 262 the lowing of two herds, in separate fields, 263 though hunger urges he not knows on which 264 to spring, but rages equally for each; 265 so, Perseus doubtful which may first attack 266 his left or right, knows not on which to turn, 267 but stands attentive witness to the flight

	obnoxia mansit. 236 Victor Abantiades patrios cum coniuge muros 237 intrat et inmeriti vindex ultorque parentis 238 adgreditur Proetum: nam fratre per arma fugato 239 Acrisioneas Proetus possederat arces. 240 Sed nec ope armorum, nec, quam male ceperat, arce ictibus undas, 265 silvarum lucos circumspicit antiquarum 266 antraque et innumeris distinctas floribus herbas 267 felicesque vocat pariter studioque locoque 268 Mnemonidas. Quam sic adfata est una sororum: 269 “O, nisi te virtus opera ad maiora tulisset, 270 in partem ventura chori Tritonia nostri, 5.271	271 vera refers meritoque probas artesque locumque, 272 et gratam sortem, tutae modo simus, habemus. 273 Sed (vetitum est adeo sceleri nihil) omnia terrent 274 virgineas mentes, dirusque ante ora Pyreneus 275 vertitur, et nondum tota me mente recepi. 276 Daulida Threicio Phoceaque milite rura 277 ceperat ille ferox iniustaque regna tenebat. 278 Templa petebamus Parnasia: vidit euntes, 279 nostraque fallaci veneratus numina vultu 280 “Mnemonides” (cognorat enim), “consistite” dixit, 281 “nec dubitate, precor, tecto grave sidus et imbrem” 282 (imber erat) “vitare meo: subiere minores 283 saepe casas superi.” Dictis et tempore motae 284 adnuimusque viro primasque intravimus aedes. 285 Desierant imbres, victoque aquilonibus austro 286 fusca repurgato fugiebant nubila caelo. 287 Impetus ire fuit: claudit sua tecta Pyreneus 288 vimque parat. Quam nos sumptis effugimus alis. 289 Ipse secuturo similis stetit arduus arce 290 “qua” que “via est vobis, erit et mihi” dixit “eadem”, 291 seque iacit vecors e summae culmine turris 292 et cadit in vultus, discussisque ossibus oris 293 tundit humum moriens scelerato	279 But when he saw his strength 280 was yielding to the multitude, he said, 281 “Since you have forced disaster on yourselves, 282 why should I hesitate to save myself?— 283 O friends, avert your faces if ye stand 284 before me!” And he raised Medusa,s head. 285 Thescelus answered him; “Seek other dupes 286 to chase with wonders!” Just as he prepared 287 to hurl the deadly javelin from his hand, 288 he stood, unmoving in that attitude, 289 a marble statue. 290 Ampyx, close to him, 291 exulting in a mighty spirit, made 292 a lunge to pierce Lyncides in the breast; 293 but, as his sword was flashing in the air, 294 his right arm grew so rigid, there he stood 295 unable to draw back or thrust it forth. 296 But Nileus, who had feigned himself begot 297 by seven-fold Nile, and carved his shield with gold 298 and silver streams, alternate seven, shouted; 299 “Look, look! O Perseus, him from whom I sprung! 300 And you shall carry to the silent shades 301 a mighty consolation in your death, 302 that you were slain by such a one as I.” 303 But in the midst of boasting, the last words 304 were silenced; and his open mouth, although 305 incapable of motion, seemed intent 306 to utter speech. 307 Then Eryx, chiding says; 308 “Your craven spirits have benumbed you, not
5.241	241 torva colubriferi superavit lumina monstri. 242 Te tamen, o parvae rector, Polydecta, Seriphi, 243 nec iuvenis virtus per tot spectata labores 244 nec mala mollierant, sed inexorabile durus 245 exerces odium, nec iniqua finis in ira est. 246 Detrectas etiam laudem fictamque Medusae 247 arguis esse necem. “Dabimus tibi pignera veri. 248 Parcite luminibus!” Perseus ait oraque regis 249 ore Medusaeo silicem sine sanguine fecit. 250 Hactenus aurigenae comitem Tritonia fratri 251 se dedit: inde cava circumdata nube Seriphon 252 deserit, a dextra Cythno Gyaroque relictis, 253 quaque super pontum via visa brevissima, Thebas 254 virgineumque Helicona petit. Quo monte potita 255 constitit et doctas sic est adfata sorores: 256 “Fama novi fontis nostras pervenit ad aures, 257 dura Medusaei quem praepetis ungula rupit. 258 Is mihi causa viae. Volui mirabile factum 259 cernere: vidi ipsum materno sanguine nasci.” 260 Excipit Uranie: “Quaecumque est causa videndi 261 has tibi, diva, domos, animo gratissima nostro es. 262 Vera tamen fama est, et Pegasus huius origo 263 fontis”, et ad latices deduxit Pallada sacros. 264 Quae mirata diu factas pedis	268 of Molpeus, whom he wounded in the leg. 269 Nor could he choose— Ethemon, full of rage, 270 pressed on him to inflict a fatal wound, 271 deep in his neck; but with incautious force 272 struck the stone pillar with his ringing sword 273 and shattered the metal blade, close to the hilt; 274 the flying fragment pierced its owner's neck, 275 but not with mortal wound. In vain he pled 276 for mercy, stretching forth his helpless arms: 277 perseus transfixed him with his glittering blade, 278 Cyllenian.

	sanguine tinctam.” 294 Musa loquebatur: pennae sonuere per auras, 295 voxque salutantum ramis veniebat ab altis. 296 Suspicit et linguae quaerit tam certa loquentes 297 unde sonent hominemque putat Iove nata locutum: 298 Ales erat, numeroque novem, sua fata querentes, 299 institerant ramis imitantes omnia picae. 300 Miranti sic orsa deae dea: “Nuper et istae
5.301	301 auxerunt volucrum victae certamine turbam. 302 Pieros has genuit Pellaeis dives in arvis, 303 Paeonis Euippe mater fuit. Illa potentem 304 Lucinam noviens, noviens paritura, vocavit. 305 Intumuit numero stolidarum turba sororum, 306 perque tot Haemonias et per tot Achaidas urbes 307 huc venit et tali committit proelia voce: 308 “Desinite indoctum vana dulcedine vulgus 309 fallere: nobiscum, siqua est fiducia vobis, 310 Thespiades certate deae. Nec voce nec arte 311 vincemur, totidemque sumus. Vel cedite victae 312 fonte Medusaeo et Hyantea Aganippe, 313 vel nos Emathiis ad Paeonas usque nivosos 314 cedamus campis. Dirimant certamina nymphae.” 315 Turpe quidem contendere erat, sed cedere visum 316 turpius. Electae iurant per flumina nymphae 317 factaque de vivo pressere sedilia saxo. 318 Tum sine sorte prior quae se certare professa est, 319 bella canit superum, falsoque in honore Gigantas 320 ponit et extenuat magnorum facta deorum; 321 emissumque ima de sede Typhoea terrae 322 caelitibus fecisse metum	309 Medusa's poison.—Come with me and strike 310 this youthful mover of magician charms 311 down to the ground.”—He started with a rush; 312 the earth detained his steps; it held him fast; 313 he could not speak; he stood, complete with arms, 314 a statue. 315 Such a penalty was theirs, 316 and justly earned; but near by there was one, 317 aconteus, who defending Perseus, saw 318 medusa as he fought; and at the sight 319 the soldier hardened to an upright stone.— 320 Assured he was alive, Astyages 321 now struck him with his long sword, but the blade 322 resounded with a ringing note; and there, 323 astonished at the sound, Astyages, 324 himself, assumed that nature; and remained 325 with wonder pictured on his marble face. 326 And not to weary with the names of men, 327 sprung from the middle classes, there remained 328 two hundred warriors eager for the fight— 329 as soon as they could see Medusa's face, 330 two hundred warriors stiffened into stone. 331 At last, repentant, Phineus dreads the war, 332 unjust, for in a helpless fright he sees 333 the statues standing in strange attitudes; 334 and, recognizing his adherents, calls 335 on each by name to rescue from that death. 336 Still unbelieving he begins to touch 337 the bodies, nearest to himself, and all 338 are hard stone.

	cunctosque dedisse 323 terga fugae, donec fessos Aegyptia tellus 324 ceperit et septem discretus in ostia Nilus. 325 Huc quoque terrigenam venisse Typhoea narrat 326 et se mentitis superos celasse figuris; 327 “duxque gregis” dixit “fit Iuppiter; unde recurvis 328 nunc quoque formatus Libys est cum cornibus Ammon. 329 Delius in corvo, proles Semeleia capro, 330 fele soror Phoebi, nivea Saturnia vacca, 5.331	331 pisce Venus latuit, Cyllenius ibidis alis.” 332 Hactenus ad citharam vocalia moverat ora: 333 poscimur Aonides. Sed forsitan otia non sint, 334 nec nostris praebere vacet tibi cantibus aures.” 335 “Ne dubita, vestrumque mihi refer ordine carmen” 336 Pallas ait nemorisque levi consedit in umbra. 337 Musa refert: “Dedimus summam certaminis uni. 338 Surgit et inmissos hedera conlecta capillos 339 Calliope querulas praetemptat pollice chordas, 340 atque haec percussis subiungit carmina nervis: 341 “Prima Ceres unco glaebam dimovit aratro, 342 prima dedit fruges alimentaque mitia terris, 343 prima dedit leges: Cereris sunt omnia munus. 344 Illa canenda mihi est. Utinam modo dicere possem 345 carmina digna dea: certe dea carmine digna est. 346 Vasta giganteis ingesta est insula membris 347 Trinacris et magnis subiectum molibus urget 348 aetherias ausum sperare Typhoea sedes. 349 Nititur ille quidem pugnatque resurgere saepe, 350 dextra sed Ausonio manus est subiecta Peloro, 351 laeva, Pachyne, tibi, Lilybaeo crura	339 Having turned his eyes away, 340 he stretched his hands and arms obliquely back 341 to Perseus, and confessed his wicked deeds; 342 and thus imploring spoke; 343 “Remove, I pray, 344 O Perseus, thou invincible, remove 345 from me that dreadful Gorgon: take away 346 the stone-creating countenance of thy 347 unspeakable Medusa! For we warred 348 not out of hatred, nor to gain a throne, 349 but clashed our weapons for a woman's sake.— 350 “Thy merit proved thy valid claim, and time 351 gave argument for mine. It grieves me not 352 to yield, O bravest, only give me life, 353 and all the rest be thine.” Such words implored 354 the craven, never daring to address 355 his eyes to whom he spoke. 356 And thus returned 357 the valiant Perseus; “I will grant to you, 358 O timid-hearted Phineus! as behoves 359 your conduct; and it should appear a gift, 360 magnanimous, to one who fears to move.— 361 Take courage, for no steel shall violate 362 your carcase; and, moreover, you shall be 363 a monument, that ages may record 364 your unforgotten name. You shall be seen 365 thus always, in the palace where resides 366 my father-in-law, that my surrendered spouse 367 may soften her great grief when she but sees 368 the darling image of her first betrothed.”

	premuntur, 352 degravat Aetna caput: sub qua resupinus harenas 353 eiectat flammamque ferox vomit ore Typhoeus. 354 Saepe remoliri luctatur pondera terrae 355 oppidaque et magnos devolvere corpore montes. 356 Inde tremit tellus, et rex pavet ipse silentum, 357 ne pateat latoque solum retegatur hiatu 358 inmissusque dies trepidantes terreat umbras. 359 Hanc metuens cladem tenebrosa sede tyrannus 360 exierat, curruque atrorum vectus equorum sagittis 381 unam seposuit, sed qua nec acutior ulla 382 nec minus incerta est nec quae magis audiat arcus, 383 oppositoque genu curvavit flexile cornum 384 inque cor hamata percussit harundine Ditem. 385 Haud procul Hennaeis lacus est a moenibus altae, 386 nomine Pergus, aquae. Non illo plura Caystros 387 carmina cycnorum labentibus audit in undis. 388 Silva coronat aquas cingens latus omne, suisque 389 frondibus ut velo Phoebeos submovet ictus. 390 Frigora dant rami, tyrios humus umida flores:
5.361	361 ambibat Siculae cautus fundamina terrae. 362 Postquam exploratum satis est loca nulla labare, 363 depositoque metu, videt hunc Erycina vagantem 364 monte suo residens, natumque amplexa volucrem 365 “arma manusque meae, mea, nate, potentia”, dixit, 366 “illa, quibus superas omnes, cape tela, Cupido, 367 inque dei pectus celeres molire sagittas, 368 cui triplicis cessit fortuna novissima regni. 369 Tu superos ipsumque Iovem tu numina ponti 370 victa domas ipsumque, regit qui numina ponti. 371 Tartara quid cessant? cur non matrisque tuumque 372 imperium profers? agitur pars tertia mundi. 373 Et tamen in caelo, quae iam patientia nostra est, 374 spernimur, ac mecum vires minuuntur Amoris. 375 Pallada nonne vides iaculatricemque Dianam 376 abscessisse mihi? Cereris quoque filia virgo, 377 si patiemur, erit: nam spes adfectat easdem. 378 At tu, pro socio, siqua est ea gratia, regno 379 iunge deam patruo.” Dixit Venus. Ille pharetram 380 solvit et arbitrio matris de mille	369 He spoke, and moved Medusa to that side 370 where Phineus had turned his trembling face: 371 and as he struggled to avert his gaze 372 his neck grew stiff; the moisture of his eyes 373 was hardened into stone.—And since that day 374 his timid face and coward eyes and hands, 375 forever shall be guilty as in life. 376 After such deeds, victorious Perseus turned, 377 and sought the confines of his native land; 378 together with his bride; which, having reached, 379 he punished Proetus—who by force of arms 380 had routed his own brother from the throne 381 of Argos. By his aid Acrisius, 382 although his undeserving parent, gained 383 his citadels once more: for Proetus failed, 384 with all his arms and towers unjustly held, 385 to quell the grim-eyed monster, snake-begin. 386 Yet not the valour of the youth, upheld 387 by many labours, nor his grievous wrongs 388 have softened you, O Polydectes! king 389 of Little Seriphus; but bitter hate 390 ungoverned, rankles in your hardened heart— 391 there is no limit to your unjust rage. 392 Even his praises are defamed by you 393 and all your arguments are given to prove 394 Medusa's death a fraud.—Perseus rejoined; 395 “By this we give our true pledge of the truth, 396 avert your eyes!” And by Medusa's face 397 he made the features of that impious king 398 a bloodless stone.

5.391	391 perpetuum ver est. Quo dum Proserpina luco 392 ludit et aut violas aut candida lilia carpit, 393 dumque puellari studio calathosque sinumque 394 implet et aequales certat superare legendo, 395 paene simul visa est dilectaque raptaque Diti: 396 usque adeo est properatus amor. Dea territa maesto 397 et matrem et comites, sed matrem saepius, ore 398 clamat; et, ut summa vestem laniarat ab ora, 399 conlecti flores tunicis cecidere remissis. 400 Tantaque simplicitas puerilibus adfuit annis, 401 haec quoque virgineum movit iactura dolorem. 402 Raptor agit currus et nomine quemque vocando 403 exhortatur equos, quorum per colla iubasque 404 excutit obscura tinctas ferrugine habenas, 405 perque lacus altos et olentia sulphure fertur 406 stagna Palicorum, rupta fervenu terra, 407 et qua Bacchiadae, bimari gens orta Corintho, 408 inter inaequales posuerunt moenia portus. 409 Est medium Cyanes et Pisaeae	399 Through all these mighty deeds 400 Pallas, Minerva, had availed to guide 401 her gold-begotten brother. Now she sped, 402 surrounded in a cloud, from Seriphus, 403 while Cynthus on the right, and Gyarus 404 far faded from her view. And where a path, 405 high over the deep sea, leads the near way, 406 she winged the air for Thebes, and Helicon 407 haunt of the Virgin Nine. 408 High on that mount 409 she stayed her flight, and with these words bespoke 410 those well-taught sisters; “Fame has given to me 411 the knowledge of a new-made fountain—gift 412 of Pegasus, that fleet steed, from the blood 413 of dread Medusa sprung—it opened when 414 his hard hoof struck the ground.—It is the cause 415 that brought me.—For my longing to have seen 416 this fount, miraculous and wonderful, 417 grows not the less in that myself did see 418 the swift steed, nascent from maternal blood.” 419 To which Urania thus; “Whatever the cause 420 that brings thee to our habitation, thou, 421 O goddess, art to us the greatest joy. 422 And now, to answer thee, reports are true; 423 this fountain is the work of Pegasus,” 424 And having said these words, she gladly thence 425 conducted Pallas to the sacred streams. 426 And Pallas, after she had long admired 427 that fountain, flowing where the hoof had struck, 428 turned round to view the groves of ancient trees;

	Arethusae, 410 quod coit angustis inclusum cornibus aequor. 411 Hic fuit, a cuius stagnum quoque nomine dictum est, 412 inter Sicelidas Cyane celeberrima nymphas. 413 Gurgite quae medio summa tenus exstitit alvo 414 agnovitque deam. “Nec longius ibitis!” inquit, 415 “non potes invitae Cereris gener esse: roganda, 416 non rapienda fuit. Quodsi componere magnis 417 parva mihi fas est, et me dilexit Anapis: 418 exorata tamen, nec, ut haec, exterrita nupsi.” 419 Dixit et in partes diversas bracchia tendens 420 obstitit. Haud ultra tenuit Saturnius iram, 5.421	421 terribilesque hortatus equos in gurgitis ima 422 contortum valido sceptrum regale lacerto 423 condidit. Icta viam tellus in Tartara fecit 424 et pronos currus medio cratere recepit. 425 At Cyane, raptamque deam contemptaque fontis 426 iura sui maerens, inconsolabile vulnus 427 mente gerit tacita lacrimisque absumitur omnis, 428 et quarum fuerat magnum modo numen, in illas 429 ossa pati flexus, ungues posuisse rigorem; 430 extenuatur aquas. Molliri membra videres, 431 primaque de tota tenuissima quaeque liquescunt, 432 caerulei crines digitique et crura pedesque: 433 nam brevis in gelidas membris exilibus undas 434 transitus est: post haec umeri tergusque latusque 435 pectoraque in tenues abeunt evanida rivos. 436 Denique pro vivo vitiatas sanguine venas 437 lympha subit, restatque nihil, quod prendere possis. 438 Interea pavidae nequiquam filia	429 the grottoes and the grass bespangled, rich 430 with flowers unnumbered—all so beautiful 431 she deemed the charm of that locality 432 a fair surrounding for the studious days 433 of those Mnemonian Maids. 434 But one of them 435 addressed her thus; “O thou whose valour gave 436 thy mind to greater deeds! if thou hadst stooped 437 to us, Minerva, we had welcomed thee 438 most worthy of our choir! Thy words are true; 439 and well hast thou approved the joys of art, 440 and this retreat. Most happy would we be 441 if only we were safe; but wickedness 442 admits of no restraint, and everything 443 affrights our virgin minds; and everywhere 444 the dreadful Pyrenaeus haunts our sight;—445 scarcely have we recovered from the shock. 446 “That savage, with his troops of Thrace. had seized 447 the lands of Daulis and of Phocis, where 448 he ruled in tyranny; and when we sought 449 the Temples of Parnassus, he observed 450 us on our way;—and knowing our estate, 451 pretending to revere our sacred lives, 452 he said; ‘O Muses, I beseech you pause! 453 Choose now the shelter of my roof and shun 454 the heavy stars that teem with pouring rain; 455 nor hesitate, for often the glorious Gods 456 have entered humbler homes.’ 457 “Moved by his words, 458 and by the growing storm, matri 439 omnibus est terris, omni quaesita profundo. 440 Illam non udis veniens Aurora capillis 441 cessantem vidit, non Hesperus. Illa duabus 442 flammiferas pinus manibus succendit ab Aetna 443 perque pruinosas tulit inrequieta tenebras. 444 Rursus ubi alma dies hebetarat sidera, natam 445 solis ab occasu solis quaerebat ad ortus. 446 Fessa labore sitim conlegerat oraque nulli 447 colluerant fontes; cum tectam stramine vidit 448 forte casam parvasque fores pulsavit: at inde 449 prodit anus divamque videt, lymphamque roganti 450 dulce dedit, tosta quod texerat ante polenta.	we gave assent, 5.451	451 Dum bibit illa datum, duri puer oris et audax 452 constitit ante deam risitque avidamque vocavit. 453 Offensa est neque adhuc epota parte loquentem 454 cum liquido mixta perfudit diva polenta. 455 Combibit os maculas, et quae modo bracchia gessit, 456 crura gerit; cauda est mutatis addita membris; 457 inque brevem formam, ne sit vis magna nocendi, 458 contrahitur, parvaque minor mensura lacerta est. 459 Mirantem flentemque et tangere monstra parantem 460 fugit anum latebramque petit; aptumque colori 461 nomen habet, variis stellatus corpora guttis. 462 Quas dea per terras et quas erraverit undas, 463 dicere longa mora est: quaerenti defuit orbis. 464 Sicaniam repetit; dumque omnia lustrat eundo, 465 venit et ad Cyanen. Ea ni mutata fuisset, 466 omnia narrasset: sed et os et lingua volenti 467 dicere non aderant, nec quo	459 and entered his first house. But presently 460 the storm abated, and the southern wind 461 was conquered by the north; the black clouds fled, 462 and soon the skies were clear. 463 “At once we sought 464 to quit the house, but Pyrenaeus closed 465 all means of exit,—and prepared to force 466 our virtue. Instantly we spread our wings, 467 and so escaped; but on a lofty tower 468 he stood, as if to follow, and exclaimed; 469 ‘A path for you marks out a way for me., 470 and quite insane, he leaped down from the top 471 of that high tower.—Falling on his face, 472 the bones were crushed, and as his life ebbed out 473 the ground was crimsoned with his wicked blood.” 474 So spoke the Muse. And now was heard the sound 475 of pennons in the air, and voices, too, 476 gave salutations from the lofty trees. 477 Minerva, thinking they were human tongues, 478 looked up in question whence the perfect words; 479 but on the boughs, nine ugly magpies perched, 480 those mockers of all sounds, which now complained 481 their hapless fate. And as she wondering stood, 482 Urania, goddess of the Muse, rejoined;— 483 “Look, those but lately worsted in dispute 484 augment the number of unnumbered birds.— 485 Pierus was loqueretur habebat. 468 Signa tamen manifesta dedit notamque parenti, 469 illo forte loco delapsam in gurgite sacro, 470 Persephones zonam summis ostendit in undis. 471 Quam simul agnovit, tamquam tunc denique raptam 472 scisset, inornatos laniavit diva capillos 473 et repetita suis percussit pectora palmis. 474 Nescit adhuc, ubi sit: terras tamen increpat omnes 475 ingratasque vocat nec frugum munere dignas, 476 Trinacriam ante alias, in qua vestigia damni 477 repperit. Ergo illic saeva vertentia glaebas 478 fregit aratra manu, parilique irata colonos 479 ruricolasque boves leto dedit arvaque iussit 480 fallere depositum vitiataque semina fecit.	their father, very rich 486 in lands of Pella; and their mother (called 487 Evippe of Paeonia) when she brought 488 them forth, nine times evoked, in labours nine,

5.481	481 Fertilitas terrae latum vulgata per orbem 482 falsa iacet: primis segetes moriuntur in herbis, 483 et modo sol nimius, nimius modo corripit imber 484 sideraque ventique nocent, avidaeque volucres 485 semina iacta legunt; lolium tribulique fatigant 486 triticeas messes et inexpugnabile gramen. 487 Tum caput Eleis Alpheias extulit undis 488 rorantesque comas a fronte removit ad aures 489 atque ait: “O toto quaesitae virginis orbe 490 et frugum genetrix, inmensos siste labores 491 neve tibi fidae violenta irascere terrae. 492 Terra nihil meruit patuitque invita rapinae. 493 Nec sum pro patria supplex: huc hospita veni; 494 Pisa mihi patria est et ab Elide ducimus ortus; 495 Sicaniam peregrina colo, sed gratior omni 496 haec mihi terra solo est: hos nunc	489 Lucina's aid.—Unduly puffed with pride, 490 because it chanced their number equalled ours, 491 these stupid sisters, hither to engage 492 in wordy contest, fared through many towns;— 493 through all Haemonia and Achaia came 494 to us, and said;— 495 ‘Oh, cease your empty songs, 496 attuned to dulcet numbers, that deceive 497 the vulgar, untaught throng. If aught is yours 498 of confidence, O Thespian Deities 499 contend with us: our number equals yours. 500 We will not be defeated by your arts; 501 nor shall your songs prevail.—Then, conquered, give 502 Hyantean Aganippe; yield to us 503 the Medusean Fount;—and should we fail, 504 we grant Emathia's plains, to where uprise 505 Paeonia's peaks of snow.—Let chosen Nymphs 506 award the prize—.’ 'Twas shameful to contend; 507 it seemed more shameful to submit. At once, 508 the chosen Nymphs swore justice by their streams, 509 and sat in judgment on their thrones of rock. 510 “At once, although the lot had not been cast, 511 the leading sister hastened to begin.— 512 She chanted of celestial wars; she gave 513 the Giants false renown; she gave the Gods 514 small credit for

	Arethusa penates, 497 hanc habeo sedem: quam tu, mitissima, serva. 498 Mota loco cur sim tantique per aequoris undas 499 advehar Ortygiam, veniet narratibus hora 500 tempestiva meis, cum tu curaque levata 501 et vultus melioris eris. Mihi pervia tellus 502 praebet iter, subterque imas ablata cavernas 503 hic caput attollo desuetaque sidera cerno. 504 Ergo dum Stygio sub terris gurgite labor, 505 visa tua est oculis illic Proserpina nostris: 506 illa quidem tristis neque adhuc interrita vultu, 507 sed regina tamen, sed opaci maxima mundi, 508 sed tamen inferni pollens matrona tyranni.” 509 Mater ad auditas stupuit ceu saxea voces 510 attonitaeque diu similis fuit. Utque dolore	great deeds.—She droned out, ‘Forth, 515 those deepest realms of earth, Typhoeus came, 516 and filled the Gods with fear. They turned their backs 517 in flight to Egypt; and the wearied rout, 518 where Great Nile spreads his seven-channeled mouth, 5.511	511 pulsa gravi gravis est amentia, curribus oras 512 exit in aetherias. Ibi toto nubila vultu 513 ante Iovem passis stetit invidiosa capillis 514 “pro” que “meo veni supplex tibi, Iuppiter” inquit, 515 “sanguine proque tuo. Si nulla est gratia matris, 516 nata patrem moveat, neu sit tibi cura, precamur, 517 vilior illius, quod nostro est edita partu. 518 En quaesita diu tandem mihi nata reperta est, 519 si reperire vocas amittere certius, aut si 520 scire, ubi sit, reperire vocas. Quod rapta, feremus, 521 dummodo reddat eam: neque enim praedone marito 522 filia digna tua est, si iam mea filia non est.” 523 Iuppiter excepit: “Commune est pignus onusque 524 nata mihi tecum. Sed si modo nomina rebus 525 addere vera placet, non hoc iniuria	519 were there received.—Thither the earth-begot 520 Typhoeus hastened: but the Gods of Heaven 521 deceptive shapes assumed.—Lo, Jupiter, 522 (As Libyan Ammon's crooked horns attest) 523 was hidden in the leader of a flock; 524 Apollo in a crow; Bacchus in a goat; 525 Diana in a cat; Venus in a fish; 526 Saturnian Juno in a snow-white cow; 527 Cyllenian Hermes in an Ibis' wings.’— 528 Such stuff she droned out from her noisy mouth: 529 and then they summoned us; but, haply, time 530 permits thee not, nor leisure thee permits, 531 that thou shouldst hearken to our melodies.” 532 “Nay doubt it not,” quoth Pallas, “but relate 533 your melodies in order.” And she sat 534 beneath the pleasant shadows of the grove. 535 And thus again Urania; “On our side 536 we trusted all to one.” Which having said, 537 Calliope arose. Her glorious hair 538 was bound with ivy. She attuned the chords, 539 and chanted as she struck the sounding strings:— 540 “First Ceres broke with crooked plow the glebe; 541 first gave to earth its fruit and wholesome food; 542 first gave the laws;—all things of factum, 526 verum amor est; neque erit nobis gener ille pudori, 527 tu modo, diva, velis. Ut desint cetera, quantum est 528 esse Iovis fratrem! — Quid quod non cetera desunt 529 nec cedit nisi sorte mihi? sed tanta cupido 530 si tibi discidii est, repetet Proserpina caelum, 531 lege tamen certa, si nullos contigit illic 532 ore cibos; nam sic Parcarum foedere cautum est.” 533 Dixerat. At Cereri certum est educere natam. 534 Non ita fata sinunt, quoniam ieiunia virgo 535 solverat et, cultis dum simplex errat in hortis, 536 Poeniceum curva decerpserat arbore pomum 537 sumptaque pallenti septem de cortice grana 538 presserat ore suo. Solusque ex omnibus illud 539 Ascalaphus vidit, quem quondam dicitur Orphne, 540 inter Avernales haud ignotissima nymphas,	Ceres came; 543 of her I sing; and oh, that I could tell 544 her worth in verse; in verse her worth is due. 545 “Because he dared to covet heavenly thrones 546 Typhoeus, giant limbs are weighted down 547 beneath Sicilia's Isle—vast in extent— 548 how often thence he strains and strives to rise? 549 But his right hand Pachynus holds; his legs are pressed 550 by Lilybaeus, Aetna weights his head. 551 Beneath that ponderous mass Typhoeus lies, 552 flat on his back; and spues the sands on high; 553 and vomits flames from his ferocious mouth. 554 He often strives to push the earth away, 555 the cities and the mountains from his limbs— 556 by which the lands are shaken. Even the king, 557 that rules the silent shades is made to quake, 558 for fear the earth may open and the ground, 559 cleft in wide chasms, letting in the day, 560 may terrify the trembling ghosts. Afraid 561 of this disaster, that dark despot left 562 his gloomy habitation; carried forth 563 by soot-black horses, in his gloomy car. 564 “He circumspectly viewed Sicilia's vast 565 foundations.—Having well explored and proved 566 no part was shattered; having laid aside 567 his careful fears, he wandered in those parts. 568 “Him, Venus, Erycina, in her mount 569 thus witnessed, and embraced her winged son,

5.541	541 ex Acheronte suo silvis peperisse sub atris: 542 vidit et indicio reditum crudelis ademit. 543 Ingemuit regina Erebi testemque profanam 544 fecit avem, sparsumque caput Phlegethontide lympha 545 in rostrum et plumas et grandia lumina vertit. 546 Ille sibi ablatus fulvis amicitur in alis, 547 inque caput crescit, longosque reflectitur ungues 548 vixque movet natas per inertia bracchia pennas: 549 foedaque fit volucris, venturi nuntia luctus, 550 ignavus bubo, dirum mortalibus omen. 551 Hic tamen indicio poenam linguaque videri 552 commeruisse potest: vobis,	570 and said, ‘O Cupid! thou who art my son— 571 my arms, my hand, my strength; take up those arms, 572 by which thou art victorious over all, 573 and aim thy keenest arrow at the heart 574 of that divinity whom fortune gave 575 the last award, what time the triple realm, 576 by lot was portioned out. 577 ‘The Gods of Heaven 578 are overcome by thee; and Jupiter, 579 and all the Deities that swim the deep, 580 and the great ruler of the Water-Gods: 581 why, then, should Tartarus escape our sway— 582 the third part of the universe at stake— 583 by which thy mother's empire and thy own 584 may be enlarged according to great need. 585 ‘How shameful is our present lot in Heaven, 586 the powers of love and I alike despised; 587 for, mark how Pallas has renounced my sway, 588 besides Diana, javelin-hurler—so 589 will Ceres' daughter choose virginity,

	Acheloides, unde 553 pluma pedesque avium, cum virginis ora geratis? 554 an quia, cum legeret vernos Proserpina flores, 555 in comitum numero, doctae Sirenes, eratis? 556 Quam postquam toto frustra quaesistis in orbe, 557 protinus, ut vestram sentirent aequora curam, 558 posse super fluctus alarum insistere remis 559 optastis, facilesque deos habuistis et artus 560 vidistis vestros subitis flavescere pennis. 561 Ne tamen ille canor mulcendas natus ad aures 562 tantaque dos oris linguae deperderet usum, 563 virginei vultus et vox humana remansit. 564 At medius fratrisque sui maestaeque sororis 565 Iuppiter ex aequo volventem dividit annum. 566 Nunc dea, regnorum numen commune duorum, 567 cum matre est totidem, totidem cum coniuge menses. 568 Vertitur extemplo facies et mentis et oris: 569 nam modo quae poterat Diti quoque maesta videri, 570 laeta deae frons est, ut sol, qui tectus aquosis	590 if we permit,—that way her hopes incline. 591 Do thou this goddess Proserpine, unite 592 in marriage to her uncle. Venus spoke;— 593 “Cupid then loosed his quiver, and of all 594 its many arrows, by his mother's aid, 595 selected one; the keenest of them all; 596 the least uncertain, surest from the string: 597 and having fixed his knee against the bow, 598 bent back the flexile horn.—The flying shaft 599 struck Pluto in the breast.
5.571	571 nubibus ante fuit, victis e nubibus exit. 572 Exigit alma Ceres, nata secura recepta, 573 quae tibi causa fugae, cur sis, Arethusa, sacer fons. 574 Conticuere undae: quarum dea sustulit alto 575 fonte caput viridesque manu siccata capillos 576 fluminis Elei veteres narravit amores. 577 “Pars ego nympharum quae sunt in Achaide” dixit, 578 “una fui, nec me studiosius altera saltus 579 legit nec posuit studiosius altera casses. 580 Sed quamvis formae numquam mihi fama petita est, 581 quamvis fortis eram, formosae	600 “There is a lake 601 of greatest depth, not far from Henna's walls, 602 long since called Pergus; and the songs of swans, 603 that wake Cayster, rival not the notes 604 of swans melodious on its gliding waves: 605 a fringe of trees, encircling as a wreath 606 its compassed waters, with a leafy veil 607 denies the heat of noon; cool breezes blow 608 beneath the boughs; the humid ground is sprent 609 with purpling flowers, and spring eternal reigns. 610 “While Proserpine once dallied in that grove, 611 plucking white lilies and sweet violets, 612 and while she heaped her basket, while she filled 613 her bosom, in a pretty zeal to strive 614 beyond all others; she was seen, beloved, 615 and carried off by Pluto—such the haste 616 of sudden love. 617 “The goddess, in great fear, nomen habebam. 582 Nec mea me facies nimium laudata iuvabat, 583 quaque aliae gaudere solent, ego rustica dote 584 corporis erubui, crimenque placere putavi. 585 Lassa revertebar (memini) Stymphalide silva: 586 aestus erat, magnumque labor geminaverat aestum. 587 Invenio sine vertice aquas, sine murmure euntes, 588 perspicuas ad humum, per quas numerabilis alte 589 calculus omnis erat, quas tu vix ire putares. 590 Cana salicta dabant nutritaque populus unda 591 sponte sua natas ripis declivibus umbras. 592 Accessi primumque pedis vestigia tinxi, 593 poplite deinde tenus: neque eo contenta, recingor 594 molliaque impono salici velamina curvae 595 nudaque mergor aquis. Quas dum ferioque trahoque 596 mille modis labens excussaque bracchia iacto, 597 nescio quod medio sensi sub gurgite murmur 598 territaque insisto propioris margine ripae. 599 “Quo properas, Arethusa?” suis Alpheus ab undis, 600 “quo properas?” iterum rauco mihi dixerat ore.	618 called on her mother and on all her friends; 619 and, in her frenzy, as her robe was rent, 620 down from the upper edge, her gathered flowers 621 fell from her loosened tunic.—This mishap, 622 so perfect was her childish innocence, 623 increased her virgin grief.— 624 “The ravisher 625 urged on his chariot, and inspired his steeds; 626 called each by name, and on their necks and manes 627 shook the black-rusted reins. They hastened through 628 deep lakes, and through the pools of Palici, 629 which boiling upward from the ruptured earth

5.601	601 Sicut eram, fugio sine vestibus: altera vestes 602 ripa meas habuit. Tanto magis instat et ardet, 603 et quia nuda fui, sum visa paratior illi. 604 Sic ego currebam, sic me ferus ille premebat, 605 ut fugere accipitrem penna trepidante columbae, 606 ut solet accipiter trepidas urgere columbas. 607 Usque sub Orchomenon Psophidaque Cyllenenque 608 Maenaliosque sinus gelidumque Erymanthon et Elin 609 currere sustinui; nec me velocior ille. 610 Sed tolerare diu cursus ego,	630 smell of strong sulphur. And they bore him thence 631 to where the sons of Bacchus, who had sailed 632 from twin-sea Corinth, long ago had built 633 a city's walls between unequal ports.

	viribus impar, 611 non poteram: longi patiens erat ille laboris. 612 Per tamen et campos, per opertos arbore montes, 613 saxa quoque et rupes et qua via nulla, cucurri. 614 Sol erat a tergo: vidi praecedere longam 615 ante pedes umbram, nisi si timor illa videbat; 616 sed certe sonitusque pedum terrebat et ingens 617 crinales vittas adflabat anhelitus oris. 618 Fessa labore fugae “fer opem, deprendimur” inquam, 619 “armigerae, Diana, tuae, cui saepe dedisti 620 ferre tuos arcus inclusaque tela pharetra.” 621 Mota dea est spissisque ferens e nubibus unam 622 me super iniecit. Lustrat caligine tectam 623 amnis et ignarus circum cava nubila quaerit. 624 Bisque locum, quo me dea texerat inscius ambit 625 et bis “io Arethusa io Arethusa!” vocavit. 626 Quid mihi tunc animi miserae fuit? anne quod agnae est, 627 siqua lupos audit circum stabula alta frementes, 628 aut lepori, qui vepre latens hostilia cernit 629 ora canum nullosque audet dare corpore motus? 630 Non tamen abscedit: neque enim vestigia cernit 5.631	631 longius ulla pedum: servat nubemque locumque. 632 Occupat obsessos sudor mihi frigidus artus, 633 caeruleaeque cadunt toto de corpore guttae, 634 quaque pedem movi, manat lacus, eque capillis 635 ros cadit, et citius, quam nunc tibi facta renarro, 636 in latices mutor. Sed enim cognoscit amatas 637 amnis aquas, positoque viri, quod sumpserat, ore 638 vertitur in proprias, ut se mihi misceat, undas. 639 Delia rupit humum; caecisque ego	634 “Midway between the streams of Cyane 635 and Arethusa lies a moon-like pool, 636 of silvered narrow horns. There stood the Nymph, 637 revered above all others in that land, 638 whose name was Cyane. From her that pond 639 was always called. And as she stood, concealed 640 in middle waves that circled her white thighs, 641 she recognized the God, and said; ‘O thou 642 shalt go no further, Pluto, thou shalt not 643 by force alone become the son-in-law 644 of Ceres. It is better to beseech 645 a mother's aid than drag her child away! 646 And this sustains my word, if I may thus 647 compare great things with small, Anapis loved

	mersa cavernis 640 advehor Ortygiam, quae me cognomine divae 641 grata meae superas eduxit prima sub auras.” 642 Hac Arethusa tenus. Geminos dea fertilis angues 643 curribus admovit frenisque coercuit ora 644 et medium caeli terraeque per aera vecta est 645 atque levem currum Tritonida misit in urbem 646 Triptolemo; partimque rudi data semina iussit 647 spargere humo, partim post tempora longa recultae. 648 Iam super Europen sublimis et Asida terram 649 vectus erat iuvenis; Scythicas advertitur oras. 650 Rex ibi Lyncus erat: regis subit ille penates. 651 Qua veniat, causamque viae nomenque rogatus 652 et patriam, “patria est clarae mihi” dixit “Athenae, 653 Triptolemus nomen. Veni nec puppe per undas, 654 nec pede per terras: patuit mihi pervius aether. 655 Dona fero Cereris latos quae sparsa per agros 656 frugiferas messes alimentaque mitia reddant.” 657 Barbarus invidit; tantique ut muneris auctor 658 ipse sit, hospitio recipit somnoque gravatum 659 adgreditur ferro. Conantem figere pectus 660 lynca Ceres fecit rursusque per aera iussit	648 me also; but he wooed and married me 649 by kind endearments; not by fear, as thou 650 hast terrified this girl.’ So did she speak; 651 and stretching out her arms on either side 652 opposed his way. 653 “The son of Saturn blazed 654 with uncontrolled rage; and urged his steeds, 655 and hurled his royal scepter in the pool. 656 Cast with a mighty arm it pierced the deeps. 657 The smitten earth made way to Tartarus;— 658 it opened a wide basin and received 659 the plunging chariot in the midst.—But now 660 the mournful Cyane began to grieve, 661 because from her against her fountain-rights 662 the goddess had been torn. The deepening wound 663 still rankled in her breast, and she dissolved
5.661	661 Mopsopium iuvenem sacros agitare iugales.” 662 Finierat doctos e nobis maxima cantus. 663 At nymphae vicisse deas Helicona colentes 664 concordi dixere sono. Convicia victae 665 cum iacerent, “quoniam” dixit “certamine vobis 666 supplicium meruisse parum est maledictaque culpae 667 additis et non est patientia libera nobis, 668 ibimus in poenas et, qua vocat ira,	664 in many tears, and wasted in those waves 665 which lately were submissive to her rule. 666 “So you could see her members waste away: 667 her hones begin to bend; her nails get soft; 668 her azure hair, her fingers, legs and feet, 669 and every slender part melt in the pool: 670 so brief the time in which her tender limbs 671 were changed to flowing waves; and after them 672 her back and shoulders, and her sides and breasts 673 dissolved and vanished into rivulets: 674 and while she changed, the water slowly filled 675 her faulty veins instead of

	sequemur.” 669 Rident Emathides spernuntque minantia verba: 670 conataeque loqui et magno clamore protervas 671 intentare manus, pennas exire per ungues 672 adspexere suos, operiri bracchia plumis; 673 alteraque alterius rigido concrescere rostro 674 ora videt volucresque novas accedere silvis. 675 Dumque volunt plangi, per bracchia mota levatae 676 aere pendebant, nemorum convicia, picae. 677 Nunc quoque in alitibus facundia prisca remansit 678 raucaque garrulitas studiumque inmane loquendi.”	living blood— 676 and nothing that a hand could hold remained. 677 “Now it befell when Proserpine was lost, 678 her anxious mother sought through every land 679 and every sea in vain. She rested not. 680 Aurora, when she came with ruddy locks, 681 might never know, nor even Hesperus, 682 if she might deign to rest.—She lit two pines 683 from Aetna's flames and held one in each hand, 684 and restless bore them through the frosty glooms: 685 and when serene the day had dimmed the stars 686 she sought her daughter by the rising sun; 687 and when the sun declined she rested not. 688 “Wearied with labour she began to thirst, 689 for all this while no streams had cooled her lips; 690 when, as by chance, a cottage thatched with straw 691 gladdened her sight. Thither the goddess went, 692 and, after knocking at the humble door, 693 waited until an ancient woman came;
6.1	1 Praebuerat dictis Tritonia talibus aures 2 carminaque Aonidum iustamque probaverat iram. 3 Tum secum “laudare parum est; laudemur et ipsae 4 numina nec sperni sine poena nostra sinamus” 5 Maeoniaeque animum fatis intendit Arachnes, 6 quam sibi lanificae non cedere laudibus artis 7 audierat. Non illa loco neque origine gentis 8 clara, sed arte fuit. Pater huic Colophonius Idmon 9 Phocaico bibulas tingebat murice lanas. 10 Occiderat mater; sed et haec de plebe suoque 11 aequa viro fuerat. Lydas tamen illa per urbes 12 quaesierat studio nomen memorabile, quamvis 13 orta domo parva parvis habitabat Hypaepis. 14 Huius ut adspicerent opus admirabile, saepe 15 deseruere sui nymphae vineta Timoli, 16 deseruere suas nymphae Pactolides undas. 17 Nec factas solum vestes spectare iuvabat;	1 All this Minerva heard; and she approved 2 their songs and their resentment; but her heart 3 was brooding thus, “It is an easy thing 4 to praise another, I should do as they: 5 no creature of the earth should ever slight 6 the majesty that dwells in me,—without 7 just retribution.”—So her thought was turned 8 upon the fortune of Arachne — proud, 9 who would not ever yield to her the praise 10 won by the art of deftly weaving wool, 11 a girl who had not fame for place of birth, 12 nor fame for birth, but only fame for skill! 13 For it was well known that her father dwelt 14 in Colophon; where, at his humble trade, 15 he dyed in Phocean purples, fleecy wool. 16 Her mother, also of the lower class, 17 had died. Arachne in a mountain town 18 by skill had grown so famous in the Land 19 of Lydia, that unnumbered curious nymphs 20 eager to witness her dexterity, 21 deserted the lush vineyards of Timolus; 22 or even left the cool and flowing streams 23 of bright Pactolus, to admire the cloth, 24 or to observe her deftly spinning wool. 25 So graceful was her motion then,—if she 26 was twisting the coarse wool in little balls, 27 or if she teased it with her finger-tips, 28 or if she softened the fine fleece, drawn forth 29 in misty films, or if she twirled the smooth 30

	18 tum quoque, cum fierent: tantus decor adfuit arti. 19 Sive rudem primos lanam glomerabat in orbes, 20 seu digitis subigebat opus repetitaque longo 21 vellera mollibat nebulas aequantia tractu, 22 sive levi teretem versabat pollice fusum, 23 seu pingebat acu, scires a Pallade doctam. 24 Quod tamen ipsa negat, tantaque offensa magistra 25 “certet” ait “mecum: nihil est, quod victa recusem.” 26 Pallas anum simulat falsosque in tempora canos 27 addit et infirmos, baculo quos sustinet, artus. 28 Tum sic orsa loqui: “Non omnia grandior aetas, 29 quae fugiamus, habet: seris venit usus ab annis. 30 Consilium ne sperne meum. Tibi fama petatur	round spindle with her energetic thumb,
6.31	31 inter mortales faciendae maxima lanae: 32 cede deae veniamque tuis, temeraria, dictis 33 supplice voce roga: veniam dabit illa roganti.” 34 Adspicit hanc torvis inceptaque fila relinquit, 35 vixque manum retinens confessaque vultibus iram 36 talibus obscuram resecuta est Pallada dictis: 37 “Mentis inops longaque venis confecta senecta. 38 Et nimium vixisse diu nocet. Audiat istas, 39 siqua tibi nurus est, siqua est tibi filia, voces. 40 Consilii satis est in me mihi. Neve monendo 41 profecisse putes, eadem est sententia nobis. 42 Cur non ipsa venit? cur haec certamina vitat?” 43 Tum dea “venit” ait, formamque removit anilem 44 Palladaque exhibuit. Venerantur numina nymphae 45 Mygdonidesque nurus: sola est non territa virgo. 46 Sed tamen erubuit, subitusque invita notavit	31 or if with needle she embroidered cloth;— 32 in all her motions one might well perceive 33 how much Minerva had instructed her: 34 but this she ever would deny, displeased 35 to share her fame; and said, “Let her contend 36 in art with me; and if her skill prevails, 37 I then will forfeit all!” 38 Minerva heard, 39 and came to her, disguised with long grey hair, 40 and with a staff to steady her weak limbs. 41 She seemed a feeble woman, very old, 42 and quavered as she said, “Old age is not 43 the cause of every ill; experience comes 44 with lengthened years; and, therefore, you should not 45 despise my words. It is no harm in you 46 to long for praise of mortals, when 47 your nimble hands are spinning the soft wool,— 48 but you should not deny Minerva's art— 49 and you should pray that she may pardon you, 50 for she will grant you pardon if you ask.” 51 Arachne, scowling with an evil face. 52 Looked at the goddess, as she dropped her thread. 53 She hardly could restrain her threatening hand, 54 and, trembling in her anger, she replied 55 to you, disguised Minerva: 56 “Silly fool,— 57 worn out and witless in your palsied age, 58 a great age is your great misfortune!— Let 59 your

	47 ora rubor rursusque evanuit, ut solet aer 48 purpureus fieri, cum primum aurora movetur, 49 et breve post tempus candescere solis ab ortu. 50 Perstat in incepto stolidaeque cupidine palmae 51 in sua fata ruit: neque enim Iove nata recusat, 52 nec monet ulterius, nec iam certamina differt. 53 Haud mora, constituunt diversis partibus ambae 54 et gracili geminas intendunt stamine telas 55 (tela iugo iuncta est, stamen secernit harundo); 56 inseritur medium radiis subtemen acutis, 57 quod digiti expediunt, atque inter stamina ductum 58 percusso paviunt insecti pectine dentes. 59 Utraque festinant cinctaeque ad pectora vestes 60 bracchia docta movent, studio fallente laborem.	daughter and your son's wife—if the Gods 60 have blessed you—let them profit by your words;
6.61	61 Illic et Tyrium quae purpura sensit aenum 62 texitur et tenues parvi discriminis umbrae, 63 qualis ab imbre solet percussis solibus arcus 64 inficere ingenti longum curvamine caelum: 65 in quo diversi niteant cum mille colores, 66 transitus ipse tamen spectantia lumina fallit; 67 usque adeo quod tangit idem est, tamen ultima distant. 68 Illic et lentum filis inmittitur aurum 69 et vetus in tela deducitur argumentum. 70 Cecropia Pallas scopulum Mavortis in arce 71 pingit et antiquam de terrae nomine litem. 72 Bis sex caelestes medio Iove sedibus altis 73 augusta gravitate sedent. Sua quemque deorum 74 inscribit facies: Iovis est regalis imago. 75 Stare deum pelagi longoque ferire tridente 76 aspera saxa facit, medioque e	61 within myself, my knowledge is contained 62 sufficient; you need not believe that your 63 advice does any good; for I am quite 64 unchanged in my opinion. Get you gone,— 65 advise your goddess to come here herself, 66 and not avoid the contest!” 67 Instantly, 68 the goddess said, “Minerva comes to you!” 69 And with those brief words, put aside the shape 70 of the old woman, and revealed herself, 71 Minerva, goddess. 72 All the other Nymphs 73 and matrons of Mygdonia worshiped her; 74 but not Arachne, who defiant stood;— 75 although at first she flushed up—then went pale— 76 then blushed again, reluctant.—So, at first, 77 the sky suffuses, as Aurora moves, 78 and, quickly when the glorious sun comes up, 79 pales into white. 80 She even rushed upon 81 her own destruction, for she would not give 82 from her desire to gain the victory. 83 Nor did the daughter of almighty Jove 84 decline: disdaining to delay with words, 85 she hesitated not. 86 And both, at once, 87 selected their positions, stretched their webs 88 with finest warp, and separated warp with sley. 89

	vulnere saxi 77 exsiluisse fretum, quo pignore vindicet urbem; 78 at sibi dat clipeum, dat acutae cuspidis hastam, 79 dat galeam capiti, defenditur aegide pectus, 80 percussamque sua simulat de cuspide terram 81 edere cum bacis fetum canentis olivae 82 mirarique deos: operis Victoria finis. 83 Ut tamen exemplis intellegat aemula laudis, 84 quod pretium speret pro tam furialibus ausis, 85 quattuor in partes certamina quattuor addit, 86 clara colore suo, brevibus distincta sigillis. 87 Threiciam Rhodopen habet angulus unus et Haemum 88 (nunc gelidi montes, mortalia corpora quondam !), 89 nomina summorum sibi qui tribuere deorum. 90 Altera Pygmaeae fatum miserabile matris	The woof was next inserted in the web 90 by means of the sharp shuttles, which
6.91	91 pars habet: hanc Iuno victam certamine iussit 92 esse gruem populisque suis indicere bella. 93 Pinxit et Antigonen ausam contendere quondam 94 cum magni consorte Iovis, quam regia Iuno 95 in volucrem vertit; nec profuit Ilion illi 96 Laomedonve pater, sumptis quin candida pennis 97 ipsa sibi plaudat crepitante ciconia rostro. 98 Qui superest solus, Cinyran habet angulus orbum; 99 isque gradus templi, natarum membra suarum, 100 amplectens saxoque iacens lacrimare videtur. 101 Circuit extremas oleis pacalibus oras: 102 is modus est, operisque sua facit arbore finem. 103 Maeonis elusam designat imagine tauri 104 Europam: verum taurum, freta vera putares. 105 Ipsa videbatur terras spectare relictas	91 their nimble fingers pushed along, so drawn 92 within the warp, and so the teeth notched in 93 the moving sley might strike them.—Both, in haste, 94 girded their garments to their breasts and moved 95 their skilful arms, beguiling their fatigue 96 in eager action. 97 Myriad tints appeared 98 besides the Tyrian purple—royal dye, 99 extracted in brass vessels.—As the bow, 100 that spans new glory in the curving sky, 101 its glittering rays reflected in the rain, 102 spreads out a multitude of blended tints, 103 in scintillating beauty to the sight 104 of all who gaze upon it; — so the threads, 105 inwoven, mingled in a thousand tints, 106 harmonious and contrasting; shot with gold: 107 and there, depicted in those shining webs, 108 were shown the histories of ancient days:— 109 Minerva worked the Athenian Hill of Mars, 110 where ancient Cecrops built his citadel, 111 and showed the old contention for the name 112 it should be given.—Twelve celestial Gods 113 surrounded Jupiter, on lofty thrones; 114 and all their features were so nicely drawn, 115 that each could be distinguished.—Jupiter 116 appeared as

	106 et comites clamare suas tactumque vereri 107 adsilientis aquae timidasque reducere plantas. 108 Fecit et Asterien aquila luctante teneri, 109 fecit olorinis Ledam recubare sub alis; 110 addidit, ut satyri celatus imagine pulchram 111 Iuppiter implerit gemino Nycteida fetu, 112 Amphitryon fuerit, cum te, Tirynthia, cepit, 113 aureus ut Danaen, Asopida luserit ignis, 114 Mnemosynen pastor, varius Deoida serpens. 115 Te quoque mutatum torvo, Neptune, iuvenco 116 virgine in Aeolia posuit. Tu visus Enipeus 117 gignis Aloidas, aries Bisaltida fallis; 118 et te flava comas frugum mitissima mater 119 sensit equum, sensit volucrem crinita colubris 120 mater equi volucris, sensit delphina Melantho.	monarch of those judging Gods. 117 There Neptune, guardian of the sea, was shown 118 contending with Minerva. As he struck 119 the Rock with his long trident, a wild horse 120 sprang forth which he bequeathed to man. He claimed
6.121	121 Omnibus his faciemque suam faciemque locorum 122 reddidit. Est illic agrestis imagine Phoebus, 123 utque modo accipitris pennas, modo terga leonis 124 gesserit, ut pastor Macareida luserit Issen; 125 Liber ut Erigonen falsa deceperit uva, 126 ut Saturnus equo geminum Chirona crearit. 127 Ultima pars telae, tenui circumdata limbo, 128 nexilibus flores hederis habet intertextos. 129 Non illud Pallas, non illud carpere Livor 130 possit opus. Doluit successu flava virago 131 et rupit pictas, caelestia crimina, vestes. 132 Utque Cytoriaco radium de monte tenebat, 133 ter quater Idmoniae frontem percussit Arachnes. 134 Non tulit infelix laqueoque animosa ligavit 135 guttura. Pendentem Pallas	121 his right to name the city for that gift. 122 And then she wove a portrait of herself, 123 bearing a shield, and in her hand a lance, 124 sharp-pointed, and a helmet on her head— 125 her breast well-guarded by her Aegis: there 126 she struck her spear into the fertile earth, 127 from which a branch of olive seemed to sprout, 128 pale with new clustered fruits.—And those twelve Gods, 129 appeared to judge, that olive as a gift 130 surpassed the horse which Neptune gave to man. 131 And, so Arachne, rival of her fame, 132 might learn the folly of her mad attempt, 133 from the great deeds of ancient histories, 134 and what award presumption must expect, 135 Minerva wove four corners with life scenes 136 of contest, brightly colored, but of size 137 diminutive. 138 In one of these was shown 139 the snow-clad mountains, Rhodope, 140 and Haemus, which for punishment were changed 141 from human beings to those rigid forms, 142 when they aspired to rival the high Gods. 143 And in another corner she described 144 that Pygmy, whom the angry Juno changed 145 from queen-

	miserata levavit 136 atque ita “vive quidem, pende tamen, improba” dixit: 137 “lexque eadem poenae, ne sis secura futuri, 138 dicta tuo generi serisque nepotibus esto.” 139 Post ea discedens sucis Hecateidos herbae 140 sparsit; et extemplo tristi medicamine tactae 141 defluxere comae, cum quis et naris et aures, 142 fitque caput minimum, toto quoque corpore parva est: 143 in latere exiles digiti pro cruribus haerent, 144 cetera venter habet: de quo tamen illa remittit 145 stamen et antiquas exercet aranea telas. 146 Lydia tota fremit, Phrygiaeque per oppida facti 147 rumor it et magnum sermonibus occupat orbem. 148 Ante suos Niobe thalamos cognoverat illam, 149 tum cum Maeoniam virgo Sipylumque colebat; 150 nec tamen admonita est poena popularis Arachnes	ship to a crane; because she thought 146 herself an equal of the living Gods, 147 she was commanded to wage cruel wars 148 upon her former subjects. In the third, 149 she wove the story of Antigone, 150 who dared compare herself to Juno, queen 151 of Jupiter, and showed her as she was 152 transformed into a silly chattering stork, 153 that praised her beauty, with her ugly beak.— 154 Despite the powers of Ilion and her sire 155 Laomedon, her shoulders fledged white wings. 156 And so, the third part finished, there was left 157 one corner, where Minerva deftly worked 158 the story of the father, Cinyras;— 159 as he was weeping on the temple steps, 160 which once had been his daughter's living limbs. 161 And she adorned the border with designs 162 of peaceful olive—her devoted tree— 163 which having shown, she made an end of work. 164 Arachne, of Maeonia, wove, at first 165 the story of Europa, as the bull 166 deceived her, and so perfect was her art, 167 it seemed a real bull in real waves.
6.151	151 cedere caelitibus verbisque minoribus uti. 152 Multa dabant animos: sed enim nec coniugis artes 153 nec genus amborum magnique potentia regni 154 sic placuere illi, quamvis ea cuncta placerent, 155 ut sua progenies; et felicissima matrum 156 dicta foret Niobe, si non sibi visa fuisset. 157 Nam sata Tiresia venturi praescia Manto 158 per medias fuerat divino concita motu 159 vaticinata vias: “Ismenides, ite frequentes 160 et date Latonae Latonigenisque duobus 161 cum prece tura pia lauroque innectite crinem. 162 Ore meo Latona iubet.” Paretur, et omnes 163 Thebaides iussis sua tempora frondibus ornant 164 turaque dant sanctis et verba	168 Europa seemed to look back towards the land 169 which she had left; and call in her alarm 170 to her companions—and as if she feared 171 the touch of dashing waters, to draw up 172 her timid feet, while she was sitting on 173 the bull's back. 174 And she wove Asteria seized 175 by the assaulting eagle; and beneath the swan's 176 white wings showed Leda lying by the stream: 177 and showed Jove dancing as a Satyr, when 178 he sought the beautiful Antiope, 179 to whom was given twins; and how he seemed 180 Amphitryon when he deceived Alcmena; 181 and how he courted lovely Danae 182 luring her as a gleaming shower of gold; 183 and poor Aegina, hidden in his flame, 184 jove as a shepherd with Mnemosyne; 185 and beautiful Proserpina, involved 186 by him, apparent as a spotted snake. 187 And in her web, Arachne wove the scenes 188 of Neptune:—who was shown first as a bull, 189 when he was deep in love with virgin Arne 190 then as Enipeus when the giant twins, precantia flammis. 165 Ecce venit comitum Niobe celeberrima turba, 166 vestibus intexto Phrygiis spectabilis auro, 167 et, quantum ira sinit, formosa: movensque decoro 168 cum capite inmissos umerum per utrumque capillos 169 constitit; utque oculos circumtulit alta superbos, 170 “quis furor, auditos” inquit “praeponere visis 171 caelestes? aut cur colitur Latona per aras, 172 numen adhuc sine ture meum est? mihi Tantalus auctor, 173 cui licuit soli superorum tangere mensas, 174 Pleiadum soror est genetrix mea, maximus Atlas 175 est avus, aetherium qui fert cervicibus axem; 176 Iuppiter alter avus socero quoque glorior illo. 177 Me gentes metuunt Phrygiae, me regia Cadmi 178 sub domina est, fidibusque mei commissa mariti 179 moenia cum populis a meque viroque reguntur. 180 In quamcumque domus adverti lumina partem,	191 Aloidae, were begot; and as the ram 192 that gambolled with Bisaltis; as a horse 193 loved by the fruitful Ceres, golden haired, 194 all-bounteous mother of the yellow grain; 195 and as the bird that hovered round snake-haired 196 Medusa, mother of the winged horse; 197 and as the dolphin, sporting with the Nymph, 6.181	181 inmensae spectantur opes. Accedit eodem 182 digna dea facies. Huc natas adice septem 183 et totidem iuvenes et mox generosque nurusque. 184 Quaerite nunc, habeat quam nostra superbia causam, 185 nescio quoque audete satam Titanida Coeo 186 Latonam praeferre mihi, cui maxima quondam 187 exiguam sedem pariturae terra negavit. 188 Nec caelo nec humo nec aquis dea vestra recepta est: 189 exsul erat mundi, donec miserata vagantem 190 “hospita tu terris erras, ego” dixit “in undis” 191 instabilemque locum Delos dedit. Illa duorum 192 facta parens: uteri pars haec est septima nostri. 193 Sum felix: quis enim neget hoc?	198 Melantho.—All of these were woven true 199 to life, in proper shades. 200 And there she showed 201 Apollo, when disguised in various forms: 202 as when he seemed a rustic; and as when 203 he wore hawk-wings, and then the tawny skin 204 of a great lion; and once more when he 205 deluded Isse, as a shepherd lad. 206 And there was Bacchus, when he was disguised 207 as a large cluster of fictitious grapes; 208 deluding by that wile the beautiful 209 Erigone;—and Saturn, as a steed, 210 begetter of the dual-natured Chiron. 211 And then Arachne, to complete her work, 212 wove all around the web a patterned edge 213 of interlacing flowers and ivy leaves. 214 Minerva could not find a fleck or flaw— 215 even Envy can not censure perfect art— 216 enraged because Arachne had such skill 217 she ripped the web, and ruined all the scenes 218 that showed those wicked actions of the Gods; 219 and with her felixque manebo: 194 hoc quoque quis dubitet? tutam me copia fecit, 195 Maior sum, quam cui possit Fortuna nocere, 196 multaque ut eripiat, multo mihi plura relinquet. 197 Excessere metum mea iam bona. Fingite demi 198 huic aliquid populo natorum posse meorum, 199 non tamen ad numerum redigar spoliata duorum, 200 Latonae turbam: qua quantum distat ab orba? 201 Ite, satis, propere ite, sacri est laurumque capillis 202 ponite.” Deponunt et sacra infecta relinquunt, 203 quodque licet tacito venerantur murmure numen. 204 Indignata dea est summoque in vertice Cynthi 205 talibus est dictis gemina cum prole locuta: 206 “En ego vestra parens, vobis animosa creatis, 207 et nisi Iunoni nulli cessura dearum, 208 an dea sim dubitor perque omnia saecula cultis 209 arceor, o nati, nisi vos succurritis, aris. 210 Nec dolor hic solus: diro convicia facto	boxwood shuttle in her hand, 220 struck the unhappy mortal on her head,— 221 struck sharply thrice, and even once again. 222 Arachne's spirit, deigning not to brook 223 such insult, brooded on it, till she tied 224 a cord around her neck, and hung herself. 225 Minerva, moved to pity at the sight, 226 sustained and saved her from that bitter death; 227 but, angry still, pronounced another doom:

6.211	211 Tantalis adiecit vosque est postponere natis 212 ausa suis, et me, quod in ipsam reccidat, orbam, 213 dixit et exhibuit linguam scelerata paternam.” 214 Adiectura preces erat his Latona relatis: 215 “desine!” Phoebus ait: “poenae mora longa querella est.” 216 Dixit idem Phoebe: celerique per aera lapsu 217 contigerant tecti Calmeida nubibus arcem. 218 Planus erat lateque patens prope moenia campus, 219 adsiduis pulsatus equis, ubi turba rotarum 220 duraque mollierat subiectas ungula glaebas. 221 Pars ibi de septem genitis Amphione fortes 222 conscendunt in equos Tyrioque rubentia suco	228 “Although I grant you life, most wicked one, 229 your fate shall be to dangle on a cord, 230 and your posterity forever shall 231 take your example, that your punishment 232 may last forever!” Even as she spoke, 233 before withdrawing from her victim's sight, 234 she sprinkled her with juice—extract of herbs 235 of Hecate. 236 At once all hair fell off, 237 her nose and ears remained not, and her head 238 shrunk rapidly in size, as well as all 239 her body, leaving her diminutive.— 240 Her slender fingers gathered to her sides 241 as long thin legs; and all her other parts 242 were fast absorbed in her abdomen—whence 243 she vented a fine thread;—and ever since, 244 Arachne, as a spider, weaves her web.

	223 terga premunt auroque graves moderantur habenas. 224 E quibus Ismenus, qui matri sarcina quondam 225 prima suae fuerat, dum certum flectit in orbem 226 quadrupedis cursus spumantiaque ora coercet, 227 “ei mihi!” conclamat medioque in pectore fixa 228 tela gerit, frenisque manu moriente remissis 229 in latus a dextro paulatim defluit armo. 230 Proximus, audito sonitu per inane pharetrae, 231 frena dabat Sipylus, veluti cum praescius imbris 232 nube fugit visa pendentiaque undique rector 233 carbasa deducit, ne qua levis effluat aura. 234 Frena tamen dantem non evitabile telum 235 consequitur; summaque tremens cervice sagitta 236 haesit, et exstabat nudum de gutture ferrum. 237 Ille, ut erat, pronus per crura admissa iubasque 238 volvitur et calido tellurem sanguine foedat. 239 Phaedimus infelix et aviti nominis heres 240 Tantalus, ut solito finem imposuere labori, 6.241	241 transierant ad opus nitidae iuvenale palaestrae; 242 et iam contulerant arto luctantia nexu 243 pectora pectoribus, cum tento concita nervo, 244 sicut erant iuncti, traiecit utrumque sagitta. 245 Ingemuere simul, simul incurvata dolore 246 membra solo posuere, simul suprema iacentes 247 lumina versarunt, animam simul exhalarunt. 248 Adspicit Alphenor laniataque pectora plangens 249 advolat, ut gelidos complexibus adlevet artus, 250 inque pio cadit officio: nam Delius illi 251 intima fatifero rupit praecordia ferro.	245 All Lydia was astonished at her fate 246 the Rumor spread to Phrygia, soon the world 247 was filled with fear and wonder. Niobe 248 had known her long before,—when in Maeonia 249 near to Mount Sipylus; but the sad fate 250 which overtook Arachne, lost on her, 251 she never ceased her boasting and refused 252 to honor the great Gods. 253 So many things 254 increased her pride: She loved to boast 255 her husband's skill, their noble family, 256 the rising grandeur of their kingdom. Such 257 felicities were great delights to her; 258 but nothing could exceed the haughty way 259 she boasted of her children: and, in truth, 260 Niobe might have been adjudged on earth, 261 the happiest mother of mankind, if pride 262 had not destroyed her wit. 263 It happened then, 264 that Manto, daughter of Tiresias, 265 who told the

	252 Quod simul eductum est, pars est pulmonis in hamis 253 eruta cumque anima cruor est effusus in auras. 254 At non intonsum simplex Damasichthona vulnus 255 adficit. Ictus erat qua crus esse incipit et qua 256 mollia nervosus facit internodia poples. 257 Dumque manu temptat trahere exitiabile telum, 258 altera per iugulum pennis tenus acta sagitta est. 259 Expulit hanc sanguis, seque eiaculatus in altum 260 emicat et longe terebrata prosilit aura. 261 Ultimus Ilioneus non profectura precando 262 bracchia sustulerat, “di” que “o communiter omnes,” 263 dixerat ignarus non omnes esse rogandos 264 “parcite.” Motus erat, cum iam revocabile telum 265 non fuit, arquitenens. Minimo tamen occidit ille 266 vulnere, non alte percusso corde sagitta. 267 Fama mali populique dolor lacrimaeque suorum 268 tam subitae matrem certam fecere ruinae, 269 mirantem potuisse, irascentemque, quod ausi 270 hoc essent superi, quod tantum iuris haberent.	future; when she felt the fire 266 of prophecy descend upon her, rushed 267 upon the street and shouted in the midst: 268 “You women of Ismenus! go and give 269 to high Latona and her children, twain, 270 incense and prayer. Go, and with laurel wreathe 271 your hair in garlands, as your sacred prayers 272 arise to heaven. Give heed, for by my speech 273 Latona has ordained these holy rites.” 274 At once, the Theban women wreathe their brows
6.271	271 Nam pater Amphion ferro per pectus adacto 272 finierat moriens pariter cum luce dolorem. 273 Heu quantum haec Niobe Niobe distabat ab illa, 274 quae modo Latois populum submoverat aris 275 et mediam tulerat gressus resupina per urbem, 276 invidiosa suis, at nunc miseranda vel hosti. 277 Corporibus gelidis incumbit et ordine nullo 278 oscula dispensat natos suprema per omnes. 279 A quibus ad caelum liventia bracchia tollens 280 “pascere, crudelis, nostro, Latona, dolore,	275 with laurel, and they cast in hallowed flame 276 the grateful incense, while they supplicate 277 all favors of the ever-living Gods. 278 And while they worship, Niobe comes there, 279 surrounded with a troup that follow her, 280 and most conspicuous in her purple robe, 281 bright with inwoven threads of yellow gold. 282 Beautiful in her anger, she tosses back 283 her graceful head. The glory of her hair 284 shines on her shoulders. Standing forth, 285 she looks upon them with her haughty eyes, 286 and taunts them, “Madness has prevailed on you 287 to worship some imagined Gods of Heaven, 288 which you have only heard of; but the Gods 289 that truly are on earth, and can be seen, 290 are all neglected! Come, explain to me, 291

	281 pascere” ait “satiaque meo tua pectora luctu: 282 283 efferor. Exsulta victrixque inimica triumpha. 284 Cur autem victrix? miserae mihi plura supersunt, 285 quam tibi felici: post tot quoque funera vinco.” 286 Dixerat, et sonuit contento nervus ab arcu. 287 Qui praeter Nioben unam conterruit omnes: 288 illa malo est audax. Stabant cum vestibus atris 289 ante toros fratrum demisso crine sorores. 290 E quibus una trahens haerentia viscere tela 291 imposito fratri moribunda relanguit ore: 292 altera solari miseram conata parentem 293 conticuit subito duplicataque vulnere tota est. 294 295 Haec frustra fugiens collabitur, illa sorori 296 inmoritur, latet haec, illam trepidare videres. 297 Sexque datis leto diversaque vulnera passis 298 ultima restabat. Quam toto corpore mater, 299 tota veste tegens “unam minimamque relinque 300 de multis minimam posco” clamavit “et unam.”	why is Latona worshiped and adored, 292 and frankincense not offered unto me? 293 For my divinity is known to you. 294 “Tantalus was my father, who alone 295 approached the tables of the Gods in heaven; 296 my mother, sister of the Pleiades, 297 was daughter of huge Atlas, who supports 298 the world upon his shoulders; I can boast 299 of Jupiter as father of my sire, 300 I count him also as my father-in-law. 301 The peoples of my Phrygia dread my power, 302 and I am mistress of the palace built 303 by Cadmus. By my husband, I am queen 304 of those great walls that reared themselves
6.301	301 Dumque rogat, pro qua rogat, occidit. Orba resedit 302 exanimes inter natos natasque virumque, 303 deriguitque malis. Nullos movet aura capillos, 304 in vultu color est sine sanguine, lumina maestis 305 stant inmota genis, nihil est in imagine vivum. 306 Ipsa quoque interius cum duro lingua palato 307 congelat, et venae desistunt posse moveri; 308 nec flecti cervix nec bracchia reddere motus 309 nec pes ire potest; intra quoque viscera saxum est. 310 Flet tamen. Et validi circumdata turbine venti	305 to the sweet music of his sounding lyre. 306 We rule together all the people they 307 encompass and defend. And everywhere 308 my gaze is turned, an evidence of wealth 309 is witnessed. 310 “In my features you can see 311 the beauty of a goddess, but above 312 that majesty is all the glory due 313 to me, the mother of my seven sons 314 and daughters seven. And the time will come 315 when by their marriage they will magnify 316 the circle of my power invincible. 317 “All must acknowledge my just cause of pride 318 and must no longer worship, in despite 319 of my superior birth, this deity, 320 a daughter of ignoble Coeus, whom 321 one time the great Earth would not even grant 322 sufficient space for travail: whom the Heavens, 323 the

	311 in patriam rapta est. Ibi fixa cacumine montis 312 liquitur, et lacrimas etiam nunc marmora manant. 313 Tum vero cuncti manifestam numinis iram 314 femina virque timent cultuque impensius omnes 315 magna gemelliparae venerantur numina divae, 316 utque fit, a facto propiore priora renarrant. 317 E quibus unus ait: “Lyciae quoque fertilis agris 318 non impune deam veteres sprevere coloni. 319 Res obscura quidem est ignobilitate virorum, 320 mira tamen. Vidi praesens stagnumque locumque 321 prodigio notum. Nam me iam grandior aevo 322 impatiensque viae genitor deducere lectos 323 iusserat inde boves gentisque illius eunti 324 ipse ducem dederat. Cum quo dum pascua lustro, 325 ecce lacu medio sacrorum nigra favilla 326 ara vetus stabat tremulis circumdata cannis. 327 Restitit et pavido “faveas mihi” murmure dixit 328 dux meus; et simili “faveas” ego murmure dixi. 329 Naiadum Faunine foret tamen ara rogabam 330 indigenaeve dei, cum talia rettulit hospes:	Land, the Sea together once compelled 324 to wander, hopeless on all hostile shores! 325 Throughout the world she found herself rebuffed, 326 till Delos, sorry for the vagrant, said, 327 ‘Homeless you roam the lands, and I the seas!’ 328 And even her refuge always was adrift. 329 “And there she bore two children, who, compared 330 with mine, are but as one to seven. Who 331 denies my fortunate condition?—Who 332 can doubt my future?—I am surely safe. 333 “The wealth of my abundance is too strong 334 for Fortune to assail me. Let her rage
6.331	331 “Non hac, o iuvenis, montanum numen in ara est: 332 illa suam vocat hanc, cui quondam regia coniunx 333 orbem interdixit, quam vix erratica Delos 334 orantem accepit, tum cum levis insula nabat. 335 Illic incumbens cum Palladis arbore palmae 336 edidit invita geminos Latona noverca. 337 Hinc quoque Iunonem fugisse puerpera fertur 338 inque suo portasse sinu, duo numina, natos. 339 Iamque Chimaeriferae, cum sol gravis ureret arva,	335 despoil me of large substance; yet so much 336 would still be mine, for I have risen above 337 the blight of apprehension. But, suppose 338 a few of my fair children should be taken! 339 Even so deprived, I could not be reduced 340 to only two, as this Latona, who, 341 might quite as well be childless.—Get you gone 342 from this insensate sacrifice. Make haste! 343 Cast off the wreathing laurels from your brows!” 344 They plucked the garlands from their hair, and left 345 the sacrifice, obedient to her will, 346 although in gentle murmurs they adored 347 the goddess Niobe had so defamed. 348 Latona, furious when she heard the speech, 349 flew swiftly to

	340 finibus in Lyciae longo dea fessa labore 341 sidereo siccata sitim conlegit ab aestu, 342 uberaque ebiberant avidi lactantia nati. 343 Forte lacum mediocris aquae prospexit in imis 344 vallibus; agrestes illic fruticosa legebant 345 vimina cum iuncis gratamque paludibus ulvam. 346 Accessit positoque genu Titania terram 347 pressit, ut hauriret gelidos potura liquores. 348 Rustica turba vetat. Dea sic adfata vetantes: 349 “Quid prohibetis aquis? usus communis aquarum est. 350 Nec solem proprium natura nec aera fecit 351 nec tenues undas: ad publica munera veni. 352 Quae tamen ut detis, supplex peto. Non ego nostros 353 abluere hic artus lassataque membra parabam, 354 sed relevare sitim. Caret os umore loquentis 355 et fauces arent, vixque est via vocis in illis. 356 Haustus aquae mihi nectar erit, vitamque fatebor 357 accepisse simul: vitam dederitis in unda. 358 Hi quoque vos moveant, qui nostro bracchia tendunt 359 parva sinu:” et casu tendebant bracchia nati. 360 Quem non blanda deae potuissent verba movere?	the utmost peak of Cynthus, 350 and spoke to her two children in these words: 351 “Behold your mother, proud of having borne 352 such glorious children! I will yield 353 prestige before no goddess—save alone 354 immortal Juno! I have been debased, 355 and driven for all ages from my own— 356 my altars, unto me devoted long, 357 and so must languish through eternity, 358 unless by you sustained. Nor is this all;. 359 That daughter of Tantalus, bold Niobe, 360 has added curses to her evil deeds, 361 and with a tongue as wicked as her sire's, 362 has raised her base-born children over mine. 363 Has even called me childless! A sad fate 364 more surely should be hers! Oh, I entreat”—
6.361	361 Hi tamen orantem perstant prohibere minasque, 362 ni procul abscedat, conviciaque insuper addunt. 363 Nec satis est, ipsos etiam pedibusque manuque 364 turbavere lacus imoque e gurgite mollem 365 huc illuc limum saltu movere maligno. 366 Distulit ira sitim: neque enim iam filia Coei 367 supplicat indignis nec dicere sustinet ultra 368 verba minora dea, tollensque ad sidera palmas	365 But Phoebus answered her, “No more complaint 366 is necessary, for it only serves 367 to hinder the swift sequel of her doom.” 368 And with the same words Phoebe answered her. 369 And having spoken, they descended through 370 the shielding shadows of surrounding clouds, 371 and hovered on the citadel of Cadmus. 372 There, far below them, was a level plain 373 which swept around those walls; where trampling steeds, 374 with horny hoofs, and multitudinous wheels, 375 had beaten a wide track. And on the field 376 the older sons of Niobe on steeds 377 emblazoned with bright dyes and

	369 “aeternum stagno” dixit “vivatis in isto.” 370 Eveniunt optata deae: iuvat esse sub undis 371 et modo tota cava submergere membra palude, 372 nunc proferre caput, summo modo gurgite nare, 373 saepe super ripam stagni consistere, saepe 374 in gelidos resilire lacus. Sed nunc quoque turpes 375 litibus exercent linguas pulsoque pudore, 376 quamvis sint sub aqua, sub aqua maledicere temptant. 377 Vox quoque iam rauca est, inflataque colla tumescunt, 378 ipsaque dilatant patulos convicia rictus. 379 Terga caput tangunt, colla intercepta videntur, 380 spina viret, venter, pars maxima corporis, albet, 381 limosoque novae saliunt in gurgite ranae.”” 382 Sic ubi nescio quis Lycia de gente virorum 383 rettulit exitium, satyri reminiscitur alter, 384 quem Tritoniaca Latous harundine victum 385 adfecit poena. “Quid me mihi detrahis?” inquit: 386 “a piget a non est” clamabat “tibia tanti.” 387 Clamanti cutis est summos direpta per artus, 388 nec quicquam nisi vulnus erat; cruor undique manat, 389 detectique patent nervi, trepidaeque sine ulla 390 pelle micant venae; salientia viscera posses	harness rich 378 with studded gold were circling.—One of these, 379 Ismenus, first-born of his mother, while 380 controlling his fleet courser's foaming mouth, 381 cried out, “Ah wretched me!” A shaft had pierced 382 the middle of his breast; and as the reins 383 dropped slowly on the rapid courser's neck, 384 his drooping form fell forward to the ground. 385 Not far from him, his brother, Sipylus, 386 could hear the whistling of a fatal shaft, 387 and in his fright urged on the plunging steed: 388 as when the watchful pilot, sensible 389 of storms approaching, crowds on sail, 390 hoping to catch a momentary breeze, 391 so fled he, urging an impetuous flight; 392 but, while he fled the shaft, unerring, flew; 393 transfixed him with its quivering death; struck where 394 the neck supports the head and the sharp point 395 protruded from his throat. In his swift flight, 396 as he was leaning forward, he was struck; 397 and, rolling over the wild horse's neck 398 pitched to the ground, and stained it with his blood. 399 Unhappy Phaedimus, and Tantalus, 400 (So named from his maternal grandsire) now 401 had finished coursing on the track, and smooth.
6.391	391 et perlucentes numerare in pectore fibras. 392 Illum ruricolae, silvarum numina, fauni 393 et satyri fratres et tunc quoque carus Olympus 394 et nymphae flerunt, et quisquis montibus illis 395 lanigerosque greges armentaque bucera pavit. 396 Fertilis inmaduit madefactaque terra caducas 397 concepit lacrimas ac venis perbibit imis;	402 Shining with oil, were wrestling in the field; 403 and while those brothers struggled—breast to breast— 404 another arrow, hurtling from the sky, 405 pierced them together, just as they were clinched. 406 The mingled sound that issued from two throats 407 was like a single groan. Convulsed with pain, 408 the wrestlers fell together on the ground, 409 where, stricken with a double agony, 410 rolling their eyeballs, they sobbed out their lives. 411 Alphenor saw them die—beating his breast 412 in agony—ran to lift in

	398 quas ubi fecit aquam, vacuas emisit in auras. 399 Inde petens rapidum ripis declivibus aequor 400 Marsya nomen habet, Phrygiae liquidissimus amnis. 401 Talibus extemplo redit ad praesentia dictis 402 vulgus et exstinctum cum stirpe Amphiona luget. 403 Mater in invidia est. Hanc tunc quoque dicitur unus 404 flesse Pelops, umeroque, suas a pectore postquam 405 deduxit vestes ebur ostendisse sinistro. 406 Concolor hic umerus nascendi tempore dextro 407 corporeusque fuit: manibus mox caesa paternis 408 membra ferunt iunxisse deos; aliisque repertis, 409 qui locus est iuguli medius summique lacerti, 410 defuit. Impositum est non comparentis in usum 411 partis ebur, factoque Pelops fuit integer illo. 412 Finitimi proceres coeunt, urbesque propinquae 413 oravere suos ire ad solacia reges, 414 Argosque et Sparte Pelopeiadesque Mycenae 415 et nondum torvae Calydon invisa Dianae 416 Orchomenosque ferax et nobilis aere Corinthus 417 Messeneque ferox Patraeque humilesque Cleonae 418 et Nelea Pylos, neque adhuc Pittheia Troezen, 419 quaeque urbes aliae bimari clauduntur ab Isthmo 420 exteriusque sitae bimari spectantur ab Isthmo.	his arms 413 their lifeless bodies cold— while doing this 414 he fell upon them. Phoebus struck him so, 415 piercing his midriff in a vital part, 416 with fatal shot, which, when he pulled it forth, 417 dragged with its barb a torn clot of his lung— 418 his blood and life poured out upon the air. 419 The youthful Damasicthon next was struck, 420 not only once; an arrow pierced his leg 421 just where the sinews of the thigh begin, 422 and as he turned and stooped to pluck it out, 423 another keen shaft shot into his neck, 424 up to the fletching.—The blood drove it out, 425 and spouted after it in crimson jets. 426 Then, Ilioneus, last of seven sons, 427 lifted his unavailing arms in prayer, 428 and cried, “O Universal Deities, 429 gods of eternal heaven, spare my life!”— 430 Besought too late, Apollo of the Bow, 431 could not prevail against the deadly shaft,
6.421	421 Credere quis posset? solae cessastis Athenae. 422 Obstitit officio bellum, subvectaque ponto 423 barbara Mopsopios terrebant agmina muros. 424 Threicius Tereus haec auxiliaribus armis 425 fuderat et clarum vincendo nomen habebat. 426 Quem sibi Pandion opibusque virisque potentem 427 et genus a magno ducentem forte	432 already on its way: and yet his will, 433 compellant, acted to retard its flight, 434 so that it cut no deeper than his heart. 435 The rumors of an awful tragedy,— 436 the wailings of sad Niobe's loved friends,— 437 the terror of her grieving relatives,— 438 all gave some knowledge of her sudden loss: 439 but so bewildered and enraged her mind, 440 that she could hardly realize the Gods 441 had privilege to dare against her might. 442 Nor would she, till her lord, Amphion, thrust 443 his

	Gradivo 428 conubio Procnes iunxit. Non pronuba Iuno, 429 non Hymenaeus adest, non illi Gratia lecto. 430 Eumenides tenuere faces de funere raptas, 431 Eumenides stravere torum, tectoque profanus 432 incubuit bubo thalamique in culmine sedit. 433 Hac ave coniuncti Procne Tereusque, parentes 434 hac ave sunt facti. Gratata est scilicet illis 435 Thracia, disque ipsi grates egere diemque, 436 quaque data est claro Pandione nata tyranno, 437 quaque erat ortus Itys, festum iussere vocari. 438 Usque adeo latet utilitas. Iam tempora Titan 439 quinque per autumnos repetiti duxerat anni, 440 cum blandita viro Procne “si gratia” dixit 441 “ulla mea est, vel me visendam mitte sorori, 442 vel soror huc veniat! redituram tempore parvo 443 promittes socero: magni mihi muneris instar 444 germanam vidisse dabis.” Iubet ille carinas 445 in freta deduci veloque et remige portus 446 Cecropios intrat Piraeaque litora tangit. 447 Ut primum soceri data copia, dextera dextrae 448 iungitur, et fausto committitur omine sermo. 449 Coeperat adventus causam, mandata referre 450 coniugis et celeres missae spondere recursus:	sword deep in his breast, by which his life 444 and anguish both were ended in dark night. 445 Alas, proud Niobe, once haughty queen! 446 Proud Niobe who but so lately drove 447 her people from Latona's altars, while, 448 moving majestic through the midst, she hears 449 their plaudits, now so bitterly debased, 450 her meanest enemy may pity her!— 451 She fell upon the bodies of her sons, 452 and in a frenzy of maternal grief, 453 kissed their unfeeling lips. Then unto Heaven 454 with arms accusing, railed upon her foe: 455 “Glut your revenge! Latona, glut your rage! 456 Yea, let my lamentations be your joy! 457 Go— satiate your flinty heart with death! 458 Are not my seven sons all dead? Am I 459 not waiting to be carried to my grave?— 460 exult and triumph, my victorious foe! 461 Victorious? Nay!— Much more remains to me
6.451	451 ecce venit magno dives Philomela paratu, 452 divitior forma: quales audire solemus 453 naidas et dryadas mediis incedere silvis, 454 si modo des illis cultus similesque paratus. 455 Non secus exarsit conspecta virgine Tereus, 456 quam siquis canis ignem supponat	462 in all my utmost sorrow, than to you, 463 you gloater upon vengeance— Undismayed, 464 I stand victorious in my Field of Woe!” 465 no sooner had she spoken, than the cord 466 twanged from the ever-ready bow; and all 467 who heard the fatal sound, again were filled 468 with fear,—save Niobe, in misery bold,— 469 defiant in misfortune.—Clothed in black, 470 the sisters of the stricken brothers stood,

	aristis, 457 aut frondem positasque cremet faenilibus herbas. 458 Digna quidem facies: sed et hunc innata libido 459 exstimulat, pronumque genus regionibus illis 460 in venerem est: flagrat vitio gentisque suoque. 461 Impetus est illi comitum corrumpere curam 462 nutricisque fidem, nec non ingentibus ipsam 463 sollicitare datis totumque impendere regnum, 464 aut rapere et saevo raptam defendere bello—, 465 et nihil est quod non effreno captus amore 466 ausit nec capiunt inclusas pectora flammas. 467 Iamque moras male fert cupidoque revertitur ore 468 ad mandata Procnes, et agit sua vota sub illa. 469 Facundum faciebat amor: quotiensque rogabat 470 ulterius iusto Procnen ita velle ferebat. 471 Addidit et lacrimas, tamquam mandasset et illas. 472 Pro superi, quantum mortalia pectora caecae 473 noctis habent! ipso sceleris molimine Tereus 474 creditur esse pius laudemque a crimine sumit. 475 Quid quod idem Philomela cupit patriosque lacertis 476 blanda tenens umeros, ut eat visura sororem, 477 perque suam contraque suam petit ipsa salutem. 478 Spectat eam Tereus praecontrectatque videndo 479 osculaque et collo circumdata bracchia cernens 480 omnia pro stimulis facibusque ciboque furoris	471 with hair disheveled, by the funeral biers. 472 And one while plucking from her brother's heart 473 a shaft, swooned unto death, fell on her face— 474 on her dear brother's corpse. Another girl, 475 while she consoled her mother, suddenly, 476 was stricken with an unseen, deadly wound; 477 and doubled in convulsions, closed her lips, 478 tight held them, till both breath and life were lost. 479 Another, vainly rushed away from death— 480 she met it, and pitched head-first to the ground; 481 and still another died upon her corse, 482 another vainly sought a secret death, 483 and, then another slipped beyond's life's edge. 484 So, altogether, six of seven died— 485 each victim, strickened in a different way. 486 One child remained. Then in a frenzy-fear 487 the mother, as she covered her with all 488 her garments and her body, wailed—“Oh, leave 489 me this one child! the youngest of them all! 490 My darling daughter—only leave me one!” 491 But even while she was entreating for its life—
6.481	481 accipit; et quotiens amplectitur illa parentem, 482 esse parens vellet: neque enim minus impius esset. 483 Vincitur ambarum genitor prece. Gaudet agitque 484 illa patri grates et successisse duabus 485 id putat infelix, quod erit lugubre	492 the life was taken from her only child. 493 Childless— she crouched beside her slaughtered sons, 494 her lifeless daughters, and her husband's corpse. 495 The breeze not even moved her fallen hair, 496 a chill of marble spread upon her flesh, 497 beneath her pale, set brows, her eyes moved not, 498 her bitter tongue turned stiff in her

	duabus. 486 Iam labor exiguus Phoebo restabat, equique 487 pulsabant pedibus spatium declivis Olympi: 488 regales epulae mensis et Bacchus in auro 489 ponitur; hinc placido dantur sua corpora somno. 490 At rex Odrysius, quamvis secessit, in illa 491 aestuat, et, repetens faciem motusque manusque, 492 qualia vult fingit quae nondum vidit, et ignes 493 ipse suos nutrit, cura removente soporem. 494 Lux erat, et generi dextram complexus euntis 495 Pandion comitem lacrimis commendat obortis: 496 “Hanc ego, care gener, quoniam pia causa coegit 497 et voluere ambae, voluisti tu quoque, Tereu, 498 do tibi, perque fidem cognataque pectora supplex, 499 per superos oro, patrio ut tuearis amore 500 et mihi sollicitae lenimen dulce senectae 501 quam primum (omnis erit nobis mora longa) remittas. 502 Tu quoque quam primum (satis est procul esse sororem) 503 si pietas ulla est, ad me, Philomela, redito.” 504 Mandabat pariterque suae dabat oscula natae, 505 et lacrimae mites inter mandata cadebant. 506 Utque fide pignus dextras utriusque poposcit 507 inter seque datas iunxit natamque nepotemque 508 absentes pro se memori rogat ore salutent; 509 supremumque vale pleno singultibus ore 510 vix dixit timuitque suae praesagia mentis.	hard jaws, 499 her lovely veins congealed, and her stiff neck 500 and rigid hands could neither bend nor move.— 501 her limbs and body, all were changed to stone. 502 Yet ever would she weep: and as her tears 503 were falling she was carried from the place, 504 enveloped in a storm and mighty wind, 505 far, to her native land, where fixed upon 506 a mountain summit she dissolves in tears,— 507 and to this day the marble drips with tears. 508 All men and women, after this event, 509 feared to incur Latona's fateful wrath, 510 and worshiped with more zeal the Deity, 511 mother of twins.—And, as it is the way 512 of men to talk of many other things 513 after a strong occurrence, they recalled 514 what other deeds the goddess had performed;— 515 and one of them recited this event: 516 'Twas in the ancient days of long-ago,— 517 some rustics, in the fertile fields of Lycia, 518 heedless, insulted the goddess to their harm:— 519 perhaps you've never heard of this event, 520 because those country clowns were little known. 521 The event was wonderful, but I can vouch 522 the truth of it. I visited the place 523 and I have seen the pool of water, where 524 happened the miracle I now relate. 525 My good old father, then advanced in years, 526 incapable of travel, ordered me 527 to fetch some cattle—thoroughbreds—from there, 528 and had secured a Lycian for my guide, 529 as I traversed the pastures, with the man, 530 it chanced, I saw an ancient altar,—grimed 531 with sacrificial ashes—in the midst 532 of a large pool, with sedge and reeds around, 533 a-quiver in the breeze. And there my guide 534 stood on the marge, and with an awe-struck voice 535 began to whisper, “Be propitious, hear 536 my supplications, and forget not me!” 537 And I, observing him, echoed the words,
6.511	511 Ut semel imposita est pictae Philomela carinae, 512 admotumque fretum remis tellusque repulsa est, 513 “vicimus” exclamat, “mecum mea vota feruntur” 514 exsultatque et vix animo sua	538 “Forget not me!” which, having done, I turned 539 to him and said, “Whose altar can this be? 540 Perhaps a sacred altar of the Fauns, 541 or of the Naiads, or a native God?” 542 To which my guide replied, “Young man, such Gods 543 may not be worshiped at

	gaudia differt 515 barbarus et nusquam lumen detorquet ab illa, 516 non aliter, quam cum pedibus praedator obuncis 517 deposuit nido leporem Iovis ales in alto: 518 nulla fuga est capto, spectat sua praemia raptor. 519 Iamque iter effectum, iamque in sua litora fessis 520 puppibus exierant, cum rex Pandione natam 521 in stabula alta trahit, silvis obscura vetustis, 522 atque ibi pallentem trepidamque et cuncta timentem 523 et iam cum lacrimis, ubi sit germana, rogantem 524 includit: fassusque nefas et virginem et unam 525 vi superat frustra clamato saepe parente, 526 saepe sorore sua, magnis super omnia divis. 527 Illa tremit velut agna pavens, quae saucia cani 528 ore excussa lupi nondum sibi tuta videtur, 529 utque columba suo madefactis sanguine plumis 530 horret adhuc avidosque timet, quibus haeserat, ungues. 531 Mox ubi mens rediit, passos laniata capillos, 532 lugenti similis, caesis plangore lacertis, 533 intendens palmas “o diris barbare factis, 534 o crudelis” ait “nec te mandata parentis 535 cum lacrimis movere piis nec cura sororis 536 nec mea virginitas nec coniugialia iura! 537 Omnia turbasti: paelex ego facta sororis, 538 tu geminus coniunx, hostis mihi debita Procne. 539 Quin animam hanc, ne quod facinus tibi, perfide, restet, 540 eripis? atque utinam fecisses ante nefandos	this altar. She 544 whom once the royal Juno drove away 545 to wander a harsh world, alone permits 546 this altar to be used: that goddess whom 547 the wandering Isle of Delos, at the time 548 it drifted as the foam, almost refused 549 a refuge. 550 There Latona, as she leaned 551 against a palm-tree—and against the tree 552 most sacred to Minerva, brought forth twins, 553 although their harsh step-mother, Juno, strove 554 to interfere.—And from the island forced 555 to fly by jealous Juno, on her breast 556 she bore her children, twin Divinities. 557 At last, outwearied with the toil, and parched 558 with thirst—long-wandering in those heated days 559 over the arid land of Lycia, where 560 was bred the dire Chimaera— at the time 561 her parching breasts were drained, she saw this pool 562 of crystal water, shimmering in the vale. 563 Some countrymen were there to gather reeds, 564 and useful osiers, and the bulrush, found 565 with sedge in fenny pools. To them approached 566 Latona, and she knelt upon the merge 567 to cool her thirst, with some refreshing water.
6.541	541 concubitus vacuas habuissem criminis umbras. 542 Si tamen haec superi cernunt, si numina divum 543 sunt aliquid, si non perierunt	568 But those clowns forbade her and the goddess cried, 569 as they so wickedly opposed her need: 570 “Why do you so resist my bitter thirst? 571 The use of water is the sacred right 572

	omnia mecum, 544 quandocumque mihi poenas dabis. Ipsa pudore 545 proiecto tua facta loquar. Si copia detur, 546 in populos veniam; si silvis clausa tenebor, 547 implebo silvas et conscia saxa movebo: 548 audiet haec aether, et si deus ullus in illo est.” 549 Talibus ira feri postquam commota tyranni 550 nec minor hac metus est, causa stimulatus utraque 551 quo fuit accinctus, vagina liberat ensem 552 arreptamque coma flexis post terga lacertis 553 vincla pati cogit. Iugulum Philomela parabat 554 spemque suae mortis viso conceperat ense: 555 ille indignantem et nomen patris usque vocantem 556 luctantemque loqui comprensam forcipe linguam 557 abstulit ense fero. Radix micat ultima linguae, 558 ipsa iacet terraeque tremens inmurmurat atrae; 559 utque salire solet mutilatae cauda colubrae, 560 palpitat et moriens dominae vestigia quaerit. 561 Hoc quoque post facinus (vix ausim credere) fertur 562 saepe sua lacerum repetisse libidine corpus. 563 Sustinet ad Procnen post talia facta reverti. 564 Coniuge quae viso germanam quaerit: at ille 565 dat gemitus fictos commentaque funera narrat, 566 et lacrimae fecere fidem. Velamima Procne 567 deripit ex umeris auro fulgentia lato 568 induiturque atras vestes et inane sepulcrum 569 constituit falsisque piacula manibus infert 570 et luget non sic lugendae fata sororis.	of all mankind, for Nature has not made 573 the sun and air and water, for the sole 574 estate of any creature; and to Her 575 kind bounty I appeal, although of you 576 I humbly beg the use of it. Not here 577 do I intend to bathe my wearied limbs. 578 I only wish to quench an urgent thirst, 579 for, even as I speak, my cracking lips 580 and mouth so parched, almost deny me words. 581 A drink of water will be like a draught 582 of nectar, giving life; and I shall owe 583 to you the bounty and my life renewed.— 584 ah, let these tender infants, whose weak arms 585 implore you from my bosom, but incline 586 your hearts to pity!” And just as she spoke, 587 it chanced the children did stretch out their arms 588 and who would not be touched to hear such words, 589 as spoken by this goddess, and refuse? 590 But still those clowns persisted in their wrong 591 against the goddess; for they hindered her, 592 and threatened with their foul, abusive tongues 593 to frighten her away—and, worse than all, 594 they even muddied with their hands and feet 595 the clear pool; forcing the vile, slimy dregs 596 up from the bottom, in a spiteful way, 597 by jumping up and down.—Enraged at this,
6.571	571 Signa deus bis sex acto lustraverat anno. 572 Quid faciat Philomela? fugam	598 she felt no further thirst, nor would she deign 599 to supplicate again; but, feeling all 600 the outraged majesty of

	custodia claudit, 573 structa rigent solido stabulorum moenia saxo, 574 os mutum facti caret indice. Grande doloris 575 ingenium est, miserisque venit sollertia rebus. 576 Stamina barbarica suspendit callida tela 577 purpureasque notas filis intexuit albis, 578 indicium sceleris; perfectaque tradidit uni, 579 utque ferat dominae gestu rogat: illa rogata 580 pertulit ad Procnen, nec scit, quid tradat in illis. 581 Evolvit vestes saevi matrona tyranni 582 fortunaeque suae carmen miserabile legit 583 et (mirum potuisse) silet. Dolor ora repressit, 584 verbaque quaerenti satis indignantia linguae 585 defuerunt; nec flere vacat, sed fasque nefasque 586 confusura ruit, poenaeque in imagine tota est. 587 Tempus erat, quo sacra solent trieterica Bacchi 588 Sithoniae celebrare nurus: nox conscia sacris. 589 Nocte sonat Rhodope tinnitibus aeris acuti, 590 nocte sua est egressa domo regina deique 591 ritibus instruitur furialiaque accipit arma. 592 Vite caput tegitur, lateri cervina sinistro 593 vellera dependent, umero levis incubat hasta. 594 Concita per silvas turba comitante suarum 595 terribilis Procne furiisque agitata doloris, 596 Bacche, tuas simulat. Venit ad stabula avia tandem 597 exululatque euhoeque sonat portasque refringit 598 germanamque rapit; raptaeque insignia Bacchi 599 induit et vultus hederarum frondibus abdit 600 attonitamque trahens intra sua moenia ducit.	her high state, 601 she raised her hands to Heaven, and exclaimed, 602 “Forever may you live in that mud-pool!” 603 The curse as soon as uttered took effect, 604 and every one of them began to swim 605 beneath the water, and to leap and plunge 606 deep in the pool.—Now, up they raise their heads, 607 now swim upon the surface, now they squat 608 themselves around the marshy margent, now 609 they plump again down to the chilly deeps. 610 And, ever and again, with croaking throats, 611 indulge offensive strife upon the banks, 612 or even under water, boom abuse. 613 Their ugly voices cause their bloated necks 614 to puff out; and their widened jaws are made 615 still wider in the venting of their spleen. 616 Their backs, so closely fastened to their heads, 617 make them appear as if their shrunken necks 618 have been cut off. Their backbones are dark green; 619 white are their bellies, now their largest part.— 620 Forever since that time, the foolish frogs 621 muddy their own pools, where they leap and dive.
6.601	601 Ut sensit tetigisse domum	622 So he related how the clowns were

	Philomela nefandam, 602 horruit infelix totoque expalluit ore. 603 Nacta locum Procne sacrorum pignera demit 604 oraque develat miserae pudibunda sororis 605 amplexumque petit. Sed non attollere contra 606 sustinet haec oculos, paelex sibi visa sororis, 607 deiectoque in humum vultu iurare volenti 608 testarique deos, per vim sibi dedecus illud 609 illatum, pro voce manus fuit. Ardet et iram 610 non capit ipsa suam Procne; fletumque sororis 611 corripiens “non est lacrimis hoc” inquit “agendum, 612 sed ferro, sed si quid habes, quod vincere ferrum 613 possit. In omne nefas ego me, germana, paravi. 614 Aut ego, cum facibus regalia tecta cremabo, 615 artificem mediis inmittam Terea flammis, 616 aut linguam, aut oculos et quae tibi membra pudorem 617 abstulerunt, ferro rapiam, aut per vulnera mille 618 sontem animam expellam. Magnum quodcumque paravi: 619 quid sit, adhuc dubito.” Peragit dum talia Procne, 620 ad matrem veniebat Itys. Quid possit, ab illo 621 admonita est: oculisque tuens inmitibus “a quam 622 es similis patri” dixit. Nec plura locuta 623 triste parat facinus tacitaque exaestuat ira. 624 Ut tamen accessit natus matrique salutem 625 attulit et parvis adduxit colla lacertis 626 mixtaque blanditiis puerilibus oscula iunxit, 627 mota quidem est genetrix infractaque constitit ira 628 invitique oculi lacrimis maduere coactis: 629 sed simul ex nimia mentem pietate labare 630 sensit, ab hoc iterum est ad vultus	changed 623 to leaping frogs; and after he was through, 624 another told the tale of Marsyas, in these words: 625 The Satyr Marsyas, when he played the flute 626 in rivalry against Apollo's lyre, 627 lost that audacious contest and, alas! 628 His life was forfeit; for, they had agreed 629 the one who lost should be the victor's prey. 630 And, as Apollo punished him, he cried, 631 “Ah-h-h! why are you now tearing me apart? 632 A flute has not the value of my life!” 633 Even as he shrieked out in his agony, 634 his living skin was ripped off from his limbs, 635 till his whole body was a flaming wound, 636 with nerves and veins and viscera exposed. 637 But all the weeping people of that land, 638 and all the Fauns and Sylvan Deities, 639 and all the Satyrs, and Olympus, his 640 loved pupil—even then renowned in song, 641 and all the Nymphs, lamented his sad fate; 642 and all the shepherds, roaming on the hills, 643 lamented as they tended fleecy flocks. 644 And all those falling tears, on fruitful Earth, 645 descended to her deepest veins, as drip 646 the moistening dews,—and, gathering as a fount, 647 turned upward from her secret-winding caves, 648 to issue, sparkling, in the sun-kissed air, 649 the clearest river in the land of Phrygia,— 650 through which it swiftly flows between steep banks 651 down to the sea: and, therefore, from his name,

	versa sororis
6.631	631 inque vicem spectans ambos “cur admovet” inquit 632 “alter blanditias, rapta silet altera lingua? 633 Quam vocat hic matrem, cur non vocat illa sororem? 634 Cui sis nupta, vide, Pandione nata, marito. 635 Degeneras: scelus est pietas in coniuge Tereo.” 636 Nec mora, traxit Ityn, veluti Gangetica cervae 637 lactentem fetum per silvas tigris opacas. 638 Utque domus altae partem tenuere remotam, 639 tendentemque manus et iam sua fata videntem 640 et “mater, mater” clamantem et colla petentem 641 ense ferit Procne, lateri qua pectus adhaeret, 642 nec vultum vertit. Satis illi ad fata vel unum 643 vulnus erat: iugulum ferro Philomela resolvit. 644 Vivaque adhuc animaeque aliquid retinentia membra 645 dilaniant. Pars inde cavis exsultat aenis, 646 pars veribus stridunt: manant penetralia tabo. 647 His adhibet coniunx ignarum Terea mensis 648 et patrii moris sacrum mentita, quod uni 649 fas sit adire viro, comites famulosque removit. 650 Ipse sedens solio Tereus sublimis avito 651 vescitur inque suam sua viscera congerit alvum. 652 Tantaque nox animi est, “Ityn huc accersite” dixit. 653 Dissimulare nequit crudelia gaudia Procne, 654 iamque suae cupiens exsistere nuntia cladis, 655 “intus habes, quem poscis” ait. Circumspicit ille 656 atque ubi sit quaerit. Quaerenti iterumque vocanti, 657 sicut erat sparsis furiali caede capillis, 658 prosiluit Ityosque caput Philomela cruentum 659 misit in ora patris: nec tempore	652 'Tis called “The Marsyas” to this very day. 653 And after this was told, the people turned 654 and wept for Niobe's loved children dead, 655 and also, mourned Amphion, sorrow-slain. 656 The Theban people hated Niobe, 657 but Pelops, her own brother, mourned her death; 658 and as he rent his garment, and laid bare 659 his white left shoulder, you could see the part 660 composed of ivory.—At his birth 'twas all 661 of healthy flesh; but when his father cut 662 his limbs asunder, and the Gods restored 663 his life, all parts were rightly joined, except 664 part of one shoulder, which was wanting; so 665 to serve the purpose of the missing flesh, 666 a piece of ivory was inserted there, 667 making his body by such means complete.

	maluit ullo 660 posse loqui et mentis testari gaudia dictis.
6.661	661 Thracius ingenti mensas clamore repellit 662 vipereasque ciet Stygia de valle sorores; 663 et modo, si posset reserato pectore diras 664 egerere inde dapes inmersaque viscera gestit, 665 flet modo seque vocat bustum miserabile nati, 666 nunc sequitur nudo genitas Pandione ferro. 667 Corpora Cecropidum pennis pendere putares: 668 pendebant pennis. Quarum petit altera silvas, 669 altera tecta subit; neque adhuc de pectore caedis 670 excessere notae, signataque sanguine pluma est. 671 Ille dolore suo poenaeque cupidine velox 672 vertitur in volucrem, cui stant in vertice cristae; 673 prominet inmodicum pro longa cuspide rostrum: 674 nomen epops volucri, facies armata videtur. 675 Hic dolor ante diem longaeque extrema senectae 676 tempora Tartareas Pandiona misit ad umbras. 677 Sceptra loci rerumque capit moderamen Erechtheus, 678 iustitia dubium validisne potentior armis. 679 Quattuor ille quidem iuvenes totidemque crearat 680 femineae sortis: sed erat par forma duarum. 681 E quibus Aeolides Cephalus te coniuge felix, 682 Procri, fuit; Boreae Tereus Thracesque nocebant, 683 dilectaque diu caruit deus Orithyia, 684 dum rogat et precibus mavult quam viribus uti. 685 Ast ubi blanditiis agitur nihil, horridus ira, 686 quae solita est illi nimiumque domestica vento, 687 “et merito!” dixit: “quid enim mea tela reliqui, 688 saevitiam et vires iramque animosque minaces,	668 The lords of many cities that were near, 669 now met together and implored their kings 670 to mourn with Pelops those unhappy deeds.— 671 The lords of Argos; Sparta and Mycenae; 672 and Calydon, before it had incurred 673 the hatred of Diana, goddess of the chase; 674 fertile Orchomenus and Corinth, great 675 in wealth of brass; Patrae and fierce Messena; 676 Cleone, small; and Pylus and Troezen, 677 not ruled by Pittheus then,—and also, all 678 the other cities which are shut off by 679 the Isthmus there dividing by its two seas, 680 and all the cities which are seen from there. 681 What seemed most wonderful, of all those towns 682 Athens alone was wanting, for a war 683 had gathered from the distant seas, a host 684 of savage warriors had alarmed her walls, 685 and hindered her from mourning for the dead. 686 Now Tereus, then the mighty king of Thrace, 687 came to the aid of Athens as defense 688 from that fierce horde; and there by his great deeds 689 achieved a glorious fame. Since his descent 690 was boasted from the mighty Gradivus, 691 and he was gifted with enormous wealth, 692 Pandion, king of Athens, gave to him 693 in sacred wedlock his dear daughter, Procne. 694 But Juno, guardian of the sacred rites 695 attended not, nor Hymenaeus, nor 696 the Graces. But the Furies snatched up brands 697 from burning funeral pyres, and brandished them

	689 admovique preces, quarum me dedecet usus? 690 Apta mihi vis est: vi tristia nubila pello,
6.691	691 vi freta concutio nodosaque robora verto 692 induroque nives et terras grandine pulso. 693 Idem ego cum fratres caelo sum nactus aperto 694 (nam mihi campus is est), tanto molimine luctor, 695 ut medius nostris concursibus insonet aether 696 exsiliantque cavis elisi nubibus ignes. 697 Idem ego cum subii convexa foramina terrae 698 supposuique ferox imis mea terga cavernis, 699 sollicito manes totumque tremoribus orbem. 700 Hac ope debueram thalamos petiisse, socerque 701 non orandus erat, vi sed faciendus Erechtheus.” 702 Haec Boreas aut his non inferiora locutus 703 excussit pennas: quarum iactatibus omnis 704 adflata est tellus latumque perhorruit aequor. 705 Pulvereamque trahens per summa cacumina pallam 706 verrit humum pavidamque metu caligine tectus 707 Orithyian amans fulvis amplectitur alis. 708 Dum volat, arserunt agitati fortius ignes. 709 Nec prius aerii cursus suppressit habenas, 710 quam Ciconum tenuit populos et moenia raptor. 711 Illic et gelidi coniunx Actaea tyranni 712 et genetrix facta est, partus enixa gemellos, 713 cetera qui matris, pennas genitoris haberent. 714 Non tamen has una memorant cum corpore natas, 715 barbaque dum rutilis aberat subnixa capillis, 716 implumes Calaisque puer Zetesque fuerunt. 717 Mox pariter pennae ritu coepere volucrum	698 as torches. They prepared the nuptial couch,— 699 a boding owl flew over the bride's room, 700 and then sat silently upon the roof. 701 With such bad omens Tereus married her, 702 sad Procne, and those omens cast a gloom 703 on all the household till the fateful birth 704 of their first born. All Thrace went wild with joy— 705 and even they, rejoicing, blessed the Gods, 706 when he, the little Itys, saw the light; 707 and they ordained each year their wedding day, 708 and every year the birthday of their child, 709 should be observed with festival and song: 710 so the sad veil of fate conceals from us 711 our future woes. 712 Now Titan had drawn forth 713 the changing seasons through five autumns, when, 714 in gentle accents, Procne spoke these words: 715 “My dearest husband, if you love me, let 716 me visit my dear sister, or consent 717 that she may come to us and promise her 718 that she may soon return. If you will but 719 permit me to enjoy her company 720 my heart will bless you as I bless the Gods.” 721 At once the monarch ordered his long ships 722 to launch upon the sea; and driven by sail, 723 and hastened by the swiftly sweeping oars, 724 they entered the deep port of Athens, where 725 he made fair landing on the fortified 726 Piraeus. There, when time was opportune 727 to greet his father-in-law and shake his hand,

	718 cingere utrumque latus, pariter flavescere malae. 719 Ergo ubi concessit tempus puerile iuventae, 720 vellera cum Minyis nitido radiantia villo
6.721	721 per mare non notum prima petiere carina.
7.1	1 Iamque fretum Minyae Pagasaea puppe secabant, 2 perpetuaque trahens inopem sub nocte senectam 3 Phineus visus erat, iuvenesque Aquilone creati 4 virgineas volucres miseri senis ore fugarant, 5 multaque perpessi claro sub Iasone tandem 6 contigerant rapidas limosi Phasidos undas. 7 Dumque adeunt regem Phrixeaque vellera poscunt 8 lexque datur Minyis magnorum horrenda laborum, 9 concipit interea validos Aeetias ignes 10 et luctata diu, postquam ratione furorem 11 vincere non poterat, “frustra Medea, repugnas: 12 nescio quis deus obstat” ait; “mirumque, nisi hoc est, 13 aut aliquid certe simile huic, quod amare vocatur. 14 Nam cur iussa patris nimium mihi dura videntur? 15 Sunt quoque dura nimis. Cur, quem modo denique vidi, 16 ne pereat, timeo? quae tanti causa timoris? 17 Excute virgineo conceptas pectore flammas, 18 si potes, infelix! — Si possem, sanior essem. 19 Sed trahit invitam nova vis, aliudque cupido, 20 mens aliud suadet. Video meliora proboque, 21 deteriora sequor. Quid in hospite, regia virgo, 22 ureris et thalamos alieni concipis orbis? 23 Haec quoque terra potest, quod ames, dare. Vivat an ille 24 occidat, in dis est. Vivat tamen! idque precari 25 vel sine amore licet: quid enim commisit Iason?	1 Over the storm-tossed waves, the Argonauts 2 had sailed in Argo, their long ship to where 3 King Phineus, needy in his old age, reigned— 4 deprived of sight and feeble. When the sons 5 of Boreas had landed on the shore, 6 and seen the Harpies snatching from the king 7 his nourishment, befouling it with beaks 8 obscene, they drove those human-vultures thence. 9 And having suffered hardships and great toils, 10 after the day they rescued the sad king 11 from the vile Harpies, those twin valiant youths, 12 Zetes and Calais came with their chief, 13 the mighty Jason, where the Phasis flows. 14 From the green margin of that river, all 15 the crew of Argonauts, by Jason led, 16 went to the king Aeetes and required 17 the Golden Fleece, that he received from Phryxus. 18 When they had bargained with him, full of wiles 19 he offered to restore the Golden Fleece 20 only to those who might to him return, 21 victorious from hard labors of great risk. 22 Medea, the king's daughter, near his throne, 23 saw Jason, leader of the Argonauts, 24 as he was pressing to secure a prize— 25 and loved at sight with a consuming flame. 26 Although she struggled to suppress her love, 27 unable to restrain herself, she said, 28 “In vain I've striven to subdue my heart: 29 some god it must be, which I cannot tell, 30 is working to destroy my hapless life;

	26 Quem, nisi crudelem, non tangat Iasonis aetas 27 et genus et virtus? Quem non, ut cetera desint, 28 ore movere potest? Certe mea pectora movit. 29 At nisi opem tulero, taurorum adflabitur ore 30 concurretque suae segeti, tellure creatis
7.31	31 hostibus, aut avido dabitur fera praeda draconi. 32 Hoc ego si patiar, tum me de tigride natam, 33 tum ferrum et scopulos gestare in corde fatebor. 34 Cur non et specto pereuntem oculosque videndo 35 conscelero? Cur non tauros exhortor in illum 36 terrigenasque feros insopitumque draconem? 37 Di meliora velint. Quamquam non ista precanda, 38 sed facienda mihi. — Prodamne ego regna parentis, 39 atque ope nescio quis servabitur advena nostra, 40 ut per me sospes sine me det lintea ventis 41 virque sit alterius, poenae Medea relinquar? 42 Si facere hoc aliamve potest praeponere nobis, 43 occidat ingratus. Sed non is vultus in illo, 44 non ea nobilitas animo est, ea gratia formae, 45 ut timeam fraudem meritique oblivia nostri. 46 Et dabit ante fidem, cogamque in foedera testes 47 esse deos. Quid tuta times? accingere et omnem 48 pelle moram: tibi se semper debebit Iason, 49 te face sollemni iunget sibi, perque Pelasgas 50 servatrix urbes matrum celebrabere turba. 51 Ergo ego germanam fratremque patremque deosque 52 et natale solum, ventis ablata, relinquam? 53 Nempe pater saevus, nempe est mea barbara tellus, 54 frater adhuc infans: stant mecum vota sororis,	31 or else it is the burning flame of love 32 that in me rages. If it is not love, 33 why do the mandates of my father seem 34 too harsh? They surely are too harsh. Why do 35 I fear that he may perish whom I have 36 seen only once? What is the secret cause 37 that I am agitated by such fears?— 38 It is no other than the god of Love. 39 “Thrust from your virgin breast such burning flames 40 and overcome their hot unhappiness— 41 if I could do so, I should be myself: 42 but some deluding power is holding me 43 helpless against my will. Desire persuades 44 me one way, but my reason still persuades 45 another way. I see a better course 46 and I approve, but follow its defeat. — 47 “O royal maiden, why are you consumed 48 with love for this strange man, and why are you 49 so willing to be carried by the nuptial ties 50 so far from your own country, where, indeed, 51 are many brave men worthy of your love? 52 “Whether for life or death his numbered hours 53 are in the mercy of the living Gods, 54 and that he may not suffer risk of death, 55 too well foreseen, now let my prayers prevail— 56 righteously uttered of a generous heart 57 without the stress of love. What wicked thing 58 has Jason done? His handsome person, youth, 59 and noble ways, would move a heart of stone. 60 “Have I a heart of flint, or was I born

	55 maximus intra me deus est. Non magna relinquam, 56 magna sequar: titulum servatae pubis Achivae 57 notitiamque loci melioris et oppida, quorum 58 hic quoque fama viget, cultusque artesque locorum; 59 quemque ego cum rebus, quas totus possidet orbis, 60 Aesoniden mutasse velim; quo coniuge felix
7.61	61 et dis cara ferar et vertice sidera tangam. 62 Quid, quod nescio qui mediis concurrere in undis 63 dicuntur montes, ratibusque inimica Charybdis 64 nunc sorbere fretum, nunc reddere, cinctaque saevis 65 Scylla rapax canibus Siculo latrare profundo? 66 Nempe tenens, quod amo, gremioque in Iasonis haerens 67 per freta longa ferar: nihil illum amplexa verebor 68 aut, siquid metuam, metuam de coniuge solo. — 69 Coniugiumne vocas speciosaque nomina culpae 70 imponis, Medea, tuae? Quin adspice, quantum 71 adgrediare nefas, et, dum licet, effuge crimen.” 72 Dixit, et ante oculos rectum pietasque pudorque 73 constiterant, et victa dabat iam terga Cupido. 74 Ibat ad antiquas Hecates Perseidos aras, 75 quas nemus umbrosum secretaque silva tegebat. 76 Et iam fortis erat pulsusque resederat ardor, 77 cum videt Aesoniden exstinctaque flamma reluxit. 78 Erubuere genae, totoque recanduit ore, 79 utque solet ventis alimenta adsumere quaeque 80 parva sub inducta latuit scintilla favilla 81 crescere et in veteres agitata resurgere vires, 82 sic iam lentus amor, iam quem languere putares, 83 ut vidit iuvenem, specie praesentis inarsit.	61 a tigress to deny him timely aid?— 62 Unless I interpose, he will be slain 63 by the hot breath of brazen-footed bulls, 64 or will be slaughtered by the warriors, sprung 65 miraculous from earth, or will be given 66 to satisfy the ravenous appetite 67 of a huge dragon. 68 “Let my gloating eyes 69 be satiate with his dying agonies! 70 Let me incite the fury of these bulls! 71 Stir to their blood-lust mad-born sons of Earth! 72 Rouse up the never-sleeping dragon's rage!— 73 “Avert it Gods!— 74 “But why should I cry out 75 upon the Gods to save him from such wrong, 76 when, by my actions and my power, myself 77 may shield him from all evils? 78 “Such a course 79 would wreck the kingdom of my father—and by me 80 the wily stranger would escape from him; 81 and spreading to the wind his ready sails 82 he would forget and leave me to my fate.— 83 Oh, if he should forget my sacrifice, 84 and so prefer those who neglected him, 85 let him then perish in his treachery.— 86 “But these are idle thoughts: his countenance, 87 reveals innate nobility and grace, 88 that should dispel all fear of treachery, 89 and guarantee his ever-faithful heart. 90 The Gods will witness our united souls,

	84 Et casu solito formosior Aesone natus 85 illa luce fuit: posses ignoscere amanti. 86 Spectat et in vultu veluti tum denique viso 87 lumina fixa tenet nec se mortalia demens 88 ora videre putat, nec se declinat ab illo. 89 Ut vero coepitque loqui dextramque prehendit 90 hospes et auxilium submissa voce rogavit
7.91	91 promisitque torum, lacrimis ait illa profusis: 92 “Quid faciam, video (non ignorantia veri 93 decipiet, sed amor): servabere munere nostro; 94 servatus promissa dato.” Per sacra triformis 95 ille deae, lucoque foret quod numen in illo, 96 perque patrem soceri cernentem cuncta futuri 97 eventusque suos et tanta pericula iurat. 98 Creditus accepit cantatas protinus herbas 99 edidicitque usum, laetusque in tecta recessit. 100 Postera depulerat stellas aurora micantes: 101 conveniunt populi sacrum Mavortis in arvum 102 consistuntque iugis. Medio rex ipse resedit 103 agmine purpureus sceptroque insignis eburno. 104 Ecce adamanteis Vulcanum naribus efflant 105 aeripedes tauri, tactaeque vaporibus herbae 106 ardent; utque solent pleni resonare camini, 107 aut ubi terrena silices fornace soluti 108 concipiunt ignem liquidarum adspergine aquarum, 109 pectora sic intus clausas volventia flammas 110 gutturaque usta sonant. Tamen illis Aesone natus 111 obvius it. Vertere truces venientis ad ora 112 terribiles vultus praefixaque cornua ferro,	91 and he shall pledge his faith. Secure of it 92 my fear will be removed. Be ready, then— 93 and make a virtue of necessity: 94 your Jason owes himself to you; and he 95 must join you in true wedlock. Then you shall 96 be celebrated through the land of Greece, 97 by throngs of women, for the man you saved. 98 “Shall I then sail away, and so forsake 99 my sister, brother, father, Gods, and land 100 that gave me birth? My father is indeed 101 a stern man, and my native land is all 102 too barbarous; my brother is a child,— 103 my sister's goodwill is good help for me; 104 and heaven's supreme god is within my breast. 105 “I shall not so be leaving valued hopes, 106 but will be going surely to great things. 107 And I should gain applause from all the world, 108 as having saved the threatened Argonauts, 109 most noble of the Greeks; and in their land, 110 which certainly is better than my own, 111 become the bride of Jason, for whose love 112 I should not hesitate to give the world— 113 and in whose love the living Gods rejoice 114 so greatly; for his sake they would bestow 115 their favors on my head, and make the stars 116 my habitation. 117 “Should I hesitate 118 because the wreck-strewn mountains bar the way, 119 and clash together in the Euxine waves; 120 or fear Charybdis, fatal to large ships,

	113 pulvereumque solum pede pulsavere bisulco 114 fumificisque locum mugitibus impleverunt. 115 Deriguere metu Minyae: subit ille, nec ignes 116 sentit anhelatos (tantum medicamina possunt), 117 pendulaque audaci mulcet palearia dextra, 118 suppositosque iugo pondus grave cogit aratri 119 ducere et insuetum ferro proscindere campum. 120 Mirantur Colchi, Minyae clamoribus augent
7.121	121 adiciuntque animos. Galea tum sumit aena 122 vipereos dentes et aratos spargit in agros. 123 Semina mollit humus valido praetincta veneno, 124 et crescunt fiuntque sati nova corpora dentes. 125 Utque hominis speciem materna sumit in alvo 126 perque suos intus numeros componitur infans, 127 nec nisi maturus communes exit in auras, 128 sic ubi visceribus gravidae telluris imago 129 effecta est hominis, feto consurgit in arvo, 130 quodque magis mirum est, simul edita concutit arma. 131 Quos ubi viderunt praeacutae cuspidis hastas 132 in caput Haemonii iuvenis torquere parantes, 133 demisere metu vultumque animumque Pelasgi. 134 Ipsa quoque extimuit, quae tutum fecerat illum; 135 utque peti vidit iuvenem tot ab hostibus unum, 136 palluit et subito sine sanguine frigida sedit; 137 neve parum valeant a se data gramina, carmen 138 auxiliare canit secretasque advocat artes. 139 Ille gravem medios silicem iaculatus in hostes 140 a se depulsum Martem convertit in ipsos. 141 Terrigenae pereunt per mutua vulnera fratres	121 that sucks the deep sea in its whirling gulf 122 and spouts far upward, with alternate force, 123 or Scylla, circled with infuriate hounds 124 howling in rage from deep Sicilian waves? 125 “Safe in the shielding arms of him I love, 126 on Jason's bosom leaning, I shall be 127 borne safely over wide and hostile seas; 128 and in his dear embrace forget my fears— 129 or if for anything I suffer dread, 130 it will be only for the one I love.— 131 “Alas, Medea, this vain argument 132 has only furnished plausible excuse 133 for criminal desires, and desecrates 134 the marriage rite. It is a wicked thing 135 to think upon. Before it is too late 136 forget your passion and deny this guilt.” 137 And after she had said these words, her eyes 138 were opened to the prize of modesty, 139 chaste virtue, and a pure affection: 140 and Cupid, vanquished, turned away and fled. 141 Then, to an ancient altar of the goddess named 142 Hecate, Perse's daughter took her way 143 in the deep shadows of a forest. She 144 was strong of purpose now, and all the flames 145 of vanquished passion had died down; but when 146 she saw the son of Aeson, dying flames 147 leaped up again. Her cheeks grew red, then all 148 her face went pale again; as a small spark 149 when hid beneath the ashes, if fed by 150 a breath of wind grows and regains its strength,

	142 civilique cadunt acie. Gratantur Achivi 143 victoremque tenent avidisque amplexibus haerent. 144 Tu quoque victorem complecti, barbara, velles: 145 146 sed te, ne faceres, tenuit reverentia famae. 147 Quod licet, adfectu tacito laetaris agisque 148 carminibus grates et dis auctoribus horum. 149 Pervigilem superest herbis sopire draconem, 150 qui crista linguisque tribus praesignis et uncis
7.151	151 dentibus horrendus custos erat arboris aureae. 152 Hunc postquam sparsit Lethaei gramine suci 153 verbaque ter dixit placidos facientia somnos, 154 quae mare turbatum, quae concita flumina sistunt, 155 somnus in ignotos oculos sibi venit, et auro 156 heros Aesonius potitur spolioque superbus 157 muneris auctorem secum, spolia altera, portans 158 victor Iolciacos tetigit cum coniuge portus. 159 Haemoniae matres pro gnatis dona receptis 160 grandaevique ferunt patres congestaque flamma 161 tura liquefaciunt, inductaque cornibus aurum 162 victima vota cadit. Sed abest gratantibus Aeson, 163 iam propior leto fessusque senilibus annis. 164 Cum sic Aesonides: “O cui debere salutem 165 confiteor, coniunx, quamquam mihi cuncta dedisti 166 excessitque fidem meritorum summa tuorum, 167 si tamen hoc possunt (quid enim non carmina possunt?), 168 deme meis annis et demptos adde parenti.” 169 Nec tenuit lacrimas. Mota est pietate rogantis, 170 dissimilemque animum subiit Aeeta relictus. 171 Nec tamen adfectus tales confessa	151 as it is fanned to life; so now her love 152 that had been smoldering, and which you would 153 have thought was almost dead, when she had see 154 again his manly youth, blazed up once more. 155 For on that day his graceful person seemed 156 as glorious as a God;—and as she gazed, 157 and fixed her eyes upon his countenance, 158 her frenzy so prevailed, she was convinced 159 that he was not a mortal. And her eyes 160 were fascinated; and she could not turn 161 away from him. But when he spoke to her, 162 and promised marriage, grasping her right hand: 163 she answered, as her eyes suffused with tears; 164 “I see what I will do, and ignorance 165 of truth will not be my undoing now, 166 but love itself. By my assistance you 167 shall be preserved; but when preserved fulfill 168 your promise.” 169 He swore that she could trust in him. 170 Then by the goddess of the triple form, 171 Diana, Trivia, or Luna called, 172 and by her sacred groves and fanes, he vowed, 173 and by the hallowed Sun that sees all things, 174 and by his own adventures, and his life,— 175 on these the youthful Jason took his oath.— 176 With this she was assured and quickly gave 177 to him the magic herbs: he learnt their use 178 and full of joy withdrew into his house. 179 Now when the dawn had dimmed the glittering stars, 180 the people hastened to the sacred field

	“quod” inquit 172 “excidit ore tuo, coniunx, scelus? ergo ego cuiquam 173 posse tuae videor spatium transcribere vitae? 174 Nec sinat hoc Hecate, nec tu petis aequa. Sed isto, 175 quod petis, experiar maius dare munus Iason. 176 Arte mea soceri longum temptabimus aevum, 177 non annis renovare tuis: modo diva triformis 178 adiuvet et praesens ingentibus adnuat ausis.” 179 Tres aberant noctes, ut cornua tota coirent 180 efficerentque orbem. Postquam plenissima fulsit
7.181	181 et solida terras spectavit imagine luna, 182 egreditur tectis vestes induta recinctas, 183 nuda pedem, nudos umeris infusa capillos, 184 fertque vagos mediae per muta silentia noctis 185 incomitata gradus. Homines volucresque ferasque 186 solverat alta quies: nullo cum murmure saepes, 187 inmotaeque silent frondes, silet umidus aer; 188 sidera sola micant. Ad quae sua bracchia tendens 189 ter se convertit, ter sumptis flumine crinem 190 inroravit aquis ternisque ululatibus ora 191 solvit et, in dura submisso poplite terra, 192 “Nox” ait “arcanis fidissima, quaeque diurnis 193 aurea cum luna succeditis ignibus astra, 194 tuque triceps Hecate, quae coeptis conscia nostris 195 adiutrixque venis cantusque artisque magorum, 196 quaeque magos, Tellus, pollentibus instruis herbis, 197 auraeque et venti montesque amnesque lacusque 198 dique omnes nemorum, dique omnes noctis adeste. 199 Quorum ope, cum volui, ripis mirantibus amnes 200 in fontes rediere suos,	181 of Mars, and on the hills expectant stood.— 182 Arrayed in purple, and in majesty 183 distinguished by his ivory sceptre, sat 184 the king, surrounded by a multitude. 185 Below them on the visioned Field of Mars, 186 huge brazen-footed bulls were breathing forth 187 from adamantine nostrils living flames, 188 blasting the verdant herbage in their path! 189 As forges glowing with hot flames resound, 190 or as much quick-lime, burnt in earthen kilns, 191 crackles and hisses as if mad with rage, 192 sprinkled with water, liberating heat; 193 so their hot throats and triple-heated sides, 194 resounding told of pent-up fires within. 195 The son of Aeson went to meet them. As 196 he came to meet them the fierce animals 197 turned on him faces terrible, and sharp 198 horns tipped with iron, and they pawed 199 the dusty earth with cloven feet, and filled 200 the place with fiery bellowings. The Minyans 201 were stark with fear; he went up to the bulls 202 not feeling their hot breath at all, so great 203 the power of his charmed drugs; and while he 204 was stroking their down-hanging dewlaps with 205 a fearless hand, he placed the yoke down on 206 their necks and made them draw the heavy plow, 207 and cut through fields that never felt the steel 208 before. The Colchians were amazed and silent; 209 but the loud shouting of the Minyans 210 increased their hero's courage. Taking then

	concussaque sisto, 201 stantia concutio cantu freta, nubila pello 202 nubilaque induco, ventos abigoque vocoque, 203 vipereas rumpo verbis et carmine fauces, 204 vivaque saxa sua convulsaque robora terra 205 et silvas moveo, iubeoque tremescere montes 206 et mugire solum manesque exire sepulcris. 207 Te quoque, Luna, traho, quamvis Temesaea labores 208 aera tuos minuant; currus quoque carmine nostro 209 pallet avi, pallet nostris Aurora venenis. 210 Vos mihi taurorum flammas hebetastis et unco
7.211	211 impatiens oneris collum pressistis aratro, 212 vos serpentigenis in se fera bella dedistis 213 custodemque rudem somno sopistis et aurum 214 vindice decepto Graias misistis in urbes. 215 Nunc opus est sucis, per quos renovata senectus 216 in florem redeat primosque reconligat annos. 217 Et dabitis. Neque enim micuerunt sidera frustra, 218 nec frustra volucrum tractus cervice draconum 219 currus adest.” Aderat demissus ab aethere currus. 220 Quo simul adscendit frenataque colla draconum 221 permulsit manibusque leves agitavit habenas, 222 sublimis rapitur subiectaque Thessala Tempe 223 despicit et Threces regionibus applicat angues: 224 et quasque Ossa tulit quasque altus Pelion herbas 225 Othrysque Pindusque et Pindo maior Olympus 226 perspicit, et placitas partim radice revellit, 227 partim succidit curvamine falcis aenae. 228 Multa quoque Apidani placuerunt gramina ripis, 229 multa quoque Amphrysi neque eras	211 the serpent's teeth out of a brazen helmet 212 he sowed them broadcast in the new-plowed field. 213 The moist earth softened these seeds that were steeped 214 in virulent poison and the teeth swelled up 215 and took new forms. And just as in its mother 216 an infant gradually assumes the form 217 of man, and is perfected through all parts 218 within, and does not come forth to the light 219 till fully formed; so, when the forms of men 220 had been completed in the womb of earth 221 made pregnant, they rose up from it, 222 and what is yet more wonderful, each one 223 clashed weapons that had been brought forth with him. 224 When his companions saw the warriors turn 225 as if with one accord, to hurl their spears, 226 sharp-pointed, at the head of Jason, fear 227 unnerved the boldest and their courage failed. 228 So, too, the maid whose sorcery had saved 229 him from much danger, when she saw the youth 230 encompassed by those raging enemies, 231 and he alone against so many—struck 232 with sudden panic, she turned ashen white, 233 her bloodless cheeks were blanched; and chilled with fear 234 she wilted to the ground; and lest the herbs, 235 so lately given him, might fail his need 236 she added incantations and invoked 237 mysterious arts. While she protected him 238 He seized upon a heavy stone, and hurled 239 it in the midst of his new enemies— 240

	inmunis, Enipeu; 230 nec non Peneos, nec non Spercheides undae 231 contribuere aliquid iuncosaque litora Boebes. 232 Carpsit et Euboica vivax Anthedone gramen, 233 nondum mutato vulgatum corpore Glauci. 234 Et iam nona dies curru pennisque draconum 235 nonaque nox omnes lustrantem viderat agros, 236 cum rediit. Neque erant tacti, nisi odore, dracones, 237 et tamen annosae pellem posuere senectae. 238 Constitit adveniens citra limenque foresque 239 et tantum caelo tegitur refugitque viriles 240 contactus statuitque aras de caespite binas,	distracted by this cast, and murderous,
7.241	241 dexteriore Hecates, ast laeva parte Iuventae. 242 Has ubi verbenis silvaque incinxit agresti. 243 haud procul egesta scrobibus tellure duabus 244 sacra facit cultrosque in guttura velleris atri 245 conicit et patulas perfundit sanguine fossas. 246 Tum super invergens liquidi carchesia vini 247 alteraque invergens tepidi carchesia lactis 248 verba simul fudit terrenaque numina civit 249 umbrarumque rogat rapta cum coniuge regem, 250 ne properent artus anima fraudare senili. 251 Quos ubi placavit precibusque et murmure longo, 252 Aesonis effetum proferri corpus ad auras 253 iussit et in plenos resolutum carmine somnos, 254 exanimi similem, stratis porrexit in herbis. 255 Hinc procul Aesoniden, procul hinc iubet ire ministros 256 et monet arcanis oculos removere profanos. 257 Diffugiunt iussi. Passis Medea capillis 258 bacchantum ritu, flagrantes circuit	241 they turned from him, and clashing their new arms, 242 those earth-born brothers fought among themselves 243 till all were slaughtered in blood-thirsty strife. 244 Gladly the Greeks acclaimed him conqueror, 245 and pressed around him for the first embrace. 246 Then, too, Medea, barbarous Colchian maid, 247 although her modesty restrained her heart, 248 eagerly longed to fold him in her arms, 249 but careful of her good name, held aloof,— 250 rejoicing in deep, silent love; and she 251 acknowledged to the Gods her mighty gift 252 of incantations. 253 But the dragon, still 254 alert,—magnificent and terrible 255 with gorgeous crest and triple tongue, and fangs 256 barbed as a javelin, guards the Golden Fleece: 257 and Jason can obtain that quest only 258 if slumber may seal up the monster's eyes.— 259 Jason, successful, sprinkled on his crest 260 Lethean juices of a magic herb, 261 and then recited thrice the words which bring 262 deep slumber, potent words which would becalm 263 the storm-tossed ocean, and would stop the flow 264 of the most rapid rivers of our earth: 265 and slowly slumber sealed the dragon's eyes. 266 While that great monster slept, the hero took 267 the Golden Fleece; and proudly sailed away 268 bearing his treasure and the willing maid, 269 (whose aid had saved him) to aras 259 multifidasque faces in fossa sanguinis atra 260 tingit et infectas geminis accendit in aris 261 terque senem flamma, ter aqua, ter sulphure lustrat. 262 Interea validum posito medicamen aeno 263 fervet et exsultat spumisque tumentibus albet. 264 Illic Haemonia radices valle resectas 265 seminaque floresque et sucos incoquit atros. 266 Adicit extremo lapides oriente petitos 267 et quas Oceani refluum mare lavit harenas, 268 addit et exceptas luna pernocte pruinas 269 et strigis infames ipsis cum carnibus alas 270 inque virum soliti vultus mutare ferinos	his native port 270 Iolcus—victorious with the Argonauts.

7.271	271 ambigui prosecta lupi; nec defuit illis 272 squamea Cinyphii tenuis membrana chelydri 273 vivacisque iecur cervi; quibus insuper addit 274 ora caputque novem cornicis saecula passae. 275 His et mille aliis postquam sine nomine rebus 276 propositum instruxit mortali barbara maius 277 arenti ramo iampridem mitis olivae 278 omnia confudit summisque inmiscuit ima. 279 Ecce vetus calido versatus stipes aeno 280 fit viridis primo, nec longo tempore frondes 281 induit et subito gravidis oneratur olivis. 282 At quacumque cavis spumas eiecit aenis 283 ignis et in terram guttae cecidere calentes, 284 vernat humus, floresque et mollia pabula surgunt. 285 Quae simul ac vidit, stricto Medea recludit 286 ense senis iugulum, veteremque exire cruorem 287 passa, replet sucis. Quos postquam combibit Aeson	271 Now when the valiant Argonauts returned 272 to Thessaly, their happy relatives, 273 fathers and mothers, praised the living Gods; 274 and with their hallowed gifts enhanced the flames 275 with precious incense; and they offered Jove 276 a sacred bullock, rich with gilded horns. 277 But Jason's father, Aeson, came not down 278 rejoicing to behold his son, for now 279 worn out with many years, he waited death. 280 And Jason to Medea grieving said: 281 “Dearest, to whom my life and love are due, 282 although your kindness has been great to me, 283 and you have granted more than I should ask, 284 yet one thing more I beg of you; if your 285 enchantments can accomplish my desire, 286 take from my life some years that I should live 287 and add them to my father's ending days.”— 288 And as he spoke he could not check his tears. 289 Medea, moved by his affection, thought 290 how much less she had grieved for her loved sire: 291 and she replied:—“A wicked thing you ask! 292 Can I be capable of using you 293 in such a manner as to take your life 294 and give it to another? Ask not me 295 a thing so dreadful! May the Gods forbid!— 296 I will endeavor to perform for you 297 a task much greater. By the powers of Night 298 I

	288 aut ore acceptos aut vulnere, barba comaeque 289 canitie posita nigrum rapuere colorem, 290 pulsa fugit macies, abeunt pallorque situsque, 291 adiectoque cavae supplentur corpore rugae, 292 membraque luxuriant. Aeson miratur et olim 293 ante quater denos hunc se reminiscitur annos. 294 Viderat ex alto tanti miracula monstri 295 Liber, et admonitus iuvenes nutricibus annos 296 posse suis reddi, capit hoc a Colchide munus. 297 Neve doli cessent, odium cum coniuge falsum 298 Phasias adsimulat Peliaeque ad limina supplex 299 confugit. Atque illam, quoniam gravis ipse senecta est, 300 excipiunt natae. Quas tempore callida parvo	will most certainly return to him 299 the lost years of your father, but must not 300 deprive you of your own. — Oh grant the power,
7.301	301 Colchis amicitiae mendacis imagine cepit. 302 Dumque refert inter meritorum maxima, demptos 303 Aesonis esse situs, atque hac in parte moratur, 304 spes est virginibus Pelia subiecta creatis 305 arte suum parili revirescere posse parentem. 306 Idque petunt pretiumque iubent sine fine pacisci. 307 Illa brevi spatio silet et dubitare videtur 308 suspenditque animos ficta gravitate rogantes. 309 Mox ubi pollicita est, “quo sit fiducia maior 310 muneris huius” ait, “qui vestri maximus aevo est 311 dux gregis inter oves, agnus medicamine fiet.” 312 Protinus innumeris effetus laniger annis 313 attrahitur flexo circum cava tempora cornu. 314 Cuius ut Haemonio marcentia guttura cultro 315 fodit et exiguo maculavit sanguine ferrum, 316 membra simul pecudis validosque venefica sucos	301 great goddess of the triple form, that I 302 may fail not to accomplish this great deed!” 303 Three nights were wanting for the moon to join 304 her circling horns and form a perfect orb. 305 When these were passed, the rounded light shone full 306 and bright upon the earth.—Through the still night 307 alone, Medea stole forth from the house 308 with feet bare, and in flowing garment clothed— 309 her long hair unadorned and not confined. 310 Deep slumber has relaxed the world, and all 311 that's living, animals and birds and men, 312 and even the hedges and the breathing leaves 313 are still—and motionless the laden air. 314 Only the stars are twinkling, and to them 315 she looks and beckons with imploring hands. 316 Now thrice around she paces, and three times 317 besprinkles her long hair with water dipt 318 from crystal streams, which having done 319 she kneels a moment on the cold, bare ground, 320 and screaming three times calls upon the Night,— 321 “O faithful Night, regard my mysteries! 322 O golden-lighted Stars! O softly-moving Moon— 323 genial, your fire succeeds the heated day! 324 O Hecate! grave three-faced queen of these 325 charms of

	317 mergit in aere cavo: minuunt en corporis artus 318 cornuaque exurunt nec non cum cornibus annos, 319 et tener auditur medio balatus aeno. 320 Nec mora, balatum mirantibus exsilit agnus 321 lascivitque fuga lactantiaque ubera quaerit. 322 Obstipuere satae Pelia: promissaque postquam 323 exhibuere fidem, tum vero impensius instant. 324 Ter iuga Phoebus equis in Hibero flumine mersis 325 dempserat et quarta radiantia nocte micabant 326 sidera, cum rapido fallax Aeetias igni 327 imponit purum laticem et sine viribus herbas. 328 Iamque neci similis resoluto corpore regem 329 et cum rege suo custodes somnus habebat, 330 quem dederant cantus magicaeque potentia linguae:	enchanters and enchanters, arts! 326 O fruitful Earth, giver of potent herbs! 327 O gentle Breezes and destructive Winds! 328 You Mountains, Rivers, Lakes and sacred Groves, 329 and every dreaded god of silent Night! 330 Attend upon me!—
7.331	331 intrarant iussae cum Colchide limina natae 332 ambierantque torum. “Quid nunc dubitatis inertes? 333 Stringite” ait “gladios veteremque haurite cruorem, 334 ut repleam vacuas iuvenali sanguine venas. 335 In manibus vestris vita est aetasque parentis: 336 si pietas ulla est nec spes agitatis inanes, 337 officium praestate patri telisque senectam 338 exigite et saniem coniecto emittite ferro.” 339 His, ut quaeque pia est, hortatibus impia prima est, 340 et ne sit scelerata, facit scelus. Haud tamen ictus 341 ulla suos spectare potest, oculosque reflectunt 342 caecaque dant saevis aversae vulnera dextris. 343 Ille, cruore fluens, cubito tamen adlevat artus 344 semilacerque toro temptat consurgere et inter 345 tot medius gladios pallentia bracchia tendens	331 “When my power commands, 332 the rivers turn from their accustomed ways 333 and roll far backward to their secret springs! 334 I speak—and the wild, troubled sea is calm, 335 and I command the waters to arise! 336 The clouds I scatter—and I bring the clouds; 337 I smooth the winds and ruffle up their rage; 338 I weave my spells and I recite my charms; 339 I pluck the fangs of serpents, and I move 340 the living rocks and twist the rooted oaks; 341 I blast the forests. Mountains at my word 342 tremble and quake; and from her granite tombs 343 the liberated ghosts arise as Earth 344 astonished groans! From your appointed ways, 345 O wonder-working Moon, I draw you down 346 against the magic-making sound of gongs 347 and brazen vessels of Temesa's ore; 348 I cast my spells and veil the jeweled rays 349 of Phoebus' wain, and quench Aurora's fires. 350 “At my command you tamed the flaming bulls 351 which long disdained to bend beneath the yoke, 352 until they pressed their necks against the plows; 353 and, subject to my will, you raised up war 354 till the strong company of dragon-birth 355

	346 “quid facitis, gnatae? quis vos in fata parentis 347 armat?” ait. Cecidere illis animique manusque. 348 Plura locuturo cum verbis guttura Colchis 349 abstulit et calidis laniatum mersit in undis. 350 Quod nisi pennatis serpentibus isset in auras, 351 non exempta foret poenae. Fugit alta superque 352 Pelion umbrosum, Philyreia tecta, superque 353 Othryn et eventu veteris loca nota Cerambi. 354 Hic ope nympharum sublatus in aera pennis, 355 cum gravis infuso tellus foret obruta ponto, 356 Deucalioneas effugit inobrutus undas. 357 Aeoliam Pitanen a laeva parte relinquit 358 factaque de saxo longi simulacra draconis, 359 Idaeumque nemus, quo nati furta, iuvencum 360 occuluit Liber falsi sub imagine cervi,	were slaughtered as they fought amongst themselves; 356 and, last, you lulled asleep the warden's eyes— 357 guards of the Golden Fleece—till then awake 358 and sleeping never—so, deceiving him, 359 you sent the treasure to the Grecian cities! 360 “Witness my need of super-natured herbs,
7.361	361 quaque pater Corythi parva tumulatus harena est, 362 et quos Maera novo latratu terruit agros, 363 Eurypylique urbem, qua Coae cornua matres 364 gesserunt tum cum discederet Herculis agmen 365 Phoebeamque Rhodon et Ialysios Telchinas, 366 quorum oculos ipso vitiantes omnia visu 367 Iuppiter exosus fraternis subdidit undis. 368 Transit et antiquae Cartheia moenia Ceae, 369 qua pater Alcidamas placidam de corpore natae 370 miraturus erat nasci potuisse columbam. 371 Inde lacus Hyries videt et Cycneia tempe, 372 quae subitus celebravit olor. Nam Phyllius illic 373 imperio pueri volucresque ferumque leonem 374 tradiderat domitos; taurum quoque vincere iussus	361 elixirs potent to renew the years of age, 362 giving the bloom of youth.— You shall not fail 363 to grant me this; for not in vain the stars 364 are flashing confirmation; not in vain 365 the flying dragons, harnessed by their necks, 366 from skies descending bring my chariot down.” 367 A chariot, sent from heaven, came to her— 368 and soon as she had stroked the dragons' necks, 369 and shaken in her hands the guiding reins— 370 as soon as she had mounted, she was borne 371 quickly above, through unresisting air. 372 And, sailing over Thessaly, she saw 373 the vale of Tempe, where the level soil 374 is widely covered with a crumbling chalk— 375 she turned her dragons towards new regions there: 376 and she observed the herbs by Ossa born, 377 the weeds on lofty Pelion, Othrys, Pindus 378 and vast Olympus—and from here she plucked 379 the needed roots, or there, the blossoms clipped 380 all with a moon-curved sickle made of brass— 381 many the wild weeds by Apidanus, 382 as well as blue Amphrysus' banks, she chose, 383 and

	375 vicerat, et spreto totiens iratus amore 376 praemia poscenti taurum suprema negabat. 377 Ille indignatus “cupies dare” dixit et alto 378 desiluit saxo. Cuncti cecidisse putabant: 379 factus olor niveis pendebat in aere pennis. 380 At genetrix Hyrie, servatum nescia, flendo 381 delicuit stagnumque suo de nomine fecit. 382 Adiacet his Pleuron, in qua trepidantibus alis 383 Ophias effugit natorum vulnera Combe. 384 Inde Calaureae Letoidos adspicit arva, 385 in volucrem versi cum coniuge conscia regis. 386 Dextera Cyllene est, in qua cum matre Menephron 387 concubiturus erat saevarum more ferarum 388 Cephison procul hinc deflentem fata nepotis 389 respicit, in tumidam phocen ab Apolline versi, 390 Eumelique domum lugentis in aere natum.	not escaped Enipeus from her search; 384 Peneian stretches and Spercheian banks 385 all yielded what she chose:—and Boebe's shore 386 where sway the rushes; and she plucked up grass, 387 a secret grass, from fair Euboean fields 388 life-giving virtues in their waving blades, 389 as yet unknown for transformation wrought 390 on Glaucus.
7.391	391 Tandem vipereis Ephyren Pirenida pennis 392 contigit. Hic aevo veteres mortalia primo 393 corpora vulgarunt pluvialibus edita fungis. 394 Sed postquam Colchis arsit nova nupta venenis, 395 flagrantemque domum regis mare vidit utrumque, 396 sanguine natorum perfunditur impius ensis, 397 ultaque se male mater Iasonis effugit arma. 398 Hinc Titaniacis ablata draconibus intrat 399 Palladias arces, quae te, iustissima Phene, 400 teque, senex Peripha, pariter videre volantes 401 innixamque novis neptem Polypemonis alis. 402 Excipit hanc Aegeus, facto dammandus in uno; 403 nec satis hospitium est: thalami quoque foedere iungit.	391 All those fields she visited, 392 with ceaseless diligence in quest of charms, 393 nine days and nine nights sought strong herbs, 394 and the swift dragons with their active wings, 395 failed not to guide the chariot where she willed— 396 until they reached her home. The dragons then 397 had not been even touched by anything, 398 except the odor of surrounding herbs, 399 and yet they sloughed their skins, the growth of years. 400 She would not cross the threshold of her home 401 nor pass its gates; but, standing in the field, 402 alone beneath the canopy of Heaven, 403 she shunned all contact with her husband, while 404 she built up from the ever-living turf 405 two altars, one of which upon the right 406 to Hecate was given, but the one 407 upon the left was sacred then to you, 408 O Hebe, goddess of eternal youth! 409 Festooning woodland boughs and sweet vervain 410 adorned these altars, near by which she dug 411 as many trenches. Then, when all was done, 412

	404 Iamque aderat Theseus, proles ignara parenti, 405 et virtute sua bimarem pacaverat Isthmon. 406 Huius in exitium miscet Medea quod olim 407 attulerat secum Scythicis aconiton ab oris. 408 Illud Echidneae memorant e dentibus ortum 409 esse canis. Specus est tenebroso caecus hiatu, 410 est via declivis, per quam Tirynthius heros 411 restantem contraque diem radiosque micantes 412 obliquantem oculos nexis adamante catenis 413 Cerberon abstraxit; rabida qui concitus ira 414 implevit pariter ternis latratibus auras 415 et sparsit virides spumis albentibus agros. 416 Has concresse putant nactasque alimenta feracis 417 fecundique soli vires cepisse nocendi. 418 Quae quia nascuntur dura vivacia caute, 419 agrestes aconita vocant. Ea coniugis astu 420 ipse parens Aegeus nato porrexit ut hosti.	she slaughtered a black ram, and sprinkled with blood 413 the thirsty trenches; after which she poured 414 from rich carchesian goblets generous wine 415 and warm milk, grateful to propitious Gods— 416 the Deities of earth on whom she called— 417 entreating, as she did so, Pluto, lord 418 of ghostly shades, and ravished Proserpine, 419 that they should not, in undue haste, 420 deprive her patient's aged limbs of life. 421 When certain she compelled the God's regard, 422 assured her incantations and long prayers 423 were both approved and heard, she bade her people 424 bring out the body of her father-in-law— 425 old Aeson's worn out body—and when she 426 had buried him in a deep slumber by 427 her spells, as if he were a dead man, she 428 then stretched him out upon a bed of herbs. 429 She ordered Jason and his servants thence,
7.421	421 Sumpserat ignara Theseus data pocula dextra, 422 cum pater in capulo gladii cognovit eburno 423 signa sui generis facinusque excussit ab ore. 424 Effugit illa necem nebulis per carmina motis. 425 At genitor, quamquam laetatur sospite nato, 426 attonitus tamen est ingens discrimine parvo 427 committi potuisse nefas. Fovet ignibus aras 428 muneribusque deos implet, feriuntque secures 429 colla torosa boum vinctorum corpora vittis. 430 Nullus Erechthidis fertur celebratior illo 431 inluxisse dies. Agitant convivia patres 432 et medium vulgus, nec non et carmina, vino	430 and warned them not to spy upon her rites, 431 with eyes profane. As soon as they retired, 432 Medea, with disheveled hair and wild 433 abandon, as a Bacchanalian, paced 434 times three around the blazing altars, while 435 she dipped her torches, splintered at the top, 436 into the trenches, dark: with blood, and lit 437 the dipt ends in the sacred altar flames. 438 Times three she purified the ancient man 439 with flames, and thrice with water, and three times 440 with sulphur,—as the boiling mixture seethed 441 and bubbled in the brazen cauldron near. 442 And into this, acerbic juices, roots, 443 and flowers and seeds—from vales Hemonian— 444 and mixed elixirs, into which she cast 445 stones of strange virtue from the Orient, 446 and sifted sands of ebbing ocean's tide; 447 white hoar-frost, gathered when the moon was full, 448 the nauseating flesh and luckless wings 449 of the uncanny

	433 ingenium faciente, canunt: “Te, maxime Theseu, 434 mirata est Marathon Cretaei sanguine tauri; 435 quodque suis securus arat Cromyona colonus, 436 munus opusque tuum est. Tellus Epidauria per te 437 clavigeram vidit Vulcani occumbere prolem, 438 vidit et inmitem Cephisias ora Procrusten, 439 Cercyonis letum vidit Cerealis Eleusin. 440 Occidit ille Sinis, magnis male viribus usus, 441 qui poterat curvare trabes et agebat ab alto 442 ad terram late sparsuras corpora pinus. 443 Tutus ad Alcathoen, Lelegeia moenia, limes 444 composito Scirone patet, sparsisque latronis 445 terra negat sedem, sedem negat ossibus unda; 446 quae iactata diu fertur durasse vetustas 447 in scopulos: scopulis nomen Scironis inhaeret. 448 Si titulos annosque tuos numerare velimus, 449 facta premant annos. Pro te, fortissime, vota 450 publica suscipimus, Bacchi tibi sumimus haustus.”	screech-owl, and the entrails 450 from a mysterious animal that changed 451 from wolf to man, from man to wolf again; 452 the scaly sloughing of a water-snake, 453 the medic liver of a long-lived stag, 454 and the hard beak and head of an old crow 455 which was alive nine centuries before; 456 these, and a thousand nameless things 457 the foreign sorceress prepared and mixed, 458 and blended all together with a branch 459 of peaceful olive, old and dry with years. —
7.451	451 Consonat adsensu populi precibusque faventum 452 regia, nec tota tristis locus ullus in urbe est. 453 Nec tamen (usque adeo nulla est sincera voluptas, 454 sollicitumque aliquid laetis intervenit) Aegeus 455 gaudia percepit nato secura recepto. 456 Bella parat Minos. Qui quamquam milite, quamquam 457 classe valet, patria tamen est firmissimus ira 458 Androgeique necem iustis ulciscitur armis. 459 Ante tamen bello vires adquirit amicas, 460 quaque potens habitus, volucri freta classe pererrat. 461 Hinc Anaphen sibi iungit et Astypaleia regna,	460 And while she stirred the withered olive branch 461 in the hot mixture, it began to change 462 from brown to green; and presently put forth 463 new leaves, and soon was heavy with a wealth 464 of luscious olives.—As the ever-rising fire 465 threw bubbling froth beyond the cauldron's rim, 466 the ground was covered with fresh verdure — flowers 467 and all luxuriant grasses, and green plants. 468 Medea, when she saw this wonder took 469 her unsheathed knife and cut the old man's throat; 470 then, letting all his old blood out of him 471 she filled his ancient veins with rich elixir. 472 As he received it through his lips or wound, 473 his beard and hair no longer white with age, 474 turned quickly to their natural vigor, dark 475 and lustrous; and his wasted form renewed, 476 appeared in all the vigor of bright

	462 promissis Anaphen, regna Astypaleia bello; 463 hinc humilem Myconum cretosaque rura Cimoli 464 florentemque thymo Cythnum parvamque Seriphon 465 marmoreamque Paron, quaque impia prodidit Arnen 466 Sithonis (accepto, quod avara poposcerat, auro 467 mutata est in avem, quae nunc quoque diligit aurum, 468 nigra pedes, nigris velata monedula pennis). 469 At non Oliaros Didymaeque et Tenos et Andros 470 et Gyaros nitidaeque ferax Peparethos olivae 471 Gnosiacas iuvere rates. Latere inde sinistro 472 Oenopiam Minos petit, Aeacideia regna: 473 Oenopiam veteres appellavere, sed ipse 474 Aeacus Aeginam genetricis nomine dixit. 475 Turba ruit tantaeque virum cognoscere famae 476 expetit. Occurrunt illi Telamonque, minorque 477 quam Telamon Peleus, et proles tertia Phocus. 478 Ipse quoque egreditur tardus gravitate senili 479 Aeacus, et quae sit veniendi causa requirit. 480 Admonitus patrii luctus suspirat et illi	youth, 477 no longer lean and sallow, for new blood 478 coursed in his well-filled veins.—Astonished, when 479 released from his deep sleep, and strong in youth, 480 his memory assured him, such he was 481 years four times ten before that day!— 482 Bacchus, from his celestial vantage saw 483 this marvel, and convinced his nurses might 484 then all regain their former vigor, he 485 pled with Medea to restore their youth. 486 The Colchian woman granted his request.
7.481	481 dicta refert rector populorum talia centum: 482 “Arma iuves oro pro gnato sumpta piaeque 483 pars sis militiae; tumulo solacia posco.” 484 Huic Asopiades “petis inrita” dixit “et urbi 485 non facienda meae: neque enim coniunctior ulla 486 Cecropidis hac est tellus: ea foedera nobis.” 487 Tristis abit “stabunt” que “tibi tua foedera magno” 488 dixit et utilius bellum putat esse minari 489 quam gerere atque suas ibi praeconsumere vires. 490 Classis ab Oenopiis etiamnum Lyctia muris	487 but so her malice might be satisfied 488 Medea feigned she had a quarrel with 489 her husband, and for safety she had fled 490 to Pelias. There, since the king himself 491 was heavy with old age, his daughters gave 492 her generous reception. And these girls 493 the shrewd Medea in a short time won, 494 by her false show of friendliness; and while 495 among the most remarkable of her 496 achievements she was telling how she had 497 rejuvenated Aeson, and she dwelt 498 particularly, on that strange event, 499 these daughters were induced to hope that by 500 some skill like this their father might regain 501 his lost youth also. And they begged of her 502 this boon, persuading her to name the price; 503 no matter if it was large. She

	491 spectari poterat, cum pleno concita velo 492 Attica puppis adest in portusque intrat amicos, 493 quae Cephalum patriaeque simul mandata ferebat. 494 Aeacidae longo iuvenes post tempore visum 495 agnovere tamen Cephalum dextrasque dedere 496 inque patris duxere domum. Spectabilis heros 497 et veteris retinens etiamnum pignera formae 498 ingreditur ramumque tenens popularis olivae 499 a dextra laevaque duos aetate minores 500 maior habet, Clyton et Buten, Pallante creatos. 501 Postquam congressus primi sua verba tulerunt, 502 Cecropidae Cephalus peragit mandata rogatque 503 auxilium foedusque refert et iura parentum 504 imperiumque peti totius Achaidos addit. 505 Sic ubi mandatam iuvit facundia causam, 506 Aeacus, in capulo sceptri nitente sinistra, 507 “ne petite auxilium, sed sumite”, dixit “Athenae; 508 nec dubie vires, quas haec habet insula, vestras 509 ducite; et omnia habet (rerum status iste mearum). 510 Robora non desunt, superat mihi miles et hosti:	did not 504 reply at once and seemed to hesitate, 505 and so she held their fond minds in a deep 506 suspense by her feigned meditation. When 507 she had at length declared she would restore 508 his youth, she said to them: “That you may have 509 strong confidence in this my promised boon, 510 the oldest leader of your flock of sheep shall be 511 changed to a lamb again by my prized drugs.” 512 Straightway a wooly ram, worn out with length 513 of untold years was brought, his great horns curved 514 around his hollow temples. After she 515 had cut his scrawny throat with her sharp knife 516 Thessalian, barely staining it with his
7.511	511 gratia dis, felix et inexcusabile tempus.” 512 “Immo ita sit,” Cephalus, ”crescat tua civibus opto 513 urbs!” ait. “Adveniens equidem modo gaudia cepi, 514 cum tam pulchra mihi, tam par aetate iuventus 515 obvia processit. Multos tamen inde requiro, 516 quos quondam vidi vestra prius urbe receptus.” 517 Aeacus ingemuit tristique ita voce locutus: 518 ”Flebile principium melior fortuna secuta est. 519 Hanc utinam possem vobis memorare sine illo!	517 thin blood, Medea plunged his carcass in 518 a bronze-made kettle, throwing in it at 519 the same time juices of great potency. 520 These made his body shrink and burnt away 521 his two horns, and with horns his years. And now 522 thin bleating was heard from within the pot; 523 and even while they wondered at the sound, 524 a lamb jumped out and frisking, ran away 525 to find some udder with its needed milk. 526 Amazed the daughters looked on and, now that 527 these promises had been performed, they urged 528 more eagerly their first request. Three times 529 Phoebus unyoked his steeds after their plunge 530 in Ebro's stream, and on the fourth

	520 Ordine nunc repetam. Neu longa ambage morer vos: 521 ossa cinisque iacent, memori quos mente requiris. 522 Et quota pars illi rerum periere mearum! 523 Dira lues ira populis Iunonis iniquae 524 incidit exosae dictas a paelice terras. 525 Dum visum mortale malum tantaeque latebat 526 causa nocens cladis, pugnatum est arte medendi: 527 exitium superabat opem, quae victa iacebat. 528 Principio caelum spissa caligine terras 529 pressit et ignavos inclusit nubibus aestus; 530 dumque quater iunctis explevit cornibus orbem 531 luna, quater plenum tenuata retexuit orbem, 532 letiferis calidi spirarunt aestibus austri. 533 Constat et in fontes vitium venisse lacusque, 534 miliaque incultos serpentum multa per agros 535 errasse atque suis fluvios temerasse venenis. 536 Strage canum primo volucrumque oviumque boumque, 537 inque feris subiti deprensa potentia morbi. 538 Concidere infelix validos miratur arator 539 inter opus tauros medioque recumbere sulco; 540 lanigeris gregibus balatus dantibus aegros	night stars 531 shown brilliant on the dark foil of the sky, 532 and then the treacherous daughter of Aeetes 533 set some clear water over a hot fire 534 and put in it herbs of no potency. 535 And now a death-like sleep held the king down, 536 his body all relaxed, and with the king 537 his guards, a sleep which incantations with 538 the potency of magic words had given. 539 The sad king's daughters, as they had been bid, 540 were in his room, and with Medea stood 541 around his bed. “Why do you hesitate,” 542 Medea said. “You laggards, come and draw 543 your swords; let out his old blood that 544 I may refill his empty veins again 545 with young blood. In your hands your father's life 546 and youth are resting. You, his daughters, must
7.541	541 sponte sua lanaeque cadunt et corpora tabent. 542 Acer equus quondam magnaeque in pulvere famae 543 degenerat palmas veterumque oblitus honorum 544 ad praesepe gemit leto moriturus inerti. 545 Non aper irasci meminit, non fidere cursu 546 cerva, nec armentis incurrere fortibus ursi. 547 Omnia languor habet; silvisque agrisque viisque 548 corpora foeda iacent, vitiantur odoribus aurae.	547 have love for him, and if the hopes you have 548 are not all vain, come, do your duty by 549 your father; drive out old age at the point 550 of your good weapons; and let out his blood 551 enfeebled—cure him with the stroke of iron.” 552 Spurred on by these words, as each one of them 553 was filial she became the leader in 554 the most unfilial act, and that she might 555 not be most wicked did the wicked deed. 556 Not one could bear to see her own blows, so 557 they turned their eyes away; and every face 558 averted so, they blindly struck him with 559 their cruel hands. The old man streaming

	549 Mira loquar: non illa canes avidaeque volucres, 550 non cani tetigere lupi; dilapsa liquescunt 551 adflatuque nocent et agunt contagia late. 552 Pervenit ad miseros damno graviore colonos 553 pestis et in magnae dominatur moenibus urbis. 554 Viscera torrentur primo, flammaeque latentis 555 indicium rubor est et ductus anhelitus ingens. 556 Aspera lingua tumet, tepidisque arentia ventis 557 ora patent, auraeque graves captantur hiatu. 558 Non stratum, non ulla pati velamina possunt, 559 dura sed in terra ponunt praecordia; nec fit 560 corpus humo gelidum, sed humus de corpore fervet. 561 Nec moderator adest, inque ipsos saeva medentes 562 erumpit clades, obsuntque auctoribus artes: 563 quo propior quisque est servitque fidelius aegro, 564 in partem leti citius venit. Utque salutis 565 spes abiit finemque vident in funere morbi, 566 indulgent animis et nulla, quid utile, cura est: 567 utile enim nihil est. Passim positoque pudore 568 fontibus et fluviis puteisque capacibus haerent, 569 nec sitis est exstincta prius quam vita bibendo. 570 Inde graves multi nequeunt consurgere et ipsis	with 560 his blood, still raised himself on elbow, and 561 half mangled tried to get up from his bed; 562 with all those swords around him, he stretched out 563 his pale arms and he cried: “What will you do, 564 my daughters? What has armed you to the death 565 of your loved father?” Their wrong courage left 566 them, and their hands fell. When he would have said 567 still more, Medea cut his throat and plunged 568 his mangled body into boiling water. 569 Only because her winged dragons sailed 570 swiftly with her up to the lofty sky, 571 escaped Medea punishment for this 572 unheard of crime. 573 Her chariot sailed above 574 embowered Pelion — long the lofty home 575 of Chiron—over Othrys, and the vale 576 made famous where Cerambus met his fate. 577 Cerambus, by the aid of nymphs, from there 578 was wafted through the air on wings, when earth 579 was covered by the overwhelming sea— 580 and so escaped Deucalion's flood, uncrowned. 581 She passed by Pittane upon the left, 582 with its huge serpent-image of hard stone, 583 and also passed the grove called Ida's, where 584 the stolen bull was changed by Bacchus' power 585 into a hunted stag—in that same vale 586 Paris lies buried in the sand; and over fields 587 where Mera warning harked, Medea flew; 588 over the city of Eurypylus 589 upon the Isle of Cos, whose women wore 590 the horns of cattle when from there had gone 591 the herd of Hercules; and over Rhodes 592 beloved of Phoebus, where Telchinian tribes 593 dwelt, whose bad eyes corrupting power shot forth;— 594 Jove, utterly despising, thrust them deep 595 beneath his brother's waves; over the walls 596 of old Carthaea, where Alcidamas 597 had seen with wonder a tame dove arise 598 from his own daughter's body.
7.571	571 inmoriuntur aquis: aliquis tamen haurit et illas. 572 Tantaque sunt miseris invisi taedia lecti: 573 prosiliunt, aut si prohibent consistere vires, 574 corpora devolvunt in humum: fugiuntque penates 575 quisque suos, sua cuique domus funesta videtur,	599 And she saw 600 the lakes of Hyrie in Teumesia's Vale, 601 by swans frequented—There to satisfy 602 his love for Cycnus, Phyllius gave 603 two living vultures: shell for him subdued 604 a lion, and delivered it to him; 605 and mastered a great bull, at his command; 606 but when the wearied Phyllius refused 607 to render to his friend the valued bull. 608 Indignant,

	576 et quia causa latet, locus est in crimine parvus 577 Semianimes errare viis, dum stare valebant, 578 adspiceres, flentes alios terraque iacentes 579 lassaque versantes supremo lumina motu: 580 membraque pendentis tendunt ad sidera caeli, 581 hic illic, ubi mors deprenderat, exhalantes. 582 Quid mihi tunc animi fuit? an quod debuit esse, 583 ut vitam odissem et cuperem pars esse meorum? 584 Quo se cumque acies oculorum flexerat, illic 585 vulgus erat stratum, veluti cum putria motis 586 poma cadunt ramis agitataque ilice glandes. 587 Templa vides contra gradibus sublimia longis: 588 Iuppiter illa tenet. Quis non altaribus illis 589 inrita tura dedit? Quotiens pro coniuge coniunx, 590 pro gnato genitor dum verba precantia dicit, 591 non exoratis animam finivit in aris, 592 inque manu turis pars inconsumpta reperta est! 593 Admoti quotiens templis, dum vota sacerdos 594 concipit et fundit purum inter cornua vinum, 595 haud exspectato ceciderunt vulnere tauri! 596 Ipse ego sacra Iovi pro me patriaque tribusque 597 cum facerem natis, mugitus victima diros 598 edidit et subito conlapsa sine ictibus ullis 599 exiguo tinxit subiectos sanguine cultros. 600 Exta quoque aegra notas veri monitusque deorum	the youth said, “You shall regret 609 your hasty words;” which having said, he leaped 610 from a high precipice, as if to death; 611 but gliding through the air, on snow-white wings, 612 was changed into a swan—Dissolved in tears, 613 his mother Hyrie knew not he was saved; 614 and weeping, formed the lake that bears her name. 615 And over Pleuron, where on trembling wings 616 escaped the mother Combe from her sons, 617 Medea flew; and over the far isle 618 Calauria, sacred to Latona. —She 619 beheld the conscious fields whose lawful king, 620 together with his queen were changed to birds. 621 Upon her right Cyllene could be seen; 622 there Menephon, degraded as a beast, 623 outraged his mother. In the distance, she 624 beheld Cephisius, who lamented long 625 his hapless grandson, by Apollo changed 626 into a bloated sea-calf. And she saw 627 the house where king Eumelus mourned the death 628 of his aspiring son.—Borne on the wings
7.601	601 perdiderant: tristes penetrant ad viscera morbi. 602 Ante sacros vidi proiecta cadavera postes, 603 ante ipsas, quo mors foret invidiosior, aras. 604 Pars animam laqueo claudunt mortisque timorem 605 morte fugant ultroque vocant	629 of her enchanted dragons, she arrived 630 at Corinth, whose inhabitants, 'tis said, 631 from many mushrooms, watered by the rain 632 sprang into being. 633 There she spent some years. 634 But after the new wife had been burnt by 635 the Colchian witchcraft and two seas 636 had seen the king's own palace all aflame, 637

	venientia fata. 606 Corpora missa neci nullis de more feruntur 607 funeribus: neque enim capiebant funera portae. 608 Aut inhumata premunt terras aut dantur in altos 609 indotata rogos. Et iam reverentia nulla est, 610 deque rogis pugnant alienisque ignibus ardent. 611 Qui lacriment, desunt; indefletaeque vagantur 612 matrumque nuruumque animae iuvenumque senumque: 613 nec locus in tumulos, nec sufficit arbor in ignes. 614 Attonitus tanto miserarum turbine rerum, 615 “Iuppiter o!” dixi “si te non falsa loquuntur 616 dicta sub amplexus Aeginae Asopidos isse, 617 nec te, magne pater, nostri pudet esse parentem, 618 aut mihi redde meos aut me quoque conde sepulcro.” 619 Ille notam fulgore dedit tonitruque secundo. 620 “Accipio, sintque ista, precor, felicia mentis 621 signa tuae” dixi. “Quod das mihi, pigneror omen.” 622 Forte fuit iuxta patulis rarissima ramis 623 sacra Iovi quercus de semine Dodonaeo: 624 hic nos frugilegas adspeximus agmine longo 625 grande onus exiguo formicas ore gerentes 626 rugosoque suum servantes cortice callem. 627 Dum numerum miror, “totidem, pater optime” dixi, 628 “tu mihi da cives et inania moenia supple.” 629 Intremuit ramisque sonum sine flamine motis 630 alta dedit quercus. Pavido mihi membra timore	then, savagely she drew her sword, and bathed 638 it in the blood of her own infant sons; 639 by which atrocious act she was revenged; 640 and she, a wife and mother, fled the sword 641 of her own husband, Jason. 642 On the wings 643 of her enchanted Titan Dragons borne, 644 she made escape, securely, nor delayed 645 until she entered the defended walls 646 of great Minerva's city, at the hour 647 when aged Periphas — transformed by Jove, 648 together with his queen, on eagle wings 649 flew over its encircling walls: with whom 650 the guilty Halcyone, skimming seas 651 safely escaped, upon her balanced wings. 652 And after these events, Medea went 653 to Aegeus, king of Athens, where she found 654 protection from her enemies for all 655 this evil done. With added wickedness 656 Aegeus, after that, united her 657 to him in marriage.—
7.631	631 horruerant, stabantque comae. Tamen oscula terrae 632 roboribusque dedi; nec me sperare fatebar: 633 sperabam tamen atque animo mea vota fovebam. 634 Nox subit, et curis exercita corpora	658 All unknown to him 659 came Theseus to his kingly court.—Before 660 the time his valor had established peace 661 on all the isthmus, raved by dual seas. 662 Medea, seeking his destruction, brewed 663 the juice of aconite, infesting shores 664 of Scythia, somnus 635 occupat: ante oculos eadem mihi quercus adesse 636 et ramos totidem totidemque animalia ramis 637 ferre suis visa est pariterque tremiscere motu 638 graniferumque agmen subiectis spargere in arvis; 639 crescere quod subito et maius maiusque videri 640 ac se tollere humo rectoque adsistere trunco 641 et maciem numerumque pedum nigrumque colorem 642 ponere et humanam membris inducere formam. 643 Somnus abit: damno vigilans mea visa querorque 644 in superis opis esse nihil. At in aedibus ingens 645 murmur erat, vocesque hominum exaudire videbar 646 iam mihi desuetas. Dum suspicor has quoque somni 647 esse, venit Telamon properus, foribusque reclusis 648 “speque fideque, pater” dixit, “maiora videbis: 649 egredere!” Egredior, qualesque in imagine somni 650 visus eram vidisse viros, ex ordine tales 651 adspicio noscoque. Adeunt regemque salutant. 652 Vota Iovi solvo populisque recentibus urbem 653 partior et vacuos priscis cultoribus agros, 654 Myrmidonasque voco, nec origine nomina fraudo. 655 Corpora vidisti; mores quos ante gerebant, 656 nunc quoque habent: parcum genus est patiensque laborum 657 quaesitique tenax et quod quaesita reservet. 658 Hi te ad bella pares annis animisque sequentur, 659 cum primum qui te feliciter attulit, eurus” 660 (eurus enim attulerat) “fuerit mutatus in austros.”	where, 'tis fabled, the plant grew 665 on soil infected by Cerberian teeth. 666 There is a gloomy entrance to a cave, 667 that follows a declivitous descent: 668 there Hercules with chains of adamant 669 dragged from the dreary edge of Tartarus 670 that monster-watch-dog, Cerberus, which, vain 671 opposing, turned his eyes aslant from light— 672 from dazzling day. Delirious, enraged, 673 that monster shook the air with triple howls; 674 and, frothing, sprinkled as it raved, the fields, 675 once green—with spewing of white poison-foam. 676 And this, converted into plants, sucked up 677 a deadly venom with the nourishment 678 of former soils,—from which productive grew 679 upon the rock, thus formed, the noxious plant; 680 by rustics, from that cause, named aconite. 681 Medea worked on Aegeus to present 682 his own son, Theseus, with a deadly cup 683 of aconite; prevailing by her art 684 so that he deemed his son an enemy. 685 Theseus unwittingly received the cup, 686 but just before he touched it to his lips, 687 his father recognized the sword he wore,

7.661	661 Talibus atque aliis longum sermonibus illi 662 implevere diem. Lucis pars ultima mensae 663 est data, nox somnis. Iubar aureus	688 for, graven on its ivory hilt was wrought 689 a known device—the token of his race. 690 Astonished, Aegeus struck the poison-cup 691 from his devoted son's confiding lips. 692 Medea

	extulerat Sol 664 (flabat adhuc eurus redituraqua vela tenebat): 665 ad Cephalum Pallante sati, cui grandior aetas, 666 ad regem Cephalus simul et Pallante creati 667 conveniunt. Sed adhuc regem sopor altus habebat. 668 Excipit Aeacides illos in limine Phocus: 669 nam Telamon fraterque viros ad bella legebant. 670 Phocus in interius spatium pulchrosque recessus 671 Cecropidas ducit, cum quis simul ipse resedit. 672 Adspicit Aeoliden ignota ex arbore factum 673 ferre manu iaculum, cuius fuit aurea cuspis. 674 Pauca prius mediis sermonibus ille locutus 675 “sum nemorum studiosus” ait “caedisque ferinae: 676 qua tamen e silva teneas hastile recisum, 677 iamdudum dubito. Certe si fraxinus esset, 678 fulva colore foret; si cornus, nodus inesset. 679 Unde sit, ignoro. Sed non formosius isto 680 viderunt oculi telum iaculabile nostri.” 681 Excipit Actaeis e fratribus alter, et “usum 682 maiorem specie mirabere” dixit “in isto. 683 Consequitur quodcumque petit, fortunaque missum 684 non regit, et revolat nullo referente cruentum.” 685 Tum vero iuvenis Nereius omnia quaerit, 686 cur sit et unde datum, quis tanti muneris auctor. 687 Quae petit, ille refert. Sed enim (narrare pudori est !), 688 qua tulerit mercede silet; tactusque dolore 689 coniugis amissae lacrimis ita fatur obortis: 690 “Hoc me, nate dea, (quis possit credere?) telum	suddenly escaped from death, 693 in a dark whirlwind her witch-singing raised. 694 Recoiling from such utter wickedness, 695 rejoicing that his son escaped from death, 696 the grateful father kindled altar-fires, 697 and gave rich treasure to the living Gods. — 698 He slaughtered scores of oxen, decked with flowers 699 and gilded horns. The sun has never shone 700 upon a day more famous in that land, 701 for all the elders and the common folk 702 united in festivities,—with wine 703 inspiring wit and song;—“O you,” they sang, 704 “Immortal Theseus, victory was yours! 705 Did you not slaughter the huge bull of Crete? 706 “Yes, you did slay the boar of Cromyon — 707 where now the peasant unmolested plows; 708 “And Periphetes, wielder of the club, 709 was worsted when he struggled with your strength; 710 “And fierce Procrustes, matched with you 711 beside the rapid river, met his death; 712 “And even Cercyon, in Eleusis lost 713 his wicked life—inferior to your might; 714 “And Sinis, a monstrosity of strength, 715 who bent the trunks of trees, and used his might 716 “Against the world for everything that's wrong. 717 For evil, he would force down to the earth, 7.691	691 flere facit facietque diu, si vivere nobis 692 fata diu dederint. Hoc me cum	718 “Pine tops to shoot men's bodies through the air. 719 Even the road to Megara is safe, 720 “For you did hurl

	coniuge cara 693 perdidit: hoc utinam caruissem munere semper! 694 Procris erat (si forte magis pervenit ad aures 695 Orithyia tuas, raptae soror Orithyiae), 696 si faciem moresque velis conferre duarum, 697 dignior ipsa rapi. Pater hanc mihi iunxit Erechtheus, 698 hanc mihi iunxit amor. Felix dicebar eramque. 699 Non ita dis visum est, aut nunc quoque forsitan essem. 700 Alter agebatur post sacra iugalia mensis, 701 cum me cornigeris tendentem retia cervis 702 vertice de summo semper florentis Hymetti 703 lutea mane videt pulsis Aurora tenebris 704 invitumque rapit. Liceat mihi vera referre 705 pace deae. Quod sit roseo spectabilis ore, 706 quod teneat lucis, teneat confinia noctis, 707 nectareis quod alatur aquis, ego — Procrin amabam: 708 pectore Procris erat, Procris mihi semper in ore. 709 Sacra tori coitusque novos thalamosque recentes 710 primaque deserti referebam foedera lecti. 711 Mota dea est et “siste tuas, ingrate, querellas: 712 Procrin habe!” dixit. “Quodsi mea provida mens est, 713 non habuisse voles.” Meque illi irata remisit. 714 Dum redeo mecumque deae memorata retracto, 715 esse metus coepit, ne iura iugalia coniunx 716 non bene servasset. Facies aetasque iubebat 717 credere adulterium; prohibebant credere mores. 718 Sed tamen afueram, sed et haec erat unde redibam, 719 criminis exemplum, sed cuncta timemus amantes. 720 Quaerere quod doleam statuo donisque pudicam	the robber Scyron,—sheer— 721 over the cliff. Both land and sea denied 722 “His bones a resting place—as tossed about 723 they changed into the cliffs that bear his name. 724 “How can we tell the number of your deeds,— 725 deeds glorious, that now exceed your years! 726 “For you, brave hero, we give public thanks 727 and prayers; to you we drain our cups of wine!” 728 And all the palace rings with happy songs, 729 and with the grateful prayers of all the people. 730 And sorrow in that city is not known.—
7.721	721 sollicitare fidem. Favet huic Aurora	731 But pleasure always is alloyed with

	timori 722 inmutatque meam (videor sensisse) figuram. 723 Palladias ineo non cognoscendus Athenas 724 ingrediorque domum. Culpa domus ipsa carebat 725 castaque signa dabat dominoque erat anxia rapto: 726 vix aditus per mille dolos ad Erechthida factus. 727 Ut vidi, obstipui meditataque paene reliqui 728 temptamenta fide. Male me, quin vera faterer, 729 continui, male, quin, ut oportuit, oscula ferrem. 730 Tristis erat (sed nulla tamen formosior illa 731 esse potest tristi) desiderioque calebat 732 coniugis abrepti. Tu conlige, qualis in illa, 733 Phoce, decor fuerit, quam sic dolor ipse decebat. 734 Quid referam, quotiens temptamina nostra pudici 735 reppulerint mores, quotiens “ego” dixerit “uni 736 servor; ubicumque est, uni mea gaudia servo!” 737 Cui non ista fide satis experientia sano 738 magna foret? Non sum contentus et in mea pugno 739 vulnera, dum census dare me pro nocte loquendo 740 muneraque augendo tandem dubitare coegi. 741 Exclamo: “Male (fictor adest !), male fictus adulter 742 verus eram coniunx! me, perfida, teste teneris!” 743 Illa nihil. Tacito tantummodo victa pudore 744 insidiosa malo cum coniuge limina fugit; 745 offensaque mei genus omne perosa virorum 746 montibus errabat, studiis operata Dianae. 747 Tum mihi deserto violentior ignis ad ossa 748 pervenit. Orabam veniam et peccasse fatebar 749 et potuisse datis simili succumbere culpae 750 me quoque muneribus, si munera	grief, 732 and sorrow mingles in the joyous hour. 733 While the king Aegeus and his son rejoiced, 734 Minos prepared for war. He was invincible 735 in men and ships—and stronger in his rage 736 to wreak due vengeance on the king who slew 737 his son Androgeus. But first he sought 738 some friends to aid his warfare; and he scoured 739 the sea with a swift fleet—which was his strength. 740 Anaphe and Astypalaea, both 741 agreed to join his cause—the first one moved 742 by promises, the second by his threats. 743 Level Myconus and the chalky fields 744 of Cimolus agreed to aid, and Syros 745 covered with wild thyme, level Seriphos, 746 Paros of marble cliffs, and that place which 747 Arne the impious Siphnian had betrayed, 748 who having got the gold which in her greed 749 she had demanded, was changed to a bird 750 which ever since that day imagines gold 751 its chief delight—a black-foot black-winged daw. 752 But Oliarus, Didymae, and Tenos, 753 Gyaros, Andros, and Peparethos 754 rich in its glossy olives, gave no aid 755 to the strong Cretan fleet. Sailing from them 756 Minos went to Oenopia, known realm 757 of the Aeacidae.—Men of old time 758 had called the place Oenopia; but Aeacus 759 styled it Aegina from his mother's name. 760 At his approach an eager rabble rushed tanta darentur.

7.751	751 Haec mihi confesso, laesum prius ulta pudorem, 752 redditur et dulces concorditer exigit annos. 753 Dat mihi praeterea, tamquam se parva dedisset 754 dona, canem munus, quem cum sua traderet illi 755 Cynthia, “currendo superabit” dixerat “omnes.” 756 Dat simul et iaculum, manibus quod (cernis) habemus. 757 Muneris alterius quae sit fortuna, requiris? 758 Accipe mirandum: novitate movebere facti. 759 Carmina Laiades non intellecta priorum 760 solverat ingeniis, et praecipitata iacebat 761 inmemor ambagum vates obscura suarum. 762 763 Protinus Aoniis inmittitur altera Thebis 764 pestis, et exitio multi pecorumque suoque 765 rurigenae pavere feram. Vicina iuventus 766 venimus et latos indagine cinximus agros. 767 Illa levi velox superabat retia saltu 768 summaque transibat positarum lina plagarum. 769 Copula detrahitur canibus: quos illa sequentes 770 effugit et celeri non segnior alite ludit. 771 Poscor et ipse meum consensu Laelapa magno 772 (muneris hoc nomen). Iamdudum vincula pugnat 773 exuere ipse sibi colloque morantia tendit. 774 Vix bene missus erat, nec iam poteramus, ubi esset, 775 scire. Pedum calidus vestigia pulvis habebat, 776 ipse oculis ereptus erat. Non ocior illo 777 hasta nec exutae contorto verbere glandes, 778 nec Gortyniaco calamus levis exit ab arcu. 779 Collis apex medii subiectis inminet arvis: 780 tollor eo capioque novi spectacula	761 resolved to see and know so great a man. 762 Telamon met him, and his brother, 763 younger than Telamon, and Phocus who 764 was third in age. Even Aeacus appeared, 765 slow with the weight of years, and asked him what 766 could be a reason for his coming there. 767 The ruler of a hundred cities, sighed, 768 as he beheld the sons of Aeacus, 769 for they reminded him of his lost son;— 770 and heavy with his sorrow, he replied: 771 “I come imploring you to take up arms, 772 and aid me in the war against my foes; 773 for I must give that comfort to the shade 774 of my misfortuned son— whose blood they shed.” 775 But Aeacus replied to Minos, “Nay, 776 it is a vain request you make, for we 777 are bound in strict alliance to the land 778 and people of Cecropia.” 779 Full of rage, 780 because he was denied, the king of Crete, 781 Minos, as he departed from their shores 782 replied, “Let such a treaty be your bane.” 783 And he departed with his crafty threat, 784 believing it expedient not to waste 785 his power in wars until the proper time. 786 Before the ships of Crete had disappeared, 787 before the mist and blue of waves concealed 788 their fading outlines from the anxious throng 789 which gathered on Oenopian shores, a ship 790 of Athens covered with wide sails appeared,

	cursus,
7.781	781 quo modo deprendi, modo se subducere ab ipso 782 vulnere visa fera est. Nec limite callida recto 783 in spatiumque fugit, sed decipit ora sequentis 784 et redit in gyrum, ne sit suus impetus hosti. 785 Inminet hic sequiturque parem similisque tenenti 786 non tenet et vanos exercet in aera morsus. 787 Ad iaculi vertebar opem. Quod dextera librat 788 dum mea, dum digitos amentis addere tempto, 789 lumina deflexi. Revocataque rursus eodem 790 rettuleram: in medio (mirum) duo marmora campo 791 adspicio: fugere hoc, illud captare putares. 792 Scilicet invictos ambo certamine cursus 793 esse deus voluit, siquis deus adfuit illis.” 794 Hactenus, et tacuit. “Iaculo quod crimen in ipso est?” 795 Phocus ait. Iaculi sic crimina reddidit ille: 796 “Gaudia principium nostri sunt, Phoce, doloris: 797 illa prius referam. Iuvat o meminisse beati 798 temporis, Aeacida, quo primos rite per annos 799 coniuge eram felix, felix erat illa marito. 800 Mutua cura duos et amor socialis habebat; 801 nec Iovis illa meo thalamos praeferret amori, 802 nec, me quae caperet, non si Venus ipsa veniret, 803 ulla erat: aequales urebant pectora flammae. 804 Sole fere radiis feriente cacumina primis 805 venatum in silvas iuvenaliter ire solebam. 806 Nec mecum famuli nec equi nec naribus acres 807 ire canes, nec lina sequi nodosa solebant: 808 tutus eram iaculo. Sed cum satiata ferinae 809 dextera caedis erat, repetebam	791 and anchored safely by their friendly shore; 792 and, presently, the mighty Cephalus, 793 well known through all that nation for his deeds, 794 addressed them as he landed, and declared 795 the good will of his people. Him the sons 796 of Aeacus remembered well, although 797 they had not seen him for some untold years. 798 They led him to their father's welcome home; 799 and with him, also, his two comrades went, 800 Clytus and Butes. 801 Center of all eyes, 802 the hero still retained his charm, 803 the customary greetings were exchanged, 804 the graceful hero, bearing in his hands 805 a branch of olive from his native soil, 806 delivered the Athenian message, which 807 requested aid and offered for their thought 808 the treaty and the ancestral league between 809 their nations. And he added, Minos sought 810 not only conquest of the Athenian state 811 but sovereignty of all the states of Greece. 812 And when this eloquence had shown his cause; 813 with left hand on his gleaming sceptre's hilt, 814 King Aeacus exclaimed: “Ask not our aid, 815 but take it, Athens; and count boldly yours 816 all of the force this island holds, and all 817 things which the state of my affairs supplies. 818 My strength for this war is not light, and I 819 have many soldiers for myself and for 820 my enemy. Thanks to the Gods! the times frigus et umbras 810 et quae de gelidis exibat vallibus aura.

7.811	811 Aura petebatur medio mihi lenis in aestu, 812 auram exspectabam, requies erat illa labori. 813 “Aura” (recordor enim) “venias” cantare solebam, 814 “meque iuves intresque sinus, gratissima, nostros, 815 utque facis, relevare velis, quibus urimur, aestus.” 816 Forsitan addiderim (sic me mea fata trahebant) 817 blanditias plures et “tu mihi magna voluptas,” 818 dicere sim solitus, “tu me reficisque fovesque, 819 tu facis, ut silvas, ut amem loca sola; meoque 820 spiritus iste tuus semper captatur ab ore.” 821 Vocibus ambiguis deceptam praebuit aurem 822 nescio quis, nomenque aurae tam saepe vocatum 823 esse putat nymphae: nympham mihi credit amari. 824 Criminis extemplo ficti temerarius index 825 Procrin adit linguaque refert audita susurra. 826 Credula res amor est: subito conlapsa dolore, 827 ut mihi narratur, cecidit; longoque refecta 828 tempore se miseram, se fati dixit iniqui, 829 deque fide questa est; et crimine concita vano 830 quod nihil est, metuit, metuit sine corpore nomen 831 et dolet infelix veluti de paelice vera. 832 Saepe tamen dubitat speratque miserrima falli 833 indicioque fidem negat et, nisi viderit ipsa, 834 damnatura sui non est delicta mariti. 835 Postera depulerant Aurorae lumina noctem: 836 egredior silvamque peto, victorque per herbas 837 “Aura veni” dixi, “nostroque medere labori.” 838 Et subito gemitus inter mea verba	821 are happy, giving no excuse for my 822 refusal.” “May it prove so,” Cephalus 823 replied, “and may your city multiply 824 in men: just now as I was landing, I 825 rejoiced to meet youths, fair and matched in age. 826 And yet I miss among them many whom 827 I saw before when last I visited 828 your city.” Aeacus then groaned and with 829 sad voice replied: “With weeping we began, 830 but better fortune followed. Would that I 831 could tell the last of it, and not the first! 832 Giving my heart command that simple words 833 and briefly spoken may not long detain. 834 Those happy youths who waited at your need, 835 who smiled upon you and for whom you ask, 836 because their absence grieves your noble mind, 837 they've perished! and their bleaching bones 838 or scattered ashes, only may remain, 839 sad remnants, impotent, of vanished power, 840 so recently my hope and my resource. 841 “Because this island bears a rival's name, 842 a deadly pestilence was visited 843 on my confiding people, through the rage 844 of jealous Juno flaming for revenge. 845 This great calamity at first appeared 846 a natural disease—but soon its power 847 baffled our utmost efforts. Medicines 848 availing not, a reign of terror swept 849 from shore to shore and fearful havoc raged. 850 “Thick darkness, gathered from descending skies, videbar 839 nescio quos audisse: “veni” tamen “optima!” dicens 840 fronde levem rursus strepitum faciente caduca

7.841	841 sum ratus esse feram telumque volatile misi. 842 Procris erat; medioque tenens in pectore vulnus 843 “ei mihi” conclamat. Vox est ubi cognita fidae 844 coniugis, ad vocem praeceps amensque cucurri. 845 Semianimem et sparsas foedantem sanguine vestes 846 et sua (me miserum!) de vulnere dona trahentem 847 invenio, corpusque meo mihi carius ulnis 848 mollibus attollo scissaque a pectore veste 849 vulnera saeva ligo conorque inhibere cruorem, 850 neu me morte sua sceleratum deserat, oro. 851 Viribus illa carens et iam moribunda coegit 852 haec se pauca loqui: “Per nostri foedera lecti 853 perque deos supplex oro superosque meosque, 854 per siquid merui de te bene perque manentem 855 nunc quoque, cum pereo, causam mihi mortis, amorem, 856 ne thalamis Auram patiare innubere nostris.” 857 Dixit, et errorem tum denique nominis esse 858 et sensi et docui. Sed quid docuisse iuvabat? 859 Labitur, et parvae fugiunt cum sanguine vires. 860 Dumque aliquid spectare potest, me spectat et in me 861 infelicem animam nostroque exhalat in ore; 862 sed vultu meliore mori secura videtur.” 863 Flentibus haec lacrimans heros memorabat: et ecce 864 Aeacus ingreditur duplici cum prole novoque 865 milite, quem Cephalus cum fortibus accipit armis.	851 enveloped our devoted land with heat 852 and languid sickness, for the space of full 853 four moons.—Four times the Moon increased her size. 854 Hot south winds blew with pestilential breath 855 upon us. At the same time the diseased 856 infection reached our needed springs and pools, 857 thousands of serpents crawling over our 858 deserted fields, defiled our rivers with 859 their poison. The swift power of the disease 860 at first was limited to death of dogs 861 and birds and cattle, or among wild beasts. 862 The luckless plowman marvels when he sees 863 his strong bulls fall while at their task 864 and sink down in the furrow. Woolly flocks 865 bleat feebly while their wool falls off without 866 a cause, and while their bodies pine away. 867 The prized horse of high courage, and of great 868 renown when on the race-course, has now lost 869 victorious spirit, and forgetting his 870 remembered glory groans in his shut stall, 871 doomed for inglorious death. The boar forgets 872 to rage, the stag to trust his speed; and even 873 the famished bear to fight the stronger herd. 874 “Death seizes on the vitals of all life; 875 and in the woods, and in the fields and roads 876 the loathsome bodies of the dead corrupt 877 the heavy-hanging air. Even the dogs, 878 the vultures and the wolves refuse to touch 879 the putrid flesh, there in the sultry sun 880 rotting upon the earth; emitting steams,
8.1	1 Iam nitidum retegente diem noctisque fugante	1 Now Lucifer unveiled the glorious day, 2 and as the session of the night

	2 tempora Lucifero cadit eurus, et umida surgunt 3 nubila: dant placidi cursum redeuntibus austri 4 Aeacidis Cephaloque, quibus feliciter acti 5 ante exspectatum portus tenuere petitos. 6 Interea Minos Lelegeia litora vastat 7 praetemptatque sui vires Mavortis in urbe 8 Alcathoi, quam Nisus habet, cui splendidus ostro 9 inter honoratos medioque in vertice canos 10 crinis inhaerebat, magni fiducia regni. 11 Sexta resurgebant orientis cornua lunae, 12 et pendebat adhuc belli fortuna: diuque 13 inter utrumque volat dubiis Victoria pennis. 14 Regia turris erat vocalibus addita muris, 15 in quibus auratam proles Letoia fertur 16 deposuisse lyram: saxo sonus eius inhaesit. 17 Saepe illuc solita est ascendere filia Nisi 18 et petere exiguo resonantia saxa lapillo, 19 tum cum pax esset: bello quoque saepe solebat 20 spectare ex illa rigidi certamina Martis. 21 Iamque mora belli procerum quoque nomina norat 22 armaque equosque habitusque Cydonaeasque pharetras. 23 Noverat ante alios faciem ducis Europaei, 24 plus etiam, quam nosse sat est. Hac iudice Minos, 25 seu caput abdiderat cristata casside pennis, 26 in galea formosus erat; seu sumpserat aere 27 fulgentem clipeum, clipeum sumpsisse decebat. 28 Torserat adductis hastilia lenta lacertis: 29 laudabat virgo iunctam cum viribus artem. 30 Imposito calamo patulos sinuaverat arcus:	dissolved, 3 the cool east wind declined, and vapors wreathed 4 the moistened valleys. Veering to the south 5 the welcome wind gave passage to the sons 6 of Aeacus, and wafted Cephalus 7 on his returning way, propitious; where 8 before the wonted hour, they entered port. 9 King Minos, while the fair wind moved their ship, 10 was laying waste the land of Megara. 11 He gathered a great army round the walls 12 built by Alcathous, where reigned in splendor 13 King Nisus—mighty and renowned in war— 14 upon the center of whose hoary head 15 a lock of purple hair was growing.—Its 16 proved virtue gave protection to his throne. 17 Six times the horns of rising Phoebe grew, 18 and still the changing fortune of the war 19 was in suspense; so, Victory day by day 20 between them hovered on uncertain wings. 21 Within that city was a regal tower 22 on tuneful walls; where once Apollo laid 23 his golden harp; and in the throbbing stone 24 the sounds remained. And there, in times of peace 25 the daughter of king Nisus loved to mount 26 the walls and strike the sounding stone with pebbles: 27 so, when the war began, she often viewed 28 the dreadful contest from that height; 29 until, so long the hostile camp remained, 30 she had become acquainted with the names, 8.31	31 sic Phoebum sumptis iurabat stare	31 and knew the habits, horses and the

	sagittis. 32 Cum vero faciem dempto nudaverat aere 33 purpureusque albi stratis insignia pictis 34 terga premebat equi spumantiaque ora regebat, 35 vix sua, vix sanae virgo Niseia compos 36 mentis erat. Felix iaculum, quod tangeret ille, 37 quaeque manu premeret, felicia frena vocabat. 38 Impetus est illi, liceat modo, ferre per agmen 39 virgineos hostile gradus, est impetus illi 40 turribus e summis in Gnosia mittere corpus 41 castra, vel aeratas hosti recludere portas, 42 vel siquid Minos aliud velit. Utque sedebat 43 candida Dictaei spectans tentoria regis, 44 “laeter,” ait “doleamne geri lacrimabile bellum, 45 in dubio est. Doleo, quod Minos hostis amanti est: 46 sed nisi bella forent, numquam mihi cognitus esset. 47 Me tamen accepta poterat deponere bellum 48 obside, me comitem, me pacis pignus haberet. 49 Si quae te peperit, talis, pulcherrime rerum, 50 qualis es ipsa fuit, merito deus arsit in illa. 51 O ego ter felix, si pennis lapsa per auras 52 Gnosiaci possem castris insistere regis 53 fassaque me flammasque meas, qua dote, rogarem, 54 vellet emi! tantum patrias ne posceret arces. 55 Nam pereant potius sperata cubilia, quam sim 56 proditione potens! — Quamvis saepe utile vinci 57 victoris placidi fecit clementia multis: 58 iusta gerit certe pro nato bella perempto 59 et causaque valet causamque tenentibus armis, 60 et, puto, vincemur. Quis enim manet	arms 32 of many a chief, and could discern the signs 33 of their Cydonean quivers. 34 More than all, 35 the features of King Minos were engraved 36 upon the tablets of her mind. And when 37 he wore his helmet, crested with gay plumes, 38 she deemed it glorious; when he held his shield 39 shining with gold, no other seemed so grand; 40 and when he poised to hurl the tough spear home, 41 she praised his skill and strength; and when he bent 42 his curving bow with arrow on the cord, 43 she pictured him as Phoebus taking aim,— 44 but when, arrayed in purple, and upon 45 the back of his white war horse, proudly decked 46 with richly broidered housings, he reined in 47 the nervous steed, and took his helmet off, 48 showing his fearless features, then the maid, 49 daughter of Nisus, could control herself 50 no longer; and a frenzy seized her mind. 51 She called the javelin happy which he touched, 52 and blessed were the reins within his hand. 53 She had an impulse to direct her steps, 54 a tender virgin, through the hostile ranks, 55 or cast her body from the topmost towers 56 into the Gnossian camp. She had a wild 57 desire to open to the enemy 58 the heavy brass-bound gates, or anything 59 that Minos could desire. 60 And as she sat

	exitus urbem,
8.61	61 cum suus haec illi reserabit moenia Mavors 62 et non noster amor? Melius sine caede moraque 63 impensaque sui poterit superare cruoris. 64 Non metuam certe, ne quis tua pectora, Minos, 65 vulneret imprudens. Quis enim tam durus, ut in te 66 dirigere inmitem non inscius audeat hastam? 67 Coepta placent, et stat sententia tradere mecum 68 dotalem patriam finemque imponere bello. 69 Verum velle parum est! Aditus custodia servat 70 claustraque portarum genitor tenet: hunc ego solum 71 infelix timeo, solus mea vota moratur. 72 Di facerent, sine patre forem! — Sibi quisque profecto 73 est deus: ignavis precibus Fortuna repugnat. 74 Altera iamdudum succensa cupidine tanto 75 perdere gauderet quodcumque obstaret amori. 76 Et cur ulla foret me fortior? Ire per ignes 77 et gladios ausim. Nec in hoc tamen ignibus ullis 78 aut gladiis opus est: opus est mihi crine paterno. 79 Illa mihi est auro pretiosior, illa beatam 80 purpura me votique mei factura potentem.” 81 Talia dicenti curarum maxima nutrix 82 nox intervenit, tenebrisque audacia crevit. 83 Prima quies aderat, qua curis fessa diurnis 84 pectora somnus habet: thalamos taciturna paternos 85 intrat et (heu facinus!) fatali nata parentem 86 crine suum spoliat praedaque potita nefanda 87 88 per medios hostes (meriti fiducia tanta est) 89 pervenit ad regem. Quem sic adfata paventem est: 90 “Suasit amor facinus. Proles ego	61 beholding the white tents, she cried, “Alas! 62 Should I rejoice or grieve to see this war? 63 I grieve that Minos is the enemy 64 of her who loves him; but unless the war 65 had brought him, how could he be known to me? 66 But should he take me for a hostage? That 67 might end the war—a pledge of peace, he might 68 keep me for his companion. 69 “O, supreme 70 of mankind! she who bore you must have been 71 as beautiful as you are; ample cause 72 for Jove to lose his heart. 73 “O, happy hour! 74 If moving upon wings through yielding air, 75 I could alight within the hostile camp 76 in front of Minos, and declare to him 77 my name and passion! 78 “Then would I implore 79 what dowry he could wish, and would provide 80 whatever he might ask, except alone 81 the city of my father. Perish all 82 my secret hopes before one act of mine 83 should offer treason to accomplish it. 84 And yet, the kindness of a conqueror 85 has often proved a blessing, manifest 86 to those who were defeated. Certainly 87 the war he carries on is justified 88 by his slain son. 89 “He is a mighty king, 90 thrice strengthened in his cause. Undoubtedly

	regia Nisi
8.91	91 Scylla tibi trado patriaeque meosque penates. 92 Praemia nulla peto nisi te. Cape pignus amoris 93 purpureum crinem, nec me nunc tradere crinem, 94 sed patrium tibi crede caput.” Sceleratаque dextra 95 munera porrexit. Minos porrecta refugit 96 turbatusque novi respondit imagine facti: 97 “Di te summoveant, o nostri infamia saecli, 98 orbe suo, tellusque tibi pontusque negetur. 99 Certe ego non patiar Iovis incunabula, Creten, 100 qui meus est orbis, tantum contingere monstrum.” 101 Dixit, et ut leges captis iustissimus auctor 102 hostibus imposuit, classis retinacula solvi 103 iussit et aeratas impelli remige puppes. 104 Scylla freto postquam deductas nare carinas 105 nec praestare ducem sceleris sibi praemia vidit, 106 consumptis precibus violentam transit in iram, 107 intendensque manus, passis furibunda capillis, 108 “quo fugis” exclamat, “meritorum auctore relicta, 109 o patriae praelate meae, praelate parenti? 110 Quo fugis, inmitis? cuius victoria nostrum 111 et scelus et meritum est. Nec te data munera, nec te 112 noster amor movit, nec quod spes omnis in unum 113 te mea congesta est? Nam quo deserta revertar? 114 In patriam? Superata iacet. Sed finge manere: 115 proditione mea clausa est mihi. Patris ad ora? 116 Quem tibi donavi! Cives odere merentem, 117 finitimi exemplum metuunt: exponimur orbae, 118 terrarum nobis ut Crete sola pateret. 119 Hac quoque si prohibes et nos,	91 we shall be conquered, and, if such a fate 92 awaits our city, why should he by force 93 instead of my consuming love, prevail 94 to open the strong gates? Without delay 95 and dreadful slaughter, it is best for him 96 to conquer and decide this savage war. 97 “Ah, Minos, how I fear the bitter fate 98 should any warrior hurl his cruel spear 99 and pierce you by mischance, for surely none 100 can be so hardened to transfix your breast 101 with purpose known.” 102 Oh, let her love prevail 103 to open for his army the great gates. 104 Only the thought of it, has filled her soul; 105 she is determined to deliver up 106 her country as a dowry with herself, 107 and so decide the war! But what avails 108 this idle talk. 109 “A guard surrounds the gates, 110 my father keeps the keys, and he alone 111 is my obstruction, and the innocent 112 account of my despair. Would to the Gods 113 I had no father! Is not man the God 114 of his own fortune, though his idle prayers 115 avail not to compel his destiny? 116 “Another woman crazed with passionate desires, 117 which now inflame me, would not hesitate, 118 but with a fierce abandon would destroy 119 whatever checked her passion. Who is there 120 with love to equal mine? I dare to go ingrate, relinquis, 120 non genetrix Europa tibi ea, sed inhospita Syrtis, 8.121	121 Armeniae tigres austroque agitata Charybdis. 122 Nec Iove tu natus, nec mater imagine tauri 123 ducta tua est (generis falsa est ea fabula !): verus 124 et ferus et captus nullius amore iuvencae, 125 qui te progenuit, taurus fuit. Exige poenas, 126 Nise pater! gaudete malis, modo prodita, nostris 127 moenia! nam fateor, merui et sum digna perire. 128 Sed tamen ex illis aliquis, quos impia laesi, 129 me perimat. Cur, qui vicisti crimine nostro, 130 insequeris crimen? Scelus hoc patriaeque patrique, 131 officium tibi sit. Te vere coniuge digna est, 132 quae torvum ligno decepit adultera taurum 133 discordemque utero fetum tulit. Ecquid ad aures 134 perveniunt mea dicta tuas? An inania venti 135 verba ferunt idemque tuas, ingrate, carinas? 136 Iam iam Pasiphaen non est mirabile taurum 137 praeposuisse tibi: tu plus feritatis habebas. 138 Me miseram! properare iubet, divulsaque remis 139 unda sonat; mecumque simul mea terra recedit. 140 Nil agis, o frustra meritorum oblite meorum: 141 insequar invitum, puppimque amplexa recurvam 142 per freta longa trahar.” Vix dixerat, insilit undis 143 consequiturque rates, faciente cupidine vires, 144 Gnosiacaeque haeret comes invidiosa carinae. 145 Quam pater ut vidit (nam iam pendebat in aura 146 et modo factus erat fulvis haliaeetus alis), 147 ibat, ut haerentem rostro laceraret adunco. 148 Illa metu puppim dimisit, et aura	121 through flames and swords; but swords and flames 122 are not now needed, for I only need 123 my royal father's lock of purple hair. 124 More precious than fine gold, it has a power 125 to give my heart all that it may desire.” 126 While Scylla said this, night that heals our cares 127 came on, and she grew bolder in the dark. 128 And now it is the late and silent hour 129 when slumber takes possession of the breast. 130 Outwearied with the cares of busy day; 131 then as her father slept, with stealthy tread 132 she entered his abode, and there despoiled, 133 and clipped his fatal lock of purple hair. 134 Concealing in her bosom the sad prize 135 of crime degenerate, she at once went forth 136 a gate unguarded, and with shameless haste 137 sped through the hostile army to the tent 138 of Minos, whom, astonished, she addressed: 139 “Only my love has led me to this deed. 140 The daughter of King Nisus, I am called 141 the maiden Scylla. Unto you I come 142 and offer up a power that will prevail 143 against my country, and I stipulate 144 no recompense except yourself. Take then 145 this purple hair, a token of my love.— 146 Deem it not lightly as a lock of hair 147 held idly forth to you; it is in truth 148 my father's life.” And as she spoke 149 she held out in her guilty hand the prize, 150 and begged him to accept it with her love. 151 Shocked at the thought of such a heinous crime, 152 Minos refused, and said, “O execrable thing! 153 Despised abomination of our time! 154 May all the Gods forever banish you 155 from their wide universe, and may the earth

	cadentem 149 sustinuisse levis, ne tangeret aequora, visa est. 150 Pluma fuit: plumis in avem mutata vocatur
8.151	151 ciris, et a tonso est hoc nomen adepta capillo. 152 Vota Iovi Minos taurorum corpora centum 153 solvit, ut egressus ratibus Curetida terram 154 contigit, spoliis decorata est regia fixis. 155 Creverat opprobrium generis, foedumque patebat 156 matris adulterium monstri novitate biformis. 157 Destinat hunc Minos thalamo removere pudorem 158 multiplicique domo caecisque includere tectis. 159 Daedalus ingenio fabrae celeberrimus artis 160 ponit opus turbatque notas et lumina flexu 161 ducit in errorem variarum ambage viarum. 162 Non secus ac liquidis Phrygius Maeandrus in undis 163 ludit et ambiguo lapsu refluitque fluitque 164 occurrensque sibi venturas adspicit undas, 165 et nunc ad fontes, nunc ad mare versus apertum 166 incertas exercet aquas: ita Daedalus implet 167 innumeras errore vias. Vixque ipse reverti 168 ad limen potuit: tanta est fallacia tecti. 169 Quo postquam geminam tauri iuvenisque figuram 170 clausit, et Actaeo bis pastum sanguine monstrum 171 tertia sors annis domuit repetita novenis, 172 utque ope virginea nullis iterata priorum 173 ianua difficilis filo est inventa relecto, 174 protinus Aegides rapta Minoide Diam 175 vela dedit comitemque suam crudelis in illo 176 litore destituit. Desertae et multa querenti 177 amplexus et opem Liber tulit;	156 and the deep ocean be denied to you! 157 So great a monster shall not be allowed 158 to desecrate the sacred Isle of Crete, 159 where Jupiter was born.” So Minos spoke. 160 Nevertheless he conquered Megara, 161 (so aided by the damsel's wicked deed) 162 and as a just and mighty king imposed 163 his own conditions on the vanquished land. 164 He ordered his great fleet to tarry not; 165 the hawsers were let loose, and the long oars 166 quickly propelled his brazen-pointed ships.— 167 When Scylla saw them launching forth, 168 observed them sailing on the mighty deep, 169 she called with vain entreaties; but at last, 170 aware the prince ignored her and refused 171 to recompense her wickedness, enraged, 172 and raving, she held up her impious hands, 173 her long hair streaming on the wind, — and said: 174 “Oh, wherefore have you flown, and left behind 175 the author of your glory. Oh, wretch! wretch 176 to whom I offered up my native land, 177 and sacrificed my father! Where have you 178 now flown, ungrateful man whose victory 179 is both my crime and virtue? And the gift 180 presented to you, and my passion, 181 have these not moved you? All my love and hope 182 in you alone! 183 “Forsaken by my prince, 184 shall I return to my defeated land? 185 If never ruined it would shut its walls

	utque perenni 178 sidere clara foret, sumptam de fronte coronam 179 inmisit caelo. Tenues volat illa per auras 180 dumque volat, gemmae nitidos vertuntur in ignes
8.181	181 consistuntque loco specie remanente coronae, 182 qui medius Nixique genu est anguemque tenentis. 183 Daedalus interea Creten longumque perosus 184 exsilium tactusque loci natalis amore 185 clausus erat pelago. “Terras licet” inquit “et undas 186 obstruat: at caelum certe patet; ibimus illac. 187 Omnia possideat, non possidet aera Minos.” 188 Dixit et ignotas animum dimittit in artes 189 naturamque novat. Nam ponit in ordine pennas, 190 a minima coeptas, longam breviore sequenti, 191 ut clivo crevisse putes. Sic rustica quondam 192 fistula disparibus paulatim surgit avenis. 193 Tum lino medias et ceris adligat imas, 194 atque ita compositas parvo curvamine flectit, 195 ut veras imitetur aves. Puer Icarus una 196 stabat et, ignarus sua se tractare pericla, 197 ore renidenti modo, quas vaga moverat aura, 198 captabat plumas, flavam modo pollice ceram 199 mollibat lusuque suo mirabile patris 200 impediebat opus. Postquam manus ultima coepto 201 imposita est, geminas opifex libravit in alas 202 ipse suum corpus motaque pependit in aura. 203 Instruit et natum “medio” que “ut limite curras, 204 Icare,” ait “moneo, ne, si demissior ibis, 205 unda gravet pennas, si celsior, ignis adurat. 206 Inter utrumque vola. Nec te	186 against me.—Shall I seek my father's face 187 whom I delivered to all-conquering arms? 188 My fellow-citizens despise my name; 189 my friends and neighbors hate me; I have shut 190 the world against me, only in the hope 191 that Crete would surely welcome me;—and now, 192 he has forbidden me. 193 “And is it so 194 I am requited by this thankless wretch! 195 Europa could not be your mother! Spawn 196 of cruel Syrtis! Savage cub of fierce 197 Armenian tigress;—or Charybdis, tossed 198 by the wild South-wind begot you! Can you be 199 the son of Jupiter? Your mother was 200 not ever tricked by the false semblance 201 of a bull. All that story of your birth 202 is false! You are the offspring of a bull 203 as fierce as you are! 204 “Let your vengeance fall 205 upon me, O my father Nisus, let 206 the ruined city I betrayed rejoice 207 at my misfortunes—richly merited— 208 destroy me, you whom I have ruined;—I 209 should perish for my crimes! But why should you, 210 who conquered by my crime, abandon me? 211 The treason to my father and my land 212 becomes an act of kindness in your cause. 213 “That woman is a worthy mate for you 214 who hid in wood deceived the raging bull, 215 and bore to him the infamy of Crete.

	spectare Booten 207 aut Helicen iubeo strictumque Orionis ensem: 208 me duce carpe viam.” Pariter praecepta volandi 209 tradit et ignotas umeris accommodat alas. 210 Inter opus monitusque genae maduere seniles, 8.211	211 et patriae tremuere manus. Dedit oscula nato 212 non iterum repetenda suo, pennisque levatus 213 ante volat comitique timet, velut ales, ab alto 214 quae teneram prolem produxit in aera nido, 215 hortaturque sequi damnosasque erudit artes 216 et movet ipse suas et nati respicit alas. 217 Hos aliquis tremula dum captat harundine pisces, 218 aut pastor baculo stivave innixus arator 219 vidit et obstipuit, quique aethera carpere possent 220 credidit esse deos. Et iam Iunonia laeva 221 parte Samos (fuerant Delosque Parosque relictae), 222 dextra Lebinthos erat fecundaque melle Calymne, 223 cum puer audaci coepit gaudere volatu 224 deseruitque ducem caelique cupidine tractus 225 altius egit iter. Rapidi vicinia solis 226 mollit odoratas, pennarum vincula, ceras. 227 Tabuerant cerae: nudos quatit ille lacertos, 228 remigioque carens non ullas percipit auras, 229 oraque caerulea patrium clamantia nomen 230 excipiuntur aqua: quae nomen traxit ab illo. 231 At pater infelix, nec iam pater, “Icare,” dixit, 232 “Icare,” dixit “ubi es? qua te regione requiram?” 233 “Icare” dicebat: pennas adspexit in undis 234 devovitque suas artes corpusque sepulcro 235 condidit, et tellus a nomine dicta sepulti.	216 I do not wonder that Pasiphae 217 preferred the bull to you, more savage than 218 the wildest beast. Alas, alas for me! 219 “Do my complaints reach your unwilling ears? 220 Or do the same winds waft away my words 221 that blow upon your ships, ungrateful man?— 222 Ah, wretched that I am, he takes delight 223 in hastening from me. The deep waves resound 224 as smitten by the oars, his ship departs; 225 and I am lost and even my native land 226 is fading from his sight. 227 “Oh heart of flint! 228 you shall not prosper in your cruelty, 229 and you shall not forget my sacrifice; 230 in spite of everything I follow you! 231 I'll grasp the curving stern of your swift ship, 232 and I will follow through unending seas.” 233 And as she spoke, she leaped into the waves, 234 and followed the receding ships—for strength 235 from passion came to her. And soon she clung 236 unwelcome, to the sailing Gnossian ship. 237 Meanwhile, the Gods had changed her father's form 238 and now he hovered over the salt deep, 239 a hawk with tawny wings. So when he saw 240 his daughter clinging to the hostile ship 241 he would have torn her with his rending beak;— 242 he darted towards her through the yielding air. 243 In terror she let go, but as she fell 244 the light air held her from the ocean spray; 245 her feather-weight supported by the breeze;

	236 Hunc miseri tumulo ponentem corpora nati 237 garrula limoso prospexit ab elice perdix 238 et plausit pennis testataque gaudia cantu est: 239 unica tunc volucris nec visa prioribus annis, 240 factaque nuper avis, longum tibi, Daedale, crimen.
8.241	241 Namque huic tradiderat, fatorum ignara, docendam 242 progeniem germana suam, natalibus actis 243 bis puerum senis, animi ad praecepta capacis. 244 Ille etiam medio spinas in pisce notatas 245 traxit in exemplum ferroque incidit acuto 246 perpetuos dentes et serrae repperit usum. 247 Primus et ex uno duo ferrea bracchia nodo 248 vinxit, ut aequali spatio distantibus illis 249 altera pars staret, pars altera duceret orbem. 250 Daedalus invidit sacraque ex arce Minervae 251 praecipitem misit, lapsum mentitus. At illum 252 quae favet ingeniis excepit Pallas avemque 253 reddidit et medio velavit in aere pennis. 254 Sed vigor ingenii quondam velocis in alas 255 inque pedes abiit: nomen quod et ante remansit. 256 Non tamen haec alte volucris sua corpora tollit, 257 nec facit in ramis altoque cacumine nidos: 258 propter humum volitat ponitque in saepibus ova 259 antiquique memor metuit sublimia casus. 260 Iamque fatigatum tellus Aetnaea tenebat 261 Daedalon, et sumptis pro supplice Cocalus armis 262 mitis habebatur, iam lamentabile Athenae 263 pendere desierant Thesea laude tributum. 264 Templa coronantur, bellatricemque Minervam	246 she spread her wings, and changed into a bird. 247 They called her “Ciris” when she cut the wind, 248 and “Ciris”—cut-the-lock—remains her name. 249 King Minos, when he reached the land of Crete 250 and left his ships, remembered he had made 251 a vow to Jupiter, and offered up 252 a hundred bulls.—The splendid spoils of war 253 adorned his palace.—254 Now the infamous 255 reproach of Crete had grown, till it exposed 256 the double-natured shame. So, Minos, moved 257 to cover his disgrace, resolved to hide 258 the monster in a prison, and he built 259 with intricate design, by Daedalus 260 contrived, an architect of wonderful 261 ability, and famous. This he planned 262 of mazey wanderings that deceived the eyes, 263 and labyrinthic passages involved. 264 so sports the clear Maeander, in the fields 265 of Phrygia winding doubtful; back and forth 266 it meets itself, until the wandering stream 267 fatigued, impedes its wearied waters' flow; 268 from source to sea, from sea to source involved. 269 So Daedalus contrived innumerous paths, 270 and windings vague, so intricate that he, 271 the architect, hardly could retrace his steps. 272 In this the Minotaur was long concealed, 273 and there devoured Athenian victims sent 274 three seasons, nine years each, till Theseus, son 275 of Aegeus, slew him and retraced his way, 276 finding the path by Ariadne's thread. 277 Without delay the victor fled from Crete, 278 together with the loving maid, and sailed 279 for Dia Isle of Naxos, where he left 280 the maid forlorn, abandoned. Her, in time, 281 lamenting and deserted, Bacchus found 282 and for his love immortalized her name. 283 He set in the dark heavens the bright crown 284 that rested on her brows. Through the soft air 285 it whirled, while all the

	265 cum Iove disque vocant aliis, quos sanguine voto 266 muneribusque datis et acerris turis honorant. 267 Sparserat Argolicas nomen vaga fama per urbes 268 Theseos, et populi, quos dives Achaia cepit, 269 huius opem magnis imploravere periclis. 270 Huius opem Calydon, quamvis Meleagron haberet,	sparkling jewels changed 286 to flashing fires, assuming in the sky 287 between the Serpent-holder and the Kneeler 288 the well-known shape of Ariadne's Crown.
8.271	271 sollicita supplex petiit prece. Causa petendi 272 sus erat, infestae famulus vindexque Dianae. 273 Oenea namque ferunt pleni successibus anni 274 primitias frugum Cereri, sua vina Lyaeo, 275 Palladios flavae latices libasse Minervae. 276 Coeptus ab agricolis superos pervenit ad omnes 277 ambitiosus honor; solas sine ture relictas 278 praeteritae cessasse ferunt Latoidos aras. 279 Tangit et ira deos. “At non impune feremus, 280 quaeque inhonoratae, non et dicemur inultae” 281 inquit, et Oeneos ultorem spreta per agros 282 misit aprum, quanto maiores herbida tauros 283 non habet Epiros, sed habent Sicula arva minores. 284 Sanguine et igne micant oculi, riget horrida cervix, 285 286 287 fervida cum rauco latos stridore per armos 288 spuma fluit, dentes aequantur dentibus Indis, 289 fulmen ab ore venit, frondes adflatibus ardent. 290 Is modo crescentes segetes proculcat in herba, 291 nunc matura metit fleturi vota coloni 292 et Cererem in spicis intercipit. Area frustra 293 et frustra exspectant promissas horrea messes. 294 Sternuntur gravidi longo cum palmite fetus	289 But Daedalus abhorred the Isle of Crete— 290 and his long exile on that sea-girt shore, 291 increased the love of his own native place. 292 “Though Minos blocks escape by sea and land.” 293 He said, “The unconfined skies remain 294 though Minos may be lord of all the world 295 his sceptre is not regnant of the air, 296 and by that untried way is our escape.” 297 This said, he turned his mind to arts unknown 298 and nature unrevealed. He fashioned quills 299 and feathers in due order — deftly formed 300 from small to large, as any rustic pipe 301 prom straws unequal slants. He bound with thread 302 the middle feathers, and the lower fixed 303 with pliant wax; till so, in gentle curves 304 arranged, he bent them to the shape of birds. 305 While he was working, his son Icarus, 306 with smiling countenance and unaware 307 of danger to himself, perchance would chase 308 the feathers, ruffled by the shifting breeze, 309 or soften with his thumb the yellow wax, 310 and by his playfulness retard the work 311 his anxious father planned. 312 But when at last 313 the father finished it, he poised himself, 314 and lightly floating in the winnowed air 315 waved his great feathered wings with bird-like ease. 316 And, likewise he had fashioned for his son 317 such wings; before they ventured in the air 318 he said, “My son, I caution you to keep

	295 bacaque cum ramis semper frondentis olivae. 296 Saevit et in pecudes: non has pastorve canisve, 297 non armenta truces possunt defendere tauri. 298 Diffugiunt populi nec se nisi moenibus urbis 299 esse putant tutos, donec Meleagros et una 300 lecta manus iuvenum coiere cupidine laudis:
8.301	301 Tyndaridae gemini, spectatus caestibus alter, 302 alter equo, primaeque ratis molitor Iason, 303 et cum Pirithoo, felix concordia, Theseus; 304 et duo Thestiadae prolesque Aphareia, Lynceus 305 et velox Idas, et iam non femina Caeneus 306 Leucippusque ferox iaculoque insignis Acastus 307 Hippothousque Dryasque et cretus Amyntore Phoenix, 308 Actoridaeque pares et missus ab Elide Phyleus. 309 Nec Telamon aberat magnique creator Achillis 310 cumque Pheretiade et Hyanteo Iolao 311 impiger Eurytion, et cursu invictus Echion, 312 Naryciusque Lelex Panopeusque Hyleusque feroxque 313 Hippasus et primis etiamnum Nestor in annis, 314 et quos Hippocoon antiquis misit Amyclis, 315 Penelopaeque socer cum Parrhasio Ancaeo, 316 Ampycidesque sagax et adhuc a coniuge tutus 317 Oeclides, nemorisque decus Tegeaea Lycaei. 318 Rasilis huic summam mordebat fibula vestem, 319 crinis erat simplex, nodum conlectus in unum. 320 Ex umero pendens resonabat eburnea laevo 321 telorum custos, arcum quoque laeva tenebat. 322 Talis erat cultu; facies, quam dicere vere 323 virgineam in puero, puerilem in virgine possis.	319 the middle way, for if your pinions dip 320 too low the waters may impede your flight; 321 and if they soar too high the sun may scorch them. 322 Fly midway. Gaze not at the boundless sky, 323 far Ursa Major and Bootes next. 324 Nor on Orion with his flashing brand, 325 but follow my safe guidance.” 326 As he spoke 327 he fitted on his son the plumed wings 328 with trembling hands, while down his withered cheeks 329 the tears were falling. Then he gave his son 330 a last kiss, and upon his gliding wings 331 assumed a careful lead solicitous. 332 As when the bird leads forth her tender young, 333 from high-swung nest to try the yielding air; 334 so he prevailed on willing Icarus; 335 encouraged and instructed him in a]l 336 the fatal art; and as he waved his wings 337 looked backward on his son. 338 Beneath their flight, 339 the fisherman while casting his long rod, 340 or the tired shepherd leaning on his crook, 341 or the rough plowman as he raised his eyes, 342 astonished might observe them on the wing, 343 and worship them as Gods. 344 Upon the left 345 they passed by Samos, Juno's sacred isle; 346 Delos and Paros too, were left behind; 347 and on the right Lebinthus and Calymne, 348 fruitful in honey. Proud of his success, 324 Hanc pariter vidit, pariter Calydonius heros 325 optavit renuente deo flammasque latentes 326 hausit et “o felix, siquem dignabitur” inquit 327 “ista virum.” Nec plura sinit tempusque pudorque 328 dicere: maius opus magni certaminis urget. 329 Silva frequens trabibus, quam nulla ceciderat aetas, 330 incipit a plano devexaque prospicit arva.

8.331	331 Quo postquam venere viri, pars retia tendunt, 332 vincula pars adimunt canibus, pars pressa sequuntur 333 signa pedum cupiuntque suum reperire periclum. 334 Concava vallis erat, quo se demittere rivi 335 adsuerant pluvialis aquae: tenet ima lacunae 336 lenta salix ulvaeque leves iuncique palustres 337 viminaque et longa parvae sub harundine cannae. 338 Hinc aper excitus medios violentus in hostes 339 fertur, ut excussis elisi nubibus ignes. 340 Sternitur incursu nemus et propulsa fragorem 341 silva dat. Exclamant iuvenes praetentaque forti 342 tela tenent dextra lato vibrantia ferro. 343 Ille ruit spargitque canes, ut quisque furenti 344 obstat, et obliquo latrantes dissipat ictu. 345 Cuspis Echionio primum contorta lacerto 346 vana fuit truncoque dedit leve vulnus acerno. 347 Proxima, si nimiis mittentis viribus usa 348 non foret, in tergo visa est haesura petito: 349 longius it. Auctor teli Pagasaeus Iason. 350 “Phoebe,” ait Ampycides “si te coluique coloque, 351 da mihi quod petitur certo contingere telo!” 352 Qua potuit, precibus deus adnuit: ictus ab illo est,	349 the foolish Icarus forsook his guide, 350 and, bold in vanity, began to soar, 351 rising upon his wings to touch the skies; 352 but as he neared the scorching sun, its heat 353 softened the fragrant wax that held his plumes; 354 and heat increasing melted the soft wax — 355 he waved his naked arms instead of wings, 356 with no more feathers to sustain his flight. 357 And as he called upon his father's name 358 his voice was smothered in the dark blue sea, 359 now called Icarian from the dead boy's name. 360 The unlucky father, not a father, called, 361 “Where are you, Icarus?” and “Where are you? 362 In what place shall I seek you, Icarus?” 363 He called again; and then he saw the wings 364 of his dear Icarus, floating on the waves; 365 and he began to rail and curse his art. 366 He found the body on an island shore, 367 now called Icaria, and at once prepared 368 to bury the unfortunate remains; 369 but while he labored a pert partridge near, 370 observed him from the covert of an oak, 371 and whistled his unnatural delight. 372 Know you the cause? 'Twas then a single bird, 373 the first one of its kind. 'Twas never seen 374 before the sister of Daedalus had brought 375 him Perdix, her dear son, to be his pupil. 376 And as the years went by the gifted youth 377 began to rival his instructor's art. 378 He took the jagged backbone of a fish,

	353 sed sine vulnere, aper; ferrum Diana volanti 354 abstulerat iaculo: lignum sine acumine venit. 355 Ira feri mota est, nec fulmine lenius arsit: 356 emicat ex oculis, spirat quoque pectore flamma. 357 Utque volat moles adducto concita nervo, 358 cum petit aut muros aut plenas milite turres, 359 in iuvenes certo sic impete vulnificus sus 360 fertur et Hippalmon Pelagonaque, dextra tuentes
8.361	361 cornua, prosternit; socii rapuere iacentes. 362 At non letiferos effugit Enaesimus ictus, 363 Hippocoonte satus: trepidantem et terga parantem 364 vertere succiso liquerunt poplite nervi. 365 Forsitan et Pylius citra Troiana perisset 366 tempora: sed sumpto posita conamine ab hasta 367 arboris insiluit, quae stabat proxima, ramis 368 despexitque, loco tutus, quem fugerat hostem. 369 Dentibus ille ferox in querno stipite tritis 370 inminet exitio fidensque recentibus armis 371 Eurytidae magni rostro femur hausit adunco. 372 At gemini, nondum caelestia sidera, fratres, 373 ambo conspicui, nive candidioribus ambo 374 vectabantur equis, ambo vibrata per auras 375 hastarum tremulo quatiebant spicula motu. 376 Vulnera fecissent, nisi saetiger inter opacas 377 nec iaculis isset nec equo loca pervia silvas. 378 Persequitur Telamon studioque incautus eundi 379 pronus ab arborea cecidit radice retentus. 380 Dum levat hunc Peleus, celerem Tegeaea sagittam 381 imposuit nervo sinuatoque expulit arcu.	379 and with it as a model made a saw, 380 with sharp teeth fashioned from a strip of iron. 381 And he was first to make two arms of iron, 382 smooth hinged upon the center, so that one 383 would make a pivot while the other, turned, 384 described a circle. Wherefore Daedalus 385 enraged and envious, sought to slay the youth 386 and cast him headlong from Minerva's fane,— 387 then spread the rumor of an accident. 388 But Pallas, goddess of ingenious men, 389 saving the pupil changed him to a bird, 390 and in the middle of the air he flew 391 on feathered wings; and so his active mind — 392 and vigor of his genius were absorbed 393 into his wings and feet; although the name 394 of Perdix was retained. 395 The Partridge hides 396 in shaded places by the leafy trees 397 its nested eggs among the bush's twigs; 398 nor does it seek to rise in lofty flight, 399 for it is mindful of its former fall.

	382 Fixa sub aure feri summum destrinxit harundo 383 corpus et exiguo rubefecit sanguine saetas. 384 Nec tamen illa sui successu laetior ictus, 385 quam Meleagros erat. Primus vidisse putatur 386 et primus sociis visum ostendisse cruorem 387 et “meritum” dixisse “feres virtutis honorem.” 388 Erubuere viri seque exhortantur et addunt 389 cum clamore animos iaciuntque sine ordine tela: 390 turba nocet iactis et, quos petit, impedit ictus.
8.391	391 Ecce furens contra sua fata bipennifer Arcas 392 “discite, femineis quid tela virilia praestent, 393 o iuvenes, operique meo concedite!” dixit. 394 “Ipsa suis licet hunc Latonia protegat armis, 395 invita tamen hunc perimet mea dextra Diana.” 396 Talia magniloquo tumidus memoraverat ore 397 ancipitemque manu tollens utraque securim 398 institerat digitis, primos suspensus in artus. 399 Occupat audentem, quaque est via proxima leto, 400 summa ferus geminos direxit ad inguina dentes. 401 Concidit Ancaeus glomerataque sanguine multo 402 viscera lapsa fluunt: madefacta est terra cruore. 403 Ibat in adversum proles Ixionis hostem 404 Pirithous valida quatiens venabula dextra. 405 Cui “procul” Aegides “o me mihi carior” inquit 406 “pars animae consiste meae! licet eminus esse 407 fortibus: Ancaeo nocuit temeraria virtus.” 408 Dixit et aerata torsit grave cuspide cornum. 409 Quo bene librato votique potente futuro, 410 obstitit abscisa frondosus ab arbore ramus.	400 Wearied with travel Daedalus arrived 401 at Sicily,—where Cocalus was king; 402 and when the wandering Daedalus implored 403 the monarch's kind protection from his foe, 404 he gathered a great army for his guest, 405 and gained renown from an applauding world. 406 Now after Theseus had destroyed in Crete 407 the dreadful monster, Athens then had ceased 408 to pay her mournful tribute; and with wreaths 409 her people decked the temples of the Gods; 410 and they invoked Minerva, Jupiter, 411 and many other Gods whom they adored, 412 with sacrifice and precious offerings, 413 and jars of Frankincense. 414 Quick-flying Fame 415 had spread reports of Theseus through the land; 416 and all the peoples of Achaia, from that day, 417 when danger threatened would entreat his aid. 418 So it befell, the land of Calydon, 419 through Meleager and her native hero, 420 implored the valiant Theseus to destroy 421 a raging boar, the ravage of her realm. 422 Diana in her wrath had sent the boar 423 to wreak her vengeance; and they say the cause 424 was this:—The nation had a fruitful year, 425 for which the good king Oeneus had decreed 426 that all should offer the first fruits of corn 427 to Ceres—and to Bacchus wine of grapes— 428 and oil of olives to the golden haired 429 Minerva. Thus, the Gods were all adored,

	411 Misit et Aesonides iaculum: quod casus ab illo 412 vertit in inmeriti fatum latrantis et inter 413 ilia coniectum tellure per ilia fixum est. 414 At manus Oenidae variat, missisque duabus 415 hasta prior terra, medio stetit altera tergo. 416 Nec mora, dum saevit, dum corpora versat in orbem 417 stridentemque novo spumam cum sanguine fundit, 418 vulneris auctor adest hostemque inritat ad iram 419 splendidaque adversos venabula condit in armos. 420 Gaudia testantur socii clamore secundo
8.421	421 victricemque petunt dextrae coniungere dextram 422 inmanemque ferum multa tellure iacentem 423 mirantes spectant, neque adhuc contingere tutum 424 esse putant; sed tela tamen sua quisque cruentat. 425 Ipse pede imposito caput exitiabile pressit 426 atque ita “sume mei spolium, Nonacria, iuris,” 427 dixit “et in partem veniat mea gloria tecum.” 428 Protinus exuvias rigidis horrentia saetis 429 terga dat et magnis insignia dentibus ora. 430 Illi laetitiae est cum munere muneris auctor: 431 invidere alii, totoque erat agmine murmur. 432 E quibus ingenti tendentes bracchia voce 433 “pone age nec titulos intercipe, femina, nostros,” 434 Thestiadae clamant “nec te fiducia formae 435 decipiat, ne sit longe tibi captus amore 436 auctor” et huic adimunt munus, ius muneris illi. 437 Non tulit et tumida frendens Mavortius ira 438 “discite, raptores alieni” dixit “honoris, 439 facta minis quantum distent,” hausitque nefando	430 beginning with the lowest to the highest, 431 except alone Diana, and of all the Gods 432 her altars only were neglected. No 433 frankincense unto her was given! Neglect 434 enrages even Deities. 435 “Am I 436 to suffer this indignity?” she cried, 437 “Though I am thus dishonored, I will not 438 be unrevenged!” And so the boar was sent 439 to ravage the fair land of Calydon. 440 And this avenging boar was quite as large 441 as bulls now feeding on the green Epirus, 442 and larger than the bulls of Sicily. 443 A dreadful boar. —His burning, bloodshot eyes 444 seemed coals of living fire, and his rough neck 445 was knotted with stiff muscles, and thick-set 446 with bristles like sharp spikes. A seething froth 447 dripped on his shoulders, and his tusks 448 were like the spoils of Ind. Discordant roars 449 reverberated from his hideous jaws; 450 and lightning—belched forth from his horrid throat—451 scorched the green fields. He trampled the green corn 452 and doomed the farmer to lament his crops, 453 in vain the threshing-floor has been prepared, 454 in vain the barns await the promised yield. 455 Long branches of the vine and heavy grapes 456 are scattered in confusion, and the fruits 457 and branches of the olive tree, whose leaves 458 should never wither, are cast on the ground. 459 His spleen was vented on the simple flocks,

	440 pectora Plexippi nil tale timentia ferro. 441 Toxea, quid faciat, dubium pariterque volentem 442 ulcisci fratrem fraternaque fata timentem 443 haud patitur dubitare diu calidumque priori 444 caede recalfecit consorti sanguine telum. 445 Dona deum templis nato victore ferebat, 446 cum videt exstinctos fratres Althaea referri. 447 Quae plangore dato maestis clamoribus urbem 448 implet et auratis mutavit vestibus atras. 449 At simul est auctor necis editus, excidit omnis 450 luctus et a lacrimis in poenae versus amorem est.
8.451	451 Stipes erat, quem, cum partus enixa iaceret 452 Thestias, in flammam triplices posuere sorores; 453 staminaque impresso fatalia pollice nentes 454 “tempora” dixerunt “eadem lignoque tibique, 455 o modo nate, damus.” Quo postquam carmine dicto 456 excessere deae, flagrantem mater ab igne 457 eripuit ramum sparsitque liquentibus undis. 458 Ille diu fuerat penetralibus abditus imis 459 servatusque tuos, iuvenis, servaverat annos. 460 Protulit hunc genetrix taedasque et fragmina poni 461 imperat et positis inimicos admovet ignes. 462 Tum conata quater flammis imponere ramum, 463 coepta quater tenuit. Pugnant materque sororque, 464 et diversa trahunt unum duo nomina pectus. 465 Saepe metu sceleris pallebant ora futuri, 466 saepe suum fervens oculis dabat ira ruborem. 467 Et modo nescio quid similis crudele minanti 468 vultus erat, modo quem misereri credere posses.	460 which neither dogs nor shepherd could protect; 461 and the brave bulls could not defend their herds. 462 The people fled in all directions from the fields, 463 for safety to the cities. Terror reigned. 464 There seemed no remedy to save the land, 465 till Meleager chose a band of youths, 466 united for the glory of great deeds. 467 What heroes shall immortal song proclaim? 468 Castor and Pollux, twins of Tyndarus; 469 one famous for his skill in horsemanship, 470 the other for his boxing. Jason, too, was there, 471 the glorious builder of the world's first ship, 472 and Theseus with his friend Perithous, 473 and Toxeus and Plexippus, fated sons 474 of Thestius, and the son of Aphareus, 475 Lynkeus with his fleet-foot brother Idas 476 and Caeneus, first a woman then a man 477 the brave Leucippus and the argonaut 478 Acastus, swift of dart; and warlike Dryas, 479 Hippothous and Phoenix, not then blind, 480 the son of King Amyntor, and the twain 481 who sprung from Actor, Phyleus thither brought 482 from Elis; Telamon was one of them 483 and even Peleus, father of the great 484 Achilles; and the son of Pheres joined, 485 and Iolas, the swift Eurytion, 486 Echion fleet of foot, Narycian Lelex— 487 and Panopeus, and Hyleus and Hippasus, 488 and Nestor (youthful then), and the four sons 489 Hippocoon from eld Amyclae

	469 Cumque ferus lacrimas animi siccaverat ardor, 470 inveniebantur lacrimae tamen. Utque carina, 471 quam ventus ventoque rapit contrarius aestus, 472 vim geminam sentit paretque incerta duobus: 473 Thestias haud aliter dubiis adfectibus errat 474 inque vices ponit positamque resuscitat iram. 475 Incipit esse tamen melior germana parente, 476 et consanguineas ut sanguine leniat umbras, 477 impietate pia est. Nam postquam pestifer ignis 478 convaluit, “rogus iste cremet mea viscera” dixit. 479 Utque manu dira lignum fatale tenebat, 480 ante sepulcrales infelix adstitit aras	sent,
8.481	481 “poenarum” que “deae triplices, furialibus,” inquit, 482 “Eumenides, sacris vultus advertite vestros. 483 Ulciscor facioque nefas: mors morte pianda est, 484 in scelus addendum scelus est, in funera funus. 485 Per coacervatos pereat domus impia luctus. 486 An felix Oeneus nato victore fruetur, 487 Thestius orbus erit? Melius lugebitis ambo. 488 Vos modo, fraterni manes animaeque recentes, 489 officium sentite meum magnoque paratas 490 accipite inferias, uteri mala pignera nostri! — 491 Ei mihi! quo rapior? Fratres, ignoscite matri. 492 Deficiunt ad coepta manus. Meruisse fatemur 493 illum, cur pereat: mortis mihi displicet auctor. — 494 Ergo impune feret, vivusque et victor et ipso 495 successu tumidus regnum Calydonis habebit: 496 vos cinis exiguus gelidaeque iacebitis umbrae? 497 Haud equidem patiar. Pereat sceleratus et ille	490 the father-in-law of queen Penelope, 491 Ancaeus of Arcadia, and the wise 492 soothsayer Mopsus, and the prophet, son 493 of Oeclus, victim of a traitor-wife.— 494 And Atalanta, virgin of the groves, 495 of Mount Lycaeus, glory of her sex; 496 a polished buckle fastened her attire; 497 her lustrous hair was fashioned in a knot; 498 her weapons rattled in an ivory case, 499 swung from her white left shoulder, and she held 500 a bow in her left hand. Her face appeared 501 as maidenly for boy, or boyish for girl. 502 When Meleager saw her, he at once 503 longed for her beauty, though some god forbade. 504 The fires of love flamed in him; and he said, 505 “Happy the husband who shall win this girl!” 506 Neither the time nor his own modesty 507 permitted him to say another word. 508 But now the dreadful contest with the boar 509 engaged this hero's energy and thought. 510 A wood, umbrageous, not impaired with age, 511 slopes from a plain and shadows the wide fields, 512 and there this band of valiant heroes went— 513 eager to slay the dreaded enemy, 514 some spread the nets and some let loose the dogs, 515 some traced the wide spoor of the monster's hoofs. 516 There is a deep gorge where the rivulets 517 that gather from the rain, discharge

	498 spemque patris regnumque trahat patriaeque ruinam. 499 Mens ubi materna est? Ubi sunt pia iura parentum 500 et quos sustinui bis mensum quinque labores? 501 O utinam primis arsisses ignibus infans, 502 idque ego passa forem! Vixisti munere nostro: 503 nunc merito moriere tuo. Cape praemia facti 504 bisque datam, primum partu, mox stipite rapto, 505 redde animam — vel me fraternis adde sepulcris! 506 Et cupio et nequeo. Quid agam? modo vulnera fratrum 507 ante oculos mihi sunt et tantae caedis imago, 508 nunc animum pietas maternaque nomina frangunt. — 509 Me miseram! male vincetis, sed vincite, fratres: 510 dummodo quae dedero vobis solacia vosque	themselves; 518 and there the bending willow, the smooth sedge, 519 the marsh-rush, ozier and tall tangled reed
8.511	511 ipsa sequar.” Dixit, dextraque aversa trementi 512 funereum torrem medios coniecit in ignes. 513 Aut dedit aut visus gemitus est ipse dedisse 514 stipes, ut invitis correptus ab ignibus arsit. 515 Inscius atque absens flamma Meleagros ab illa 516 uritur et caecis torreri viscera sentit 517 ignibus ac magnos superat virtute dolores. 518 Quod tamen ignavo cadat et sine sanguine leto, 519 maeret et Ancaei felicia vulnera dicit 520 grandaevumque patrem fratresque piasque sorores 521 cum gemitu sociamque tori vocat ore supremo, 522 forsitan et matrem. Crescunt ignisque dolorque 523 languescuntque iterum: simul est exstinctus uterque, 524 inque leves abiit paulatim spiritus auras 525 paulatim cana prunam velante favilla. 526 Alta iacet Calydon: lugent iuvenesque senesque,	520 in wild profusion cover up the marsh. 521 Aroused from this retreat the startled boar, 522 as quick as lightning from the clashing clouds 523 crashed all the trees that cumbered his mad way.— 524 The young men raised a shout, leveled their spears, 525 and brandished their keen weapons; but the boar 526 rushed onward through the yelping dogs, 527 and scattered them with deadly sidelong stroke. 528 Echion was the first to hurl his spear, 529 but slanting in its course it only glanced 530 a nearby maple tree, and next the spear 531 of long-remembered Jason cut the air; 532 so swiftly hurled it seemed it might transfix 533 the boar's back, but with over-force it sped 534 beyond the monster. Poising first his dart, 535 the son of Ampyx, as he cast it, he 536 implored Apollo, “Grant my prayer if I 537 have truly worshiped you, harken to me 538 as always I adore you! Let my spear 539 unerring strike its aim.” Apollo heard, 540 and guided the swift spear, but as it sped 541 Diana struck the iron head from the shaft, 542 and the blunt wood fell harmless from his hide. 543 Then was the monster's savage anger roused; 544 as the bright lightning's flash his red eyes flamed; 545 his breath was hot as

	527 vulgusque proceresque gemunt, scissaeque capillos 528 planguntur matres Calydonides Eueninae. 529 Pulvere canitiem genitor vultusque seniles 530 foedat humi fusus spatiosumque increpat aevum. 531 Nam de matre manus diri sibi conscia facti 532 exegit poenas acto per viscera ferro. 533 Non mihi si centum deus ora sonantia linguis 534 ingeniumque capax totumque Helicona dedisset, 535 tristia persequerer miserarum dicta sororum. 536 Inmemores decoris liventia pectora tundunt, 537 dumque manet corpus, corpus refoventque foventque, 538 oscula dant ipsi, posito dant oscula lecto. 539 Post cinerem cineres haustos ad pectora pressant, 540 adfusaeque iacent tumulo signataque saxo	fire. As when a stone 546 is aimed at walls or strong towers, which protect 547 encompassed armies,—launched by the taut rope 548 it strikes with dreaded impact; so the boar 549 with fatal onset rushed among this band
8.541	541 nomina complexae lacrimas in nomina fundunt. 542 Quas Parthaoniae tandem Latonia clade 543 exsatiata domus praeter Gorgenque nurumque 544 nobilis Alcmenae natis in corpore pennis 545 adlevat et longas per bracchia porrigit alas 546 corneaque ora facit versasque per aera mittit. 547 Interea Theseus sociati parte laboris 548 functus Erechtheas Tritonidos ibat ad arces. 549 Clausit iter fecitque moras Achelous eunti 550 imbre tumens. “Succede meis,” ait “inclite, tectis, 551 Cecropida, nec te committe rapacibus undis: 552 ferre trabes solidas obliquaque volvere magno 553 murmure saxa solent. Vidi contermina ripae 554 cum gregibus stabula alta trahi: nec fortibus illic 555 profuit armentis, nec equis velocibus esse.	550 of noble lads, and stretched upon the ground 551 Eupalamon and Pelagon whose guard 552 was on the right; and their companions bore 553 their bodies from the field. 554 Another youth, 555 the brave son of Hippocoon received 556 a deadly wound—while turning to escape, 557 the sinew of his thigh was cut and failed 558 to bear his tottering steps.— 559 And Nestor might 560 have perished then, so long before he fought 561 the heroes of old Troy, but ever wise, 562 he vaulted on his long lance from the ground 563 into the branches of a sheltering tree; 564 where in a safe position, he could look 565 down on his baffled foe. The raging boar 566 whetted his gleaming tushes on an oak. 567 Then with his sharpened tusks he gored the thigh 568 of mighty Hippasus. Observed of all, 569 and mounted on their horses—whiter than 570 the northern snow—the twins (long afterward 571 transformed to constellations) sallied forth, 572 and brandishing their lances, poised in air, 573 determined to destroy the bristling boar. 574 It thwarted their design by hiding in 575 a thicket intricate; where neither steed 576 nor lance could

	556 Multa quoque hic torrens nivibus de monte solutis 557 corpora turbineo iuvenalia flumine mersit. 558 Tutior est requies, solito dum flumina currant 559 limite, dum tenues capiat suus alveus undas.” 560 Adnuit Aegides, “utar” que “Acheloe, domoque 561 consilioque tuo” respondit; et usus utroque est. 562 Pumice multicavo nec levibus atria tophis 563 structa subit: molli tellus erat umida musco, 564 summa lacunabant alterno murice conchae. 565 Iamque duas lucis partes Hyperione menso 566 discubuere toris Theseus comitesque laborum: 567 hac Ixionides, illa Troezenius heros 568 parte Lelex, raris iam sparsus tempora canis, 569 quosque alios parili fuerat dignatus honore 570 amnis Acarnanum, laetissimus hospite tanto.	penetrate. But Telamon 577 pursued undaunted, and in haste tripped up 578 by tangled roots, fell headlong.—Peleus stooped 579 to rescue him. 580 While he regained his feet, 581 the virgin, Atalanta, took her bow 582 and fitting a sharp arrow to the notch, 583 twanged the tight cord. The feathered shaft 584 quivered beneath the monster's ear, the red blood 585 stained his hard bristles. 586 Flushed with her success 587 rejoiced the maid, but not more gladly than 588 the hero Meleager. He it was
8.571	571 Protinus adpositas nudae vestigia nymphae 572 instruxere epulis mensas dapibusque remotis 573 in gemma posuere merum. Tum maximus heros, 574 aequora prospiciens oculis subiecta, “quis” inquit 575 “ille locus?” digitoque ostendit, “et insula nomen 576 quod gerit illa, doce: quamquam non una videtur.” 577 Amnis ad haec “non est” inquit “quod cernitis, unum: 578 quinque iacent terrae: spatium discrimina fallit. 579 Quoque minus spretae factum mirere Dianae, 580 naides hae fuerant. Quae cum bis quinque iuvencos 581 mactassent rurisque deos ad sacra vocassent, 582 inmemores nostri festas duxere choreas. 583 Intumui, quantusque feror, cum plurimus umquam, 584 tantus eram, pariterque animis inmanis et undis 585 a silvis silvas et ab arvis arva	589 who first observed the blood, and pointed out 590 the stain to his companions as he cried, 591 “Give honor to the courage of a maid!” 592 Unwilling to be worsted by a maid, 593 the rushing heroes raised a mighty cry 594 and as they shouted in excitement, hurled 595 their weapons in confusion; and so great 596 the multitude their actions interfered. 597 Behold! Ancaeus wielding his war-axe, 598 and rushing madly to his fate, exclaimed, 599 “Witness it! See the weapons of a man 600 excel a woman's! Ho, make way for my 601 achievement! Let Diana shield the brute! 602 Despite her utmost effort my right hand 603 shall slaughter him!” So mighty in his boast 604 he puffed himself; and, lifting with both hands 605 his double-edged axe, he stood erect, 606 on tiptoe fiercely bold. The savage boar 607 caught him, and ripped his tushes through his groin, 608 a spot where death is sure.—Ancaeus fell; 609 and his torn entrails and his crimson blood 610 stained the fair verdure of the spot with death. 611 Ixion's doughty son was running straight 612 against the monster, revelli 586 cumque loco nymphas, memores tum denique nostri, 587 in freta provolvi. Fluctus nosterque marisque 588 continuam diduxit humum partesque resolvit 589 in totidem, mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis. 590 Ut tamen ipse vides, procul en procul una recessit 591 insula, grata mihi; Perimelen navita dicit. 592 Huic ego virgineum dilectae nomen ademi. 593 Quod pater Hippodamas aegre tulit inque profundum 594 propulit e scopulo periturae corpora natae. 595 Excepi nantemque ferens “o proxima mundi 596 regna vagae” dixi “sortite, tridentifer, undae,	shaking his long lance 613 with nervous vigor in his strong right hand; 614 but Theseus, standing at a distance called: 615 “Beware! beware, O, dearest of my friends; 616 be valiant at a distance, or the fate 617 of rashly-bold Ancaeus may be yours!” 618 Even as he spoke he balanced in his hand

8.601	601 adfer opem mersaeque precor, feritate paterna 602 da, Neptune, locum; vel sit locus ipsa licebit.” 609 Dum loquor, amplexa est artus nova terra natantes, 610 et gravis increvit mutatis insula membris. 611 Amnis ab his tacuit. Factum mirabile cunctos 612 moverat: inridet credentes, utque deorum 613 spretor erat mentisque ferox, Ixione natus 614 “ficta refers nimiumque putas Acheloe potentes 615 esse deos” dixit, “si dant adimuntque figuras.” 616 Obstipuere omnes nec talia dicta probarunt, 617 ante omnesque Lelex, animo maturus et aevo, 618 sic ait: “Inmensa est finemque potentia caeli 619 non habet, et quidquid superi voluere, peractum est.	619 his brazen-pointed lance of corner wood; 620 with aim so true it seemed the great boar's death 621 was certain, but an evergreen oak branch 622 shielded the beast.—Then Jason hurled his dart, 623 which turned by chance, transfixed a luckless dog 624 and pinned him yelping, to the sanguine earth.— 625 So fared those heroes. Better fortune gave 626 success to Meleager; first he threw 627 a spear that missed and quivered in the ground; 628 but next he hurled a spear with certain aim. 629 It pierced the middle of the monster's back; 630 and rushing in upon the dreaded beast, 631 while raging it was whirling round and round, 632 the fearless prince provoked to greater rage 633 the wounded adversary. Bloody froth 634 dripped down his champing jaws—his purple blood 635 poured from a rankling wound. Without delay 636 the mighty Meleager plunged a spear 637 deep in the monster's shoulder. All his friends 638 raised a glad shout, and gathering round him, tried 639 to grasp his hand. —With wonder they beheld 640 the monster's bulk stretched out upon the plain; 641 and fearful still to touch him, they began 642 to stain their weapons in his spouting blood. 643 At length the hero Meleager pressed 644 his

	620 Quoque minus dubites, tiliae contermina quercus 621 collibus est Phrygiis modico circumdata muro. 622 Ipse locum vidi; nam me Pelopeia Pittheus 623 misit in arva, suo quondam regnata parenti. 624 Haud procul hinc stagnum est, tellus habitabilis olim, 625 nunc celebres mergis fulicisque palustribus undae. 626 Iuppiter huc specie mortali cumque parente 627 venit Atlantiades positis caducifer alis. 628 Mille domos adiere locum requiemque petentes, 629 mille domos clausere serae. Tamen una recepit,	conquering foot upon the monster's head 645 and said, “O Atalanta, glorious maid, 646 of Nonacris, to you is yielded spoil, 647 my lawful right, and I rejoice to share 648 the merit of this glorious victory.”
8.630	630 parva quidem, stipulis et canna tecta palustri; 631 sed pia Baucis anus parilique aetate Philemon 632 illa sunt annis iuncti iuvenalibus, illa 633 consenuere casa paupertatemque fatendo 634 effecere levem nec iniqua mente ferendo. 635 Nec refert, dominos illic famulosne requiras: 636 tota domus duo sunt, idem parentque iubentque. 637 Ergo ubi caelicolae parvos tetigere penates 638 submissoque humiles intrarunt vertice postes, 639 membra senex posito iussit relevare sedili, 640 quo superiniecit textum rude sedula Baucis. 641 Inque foco tepidum cinerem dimovit et ignes 642 suscitat hesternos foliisque et cortice sicco 643 nutrit et ad flammas anima producit anili. 644 Multifidasque faces ramaliaque arida tecto 645 detulit et minuit parvoque admovit aeno. 646 Quodque suus coniunx riguo conlegerat horto, 647 truncat holus foliis; furca levat illa bicorni 648 sordida terga suis nigro pendentia tigno	649 And while he spoke, he gave to her the pelt, 650 covered with horrid bristles, and the head 651 frightful with gory tusks: and she rejoiced 652 in Meleager and his royal gift. 653 But all the others, envious, began 654 to murmur; and the sons of Thestius 655 levelled their pointed spears, and shouted out; 656 “Give up the prize! Let not the confidence 657 of your great beauty be a snare to you! 658 A woman should not interfering filch 659 the manly honors of a mighty hunt! 660 Aside! and let your witless lover yield!” 661 So threatened they and took from her the prize; 662 and forcibly despoiled him of his rights. 663 The warlike prince, indignant and enraged, — 664 rowed with resentment, shouted out. “What! Ho! 665 You spoilers of this honor that is ours, 666 brave deeds are different far from craven threats!” 667 And with his cruel sword he pierced the breast 668 of rash Plexippus, taken unawares, 669 and while his brother, Toxeus, struck with fear, 670 stood hesitating whether to avenge 671 or run to safety, Meleager plunged 672 the hot sword, smoking with a brother's blood, 673 in his breast also. And so perished they. 674 Ere this, Althaea, mother of the prince, 675 and sister of the slaughtered twain,—because 676 her son had killed the boar, made haste to bear 677 rich offerings to the temples of the Gods; 678 but when she saw her slaughtered brothers borne

	649 servatoque diu resecat de tergore partem 650 exiguam sectamque domat ferventibus undis. 651 Interea medias fallunt sermonibus horas 655 concutiuntque torum de molli fluminis ulva 656 impositum lecto sponda pedibusque salignis. 657 Vestibus hunc velant, quas non nisi tempore festo
8.658	658 sternere consuerant: sed et haec vilisque vetusque 659 vestis erat, lecto non indignanda saligno. 660 Accubuere dei. Mensam succincta tremensque 661 ponit anus, mensae sed erat pes tertius impar. 662 Testa parem fecit. Quae postquam subdita clivum 663 sustulit, aequatam mentae tersere virentes. 664 Ponitur hic bicolor sincerae baca Minervae 665 conditaque in liquida corna autumnalia faece 666 intibaque et radix et lactis massa coacti 667 ovaque non acri leviter versata favilla, 668 omnia fictilibus. Post haec caelatus eodem 669 sistitur argento crater fabricataque fago 670 pocula, qua cava sunt, flaventibus inlita ceris. 671 Parva mora est, epulasque foci misere calentes, 672 nec longae rursus referuntur vina senectae 673 dantque locum mensis paulum seducta secundis. 674 Hic nux, hic mixta est rugosis carica palmis 675 prunaque et in patulis redolentia mala canistris 676 et de purpureis conlectae vitibus uvae. 677 Candidus in medio favus est. Super omnia vultus 678 accessere boni nec iners	679 in sad procession, she began to shriek, 680 and filled the city with her wild lament. 681 Unwilling to abide her festal robes 682 she dressed in sable.— When she was informed 683 her own son Meleager was the cause, 684 she banished grief and lamentations,— 685 thirsting for vengeance. 686 She remembered well, 687 how, when she lay in childbirth round her stood 688 the three attendant sisters of his fate. 689 There was a billet in the room, and this 690 they took and cast upon the wasting flames, 691 and as they spun and drew the fatal threads 692 they softly chanted, “Unto you we give, 693 O child new-born! only the life of this; 694 the period of this billet is your life.” 695 And having spoken so, they vanished in the smoke. 696 Althaea snatched the billet from the fire, 697 and having quenched it with drawn water, hid 698 it long and secretly in her own room, 699 where, thus preserved, it acted as a charm 700 to save the life of Meleager. This 701 the mother now brought forth, and fetched a pile 702 of seasoned tinder ready for the torch. 703 She lit the torches and the ready pile, 704 and as the flames leaped up, four times prepared 705 to cast the fatal billet in the midst; 706 and four times hesitated to commit 707 the dreadful deed,—so long the contest veered 708 between the feelings of a mother's breast 709 and the fierce vengeance of a sister's rage. 710 Now is the mother's visage pale with fear, 711 and now the sister's sanguinary rage 712 glows in her eyes. Her countenance contorts 713 with cruel

	pauperque voluntas. 679 Interea totiens haustum cratera repleri 680 sponte sua per seque vident succrescere vina: 681 attoniti novitate pavent manibusque supinis 682 concipiunt Baucisque preces timidusque Philemon 683 et veniam dapibus nullisque paratibus orant. 684 Unicus anser erat, minimae custodia villae: 685 quem dis hospitibus domini mactare parabant. 686 Ille celer penna tardos aetate fatigat 687 eluditque diu tandemque est visus ad ipsos	threats and in bewildered ways 714 dissolves compassionate: And even when 715 the heat of anger had dried up her eyes
8.688	688 confugisse deos. Superi vetuere necari 689 “di” que “sumus, meritasque luet vicinia poenas 690 impia” dixerunt; “vobis inmunibus huius 691 esse mali dabitur. Modo vestra relinquite tecta 692 ac nostros comitate gradus et in ardua montis 693 ite simul.” Parent ambo baculisque levati 694 nituntur longo vestigia ponere clivo. 695 Tantum aberant summo, quantum semel ire sagitta 696 missa potest: flexere oculos et mersa palude 697 cetera prospiciunt, tantum sua tecta manere. 698 Dumque ea mirantur, dum deflent fata suorum, 699 illa vetus, dominis etiam casa parva duobus 700 vertitur in templum: furcas subiere columnae, 701 stramina flavescunt, aurataque tecta videntur 702 caelataeque fores adopertaque marmore tellus. 703 Talia tum placido Saturnius edidit ore: 704 “Dicite, iuste senex et femina coniuge iusto 705 digna, quid optetis.” Cum Baucide pauca locutus 706 iudicium superis aperit commune Philemon: 707 “Esse sacerdotes delubraque	716 the conflict of her passion brought new tears. 717 As when the wind has seized upon a ship 718 and blows against a tide of equal force, 719 the vexed vessel feels repellent powers, 720 and with unsteady motion sways to both; 721 so did Althaea hesitate between 722 the conflict of her passions: when her rage 723 had cooled, her fury was as fast renewed: 724 but always the unsatisfied desire 725 of blood, to ease the disembodied shades 726 of her slain brothers, seemed to overcome 727 the mother-instinct; and intensity 728 of conduct proved the utmost test of love. 729 She took the billet in her arms and stood 730 before the leaping flames, and said, “Alas, 731 be this the funeral pyre of my own flesh!” 732 And as she held in her relentless hand 733 the destiny of him she loved, and stood 734 before the flames, in all her wretchedness 735 she moaned, “You sad Eumenides attend! 736 Relentless Gods of punishment,—turn, turn 737 your dreadful vision on these baneful rites! 738 I am avenging and committing crime! 739 With death must death be justified and crime 740 be added unto crime! Let funerals 741 upon succeeding funerals attend! 742 “Let these accumulating woes destroy 743 a wicked race. Shall happy Oeneus bask 744 in the great fame of his victorious son, 745 and Thestius mourn without slaughtered ones?

	vestra tueri 708 poscimus; et quoniam concordes egimus annos, 709 auferat hora duos eadem, ne coniugis umquam 710 busta meae videam neu sim tumulandus ab illa.” 711 Vota fides sequitur. Templi tutela fuere, 712 donec vita data est. Annis aevoque soluti 713 ante gradus sacros cum starent forte locique 714 narrarent casus, frondere Philemona Baucis, 715 Baucida conspexit senior frondere Philemon 716 Iamque super geminos crescente cacumine vultus 717 mutua, dum licuit reddebant dicta “vale” que 8.718	718 “o coniunx” dixere simul, simul abdita texit 719 ora frutex. Ostendit adhuc Thyneius illic 720 incola de gemino vicinos corpore truncos. 721 Haec mihi non vani (neque erat cur fallere vellent) 722 narravere senes: equidem pendentia vidi 723 serta super ramos, ponensque recentia dixi 724 “cura deum di sint, et qui coluere colantur.”” 725 Desierat cunctosque et res et moverat auctor, 726 Thesea praecipue. Quem facta audire volentem 727 mira deum, innixus cubito Calydonius amnis 728 talibus adloquitur: “Sunt, o fortissime, quorum 729 forma semel mota est et in hoc renovamine mansit, 730 sunt, quibus in plures ius est transire figuras, 731 ut tibi, complexi terram maris incola, Proteu. 732 Nam modo te iuvenem, modo te videre leonem; 733 nunc violentus aper, nunc, quem tetigisse timerent, 734 anguis eras, modo te faciebant cornua taurum. 735 Saepe lapis poteras, arbor quoque saepe videri; 736 interdum, faciem liquidarum	746 'Tis better they should both lament the deed! 747 Witness the act of my affection, shades 748 of my departed brothers! and accept 749 my funeral offering, given at a cost 750 beyond my strength to bear. Ah wretched me! 751 Distracted is my reason! Pity me, 752 the yearnings of a stricken mother's heart 753 withholding me from duty! Aye, although 754 his punishment be just, my hands refuse 755 the office of such vengeance. What, shall he 756 alive, victorious, flushed with his success, 757 inherit the broad realms of Calydon, 758 and you, my slaughtered brothers, unavenged, 759 dissolved in ashes, float upon the air, 760 unpalpitating phantoms? How can I 761 endure the thought of it? Oh let the wretch 762 forever perish, and with him be lost 763 the hopes of his sad father, in the wreck 764 of his distracted kingdom. Where are now 765 the love and feelings of a mother; how 766 can I forget the bitter pangs endured 767 while twice times five the slow moon waxed and waned? 768 “O had you perished in your infancy 769 by those first fires, and I had suffered it! 770 Your life was in my power! and now your death 771 is the result of wrongs which you have done— 772 take now a just reward for what you did: 773 return to me the life I gave and saved. 774 When from the flames I snatched the fatal brand. 775 Return that gift or take my wretched life, imitatus aquarum, 737 flumen eras, interdum undis contrarius ignis. 738 Nec minus Autolyci coniunx, Erysichthone nata, 739 iuris habet. Pater huius erat, qui numina divum 740 sperneret et nullos aris adoleret odores. 741 Ille etiam Cereale nemus violasse securi 742 dicitur et lucos ferro temerasse vetustos. 743 Stabat in his ingens annoso robore quercus, 744 una nemus; vittae mediam memoresque tabellae 745 sertaque cingebant, voti argumenta potentis. 746 Saepe sub hac dryades festas duxere choreas, 747 saepe etiam manibus nexis ex ordine trunci 8.748	748 circuiere modum, mensuraque roboris ulnas 749 quinque ter implebat. Nec non et cetera tantum 750 silva sub hac, silva quantum fuit herba sub omni. 751 Non tamen idcirco ferrum Triopeius illa 752 abstinuit famulosque iubet succidere sacrum 753 robur; et ut iussos cunctari vidit, ab uno 754 edidit haec rapta sceleratus verba securi: 755 “Non dilecta deae solum, sed et ipsa licebit 756 sit dea, iam tanget frondente cacumine terram.” 757 Dixit, et obliquos dum telum librat in ictus, 758 contremuit gemitumque dedit Deoia quercus: 759 et pariter frondes, pariter pallescere glandes 760 coepere ac longi pallorem ducere rami. 761 Cuius ut in trunco fecit manus impia vulnus, 762 haud aliter fluxit discusso cortice sanguis, 763 quam solet, ante aras ingens ubi victima taurus 764 concidit, abrupta cruor e cervice profundi. 765 Obstipuere omnes, aliquisque ex	776 that I may hasten to my brothers' tomb. 777 “What dreadful deed can satisfy the law, 778 when I for love against my love am forced? 779 For even as my brothers' wounds appear 780 in visions dreadful to denounce my son, 781 the love so nurtured in a mother's breast 782 breaks down the resolution! Wretched me! 783 Such vengeance for my brothers overcomes 784 first at your birth I gave it, and again 785 the yearning of a mother for her son! 786 Let not my love denounce my vengeance! 787 My soul may follow with its love the shade 788 of him I sacrifice, and following him 789 my shade and his and yours unite below.” 790 She spoke and as she turned her face away, 791 she threw the fatal billet on the fire, 792 and as the flames devoured it, a strange groan 793 was heard to issue from the burning wood 794 but Meleager at a distance knows 795 of naught to wreck his hour of victory, 796 until he feels the flame of burning wood 797 scorching with secret fire his forfeit life. 798 Yet with a mighty will, disdaining pain 799 he grieves his bloodless and ignoble death. 800 He calls Ancaeus happy for the wounds 801 that caused his death. With sighs and groans he called 802 his aged father's name, and then the names 803 of brothers, sisters, and his wife—and last, 804 they say he called upon his

	omnibus audet 766 deterrere nefas saevamque inhibere bipennem. 767 Adspicit hunc “mentis” que “piae cape praemia!” dixit 768 Thessalus, inque virum convertit ab arbore ferrum 769 detruncatque caput repetitaque robora caedit, 770 redditus et medio sonus est de robore talis: 771 “Nympha sub hoc ego sum Cereri gratissima ligno, 772 quae tibi factorum poenas instare tuorum 773 vaticinor moriens, nostri solacia leti.” 774 Persequitur scelus ille suum, labefactaque tandem 775 ictibus innumeris adductaque funibus arbor 776 corruit et multam prostravit pondere silvam. 777 Attonitae dryades damno nemorumque suoque,	mother's name. 805 His torment always with the fire increased,
8.778	778 omnes germanae, Cererem cum vestibus atris 779 maerentes adeunt poenamque Erysichthonis orant. 780 Adnuit his capitisque sui pulcherrima motu 781 concussit gravidis oneratos messibus agros. 782 Moliturque genus poenae miserabile, si non 783 ille suis esset nulli miserabilis actis, 784 pestifera lacerare Fame. Quae quatenus ipsi 785 non adeunda deae est (neque enim Cereremque Famemque 786 fata coire sinunt), montani numinis unam 787 talibus agrestem compellat oreada dictis: 788 “Est locus extremis Scythiae glacialis in oris, 789 triste solum, sterilis, sine fruge, sine arbore tellus; 790 Frigus iners illic habitant Pallorque Tremorque 791 et ieiuna Fames. Ea se in praecordia condat 792 sacrilegi scelerata iube; nec copia rerum 793 vincat eam, superetque meas certamine vires. 794 Neve viae spatium te terreat,	806 until, as little of the wood remained,— 807 his pain diminished with the heat's decrease; 808 and as the flames extinguished, so his life 809 slowly ascended in the rising air. 810 And all the mighty realm of Calydon 811 was filled with lamentations — young and old 812 the common people and the nobles mourned; 813 and all the wailing women tore their hair 814 his father threw his body on the ground, 815 and as he covered his white hair and face 816 with ashy dust, bewailed his aged days. 817 Althaea, maddened in her mother's grief, 818 has punished herself with a ruthless hand; 819 she pierced her heart with iron. —Oh! if some God 820 had given a resounding harp, a voice 821 an hundred-fold more mighty, and a soul 822 enlarged with genius, I could never tell 823 the grief of his unhappy sisters. —They, 824 regardless of all shame, beat on their breasts; 825 before the body was consumed with fire, 826 embraced it, and again embracing it, 827 rained kisses on their loved one and the bier. 828 And when the flames had burnt his shrinking form 829 they strained his gathered ashes to their breasts, 830 and prostrate on the tomb kissed his dear name, 831 cut only in the stone,—and bathed it with their

	accipe currus, 795 accipe quos frenis alte moderere dracones.” 796 Et dedit. Illa dato subvecta per aera curru 797 devenit in Scythiam rigidique cacumine montis 798 (Caucason appellant) serpentum colla levavit 799 quaesitamque Famem lapidoso vidit in agro 800 unguibus et raras vellentem dentibus herbas. 801 Hirtus erat crinis, cava lumina, pallor in ore, 802 labra incana situ, scabrae rubigine fauces, 803 dura cutis, per quam spectari viscera possent; 804 ossa sub incurvis exstabant arida lumbis, 805 ventris erat pro ventre locus, pendere putares 806 pectus et a spinae tantummodo crate teneri. 807 Auxerat articulos macies, genuumque tumebat	tears 832 Latona's daughter, glutted with the woes 833 inflicted on Parthaon's house, now gave 834 two of the weeping sisters wide-spread wings, 835 but Gorge and the spouse of Hercules
8.808	808 orbis, et inmodico prodibant tubere tali. 809 Hanc procul ut vidit (neque enim est accedere iuxta 810 ausa), refert mandata deae: paulumque morata, 811 quamquam aberat longe, quamquam modo venerat illuc, 812 visa tamen sensisse famem retroque dracones 813 egit in Haemoniam, versis sublimis habenis. 814 Dicta Fames Cereris, quamvis contraria semper 815 illius est operi, peragit. Perque aera vento 816 ad iussam delata domum est et protinus intrat 817 sacrilegi thalamos altoque sopore solutum 818 (noctis enim tempus) geminis amplectitur ulnis: 819 seque viro inspirat faucesque et pectus et ora 820 adflat et in vacuis spargit ieiunia venis. 821 Functaque mandato fecundum deserit orbem 822 inque domos inopes adsueta revertitur antra. 823 Lenis adhuc somnus placidis	836 not so were changed. Latona stretched long wings 837 upon their arms, transformed their mouths to beaks, 838 and sent them winging through the lucent air.

	Erysichthona pennis 824 mulcebat: petit ille dapes sub imagine somni 825 oraque vana movet dentemque in dente fatigat 826 exercetque cibo delusum guttur inani 827 proque epulis tenues nequiquam devorat auras. 828 Ut vero est expulsa quies, furit ardor edendi 829 perque avidas fauces incensaque viscera regnat. 830 Nec mora, quod pontus, quod terra, quod educat aer, 831 poscit et adpositis queritur ieiunia mensis 832 inque epulis epulas quaerit; quodque urbibus esse 833 quodque satis poterat populo, non sufficit uni, 834 plusque cupit, quo plura suam demittit in alvum. 835 Utque fretum recipit de tota flumina terra 836 nec satiatur aquis peregrinosque ebibit amnes, 837 utque rapax ignis non umquam alimenta recusat
8.838	838 innumerasque faces cremat et, quo copia maior 839 est data, plura petit turbaque voracior ipsa est: 840 sic epulas omnes Erysichthonis ora profani 841 accipiunt poscuntque simul. Cibus omnis in illo 842 causa cibi est, semperque locus fit inanis edendo. 843 Iamque fame patrias altaque voragine ventris 844 attenuarat opes, sed inattenuata manebat 845 tum quoque dira fames, implacataeque vigebat 846 flamma gulae. Tandem, demisso in viscera censu, 847 filia restabat, non illo digna parente. 848 Hanc quoque vendit inops. Dominum generosa recusat 849 et vicina suas tendens super aequora palmas 850 “eripe me domino; qui raptae praemia nobis 851 virginitatis habes” ait. Haec Neptunus habebat. 852 Qui prece non spreta, quamvis	839 And Theseus, meantime, having done great deeds, 840 was wending towards Tritonian Athen's towers, 841 but Achelous, swollen with great rains, 842 opposed his journey and delayed his steps. 843 “O famous son of Athens, come to me, 844 beneath my roof, and leave my rapid floods; 845 for they are wont to bear enormous beams, 846 and hurl up heavy stones to bar the way,— 847 mighty with roaring, down the steep ravines. 848 And I have seen the sheep-folds on my banks 849 swept down the flood, together with the sheep; 850 and in the current neither strength availed 851 the ox for safety, nor swift speed the horse. 852 When rushed the melting snows from mountain peaks 853 how many bodies of unwary men 854 this flood has overwhelmed in whirling waves! 855 Rest safely then, until my river runs 856 within its usual bounds—till it contains 857 its flowing waters in its proper banks.” 858 and gladly answered Theseus, “I will make 859 good use of both your dwelling and advice.” 860 And waiting not he entered a rude hut, 861 of porous

	modo visa sequenti 853 esset ero, formamque novat vultumque virilem 854 induit et cultus piscem capientibus aptos. 855 Hanc dominus spectans “o qui pendentia parvo 856 aera cibo celas, moderator harundinis,” inquit 857 “sic mare compositum, sic sit tibi piscis in unda 858 credulus et nullos, nisi fixus, sentiat hamos: 859 quae modo cum vili turbatis veste capillis 860 litore in hoc steterat (nam stantem in litore vidi), 861 dic ubi sit: neque enim vestigia longius exstant.” 862 Illa dei munus bene cedere sensit et a se 863 se quaeri gaudens, his est resecuta rogantem: 864 “Quisquis es, ignoscas; in nullam lumina partem 865 gurgite ab hoc flexi studioque operatus inhaesi. 866 Quoque minus dubites, sic has deus aequoris artes 867 adiuvet, ut nemo iamdudum litore in isto,	pumice and of rough stone built. 862 The floor was damp and soft with springy moss, 863 and rows of shells and murex arched the roof. 864 And now Hyperion having measured quite 865 two thirds of daylight, Theseus and his friends 866 reclined upon the couches.—On his right 867 Ixion's son was placed, and on his left 868 the gray-haired hero Lelex; and others
8.868	868 me tamen excepto, nec femina constitit ulla.” 869 Credidit et verso dominus pede pressit harenam 870 elususque abiit: illi sua reddita forma est. 871 Ast ubi habere suam transformia corpora sensit, 872 saepe pater dominis Triopeida tradit. At illa 873 nunc equa, nunc ales, modo bos, modo cervus abibat 874 praebebatque avido non iusta alimenta parenti. 875 Vis tamen illa mali postquam consumpserat omnem 876 materiam dederatque gravi nova pabula morbo, 877 ipse suos artus lacero divellere morsu 878 coepit et infelix minuendo corpus alebat. 879 Quid moror externis? Etiam mihi nempe novandi est 880 corporis, o iuvenis, numero finita potestas. 881 Nam modo qui nunc sum videor,	869 deemed worthy by the Acarnanian-god 870 who was so joyful in his noble guests. 871 Without delay the barefoot nimble Nymphs 872 attending to the banquet, rich food brought; 873 and after all were satisfied with meat 874 and dainties delicate, the careful Nymphs 875 removed all traces of the feast, and served 876 delicious wine in bowls embossed with gems. 877 And after they had eaten, Theseus arose, 878 and as he pointed with his finger, said, 879 “Declare to me what name that island bears, 880 or is it one or more than one I see?” 881 To which the ready River-God replied: 882 “It is not one we see but five are there, 883 deceptive in the distance. And that you 884 may wonder less at what Diana did, 885 those islands were five Naiads.—Long ago, 886 ten bullocks for a sacrifice they slew; 887 and when the joyous festival was given, 888 ignoring me they bade all other Gods. 889 Indignant at the slight, I swelled with rage 890 as great as ever when my banks are full,— 891 and so redoubled

	modo flector in anguem, 882 armenti modo dux vires in cornua sumo, — 883 cornua, dum potui! nunc pars caret altera telo 884 frontis, ut ipse vides.” Gemitus sunt verba secuti.	both in rage and flood, 892 I ravished woods from woods, and fields from fields, 893 and hurled into the sea the very soil, 894 together with the Nymphs, who then at last 895 remembered their neglect. And soon my waves, 896 united with the ocean streams, cut through 897 the solid soil, and fashioned from the one, 898 five islands you may see amid the waves, 9.1	1 Quae gemitus truncaeque deo Neptunius heros 2 causa rogat frontis, cum sic Calydonius amnis 3 coepit inornatos redimitus harundine crines: 4 “Triste petis munus. Quis enim sua proelia victus 5 commemorare velit? Referam tamen ordine. Nec tam 6 turpe fuit vinci, quam contendisse decorum est, 7 magnaque dat nobis tantus solacia victor. 8 Nomine siqua suo fando pervenit ad aures 9 Deianira tuas—quondam pulcherrima virgo 10 multorumque fuit spes invidiosa procorum. 11 Cum quibus ut soceri domus est intrata petiti, 12 “accipe me generum,” dixi “Parthaone nate:” 13 dixit et Alcides. Alii cessere duobus. 14 Ille Iovem socerum dare se famamque laborum 15 et superata suae referebat iussa novercae. 16 Contra ego “turpe deum mortali cedere” dixi 17 (nondum erat ille deus), “regem me cernis aquarum 18 cursibus obliquis inter tua regna fluentum. 19 Nec gener externis hospes tibi missus ab oris, 20 sed popularis ero et rerum pars una tuarum. 21 Tantum ne noceat, quod me nec regia Iuno 22 odit et omnis abest iussorum poena laborum. 23 Nam, quo te iactas, Alcmena nate, creatum, 24 Iuppiter aut falsus pater est, aut crimine verus. 25 Matris adulterio patrem petis. Elige,	1 To him the hero, who proclaimed himself 2 a favored son of Neptune, answered now; 3 “Declare the reason of your heavy sighs, 4 and how your horn was broken?” And at once 5 the Calydonian River-God replied, 6 binding with reeds his unadorned rough locks: 7 “It is a mournful task you have required, 8 for who can wish to tell his own disgrace? 9 But truly I shall speak without disguise, 10 for my defeat, if rightly understood, 11 should be my glory.—Even to have fought 12 in battle with a hero of such might, 13 affords me consolation. 14 “Deianira 15 (you may have heard some tales of her) was once 16 the envied hope of many. She was then 17 a lovely virgin.—I, among the rest 18 who loved this maiden, entered the fair home 19 of her great father Oeneus, and I said; 20 “ ‘Consider all my claims, Parthaon's son, 21 for I am come to plead your daughter's cause 22 and mine—So you may make me son-in-law.,—’ 23 no sooner was it said, than Hercules 24 in such words also claimed the virgin's hand: 25 all others quickly yielded to our claims. 26 “He boasted his descent from Jupiter; 27 the glory of his labors and great deeds 28 performed at his unjust stepmother's wish. 29 “But as he was not then a God, it seemed 30 disgraceful if my state should yield my right; fictum 26 esse Iovem malis, an te per dedecus ortum.” 27 Talia dicentem iamdudum lumine torvo 28 spectat et accensae non fortiter imperat irae 29 verbaque tot reddit: “Melior mihi dextera lingua. 30 Dummodo pugnando superem, tu vince loquendo,” 9.31	31 congrediturque ferox. Puduit modo magna locutum 32 cedere: reieci viridem de corpore vestem 33 bracchiaque opposui tenuique a pectore varas 34 in statione manus et pugnae membra paravi. 35 Ille cavis hausto spargit me pulvere palmis 36 inque vicem fulvae tactu flavescit harenae. 37 Et modo cervicem, modo crura micantia captat, 38 aut captare putes, omnique a parte lacessit. 39 Me mea defendit gravitas frustraque petebar, 40 haud secus ac moles, quam magno murmure fluctus 41 oppugnant: manet illa suoque est pondere tuta. 42 Digredimur paulum rursusque ad bella coimus, 43 inque gradu stetimus, certi non cedere; eratque 44 cum pede pes iunctus, totoque ego pectore pronus 45 et digitos digitis et frontem fronte premebam. 46 Non aliter vidi fortes concurrere tauros, 47 cum pretium pugnae toto nitidissima saltu 48 expetitur coniunx: spectant armenta paventque 49 nescia, quem maneat tanti victoria regni. 50 Ter sine profectu voluit nitentia contra 51 reicere Alcides a se mea pectora; quarto 52 excutit amplexus adductaque bracchia solvit, 53 inpulsumque manu (certum est mihi vera fateri) 54 protinus avertit tergoque onerosus	31 so I contended with these haughty words, 32 ‘Why should this alien of a foreign land, 33 contending for your daughter, match himself 34 to me! king of the waters in this realm! 35 For as I wind around, across your lands, 36 I must be of your people, and a part 37 of your great state. Oh, let it not be said, 38 because the jealous Juno had no thought 39 to punish me by labors, my descent 40 is not so regal! This tremendous boast, 41 that you, Alcmena's son, are sprung from Jove, 42 falls at the touch of truth;—or it reveals 43 the shame of a weak mother, who so gained 44 your doubtful glory of descent from Heaven! 45 Prove your descent from Jupiter is false, 46 or else confess you are the son of shame!’ 47 “But Hercules, unable to control 48 the flame of his great wrath, scowled as I spoke. 49 He briefly answered me, ‘My hand excels 50 my tongue; let me now overcome in fight, 51 and I may suffer your offence of words.’ 52 “Full of unvented rage he rushed on me, 53 but firm I stood, ashamed to yield a foot— 54 I had so largely boasted, no retreat was left, 55 and so I doffed my green robe—Striking guard, 56 with clenched hands doubled at my breast, 57 I stood my ground. He scooped up in his hand 58 fine, yellow dust; and tossed it on the air 59 so that the tawny powder sprinkled us; 60 quick-shifting then he sought to strike my neck, inhaesit. 55 Siqua fides neque ficta mihi nunc gloria voce 56 quaeritur, inposito pressus mihi monte videbar. 57 Vix tamen inserui sudore fluentia multo 58 bracchia, vix solvi duros a corpore nexus: 59 instat anhelanti prohibetque resumere vires, 60 et cervice mea potitur. Tum denique tellus

9.61	61 pressa genu nostro est, et harenas ore momordi. 62 Inferior virtute meas divertor ad artes, 63 elaborque viro longum formatus in anguem. 64 Qui postquam flexos sinuavi corpus in orbes 65 cumque fero movi linguam stridore bisulcam, 66 risit et inludens nostras Tirynthius artes 67 “cunarum labor est angues superare mearum,” 68 dixit “et ut vincas alios, Acheloe, dracones, 69 pars quota Lernaeae serpens eris unus echidnae? 70 Vulneribus fecunda suis erat illa, nec ullum 71 de centum numero caput est inpune recisum, 72 quin gemino cervix herede valentior esset. 73 Hanc ego ramosam natis e caede colubris 74 crescentemque malo domui domitamque reclusi. 75 Quid fore te credas, falsum qui versus in anguem 76 arma aliena moves, quem forma precaria celat?” 77 Dixerat, et summo digitorum vincula collo 78 inicit: angebar ceu guttura forcipe pressus, 79 pollicibusque meas pugnabam evellere fauces. 80 Sic quoque devicto restabat tertia tauri 81 forma trucis: tauro mutatus membra rebello. 82 Induit ille toris a laeva parte lacertos, 83 admissumque trahens sequitur	61 or feint at my quick-moving legs, and turn 62 swift moving to attack me at all points. 63 But as a huge cliff in the sea remains 64 unmoved, unshaken by the sounding waves, 65 so my great size, against his vain attacks, 66 defended me securely—Back we went; 67 retiring for a space; then rushed again 68 together, furious, and with foot to foot, 69 determined not to yield, defiant stood, 70 till, forward-bending from my waist and hips, 71 I pressed my forehead against his and locked 72 his fingers into mine: so, have I seen 73 two strong bulls rush in combat for the good 74 of some smooth heifer in the pasture—while 75 the herd a-tremble and uncertain, wait; 76 ready to give allegiance to the one 77 most worthy of dominion. 78 “Thrice in vain 79 Hercules strove to push my breast from his, 80 but I pressed ever closer—till, the fourth 81 attempt succeeding, he unloosed my grip, 82 and breaking from my circling arms drew back, 83 and struck me such a buffet with his hand, 84 it twisted me about, and instantly 85 he clung with all his weight upon my back— 86 “Believe me I have not suppressed the truth. 87 Nor shall I try to gain applause not due: 88 I seemed to bear a mountain on my back. — 89 straining and dripping sweat, I broke his hold,— 90 with great exertion I unlocked his grip.

	depressaque dura 84 cornua figit humo meque alta sternit harena. 85 Nec satis hoc fuerat: rigidum fera dextera cornu 86 dum tenet, infregit truncaque a fronte revellit. 87 Naides hoc, pomis et odoro flore repletum, 88 sacrarunt, divesque meo Bona Copia cornu est.” 89 Dixerat, et nymphe ritu succincta Dianae, 90 una ministrarum, fusis utrimque capillis, 9.91	91 incessit totumque tulit praedivite cornu 92 autumnum et mensas, felicia poma, secundas. 93 Lux subit, et primo feriente cacumina sole 94 discedunt iuvenes: neque enim dum flumina pacem 95 et placidos habeant lapsus totaeque residant, 96 opperiuntur, aquae. Vultus Achelous agrestes 97 et lacerum cornu mediis caput abdidit undis. 98 Hunc tamen ablati domuit iactura decoris, 99 cetera sospes habet; capitis quoque fronde saligna 100 aut super inposita celatur harundine damnum. 101 At te, Nesse ferox, eiusdem virginis ardor 102 perdiderat volucri traiectum terga sagitta. 103 Namque nova repetens patrios cum coniuge muros 104 venerat Eueni rapidas Iove natus ad undas. 105 Uberior solito, nimbis hiemalibus auctus 106 verticibusque frequens erat atque inpervius amnis. 107 Intrepidum pro se, curam de coniuge agentem 108 Nessus adit, membrisque valens scitusque vadorum, 109 “officio” que “meo ripa sistetur in illa 110 haec,” ait “Alcide. Tu viribus utere nando!” 111 pallentemque metu fluviumque ipsumque timentem 112 tradidit Aonius pavidam	91 He pressed upon me, as I strained for breath, 92 preventing a renewal of my strength, 93 and seized upon my neck. Then at the last, 94 my bent knee went down on the gritty earth, 95 I bit the sand. So, worsted in my strength, 96 I sought diversion by an artifice, 97 and changed me to a serpent.—I then slipped 98 from his tight clutches my great length, and coiled 99 my body now transformed to snaky folds— 100 hissing I darted my divided tongue. 101 “But Hercules, Alcides, only laughed 102 and in derision of my scheming, said, 103 ‘It was the pastime of my cradle days 104 to strangle better snakes than you—and though 105 your great length may excel all of your kind, 106 how small a part of that Lernaean snake 107 would you—one serpent be? It grew from wounds 108 I gave (at first it had one hundred heads) 109 and every time I severed one head from 110 its neck two grew there in the place of one, 111 by which its strength increased. This creature then 112 outbranching with strong serpents, sprung from death 113 and thriving on destruction, I destroyed.— 114 What do you think will then become of you, 115 disguised so in deceitful serpent-form, 116 wielding a borrowed weapon not your own 117 “And after he had ridiculed me thus, 118 he gouged his fingers underneath my jaws, 119 so that my throat was tortured, as if squeezed 120 with forceps, while I struggled in his grip.

	Calydonida Nesso. 113 Mox, ut erat, pharetraque gravis spolioque leonis 114 (nam clavam et curvos trans ripam miserat arcus), 115 “quandoquidem coepi, superentur flumina!” dixit, 116 nec dubitat nec, qua sit clementissimus amnis, 117 quaerit et obsequio deferri spernit aquarum. 118 Iamque tenens ripam, missos cum tolleret arcus, 119 coniugis agnovit vocem: Nessoque paranti 120 fallere depositum “quo te fiducia” clamat
9.121	121 “vana pedum, violente, rapit? Tibi, Nesse biformis, 122 dicimus. Exaudi nec res intercipe nostras! 123 Si te nulla mei reverentia movit, at orbes 124 concubitus vetitos poterant inhibere paterni. 125 Haud tamen effugies, quamvis ope fidis equina: 126 vulnere, non pedibus te consequar.” Ultima dicta 127 res probat, et missa fugientia terga sagitta 128 traicit: exstabat ferrum de pectore aduncum. 129 Quod simul evulsum est, sanguis per utrumque foramen 130 emicuit mixtus Lernaei tabe veneni. 131 Excipit hunc Nessus “neque enim moriemur inulti” 132 secum ait et calido velamina tincta cruore 133 dat munus raptae velut inritamen amoris. 134 Longa fuit medii mora temporis, actaque magni 135 Herculis inplerant terras odiumque novercae. 136 Victor ab Oechalia Cenaeo sacra parabat 137 vota Iovi, cum Fama loquax praecessit ad aures, 138 Deianira, tuas, quae veris addere falsa 139 gaudet et e minimo sua per mendacia crescit, 140 Amphitryoniaden Ioles ardore teneri. 141 Credit amans, venerisque novae	121 “Twice was I vanquished, there remained to me 122 a third form so again I changed to seem 123 a savage bull, and with my limbs renewed 124 in that form fought once more. He threw his arms 125 about the left side of my ponderous neck, 126 and dragging on me followed as I ran. 127 He seized on my hard horns, and, tugging turned 128 and twisted me, until he fastened them 129 firm in the surface of the earth; and pushed 130 me, helpless, to the shifting sand beneath. 131 Not yet content he laid his fierce right hand 132 on my tough horn, and broke and tore it from 133 my mutilated head.—This horn, now heaped 134 with fruits delicious and sweet-smelling flowers, 135 the Naiads have held sacred from that hour, 136 devoted to the bounteous goddess Plenty.’ 137 All this the River-god said; then a nymph, 138 a lovely nymph like fair Diana dressed, 139 whose locks were flowing down on either side, 140 came graceful to the board, and brought to them 141 of Autumn's plenty in an ample horn, 142 and gave to them selected apples for 143 a second course. 144 And now, as early dawn 145 appeared, and as the rising sunlight flashed 146 on golden summits of surrounding hills, 147 the young men waited not until the stream 148 subsiding, had resumed its peaceful way, 149 but all arose, reluctant, and went forth. 150 Then Achelous, in his moving waves, perterrita fama 142 indulsit primo lacrimis flendoque dolorem 143 diffudit miseranda suum; mox deinde “quid autem 144 flemus?” ait “paelex lacrimis laetabitur istis. 145 Quae quoniam adveniet, properandum aliquidque novandum est, 146 dum licet et nondum thalamos tenet altera nostros. 147 Conquerar an sileam? Repetam Calydona morerne? 148 Excedam tectis an, si nihil amplius, obstem? 149 Quid si me, Meleagre, tuam memor esse sororem 150 forte paro facinus, quantumque iniuria possit 9.151	151 femineusque dolor, iugulata paelice testor?” 152 In cursus animus varios abit: omnibus illis 153 praetulit inbutam Nesseo sanguine vestem 154 mittere, quae vires defecto reddat amori. 155 Ignaroque Lichae, quid tradat, nescia, luctus 156 ipsa suos tradit blandisque (miserrima!) verbis, 157 dona det illa viro, mandat. Capit inscius heros 158 induiturque umeris Lernaeae virus echidnae. 159 Tura dabat primis et verba precantia flammis 160 vinaque marmoreas patera fundebat in aras: 161 incaluit vis illa mali resolutaque flammis 162 Herculeos abiit late dilapsa per artus. 163 Dum potuit, solita gemitum virtute repressit; 164 victa malis postquam est patientia, reppulit aras 165 inplevitque suis nemorosam vocibus Oeten. 166 Nec mora, letiferam conatur scindere vestem: 167 qua trahitur, trahit illa cutem, foedumque relatu, 168 aut haeret membris frustra temptata revelli, 169 aut laceros artus et grandia detegit ossa. 170 Ipse cruor, gelido ceu quondam	151 hid his fine rustic features and his head, 152 scarred by the wound which gave the Horn of Plenty. 153 Loss of his horn had greatly humbled him, 154 it was so cherished though his only loss, — 155 but he could hide the sad disgrace with reeds 156 and willow boughs entwined about his head. 157 O, Nessus! your fierce passion for the same 158 maid utterly destroyed even you, pierced through 159 the body by a flying arrow-point. 160 Returning to the city of his birth 161 great Hercules, the son of Jupiter, 162 with his new bride, arrived upon the bank 163 of swift Evenus—after winter rains 164 had swollen it so far beyond its wont, 165 that, full of eddies, it was found to be 166 impassable. The hero stood there, brave 167 but anxious for his bride. Nessus, the centaur, 168 strong-limbed and well-acquainted with those fords, 169 came up to him and said, “Plunge in the flood 170 and swim with unimpeded strength—for with 171 my help she will land safely over there.” 172 And so the hero, with no thought of doubt, 173 trusted the damsel to the centaur's care, 174 though she was pale and trembling with her fear 175 of the swift river and the centaur's aid. 176 This done, the hero, burdened as he was 177 with quiver and the lion skin (for he 178 had tossed his club and curving bow across 179 the river to the other bank), declared, 180 “Since I have undertaken it, at once 181 this rushing water must be overcome.” 182 And instantly, he plunged in without lamina candens 171 tincta lacu, stridit coquiturque ardente veneno. 172 Nec modus est: sorbent avidae praecordia flammae, 173 caeruleusque fluit toto de corpore sudor, 174 ambustique sonant nervi: caecaque medullis 175 tabe liquefactis tollens ad sidera palmas 176 “cladibus,” exclamat “Saturnia, pascere nostris, 177 pascere et hanc pestem specta, crudelis, ab alto 178 corque ferum satia. Vel si miserandus et hosti, 179 hoc est, si tibi sum, diris cruciatibus aegram 180 invisamque animam natamque laboribus aufer:	thought

9.181	181 hoc mihi munus erit; decet haec dare dona novercam. 182 Ergo ego foedantem peregrino templa cruore 183 Busirin domui saevoque alimenta parentis 184 Antaeo eripui? Nec me pastoris Hiberi 185 forma triplex, nec forma triplex tua, Cerbere, movit? 186 Vosne, manus, validi pressistis cornua tauri? 187 Vestrum opus Elis habet, vestrum Stymphalides undae 188 Partheniumque nemus? Vestra virtute relatus 189 Thermodontiaco caelatus balteus auro 190 pomaque ab insomni concustodita dracone? 191 Nec mihi Centauri potuere resistere, nec mi 192 Arcadiae vastator aper? Nec profuit hydrae 193 crescere per damnum geminasque resumere vires? 194 Quid tum? Thracis equos humano sanguine pingues 195 plenaque corporibus laceris praesepia vidi 196 visaque deieci dominumque ipsosque peremi. 197 His elisa iacet moles Nemeaea lacertis, 198 hac caelum cervice tuli. Defessa iubendo est 199 saeva Iovis coniunx: ego sum	183 of where he might cross with most ease, for so 184 he scorned to take advantage of smooth water. 185 And after he had gained the other bank, 186 while picking up his bow which there was thrown, 187 he heard his wife's voice, anxious for his help. 188 He called to Nessus who was in the act 189 then to betray his trust: “Vain confidence! 190 You are not swift enough, vile ravisher! 191 You two-formed monster Nessus, I warn you! 192 Hear me, and never dare to come between 193 me and my love. If fear has no restraint, 194 your father's dreadful fate on whirling wheel, 195 should frighten you from this outrageous act: 196 for you cannot escape, although you trust 197 the fleet-foot effort of a rapid horse. 198 I cannot overtake you with my feet 199 but I can shoot and halt you with a wound.” 200 his deed sustained the final warning word. 201 He shot an arrow through the centaur's back, 202 so that the keen barb was exposed beyond 203 his bleeding breast. He tore it from both wounds, 204 and life-blood spurted instantly, mixed with 205 the deadly poison of Lernaean hydra. 206 This Nessus caught, and muttering, “I shall not 207 die unavenged”, he gave his tunic, soaked 208 with blood to Deianira as a gift; 209 and said, “Keep this to strengthen waning love.” 210 Now many years passed by, and all the deeds, 211 and labors of the mighty indefessus agendo. 200 Sed nova pestis adest, cui nec virtute resisti 201 nec telis armisque potest. Pulmonibus errat 202 ignis edax imis perque omnes pascitur artus. 203 At valet Eurystheus!—et sunt qui credere possint 204 esse deos!” Dixit, perque altam saucius Oeten 205 haud aliter graditur, quam si venabula taurus 206 corpore fixa gerat, factique refugerit auctor. 207 Saepe illum gemitus edentem, saepe frementem, 208 saepe retemptantem totas infringere vestes 209 sternentemque trabes irascentemque videres 210 montibus aut patrio tendentem bracchia caelo.	Hercules, 212 gave to the wide world his unequalled fame;

9.211	211 Ecce Lichan trepidum latitantem rupe cavata 212 adspicit, utque dolor rabiem conlegerat omnem, 213 “tune, Licha,” dixit “feralia dona dedisti? 214 Tune meae necis auctor eris?” Tremit ille pavetque 215 pallidus et timide verba excusantia dicit. 216 Dicentem genibusque manus adhibere parantem 217 corripit Alcides et terque quaterque rotatum 218 mittit in Euboicas tormento fortius undas. 219 Ille per aerias pendens induruit auras, 220 utque ferunt imbres gelidis concrescere ventis, 221 inde nives fieri, nivibus quoque molle rotatis 222 adstringi et spissa glomerari grandine corpus: 223 sic illum validis iactum per inane lacertis 224 exsanguemque metu nec quicquam umoris habentem 225 in rigidos versum silices prior edidit aetas. 226 Nunc quoque in Euboico scopulus brevis eminet alto 227 gurgite et humanae servat vestigia formae; 228 quem, quasi sensurum, nautae	213 and finally appeased the hatred of 214 his fierce stepmother. 215 All victorious 216 returning from Oechalia, he prepared 217 to offer sacrifice, when at Cenaeum, 218 upon an altar he had built to Jupiter, 219 but tattling Rumor, swollen out of truth 220 from small beginning to a wicked lie, 221 declared brave Hercules, Amphitryon's son, 222 was burning for the love of Iole. 223 And Deianira—his fond wife—convinced 224 herself, the wicked rumor must be true. 225 Alarmed at the report of his new love, 226 at first, poor wife, she was dissolved in tears, 227 and then she sank in grievous misery. 228 But soon in angry mood, she rose and said: 229 “Why should I give up to my sorrow while 230 I drown my wretched spirit in weak tears? 231 Let me consider an effectual check— 232 while it is possible—even before 233 she comes, invader of my lawful bed: 234 shall I be silent or complain of it? 235 Must I go back to Calydon or stay? 236 Shall I depart unbidden, from my house? 237 Or, if no other method can prevail, 238 shall I oppose my rival's first approach? 239 O shade of Meleager, let me prove 240 I am yet worthy to be called your sister; 241 and in the desperate slaughter of this rival, 242 the world, astonished, may be taught to fear calcare verentur 229 appellantque Lichan.—At tu, Iovis inclita proles, 230 arboribus caesis, quas ardua gesserat Oete, 231 inque pyram structis, arcum pharetramque capacem 232 regnaque visuras iterum Troiana sagittas 233 ferre iubes Poeante satum. Quo flamma ministro est 234 subdita; dumque avidis comprenditur ignibus agger, 235 congeriem silvae Nemeaeo vellere summam 236 sternis et inposita clavae cervice recumbis, 237 haud alio vultu, quam si conviva iaceres 238 inter plena meri redimitus pocula sertis. 239 Iamque valens et in omne latus diffusa sonabat 240 securosque artus contemptoremque petebat

9.241	241 flamma suum; timuere dei pro vindice terrae. 242 Quos ita (sensit enim) laeto Saturnius ore 243 Iuppiter adloquitur: “Nostra est timor iste voluptas, 244 o superi, totoque libens mihi pectore grator, 245 quod memoris populi dicor rectorque paterque, 246 et mea progenies vestro quoque tuta favore est. 247 Nam quamquam ipsius datis hoc inmanibus actis, 248 obligor ipse tamen. Sed enim ne pectora vano 249 fida metu paveant: Oetaeas spernite flammas! 250 Omnia qui vicit, vincet, quos cernitis, ignes 251 nec nisi materna Vulcanum parte potentem 252 sentiet: aeternum est a me quod traxit et expers 253 atque inmune necis nullaque domabile flamma. 254 Idque ego defunctum terra caelestibus oris 255 accipiam, cunctisque meum laetabile factum 256 dis fore confido. Siquis tamen Hercule, siquis 257 forte deo doliturus erit, data	243 the vengeance of an injured woman's rage.” 244 So, torn by many moods, at last her mind 245 fixed on one thought:—she might still keep his love, 246 could certainly restore it, if she sent 247 to him the tunic soaked in Nessus' blood. 248 Unknowingly, she gave the fatal cause 249 of her own woe to trusting Lichas, whom 250 she urged in gentle words to take the gift, 251 from her to her loved husband Hercules. 252 He, unsuspecting, put the tunic on, 253 all covered with Lernaean hydra's poison. 254 The hero then was casting frankincense 255 into the sacred flames, and pouring wine 256 on marble altars, as his holy prayers 257 were floating to the Gods. The hallowed heat 258 striking upon his poisoned vesture, caused 259 Echidna-bane to melt into his flesh. 260 As long as he was able he withstood 261 the torture. His great fortitude was strong. 262 But when at last his anguish overcame 263 even his endurance, he filled all the wild 264 of Oeta with his cries: he overturned 265 those hallowed altars, then in frenzied haste 266 he strove to pull the tunic from his back. 267 The poisoned garment, cleaving to him, ripped 268 his skin, heat-shriveled, from his burning flesh. 269 Or, tightening on him, as his great

	praemia nolet, 258 sed meruisse dari sciet invitusque probabit.” 259 Adsensere dei: coniunx quoque regia visa est 260 cetera non duro, duro tamen ultima vultu 261 dicta tulisse Iovis seque indoluisse notatam. 262 Interea quodcumque fuit populabile flammae 263 Mulciber abstulerat, nec cognoscenda remansit 264 Herculis effigies; nec quicquam ab imagine ductum 265 matris habet, tantumque Iovis vestigia servat. 266 Utque novus serpens posita cum pelle senecta 267 luxuriare solet squamaque nitere recenti, 268 sic, ubi mortales Tirynthius exuit artus, 269 parte sui meliore viget maiorque videri 270 coepit et augusta fieri gravitate verendus.	strength pulled, 270 stripped with it the great muscles from his limbs, 271 leaving his huge bones bare. 272 Even his blood
9.271	271 Quem pater omnipotens inter cava nubila raptum 272 quadriiugo curru radiantibus intulit astris. 273 Sensit Atlas pondus.—Neque adhuc Stheneleius iras 274 solverat Eurystheus odiumque in prole paternum 275 exercebat atrox. At longis anxia curis 276 Argolis Alcmene, questus ubi ponat aniles, 277 cui referat nati testatos orbe labores, 278 cuive suos casus, Iolen habet. Herculis illam 279 imperiis thalamoque animoque receperat Hyllus 280 inpleratque uterum generoso semine, cum sic 281 incipit Alcmene: “Faveant tibi numina saltem 282 conripiantque moras, tum cum matura vocabis 283 praepositam timidis parientibus Ilithyiam, 284 quam mihi difficilem Iunonis gratia fecit. 285 Namque laboriferi cum iam natalis adesset 286 Herculis et decimum premeretur	273 audibly hissed, as red-hot blades when they 274 are plunged in water, so the burning bane 275 boiled in his veins. Great perspiration streamed 276 from his dissolving body, as the heat 277 consumed his entrails; and his sinews cracked, 278 brittle when burnt. The marrow in his bones 279 dissolved, as it absorbed the venom-heat. 280 There was no limit to his misery; 281 raising both hands up towards the stars of heaven, 282 he cried, “Come Juno, feast upon my death; 283 feast on me, cruel one, look down from your 284 exalted seat; behold my dreadful end 285 and glut your savage heart! Oh, if I may 286 deserve some pity from my enemy, 287 from you I mean, this hateful life of mine 288 take from me—sick with cruel suffering 289 and only born for toil. The loss of life 290 will be a boon to me, and surely is 291 a fitting boon, such as stepmothers give! 292 “Was it for this I slew Busiris, who 293 defiled his temples with the strangers' blood? 294 For this I took his mother's strength from fierce 295 antaeus—that I did not show a fear 296 before the Spanish shepherd's triple form? 297 Nor did I fear the monstrous triple form 298 of Cerberus.—And is it possible 299

	sidere signum, 287 tendebat gravitas uterum mihi, quodque ferebam, 288 tantum erat, ut posses auctorem dicere tecti 289 ponderis esse Iovem. Nec iam tolerare labores 290 ulterius poteram: quin nunc quoque frigidus artus, 291 dum loquor, horror habet, parsque est meminisse doloris. 292 Septem ego per noctes, totidem cruciata diebus, 293 fessa malis tendensque ad caelum bracchia magno 294 Lucinam Nixosque pares clamore vocabam. 295 Illa quidem venit, sed praecorrupta meumque 296 quae donare caput Iunoni vellet iniquae. 297 Utque meos audit gemitus, subsedit in illa 298 ante fores ara dextroque a poplite laevum 299 pressa genu digitis inter se pectine iunctis 300 sustinuit partus. Tacita quoque carmina voce	my hands once seized and broke the strong bull's horns? 300 And Elis knows their labor, and the waves 301 of Stymphalus, and the Parthenian woods. 302 For this the prowess of these hands secured 303 the Amazonian girdle wrought of gold; 304 and did my strong arms, gather all in vain 305 the fruit when guarded by the dragon's eyes. 306 The centaurs could not foil me, nor the boar 307 that ravaged in Arcadian fruitful fields. 308 Was it for this the hydra could not gain 309 double the strength from strength as it was lost?
9.301	301 dixit, et inceptos tenuerunt carmina partus. 302 Nitor et ingrato facio convicia demens 303 vana Iovi cupioque mori moturaque duros 304 verba queror silices. Matres Cadmeides adsunt 305 votaque suscipiunt exhortanturque dolentem. 306 Una ministrarum, media de plebe, Galanthis, 307 flava comas, aderat, faciendis strenua iussis, 308 officiis dilecta suis. Ea sensit iniqua 309 nescio quid Iunone geri, dumque exit et intrat 310 saepe fores, divam residentem vidit in ara 311 bracchiaque in genibus digitis conexa tenentem, 312 et “quaecumque es,” ait “dominae gratare: levata est 313 Argolis Alcmene potiturque puerpera voto.” 314 Exsiluit iunctasque manus pavefacta remisit 315 diva potens uteri: vinclis levor ipsa	310 And when I saw the steeds of Thrace, so fat 311 with human blood, and their vile mangers heaped 312 with mangled bodies, in a righteous rage 313 I threw them to the ground, and slaughtered them, 314 together with their master! In a cave 315 I crushed the Nemean monster with these arms; 316 and my strong neck upheld the wide-spread sky! 317 And even the cruel Juno, wife of Jove— 318 is weary of imposing heavy toils, 319 but I am not subdued performing them. 320 “A new calamity now crushes me, 321 which not my strength, nor valor, nor the use 322 of weapons can resist. Devouring flames 323 have preyed upon my limbs, and blasting heat 324 now shrivels the burnt tissue of my frame. 325 But still Eurystheus is alive and well! 326 And there are those who yet believe in Gods!” 327 Just as a wild bull, in whose body spears 328 are rankling, while the frightened hunter flies 329 away for safety, so the hero ranged 330 over sky-piercing Oeta; his huge groans, 331 his awful shrieks resounding in those cliffs. 332 At times he struggles with the poisoned robe.

	remissis. 316 Numine decepto risisse Galanthida fama est: 317 ridentem prensamque ipsis dea saeva capillis 318 traxit, et e terra corpus relevare volentem 319 arcuit inque pedes mutavit bracchia primos. 320 Strenuitas antiqua manet, nec terga colorem 321 amisere suum: forma est diversa priori. 322 Quae quia mendaci parientem iuverat ore, 323 ore parit nostrasque domos, ut et ante, frequentat.” 324 Dixit, et admonitu veteris commota ministrae 325 ingemuit. Quam sic nurus est adfata dolentem: 326 “Te tamen, o genetrix, alienae sanguine vestro 327 rapta movet facies. Quid si tibi mira sororis 328 fata meae referam? quamquam lacrimaeque dolorque 329 impediunt prohibentque loqui. Fuit unica matri 330 (me pater ex alia genuit) notissima forma	333 Goaded to fury, he has razed great trees, 334 and scattered the vast mountain rocks around! 335 And stretched his arms towards his ancestral skies! 336 So, in his frenzy, as he wandered there, 337 he chanced upon the trembling Lichas, crouched 338 in the close covert of a hollow rock. 339 Then in a savage fury he cried out,
9.331	331 Oechalidum Dryope. Quam virginitate carentem 332 vimque dei passam Delphos Delumque tenentis 333 excipit Andraemon, et habetur coniuge felix. 334 Est lacus adclivis devexo margine formam 335 litoris efficiens: summum myrteta coronant. 336 Venerat huc Dryope fatorum nescia, quoque 337 indignere magis, nymphis latura coronas; 338 inque sinu puerum, qui nondum impleverat annum, 339 dulce ferebat onus tepidique ope lactis alebat. 340 Haud procul a stagno Tyrios imitata colores 341 in spem bacarum florebat aquatica lotos. 342 Carpserat hinc Dryope, quos oblectamina nato 343 porrigeret, flores, et idem factura videbar 344 (namque aderam): vidi guttas e	340 “Was it you, Lichas, brought this fatal gift? 341 Shall you be called the author of my death?” 342 Lichas, in terror, groveled at his feet, 343 and begged for mercy—“Only let me live!” 344 But seizing on him, the crazed Hero whirled 345 him thrice and once again about his head, 346 and hurled him, shot as by a catapult, 347 into the waves of the Euboic Sea. 348 While he was hanging in the air, his form 349 was hardened; as, we know, rain drops may first 350 be frozen by the cold air, and then change 351 to snow, and as it falls through whirling winds 352 may press, so twisted, into round hailstones: 353 even so has ancient lore declared that when 354 strong arms hurled Lichas through the mountain air 355 through fear, his blood was curdled in his veins. 356 No moisture left in him, he was transformed 357 into a flint-rock. Even to this day, 358 a low crag rising from the waves is seen 359 out of the deep Euboean Sea, and holds 360 the certain outline of a human form, 361 so sure]y traced, the wary sailors flore cruentas 345 decidere et tremulo ramos horrore moveri. 346 Scilicet, ut referunt tardi nunc denique agrestes, 347 Lotis in hanc nymphe, fugiens obscena Priapi, 348 contulerat versos servato nomine, vultus. 349 Nescierat soror hoc. Quae cum perterrita retro 350 ire et adoratis vellet discedere nymphis, 351 haeserunt radice pedes. Convellere pugnat, 352 nec quicquam nisi summa movet. Subcrescit ab imo 353 totaque paulatim lentus premit inguina cortex. 354 Ut vidit, conata manu laniare capillos, 355 fronde manum implevit: frondes caput omne tenebant. 356 At puer Amphissos (namque hoc avus Eurytus illi 357 addiderat nomen) materna rigescere sentit 358 ubera, nec sequitur ducentem lacteus umor. 359 Spectatrix aderam facti crudelis opemque 360 non poteram tibi ferre, soror; quantumque valebam,	fear 362 to tread upon it, thinking it has life, 363 and they have called it Lichas ever since. 364 But, O illustrious son of Jupiter! 365 How many of the overspreading trees, 366 thick-growing on the lofty mountain-peak 367 of Oeta, did you level to the ground, 368 and heap into a pyre! And then you bade 369 obedient Philoctetes light a torch

9.361	361 crescentem truncum ramosque amplexa morabar 362 et, fateor, volui sub eodem cortice condi. 363 Ecce vir Andraemon genitorque miserrimus adsunt 364 et quaerunt Dryopen: Dryopen quaerentibus illis 365 ostendi loton. Tepido dant oscula ligno 366 adfusique suae radicibus arboris haerent. 367 Nil nisi iam faciem, quod non foret arbor, habebat 368 cara soror: lacrimae misero de corpore factis 369 inrorant foliis, et, dum licet oraque praestant 370 vocis iter, tales effundit in aera questus: 371 “Siqua fides miseris, hoc me per numina iuro 372 non meruisse nefas: patior sine crimine poenam. 373 Viximus innocuae: si mentior, arida	370 beneath it, and then take in recompense 371 your bow with its capacious quiver full 372 of arrows, arms that now again would see 373 the realm of Troy. And as the pyre began 374 to kindle with the greedy flames, you spread 375 the Nemean lion skin upon the top, 376 and, club for pillow, you lay down to sleep, 377 as placid as if, with abounding cups 378 of generous wine and crowned with garlands, you 379 were safe, reclining on a banquet-couch. 380 And now on every side the spreading flames 381 were crackling fiercely, as they leaped from earth 382 upon the careless limbs of Hercules. 383 He scorned their power. The Gods felt fear 384 for earth's defender and their sympathy 385 gave pleasure to Saturnian Jove — he knew 386 their thought—and joyfully he said to them: 387 “Your sudden fear is surely my delight, 388 O heavenly Gods! my heart is lifted up 389 and joy prevails upon me, in the thought 390 that I am called

	perdam 374 quas habeo, frondes et caesa securibus urar. 375 Hunc tamen infantem maternis demite ramis 376 et date nutrici; nostraque sub arbore saepe 377 lac facitote bibat nostraque sub arbore ludat! 378 Cumque loqui poterit, matrem facitote salutet, 379 et tristis dicat “latet hoc in stipite mater.” 380 Stagna tamen timeat nec carpat ab arbore flores, 381 et frutices omnes corpus putet esse deorum! 382 Care vale coniunx, et tu, germana, paterque! 383 Qui, siqua est pietas, ab acutae vulnere falcis, 384 a pecoris morsu frondes defendite nostras. 385 Et quoniam mihi fas ad vos incumbere non est, 386 erigite huc artus et ad oscula nostra venite, 387 dum tangi possunt, parvumque attollite natum. 388 Plura loqui nequeo. Nam iam per candida mollis 389 colla liber serpit, summoque cacumine condor. 390 Ex oculis removete manus: sine munere vestro	the Father and the King 391 of all this grateful race of Gods. I know 392 my own beloved offspring is secure 393 in your declared protection: your concern 394 may justly evidence his worth, whose deeds 395 great benefits bestowed. Let not vain thoughts 396 alarm you, nor the rising flames of Oeta; 397 for Hercules who conquered everything, 398 shall conquer equally the spreading fires 399 which now you see: and all that part of him, 9.391	391 contegat inductus morientia lumina cortex!” 392 Desierant simul ora loqui, simul esse, diuque 393 corpore mutato rami caluere recentes.” 394 Dumque refert Iole factum mirabile, dumque 395 Eurytidos lacrimas admoto pollice siccat 396 Alcmene (flet et ipsa tamen), conpescuit omnem 397 res nova tristitiam. Nam limine constitit alto 398 paene puer dubiaque tegens lanugine malas 399 ora reformatus primos Iolaus in annos. 400 Hoc illi dederat Iunonia muneris Hebe, 401 victa viri precibus. Quae cum iurare pararet 402 dona tributuram post hunc se talia	400 celestial — inherited of me— 401 immortal, cannot feel the power of death. 402 It is not subject to the poison-heat. 403 And therefore, since his earth-life is now lost, 404 him I'll translate, unshackled from all dross, 405 and purified, to our celestial shore. 406 I trust this action seems agreeable 407 to all the Deities surrounding me. 408 If any jealous god of heaven should grieve 409 at the divinity of Hercules, 410 he may begrudge the prize but he will know 411 at least 'twas given him deservedly, 412 and with this thought he must approve the deed.” 413 The Gods confirmed it: and though Juno seemed 414 to be contented and to acquiesce, 415 her deep vexation was not wholly hid, 416 when Jupiter with his concluding words 417 so plainly hinted at her jealous mind. 418 Now, while the Gods conversed, the mortal part 419 of Hercules was burnt by

	nulli, 403 non est passa Themis: “Nam iam discordia Thebae 404 bella movent” dixit “Capaneusque nisi ab Iove vinci 405 haud poterit, fientque pares in vulnere fratres, 406 subductaque suos manes tellure videbit 407 vivus adhuc vates; ultusque parente parentem 408 natus erit facto pius et sceleratus eodem; 409 attonitusque malis exsul mentisque domusque, 410 vultibus Eumenidum matrisque agitabitur umbris, 411 donec eum coniunx fatale poposcerit aurum, 412 cognatumque latus Phegeius hauserit ensis. 413 Tum demum magno petet hos Acheloia supplex 414 ab Iove Callirhoe natis infantibus annos 415 neve necem sinat esse diu victoris inultam, 416 Iuppiter his motus privignae dona nurusque 417 praecipiet facietque viros inpubibus annis.” 418 Haec ubi faticano venturi praescia dixit 419 ore Themis, vario superi sermone fremebant, 420 et “cur non aliis eadem dare dona liceret”	Mulciber; 420 but yet an outline of a spirit-form 421 remained. Unlike the well-known mortal shape 422 derived by nature of his mother, he 423 kept traces only of his father, Jove. 424 And as a serpent, when it is revived 425 from its old age, casts off the faded skin, 426 and fresh with vigor glitters in new scales, 427 so, when the hero had put off all dross, 428 his own celestial, wonderful appeared, 429 majestic and of godlike dignity.
9.421	421 murmur erat: queritur veteres Pallantias annos 422 coniugis esse sui, queritur canescere mitis 423 Iasiona Ceres, repetitum Mulciber aevum 424 poscit Erichthonio. Venerem quoque cura futuri 425 tangit et Anchisae renovare paciscitur annos. 426 Cui studeat, deus omnis habet, crescitque favore 427 turbida seditio, donec sua Iuppiter ora 428 solvit et “o nostri siqua est reverentia,” dixit 429 “quo ruitis? Tantumne aliquis sibi posse videtur, 430 fata quoque ut superet? Fatis Iolaus in annos, 431 quos egit, rediit, fatis iuvenescere	430 And him, the glorious father of the Gods 431 in the great chariot drawn by four swift steeds, 432 took up above the wide-encircling clouds, 433 and set him there amid the glittering stars. 434 Even Atlas felt the weight of Heaven increase, 435 but King Eurystheus, still implacable, 436 vented his baffled hatred on the sons 437 of the great hero. Then the Argive mother, 438 Alcmena, spent and anxious with long cares, 439 the burden of her old age and her fears, 440 could pass the weary hours with Iole 441 in garrulous narrations of his worth, 442 his mighty labors and her own sad days. 443 Iole, by command of Hercules, 444 had been betrothed to Hyllus, and by him 445 was gravid, burdened with a noble child. 446 And so to Iole, Alcmena told 447 this story of the birth of Hercules:

	debent 432 Callirhoe geniti, non ambitione nec armis. 433 Vos etiam, quoque hoc animo meliore feratis, 434 me quoque fata regunt. Quae si mutare valerem, 435 nec nostrum seri curvarent Aeacon anni, 436 perpetuumque aevi florem Rhadamanthus haberet 437 cum Minoe meo, qui propter amara senectae 438 pondera despicitur nec quo prius ordine regnat.” 439 Dicta Iovis movere deos, nec sustinet ullus, 440 cum videat fessos Rhadamanthon et Aeacon annis 441 et Minoa, queri. Qui, dum fuit integer aevi, 442 terruerat magnas ipso quoque nomine gentes. 443 Tunc erat invalidus Deionidenque iuventae 444 robore Miletum Phoeboque parente superbum 445 pertimuit credensque suis insurgere regnis, 446 haud tamen est patriis arcere penatibus ausus. 447 Sponte fugis, Milete, tua, celerique carina 448 Aegaeas metiris aquas et in Aside terra 449 moenia constituis positoris habentia nomen. 450 Hic tibi, dum sequitur patriae curvamina ripae,	— 448 “Ah, may the Gods be merciful to you 449 and give you swift deliverance in that hour 450 when needful of all help you must call out 451 for Ilithyia, the known goddess of 452 all frightened mothers in their travail, she 453 whom Juno's hatred overcame and made 454 so dreadful against me. For, when my hour 455 of bearing Hercules was very near, 456 and when the tenth sign of the zodiac 457 was traversed by the sun, my burden then 458 became so heavy, and the one I bore 459 so large, you certainly could tell that Jove 460 must be the father of the unborn child. 461 “At last, no longer able to endure— 462 ah me, a cold sweat seizes on me now; 463 only to think of it renews my pains!
9.451	451 filia Maeandri totiens redeuntis eodem 452 cognita Cyanee, praestantia corpora forma, 453 Byblida cum Cauno, prolem est enixa gemellam. 454 Byblis in exemplo est, ut ament concessa puellae: 455 Byblis Apollinei correpta cupidine fratris: 456 non soror ut fratrem, nec qua debebat, amabat. 457 Illa quidem primo nullos intellegit ignes 458 nec peccare putat, quod saepius oscula iungat, 459 quod sua fraterno circumdet bracchia collo, 460 mendacique diu pietatis fallitur	464 Seven days in agony, as many nights, 465 exhausted in my dreadful misery, 466 I stretched my arms to heaven and invoked 467 Lucina and three Nixian deities 468 the guardians of birth. Lucina came; 469 but before then she had been pledged to give 470 my life to cruel Juno. While Lucina 471 sat on the altar near the door and listened, 472 with her right knee crossed over her left knee, 473 with fingers interlocked, she stopped the birth: 474 and in low muttered tones she chanted Charms 475 which there prevented my deliverance. 476 “I fiercely struggled, and insane with pain 477 shrieked vain revilings against Jupiter; 478 I longed for death, and my delirious words 479 then should have

	umbra. 461 Paulatim declinat amor, visuraque fratrem 462 culta venit nimiumque cupit formosa videri 463 et siqua est illic formosior, invidet illi. 464 Sed nondum manifesta sibi est nullumque sub illo 465 igne facit votum: verumtamen aestuat intus. 466 Iam dominum appellat, iam nomina sanguinis odit: 467 Byblida iam mavult, quam se vocet ille sororem. 468 Spes tamen obscenas animo demittere non est 469 ausa suo vigilans: placida resoluta quiete 470 saepe videt, quod amat; visa est quoque iungere fratri 471 corpus et erubuit, quamvis sopita iacebat. 472 Somnus abit: silet illa diu repetitque quietis 473 ipsa suae speciem dubiaque ita mente profatur: 474 “Me miseram! tacitae quid vult sibi noctis imago? 475 Quam nolim rata sit! cur haec ego somnia vidi? 476 Ille quidem est oculis quamvis formosus iniquis 477 et placet, et possim, si non sit frater, amare, 478 et me dignus erat. Verum nocet esse sororem.— 479 Dummodo tale nihil vigilans committere temptem, 480 saepe licet simili redeat sub imagine somnus!	moved the most unfeeling rocks. 480 The Theban matrons, eager to help me, 481 stood near me while they asked the aid of Heaven. 482 “And there was present of the common class, 483 my maid Galanthis—with her red-gold hair — 484 efficient and most willing to obey 485 her worthy character deserved my love. 486 She felt assured, Juno unjustly worked 487 some spell of strong effect against my life. 488 And when this maid beheld Lucina perched 489 so strangely on the altar, with her fingers 490 inwoven on her knees and tightly pressed 491 together, in a gripping finger-comb, 492 she guessed that jealous Juno was the cause. 493 Quick-witted, in a ringing voice this maid
9.481	481 testis abest somno, nec abest imitata voluptas. 482 Pro! Venus et tenera volucer cum matre Cupido, 483 gaudia quanta tuli! quam me manifesta libido 484 contigit! ut iacui totis resoluta medullis! 485 ut meminisse iuvat! quamvis brevis illa voluptas 486 noxque fuit praeceps et coeptis invida nostris. 487 O ego, si liceat mutato nomine iungi, 488 quam bene, Caune, tuo poteram nurus esse parenti! 489 quam bene, Caune, meo poteras	494 cried out, ‘Congratulations! All is well! 495 Alcmena is delivered—a fine child 496 so safely brought forth—her true prayers approved!’ 497 “Lucina, who presides at birth, surprised 498 leaped up, unclenched her hands, as one amazed. 499 Just as her hands unfastened, and her knees 500 were parted from their stricture, I could feel 501 the bonds of stricture loosen; and without 502 more labor was delivered of my child. 503 “'Tis said, Galanthis laughed and ridiculed 504 the cheated deity; and as she laughed 505 the vixen goddess caught her by the hair 506 and dragging her upon the ground, while she 507 was struggling to arise, held gener esse parenti! 490 Omnia, di facerent, essent communia nobis, 491 praeter avos: tu me vellem generosior esses! 492 Nescioquam facies igitur, pulcherrime, matrem: 493 at mihi, quae male sum quos tu sortita parentes, 494 nil nisi frater eris. Quod obest, id habebimus unum. 495 Quid mihi significant ergo mea visa?—quod autem 496 somnia pondus habent?—an habent et somnia pondus? 497 Di melius!—di nempe suas habuere sorores: 498 Sic Saturnus Opem iunctam sibi sanguine duxit, 499 Oceanus Tethyn, Iunonem rector Olympi. 500 Sunt superis sua iura! Quid ad caelestia ritus 501 exigere humanos diversaque foedera tempto? 502 Aut nostro vetitus de corde fugabitur ardor, 503 aut hoc si nequeo, peream, precor, ante toroque 504 mortua conponar, positaeque det oscula frater.— 505 Et tamen arbitrium quaerit res ista duorum. 506 Finge placere mihi: scelus esse videbitur illi! 507 At non Aeolidae thalamos timuere sororum! 508 Unde sed hos novi? Cur haec exempla paravi? 509 Quo feror? Obscenae procul hinc discedite flammae, 510 nec, nisi qua fas est germanae, frater ametur!—	her, and there 508 transformed both of her arms to animal 509 forelegs. Her old activity remained; 510 her hair was not changed, but she did not keep 511 her maiden form: and ever since that day, 512 because she aided with deceitful lips, 513 her offspring are brought forth through the same mouth. 514 Changed to a weasel she dwells now with me.”

9.511	511 Si tamen ipse mei captus prior esset amore, 512 forsitan illius possem indulgere furori. 513 Ergo ego, quae fueram non reiectura petentem, 514 ipsa petam! Poterisne loqui? poterisne fateri? 515 Coget amor: potero! vel, si pudor ora tenebit, 516 littera celatos arcana fatebitur ignis: 517 hoc placet, haec dubiam vicit sententia mentem.” 518 In latus erigitur cubitoque innixa	515 When she had ended the sad tale, she heaved 516 a deep sigh, in remembrance of her tried, 517 beloved servant; and her daughter-in-law 518 Iole kindly answered in these words: 519 “O my dear mother, if you weep because 520 of her who was your servant, now transformed 521 into a weasel, how can you support 522 the true narration of my sister's fate; 523 which I must tell to you, although my tears 524 and sorrows hinder and forbid my speech? 525 “Most beautiful of all Oechalian maids, 526 was Dryope, her mother's only child, 527 for you sinistro 519 “viderit: insanos” inquit “fateamur amores. 520 Ei mihi! quo labor? quem mens mea concipit ignem?” 521 et meditata manu componit verba trementi: 522 dextra tenet ferrum, vacuam tenet altera ceram. 523 Incipit et dubitat, scribit damnatque tabellas 524 et notat et delet, mutat culpatque probatque, 525 inque vicem sumptas ponit positasque resumit. 526 Quid velit ignorat; quidquid factura videtur, 527 displicet. In vultu est audacia mixta pudori. 528 Scripta “soror” fuerat, visum est delere sororem 529 verbaque correctis incidere talia ceris: 530 “Quam, nisi tu dederis, non est habitura salutem, 531 hanc tibi mittit amans: pudet, a! pudet edere nomen. 532 Et si, quid cupiam, quaeris, sine nomine vellem 533 posset agi mea causa meo, nec cognita Byblis 534 ante forem, quam spes votorum certa fuisset. 535 Esse quidem laesi poterat tibi pectoris index 536 et color et macies et vultus et umida saepe 537 lumina nec causa suspiria mota patenti 538 et crebri amplexus, et quae, si forte notasti, 539 oscula sentiri non esse sororia possent: 540 ipsa tamen, quamvis animo grave vulnus habebam,	must know I am the daughter of 528 my father's second wife. She is not now 529 a maid; because, through violence of him 530 who rules at Delphi and at Delos, she 531 was taken by Andraemon, who since then 532 has been accounted happy in his wife. 533 “There is a lake surrounded by sweet lawns, 534 encircling beauties, where the upper slope 535 is crowned with myrtles in fair sunny groves. 536 Without a thought of danger Dryope 537 in worship one day went to gather flowers, 538 (who hears, has greater cause to be indignant) 539 delightful garlands, for the water-nymphs, 540 and, in her bosom, carried her dear son, 541 not yet a year old, whom she fed for love. 542 Not far from that dream-lake, in moisture grew 543 a lotus, beautiful in purple bloom, 544 the blossoms promising its fruit was near.

9.541	541 quamvis intus erat furor igneus, omnia feci 542 (sunt mihi di testes), ut tandem sanior essem, 543 pugnavique diu violenta Cupidinis arma 544 effugere infelix et plus, quam ferre puellam 545 posse putes, ego dura tuli. Superata fateri 546 cogor opemque tuam timidis exposcere votis. 547 Tu servare potes, tu perdere solus	545 “At play with her sweet infant, Dryope 546 plucked them as toys for him. I, too, was there, 547 eagerly, also, I put forth my hand, 548 and was just ready to secure a spray, 549 when I was startled by some drops of blood 550 down-falling from the blossoms which were plucked; 551 and even the trembling branches shook in dread. 552 “Who wills, the truth of this may learn from all 553 quaint people of that land, who still relate 554 the Story of Nymph Lotis. She, they say, 555 while flying

	amantem: 548 elige, utrum facias! Non hoc inimica precatur, 549 sed quae, cum tibi sit iunctissima, iunctior esse 550 expetit et vinclo tecum propiore ligari. 551 Iura senes norint et, quid liceatque nefasque 552 fasque sit, inquirant legumque examina servent: 553 conveniens Venus est annis temeraria nostris! 554 Quid liceat, nescimus adhuc et cuncta licere 555 credimus et sequimur magnorum exempla deorum. 556 Nec nos aut durus pater aut reverentia famae 557 aut timor impediet (tantum sit causa timendi!). 558 Dulcia fraterno sub nomine furta tegemus: 559 est mihi libertas tecum secreta loquendi, 560 et damus amplexus et iungimus oscula coram, 561 quantum est, quod desit? Miserere fatentis amores 562 et non fassurae, nisi cogeret ultimus ardor, 563 neve merere meo subscribi causa sepulcro!” 564 Talia nequiquam perarantem plena reliquit 565 cera manum, summusque in margine versus adhaesit. 566 Protinus inpressa signat sua crimina gemma, 567 quam tinxit lacrimis (linguam defecerat umor), 568 deque suis unum famulis pudibunda vocavit 569 et pavidum blandita “fer has, fidissime, nostro”— 570 dixit, et adiecit longo post tempore “fratri.”	from the lust of Priapus, 556 was transformed quickly from her human shape, 557 into this tree, though she has kept her name. 558 “But ignorant of all this, Dryope, 559 alarmed, decided she must now return; 560 so, having first adored the hallowed nymphs, 561 upright she stood, and would have moved away, 562 but both her feet were tangled in a root. 563 There, as she struggled in its tightening hold, 564 she could move nothing save her upper parts; 565 and growing from that root, live bark began 566 to gather slowly upward from the ground, 567 spreading around her, till it touched her loins: 568 in terror when she saw the clinging growth, 569 she would have torn her hair out by the roots, 570 but, when she clutched at it, her hands were filled 571 with lotus leaves grown up from her changed head. 572 “Alas, her little son, Amphissos, felt 573 his mother's bosom harden to his touch, 574 and no life-stream refreshed his eager lips.
9.571	571 Cum daret, elapsae manibus cecidere tabellae. 572 Omine turbata est: misit tamen. Apta minister 573 tempora nactus adit traditque latentia verba. 574 Attonitus subita iuvenis Maeandrius ira 575 proicit acceptas lecta sibi parte tabellas 576 vixque manus retinens trepidantis	575 And while I saw your cruel destiny, 576 O my dear sister! and could give no help, 577 I clung to your loved body and around 578 the growing trunk and branches, hoping so 579 to stop their evil growth; and I confess, 580 endeavored there to hide beneath the bark. 581 “And, oh! Andraemon and her father, then 582 appeared to me while they were sadly seeking 583 for Dryope: so there I had to show 584 the

	ab ore ministri 577 “dum licet, o vetitae scelerate libidinis auctor, 578 effuge!” ait: “qui, si nostrum tua fata pudorem 579 non traherent secum, poenas mihi morte dedisses.” 580 Ille fugit pavidus dominaeque ferocia Cauni 581 dicta refert. Palles audita, Bybli, repulsa, 582 et pavet obsessum glaciali frigore corpus. 583 Mens tamen ut rediit, pariter rediere furores, 584 linguaque vix tales icto dedit aere voces: 585 “Et merito! quid enim temeraria vulneris huius 586 indicium feci? Quid, quae celanda fuerunt, 587 tam cito commisi properatis verba tabellis? 588 Ante erat ambiguis animi sententia dictis 589 praetemptanda mihi. Ne non sequeretur euntem, 590 parte aliqua veli, qualis foret aura, notare 591 debueram tutoque mari decurrere, quae nunc 592 non exploratis inplevi lintea ventis. 593 Auferor in scopulos igitur subversaque toto 594 obruor oceano, neque habent mea vela recursus. 595 Quid quod et ominibus certis prohibebar amori 596 indulgere meo, tum cum mihi ferre iubenti 597 excidit et fecit spes nostras cera caducas? 598 Nonne vel illa dies fuerat vel tota voluntas, 599 sed potius mutanda dies? Deus ipse monebat 600 signaque certa dabat, si non male sana fuissem.	lotus as it covered her, and they 585 gave kisses to the warm wood, and prostrate fell 586 upon the ground, and clung to growing roots 587 of their new darling tree, transformed from her.— 588 Dear sister, there was nothing of yourself 589 remaining but your face; and I could see 590 your tears drop slowly on the trembling leaves 591 which had so marvellously grown on you; 592 and while your lips remained uncovered, all 593 the air surrounding, echoed your complaint:— 594 “If oaths of wretched women can have force, 595 I swear I have not merited this fate! 596 Though innocent, to suffer punishment! 597 And if one word of my complaint is false, 598 I pray I may soon wither, and my leaves 599 fall from me as in blight, and let the axe 600 devote me, wretched to the flames. But take 601 this infant from my branches to a nurse; 602 608 and let him often play beneath his tree,— 603 his mother always. Let him drink his milk 604 beneath my shade. When he has learned to talk
9.601	601 Et tamen ipsa loqui, nec me committere cerae 602 debueram praesensque meos aperire furores 603 (vidisset lacrimas, vultum vidisset amantis!), 604 plura loqui poteram, quam quae cepere tabellae. 605 Invito potui circumdare bracchia collo	605 let him salute me, and in sorrow say 606 “In this tree-trunk my mother is concealed.” 607 O, let him dread the fate that lurks in ponds, 602 608 and let him often play beneath his tree,— 609 and let him be persuaded every shrub 610 contains the body of a goddess. — Ah! 611 Farewell my husband,—sister, — and farewell 612 my father! If my love remain in you 613 remember to

	606 et, si reicerer, potui moritura videri 607 amplectique pedes adfusaque poscere vitam. 608 Omnia fecissem, quorum si singula duram 609 flectere non poterant, potuissent omnia, mentem. 610 Forsitan et missi sit quaedam culpa ministri: 611 non adiit apte nec legit idonea, credo, 612 tempora nec petiit horamque animumque vacantem. 613 Haec nocuere mihi. Neque enim est de tigride natus 614 nec rigidas silices solidumve in pectore ferrum 615 aut adamanta gerit nec lac bibit ille leaenae. 616 Vincetur! Repetendus erit, nec taedia coepti 617 ulla mei capiam, dum spiritus iste manebit. 618 Nam primum, si facta mihi revocare liceret, 619 non coepisse fuit: coepta expugnare secundum est. 620 Quippe nec ille potest, ut iam mea vota relinquam, 621 non tamen ausorum semper memor esse meorum, 622 et, quia desierim, leviter voluisse videbor 623 aut etiam temptasse illum insidiisque petisse; 624 vel certe non hoc, qui plurimus urget et urit 625 pectora nostra, deo, sed victa libidine credar. 626 Denique iam nequeo nil commisisse nefandum. 627 Et scripsi et petii: temerata est nostra voluntas; 628 ut nihil adiciam, non possum innoxia dici. 629 Quod superest, multum est in vota, in crimina parvum.” 630 Dixit, et (incertae tanta est discordia mentis)	protect my life from harm, 614 so that the pruning-knife may never clip 615 my branches, and protect my foliage from 616 the browsing sheep. 617 “I cannot stoop to you; 618 0h, if you love me, lift your lips to mine, 619 and let me kiss you, if but once again, 620 before this growing lotus covers me. 621 Lift up my darling infant to my lips. 622 How can I hope to say much more to you? 623 The new bark now is creeping up my neck, 624 and creeping downward from my covered brow! 625 Ah, do not close my live eyes with your hands; 626 there is no need of it, for growing bark 627 will spread and darken them before I die!’ 628 Such were the last words her poor smothered lips 629 could utter; for she was so quickly changed; 630 and long thereafter the new branches kept 631 the warmth of her lost body, so transformed.” 632 And all the while that Iole told this, 633 tearful in sorrow for her sister's fate, 634 Alcmena weeping, tried to comfort her.
9.631	631 cum pigeat temptasse, libet temptare: modumque 632 exit et infelix committit saepe repelli. 633 Mox ubi finis abest, patriam fugit ille nefasque 634 inque peregrina ponit nova moenia terra.	635 But as they wept together, suddenly 636 a wonderful event astonished them; 637 for, standing in the doorway, they beheld 638 the old man Iolaus, known to them, 639 but now transformed from age to youth, he seemed 640 almost a boy, with light down on his cheeks: 641 for Juno's

	635 Tum vero maestam tota Miletida mente 636 defecisse ferunt, tum vero a pectore vestem 637 diripuit planxitque suos furibunda lacertos. 638 Iamque palam est demens inconcessamque fatetur 639 spem veneris, siquidem patriam invisosque penates 640 deserit et profugi sequitur vestigia fratris. 641 Utque tuo motae, proles Semeleia, thyrso 642 Ismariae celebrant repetita triennia bacchae, 643 Byblida non aliter latos ululasse per agros 644 Bubasides videre nurus. Quibus illa relictis 645 Caras et armiferos Lelegas Lyciamque pererrat. 646 Iam Cragon et Limyren Xanthique reliquerat undas, 647 quoque Chimaera iugo mediis in partibus ignem, 648 pectus et ora leae, caudam serpentis habebat; 649 deficiunt silvae, cum tu lassata sequendo 650 concidis et dura positis tellure capillis, 651 Bybli, iaces frondesque tuo premis ore caducas. 652 Saepe etiam nymphae teneris Lelegeides ulnis 653 tollere conantur; saepe, ut medeatur amori, 654 praecipiunt surdaeque adhibent solacia menti: 655 muta iacet viridesque suis tenet unguibus herbas 656 Byblis, et umectat lacrimarum gramina rivus. 657 Naidas his venam, quae numquam arescere posset, 658 subposuisse ferunt: quid enim dare maius habebant? 659 Protinus, ut secto piceae de cortice guttae, 660 utve tenax gravida manat tellure bitumen,	daughter Hebe, had renewed 642 his years to please her husband, Hercules. 643 Just at the time when ready to make oath, 644 she would not grant such gifts to other men— 645 Themis had happily prevented her. 646 “For even now,” she said, “a civil strife 647 is almost ready to break forth in Thebes, 648 and Capaneus shall be invincible 649 to all save the strong hand of Jove himself; 650 and there two hostile brothers shall engage 651 in bloody conflict; and Amphiaraus 652 shall see his own ghost, deep in yawning earth. 653 “His own son, dutiful to him, shall be 654 both just and unjust in a single deed; 655 for he, in vengeance for his father's death, 656 shall slay his mother, and confounded lose 657 both home and reason,— persecuted both 658 by the grim Furies and the awful ghost 659 of his own murdered mother; this until 660 his wife, deluded, shall request of him 661 the fatal golden necklace, and until 662 the sword of Phegeus drains his kinsman's blood. 663 “And then at last his wife Callirhoe 664 shall supplicate the mighty Jupiter
9.661	661 utve sub adventu spirantis lene favoni 662 sole remollescit, quae frigore constitit, unda, 663 sic lacrimis consumpta suis Phoebeia Byblis	665 to grant her infant sons the added years 666 of youthful manhood. Then shall Jupiter 667 let Hebe, guardian of ungathered days, 668 grant from the future to Callirhoe's sons, 669 the strength of manhood in their infancy.

	664 vertitur in fontem, qui nunc quoque vallibus illis 665 nomen habet dominae nigraque sub ilice manat. 666 Fama novi centum Cretaeas forsitan urbes 667 implesset monstri, si non miracula nuper 668 Iphide mutata Crete propiora tulisset. 669 Proxima Cnosiaco nam quondam Phaestia regno 670 progenuit tellus ignotum nomine Ligdum, 671 ingenua de plebe virum. Nec census in illo 672 nobilitate sua maior, sed vita fidesque 673 inculpata fuit. Gravidae qui coniugis aures 674 vocibus his monuit, cum iam prope partus adesset: 675 “Quae voveam, duo sunt; minimo ut relevere dolore, 676 utque marem parias; onerosior altera sors est, 677 et vires fortuna negat. Quod abominor, ergo 678 edita forte tuo fuerit si femina partu, 679 (invitus mando: pietas, ignosce!) necetur.” 680 Dixerat, et lacrimis vultus lavere profusis, 681 tam qui mandabat, quam cui mandata dabantur. 682 Sed tamen usque suum vanis Telethusa maritum 683 sollicitat precibus, ne spem sibi ponat in arto. 684 Certa sua est Ligdo sententia. Iamque ferendo 685 vix erat illa gravem maturo pondere ventrem, 686 cum medio noctis spatio sub imagine somni 687 Inachis ante torum, pompa comitata sacrorum, 688 aut stetit aut visa est. Inerant lunaria fronti 689 cornua cum spicis nitido flaventibus auro 690 et regale decus. Cum qua latrator Anubis	670 Do not let their victorious father's death 671 be unavenged a long while. Jove prevailed 672 upon, will claim beforehand all the gifts 673 of Hebe, who is his known daughter-in-law, 674 and his step-daughter, and with one act change 675 Callirhoe's beardless boys to men of size.” 676 When Themis, prophesying future days, 677 had said these words, the Gods of Heaven complained 678 because they also could not grant the gift 679 of youth to many others in this way. 680 Aurora wept because her husband had 681 white hair; and Ceres then bewailed the age 682 of her Iasion, grey and stricken old; 683 and Mulciber demanded with new life 684 his Erichthonius might again appear; 685 and Venus, thinking upon future days, 686 said old Anchises' years must be restored. 687 And every god preferred some favorite, 688 until vexed with the clamor, Jupiter 689 implored, “If you can have regard for me, 690 consider the strange blessings you desire: 691 does any one of you believe he can 692 prevail against the settled will of Fate? 693 As Iolaus has returned by fate, 694 to those years spent by him; so by the Fates 695 Callirhoe's sons from infancy must grow 696 to manhood with no struggle on their part, 697 or force of their ambition. And you should 698 endure your fortune with contented minds: 699 I, also, must give all control to Fate. 700 “If I had power to change the course of Fate 701 I would not let advancing age break down 702 my own son Aeacus, nor bend his back 703 with weight of year; and Rhadamanthus should 704 retain an everlasting flower of youth, 705 together with my own son Minos, who
9.691	691 sanctaque Bubastis variusque coloribus Apis, 692 quique premit vocem digitoque silentia suadet,	706 is now despised because of his great age, 707 so that his scepter has lost dignity.” 708 Such words of Jupiter controlled the Gods, 709 and none

	693 sistraque erant numquamque satis quaesitus Osiris 694 plenaque somniferis serpens peregrina venenis. 695 Tum velut excussam somno et manifesta videntem 696 sic adfata dea est: “Pars o Telethusa mearum, 697 pone graves curas mandataque falle mariti. 698 Nec dubita, cum te partu Lucina levarit, 699 tollere quidquid erit. Dea sum auxiliaris opemque 700 exorata fero, nec te coluisse quereris 701 ingratum numen.” Monuit thalamoque recessit. 702 Laeta toro surgit purasque ad sidera supplex 703 Cressa manus tollens, rata sint sua visa, precatur. 704 Ut dolor increvit, seque ipsum pondus in auras 705 expulit et nata est ignaro femina patre, 706 iussit ali mater puerum mentita: fidemque 707 res habuit, neque erat ficti nisi conscia nutrix. 708 Vota pater solvit nomenque inponit avitum: 709 Iphis avus fuerat. Gavisa est nomine mater, 710 quod commune foret nec quemquam falleret illo. 711 Inde incepta pia mendacia fraude latebant: 712 cultus erat pueri, facies, quam sive puellae, 713 sive dares puero, fuerat formosus uterque. 714 Tertius interea decimo successerat annus, 715 cum pater, Iphi, tibi flavam despondet Ianthen, 716 inter Phaestiadas quae laudatissima formae 717 dote fuit virgo, Dictaeo nata Teleste. 718 Par aetas, par forma fuit, primasque magistris 719 accepere artes, elementa aetatis, ab isdem. 720 Hinc amor ambarum tetigit rude pectus et aequum	continued to complain, when they 710 saw Aeacus and Rhadamanthus old, 711 and Minos also, weary of his age. 712 And they remembered Minos in his prime, 713 had warred against great nations, till his name 714 if mentioned was a certain cause of fear. 715 But now, enfeebled by great age, he feared 716 Miletus, Deione's son, because 717 of his exultant youth and strength derived 718 from his great father Phoebus. And although 719 he well perceived Miletus' eye was fixed 720 upon his throne, he did not dare to drive 721 him from his kingdom. 722 But although not forced, 723 Miletus of his own accord did fly, 724 by swift ship, over to the Asian shore, 725 across the Aegean water, where he built 726 the city of his name. 727 Cyane, who 728 was known to be the daughter of the stream 729 Maeander, which with many a twist and turn 730 flows wandering there—Cyane said to be 731 indeed most beautiful, when known by him, 732 gave birth to two; a girl called Byblis, who 733 was lovely, and the brother Caunus—twins. 734 Byblis is an example that the love 735 of every maiden must be within law.
9.721	721 vulnus utrique dedit. Sed erat fiducia dispar:	736 Seized with a passion for her brother, she 737 loved him, descendant

	722 coniugium pactaeque exspectat tempora taedae 723 quamque virum putat esse, virum fore credit Ianthe; 724 Iphis amat, qua posse frui desperat, et auget 725 hoc ipsum flammas, ardetque in virgine virgo; 726 vixque tenens lacrimas “quis me manet exitus” inquit, 727 “cognita quam nulli, quam prodigiosa novaeque 728 cura tenet Veneris? Si di mihi parcere vellent, 729 730 naturale malum saltem et de more dedissent. 731 Nec vaccam vaccae, nec equas amor urit equarum: 732 urit oves aries, sequitur sua femina cervum. 733 Sic et aves coeunt, interque animalia cuncta 734 femina femineo conrepta cupidine nulla est. 735 Vellem nulla forem! Ne non tamen omnia Crete 736 monstra ferat, taurum dilexit filia Solis, 737 femina nempe marem: meus est furiosior illo, 738 si verum profitemur, amor! Tamen illa secuta est 739 spem Veneris, tamen illa dolis et imagine vaccae 740 passa bovem est, et erat, qui deciperetur adulter! 741 Huc licet e toto sollertia confluat orbe, 742 ipse licet revolet ceratis Daedalus alis, 743 quid faciet? Num me puerum de virgine doctis 744 artibus efficiet? num te mutabit, Ianthe? 745 Quin animum firmas, teque ipsa reconligis, Iphi, 746 consiliique inopes et stultos excutis ignes? 747 Quid sis nata, vide, nisi te quoque decipis ipsa, 748 et pete quod fas est, et ama quod femina debes! 749 Spes est, quae capiat, spes est, quae pascit amorem: 750 hanc tibi res adimit. Non te custodia caro	of Apollo, not 738 as sister loves a brother; not in such 739 a manner as the law of man permits. 740 At first she thought it surely was not wrong 741 to kiss him passionately, while her arms 742 were thrown around her brother's neck, and so 743 deceived herself. And, as the habit grew, 744 her sister-love degenerated, till 745 richly attired, she came to see her brother, 746 with all endeavors to attract his eye; 747 and anxious to be seen most beautiful, 748 she envied every woman who appeared 749 of rival beauty. But she did not know 750 or understand the flame, hot in her heart, 751 though she was agitated when she saw 752 the object of her swiftly growing love. 753 Now she began to call him lord, and now 754 she hated to say brother, and she said, 755 “Do call me Byblis—never call me sister!” 756 And yet while feeling love so, when awake 757 she does not dwell upon impure desire; 758 but when dissolved in the soft arms of sleep, 759 she sees the very object of her love, 760 and blushing, dreams she is embraced by him, 761 till slumber has departed. For a time 762 she lies there silent, as her mind recalls 763 the loved appearance of her lovely dream, 764 until her wavering heart, in grief exclaims:— 765 “What is this vision of the silent night?
9.751	751 arcet ab amplexu nec cauti cura	766 Ah wretched me! I cannot count it

	mariti, 752 non patris asperitas, non se negat ipsa roganti: 753 nec tamen est potienda tibi, nec, ut omnia fiant, 754 esse potes felix, ut dique hominesque laborent. 755 Nunc quoque votorum nulla est pars vana meorum, 756 dique mihi faciles, quidquid valuere, dederunt; 757 quodque ego, vult genitor, vult ipsa socerque futurus. 758 At non vult natura, potentior omnibus istis, 759 quae mihi sola nocet. Venit ecce optabile tempus, 760 luxque iugalis adest, et iam mea fiet Ianthe— 761 nec mihi continget: mediis sitiemus in undis. 762 Pronuba quid Iuno, quid ad haec, Hymenaee, venitis 763 sacra, quibus qui ducat abest, ubi nubimus ambae?” 764 Pressit ab his vocem. Nec lenius altera virgo 765 aestuat, utque celer venias, Hymenaee, precatur. 766 Quod petit haec, Telethusa timens modo tempora differt, 767 nunc ficto languore moram trahit, omina saepe 768 visaque causatur. Sed iam consumpserat omnem 769 materiam ficti, dilataque tempora taedae 770 institerant, unusque dies restabat. At illa 771 crinalem capiti vittam nataeque sibique 772 detrahit et passis aram complexa capillis 773 “Isi, Paraetonium Mareoticaque arva Pharonque 774 quae colis et septem digestum in cornua Nilum: 775 fer, precor” inquit “opem nostroque medere timori! 776 Te, dea, te quondam tuaque haec insignia vidi 777 cunctaque cognovi, sonitum comitantiaque aera 778 sistrorum, memorique animo tua iussa notavi. 779 Quod videt haec lucem, quod non ego punior, ecce 780 consilium munusque tuum est.	true. 767 And, if he were not my own brother, he 768 why is my fond heart tortured with this dream? 769 He is so handsome even to envious eyes, 770 it is not strange he has filled my fond heart; 771 so surely would be worthy of my love. 772 But it is my misfortune I am his 773 own sister. Let me therefore strive, awake, 774 to stand with honor, but let sleep return 775 the same dream often to me.—There can be 776 no fear of any witness to a shade 777 which phantoms my delight.—O Cupid, swift 778 of love-wing with your mother, and O my 779 beloved Venus! wonderful the joys 780 of my experience in the transport. All 781 as if reality sustaining, lifted me 782 up to elysian pleasure, while in truth 783 I lay dissolving to my very marrow: 784 the pleasure was so brief, and Night, headlong 785 sped from me, envious of my coming joys. 786 “If I could change my name, and join to you, 787 how good a daughter I would prove to your 788 dear father, and how good a son would you 789 be to my father. If the Gods agreed, 790 then everything would be possessed by us 791 in common, but this must exclude ancestors. 792 For I should pray, compared with mine yours might 793 be quite superior. But, oh my love, 794 some other woman by your love will be 795 a mother; but because, unfortunate,

	Miserere duarum
9.781	781 auxilioque iuva!” Lacrimae sunt verba secutae. 782 Visa dea est movisse suas (et moverat) aras, 783 et templi tremuere fores, imitataque lunam 784 cornua fulserunt, crepuitque sonabile sistrum. 785 Non secura quidem, fausto tamen omine laeta 786 mater abit templo: sequitur comes Iphis euntem, 787 quam solita est, maiore gradu, nec candor in ore 788 permanet, et vires augentur, et acrior ipse est 789 vultus, et incomptis brevior mensura capillis, 790 plusque vigoris adest, habuit quam femina. Nam quae 791 femina nuper eras, puer es. Date munera templis 792 nec timida gaudete fide! Dant munera templis, 793 addunt et titulum; titulus breve carmen habebat: 794 DONA PUER SOLVIT QUAE FEMINA VOVERAT IPHIS 795 Postera lux radiis latum patefecerat orbem, 796 cum Venus et Iuno sociosque Hymenaeus ad ignes 797 conveniunt, potiturque sua puer Iphis Ianthe.	796 my parents are the same as yours, you must 797 be nothing but a brother. Sorrows, then, 798 shall be to us in common from this hour. 799 What have my night-born vision signified? 800 What weight have dreams? Do dreams have any weight? 801 The Gods forbid! The Gods have sisters! Truth 802 declares even Saturn married Ops, his own 803 blood-kin, Oceanus his Tethys, Jove, 804 Olympian his Juno. But the Gods 805 are so superior in their laws, I should 806 not measure human custom by the rights 807 established in the actions of divinities. 808 This passion must be banished from my heart, 809 or, if it cannot be so, I must pray 810 that I may perish, and be laid out dead 811 upon my couch so my dear brother there 812 may kiss my lips. But then he must consent, 813 and my delight would seem to him a crime. 814 “Tis known the sons of Aeolus embraced 815 their sisters —But why should I think of these? 816 Why should I take example from such lives? 817 Must I do as they did? Far from it! let 818 such lawless flames be quenched, until I feel 819 no evil love for him, although the pure 820 affection of a sister may be mine, 821 and cherished. If it should have happened first 822 that my dear brother had loved me—ah then, 823 I might have yielded love to his desire. 824 Why not now? I myself must woo him, since 825 I could not have rejected him, if he
10.1	1 Inde per inmensum croceo velatus amictu 2 aethera digreditur Ciconumque Hymenaeus ad oras 3 tendit et Orphea nequiquam voce vocatur. 4 Adfuit ille quidem, sed nec sollemnia verba 5 nec laetos vultus nec felix attulit omen. 6 Fax quoque, quam tenuit, lacrimoso stridula fumo 7 usque fuit nullosque invenit motibus ignes. 8 Exitus auspicio gravior: nam nupta per herbas 9 dum nova naiadum turba comitata vagatur, 10 occidit in talum serpentis dente	1 Veiled in a saffron mantle, through the air 2 unmeasured, after the strange wedding, Hymen 3 departed swiftly for Ciconian land; 4 regardless and not listening to the voice 5 of tuneful Orpheus. Truly Hymen there 6 was present during the festivities 7 of Orpheus and Eurydice, but gave 8 no happy omen, neither hallowed words 9 nor joyful glances; and the torch he held 10 would only sputter, fill the eyes with smoke, 11 and cause no blaze while waving. The result 12 of that sad wedding, proved more terrible 13 than such foreboding fates. 14 While through the grass 15 delighted Naiads wandered with the bride, 16 a serpent struck its venomed tooth in her 17 soft ankle— and she died.—After the bard

	recepto. 11 Quam satis ad superas postquam Rhodopeius auras 12 deflevit vates, ne non temptaret et umbras, 13 ad Styga Taenaria est ausus descendere porta; 14 perque leves populos simulacraque functa sepulcro 15 Persephonen adiit inamoenaque regna tenentem 16 umbrarum dominum. Pulsisque ad carmina nervis 17 sic ait: “O positi sub terra numina mundi, 18 in quem reccidimus, quidquid mortale creamur, 19 si licet et falsi positis ambagibus oris 20 vera loqui sinitis, non huc, ut opaca viderem 21 Tartara, descendi, nec uti villosa colubris 22 terna Medusaei vincirem guttura monstri: 23 causa viae est coniunx, in quam calcata venenum 24 vipera diffudit crescentesque abstulit annos. 25 Posse pati volui nec me temptasse negabo: 26 vicit Amor. Supera deus hic bene notus in ora est, 27 an sit et hic, dubito. Sed et hic tamen auguror esse; 28 famaque si veteris non est mentita rapinae, 29 vos quoque iunxit Amor. Per ego haec loca plena timoris, 30 per chaos hoc ingens vastique silentia regni,	18 of Rhodope had mourned, and filled the highs 19 of heaven with the moans of his lament, 20 determined also the dark underworld 21 should recognize the misery of death, 22 he dared descend by the Taenarian gate 23 down to the gloomy Styx. And there passed through 24 pale-glimmering phantoms, and the ghosts 25 escaped from sepulchres, until he found 26 Persephone and Pluto, master-king 27 of shadow realms below: and then began 28 to strike his tuneful lyre, to which he sang:— 29 “O deities of this dark world beneath 30 the earth! this shadowy underworld, to which 10.31	31 Eurydices, oro, properata retexite fata. 32 Omnia debemur vobis, paulumque morati 33 serius aut citius sedem properamus ad unam. 34 Tendimus huc omnes, haec est domus ultima, vosque 35 humani generis longissima regna tenetis. 36 Haec quoque, cum iustos matura peregerit annos, 37 iuris erit vestri: pro munere poscimus usum. 38 Quod si fata negant veniam pro coniuge, certum est 39 nolle redire mihi: leto gaudete	31 all mortals must descend! If it can be 32 called lawful, and if you will suffer speech 33 of strict truth (all the winding ways 34 of Falsity forbidden) I come not 35 down here because of curiosity 36 to see the glooms of Tartarus and have 37 no thought to bind or strangle the three necks 38 of the Medusan Monster, vile with snakes. 39 But I have come, because my darling wife 40 stepped on a viper that sent through her veins 41 death-poison, cutting off her coming years. 42 “If able, I would bear it, I do not 43 deny my effort—but the god of Love 44 has conquered me—a god so kindly known 45 in all the upper world. We are not

	duorum.” 40 Talia dicentem nervosque ad verba moventem 41 exsangues flebant animae: nec Tantalus undam 42 captavit refugam, stupuitque Ixionis orbis, 43 nec carpsere iecur volucres, urnisque vacarunt 44 Belides, inque tuo sedisti, Sisyphe, saxo. 45 Tunc primum lacrimis victarum carmine fama est 46 Eumenidum maduisse genas. Nec regia coniunx 47 sustinet oranti nec qui regit ima negare, 48 Eurydicenque vocant. Umbras erat illa recentes 49 inter et incessit passu de vulnere tardo. 50 Hanc simul et legem Rhodopeius accipit Orpheus, 51 ne flectat retro sua lumina, donec Avernas 52 exierit valles: aut inrita dona futura. 53 Carpitur acclivis per muta silentia trames, 54 arduus, obscurus, caligine densus opaca. 55 Nec procul afuerunt telluris margine summae: 56 hic, ne deficeret, metuens avidusque videndi 57 flexit amans oculos; et protinus illa relapsa est, 58 bracchiaque intendens prendique et prendere certans 59 nil nisi cedentes infelix arripit auras. 60 Iamque iterum moriens non est de coniuge quicquam	sure 46 he can be known so well in this deep world, 47 but have good reason to conjecture he 48 is not unknown here, and if old report 49 almost forgotten, that you stole your wife 50 is not a fiction, Love united you 51 the same as others. By this Place of Fear 52 this huge void and these vast and silent realms, 53 renew the life-thread of Eurydice. 54 “All things are due to you, and though on earth 55 it happens we may tarry a short while, 56 slowly or swiftly we must go to one 57 abode; and it will be our final home. 58 Long and tenaciously you will possess 59 unquestioned mastery of the human race. 60 She also shall be yours to rule, when full 10.61	61 questa suo: quid enim nisi se quereretur amatam? 62 Supremumque “vale,” quod iam vix auribus ille 63 acciperet, dixit revolutaque rursus eodem est. 64 Non aliter stupuit gemina nece coniugis Orpheus, 65 quam tria qui timidus, medio portante catenas, 66 colla canis vidit, quem non pavor ante reliquit, 67 quam natura prior, saxo per corpus oborto; 68 quique in se crimen traxit voluitque videri 69 Olenos esse nocens, tuque, o confisa	61 of age she shall have lived the days of her 62 allotted years. So I ask of you 63 possession of her few days as a boon. 64 But if the fates deny to me this prayer 65 for my true wife, my constant mind must hold 66 me always so that I can not return— 67 and you may triumph in the death of two!” 68 While he sang all his heart said to the sound 69 of his sweet lyre, the bloodless ghosts themselves 70 were weeping, and the anxious Tantalus 71 stopped clutching at return-flow of the wave, 72 Ixion's twisting wheel stood wonder-bound; 73 and Tityus' liver for a while escaped 74 the vultures, and the listening Belides 75 forgot their sieve-

	figurae, 70 infelix Lethaea, tuae, iunctissima quondam 71 pectora, nunc lapides, quos umida sustinet Ide. 72 Orantem frustraque iterum transire volentem 73 portitor arcuerat. Septem tamen ille diebus 74 squalidus in ripa Cereris sine munere sedit: 75 cura dolorque animi lacrimaeque alimenta fuere. 76 Esse deos Erebi crudeles questus, in altam 77 se recipit Rhodopen pulsumque aquilonibus Haemum. 78 Tertius aequoreis inclusum piscibus annum 79 finierat Titan, omnemque refugerat Orpheus 80 femineam venerem, seu quod male cesserat illi, 81 sive fidem dederat. Multas tamen ardor habebat 82 iungere se vati, multae doluere repulsae. 83 Ille etiam Thracum populis fuit auctor amorem 84 in teneros transferre mares citraque iuventam 85 aetatis breve ver et primos carpere flores. 86 Collis erat collemque super planissima campi 87 area, quam viridem faciebant graminis herbae. 88 Umbra loco deerat: qua postquam parte resedit 89 dis genitus vates et fila sonantia movit, 90 umbra loco venit. Non Chaonis afuit arbor.	like bowls and even you, 76 O Sisyphus! sat idly on your rock! 77 Then Fame declared that conquered by the song 78 of Orpheus, for the first and only time 79 the hard cheeks of the fierce Eumenides 80 were wet with tears: nor could the royal queen, 81 nor he who rules the lower world deny 82 the prayer of Orpheus; so they called to them 83 Eurydice, who still was held among 84 the new-arriving shades, and she obeyed 85 the call by walking to them with slow steps, 86 yet halting from her wound. So Orpheus then 87 received his wife; and Pluto told him he 88 might now ascend from these Avernian vales 89 up to the light, with his Eurydice; 90 but, if he turned his eyes to look at her,
10.91	91 non nemus Heliadum, non frondibus aesculus altis, 92 nec tiliae molles, nec fagus et innuba laurus, 93 et coryli fragiles et fraxinus utilis hastis 94 enodisque abies curvataque glandibus ilex 95 et platanus genialis acerque coloribus impar 96 amnicolaeque simul salices et aquatica lotos 97 perpetuoque virens buxum tenuesque myricae 98 et bicolor myrtus et bacis caerula	91 the gift of her delivery would be lost. 92 They picked their way in silence up a steep 93 and gloomy path of darkness. There remained 94 but little more to climb till they would touch 95 earth's surface, when in fear he might again 96 lose her, and anxious for another look 97 at her, he turned his eyes so he could gaze 98 upon her. Instantly she slipped away. 99 He stretched out to her his despairing arms, 100 eager to rescue her, or feel her form, 101 but could hold nothing save the yielding air. 102 Dying the second time, she could not say 103 a word of censure of her

	tinus. 99 Vos quoque, flexipedes hederae, venistis et una 100 pampineae vites et amictae vitibus ulmi, 101 ornique et piceae pomoque onerata rubenti 102 arbutus et lentae, victoris praemia, palmae 103 et succincta comas hirsutaque vertice pinus, 104 grata deum matri; siquidem Cybeleius Attis 105 exuit hac hominem truncoque induruit illo. 106 Adfuit huic turbae metas imitata cupressus, 107 nunc arbor, puer ante deo dilectus ab illo, 108 qui citharam nervis et nervis temperat arcum. 109 Namque sacer nymphis Carthaea tenentibus arva 110 ingens cervus erat, lateque patentibus altas 111 ipse suo capiti praebebat cornibus umbras. 112 Cornua fulgebant auro, demissaque in armos 113 pendebant tereti gemmata monilia collo. 114 Bulla super frontem parvis argentea loris 115 vincta movebatur parilique aetate: nitebant 116 auribus e geminis circum cava tempora bacae. 117 Isque metu vacuus naturalique pavore 118 deposito celebrare domos mulcendaque colla 119 quamlibet ignotis manibus praebere solebat. 120 Sed tamen ante alios, Ceae pulcherrime gentis,	husband's fault; 104 what had she to complain of — his great love? 105 Her last word spoken was, “Farewell!” which he 106 could barely hear, and with no further sound 107 she fell from him again to Hades.—Struck 108 quite senseless by this double death of his 109 dear wife, he was as fixed from motion as 110 the frightened one who saw the triple necks 111 of Cerberus, that dog whose middle neck 112 was chained. The sight filled him with terror he 113 had no escape from, until petrified 114 to stone; or like Olenos, changed to stone, 115 because he fastened on himself the guilt 116 of his wife. O unfortunate Lethaea! 117 Too boastful of your beauty, you and he, 118 united once in love, are now two stones 119 upon the mountain Ida, moist with springs. 120 Orpheus implored in vain the ferryman
10.121	121 gratus erat, Cyparisse, tibi. Tu pabula cervum 122 ad nova, tu liquidi ducebas fontis ad undam, 123 tu modo nectebas varios per cornua flores, 124 nunc eques in tergo residens huc laetus et illuc 125 mollia purpureis frenabas ora capistris. 126 Aestus erat mediusque dies, solisque vapore 127 concava litorei fervebant bracchia	121 to help him cross the River Styx again, 122 but was denied the very hope of death. 123 Seven days he sat upon Death's river bank, 124 in squalid misery and without all food— 125 nourished by grief, anxiety, and tears— 126 complaining that the Gods of Erebus 127 were pitiless, at last he wandered back, 128 until he came to lofty Rhodope 129 and Haemus, beaten by the strong north wind. 130 Three times the Sun completed his full course 131 to watery Pisces, and in all that

	cancri: 128 fessus in herbosa posuit sua corpora terra 129 cervus et arborea frigus ducebat ab umbra. 130 Hunc puer imprudens iaculo Cyparissus acuto 131 fixit; et ut saevo morientem vulnere vidit, 132 velle mori statuit. Quae non solacia Phoebus 133 dixit et ut leviter pro materiaque doleret, 134 admonuit! Gemit ille tamen munusque supremum 135 hoc petit a superis, ut tempore lugeat omni. 136 Iamque per inmensos egesto sanguine fletus 137 in viridem verti coeperunt membra colorem, 138 et modo qui nivea pendebant fronte capilli, 139 horrida caesaries fieri sumptoque rigore 140 sidereum gracili spectare cacumine caelum. 141 Ingemuit tristisque deus “lugebere nobis 142 lugebisque alios aderisque dolentibus” inquit. 143 Tale nemus vates attraxerat inque ferarum 144 concilio medius turba volucrumque sedebat. 145 Ut satis impulsas temptavit pollice chordas 146 et sensit varios, quamvis diversa sonarent, 147 concordare modos, hoc vocem carmine movit: 148 “Ab Iove, Musa parens, (cedunt Iovis omnia regno!) 149 carmina nostra move! Iovis est mihi saepe potestas 150 dicta prius: cecini plectro graviore Gigantas	time, 132 shunning all women, Orpheus still believed 133 his love-pledge was forever. So he kept 134 away from women, though so many grieved, 135 because he took no notice of their love. 136 The only friendship he enjoyed was given 137 to the young men of Thrace. 138 There was a hill 139 which rose up to a level plateau, high 140 and beautiful with green grass; and there was 141 not any shade for comfort on the top 142 and there on that luxuriant grass the bard, 143 while heaven-inspired reclined, and struck 144 such harmonies on his sweet lyre that shade 145 most grateful to the hill was spread around. 146 Strong trees came up there —the Chaonian oak 147 the Heliads' poplar, and the lofty-branched 148 deep mast-tree, the soft linden and the beech, 149 the brittle hazel, and the virgin laurel-tree, 150 the ash for strong spears, the smooth silver-fir, 151 the flex bent with acorns and the plane, 152 the various tinted maple and with those, 153 the lotus and green willows from their streams, 154 evergreen box and slender tamarisks, 155 rich myrtles of two colors and the tine, 156 bending with green-blue berries: and you, too, 157 the pliant-footed ivy, came along 158 with tendril-branching grape-vines, and the elm 159 all covered with twist-vines, the mountain-ash, 160 pitch-trees and arbute-trees of blushing fruit, 161 the bending-palm prized after victories, 162 the bare-trunk pine of tufted foliage, 163 bristled upon the top, a pleasant sight 164 delightful to the Mother of the Gods; 165 since Attis dear to Cybele, exchanged 166 his human form which hardened in that tree. 167 In all the throng the cone-shaped cypress came;
10.151	151 sparsaque Phlegraeis victricia fulmina campis: 152 nunc opus est leviore lyra, puerosque canamus 153 dilectos superis, inconcessisque puellas 154 ignibus attonitas meruisse libidine poenam. 155 Rex superum Phrygii quondam Ganymedis amore 156 arsit, et inventum est aliquid, quod	168 a tree now, it was changed from a dear youth 169 loved by the god who strings the lyre and bow. 170 For there was at one time, a mighty stag 171 held sacred by those nymphs who haunt the fields 172 Carthaean. His great antlers spread so wide, 173 they gave an ample shade to his own head. 174 Those antlers shone with gold: from his smooth throat 175 a necklace, studded with a wealth of gems, 176 hung down

	Iuppiter esse, 157 quam quod erat, mallet. Nulla tamen alite verti 158 dignatur, nisi quae posset sua fulmina ferre. 159 Nec mora, percusso mendacibus aere pennis 160 abripit Iliaden; qui nunc quoque pocula miscet 161 invitaque Iovi nectar Iunone ministrat. 162 Te quoque, Amyclide, posuisset in aethere Phoebus, 163 tristia si spatium ponendi fata dedissent. 164 Qua licet, aeternus tamen es: quotiensque repellit 165 ver hiemem piscique aries succedit aquoso, 166 tu totiens oreris viridique in caespite flores. 167 Te meus ante omnes genitor dilexit, et orbe 168 in medio positi caruerunt praeside Delphi, 169 dum deus Eurotan inmunitamque frequentat 170 Sparten. Nec citharae nec sunt in honore sagittae: 171 inmemor ipse sui non retia ferre recusat, 172 non tenuisse canes, non per iuga montis iniqui 173 ire comes, longaque alit adsuetudine flammas. 174 Iamque fere medius Titan venientis et actae 175 noctis erat spatioque pari distabat utrimque: 176 corpora veste levant et suco pinguis olivi 177 splendescunt latique ineunt certamina disci. 178 Quem prius aerias libratum Phoebus in auras 179 misit et oppositas disiecit pondere nubes. 180 Reccidit in solidam longo post tempore terram	to his strong shoulders—beautiful. 177 A silver boss, fastened with little thongs, 178 played on his forehead, worn there from his birth; 179 and pendants from both ears, of gleaming pearls, 180 adorned his hollow temples. Free of fear, 181 and now no longer shy, frequenting homes 182 of men he knew, he offered his soft neck 183 even to strangers for their petting hands. 184 But more than by all others, he was loved 185 by you, O Cyparissus, fairest youth 186 of all the lads of Cea. It was you 187 who led the pet stag to fresh pasturage, 188 and to the waters of the clearest spring. 189 Sometimes you wove bright garlands for his horns, 190 and sometimes, like a horseman on his back, 191 now here now there, you guided his soft mouth 192 with purple reins. It was upon a summer day, 193 at high noon when the Crab, of spreading claws, 194 loving the sea-shore, almost burnt beneath 195 the sun's hot burning rays; and the pet stag 196 was then reclining on the grassy earth 197 and, wearied of all action, found relief
10.181	181 pondus et exhibuit iunctam cum viribus artem. 182 Protinus imprudens actusque cupidine lusus 183 tollere Taenarides orbem properabat. At illum 184 dura repercusso subiecit verbere tellus 185 in vultus, Hyacinthe, tuos.	198 under the cool shade of the forest trees; 199 that as he lay there Cyparissus pierced 200 him with a javelin: and although it was 201 quite accidental, when the shocked youth saw 202 his loved stag dying from the cruel wound 203 he could not bear it, and resolved on death. 204 What did not Phoebus say to comfort him? 205

	Expalluit aeque 186 quam puer ipse deus conlapsosque excipit artus, 187 et modo te refovet, modo tristia vulnera siccat, 188 nunc animam admotis fugientem sustinet herbis. 189 Nil prosunt artes: erat inmedicabile vulnus. 190 Ut siquis violas rigidumve papaver in horto 191 liliaque infringat fulvis horrentia linguis, 192 marcida demittant subito caput illa vietum 193 nec se sustineant spectentque cacumine terram: 194 sic vultus moriens iacet, et defecta vigore 195 ipsa sibi est oneri cervix umeroque recumbit. 196 “Laberis, Oebalide, prima fraudate iuventa,” 197 Phoebus ait “videoque tuum, mea crimina, vulnus. 198 Tu dolor es facinusque meum: mea dextera leto 199 inscribenda tuo est! Ego sum tibi funeris auctor. 200 Quae mea culpa tamen? Nisi si lusisse vocari 201 culpa potest, nisi culpa potest et amasse vocari. 202 Atque utinam merito vitam tecumque liceret 203 reddere! Quod quoniam fatali lege tenemur, 204 semper eris mecum memorique haerebis in ore. 205 Te lyra pulsa manu, te carmina nostra sonabunt, 206 flosque novus scripto gemitus imitabere nostros. 207 Tempus et illud erit, quo se fortissimus heros 208 addat in hunc florem folioque legatur eodem.” 209 Talia dum vero memorantur Apollinis ore, 210 ecce cruor, qui fusus humo signaverat herbas,	He cautioned him to hold his grief in check, 206 consistent with the cause. But still the lad 207 lamented, and with groans implored the Gods 208 that he might mourn forever. His life force 209 exhausted by long weeping, now his limbs 210 began to take a green tint, and his hair, 211 which overhung his snow-white brow, turned up 212 into a bristling crest; and he became 213 a stiff tree with a slender top and pointed 214 up to the starry heavens. And the God, 215 groaning with sorrow, said; “You shall be mourned 216 sincerely by me, surely as you mourn 217 for others, and forever you shall stand 218 in grief, where others grieve.”
10.211	211 desinit esse cruor, Tyrioque nitentior ostro 212 flos oritur formamque capit quam lilia, si non 213 purpureus color his, argenteus esset in illis. 214 Non satis hoc Phoebo est (is enim	219 Such was the grove 220 by Orpheus drawn together; and he sat 221 surrounded by assembled animals, 222 and many strange Birds. When he tried the chords 223 by touching with his thumb, and was convinced 224 the notes were all in harmony, although

	fuit auctor honoris): 215 ipse suos gemitus foliis inscribit, et AI AI 216 flos habet inscriptum, funestaque littera dicta est. 217 Nec genuisse pudet Sparten Hyacinthon, honorque 218 durat in hoc aevi, celebrandaque more priorum 219 annua praelata redeunt Hyacinthia pompa. 220 At si forte roges fecundam Amathunta metallis, 221 an genuisse velit Propoetidas, abnuat aeque 222 atque illos, gemino quondam quibus aspera cornu 223 frons erat: unde etiam nomen traxere Cerastae. 224 Ante fores horum stabat Iovis Hospitis ara; 225 ignarus sceleris quam siquis sanguine tinctam 226 advena vidisset, mactatos crederet illic 227 lactantes vitulos Amathusiacasque bidentes: 228 hospes erat caesus. Sacris offensa nefandis 229 ipsa suas urbes Ophiusiaque arva parabat 230 deserere alma Venus. “Sed quid loca grata, quid urbes 231 peccavere meae? Quod” dixit “crimen in illis? 232 Exsilio poenam potius gens impia pendat, 233 vel nece, vel siquid medium est mortisque fugaeque. 234 Idque quid esse potest, nisi versae poena figurae?” 235 Dum dubitat, quo mutet eos, ad cornua vultum 236 flexit et admonita est haec illis posse relinqui: 237 grandiaque in torvos transformat membra iuvencos. 238 Sunt tamen obscenae Venerem Propoetides ausae 239 esse negare deam. Pro quo sua, numinis ira, 240 corpora cum forma primae vulgasse feruntur:	225 attuned to various melody, he raised 226 his voice and sang: 227 “Oh my loved mother, Muse, 228 from Jove inspire my song—for all things yield, 229 to the unequalled sway of Jove—oh, I 230 have sung so often Jupiter's great power 231 before this day, and in a wilder strain, 232 I've sung the giants and victorious bolts 233 hurled on Phlegraean plains. But now I need 234 the gentler touch; for I would sing of boys, 235 the favorites of Gods, and even of maids 236 who had to pay the penalty of wrong.” 237 The king of all the Gods once burned with love 238 for Ganymede of Phrygia. He found 239 a shape more pleasing even than his own. 240 Jove would not take the form of any bird, 241 except the eagle's, able to sustain 242 the weight of his own thunderbolts. Without 243 delay, Jove on fictitious eagle wings, 244 stole and flew off with that loved Trojan boy: 245 who even to this day, against the will 246 of Juno, mingles nectar in the cups 247 of his protector, mighty Jupiter. 248 You also, Hyacinthus, would have been
10.241	241 utque pudor cessit sanguisque induruit oris, 242 in rigidum parvo silicem discrimine versae. 243 Quas quia Pygmalion aevum per	249 set in the sky! if Phoebus had been given 250 time which the cruel fates denied for you. 251 But in a way you are immortal too. 252 Though you have died. Always when warm spring 253

	crimen agentes 244 viderat, offensus vitiis, quae plurima menti 245 femineae natura dedit, sine coniuge caelebs 246 vivebat thalamique diu consorte carebat. 247 Interea niveum mira feliciter arte 248 sculpsit ebur formamque dedit, qua femina nasci 249 nulla potest: operisque sui concepit amorem. 250 Virginis est verae facies, quam vivere credas, 251 et, si non obstet reverentia, velle moveri: 252 ars adeo latet arte sua. Miratur et haurit 253 pectore Pygmalion simulati corporis ignes. 254 Saepe manus operi temptantes admovet, an sit 255 corpus an illud ebur: nec adhuc ebur esse fatetur. 256 Oscula dat reddique putat loquiturque tenetque, 257 et credit tactis digitos insidere membris, 258 et metuit, pressos veniat ne livor in artus. 259 Et modo blanditias adhibet, modo grata puellis 260 munera fert illi conchas teretesque lapillos 261 et parvas volucres et flores mille colorum 262 liliaque pictasque pilas et ab arbore lapsas 263 Heliadum lacrimas; ornat quoque vestibus artus, 264 dat digitis gemmas, dat longa monilia collo: 265 aure leves bacae, redimicula pectore pendent. 266 Cuncta decent: nec nuda minus formosa videtur. 267 Conlocat hanc stratis concha Sidonide tinctis 268 appellatque tori sociam, acclinataque colla 269 mollibus in plumis, tamquam sensura, reponit. 270 Festa dies Veneris tota celeberrima Cypro	drives winter out, and Aries (the Ram) 254 succeeds to Pisces (watery Fish), you rise 255 and blossom on the green turf. And the love 256 my father had for you was deeper than he felt 257 for others. Delphi center of the world, 258 had no presiding guardian, while the God 259 frequented the Eurotas and the land 260 of Sparta, never fortified with walls. 261 His zither and his bow no longer fill 262 his eager mind and now without a thought 263 of dignity, he carried nets and held 264 the dogs in leash, and did not hesitate 265 to go with Hyacinthus on the rough, 266 steep mountain ridges; and by all of such 267 associations, his love was increased. 268 Now Titan was about midway, betwixt 269 the coming and the banished night, and stood 270 at equal distance from those two extremes. 271 Then, when the youth and Phoebus were well stripped, 272 and gleaming with rich olive oil, they tried 273 a friendly contest with the discus. First 274 Phoebus, well-poised, sent it awhirl through air, 275 and cleft the clouds beyond with its broad weight; 276 from which at length it fell down to the earth, 277 a certain evidence of strength and skill. 278 Heedless of danger Hyacinthus rushed
10.271	271 venerat, et pandis inductae cornibus aurum 272 conciderant ictae nivea cervice iuvencae,	279 for eager glory of the game, resolved 280 to get the discus. But it bounded back 281 from off the hard earth, and struck full against 282 your

	273 turaque fumabant: cum munere functus ad aras 274 constitit et timide, “si di dare cuncta potestis, 275 sit coniunx, opto” (non ausus “eburnea virgo” 276 dicere) Pygmalion “similis mea” dixit “eburnae.” 277 Sensit, ut ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis, 278 vota quid illa velint; et, amici numinis omen, 279 flamma ter accensa est apicemque per aera duxit. 280 Ut rediit, simulacra suae petit ille puellae 281 incumbensque toro dedit oscula: visa tepere est. 282 Admovet os iterum, manibus quoque pectora temptat: 283 temptatum mollescit ebur positoque rigore 284 subsidit digitis ceditque, ut Hymettia sole 285 cera remollescit tractataque pollice multas 286 flectitur in facies ipsoque fit utilis usu. 287 Dum stupet et dubie gaudet fallique veretur, 288 rursus amans rursusque manu sua vota retractat. 289 Corpus erat: saliunt temptatae pollice venae. 290 Tum vero Paphius plenissima concipit heros 291 verba, quibus Veneri grates agat, oraque tandem 292 ore suo non falsa premit: dataque oscula virgo 293 sensit et erubuit timidumque ad lumina lumen 294 attollens pariter cum caelo vidit amantem. 295 Coniugio, quod fecit, adest dea. Iamque coactis 296 cornibus in plenum noviens lunaribus orbem 297 illa Paphon genuit, de qua tenet insula nomen. 298 Editus hac ille est, qui, si sine prole fuisset, 299 inter felices Cinyras potuisset haberi. 300 Dira canam: procul hinc natae, procul este parentes!	face, O Hyacinthus! Deadly pale 283 the God's face went — as pallid as the boy's. 284 With care he lifted the sad huddled form. 285 The kind god tries to warm you back to life, 286 and next endeavors to attend your wound, 287 and stay your parting soul with healing herbs. 288 His skill is no advantage, for the wound 289 is past all art of cure. As if someone, 290 when in a garden, breaks off violets, 291 poppies, or lilies hung from golden stems, 292 then drooping they must hang their withered heads, 293 and gaze down towards the earth beneath them; so, 294 the dying boy's face droops, and his bent neck, 295 a burden to itself, falls back upon 296 his shoulder: “You are fallen in your prime 297 defrauded of your youth, O Hyacinthus!” 298 Moaned Apollo. “I can see in your sad wound 299 my own guilt, and you are my cause of grief 300 and self-reproach. My own hand gave you death 301 unmerited — I only can be charged 302 with your destruction.—What have I done wrong? 303 Can it be called a fault to play with you? 304 Should loving you be called a fault? And oh, 305 that I might now give up my life for you! 306 Or die with you! But since our destinies 307 prevent us you shall always be with me, 308 and you shall dwell upon my care-filled lips.
10.301	301 Aut, mea si vestras mulcebunt carmina mentes,	309 The lyre struck by my hand, and my true songs 310 will always celebrate

	302 desit in hac mihi parte fides, nec credite factum, 303 vel, si credetis, facti quoque credite poenam. 304 Si tamen admissum sinit hoc natura videri, 305 306 gratulor huic terrae, quod abest regionibus illis, 307 quae tantum genuere nefas. Sit dives amomo 308 cinnamaque costumque suum sudataque ligno 309 tura ferat floresque alios Panchaia tellus, 310 dum ferat et murram: tanti nova non fuit arbor. 311 Ipse negat nocuisse tibi sua tela Cupido, 312 Myrrha, facesque suas a crimine vindicat isto. 313 Stipite te Stygio tumidisque adflavit echidnis 314 e tribus una soror. Scelus est odisse parentem: 315 hic amor est odio maius scelus. Undique lecti 316 te cupiunt proceres, totoque oriente iuventus 317 ad thalami certamen adest. Ex omnibus unum 318 elige, Myrrha, virum: dum ne sit in omnibus unus. 319 Illa quidem sentit foedoque repugnat amori 320 et secum “quo mente feror? quid molior?” inquit: 321 “di, precor, et pietas sacrataque iura parentum, 322 hoc prohibete nefas scelerique resistite nostro, — 323 si tamen hoc scelus est. Sed enim damnare negatur 324 hanc venerem pietas, coeuntque animalia nullo 325 cetera delicto. Nec habetur turpe iuvencae 326 ferre patrem tergo, fit equo sua filia coniunx, 327 quasque creavit init pecudes caper, ipsaque, cuius 328 semine concepta est, ex illo concipit ales. 329 Felices, quibus ista licent! Humana malignas 330 cura dedit leges, et quod natura remittit,	you. A new flower 311 you shall arise, with markings on your petals, 312 close imitation of my constant moans: 313 and there shall come another to be linked 314 with this new flower, a valiant hero shall 315 be known by the same marks upon its petals.” 316 And while Phoebus, Apollo, sang these words 317 with his truth-telling lips, behold the blood 318 of Hyacinthus, which had poured out on 319 the ground beside him and there stained the grass, 320 was changed from blood; and in its place a flower, 321 more beautiful than Tyrian dye, sprang up. 322 It almost seemed a lily, were it not 323 that one was purple and the other white. 324 But Phoebus was not satisfied with this. 325 For it was he who worked the miracle 326 of his sad words inscribed on flower leaves. 327 These letters AI, AI, are inscribed 328 on them. And Sparta certainly is proud 329 to honor Hyacinthus as her son; 330 and his loved fame endures; and every year 331 they celebrate his solemn festival.
10.331	331 invida iura negant. Gentes tamen	332 If you should ask Amathus, which is

	esse feruntur, 332 in quibus et nato genetrix et nata parenti 333 iungitur, ut pietas geminato crescat amore. 334 Me miseram, quod non nasci mihi contigit illic, 335 fortunaque loci laedor! — Quid in ista revolvor? 336 Spes interdictae discedite! Dignus amari 337 ille, sed ut pater, est. — Ergo si filia magni 338 non essem Cinyrae, Cinyrae concumbere possem; 339 nunc quia iam meus est, non est meus, ipsaque damno 340 est mihi proximitas: aliena potentior essem. 341 Ire libet procul hinc patriaeque relinquere fines, 342 dum scelus effugiam. Retinet malus ardor amantem, 343 ut praesens spectem Cinyram tangamque loquarque 344 osculaque admoveam, si nil conceditur ultra. 345 Ultra autem spectare aliquid potes, impia virgo? 346 Et quot confundas et iura et nomina, sentis! 347 Tune eris et matris paelex et adultera patris? 348 Tune soror nati genetrixque vocabere fratris? 349 Nec metues atro crinitas angue sorores, 350 quas facibus saevis oculos atque ora petentes 351 noxia corda vident? At tu, dum corpore non es 352 passa nefas, animo ne concipe, neve potentis 353 concubitu vetito naturae pollue foedus. 354 Velle puta: res ipsa vetat. Pius ille memorque est 355 moris — et o vellem similis furor esset in illo!” 356 Dixerat, at Cinyras, quem copia digna procorum, 357 quid faciat, dubitare facit, scitatur ab ipsa 358 nominibus dictis, cuius velit esse mariti. 359 Illa silet primo, patriisque in vultibus haerens 360 aestuat et tepido suffundit lumina	rich 333 in metals, how can she rejoice and take 334 a pride in deeds of her Propoetides; 335 she would disclaim it and repudiate 336 them all, as well as those of transformed men, 337 whose foreheads were deformed by two rough horns, 338 from which their name Cerastae. By their gates 339 an altar unto Jove stood. If by chance 340 a stranger, not informed of their dark crimes, 341 had seen the horrid altar smeared with blood, 342 he would suppose that suckling calves and sheep 343 of Amathus, were sacrificed thereon— 344 it was in fact the blood of slaughtered guests! 345 Kind-hearted Venus, outraged by such deeds 346 of sacrifice, was ready to desert 347 her cities and her snake-infested plains; 348 “But how,” said she, “have their delightful lands 349 together with my well built cities sinned? 350 What crime have they done?—Those inhabitants 351 should pay the penalty of their own crimes 352 by exile or by death; or it may be 353 a middle course, between exile and death; 354 and what can that be, but the punishment 355 of a changed form?” And while she hesitates, 356 in various thoughts of what form they should take, 357 her eyes by chance, observed their horns, 358 and that decided her; such horns could well 359 be on them after any change occurred, 360 and she transformed their big and brutal bodies 361 to savage bulls. 362 But even after that, 363 the obscene Propoetides dared to deny 364 divinity of Venus, for which fault, 365 (and it is common fame) they were the first 366 to criminate their bodies, through the wrath 367 of Venus; and so blushing shame was lost, 368 white blood, in their bad faces grew so fast, 369 so hard, it was no wonder they were turned 370 with small change into hard and lifeless stones.

	rore.
10.361	361 Virginei Cinyras haec credens esse timoris, 362 flere vetat siccatque genas atque oscula iungit. 363 Myrrha datis nimium gaudet: consultaque, qualem 364 optet habere virum, “similem tibi” dixit. At ille 365 non intellectam vocem conlaudat et “esto 366 tam pia semper” ait. Pietatis nomine dicto 367 demisit vultus sceleris sibi conscia virgo. 368 Noctis erat medium, curasque et corpora somnus 369 solverat. At virgo Cinyreia pervigil igni 370 carpitur indomito furiosaque vota retractat. 371 Et modo desperat, modo vult temptare, pudetque 372 et cupit, et, quid agat, non invenit. Utque securi 373 saucia trabs ingens, ubi plaga novissima restat, 374 quo cadat, in dubio est omnique a parte timetur: 375 sic animus vario labefactus vulnere nutat 376 huc levis atque illuc momentaque sumit utroque. 377 Nec modus aut requies, nisi mors, reperitur amoris. 378 Mors placet. Erigitur laqueoque innectere fauces 379 destinat et zona summo de poste revincta 380 “care vale Cinyra causamque intellege mortis!” 381 dixit et aptabat pallenti vincula collo. 382 Murmura verborum fidas nutricis ad aures 383 pervenisse ferunt limen servantis alumnae. 384 Surgit anus reseratque fores, mortisque paratae 385 instrumenta videns spatio conclamat eodem 386 seque ferit scinditque sinus ereptaque collo 387 vincula dilaniat. Tum denique flere vacavit, 388 tum dare complexus laqueique requirere causam. 389 Muta silet virgo terramque inmota	371 Pygmalion saw these women waste their lives 372 in wretched shame, and critical of faults 373 which nature had so deeply planted through 374 their female hearts, he lived in preference, 375 for many years unmarried.—But while he 376 was single, with consummate skill, he carved 377 a statue out of snow-white ivory, 378 and gave to it exquisite beauty, which 379 no woman of the world has ever equalled: 380 she was so beautiful, he fell in love 381 with his creation. It appeared in truth 382 a perfect virgin with the grace of life, 383 but in the expression of such modesty 384 all motion was restrained—and so his art 385 concealed his art. Pygmalion gazed, inflamed 386 with love and admiration for the form, 387 in semblance of a woman, he had carved. 388 He lifts up both his hands to feel the work, 389 and wonders if it can be ivory, 390 because it seems to him more truly flesh. — 391 his mind refusing to conceive of it 392 as ivory, he kisses it and feels 393 his kisses are returned. And speaking love, 394 caresses it with loving hands that seem 395 to make an impress, on the parts they touch, 396 so real that he fears he then may bruise 397 her by his eager pressing. Softest tones 398 are used each time he speaks to her. He brings 399 to her such presents as are surely prized 400 by sweet girls; such as smooth round pebbles, shells, tuetur 390 et deprensa dolet tardae conamina mortis.

10.391	391 Instat anus canosque suos et inania nudans 392 ubera per cunas alimentaque prima precatur, 393 ut sibi committat, quidquid dolet. Illa rogantem 394 aversata gemit. Certa est exquirere nutrix 395 nec solam spondere fidem: “dic” inquit “opemque 396 me sine ferre tibi; non est mea pigra senectus. 397 Seu furor est, habeo, quae carmine sanet et herbis, 398 sive aliquis nocuit, magico lustrabere ritu, 399 ira deum sive est, sacris placabilis ira. 400 Quid rear ulterius ? Certe fortuna domusque 401 sospes et in cursu est, vivit genetrixque paterque.” 402 Myrrha, patre audito, suspiria duxit ab imo 403 pectore. Nec nutrix etiamnum concipit ullum 404 mente nefas, aliquemque tamen praesentit amorem; 405 propositique tenax, quodcumque est, orat, ut ipsi 406 indicet, et gremio lacrimantem tollit anili 407 atque ita complectens infirmis membra lacertis 408 “sensimus,” inquit “amas! sed et hic mea (pone timorem) 409 sedulitas erit apta tibi, nec sentiet umquam 410 hoc pater.” Exsiluit gremio furibunda torumque 411 ore premens “discede, precor, miseroque pudori 412 parce!” ait. Instanti “discede, aut desine” dixit 413 “quaerere, quid doleam: scelus est, quod scire laboras.” 414 Horret anus tremulasque manus annisque metuque 415 tendit et ante pedes supplex procumbit alumnae 416 et modo blanditur, modo, si non conscia fiat, 417 terret; et indicium laquei coeptaeque minatur 418 mortis et officium commisso	401 and birds, and fragrant flowers of thousand tints, 402 lilies, and painted balls, and amber tears 403 of Heliads, which distill from far off trees.— 404 he drapes her in rich clothing and in gems: 405 rings on her fingers, a rich necklace round 406 her neck, pearl pendants on her graceful ears; 407 and golden ornaments adorn her breast. 408 All these are beautiful—and she appears 409 most lovable, if carefully attired,— 410 or perfect as a statue, unadorned. 411 He lays her on a bed luxurious, spread 412 with coverlets of Tyrian purple dye, 413 and naming her the consort of his couch, 414 lays her reclining head on the most soft 415 and downy pillows, trusting she could feel. 416 The festal day of Venus, known throughout 417 all Cyprus, now had come, and throngs were there 418 to celebrate. Heifers with spreading horns, 419 all gold-tipped, fell when given the stroke of death 420 upon their snow-white necks; and frankincense 421 was smoking on the altars. There, intent, 422 Pygmalion stood before an altar, when 423 his offering had been made; and although he 424 feared the result, he prayed: “If it is true, 425 O Gods, that you can give all things, I pray 426 to have as my wife —” but, he did not dare 427 to add “my ivory statue-maid,” and said, 428 “One like my ivory—.” Golden Venus heard, 429 for she was present at her festival, 430 and she knew clearly what the prayer had meant.

	spondet amori. 419 Extulit illa caput lacrimisque implevit obortis 420 pectora nutricis; conataque saepe fateri
10.421	421 saepe tenet vocem, pudibundaque vestibus ora 422 texit et “o” dixit “felicem coniuge matrem!” 423 Hactenus, et gemuit. Gelidus nutricis in artus 424 ossaque (sensit enim) penetrat tremor, albaque toto 425 vertice canities rigidis stetit hirta capillis. 426 Multaque, ut excuteret diros, si posset, amores, 427 addidit: at virgo scit se non falsa moneri, 428 certa mori tamen est, si non potiatur amore. 429 “Vive,” ait haec “potiere tuo” — et, non ausa “parente” 430 dicere, conticuit promissaque numine firmat. 431 Festa piae Cereris celebrabant annua matres 432 illa, quibus nivea velatae corpora veste 433 primitias frugum dant spicea serta suarum 434 perque novem noctes venerem tactusque viriles 435 in vetitis numerant. Turba Cenchreis in illa 436 regis adest coniunx, arcanaque sacra frequentat. 437 Ergo legitima vacuus dum coniuge lectus, 438 nacta gravem vino Cinyram male sedula nutrix, 439 nomine mentito veros exponit amores 440 et faciem laudat. Quaesitis virginis annis 441 “par” ait “est Myrrhae.” Quam postquam adducere iussa est 442 utque domum rediit, “gaude mea” dixit “alumna: 443 vicimus.” Infelix non toto pectore sentit 444 laetitiam virgo, praesagaque pectora maerent; 445 sed tamen et gaudet: tanta est discordia mentis. 446 Tempus erat, quo cuncta silent, interque triones 447 flexerat obliquo plaustrum temone	431 She gave a sign that her Divinity 432 favored his plea: three times the flame leaped high 433 and brightly in the air. 434 When he returned, 435 he went directly to his image-maid, 436 bent over her, and kissed her many times, 437 while she was on her couch; and as he kissed, 438 she seemed to gather some warmth from his lips. 439 Again he kissed her; and he felt her breast; 440 the ivory seemed to soften at the touch, 441 and its firm texture yielded to his hand, 442 as honey-wax of Mount Hymettus turns 443 to many shapes when handled in the sun, 444 and surely softens from each gentle touch. 445 He is amazed; but stands rejoicing in his doubt; 446 while fearful there is some mistake, again 447 and yet again, gives trial to his hopes 448 by touching with his hand. It must be flesh! 449 The veins pulsate beneath the careful test 450 of his directed finger. Then, indeed, 451 the astonished hero poured out lavish thanks 452 to Venus; pressing with his raptured lips 453 his statue's lips. Now real, true to life— 454 the maiden felt the kisses given to her, 455 and blushing, lifted up her timid eyes, 456 so that she saw the light and sky above, 457 as well as her rapt lover while he leaned 458 gazing beside her—and all this at once— 459 the goddess graced the marriage she had willed, 460 and when nine times a crescent moon had changed,

	Bootes: 448 ad facinus venit illa suum. Fugit aurea caelo 449 luna, tegunt nigrae latitantia sidera nubes: 450 nox caret igne suo. Primus tegis, Icare, vultus
10.451	451 Erigoneque pio sacrata parentis amore. 452 Ter pedis offensi signo est revocata, ter omen 453 funereus bubo letali carmine fecit: 454 it tamen, et tenebrae minuunt noxque atra pudorem; 455 nutricisque manum laeva tenet, altera motu 456 caecum iter explorat. Thalami iam limina tangit, 457 iamque fores aperit, iam ducitur intus: at illi 458 poplite succiduo genua intremuere, fugitque 459 et color et sanguis, animusque relinquit euntem. 460 Quoque suo propior sceleri est, magis horret, et ausi 461 paenitet, et vellet non cognita posse reverti. 462 Cunctantem longaeva manu deducit et alto 463 admotam lecto cum traderet “accipe,” dixit 464 “ista tua est, Cinyra” devotaque corpora iunxit. 465 Accipit obsceno genitor sua viscera lecto 466 virgineosque metus levat hortaturque timentem. 467 Forsitan aetatis quoque nomine “filia” dixit, 468 dixit et illa “pater,” sceleri ne nomina desint. 469 Plena patris thalamis excedit et impia diro 470 semina fert utero conceptaque crimina portat. 471 Postera nox facinus geminat. Nec finis in illa est: 472 cum tandem Cinyras, avidus cognoscere amantem 473 post tot concubitus, inlato lumine vidit 474 et scelus et natam, verbisque dolore retentis 475 pendenti nitidum vagina deripit ensem. 476 Myrrha fugit, tenebrisque et caecae munere noctis	461 increasing to the full, the statue-bride 462 gave birth to her dear daughter Paphos. From 463 which famed event the island takes its name. 464 The royal Cinyras was sprung from her; 465 and if he had been father of no child, 466 might well have been accounted fortunate— 467 but I must sing of horrible events— 468 avoid it daughters! Parents! shun this tale! 469 But if my verse has charmed your thought, 470 do not give me such credit in this part; 471 convince yourself it cannot be true life; 472 or, if against my wish you hear and must 473 believe it, then be sure to notice how 474 such wickedness gets certain punishment. 475 And yet, if Nature could permit such crimes 476 as this to happen, I congratulate 477 Ismarian people and all Thrace as well, 478 and I congratulate this nation, which 479 we know is far away from the land where 480 this vile abomination did occur. 481 The land we call Panchaia may be rich 482 in balsam, cinnamon, and costum sweet 483 for ointment, frankincense distilled from trees, 484 with many flowers besides. All this large wealth 485 combined could never compensate the land 486 for this detestable, one crime: even though 487 the new Myrrh-Tree advanced on that rich soil. 488 Cupid declares his weapons never caused 489 an injury to Myrrha, and denies 490 his torches ever could have urged her crime.— 491 one of the three bad sisters kindled this, 492 with fire brand from the Styx, and poisoned you 493 with swollen vipers.—It is criminal

	477 intercepta neci est: latosque vagata per agros 478 palmiferos Arabas Panchaeaque rura reliquit; 479 perque novem erravit redeuntis cornua lunae, 480 cum tandem terra requievit fessa Sabaea;
10.481	481 vixque uteri portabat onus. Tum nescia voti 482 atque inter mortisque metus et taedia vitae 483 est tales complexa preces: “O siqua patetis 484 numina confessis, merui nec triste recuso 485 supplicium. Sed ne violem vivosque superstes 486 mortuaque exstinctos, ambobus pellite regnis 487 mutataeque mihi vitamque necemque negate.” 488 Numen confessis aliquod patet: ultima certe 489 vota suos habuere deos. Nam crura loquentis 490 terra supervenit, ruptosque obliqua per ungues 491 porrigitur radix, longi firmamina trunci; 492 ossaque robur agunt, mediaque manente medulla 493 sanguis it in sucos, in magnos bracchia ramos, 494 in parvos digiti, duratur cortice pellis. 495 Iamque gravem crescens uterum perstrinxerat arbor 496 pectoraque obruerat collumque operire parabat, 497 non tulit illa moram venientique obvia ligno 498 subsedit mersitque suos in cortice vultus. 499 Quae quamquam amisit veteres cum corpore sensus, 500 flet tamen, et tepidae manant ex arbore guttae. 501 Est honor et lacrimis, stillataque robore murra 502 nomen erile tenet nulloque tacebitur aevo. 503 At male conceptus sub robore creverat infans 504 quaerebatque viam, qua se genetrice relicta 505 exsereret: media gravidus tumet arbore venter.	494 to hate a parent, but love such as hers 495 is certainly more criminal than hate. 496 The chosen princes of all lands desire 497 you now in marriage, and young men throughout 498 the Orient are vying for your hand. 499 Choose, Myrrha one from all of these for your 500 good husband; but exclude from such a thought 501 your father only. She indeed is quite 502 aware, and struggles bitterly against 503 her vile desires, and argues in her heart:— 504 “What am I tending to? O listening Gods 505 I pray for aid, I pray to Natural Love! 506 Ah, may the sacred rights of parents keep 507 this vile desire from me, defend me from 508 a crime so great—If it indeed is crime. 509 I am not sure it is—I have not heard 510 that any god or written law condemns 511 the union of a parent and his child. 512 All animals will mate as they desire— 513 a heifer may endure her sire, and who 514 condemns it? And the happy stud is not 515 refused by his mare-daughters: the he-goat 516 consorts unthought-of with the flock of which 517 he is the father; and the birds conceive 518 of those from whom they were themselves begot. 519 Happy are they who have such privilege! 520 Malignant men have given spiteful laws; 521 and what is right to Nature is decreed 522 unnatural, by jealous laws of men. 523 “But it is said there are some tribes today,

	506 Tendit onus matrem: neque habent sua verba dolores, 507 nec Lucina potest parientis voce vocari. 508 Nitenti tamen est similis curvataque crebros 509 dat gemitus arbor lacrimisque cadentibus umet. 510 Constitit ad ramos mitis Lucina dolentes
10.511	511 admovitque manus et verba puerpera dixit. 512 Arbor agit rimas et fissa cortice vivum 513 reddit onus, vagitque puer; quem mollibus herbis 514 naides impositum lacrimis unxere parentis. 515 Laudaret faciem Livor quoque. Qualia namque 516 corpora nudorum tabula pinguntur Amorum, 517 talis erat: sed, ne faciat discrimina cultus, 518 aut huic adde leves, aut illi deme pharetras. 519 Labitur occulte fallitque volatilis aetas, 520 et nihil est annis velocius. Ille sorore 521 natus avoque suo, qui conditus arbore nuper, 522 nuper erat genitus, modo formosissimus infans, 523 iam iuvenis, iam vir, iam se formosior ipso est: 524 iam placet et Veneri matrisque ulciscitur ignes. 525 Namque pharetratus dum dat puer oscula matri, 526 inscius exstanti destrinxit harundine pectus. 527 Laesa manu natum dea reppulit. Altius actum 528 vulnus erat specie primoque fefellerat ipsam. 529 Capta viri forma non iam Cythereia curat 530 litora, non alto repetit Paphon aequore cinctam 531 piscosamque Gnidon gravidamve Amathunta metallis; 532 abstinet et caelo: caelo praefertur Adonis. 533 Hunc tenet, huic comes est; adsuetaque semper in umbra 534 indulgere sibi formamque augere colendo	524 in which the mother marries her own son; 525 the daughter takes her father; and by this, 526 the love kind Nature gives them is increased 527 into a double bond.—Ah wretched me! 528 Why was it not my fortune to be born 529 in that love-blessed land? I must abide, 530 depressed by my misfortunes, in this place. 531 “Why do I dwell on these forbidden hopes? 532 Let me forget to think of lawless flame. 533 My father is most worthy of my love, 534 but only as a father.—If I were 535 not born the daughter of great Cinyras, 536 I might be joined to him; but, as it stands, 537 because he is mine he is never mine; 538 because near to me he is far from me. 539 “It would be better for me, if we were 540 but strangers to each other; for I then, 541 could wish to go, and leave my native land, 542 and so escape temptation to this crime: 543 but my unhappy passion holds me here, 544 that I may see Cinyras face to face, 545 and touch him, talk with him and even kiss him— 546 the best, if nothing else can be allowed. 547 “But what more could be asked for, by the most 548 depraved? Think of the many sacred ties 549 and loved names, you are dragging to the mire: 550 the rival of your mother, will you be 551 the mistress of your father, and be named 552 the sister of your son, and make yourself 553 the mother of your brother? And will you

	535 per iuga, per silvas dumosaque saxa vagatur 536 fine genu vestem ritu succincta Dianae 537 hortaturque canes; tutaeque animalia praedae, 538 aut pronos lepores aut celsum in cornua cervum, 539 aut agitat dammas: a fortibus abstinet apris 540 raptoresque lupos armatosque unguibus ursos
10.541	541 vitat et armenti saturatos caede leones. 542 Te quoque, ut hos timeas, siquid prodesse monendo 543 possit, Adoni, monet, “fortis” que “fugacibus esto” 544 inquit “in audaces non est audacia tuta. 545 Parce meo, iuvenis, temerarius esse periclo, 546 neve feras, quibus arma dedit natura, lacesse, 547 stet mihi ne magno tua gloria. Non movet aetas 548 nec facies nec quae Venerem movere, leones 549 saetigerosque sues oculosque animosque ferarum. 550 Fulmen habent acres in aduncis dentibus apri, 551 impetus est fulvis et vasta leonibus ira, 552 invisumque mihi genus est.” Quae causa, roganti 553 “dicam,” ait “et veteris monstrum mirabere culpae. 554 Sed labor insolitus iam me lassavit, et ecce 555 opportuna sua blanditur populus umbra, 556 datque torum caespes; libet hac requiescere tecum” 557 (et requievit) “humo” pressitque et gramen et ipsum, 558 inque sinu iuvenis posita cervice reclinis 559 sic ait ac mediis interserit oscula verbis: 560 “Forsitan audieris aliquam certamine cursus 561 veloces superasse viros. Non fabula rumor 562 ille fuit: superabat enim; nec dicere posses, 563 laude pedum formaene bono praestantior esset.	554 not dread the sisters with black snakes for hair. 555 Whom guilty creatures, such as you, can see 556 brandish relentless flames before their eyes 557 and faces? While your body has not sinned 558 you must not let sin creep into your heart, 559 and violate great Nature's law with your 560 unlawful rovings. If you had the right 561 to long for his endearment, it could not 562 be possible. He is a virtuous man 563 and is regardful of the moral law— 564 oh how I wish my passion could be his!” 565 And so she argued and declared her love: 566 but Cinyras, her father, who was urged 567 by such a throng of suitors for her hand, 568 that he could make no choice, at last inquired 569 of her, so she might make her heart's wish known. 570 And as he named them over, asked her which 571 she fixed her gaze upon her father's face, 572 in doubtful agony what she could say, 573 while hot tears filled her eyes. Her father, sure 574 it all was of a virginal alarm, 575 as he is telling her she need not weep 576 dries her wet cheeks and kisses her sweet lips. 577 Too much delighted with his gentle words 578 and kind endearments, Myrrha, when he asked 579 again, which one might be her husband, said, 580 “The one just like yourself.”, And he replied 581 not understanding what her heart would say, 582 “You answer as a loving-daughter should.” 583 When she heard “loving-daughter” said, the girl

	564 Scitanti deus huic de coniuge “coniuge” dixit 565 “nil opus est, Atalanta, tibi: fuge coniugis usum! 566 nec tamen effugies teque ipsa viva carebis.” 567 Territa sorte dei per opacas innuba silvas 568 vivit et instantem turbam violenta procorum 569 condicione fugat, nec “sum potienda, nisi” inquit 570 “victa prius cursu. Pedibus contendite mecum:
10.571	571 praemia veloci coniunx thalamique dabuntur, 572 mors pretium tardis. Ea lex certaminis esto.” 573 Illa quidem inmitis: sed (tanta potentia formae est) 574 venit ad hanc legem temeraria turba procorum. 575 Sederat Hippomenes cursus spectator iniqui 576 et “petitur cuiquam per tanta pericula coniunx?” 577 dixerat ac nimios iuvenum damnarat amores. 578 Ut faciem et posito corpus velamine vidit, 579 quale meum, vel quale tuum, si femina fias, 580 obstipuit tollensque manus “ignoscite,” dixit 581 “quos modo culpavi. Nondum mihi praemia nota, 582 quae peteretis, erant.” Laudando concipit ignes 583 et, ne quis iuvenum currat velocius, optat 584 invidiaque timet. “Sed cur certaminis huius 585 intemptata mihi fortuna relinquitur?” inquit 586 “audentes deus ipse iuvat.” Dum talia secum 587 exigit Hippomenes, passu volat alite virgo. 588 Quae quamquam Scythica non setius ire sagitta 589 Aonio visa est iuveni, tamen ille decorem 590 miratur magis; et cursus facit ipse decorem. 591 Aura refert ablata citis talaria plantis, 592 tergaque iactantur crines per eburnea, quaeque	584 too conscious of her guilt, looked on the ground. 585 It was now midnight, peaceful sleep dissolved 586 the world-care of all mortals, but of her 587 who, sleepless through the night, burnt in the flame 588 of her misplaced affection. First despair 589 compels her to abandon every hope, 590 and then she changes and resolves to try; 591 and so she wavers from desire to shame, 592 for she could not adhere to any plan. 593 As a great tree, cut by the swinging axe 594 is chopped until the last blow has been struck, 595 then sways and threatens danger to all sides; 596 so does her weak mind, cut with many blows, 597 waver unsteadily—this way and that— 598 and turning back and forth it finds no rest 599 from passion, save the rest that lies in death. 600 The thought of death gave comfort to her heart. 601 Resolved to hang herself, she sat upright; 602 then, as she tied her girdle to a beam, 603 she said, “Farewell, beloved Cinyras, 604 and may you know the cause of my sad death.” 605 And while she spoke those words, her fingers fixed 606 the noosed rope close around her death-pale neck. 607 They say the murmur of despairing words 608 was heard by her attentive nurse who watched 609 outside the room. And, faithful as of old, 610 she opened the shut door. But, when she saw 611 the frightful preparations made for death, 612 the odd nurse screamed and beat and tore her breast, 613 then seized and snatched the rope from Myrrha's neck;

	593 poplitibus suberant picto genualia limbo; 594 inque puellari corpus candore ruborem 595 traxerat, haud aliter, quam cum super atria velum 596 candida purpureum simulatas inficit umbras. 597 Dum notat haec hospes, decursa novissima meta est 598 et tegitur festa victrix Atalanta corona. 599 Dant gemitum victi penduntque ex foedere poenas. 600 Non tamen eventu iuvenis deterritus horum
10.601	601 constitit in medio, vultuque in virgine fixo 602 “quid facilem titulum superando quaeris inertes? 603 mecum confer!” ait. “Seu me fortuna potentem 604 fecerit, a tanto non indignabere vinci: 605 namque mihi genitor Megareus Onchestius, illi 606 est Neptunus avus, pronepos ego regis aquarum, 607 nec virtus citra genus est; seu vincar, habebis 608 Hippomene victo magnum et memorabile nomen.” 609 Talia dicentem molli Schoeneia vultu 610 adspicit et dubitat, superari an vincere malit. 611 Atque ita “quis deus hunc formosis” inquit “iniquus 612 perdere vult caraeque iubet discrimine vitae 613 coniugium petere hoc? Non sum, me iudice, tanti. — 614 Nec forma tangor (poteram tamen hac quoque tangi), 615 sed quod adhuc puer est: non me movet ipse, sed aetas. 616 Quid quod inest virtus et mens interrita leti? 617 Quid quod ab aequorea numeratur origine quartus? 618 Quid quod amat tantique putat conubia nostra, 619 ut pereat, si me fors illi dura negarit? 620 Dum licet, hospes, abi thalamosque relinque cruentos: 621 coniugium crudele meum est. Tibi nubere nulla	614 and after she had torn the noose apart, 615 at last she had the time to weep and time, 616 while she embraced the girl, to ask her why 617 the halter had been fastened round her neck. 618 The girl in stubborn silence only fixed 619 her eyes upon the ground—sad that her first 620 attempt at death, because too slow, was foiled. 621 The old nurse-woman urged and urged, and showed 622 her gray hair and her withered breasts, and begged 623 her by the memory of her cradle days, 624 and baby nourishment, to hide no more 625 from her long-trusted nurse what caused her grief. 626 The girl turned from her questions with a sigh. 627 The nurse, still more determined to know all, 628 promised fidelity and her best aid— 629 “Tell me,” she said, “and let me give you help; 630 my old age offers means for your relief: 631 if it be frantic passion, I have charms 632 and healing herbs; or, if an evil spell 633 was worked on you by someone, you shall be 634 cured to your perfect self by magic rites; 635 or, if your actions have enraged the Gods, 636 a sacrifice will satisfy their wrath. 637 What else could be the cause? Your family 638 and you are prosperous—your mother dear, 639 and your loved father are alive and well.” 640 And, when she heard her say the name of father, 641 a sigh heaved up from her distracted heart. 642 But even after that the nurse could not 643 conceive such evil in the girl's sick heart;

	622 nolet, et optari potes a sapiente puella. — 623 Cur tamen est mihi cura tui tot iam ante peremptis? 624 Viderit! Intereat, quoniam tot caede procorum 625 admonitus non est agiturque in taedia vitae. — 626 Occidet hic igitur, voluit quia vivere mecum, 627 indignamque necem pretium patietur amoris? 628 Non erit invidiae victoria nostra ferendae. 629 Sed non culpa mea est. Utinam desistere velles, 630 aut, quoniam es demens, utinam velocior esses!
10.631	631 A! quam virgineus puerili vultus in ore est! 632 A! miser Hippomene, nollem tibi visa fuissem! 633 Vivere dignus eras. Quod si felicior essem, 634 nec mihi coniugium fata importuna negarent, 635 unus eras, cum quo sociare cubilia vellem.” 636 Dixerat; utque rudis primoque Cupidine tacta, 637 quid facit ignorans, amat et non sentit amorem. 638 Iam solitos poscunt cursus populusque paterque, 639 cum me sollicita proles Neptunia voce 640 invocat Hippomenes “Cytherea” que “comprecor, ausis 641 adsit” ait “nostris et quos dedit adiuvet ignes.” 642 Detulit aura preces ad me non invida blandas; 643 motaque sum, fateor. Nec opis mora longa dabatur. 644 Est ager, indigenae Tamasenum nomine dicunt, 645 telluris Cypriae pars optima, quam mihi prisci 646 sacravere senes templisque accedere dotem 647 hanc iussere meis. Medio nitet arbor in arvo, 648 fulva comas, fulvo ramis crepitantibus auro. 649 Hinc tria forte mea veniens decerpta ferebam 650 aurea poma manu: nullique videnda nisi ipsi	644 and yet she had a feeling it must be 645 only a love affair could cause the crime: 646 and with persistent purpose begged the cause. 647 She pressed the weeping girl against her breast; 648 and as she held her in her feeble arms, 649 she said, “Sweet heart, I know you are in love: 650 in this affair I am entirely yours 651 for your good service, you must have no fear, 652 your father cannot learn of it from me.,” 653 just like a mad girl, Myrrha sprang away, 654 and with her face deep-buried in a couch, 655 sobbed out, “Go from me or stop asking me 656 my cause of grief—it is a crime of shame—657 I cannot tell it!” Horrified the nurse 658 stretched forth her trembling hands, palsied 659 with age and fear. She fell down at the feet 660 of her loved foster-child, and coaxing her 661 and frightening her, she threatened to disclose 662 her knowledge of the halter and of what 663 she knew of her attempted suicide; 664 and after all was said, she gave her word 665 to help the girl, when she had given to her 666 a true confession of her sad heart-love. 667 The girl just lifted up her face, and laid 668 it, weeping, on the bosom of her nurse. 669 She tried so often to confess, and just 670 as often checked her words, her shamed face hid 671 deep in her garment: “Oh”, at last she groans, 672 “O mother blessed in your husband—oh!” 673 Only that much she said and groaned. The nurse

	651 Hippomenen adii docuique, quis usus in illis. 652 Signa tubae dederant, cum carcere pronus uterque 653 emicat et summam celeri pede libat harenam. 654 Posse putes illos sicco freta radere passu 655 et segetis canae stantes percurrere aristas. 656 Adiciunt animos iuveni clamorque favorque 657 verbaque dicentum: “Nunc, nunc incumbere tempus! 658 Hippomene, propera! nunc viribus utere totis! 659 pelle moram, vinces!” Dubium, Megareius heros 660 gaudeat, an virgo magis his Schoeneia dictis.
10.661	661 O quotiens, cum iam posset transire, morata est 662 spectatosque diu vultus invita reliquit! 663 Aridus e lasso veniebat anhelitus ore, 664 metaque erat longe. Tum denique de tribus unum 665 fetibus arboreis proles Neptunia misit. 666 Obstipuit virgo, nitidique cupidine pomi 667 declinat cursus aurumque volubile tollit. 668 Praeterit Hippomenes! Resonant spectacula plausu. 669 Illa moram celeri cessataque tempora cursu 670 corrigit atque iterum iuvenem post terga relinquit. 671 Et rursus pomi iactu remorata secundi 672 consequitur transitque virum. Pars ultima cursus 673 restabat; “nunc” inquit “ades, dea muneris auctor!” 674 inque latus campi, quo tardius illa rediret, 675 iecit ab obliquo nitidum iuvenaliter aurum. 676 An peteret, virgo visa est dubitare: coegi 677 tollere et adieci sublato pondera malo 678 impediique oneris pariter gravitate moraque. 679 Neve meus sermo cursu sit tardior ipso,	674 felt a cold horror stealing through her heart 675 and frame, for she now understood it all. 676 And her white hair stood bristling on her head, 677 while with the utmost care of love and art 678 she strove to use appropriate words and deeds, 679 to banish the mad passion of the girl. 680 Though Myrrha knew that she was truly warned, 681 she was resolved to die, unless she could 682 obtain the object of her wicked love. 683 The nurse gave way at last as in defeat, 684 and said, “Live and enjoy—” but did not dare 685 to say, “your father”, did not finish, though, 686 she promised and confirmed it with an oath. 687 It was the time when matrons celebrate 688 the annual festival of Ceres. Then, 689 all robed in decent garments of snow-white, 690 they bring garlands of precious wheat, which are 691 first fruits of worship; and for nine nights they 692 must count forbidden every act of love, 693 and shun the touch of man. And in that throng, 694 Cenchreis, the king's wife, with constant care 695 attended every secret rite: and so 696 while the king's bed was lacking his true wife, 697 one of those nights,—King Cinyras was drunk 698 with too much wine,—the scheming nurse informed 699 him of a girl most beautiful, whose love 700 for him was passionate; in a false tale 701 she pictured a true passion. — When he asked 702 the maiden's age, she answered, “Just the same 703 as

	680 praeterita est virgo: duxit sua praemia victor. 681 Dignane, cui grates ageret, cui turis honorem 682 ferret, Adoni, fui? — nec grates inmemor egit, 683 nec mihi tura dedit. Subitam convertor in iram; 684 contemptuque dolens, ne sim spernenda futuris, 685 exemplo caveo meque ipsa exhortor in ambos. 686 Templa, deum Matri quae quondam clarus Echion 687 fecerat ex voto, nemorosis abdita silvis, 688 transibant, et iter longum requiescere suasit. 689 Illic concubitus intempestiva cupido 690 occupat Hippomenen, a numine concita nostro.	Myrrha's." Bidden by the king to go
10.691	691 Luminis exigui fuerat prope templa recessus, 692 speluncae similis, nativo pumice tectus, 693 religione sacer prisca, quo multa sacerdos 694 lignea contulerat veterum simulacra deorum. 695 Hunc init et vetito temerat sacraria probro. 696 Sacra retorserunt oculos; turritaque Mater 697 an Stygia sontes dubitavit mergeret unda. 698 Poena levis visa est. Ergo modo levia fulvae 699 colla iubae velant, digiti curvantur in ungues, 700 ex umeris armi fiunt, in pectora totum 701 pondus abit, summae cauda verruntur harenae. 702 Iram vultus habet, pro verbis murmura reddunt, 703 pro thalamis celebrant silvas: aliisque timendi 704 dente premunt domito Cybeleia frena leones. 705 Hos tu, care mihi, cumque his genus omne ferarum, 706 quod non terga fugae, sed pugnae pectora praebet, 707 effuge, ne virtus tua sit damnosa duobus." 708 Illa quidem monuit iunctisque per aera cygnis	704 and fetch her, the officious old nurse, when 705 she found the girl, cried out; "Rejoice, my dear, 706 we have contrived it!" The unhappy girl 707 could not feel genuine joy in her amazed 708 and startled body. Her dazed mind was filled 709 with strange forebodings; but she did believe 710 her heart was joyful.—Great excitement filled 711 her wrecked heart with such inconsistencies. 712 Now was the time when nature is at rest; 713 between the Bears, Bootes turned his wain 714 down to the west, and the guilty Myrrha turns 715 to her enormity. The golden moon 716 flies from the heaven, and black clouds cover 717 the hiding stars and Night has lost her fires. 718 The first to hide were stars of Icarus 719 and of Erigone, in hallowed love 720 devoted to her father. Myrrha thrice 721 was warned by omen of her stumbling foot; 722 the funeral screech-owl also warned her thrice, 723 with dismal cry; yet Myrrha onward goes. 724 It seems to her the black night lessens shame. 725 She holds fast to her nurse with her left hand, 726 and with the other hand gropes through the dark. 727 And now they go until she finds the door. 728 Now at the threshold of her father's room, 729 she softly pushes back the door, her nurse 730 takes her within. The girl's knees trembling sink 731 beneath her. Her drawn bloodless face has lost 732 its

	709 carpit iter: sed stat monitis contraria virtus. 710 Forte suem latebris vestigia certa secuti 711 excivere canes, silvisque exire parantem 712 fixerat obliquo iuvenis Cinyreius ictu. 713 Protinus excussit pando venabula rostro 714 sanguine tincta suo trepidumque et tuta petentem 715 trux aper insequitur totosque sub inguine dentes 716 abdidit et fulva moribundum stravit harena. 717 Vecta levi curru medias Cytherea per auras 718 Cypron olorinis nondum pervenerat alis, 719 agnovit longe gemitum morientis et albas 720 flexit aves illuc. Utque aethere vidit ab alto	color, and while she moves to the crime, 733 bad courage goes from her until afraid
10.721	721 exanimem inque suo iactantem sanguine corpus, 722 desiluit pariterque sinum pariterque capillos 723 rupit et indignis percussit pectora palmis. 724 Questaque cum fatis “at non tamen omnia vestri 725 iuris erunt” dixit. “Luctus monimenta manebunt 726 semper, Adoni, mei, repetitaque mortis imago 727 annua plangoris peraget simulamina nostri. 728 At cruor in florem mutabitur. An tibi quondam 729 femineos artus in olentes vertere mentas, 730 Persephone, licuit: nobis Cinyreius heros 731 invidiae mutatus erit ?” — Sic fata cruorem 732 nectare odorato sparsit: qui tactus ab illo 733 intumuit sic ut fulvo perlucida caeno 734 surgere bulla solet. Nec plena longior hora 735 facta mora est, cum flos de sanguine concolor ortus, 736 qualem, quae lento celant sub cortice granum, 737 punica ferre solent. Brevis est tamen usus in illo:	734 of her bold effort, she would gladly turn 735 unrecognized. But as she hesitates, 736 the aged crone still holds her by the hand; 737 and leading her up to the high bed there 738 delivering Myrrha, says, “Now Cinyras, 739 you take her, she is yours;” and leaves the pair 740 doomed in their crime — the father to pollute 741 his own flesh in his own bed; where he tries 742 first to encourage her from maiden fears, 743 by gently talking to the timid girl. 744 He chanced to call her “daughter,” as a name 745 best suited to her age; and she in turn, 746 endearing, called him “father”, so no names 747 might be omitted to complete their guilt. 748 She staggered from his chamber with the crime 749 of her own father hidden in her womb, 750 and their guilt was repeated many nights; 751 till Cinyras — determined he must know 752 his mistress, after many meetings, brought 753 a light and knew his crime had harmed his daughter. 754 Speechless in shame he drew forth his bright sword 755 out from the scabbard where it hung near by.— 756 but frightened Myrrha fled, and so escaped 757 death in the shadows of dark night. Groping 758 her pathless way at random through the fields, 759 she left Arabia, famed for spreading palms, 760 and wandered through Panchaean lands.

	738 namque male haerentem et nimia levitate caducum 739 excutiunt idem, qui praestant nomina, venti.”	Until 761 after nine months of aimless wandering days, 762 she rested in Sabaea, for she could 763 not hold the burden she had borne so long.
11.1	1 Carmine dum tali silvas animosque ferarum 2 Threicius vates et saxa sequentia ducit, 3 ecce nurus Ciconum, tectae lymphata ferinis 4 pectora velleribus, tumuli de vertice cernunt 5 Orphea percussis sociantem carmina nervis. 6 E quibus una, leves iactato crine per auras, 7 “en,” ait “en hic est nostri contemptor!” et hastam 8 vatis Apollinei vocalia misit in ora, 9 quae foliis praesuta notam sine vulnere fecit; 10 alterius telum lapis est, qui missus in ipso 11 aere concentu victus vocisque lyraeque est 12 ac veluti supplex pro tam furialibus ausis 13 ante pedes iacuit. Sed enim temeraria crescunt 14 bella modusque abiit, insanaque regnat Erinys. 15 Cunctaque tela forent cantu mollita, sed ingens 16 clamor et infracto Berecyntia tibia cornu 17 tympanaque et plausus et Bacchei ululatus 18 obstrepuere sono citharae: tum denique saxa 19 non exauditi rubuerunt sanguine vatis. 20 Ac primum attonitas etiamnum voce canentis 21 innumeras volucres anguesque agmenque ferarum 22 Maenades, Orphei titulum, rapuere, theatri. 23 Inde cruentatis vertuntur in Orphea dextris 24 et coeunt ut aves, si quando luce vagantem 25 noctis avem cernunt. Structoque utrimque theatro 26 ceu matutina cervus periturus harena 27 praeda canum est, vatemque petunt et fronde virentes 28 coniciunt thyrsos non haec in	1 While with his songs, Orpheus, the bard of Thrace, 2 allured the trees, the savage animals, 3 and even the insensate rocks, to follow him; 4 Ciconian matrons, with their raving breasts 5 concealed in skins of forest animals, 6 from the summit of a hill observed him there, 7 attuning love songs to a sounding harp. 8 One of those women, as her tangled hair 9 was tossed upon the light breeze shouted, “See! 10 Here is the poet who has scorned our love!” 11 Then hurled her spear at the melodious mouth 12 of great Apollo's bard: but the spear's point, 13 trailing in flight a garland of fresh leaves, 14 made but a harmless bruise and wounded not. 15 The weapon of another was a stone, 16 which in the very air was overpowered 17 by the true harmony of his voice and lyre, 18 and so disabled lay before his feet, 19 as asking pardon for that vain attempt. 20 The madness of such warfare then increased. 21 All moderation is entirely lost, 22 and a wild Fury overcomes the right.— 23 although their weapons would have lost all force, 24 subjected to the power of Orpheus' harp, 25 the clamorous discord of their boxwood pipes, 26 the blaring of their horns, their tambourines 27 and clapping hands and Bacchanalian yells, 28 with hideous discords drowned his voice and harp.— 29 at last the stones that heard his song no more 30 fell crimson with the Thracian poet's blood.

	munera factos. 29 Hae glaebas, illae direptos arbore ramos, 30 pars torquent silices. Neu desint tela furori, 11.31	31 forte boves presso subigebant vomere terram, 32 nec procul hinc multo fructum sudore parantes 33 dura lacertosi fodiebant arva coloni. 34 Agmine qui viso fugiunt operisque relinquunt 35 arma sui, vacuosque iacent dispersa per agros 36 sarculaque rastrique graves longique ligones. 37 Quae postquam rapuere ferae cornuque minaci 38 divulsere boves, ad vatis fata recurrunt 39 Tendentemque manus et in illo tempore primum 40 inrita dicentem nec quicquam voce moventem 41 sacrilegae perimunt. Perque os, pro Iuppiter! illud 42 auditum saxis intellectumque ferarum 43 sensibus in ventos anima exhalata recessit. 44 Te maestae volucres, Orpheu, te turba ferarum, 45 te rigidi silices, tua carmina saepe secutae 46 fleverunt silvae, positis te frondibus arbor 47 tonsa comas luxit. Lacrimis quoque flumina dicunt 48 increvisse suis, obstrusaque carbasa pullo 49 naides et dryades passosque habuere capillos. 50 Membra iacent diversa locis. Caput, Hebre, lyramque 51 excipis, et (mirum!) medio dum labitur amne, 52 flebile nescio quid queritur lyra, flebile lingua 53 murmurat exanimis, respondent flebile ripae. 54 Iamque mare invectae flumen populare relinquunt 55 et Methymnaeae potiuntur litore Lesbi. 56 Hic ferus expositum peregrinis anguis harenis 57 os petit et sparsos stillanti rore capillos.	31 Before his life was taken, the maenads turned 32 their threatening hands upon the many birds, 33 which still were charmed by Orpheus as he sang, 34 the serpents, and the company of beasts— 35 fabulous audience of that worshipped bard. 36 And then they turned on him their blood-stained hands: 37 and flocked together swiftly, as wild birds, 38 which, by some chance, may see the bird of night 39 beneath the sun. And as the savage dogs 40 rush on the doomed stag, loosed some bright fore-noon, 41 on blood-sand of the amphitheatre; 42 they rushed against the bard, with swift 43 hurled thyrsi which, adorned with emerald leaves 44 had not till then been used for cruelty. 45 And some threw clods, and others branches torn 46 from trees; and others threw flint stones at him, 47 and, that no lack of weapons might restrain 48 their savage fury then, not far from there 49 by chance they found some oxen which turned up 50 the soil with ploughshares, and in fields nearby 51 were strong-armed peasants, who with eager sweat 52 worked for the harvest as they dug hard fields; 53 and all those peasants, when they saw the troop 54 of frantic women, ran away and left 55 their implements of labor strown upon 56 deserted fields —harrows and heavy rakes 57 and their long spades 58 after the savage mob 59 had seized upon those implements, and torn 60 to pieces oxen armed with threatening horns,

	58 Tandem Phoebus adest morsusque inferre parantem 59 arcet et in lapidem rictus serpentis apertos 60 congelat et patulos, ut erant, indurat hiatus.
11.61	61 Umbra subit terras et quae loca viderat ante, 62 cuncta recognoscit quaerensque per arva piorum 63 invenit Eurydicen cupidisque amplectitur ulnis. 64 Hic modo coniunctis spatiantur passibus ambo, 65 nunc praecedentem sequitur, nunc praevius anteit 66 Eurydicenque suam iam tutus respicit Orpheus. 67 Non impune tamen scelus hoc sinit esse Lyaeus, 68 amissoque dolens sacrorum vate suorum 69 protinus in silvis matres Edonidas omnes, 70 quae videre nefas, torta radice ligavit. 71 72 73 utque suum laqueis, quos callidus abdidit auceps, 74 crus ubi commisit volucris sensitque teneri, 75 plangitur ac trepidans adstringit vincula motu: 76 sic, ut quaeque solo defixa cohaeserat harum, 77 exsternata fugam frustra temptabat; at illam 78 lenta tenet radix exsultantemque coercet, 79 dumque ubi sint digiti, dum pes ubi, quaerit, et ungues, 80 adspicit in teretes lignum succedere suras, 81 et conata femur maerenti plangere dextra, 82 robora percussit: pectus quoque robora fiunt, 83 robora sunt umeri, porrectaque bracchia veros 84 esse putes ramos, et non fallere putando. 85 Nec satis hoc Baccho est: ipsos quoque deserit agros 86 cumque choro meliore sui vineta Timoli 87 Pactolonque petit, quamvis non aureus illo	61 they hastened to destroy the harmless bard, 62 devoted Orpheus; and with impious hate, 63 murdered him, while his out-stretched hands implored 64 their mercy—the first and only time his voice 65 had no persuasion. O great Jupiter! 66 Through those same lips which had controlled the rocks 67 and which had overcome ferocious beasts, 68 his life breathed forth, departed in the air. 69 The mournful birds, the stricken animals, 70 the hard stones and the weeping woods, all these 71 that often had followed your inspiring voice, 72 bewailed your death; while trees dropped their green leaves, 73 mourning for you, as if they tore their hair. 74 They say sad rivers swelled with their own tears— 75 naiads and dryads with dishevelled hair 76 wore garments of dark color. 77 His torn limbs 78 were scattered in strange places. Hebrus then 79 received his head and harp—and, wonderful! 80 While his loved harp was floating down the stream, 81 it mourned for him beyond my power to tell. 82 His tongue though lifeless, uttered a mournful sound 83 and mournfully the river's banks replied: 84 onward borne by the river to the sea 85 they left their native stream and reached the shore 86 of Lesbos at Methymna. Instantly, 87 a furious serpent rose to attack the head 88 of Orpheus, cast up on that foreign sand— 89 the hair still wet with spray. Phoebus at last 90 appeared and saved the head from that attack:

	88 tempore nec caris erat invidiosus harenis. 89 Hunc adsueta cohors satyri bacchaeque frequentant, 90 at Silenus abest: titubantem annisque meroque
11.91	91 ruricolae cepere Phryges vinctumque coronis 92 ad regem duxere Midan, cui Thracius Orpheus 93 orgia tradiderat cum Cecropio Eumolpo. 94 Quem simul agnovit socium comitemque sacrorum, 95 hospitis adventu festum genialiter egit 96 per bis quinque dies et iunctas ordine noctes. 97 Et iam stellarum sublime coegerat agmen 98 Lucifer undecimus, Lydos cum laetus in agros 99 rex venit et iuveni Silenum reddit alumno. 100 Huic deus optandi gratum, sed inutile, fecit 101 muneris arbitrium, gaudens altore recepto. 102 Ille male usurus donis ait “effice, quidquid 103 corpore contigero fulvum vertatur in aurum.” 104 Adnuit optatis nocituraque munera solvit 105 Liber, et indoluit, quod non meliora petisset. 106 Laetus abit gaudetque malo Berecyntius heros 107 pollicitique fidem tangendo singula temptat 108 Vixque sibi credens non alta fronde virentem 109 ilice detraxit virgam: virga aurea facta est. 110 Tollit humo saxum: saxum quoque palluit auro. 111 Contigit et glaebam: contactu glaeba potenti 112 massa fit. Arentes Cereris decerpsit aristas: 113 aurea messis erat. Demptum tenet arbore pomum: 114 Hesperidas donasse putes. Si postibus altis 115 admovit digitos, postes radiare videntur. 116 Ille etiam liquidis palmas ubi laverat undis,	91 before the serpent could inflict a sting, 92 he drove it off, and hardened its wide jaws 93 to rigid stone. 94 Meanwhile the fleeting shade 95 of Orpheus had descended under earth: 96 remembering now those regions that he saw 97 when there before, he sought Eurydice 98 through fields frequented by the blest; and when 99 he found her, folded her in eager arms. 100 Then lovingly they wandered side by side, 101 or he would follow when she chose to lead, 102 or at another time he walked in front, 103 looking back, safely,—at Eurydice. 104 Bacchus would not permit the wickedness 105 of those who slaughtered Orpheus to remain 106 unpunished. Grieving for the loss of his 107 loved bard of sacred rites, at once he bound 108 with twisted roots the feet of everyone 109 of those Edonian women who had caused 110 the crime of Orpheus' death. 111 Their toes grew long. 112 He thrust the sharp points in the solid earth. 113 As when a bird entangled in a snare, 114 hid by the cunning fowler, knows too late 115 that it is held, then vainly beats its wings, 116 and fluttering only makes more tight the noose 117 with every struggle; so each woman-fiend 118 whose feet were sinking in the soil, when she 119 attempted flight, was held by deepening roots. 120 And while she looks down where her toes and nails

	117 unda fluens palmis Danaen eludere posset. 118 Vix spes ipse suas animo capit aurea fingens 119 omnia. Gaudenti mensas posuere ministri 120 exstructas dapibus nec tostae frugis egentes.
11.121	121 Tum vero, sive ille sua Cerealia dextra 122 munera contigerat, Cerealia dona rigebant, 123 sive dapes avido convellere dente parabat, 124 lammina fulva dapes admoto dente premebat. 125 Miscuerat puris auctorem muneris undis: 126 fusile per rictus aurum fluitare videres. 127 Attonitus novitate mali, divesque miserque, 128 effugere optat opes et, quae modo voverat, odit. 129 Copia nulla famem relevat; sitis arida guttur 130 urit, et inviso meritus torquetur ab auro 131 Ad caelumque manus et splendida bracchia tollens 132 “da veniam, Lenaee pater! peccavimus,” inquit, 133 “sed miserere, precor, speciosoque eripe damno.” 134 Mite deum numen: Bacchus peccasse fatentem 135 restituit factique fide data munera solvit 136 “Neve male optato maneas circumlitus auro, 137 vade” ait “ad magnis vicinum Sardibus amnem 138 perque iugum ripae labentibus obvius undis 139 carpe viam, donec venias ad fluminis ortus, 140 spumigeroque tuum fonti, qua plurimus exit, 141 subde caput corpusque simul, simul elue crimen.” 142 Rex iussae succedit aquae: vis aurea tinxit 143 flumen et humano de corpore cessit in amnem. 144 Nunc quoque iam veteris percepto semine venae 145 arva rigent auro madidis pallentia glaebis.	121 and feet should be, she sees wood growing up 122 from them and covering all her graceful legs. 123 Full of delirious grief, endeavoring 124 to smite with right hand on her changing thigh, 125 she strikes on solid oak. Her tender breast 126 and shoulders are transformed to rigid oak. 127 You would declare that her extended arms 128 are real branches of a forest tree, 129 and such a thought would be the very truth. 130 And not content with this, Bacchus resolved 131 to leave that land, and with a worthier train 132 went to the vineyards of his own Tmolus 133 and to Pactolus, though the river was 134 not golden, nor admired for precious sands. 135 His usual throng of Satyrs and of Bacchanals 136 surrounded him; but not Silenus, who 137 was then detained from him. The Phrygian folk 138 had captured him, as he was staggering, faint 139 with palsied age and wine. And after they 140 bound him in garlands, they led him to their king 141 Midas, to whom with the Cecropian 142 Eumolpus, Thracian Orpheus had shown all 143 the Bacchic rites. When Midas recognized 144 his old time friend Silenus, who had been 145 so often his companion in the rites 146 of Bacchus, he kept joyful festival, 147 with his old comrade, twice five days and nights. 148 Upon the eleventh day, when Lucifer 149 had dimmed the lofty multitude of stars, 150 King Midas and Silenus went from there 151 joyful together to the Lydian lands. 152 There Midas put Silenus carefully 153 under the care of his loved foster-child, 154 young Bacchus. He with great delight, because 155 he had his foster-father once again, 156 allowed the king to choose his own reward— 157 a welcome offer, but it led to harm. 158 And Midas made this ill-advised reply: 159 “Cause whatsoever I shall touch to change

	146 Ille, perosus opes, silvas et rura colebat 147 Panaque montanis habitantem semper in antris. 148 Pingue sed ingenium mansit, nocituraque, ut ante, 149 rursus erant domino stultae praecordia mentis. 150 Nam freta prospiciens late riget arduus alto
11.151	151 Tmolus in adscensu, clivoque extensus utroque 152 Sardibus hinc, illinc parvis finitur Hypaepis. 153 Pan ibi dum teneris iactat sua carmina nymphis 154 et leve cerata modulatur harundine carmen, 155 ausus Apollineos prae se contemnere cantus, 156 iudice sub Tmolo certamen venit ad impar. 157 Monte suo senior iudex consedit et aures 158 liberat arboribus: quercu coma caerula tantum 159 cingitur, et pendent circum cava tempora glandes. 160 Isque deum pecoris spectans “in indice” dixit 161 “nulla mora est.” Calamis agrestibus insonat ille 162 barbaricoque Midan (aderat nam forte canenti) 163 carmine delenit. Post hunc sacer ora retorsit 164 Tmolus ad os Phoebi: vultum sua silva secuta est. 165 Ille caput flavum lauro Parnaside vinctus 166 verrit humum Tyrio saturata murice palla, 167 instrictamque fidem gemmis et dentibus Indis 168 sustinet a laeva; tenuit manus altera plectrum. 169 Artificis status ipse fuit. Tum stamina docto 170 pollice sollicitat, quorum dulcedine captus 171 Pana iubet Tmolus citharae submittere cannas. 172 Iudicium sanctique placet sententia montis 173 omnibus, arguitur tamen atque iniusta vocatur 174 unius sermone Midae; nec Delius aures	160 at once to yellow gold.” Bacchus agreed 161 to his unfortunate request, with grief 162 that Midas chose for harm and not for good. 163 The Berecynthian hero, king of Phrygia, 164 with joy at his misfortune went away, 165 and instantly began to test the worth 166 of Bacchus' word by touching everything. 167 Doubtful himself of his new power, he pulled 168 a twig down from a holm-oak, growing on 169 a low hung branch. The twig was turned to gold. 170 He lifted up a dark stone from the ground 171 and it turned pale with gold. He touched a clod 172 and by his potent touch the clod became 173 a mass of shining gold. He plucked some ripe, 174 dry spears of grain, and all that wheat he touched 175 was golden. Then he held an apple which 176 he gathered from a tree, and you would think 177 that the Hesperides had given it. 178 If he but touched a lofty door, at once 179 each door-post seemed to glisten. When he washed 180 his hands in liquid streams, the lustrous drops 181 upon his hands might have been those which once 182 astonished Danae. He could not now 183 conceive his large hopes in his grasping mind, 184 as he imagined everything of gold. 185 And, while he was rejoicing in great wealth, 186 his servants set a table for his meal, 187 with many dainties and with needful bread: 188 but when he touched the gift of Ceres with 189 his right hand, instantly the gift of Ceres

	175 humanam stolidas patitur retinere figuram, 176 sed trahit in spatium villisque albentibus implet 177 instabilesque imas facit et dat posse moveri, 178 cetera sunt hominis: partem damnatur in unam 179 induiturque aures lente gradientis aselli. 180 Ille quidem celare cupit, turpisque pudore
11.181	181 tempora purpureis temptat velare tiaris. 182 Sed solitus longos ferro resecare capillos 183 viderat hoc famulus. Qui cum nec prodere visum 184 dedecus auderet, cupiens efferre sub auras, 185 nec posset reticere tamen, secedit humumque 186 effodit et, domini quales adspexerit aures, 187 voce refert parva terraeque inmurmurat haustae, 188 indiciumque suae vocis tellure regesta 189 obruit et scrobibus tacitus discedit opertis. 190 Creber harundinibus tremulis ibi surgere lucus 191 coepit et, ut primum pleno maturuit anno, 192 prodidit agricolam: leni nam motus ab austro 193 obruta verba refert dominique coarguit aures. 194 Ultus abit Tmolo liquidumque per aera vectus 195 angustum citra pontum Nepheleidos Helles 196 Laomedonteis Latoius adstitit arvis. 197 Dextera Sigei, Rhoetei laeva profundi 198 ara Panomphaeo vetus est sacrata Tonanti. 199 Inde novae primum moliri moenia Troiae 200 Laomedonta videt susceptaque magna labore 201 crescere difficili nec opes exposcere parvas 202 cumque tridentigero tumidi genitore profundi 203 mortalem induitur formam Phrygiaeque tyranno	190 stiffened to gold; or if he tried to bite 191 with hungry teeth a tender bit of meat, 192 the dainty, as his teeth but touched it, shone 193 at once with yellow shreds and flakes of gold. 194 And wine, another gift of Bacchus, when 195 he mixed it in pure water, can be seen 196 in his astonished mouth as liquid gold. 197 Confounded by his strange misfortune—rich 198 and wretched—he was anxious to escape 199 from his unhappy wealth. He hated all 200 he had so lately longed for. Plenty could 201 not lessen hunger and no remedy 202 relieved his dry, parched throat. The hated gold 203 tormented him no more than he deserved. 204 Lifting his hands and shining arms to heaven, 205 he moaned. “Oh pardon me, father Lenaeus! 206 I have done wrong, but pity me, I pray, 207 and save me from this curse that looked so fair.” 208 How patient are the gods! Bacchus forthwith, 209 because King Midas had confessed his fault, 210 restored him and annulled the promise given, 211 annulled the favor granted, and he said: 212 “That you may not be always cased in gold, 213 which you unhappily desired, depart 214 to the stream that flows by that great town of Sardis 215 and upward trace its waters, as they glide 216 past Lydian heights, until you find their source. 217 Then, where the spring leaps out from mountain rock, 218 plunge head and body in the snowy foam. 219 At once the flood will take away your curse.”

	204 aedificat muros, pactus pro moenibus aurum. 205 Stabat opus: pretium rex infitiatur et addit, 206 perfidiae cumulum, falsis periuria verbis. 207 “Non impune feres” rector maris inquit et omnes 208 inclinavit aquas ad avarae litora Troiae, 209 inque freti formam terras complevit opesque 210 abstulit agricolis et fluctibus obruit agros.
11.211	211 Poena neque haec satis est: regis quoque filia monstro 212 poscitur aequoreo; quam dura ad saxa revinctam 213 vindicat Alcides promissaque munera, dictos 214 poscit equos, tantique operis mercede negata 215 bis periura capit superatae moenia Troiae. 216 Nec pars militiae, Telamon, sine honore recessit, 217 Hesioneque data potitur. Nam coniuge Peleus 218 clarus erat diva: nec avi magis ille superbus 219 nomine, quam soceri, siquidem Iovis esse nepoti 220 contigit haud uni, coniunx dea contigit uni. 221 Namque senex Thetidi Proteus “dea” dixerat “undae, 222 concipe: mater eris iuvenis, qui fortibus annis 223 acta patris vincet maiorque vocabitur illo.” 224 Ergo, ne quicquam mundus Iove maius haberet, 225 quamvis haud tepidos sub pectore senserat ignes, 226 Iuppiter aequoreae Thetidis conubia fugit 227 in suaque Aeaciden succedere vota nepotem 228 iussit et amplexus in virginis ire marinae. 229 Est sinus Haemoniae curvos falcatus in arcus: 230 bracchia procurrunt, ubi, si foret altior unda, 231 portus erat (summis inductum est aequor harenis); 232 litus habet solidum, quod nec vestigia servet	220 King Midas did as he was told and plunged 221 beneath the water at the river's source. 222 And the gold virtue granted by the god, 223 as it departed from his body, tinged 224 the stream with gold. And even to this hour 225 adjoining fields, touched by this ancient vein 226 of gold, are hardened where the river flows 227 and colored with the gold that Midas left. 228 Abhorring riches he inhabited 229 the woods and fields, and followed Pan who dwells 230 always in mountain-caves: but still obtuse 231 remained, from which his foolish mind again, 232 by an absurd decision, harmed his life. 233 He followed Pan up to the lofty mount 234 Tmolus, which from its great height looks far 235 across the sea. Steep and erect it stands 236 between great Sardis and the small Hypaepa. 237 While Pan was boasting there to mountain nymphs 238 of his great skill in music, and while he 239 was warbling a gay tune upon the reeds, 240 cemented with soft wax, in his conceit 241 he dared to boast to them how he despised 242 Apollo's music when compared with his—. 243 At last to prove it, he agreed to stand 244 against Apollo in a contest which 245 it was agreed should be decided by 246 Tmolus as their umpire. 247 This old god 248 sat down on his own mountain, and first eased 249 his ears of many mountain growing trees, 250 oak leaves were wreathed upon his azure hair 251 and acorns from his hollow temples hung. 252 First to the Shepherd-god Tmolus spoke: 253 “My judgment shall be yours with no delay. 254 Pan made some rustic sounds on his rough reeds, 255 delighting Midas with his uncouth notes; 256 for Midas chanced to be

	233 nec remoretur iter, nec opertum pendeat alga. 234 Myrtea silva subest bicoloribus obsita bacis 235 et specus in medio (natura factus an arte, 236 ambiguum, magis arte tamen), quo saepe venire 237 frenato delphine sedens, Theti, nuda solebas. 238 Illic te Peleus, ut somno vincta iacebas, 239 occupat: et quoniam precibus temptata repugnas, 240 vim parat, innectens ambobus colla lacertis.	there when he played. 257 When Pan had ceased, divine Tmolus turned
11.241	241 Quod nisi venisses variatis saepe figuris 242 ad solitas artes, auso foret ille potitus. 243 Sed modo tu volucris (volucrem tamen ille tenebat), 244 nunc gravis arbor eras (haerebat in arbore Peleus), 245 tertia forma fuit maculosae tigridis: illa 246 territus Aeacides a corpore bracchia solvit. 247 Isque deos pelagi vino super aequora fuso 248 et pecoris fibris et fumo turis adorat, 249 donec Carpathius medio de gurgite vates 250 “Aeacide,” dixit, “thalamis potiere petitis! 251 Tu modo, cum rigido sopita quiescit in antro, 252 ignaram laqueis vincloque innecte tenaci. 253 Nec te decipiat centum mentita figuras, 254 sed preme, quidquid erit, dum, quod fuit ante, reformet!” 255 Dixerat haec Proteus et condidit aequore vultum 256 admisitque suos in verba novissima fluctus. 257 Pronus erat Titan inclinatoque tenebat 258 Hesperium temone fretum, cum pulchra relecto 259 Nereis ingreditur consueta cubilia saxo. 260 Vix bene virgineos Peleus invaserat artus, 261 illa novat formas, donec sua membra teneri	258 to Phoebus, and the forest likewise turned 259 just as he moved. Apollo's golden locks 260 were richly wreathed with fresh Parnassian laurel; 261 his robe of Tyrian purple swept the ground; 262 his left hand held his lyre, adorned with gems 263 and Indian ivory. His right hand held 264 the plectrum—as an artist he stood there 265 before Tmolus, while his skilful thumb 266 touching the strings made charming melody. 267 Delighted with Apollo's artful touch, 268 Tmolus ordered Pan to hold his reeds 269 excelled by beauty of Apollo's lyre. 270 That judgment of the sacred mountain god 271 pleased all those present, all but Midas, who 272 blaming Tmolus called the award unjust. 273 The Delian god forbids his stupid ears 274 to hold their native human shape; 275 and, drawing them out to a hideous length, 276 he fills them with gray hairs, and makes them both 277 unsteady, wagging at the lower part: 278 still human, only this one part condemned, 279 Midas had ears of a slow-moving ass. 280 Midas, careful to hide his long ears, wore 281 a purple turban over both, which hid 282 his foul disgrace from laughter. But one day 283 a servant, who was chosen to cut his hair 284 with steel, when it was long, saw his disgrace. 285 He did not dare reveal what he had seen, 286 but eager, to disclose the secret, dug 287 a shallow hole, and in a low voice told

	262 sentit et in partes diversas bracchia tendi. 263 Tum demum ingemuit, “neque” ait “sine numine vincis” 264 exhibita estque Thetis. Confessam amplectitur heros 265 et potitur votis ingentique implet Achille. 266 Felix et nato, felix et coniuge Peleus 267 et cui, si demas iugulati crimina Phoci, 268 omnia contigerant. Fraterno sanguine sontem 269 expulsumque domo patria Trachinia tellus 270 accipit. Hic regnum sine vi, sine caede regebat
11.271	271 Lucifero genitore satus patriumque nitorem 272 ore ferens Ceyx, illo qui tempore maestus 273 dissimilisque sui fratrem lugebat ademptum. 274 Quo postquam Aeacides fessus curaque viaque 275 venit et intravit paucis comitantibus urbem, 276 quosque greges pecorum, quae secum armenta trahebat, 277 haud procul a muris sub opaca valle reliquit, 278 copia cum facta est adeundi prima tyranni, 279 velamenta manu praetendens supplice, qui sit 280 se quoque satus, memorat, tantum sua crimina celat 281 mentiturque fugae causam: petit, urbe vel agro 282 se iuvet. Hunc contra placido Trachinius ore 283 talibus adloquitur: “Mediae quoque commoda plebi 284 nostra patent, Peleu, nec inhospita regna tenemus. 285 Adicis huic animo momento potentia, clarum 286 nomen avumque Iovem. Ne tempora perde precando! 287 Quod petis, omne feres tuaque haec pro parte vocato, 288 qualiacumque vides! Utinam meliora videres!' 289 Et flebat: moveat tantos quae causa dolores, 290 Peleusque comitesque rogant. Quibus ille profatur:	288 what kind of ears were on his master's head. 289 All this he whispered in the hollow earth 290 he dug, and then he buried all he said 291 by throwing back the loose earth in the hole 292 so everything was silent when he left. 293 A grove thick set with quivering reeds 294 began to grow there, and when it matured, 295 about twelve months after that servant left, 296 the grove betrayed its planter. For, moved by 297 a gentle South Wind, it repeated all 298 the words which he had whispered, and disclosed 299 from earth the secret of his master's ears. 300 His vengence now complete, Latona's son 301 borne through the liquid air, departed from 302 Tmolus, and then rested on the land 303 of Laomedon, this side the narrow sea 304 dividing Phrygia from the land of Thrace. 305 The promontory of Sigaeum right 306 and on the left Rhoetaeum loftily arose; 307 and at that place an ancient altar had 308 been dedicated to great Jove, the god 309 Panomphaean. And near that place he saw 310 laomedon, beginning then to build 311 the walls of famous Troy. He was convinced 312 the task exceeded all the power of man, 313 requiring great resource. Together with 314 the trident-bearing father of the deep, 315 he assumed a mortal form: and those two gods 316 agreed to labor for a sum of gold 317 and built the mighty wall. But that false king 318 refused all payment, adding perjury 319 to his false bargaining. Neptune, enraged, 320 said, “You shall not

	291 “Forsitan hanc volucrem, rapto quae vivit et omnes 292 terret aves, semper pennas habuisse putetis: 293 294 acer erat belloque ferox ad vimque paratus, 295 nomine Daedalion. Illo genitore creatis, 296 qui vocat auroram caeloque novissimus exit, 297 (cura mihi pax est) pacis mihi cura tenendae 298 coniugiique fuit, fratri fera bella placebant: 299 illius virtus reges gentesque subegit, 300 quae nunc Thisbaeas agitat mutata columbas.	escape your punishment.” 321 And he drove all his waters high upon 322 the shores of Troy—built there through perfidy. 323 The sad land seemed a sea: the hard-earned wealth 324 of all its farmers was destroyed 325 and overwhelmed by furious waves. 326 This awful punishment was not enough. 327 The daughter of the king was soon required 328 as food for a sea-monster —. Hesione 329 was chained to rugged rocks. But Hercules 330 delivered from all harm the royal maid 331 and justly he demanded of the king, 332 her father, payment of the promised steeds; 333 but that perfidious king refused to keep 334 his promise. Hercules enraged, because 335 all payment was denied to him for his 336 great service, captured the twice-perjured walls 337 of conquered Troy. And as a fair reward, 338 he gave to Telamon, who fought for him, 339 Hesione, loved daughter of that king. 340 For Peleus had a goddess as his bride 341 and he was prouder of his father-in-law 342 than of his grandsire. Since not he alone 343 was grandson of great Jove, but he alone 344 was honored with a goddess for a wife.
11.301	301 Nata erat huic Chione. Quae dotatissima forma 302 mille procos habuit, bis septem nubilis annis. 303 Forte revertentes Phoebus Maiaque creatus, 304 ille suis Delphis, hic vertice Cylleneo, 305 videre hanc pariter, pariter traxere calorem. 306 Spem veneris differt in tempora noctis Apollo, 307 non fert ille moras virgaque movente soporem 308 virginis os tangit: tactu iacet illa potenti 309 vimque dei patitur. Nox caelum sparserat astris: 310 Phoebus anum simulat praereptaque gaudia sumit. 311 Ut sua maturus complevit tempora venter, 312 alipedis de stirpe dei versuta propago 313 nascitur, Autolycus, furtum ingeniosus ad omne, 314 candida de nigris et de candentibus atra

	315 qui facere adsuerat, patriae non degener artis; 316 nascitur e Phoebo (namque est enixa gemellos) 317 carmine vocali clarus citharaque Philammon. 318 Quid peperisse duos et dis placuisse duobus 319 et forti genitore et progenitore Tonanti 320 esse satam prodest? An obest quoque gloria? multis 321 Offuit, huic certe! Quae se praeferre Dianae 322 sustinuit faciemque deae culpavit. At illi 323 ira ferox mota est “factis” que “placebimus” inquit. 324 Nec mora, curvavit cornu nervoque sagittam 325 impulit et meritam traiecit harundine linguam. 326 Lingua tacet, nec vox temptataque verba sequuntur, 327 conantemque loqui cum sanguine vita reliquit. 328 Quo miser amplexus ego tum patriumque dolorem 329 corde tuli fratrique pio solacia dixi! 330 Quae pater haud aliter quam cautes murmura ponti
11.331	331 accipit et natam delamentatur ademptam. 332 Ut vero ardentem vidit, quater impetus illi 333 in medios fuit ire rogos; quater inde repulsus 334 concita membra fugae mandat similisque iuvenco 335 spicula crabronum pressa cervice gerenti, 336 qua via nulla, ruit. Iam tum mihi currere visus 337 plus homine est, alasque pedes sumpsisse putares. 338 Effugit ergo omnes veloxque cupidine leti 339 vertice Parnasi potitur. Miseratus Apollo, 340 cum se Daedalion saxo misisset ab alto, 341 fecit avem et subitis pendentem sustulit alis 342 oraque adunca dedit, curvos dedit unguibus hamos, 343 virtutem antiquam, maiores corpore vires. 344 Et nunc accipiter, nulli satis	345 To Thetis, aged Proteus once had said, 346 “Oh goddess of the waves, you shall conceive, 347 and you shall be the mother of a youth 348 who by heroic actions will surpass 349 the deeds of his own father, and your son 350 shall be superior to his father's power.” 351 So Jupiter, although the flame of love 352 for Thetis burned his breast, would not embrace 353 the lovely daughter of the sea, and urged 354 his grandson Peleus, son of Aeacus, 355 to wed the green haired maid without delay. 356 There is a curved bay of Haemonia, 357 where like an arch, two bending arms 358 project out in the waves, as if to form 359 a harbor; but the water is not deep— 360 although enough to hide a shoal of sand. 361 It has a firm shore which will not retain 362 a foot's impression, nor delay the step— 363 no seaweeds grow in that vicinity. 364 There is a grove of myrtle near that place 365 thick-hung with berries, blended of twin shades. 366 A cave within the middle of that grove 367 is found, and whether it was

	aequus, in omnes 345 saevit aves aliisque dolens fit causa dolendi.” 346 Quae dum Lucifero genitus miracula narrat 347 de consorte suo, cursu festinus anhelo 348 advolat armenti custos Phoceus Onetor 349 et “Peleu, Peleu! magnae tibi nuntius adsum 350 cladis” ait. Quodcumque ferat, iubet edere Peleus, 351 pendet et ipse metu trepidi Trachinius oris. 352 Ille refert: “Fessos ad litora curva iuvencos 353 adpuleram, medio cum Sol altissimus orbe 354 tantum respiceret, quantum superesse videret; 355 parsque boum fulvis genua inclinarat harenis 356 latarumque iacens campos spectabat aquarum, 357 pars gradibus tardis illuc errabat et illuc, 358 nant alii celsoque exstant super aequora collo. 359 Templa mari subsunt nec marmore clara neque auro, 360 sed trabibus densis lucoque umbrosa vetusto.	formed by art 368 or nature is not known, although it seems 369 a work of art. There Thetis often went, 370 quite naked, seated on her dolphin, which 371 was harnessed. Peleus seized her there when she 372 was fast asleep: and after he had tried 373 to win her by entreaties, while she long 374 continued to resist him, he resolved
11.361	361 Nereides Nereusque tenent: hos navita ponti 362 edidit esse deos, dum retia litore siccat. 363 Iuncta palus huic est, densis obsessa salictis, 364 quam restagnantis fecit maris unda paludem. 365 Inde fragore gravi strepitus loca proxima terret 366 belua vasta, lupus! Udisque paludibus exit, 367 oblitus et spumis et sparsus sanguine rictus, 368 fulmineus, rubra suffusus lumina flamma. 369 Qui quamquam saevit pariter rabieque fameque, 370 acrior est rabie: neque enim ieiunia curat 371 caede boum diramque famem finire, sed omne 372 vulnerat armentum sternitque hostiliter omne. 373 Pars quoque de nobis funesto	375 to conquer her by violence, and seized 376 her neck with both arms. She resorted then 377 to all her usual art, and often changed: 378 her shape as it was known, so that he failed 379 in his attempt. At first she was a bird, 380 but while she seemed a bird he held her fast; 381 and then she changed herself to a large tree, 382 and Peleus clung with ardor to the tree; 383 her third disguise was as a spotted tigress, 384 which frightened him so that he lost his hold. 385 Then, as he poured wine on the heaving sea, 386 he prayed unto the sea green gods and gave 387 them sacrifice of sheep entrails, and smoke 388 of frankincense. He ceased not, till at last 389 the prophet of Carpathia, as he rose 390 up from a deep wave, said, “Hark unto me, 391 O son of Aeacus! and you shall have 392 the bride your heart desires: when she at rest 393 lies sleeping in the cool wave, you must bind 394 her while she is unwary, with strong cords 395 and complicated

	saucia morsu, 374 dum defensamus, leto est data. Sanguine litus 375 undaque prima rubet demugitaeque paludes. — 376 Sed mora damnosa est, nec res dubitare remittit: 377 dum superest aliquid, cuncti coeamus et arma, 378 arma capessamus coniunctaque tela feramus!” 379 Dixerat agrestis; nec Pelea damna movebant, 380 sed, memor admissi, Nereida conligit orbam 381 damna sua inferias exstincto mittere Phoco. 382 Induere arma viros violentaque sumere tela 383 rex iubet Oetaeus; cum quis simul ipse parabat 384 ire, sed Alcyone coniunx excita tumultu 385 prosilit et, nondum totos ornata capillos, 386 disicit hos ipsos, colloque infusa mariti, 387 mittat ut auxilium sine se, verbisque precatur 388 et lacrimis, animasque duas ut servet in una. 389 Aeacides illi: “Pulchros, regina, piosque 390 pone metus! Plena est promissi gratia vestri.	bonds, And never let 396 her arts deceive you when she imitates 397 a hundred varied forms, but hold her fast, 398 whatever she may seem, until she shall 399 at length assume the shape she had at first.” 400 So Proteus cautioned him, and hid his face 401 beneath the waves as his last words were said. 402 Now Titan was descending and the pole 403 of his bright chariot as it downward bent 404 illuminated the Hesperian main;
11.391	391 Non placet arma mihi contra nova monstra moveri: 392 numen adorandum pelagi est.” Erat ardua turris 393 arce focus summa, fessis loca grata carinis. 394 Adscendunt illuc stratosque in litore tauros 395 cum gemitu adspiciunt vastatoremque cruento 396 ore ferum, longos infectum sanguine villos. 397 Inde manus tendens in aperti litora ponti 398 caeruleam Peleus Psamathen, ut finiat iram, 399 orat, opemque ferat; nec vocibus illa rogantis 400 flectitur Aeacidae: Thetis hanc pro coniuge supplex 401 accepit veniam. Sed enim revocatus ab acri 402 caede lupus perstat, dulcedine	405 and at that time the lovely Nereid, 406 Thetis, departing from her ocean wave, 407 entered the cavern for desired repose. 408 Peleus was waiting there. Immediately, 409 just as he seized upon the virgin's limbs, 410 she changed her shape and perservered 411 until convinced she could not overcome 412 his hold—for her two arms were forced apart— 413 she groaned and said, “You could not overcome 414 me in this way, but some divinity 415 has given you the power.” Then she appeared 416 as Thetis: and, when Peleus saw her now 417 deprived of all deceptions, he embraced 418 her and was father of the great Achilles. 419 Great Peleus' heart was filled with happiness; 420 because of his great son and Thetis his 421 dear wife: he was blest in everything, except 422 in killing Phocus. The Trachinian land 423 received him guilty of his brother's sanguinis asper, 403 donec inhaerentem lacerae cervice iuvencae 404 marmore mutavit. Corpus praeterque colorem 405 omnia servavit: lapidis color indicat illum 406 iam non esse lupum, iam non debere timeri. 407 Nec tamen hac profugum consistere Pelea terra 408 fata sinunt: Magnetas adit vagus exul et illic 409 sumit ab Haemonio purgamina caedis Acasto. 410 Interea fratrisque sui fratremque secutis 411 anxia prodigiis turbatus pectora Ceyx, 412 consulat ut sacras, hominum oblectamina, sortes, 413 ad Clarium parat ire deum; nam templa profanus 414 invia cum Phlegyis faciebat Delphica Phorbas. 415 Consilii tamen ante sui, fidissima, certam 416 te facit, Alcyone; cui protinus intima frigus 417 ossa receperunt, buxoque simillimus ora 418 pallor obit, lacrimisque genae maduere profusis. 419 Ter conata loqui ter fletibus ora rigavit, 420 singultuque pias interrumpente querellas	blood; 424 when he fled, banished from his native home. 425 There Ceyx, who had the fine countenance 426 of Lucifer his father, reigned as king, 427 without the cost of violence or blood. 428 Before this time his days had always given 429 him joy and comfort, but all now was changed, 430 for he was mourning a loved brother's death. 431 Peleus, outwearied with his journey's length. 432 Left his fine flock of sheep and all the herds 433 he had brought with him, not far from the walls 434 of that city, where Ceyx long had reigned. 435 He entered with an olive branch all swathed 436 in woolen fillets, symbol of good will, 437 and with a suppliant hand disclosed his name. 438 He told the monarch who he was, also 439 his father's name. But he concealed his crime, 440 giving untruthful reasons for his flight: 441 and begged a refuge either in town or field. 442 The king of Trachyn answered with kind words: 443 “Ah, Peleus, even the lowest ranks enjoy 444 our bounties and our hospitality, 445 and you bring with you powers which compell 446 attention and respect. Your name is so 447 illustrious, and is not Jupiter 448 your grandsire? Do not lose your time by such 11.421	421 “quae mea culpa tuam,” dixit “carissime, mentem 422 vertit? Ubi est quae cura mei prior esse solebat? 423 Iam potes Alcyone securus abesse relicta? 424 Iam via longa placet? Iam sum tibi carior absens? 425 At, puto, per terras iter est, tantumque dolebo, 426 non etiam metuam, curaeque timore carebunt. 427 Aequora me terrent et ponti tristis imago: 428 et laceras nuper tabulas in litore vidi, 429 et saepe in tumulis sine corpore nomina legi. 430 Neve tuum fallax animum fiducia tangat, 431 quod socer Hippotades tibi sit, qui	449 entreaties. Everything you may desire 450 is yours as soon as known, and all you see 451 is partly yours, but in how sad a state!” 452 And then he wept. When Peleus and his friends 453 asked him the reason of his grief he said, 454 “Perchance you deem that bird which lives on prey, 455 which is the terror of all other birds, 456 had always feathered wings? It was a man. 457 And now the vigor of its courage is 458 as great as when well known by his man's name, 459 Daedalion, bold in wars and strong and harsh, 460 and not afraid to hazard violence. 461 His father was unequalled Lucifer, 462 star of the Morning, who at dawn brings forth 463 Aurora, and withdraws the last of all 464 the shining stars of heaven.—My brother named 465 daedalion, son of that great star, was carcere fortes 432 contineat ventos et, cum velit, aequora placet! 433 Cum semel emissi tenuerunt aequora venti, 434 nil illis vetitum est, incommendataque tellus 435 omnis et omne fretum est. Caeli quoque nubila vexant 436 excutiuntque feri rutilos concursibus ignes. 437 Quo magis hos novi (nam novi et saepe paterna 438 parva domo vidi), magis hos reor esse timendos. 439 Quod tua si flecti precibus sententia nullis, 440 care, potest, coniunx, nimiumque es certus eundi, 441 me quoque tolle simul. Certe iactabimur una, 442 nec nisi quae patiar, metuam: pariterque feremus, 443 quidquid erit, pariter super aequora lata feremur.” 444 Talibus Aeolidis dictis lacrimisque movetur 445 sidereus coniunx: neque enim minor ignis in ipso est. 446 Sed neque propositos pelagi dimittere cursus, 447 nec vult Alcyonen in partem adhibere pericli, 448 multaque respondit timidum solantia pectus. 449 Non tamen idcirco causam probat; addidit illis 450 hoc quoque lenimen, quo solo flexit amantem:	fond 466 of cruel warfare, while I cherished peace 467 and loved the quiet of my married life. 468 This brother, powerful in the art of war, 469 subdued strong kings and nations.—And 'tis he 470 transformed from manhood, now a bird of prey, 471 that so relentlessly pursues the doves, 472 known as the pride of Thisbe's citizens. 473 “My brother had a daughter Chione 474 so beautiful she pleased a thousand men, 475 when she had reached the marriageable age 476 of twice seven years. It happened by some chance 477 that Phoebus and the son of Maia, who 478 returned—one from his Delphi, the other from 11.451	451 “Longa quidem est nobis omnis mora: sed tibi iuro 452 per patrios ignes, si me modo fata remittant, 453 ante reversurum, quam luna bis impleat orbem.” 454 His ubi promissis spes est admota recursus, 455 protinus eductam navalibus aequore tingi 456 armarique suis pinum iubet armamentis. 457 Qua rursus visa, veluti praesaga futuri, 458 horruit Alcyone lacrimasque emisit obortas 459 amplexusque dedit, tristique miserrima tandem 460 ore “vale” dixit conlapsaque	479 Cyllene's heights—beheld this lovely maid 480 both at the same time, and were both inflamed 481 with passion. Phoebus waited till the night. 482 Hermes could not endure delay and with 483 the magic of his wand, that causes sleep, 484 he touched the virgin's face; and instantly, 485 as if entranced, she lay there fast asleep, 486 and suffered violence from the ardent god. 487 When night bespangled the wide heaven with stars, 488 Phoebus became an aged crone and gained 489 the joy he had deferred until that hour. 490 “When her mature womb had completed time 491 Autolycus was born, a crafty son, 492 who certainly inherited the skill 493 of wingfoot Mereury, his artful sire, 494

	corpore toto est. 461 Ast iuvenes, quaerente moras Ceyce, reducunt 462 ordinibus geminis ad fortia pectora remos 463 aequalique ictu scindunt freta. Sustulit illa 464 umentes oculos, stantemque in puppe relicta 465 concussaque manu dantem sibi signa maritum 466 prima videt redditque notas; ubi terra recessit 467 longius atque oculi nequeunt cognoscere vultus, 468 dum licet, insequitur fugientem lumine pinum. 469 Haec quoque ut haud poterat, spatio submota, videri, 470 vela tamen spectat summo fluitantia malo; 471 ut nec vela videt, vacuum petit anxia lectum 472 seque toro ponit; renovat lectusque locusque 473 Alcyonae lacrimas et, quae pars, admonet, absit. 474 Portibus exierant, et moverat aura rudentes: 475 obvertit lateri pendentes navita remos 476 cornuaque in summa locat arbore totaque malo 477 carbasa deducit venientesque accipit auras. 478 Aut minus, aut certe medium non amplius aequor 479 puppe secabatur, longeque erat utraque tellus, 480 cum mare sub noctem tumidis albescere coepit	notorious now; for every kind of theft. 495 In fact, Autolycus with Mercury's craft, 496 loved to make white of black, and black of white. 497 “But Phoebus' child, for Chione bore twins, 498 was named Philammon, like his sire, well known. 499 To all men for the beauty of his song. 500 And famous for his handling of the lyre. 501 “What benefit in life did she obtain 502 because she pleased! two gods and bore such twins? 503 Was she blest by good fortune then because 504 she was the daughter of a valiant father, 505 and even the grandchild of the Morning Star? 506 Can glory be a curse? Often it is. 507 “And surely it was so for Chione. 508 It was a prejudice that harmed her days
11.481	481 fluctibus et praeceps spirare valentius eurus. 482 “Ardua iamdudum demittite cornua” rector 483 clamat “et antemnis totum subnectite velum.” 484 Hic iubet: impediunt adversae iussa procellae, 485 nec sinit audiri vocem fragor aequoris ullam. 486 Sponte tamen properant alii subducere remos, 487 pars munire latus, pars ventis vela negare. 488 Egerit hic fluctus aequorque refundit in aequor, 489 hic rapit antemnas. Quae dum sine	509 because she vaunted that she did surpass 510 Diana's beauty and decried her charms: 511 the goddess in hot anger answered her, 512 sarcastically, ‘If my face cannot 513 give satisfaction, let me try my deeds.’ 514 “Without delay Diana bent her bow, 515 and from the string an arrow swiftly flew, 516 and pierced the vaunting tongue of Chione. 517 Her tongue was silenced, and she tried in vain 518 to speak or make a sound, and while she tried 519 her life departed with the flowing blood. 520 “Embracing her, I shared her father's grief. 521 I spoke consoling words to my dear brother, 522 he heard them as a cliff might hear the sea. 523

	lege geruntur, 490 aspera crescit hiems, omnique e parte feroces 491 bella gerunt venti fretaque indignantia miscent. 492 Ipse pavet nec se, qui sit status, ipse fatetur 493 scire ratis rector, nec, quid iubeatve velitve: 494 tanta mali moles tantoque potentior arte est. 495 Quippe sonant clamore viri, stridore rudentes, 496 undarum incursu gravis unda, tonitribus aether. 497 Fluctibus erigitur caelumque aequare videtur 498 pontus et inductas adspergine tangere nubes; 499 et modo, cum fulvas ex imo vertit harenas, 500 concolor est illis, Stygia modo nigrior unda, 501 sternitur interdum spumisque sonantibus albet. 502 Ipsa quoque his agitur vicibus Trachinia puppis, 503 et nunc sublimis veluti de vertice montis 504 despicere in valles imumque Acheronta videtur, 505 nunc, ubi demissam curvum circumstetit aequor, 506 suspicere inferno summum de gurgite caelum. 507 Saepe dat ingentem fluctu latus icta fragorem 508 nec levius pulsata sonat, quam ferreus olim 509 cum laceras aries ballistave concutit arces. 510 Utque solent sumptis incursu viribus ire	And he lamented bitterly the loss 524 of his dear daughter, snatched away from him. 525 “Ah! when he saw her burning, he was filled 526 with such an uncontrolled despair, he rushed 527 four times to leap upon the blazing pyre; 528 and after he had been four times repulsed, 529 he turned and rushed away in headlong flight 530 through trackless country, as a bullock flees, 531 his swollen neck pierced with sharp hornet-stings, 532 it seemed to me he ran beyond the speed 533 of any human being. You would think 534 his feet had taken wings, he left us far 535 behind and swift in his desire for death 536 he stood at last upon Parnassus' height. 537 “Apollo pitied him.—And when Daedalion 538 leaped over the steep cliff, Apollo's power
11.511	511 pectore in arma feri protentaque tela leones, 512 sic ubi se ventis admiserat unda coortis, 513 ibat in arma ratis multoque erat altior illis. 514 Iamque labant cunei, spoliataque tegmine cerae 515 rima patet praebetque viam letalibus undis. 516 Ecce cadunt largi resolutis nubibus imbres, 517 inque fretum credas totum descendere caelum, 518 inque plagas caeli tumefactum	539 transformed him to a bird; supported him 540 while he was hovering in the air upon 541 uncertain wings, of such a sudden growth. 542 Apollo, also, gave him a curved beak, 543 and to his slender toes gave crooked claws. 544 His former courage still remains, with strength 545 greater than usual in birds. He changed 546 to a fierce hawk; cruel to all, he vents 547 his rage on other birds. Grieving himself 548 he is a cause of grief to all his kind.” 549 While Ceyx, the royal son of Lucifer, 550 told these great wonders of his brother's life; 551 Onetor, who

	adscendere pontum. 519 Vela madent nimbis, et cum caelestibus undis 520 aequoreae miscentur aquae; caret ignibus aether, 521 caecaque nox premitur tenebris hiemisque suisque. 522 Discutiunt tamen has praebentque micantia lumen 523 fulmina: fulmineis ardescunt ignibus ignes. 524 Dat quoque iam saltus intra cava texta carinae 525 fluctus; et ut miles, numero praestantior omni, 526 cum saepe adsiluit defensae moenibus urbis, 527 spe potitur tandem laudisque accensus amore 528 inter mille viros murum tamen occupat unus, 529 sic, ubi pulsarunt noviens latera ardua fluctus, 530 vastius insurgens decimae ruit impetus undae; 531 nec prius absistit fessam oppugnare carinam, 532 quam velut in captae descendat moenia navis. 533 Pars igitur temptabat adhuc invadere pinum, 534 pars maris intus erat. Trepidant haud segnius omnes, 535 quam solet urbs, aliis murum fodientibus extra 536 atque aliis murum, trepidare, tenentibus intus. 537 Deficit ars animique cadunt, totidemque videntur, 538 quot veniunt fluctus, ruere atque inrumpere mortes. 539 Non tenet hic lacrimas, stupet hic, vocat ille beatos, 540 funera quos maneant: hic votis numen adorat	had watched the while those herds 552 which Peleus had assigned to him, ran up 553 with panting speed; and cried out as he ran, 554 “Peleus, Peleus! I bring you dreadful news!” 555 Peleus asked him to tell what had gone wrong 556 and with King Ceyx he listened in suspense.
11.541	541 bracchiaque ad caelum, quod non videt, inrita tollens 542 poscit opem, subeunt illi fraterque parensque, 543 huic cum pignoribus domus et quodcumque relictum est. 544 Alcyone Ceyca movet, Ceycis in ore 545 nulla nisi Alcyone est; et cum desideret unam, 546 gaudet abesse tamen. Patriae quoque vellet ad oras 547 respicere inque domum supremos vertere vultus,	557 “I drove the weary bullocks to the shore,” 558 Onetor then began, “About the time 559 when the high burning Sun in middle course, 560 could look back on as much as might be seen 561 remaining: and some cattle had then bent 562 their knees on yellow sand; and as they lay 563 might view the expanse of water stretched beyond. 564 Some with slow steps were wandering here and there, 565 and others swimming, stretched their lofty necks 566 above the waves. A temple near

	548 verum ubi sit, nescit; tanta vertigine pontus 549 fervet, et inducta piceis e nubibus umbra 550 omne latet caelum, duplicataque noctis imago est. 551 Frangitur incursu nimbosi turbinis arbor, 552 frangitur et regimen, spoliisque animosa superstes 553 unda, velut victrix, sinuataque despicit undas, 554 nec levius, quam siquis Athon Pindumve revulsos 555 sede sua totos in apertum everterit aequor, 556 praecipitata cadit pariterque et pondere et ictu 557 mergit in ima ratem; cum qua pars magna virorum, 558 gurgite pressa gravi neque in aera reddita, fato 559 functa suo est: alii partes et membra carinae 560 trunca tenent: tenet ipse manu, qua sceptra solebat, 561 fragmina navigii Ceyx socerumque patremque 562 invocat heu! frustra. Sed plurima nantis in ore 563 Alcyone coniunx: illam meminitque refertque, 564 illius ante oculos ut agant sua corpora fluctus, 565 optat et exanimis manibus tumuletur amicis. 566 Dum natat, absentem, quotiens sinit hiscere fluctus, 567 nominat Alcyonen ipsisque inmurmurat undis. 568 Ecce super medios fluctus niger arcus aquarum 569 frangitur et rupta mersum caput obruit unda. 570 Lucifer obscurus nec quem cognoscere posses	that sea 567 was fair to view, although 'twas not adorned 568 with gold nor marble. It was richly made 569 of beams, and shaded with an ancient grove. 570 “A sailor, while he dried his nets upon 571 the shore nearby, declared that aged Nereus 572 possessed it with his Nereids, as the gods 573 who ruled the neighboring waters. Very near 574 it is a marsh, made by the encroaching waves, 575 all thickly covered with low willow trees. 576 “From there a loud uncanny crashing sound 577 alarms the neighborhood. A monster-wolf! 578 All stained with mud he breaks forth from the marsh, 579 his thundering jaws thick-covered with vile foam 580 and clotted blood—his fierce eyes flashing flames 581 of crimson: and though he was raging, both 582 with fury and with hunger, the true cause 583 of his fierce passions was Ferocity. 584 “He never paused to sate his ravenous hunger 585 with the first cattle that he fell upon, 586 but mangled the whole herd, as if at war.
11.571	571 illa luce fuit, quoniamque excedere caelo 572 non licuit, densis texit sua nubibus ora. 573 Aeolis interea tantorum ignara malorum 574 dinumerat noctes, et iam, quas induat ille 575 festinat vestes, iam quas, ubi venerit ille, 576 ipsa gerat, reditusque sibi promittit inanes.	587 And some of us, while we defended them, 588 were wounded with his fatal bite and killed.— 589 the shore and nearest waves were red with blood, 590 and marshy fens were filled with mournful sounds— 591 the longings of our cattle.—This delay 592 is dangerous. We must not hesitate. 593 We must unite before all is destroyed! 594 Take up your arms. Arm! and unite, I say! 595 And bear our weapons for the cause of Right!” 596 So spoke the

	577 Omnibus illa quidem superis pia tura ferebat, 578 ante tamen cunctos Iunonis templa colebat 579 proque viro, qui nullus erat, veniebat ad aras 580 utque foret sospes coniunx suus utque rediret, 581 optabat, nullamque sibi praeferret; at illi 582 hoc de tot votis poterat contingere solum. 583 At dea non ultra pro functo morte rogari 584 sustinet; utque manus funestas arceat aris, 585 “Iri, meae” dixit “fidissima nuntia vocis, 586 vise soporiferam Somni velociter aulam 587 exstinctique iube Ceycis imagine mittat 588 somnia ad Alcyonen veros narrantia casus.” 589 Dixerat: induitur velamina mille colorum 590 Iris, et arcuato caelum curvamine signans 591 tecta petit iussi sub nube latentia regis. 592 Est prope Cimmerios longo spelunca recessu, 593 mons cavus, ignavi domus et penetralia Somni: 594 quo numquam radiis oriens mediusve cadensve 595 Phoebus adire potest. Nebulae caligine mixtae 596 exhalantur humo dubiaeque crepuscula lucis. 597 Non vigil ales ibi cristati cantibus oris 598 evocat auroram, nec voce silentia rumpunt 599 sollicitive canes canibusve sagacior anser. 600 Non fera, non pecudes, non moti flamine rami	countryman, and yet the loss 597 had no effect on Peleus, though severe, 598 for he, remembering his red crime, believed 599 the Nereid had given him that loss— 600 a just misfortune, as an offering 601 to the departed Phocus. After this, 602 King Ceyx, while he put his armor on, 603 ordered his men to arm themselves with their 604 best weapons, and to follow his command. 605 But his fond wife, Halcyone, aroused 606 by such a tumult, ran to him in haste; 607 in such haste that her hair was still unfinished, 608 and such as had been done, she threw 609 in wild disorder.—Clinging to the neck 610 of her loved husband, she entreated him 611 with words and tears, to send his men along. 612 But keep himself at home and so to save 613 two lives in one. 614 But Peleus said “O queen, 615 'Tis sweet and commendable in you to fear 616 but needless. Though you promise generous aid,
11.601	601 humanaeve sonum reddunt convicia linguae: 602 muta quies habitat; saxo tamen exit ab imo 603 rivus aquae Lethes, per quem cum murmure labens 604 invitat somnos crepitantibus unda lapillis. 605 Ante fores antri fecunda papavera florent	617 my hope lies not in fighting with the beast, 618 I must appease a goddess of the sea. 619 And the divinity of ocean must 620 be properly adored.” 621 A lofty tower 622 is near there, and upon its extreme height 623 a signal-fire is burning night and day, 624 known to the grateful ships. They all went there; 625 and from its summit they beheld with sighs, 626 the

	606 innumeraeque herbae, quarum de lacte soporem 607 nox legit et spargit per opacas umida terras. 608 Ianua nec verso stridores cardine reddit: 609 nulla domo tota, custos in limine nullus. 610 At medio torus est ebeno sublimis in antro, 611 plumeus, unicolor, pullo velamine tectus: 612 quo cubat ipse deus membris languore solutis. 613 Hunc circa passim varias imitantia formas 614 somnia vana iacent totidem, quot messis aristas, 615 silva gerit frondes, eiectas litus harenas. 616 Quo simul intravit manibusque obstantia virgo 617 somnia dimovit, vestis fulgore reluxit 618 sacra domus, tardaque deus gravitate iacentes 619 vix oculos tollens iterumque iterumque relabens 620 summaque percutiens nutanti pectora mento, 621 excussit tandem sibi se; cubitoque levatus, 622 quid veniat (cognovit enim), scitatur. At illa: 623 “Somne, quies rerum, placidissime, Somne, deorum, 624 pax animi, quem cura fugit, qui corpora duris 625 fessa ministeriis mulces reparasque labori, 626 somnia, quae veras aequent imitantia formas, 627 Herculea Trachine iube sub imagine regis 628 Alcyonen adeant simulacraque naufraga fingant. 629 Imperat hoc Iuno.” Postquam mandata peregit, 630 Iris abit (neque enim ulterius tolerare soporis	mangled cattle scattered on the shore, 627 and saw the ravager among the herd, 628 his blood-stained jaws and long hair dripping blood. 629 Then Peleus stretched his arms out towards the sea, 630 and he implored the azure Psamathe 631 to lay aside her wrath and give him aid. 632 But she was deaf to any word of Peleus 633 entreating her, and would not offer aid, 634 till Thetis, interceding on behalf 635 of her afflicted husband, moved her will. 636 The monster-wolf persisted in his rage, 637 even when the sea nymph bade him turn aside. 638 His keen ferocity increased by taste 639 of new sweet blood; till Psamathe, while he 640 was seizing the last mangled heifer's neck, 641 transformed him to hard marble. Every part 642 of that ferocious monster's shape remained 643 but it was changed to marble colored stone, 644 which showed the monster was no more a wolf, 645 and should no longer be a cause of fear. 646 But still, the guiding Fates did not permit
11.631	631 vim poterat), labique ut somnum sensit in artus, 632 effugit et remeat per quos modo venerat arcus. 633 At pater e populo natorum mille suorum 634 excitat artificem simulatoremque figurae	647 the banished Peleus to continue there, 648 in this land governed by the friendly king. 649 A wandering exile, he proceeded north 650 into Magnesia; and was purified 651 of guilt by King Acastus of that land. 652 King Ceyx, disturbed by his loved brother's fate 653 and prodigies which happened

	635 Morphea: non illic quisquam sollertius alter 636 exprimit incessus vultumque sonumque loquendi. 637 Adicit et vestes et consuetissima cuique 638 verba; sed hic solos homines imitatur, at alter 639 fit fera, fit volucris, fit longo corpore serpens: 640 hunc Icelon superi, mortale Phobetora vulgus 641 nominat. Est etiam diversae tertius artis 642 Phantasos: ille in humum saxumque undamque trabemque 643 quaeque vacant anima, fallaciter omnia transit. 644 Regibus hi ducibusque suos ostendere vultus 645 nocte solent, populos alii plebemque pererrant. 646 Praeterit hos senior cunctisque e fratribus unum 647 Morphea, qui peragat Thaumantidos edita, Somnus 648 eligit: et rursus molli languore solutus 649 deposuitque caput stratoque recondidit alto. 650 Ille volat nullos strepitus facientibus alis 651 per tenebras intraque morae breve tempus in urbem 652 pervenit Haemoniam positisque e corpore pennis 653 in faciem Ceycis abit sumptaque figura 654 luridus, exanimi similis, sine vestibus ullis, 655 coniugis ante torum miserae stetit: uda videtur 656 barba viri, madidisque gravis fluere unda capillis. 657 Tum lecto incumbens, fletu super ora profuso, 658 haec ait: “Agnoscis Ceyca, miserrima coniunx? 659 An mea mutata est facies? Nunc respice! nosces 660 inveniesque tuo pro coniuge coniugis umbram.	since that time, 654 prepared to venture to the Clarian god, 655 that he might there consult the oracle, 656 so sanctified to consolation of distress: 657 for then the way to Delphi was unsafe 658 because of Phorbas and his Phlegyans. 659 Before he went he told his faithful queen, 660 his dear Halcyone. She felt at once 661 terror creep through the marrow of her bones, 662 pallor of boxwood overspread her face, 663 and her two cheeks were wet with gushing tears. 664 Three times she tried to speak while tears and sobs 665 delayed her voice, until at last she said: — 666 “What fault of mine, my dearest, has so changed 667 your usual thoughts? Where is that care for me 668 that always has stood first? Can you leave me 669 for this long journey with no anxious fear— 670 Halcyone, forsaken in these halls? 671 Will this long journey be a pleasant change 672 because far from you I should be more dear? 673 Perhaps you think you will go there by land, 674 and I shall only grieve, and shall not fear 675 the sea affrights me with its tragic face. 676 Just lately I observed some broken planks 677 upon our seashore, and I've read and read 678 the names of seamen on their empty tombs! 679 “Oh, let no false assurance fill your mind 680 because your father-in-law is Aeolus. 681 Who in a dungeon shuts the stormful winds
11.661	661 Nil opis, Alcyone, nobis tua vota tulerunt: 662 occidimus! Falso tibi me promittere noli! 663 Nubilus Aegaeo deprendit in aequore navem	682 and smoothes at will the troubled ocean waves 683 soon as the winds get freedom from his power, 684 they take entire possession of the deep, 685 and nothing is forbidden their attack; 686 and all the rights of every land and sea

	664 auster et ingenti iactatam flamine solvit, 665 oraque nostra, tuum frustra clamantia nomen, 666 implerunt fluctus. Non haec tibi nuntiat auctor 667 ambiguus, non ista vagis rumoribus audis: 668 ipse ego fata tibi praesens mea naufragus edo. 669 Surge, age, da lacrimas lugubriaque indue nec me 670 indeploratum sub inania Tartara mitte.” 671 Adicit his vocem Morpheus, quam coniugis illa 672 crederet esse sui: fletus quoque fundere veros 673 visus erat, gestumque manus Ceycis habebat. 674 Ingemit Alcyone, lacrimas movet atque lacertos 675 per somnum, corpusque petens amplectitur auras 676 exclamatque “mane! quo te rapis? ibimus una!” 677 Voce sua specieque viri turbata soporem 678 excutit et primo, si sit, circumspicit, illic, 679 qui modo visus erat: nam moti voce ministri 680 intulerant lumen. Postquam non invenit usquam, 681 percutit ora manu laniatque a pectore vestes 682 pectoraque ipsa ferit, nec crines solvere curat: 683 scindit et altrici, quae luctus causa, roganti 684 “nulla est Alcyone, nulla est!” ait. “Occidit una 685 cum Ceyce suo! Solantia tollite verba! 686 Naufragus interiit! Vidi agnovique manusque 687 ad discedentem cupiens retinere, tetendi. 688 Umbra fuit, — sed et umbra tamen manifesta virique 689 vera mei! Non ille quidem, si quaeris, habebat 690 adsuetos vultus, nec quo prius, ore nitebat:	687 are disregarded by them. They insult 688 even the clouds of heaven and their wild 689 concussions urge the lightnings to strike fires. 690 The more I know of them, for I knew 691 them in my childhood and I often saw 692 them from my father's home, the more I fear. 693 “But, O dear husband! if this new resolve 694 can not be altered by my prayers and fears, 695 and if you are determined, take me, too: 696 some comfort may be gained, if in the storms 697 we may be tossed together. I shall fear 698 only the ills that really come to us, 699 together we can certainly endure 700 discomforts till we gain that distant land.” 701 Such words and tears of the daughter of Aeolus 702 gave Ceyx, famed son of the Morning Star, 703 much thought and sorrow; for the flame of love 704 burned in his heart as strongly as in hers. 705 Reluctant to give up the voyage, even more 706 to make Halcyone his partner on 707 the dangerous sea, he answered her complaints 708 in many ways to pacify her breast, 709 but could not comfort her until at last 710 he said, “This separation from your love 711 will be most sorrowful; and so I swear
11.691	691 pallentem nudumque et adhuc umente capillo 692 infelix vidi. Stetit hoc miserabilis ipse	712 to you, as witnessed by the sacred fire 713 of my Star-father, if the fates permit 714 my safe return, I will come back to you 715 before the moon has

	693 ecce loco!” (et quaerit, vestigia siqua supersint) 694 “Hoc erat, hoc, animo quod divinante timebam, 695 et ne me fugeres, ventos sequerere, rogabam. 696 At certe vellem, quoniam periturus abibas, 697 me quoque duxisses! Multum fuit utile tecum 698 ire mihi: neque enim de vitae tempore quicquam 699 non simul egissem, nec mors discreta fuisset. 700 Nunc absens perii, iactor quoque fluctibus absens, 701 et sine me me pontus habet. Crudelior ipso 702 sit mihi mens pelago, si vitam ducere nitar 703 longius et tanto pugnem superesse dolori. 704 Sed neque pugnabo, nec te, miserande, relinquam 705 et tibi nunc saltem veniam comes, inque sepulcro 706 si non urna, tamen iunget nos littera: si non 707 ossibus ossa meis, at nomen nomine tangam.” 708 Plura dolor prohibet, verboque intervenit omni 709 plangor, et attonito gemitus a corde trahuntur. 710 Mane erat, egreditur tectis ad litus et illum 711 maesta locum repetit, de quo spectarat euntem. 712 Dumque moratur ibi, dumque “hic retinacula solvit, 713 hoc mihi discedens dedit oscula litore” dicit, 714 715 prospicit: in liquida, spatio distante, tuetur 716 nescio quid quasi corpus, aqua. Primoque, quid illud 717 esset, erat dubium; postquam paulum appulit unda, 718 et, quamvis aberat, corpus tamen esse liquebat, 719 qui foret, ignorans, quia naufragus, omine mota est 720 et, tamquam ignoto lacrimam daret, “heu! miser” inquit	rounded twice her orb.” 716 These promises gave hope of his return. 717 Without delay he ordered a ship should 718 be drawn forth from the dock, launched in the sea, 719 and properly supplied against the needs 720 of travel.—Seeing this, Halcyone, 721 as if aware of future woe, shuddered, 722 wept, and embraced him, and in extreme woe 723 said with a sad voice, “Ah—Farewell!” and then, 724 her nerveless body sank down to the ground. 725 While Ceyx longed for some pretext to delay, 726 the youthful oarsmen, chosen for their strength, 727 in double rows began to draw the oars 728 back towards their hardy breasts, cutting the waves 729 with equal strokes. She raised her weeping eyes 730 and saw her husband on the high-curved stern. 731 He by his waving hand made signs to her, 732 and she returned his signals. Then the ship 733 moved farther from the shore until her eyes 734 could not distinguish his loved countenance. 735 Still, while she could, she followed with her gaze 736 the fading hull; and, when that too was lost 737 far in the distance, she remained and gazed 738 at the white topsails, waving from the mast. 739 But, when she could no longer see the sails, 740 with anxious heart she sought her lonely couch 741 and laid herself upon it. Couch and room
11.721	721 “quisquis es, et siqua est coniunx tibi !” Fluctibus actum 722 fit propius corpus; quod quo magis	742 renewed her sorrow and reminded her 743 how much of life was absent on the sea. 744 The ship had left the

	illa tuetur, 723 hoc minus et minus est mentis sua, iamque propinquae 724 admotum terrae, iam quod cognoscere posset, 725 cernit: erat coniunx. “Ille est!” exclamat et una 726 ora, comas, vestem lacerat tendensque trementes 727 ad Ceyca manus “sic, o carissime coniunx, 728 sic ad me, miserande, redis?” ait. Adiacet undis 729 facta manu moles, quae primas aequoris undas 730 frangit et incursus quae praedelassat aquarum. 731 Insilit huc, mirumque fuit potuisse: volabat 732 percutiensque levem modo natis aera pennis 733 stringebat summas ales miserabilis undas. 734 Dumque volat, maesto similem plenumque querellae 735 ora dedere sonum tenui crepitantia rostro. 736 Ut vero tetigit mutum et sine sanguine corpus, 737 dilectos artus amplexa recentibus alis 738 frigida nequiquam duro dedit oscula rostro. 739 Senserit hoc Ceyx, an vultum motibus undae 740 tollere sit visus, populus dubitabat: at ille 741 senserat, et tandem superis miserantibus, ambo 742 alite mutantur. Fatis obnoxius isdem 743 tunc quoque mansit amor, nec coniugiale solutum est 744 foedus in alitibus: coeunt fiuntque parentes, 745 perque dies placidos hiberno tempore septem 746 incubat Alcyone pendentibus aequore nidis. 747 Tunc iacet unda maris: ventos custodit et arcet 748 Aeolus egressu praestatque nepotibus aequor. 749 Hos aliquis senior iunctim freta lata volantes 750 spectat et ad finem servatos laudat amores;	harbor, and the breeze 745 shook the taut rigging. Now the captain bade 746 the idle oars be drawn up to the sides. 747 They ran the pointed sailyards up the mast 748 and with spread canvas caught the coming breeze. 749 Perhaps the ship had not sailed half her course, 750 on every side the land was out of sight 751 in fact at a great distance, when, towards dark 752 the sea grew white with its increasing waves, 753 while boisterous east winds blew with violence.— 754 prompt in his duty, the captain warns his crew, 755 “Lower the top sails—quick—furl all the sails 756 tight to the yards!”—He ordered, but the storm 757 bore all his words away, his voice could not 758 be heard above the roaring of the sea. 759 But of their own accord some sailors rushed 760 to draw the oars in, others to secure 761 the sides from danger, and some strove to pull 762 the sails down from the wind. One pumps the waves 763 up from the hold, and pours the rushing sea 764 again into the sea; another takes 765 the yards off.—While such things are being done 766 without command or order, the wild storm 767 increases, and on every side fierce winds 768 wage a destructive warfare, which stirs up 769 the furious waters to their utmost power. 770 Even the captain, terrified, confessed 771 he did not know the status of the ship, 11.751	751 proximus, aut idem, si fors tulit,	772 and could not order nor forbid the

	“hic quoque,” dixit 752 “quem mare carpentem substrictaque crura gerentem 753 adspicis” (ostendens spatiosum in guttura mergum), 754 “regia progenies: sunt si descendere ad ipsum 755 ordine perpetuo quaeris, sunt huius origo 756 Ilus et Assaracus raptusque Iovi Ganymedes 757 Laomedonque senex Priamusque novissima Troiae 758 tempora sortitus. Frater fuit Hectoris iste: 759 qui nisi sensisset prima nova fata iuventa, 760 forsitan inferius non Hectore nomen haberet, 761 quamvis est illum proles enixa Dymantis, 762 Aesacon umbrosa furtim peperisse sub Ida 763 fertur Alexirhoe, Granico nata bicorni. 764 Oderat hic urbes nitidaque remotus ab aula 765 secretos montes et inambitiosa colebat 766 rura nec Iliacos coetus nisi rarus adibat. 767 Non agreste tamen nec inexpugnabile amori 768 pectus habens silvas captatam saepe per omnes 769 adspicit Hesperien patria Cebrenida ripa 770 iniectos umeris siccantem sole capillos. 771 Visa fugit nymphe, veluti perterrita fulvum 772 cerva lupum longeque lacu deprensa relicto 773 accipitrem fluvialis anas; quam Troius heros 774 insequitur celeremque metu celer urget amore: 775 ecce latens herba coluber fugientis adunco 776 dente pedem strinxit virusque in corpore liquit; 777 cum vita suppressa fuga est: amplectitur amens 778 exanimem clamatque “piget, piget esse secutum! 779 Sed non hoc timui, neque erat mihi vincere tanti. 780 Perdidimus miseram nos te duo:	men— 773 so great the storm, so far beyond his skill. 774 Then he gave up control, while frightened men 775 shouted above the rattled cordage shocks, 776 and heavy waves were dashed against huge waves, 777 and ail the sky reverberated with 778 terrific thunders. The deep sea upturned 779 tremendous billows, which appeared to reach 780 so near the heaven they touched the heavy clouds 781 with foam of their tossed waters.—At one time, 782 while the great billows churned up yellow sand 783 from off the bottom, the wild rolling waves 784 were of that color. At another time 785 they were more black than water of the Styx. 786 Sometimes they levelled, white with lashing foam.

	vulnus ab angue,
11.781	781 a me causa data est. Ego sum sceleratior illo, 782 qui tibi morte mea mortis solacia mittam.” 783 Dixit et e scopulo, quem rauca subederat unda, 784 decidit in pontum. Tethys miserata cadentem 785 molliter excepit nantemque per aequora pennis 786 texit, et optatae non est data copia mortis. 787 Indignatur amans invitum vivere cogi 788 obstarique animae misera de sede volenti 789 exire. Utque novas umeris adsumpserat alas, 790 subvolat atque iterum corpus super aequora mittit. 791 Pluma levat casus: furit Aesacos inque profundum 792 pronus abit letique viam sine fine retemptat. 793 Fecit amor maciem: longa internodia crurum, 794 longa manet cervix, caput est a corpore longe; 795 aequor amat nomenque manet, quia mergitur, illi.”	787 The ship was tossed about in the wild storm: 788 aloft as from a mountain peak it seemed 789 to look down on the valley and the depth 790 of Acheron; and, when sunk down in a trough 791 of waves engulfing, it appeared to look 792 up at the zenith from infernal seas. 793 Often the waves fell on the sides with crash 794 as terrible as when a flying stone 795 or iron ram shatters a citadel. 796 As lions, mustering up their strength anew, 797 might hurl their breasts against the spears 798 and outstretched arms of huntsmen, so the waves, 799 upon the rising of the winds, rushed forth 800 against the battered sides of the tossed ship 801 and rose much higher than the slanting masts. 802 The ship-bolts lost their grip, the loosened planks, 803 despoiled of covering wax, gave open seams, 804 through which streamed water of the fatal waves.— 805 vast sheets of rain pour from dissolving clouds, 806 so suddenly, it seemed that all the heavens 807 were flung into the deep, while swelling seas 808 ascended to the emptied fields of heaven! 809 The sails are drenched with rain, the salt sea waves 810 are mingled with the waters of the skies. 811 The firmament is black without a star, 812 and night is doubly dark with its own gloom 813 and blackness of the storm. Quick lightning makes 814 the black skies glitter, and the waves are fired 815 with flames of thunder-bolts. Now floods leap up 816 into the very middle of the ship.
12.1	1 Nescius adsumptis Priamus pater Aesacon alis 2 vivere lugebat, tumulo quoque nomen habenti 3 inferias dederat cum fratribus Hector inani. 4 Defuit officio Paridis praesentia tristi, 5 postmodo qui rapta longum cum coniuge bellum 6 attulit in patriam; coniurataeque sequuntur 7 mille rates gentisque simul commune Pelasgae. 8 Nec dilata foret vindicta, nisi aequora saevi 9 invia fecissent venti Boeotaque tellus 10 Aulide piscosa puppes tenuisset	1 Sadly his father, Priam, mourned for him, 2 not knowing that young Aesacus had assumed 3 wings on his shoulders, and was yet alive. 4 Then also Hector with his brothers made 5 complete but unavailing sacrifice, 6 upon a tomb which bore his carved name. 7 Paris was absent. But soon afterwards, 8 he brought into that land a ravished wife, 9 Helen, the cause of a disastrous war, 10 together with a thousand ships, and all 11 the great Pelasgian nation. 12 Vengeance would 13 not long have been delayed, but the fierce winds 14 raged over seas impassable, and held 15 the ships at fishy Aulis. They could not 16 be moved from the Boeotian

	ituras. 11 Hic patrio de more Iovi cum sacra parassent, 12 ut vetus accensis incanduit ignibus ara, 13 serpere caeruleum Danai videre draconem 14 in platanum, coeptis quae stabat proxima sacris. 15 Nidus erat volucrum bis quattuor arbore summa: 16 quas simul et matrem circum sua damna volantem 17 corripuit serpens avidoque recondidit ore. 18 Obstipuere omnes. At veri providus augur 19 Thestorides “vincemus” ait, “gaudete, Pelasgi! 20 Troia cadet, sed erit nostri mora longa laboris,” 21 atque novem volucres in belli digerit annos. 22 Ille, ut erat virides amplexus in arbore ramos, 23 fit lapis et servat serpentis imagine saxum. 24 Permanet Aoniis Nereus violentus in undis 25 bellaque non transfert; et sunt qui parcere Troiae 26 Neptunum credant, quia moenia fecerat urbi. 27 At non Thestorides: nec enim nescitve tacetve 28 sanguine virgineo placandam virginis iram 29 esse deae. Postquam pietatem publica causa 30 rexque patrem vicit castumque datura cruorem	land. Here, when 17 a sacrifice had been prepared to Jove, 18 according to the custom of their land, 19 and when the ancient altar glowed with fire, 20 the Greeks observed an azure colored snake 21 crawling up in a plane tree near the place 22 where they had just begun their sacrifice. 23 Among the highest branches was a nest, 24 with twice four birds—and those the serpent seized 25 together with the mother-bird as she 26 was fluttering round her loss. And every bird 27 the serpent buried in his greedy maw. 28 All stood amazed: but Calchas, who perceived 29 the truth, exclaimed, “Rejoice Pelasgian men, 30 for we shall conquer; Troy will fall; although 12.31	31 flentibus ante aram stetit Iphigenia ministris, 32 victa dea est nubemque oculis obiecit et inter 33 officium turbamque sacri vocesque precantum 34 supposita fertur mutasse Mycenida cerva. 35 Ergo ubi, qua decuit, lenita est caede Diana, 36 et pariter Phoebes, pariter maris ira recessit, 37 accipiunt ventos a tergo mille carinae 38 multaque perpessae Phrygia potiuntur harena. 39 Orbe locus medio est inter terrasque	31 the toil of war must long continue—so 32 the nine birds equal nine long years of war.” 33 And while he prophesied, the serpent, coiled 34 about the tree, was transformed to a stone, 35 curled crooked as a snake. 36 but Nereus stormed 37 in those Aonian waves, and not a ship 38 moved forward. Some declared that Neptune thus 39 was aiding Troy, because he built the walls 40 of that great city. Not so Calchas, son 41 of Thestor! He knew all the truth, and told 42 them plainly that a virgin's blood 43 alone might end a virgin goddess' wrath. 44 The public good at last prevailed above 45 affection, and the duty of a king 46 at

	fretumque 40 caelestesque plagas, triplicis confinia mundi, 41 unde quod est usquam, quamvis regionibus absit, 42 inspicitur, penetratque cavas vox omnis ad aures. 43 Fama tenet summaque domum sibi legit in arce, 44 innumerosque aditus ac mille foramina tectis 45 addidit et nullis inclusit limina portis: 46 nocte dieque patet. Tota est ex aere sonanti, 47 tota fremit vocesque refert iteratque quod audit. 48 Nulla quies intus nullaque silentia parte, 49 nec tamen est clamor, sed parvae murmura vocis, 50 qualia de pelagi, siquis procul audiat, undis 51 esse solent, qualemve sonum, cum Iuppiter atras 52 increpuit nubes, extrema tonitrua reddunt. 53 Atria turba tenet: veniunt, leve vulgus, euntque 54 mixtaque cum veris passim commenta vagantur 55 milia rumorum confusaque verba volutant. 56 E quibus hi vacuas inplent sermonibus aures, 57 hi narrata ferunt alio; mensuraque ficti 58 crescit, et auditis aliquid novus adicit auctor. 59 Illic Credulitas, illic temerarius Error 60 vanaque Laetitia est consternatique Timores	last proved stronger than a father's love: 47 when Iphigenia as a sacrifice, 48 stood by the altar with her weeping maids 49 and was about to offer her chaste blood, 50 the goddess, moved by pity, spread a mist 51 before their eyes, amid the sacred rites 52 and mournful supplications. It is said 53 she left a hind there in the maiden's place 54 and carried Iphigenia away. The hind, 55 as it was fitting, calmed Diana's rage 56 and also calmed the anger of the sea. 57 The thousand ships received the winds astern 58 and gained the Phrygian shore. 59 There is a spot 60 convenient in the center of the world,
12.61	61 Seditioque recens dubioque auctore Susurri. 62 Ipsa, quid in caelo rerum pelagoque geratur 63 et tellure, videt totumque inquirit in orbem. 64 Fecerat haec notum Graias cum milite forti 65 adventare rates, neque inexspectatus in armis 66 hostis adest: prohibent aditus litusque tuentur 67 Troes, et Hectorea primus fataliter hasta, 68 Protesilae, cadis, commissaque	61 between the land and sea and the wide heavens, 62 the meeting of the threefold universe. 63 From there is seen all things that anywhere 64 exist, although in distant regions far; 65 and there all sounds of earth and space are heard. 66 Fame is possessor of this chosen place, 67 and has her habitation in a tower, 68 which aids her view from that exalted highs. 69 And she has fixed there numerous avenues, 70 and openings, a thousand, to her tower 71 and no gates with closed entrance, for the house 72 is open, night and day, of sounding brass, 73 reechoing the tones

	proelia magno 69 stant Danais, fortisque animae nece cognitus Hector. 70 Nec Phryges exiguo, quid Achaica dextera possit 71 sanguine senserunt. Et iam Sigea rubebant 72 litora, iam leto proles Neptunia Cygnus 73 mille viros dederat, iam curru instabat Achilles 74 totaque Peliacae sternebat cuspidis ictu 75 agmina, perque acies aut Cygnum aut Hectora quaerens 76 congreditur Cygno (decimum dilatus in annum 77 Hector erat): tum colla iugo canentia pressos 78 exhortatus equos currum direxit in hostem 79 concutiensque suis vibrantia tela lacertis 80 “quisquis es, o iuvenis” dixit “solamen habeto 81 mortis, ab Haemonio quod sis iugulatus Achille.” 82 Hactenus Aeacides; vocem gravis hasta secuta est. 83 Sed quamquam certa nullus fuit error in hasta, 84 nil tamen emissi profecit acumine ferri 85 utque hebeti pectus tantummodo contudit ictu. 86 “Nate dea, nam te fama praenovimus,” inquit 87 ille “quid a nobis vulnus miraris abesse?” 88 (mirabatur enim) “non haec, quam cernis, equinis 89 fulva iubis cassis neque onus cava parma sinistrae 90 auxilio mihi sunt: decor est quaesitus ab istis.	of every voice. 74 It must repeat whatever it may hear; 75 and there's no rest, and silence in no part. 76 There is no clamor; but the murmuring sound 77 of subdued voices, such as may arise 78 from waves of a far sea, which one may hear 79 who listens at a distance; or the sound 80 which ends a thunderclap, when Jupiter 81 has clashed black clouds together. Fickle crowds 82 are always in that hall, that come and go, 83 and myriad rumors—false tales mixed with true— 84 are circulated in confusing words. 85 Some fill their empty ears with all this talk, 86 and some spread elsewhere all that's told to them. 87 The volume of wild fiction grows apace, 88 and each narrator adds to what he hears. 89 Credulity is there and rash Mistake, 90 and empty Joy, and coward Fear alarmed
12.91	91 Mars quoque ob hoc capere arma solet! Removebitur omne 92 tegminis officium, tamen indestrictus abibo. 93 Est aliquid non esse satum Nereide, sed qui 94 Nereaque et natas et totum temperat aequor.” 95 Dixit et haesurum clipei curvamine telum 96 misit in Aeaciden, quod et aes et proxima rupit 97 terga novena boum, decimo tamen	91 by quick Sedition, and soft Whisper —all 92 of doubtful life. Fame sees what things are done 93 in heaven and on the sea, and on the earth. 94 She spies all things in the wide universe. 95 Fame now had spread the tidings, a great fleet 96 of Greek ships was at that time on its way, 97 an army of brave men. The Trojans stood, 98 all ready to prevent the hostile Greeks 99 from landing on their shores. By the decree 100 of Fate, the first man killed of the invaders' force 101 was strong

	orbe moratum est. 98 Excutit hoc heros rursusque trementia forti 99 tela manu torsit: rursus sine vulnere corpus 100 sincerumque fuit! Nec tertia cuspis apertum 101 et se praebentem valuit destringere Cygnum. 102 Haud secus exarsit, quam circo taurus aperto, 103 cum sua terribili petit inritamina cornu, 104 poeniceas vestes, elusaque vulnera sentit. 105 Num tamen exciderit ferrum, considerat hastae: 106 haerebat ligno. “Manus est mea debilis ergo, 107 quasque” ait “ante habuit vires, effudit in uno? 108 Nam certe valuit, vel cum Lyrnesia primus 109 moenia deieci, vel cum Tenedonque suoque 110 Eetioneas inplevi sanguine Thebas, 111 vel cum purpureus populari caede Caicus 112 fluxit opusque meae bis sensit Telephus hastae. 113 Hic quoque tot caesis, quorum per litus acervos 114 et feci et video, valuit mea dextra valetque.” 115 Dixit et, ante actis veluti male crederet, hastam 116 misit in adversum Lycia de plebe Menoeten 117 loricamque simul subiectaque pectora rupit. 118 Quo plangente gravem moribundo pectore terram 119 extrahit illud idem calido de vulnere telum 120 atque ait: “Haec manus est, haec, qua modo vicimus, hasta:	Protesilaus, by the spear 102 of valiant Hector, whose unthought-of power 103 at that time was discovered by the Greeks 104 to their great cost. The Phyrgians also learned, 105 at no small cost of blood, what warlike strength 106 came from the Grecian land. The Sigean shores 107 grew red with death-blood: Cygnus, Neptune's son, 108 there slew a thousand men: for which, in wrath, 109 Achilles pressed his rapid chariot 110 straight through the Trojan army; making a lane 111 with his great spear, shaped from a Pelion tree. 112 And as he sought through the fierce battle's press, 113 either for Cygnus or for Hector, he 114 met Cygnus and engaged at once with him 115 (Fate had preserved great Hector from such foe 116 till ten years from that day). 117 Cheering his steeds, 118 their white necks pressed upon the straining yoke, 119 he steered the chariot towards his foe, 120 and, brandishing the spear with his strong arm, 121 he cried, “Whoever you may be, you have 122 the consolation of a glorious death 123 you die by me, Haemonian Achilles!” 124 His heavy spear flew after the fierce words.
12.121	121 utar in hoc isdem; sit in hoc, precor, exitus idem!” 122 Sic fatus Cygnum repetit, nec fraxinus errat 123 inque umero sonuit non evitata sinistro, 124 inde velut muro solidaque a caute repulsa est; 125 qua tamen ictus erat, signatum sanguine Cygnum 126 viderat et frustra fuerat gavisus Achilles:	125 Although the spear was whirled direct and true, 126 yet nothing it availed with sharpened point. 127 It only bruised, as with a blunted stroke, 128 the breast of Cygnus! “By report we knew 129 of you before this battle, goddess born.” 130 The other answered him, “But why are you 131 surprised that I escape the threatened wound?” 132 (Achilles was surprised). “This helmet crowned, 133 great with its tawny horse-hair, and this shield, 134

	127 vulnus erat nullum, sanguis fuit ille Menoetae! 128 Tum vero praeceps curru fremebundus ab alto 129 desilit et nitido securum comminus hostem 130 ense petens parmam gladio galeamque cavari 131 cernit et in duro laedi quoque corpore ferrum! 132 Haud tulit ulterius, clipeoque adversa reducto 133 ter quater ora viri, capulo cava tempora pulsat 134 cedentique sequens instat turbatque ruitque 135 attonitoque negat requiem: pavor occupat illum, 136 ante oculosque natant tenebrae, retroque ferenti 137 aversos passus medio lapis obstitit arvo. 138 Quem super inpulsum resupino corpore Cygnum 139 vi multa vertit terraeque adflixit Achilles. 140 Tum clipeo genibusque premens praecordia duris 141 vincla trahit galeae: quae presso subdita mento 142 elidunt fauces et respiramen utrumque 143 eripiunt animae. Victum spoliare parabat: 144 arma relicta videt; corpus deus aequoris albam 145 contulit in volucrem, cuius modo nomen habebat. 146 Hic labor, haec requiem multorum pugna dierum 147 attulit, et positis pars utraque substitit armis. 148 Dumque vigil Phrygios servat custodia muros 149 et vigil Argolicas servat custodia fossas, 150 festa dies aderat, qua Cygni victor Achilles	broad-hollowed, on my left arm, are not held 135 for help in war: they are but ornament, 136 as Mars wears armor. All of them shall be 137 put off, and I will fight with you unhurt. 138 It is a privilege that I was born 139 not as you, of a Nereid but of him 140 whose powerful rule is over Nereus, 141 his daughters and their ocean.” So, he spoke. 142 Immediately he threw his spear against Achilles, 143 destined to pierce the curving shield through brass, 144 and through nine folds of tough bull's hide. 145 It stopped there, for it could not pierce the tenth. 146 The hero wrenched it out, and hurled again 147 a quivering spear at Cygnus, with great strength. 148 The Trojan stood unwounded and unharmed. 149 Nor did a third spear injure Cygnus, though 150 he stood there with his body all exposed. 151 Achilles raged at this, as a wild bull 152 in open circus, when with dreadful horns 153 he butts against the hanging purple robes 154 which stir his wrath and there observes how they
12.151	151 Pallada mactatae placabat sanguine vaccae. 152 Cuius ut inposuit prosecta calentibus aris 153 et dis acceptus penetravit in aethera nidor, 154 sacra tulere suam, pars est data cetera mensis. 155 Discubuere toris proceres et corpora tosta	155 evade him, quite unharmed by his attack. 156 Achilles then examined his good spear, 157 to see if by some chance the iron point 158 was broken from it, but the point was firm, 159 fixed on the wooden shaft. “My hand is weak,” 160 he said, “but is it possible its strength 161 forsook me though it never has before? 162 For surely I had my accustomed strength, 163 when

	156 carne replent vinoque levant curasque sitimque. 157 Non illos citharae, non illos carmina vocum 158 longave multifori delectat tibia buxi, 159 sed noctem sermone trahunt, virtusque loquendi 160 materia est: pugnas referunt hostisque suasque, 161 inque vices adita atque exhausta pericula saepe 162 commemorare iuvat,— quid enim loqueretur Achilles, 163 aut quid apud magnum potius loquerentur Achillem? 164 Proxima praecipue domito victoria Cygno 165 in sermone fuit. Visum mirabile cunctis, 166 quod iuvenis corpus nullo penetrabile telo 167 invictumque a vulnere erat ferrumque terebat. 168 Hoc ipse Aeacides, hoc mirabantur Achivi, 169 cum sic Nestor ait: “Vestro fuit unicus aevo 170 contemptor ferri nulloque forabilis ictu 171 Cygnus. At ipse olim patientem vulnera mille 172 corpore non laeso Perrhaebum Caenea vidi, 173 Caenea Perrhaebum, qui factis inclitus Othryn 174 incoluit; quoque id mirum magis esset in illo, 175 femina natus erat.” Monstri novitate feruntur 176 quisquis adest, narretque rogant. Quos inter Achilles: 177 “Dic age! nam cunctis eadem est audire voluntas, 178 o facunde senex, aevi prudentia nostri, 179 quis fuerit Caeneus, cur in contraria versus, 180 qua tibi militia, cuius certamine pugnae	first I overthrew Lyrnessus' walls, 164 or when I won the isle of Tenedos 165 or Thebes (then under King Eetion) 166 and I drenched both with their own peoples' blood, 167 or when the river Caycus ran red 168 with slaughter of its people, or, when twice 169 Telephus felt the virtue of my spear. 170 On this field also, where such heaps lie slain, 171 my right hand surely has proved its true might; 172 and it is mighty.” 173 So he spoke of strength, 174 remembered. But as if in proof against 175 his own distrust, he hurled a spear against 176 Menoetes, a soldier in the Lycian ranks. 177 The sharp spear tore the victim's coat of mail 178 and pierced his breast beneath. Achilles, when 179 he saw his dying head strike on the earth 180 wrenched the same spear from out the reeking wound, 181 and said, “This is the hand, and this the spear 182 I conquered with; and I will use the same 183 against him who in luck escaped their power; 184 and the result should favor as I pray
12.181	181 cognitus, a quo sit victus, si victus ab ullo est.” 182 Tum senior: “Quamvis obstet mihi tarda vetustas, 183 multaque me fugiant primis spectata sub annis, 184 plura tamen memini. Nec, quae magis haereat ulla	185 the helpful gods.” 186 And, as he said such words, 187 in haste he hurled his ashen spear, again 188 at Cygnus. It went straight and struck unshunned. 189 Resounding on the shoulder of that foe, 190 it bounced back as if it hit a wall 191 or solid cliff. Yet when Achilles saw 192 just where the spear struck,

	185 pectore res nostro est inter bellique domique 186 acta tot. Ac siquem potuit spatiosa senectus 187 spectatorem operum multorum reddere, vixi 188 annos bis centum; nunc tertia vivitur aetas. 189 Clara decore fuit proles Elateia Caenis, 190 Thessalidum virgo pulcherrima, perque propinquas 191 perque tuas urbes (tibi enim popularis, Achille), 192 multorum frustra votis optata procorum. 193 Temptasset Peleus thalamos quoque forsitan illos, 194 sed iam aut contigerant illi conubia matris, 195 aut fuerant promissa, tuae. Nec Caenis in ullos 196 denupsit thalamos secretaque litora carpens 197 aequorei vim passa dei est (ita fama ferebat), 198 utque novae Veneris Neptunus gaudia cepit, 199 “sint tua vota licet” dixit “secura repulsae: 200 elige, quid voveas!” (eadem hoc quoque fama ferebat). 201 “Magnum” Caenis ait “facit haec iniuria votum; 202 tale pati iam posse nihil; da, femina ne sim: 203 omnia praestiteris.” Graviore novissima dixit 204 verba sono, poteratque viri vox illa videri, 205 sicut erat; nam iam voto deus aequoris alti 206 adnuerat dederatque super, ne saucius ullis 207 vulneribus fieri ferrove occumbere posset. 208 Munere laetus abit studiisque virilibus aevum 209 exigit Atracides Peneiaque arva pererrat. 210 Duxerat Hippodamen audaci Ixione natus,	Cygnus there 193 was stained with blood. He instantly rejoiced; 194 but vainly, for it was Menoetes' blood! 195 Then in a sudden rage, Achilles leaped 196 down headlong from his lofty chariot; 197 and, seeking his god-favored foe, he struck 198 in conflict fiercely, with his gleaming sword. 199 Although he saw that he had pierced both shield 200 and helmet through, he did not harm the foe— 201 his sword was even blunted on the flesh. 202 Achilles could not hold himself for rage, 203 but furious, with his sword-hilt and his shield 204 he battered wildly the uncovered face 205 and hollow-temples of his Trojan foe. 206 Cygnus gave way; Achilles rushed on him, 207 buffeting fiercely, so that he could not 208 recover from the shock. Fear seized upon 209 Cygnus, and darkness swam before his eyes. 210 Then, as he moved back with retreating steps, 211 a large stone hindered him and blocked his way. 212 His back pushed against this, Achilles seized 213 and dashed him violently to the ground. 214 Then pressing with buckler and hard knees the breast
12.211	211 nubigenasque feros positis ex ordine mensis 212 arboribus tecto discumbere iusserat antro. 213 Haemonii proceres aderant, aderamus et ipsi,	215 of Cygnus, he unlaced the helmet thongs, 216 wound them about the foeman's neck and drew 217 them tightly under his chin, till Cygnus' throat 218 could take no breath of life. Achilles rose 219 eager to strip his

	214 festaque confusa resonabat regia turba. 215 Ecce canunt Hymenaeon, et ignibus atria fumant, 216 cinctaque adest virgo matrum nuruumque caterva; 217 praesignis facie. Felicem diximus illa 218 coniuge Pirithoum: quod paene fefellimus omen. 219 Nam tibi, saevorum saevissime Centaurorum, 220 Euryte, quam vino pectus, tam virgine visa 221 ardet, et ebrietas geminata libidine regnat. 222 Protinus eversae turbant convivia mensae, 223 raptaturque comis per vim nova nupta prehensis. 224 Eurytus Hippodamen, alii, quam quisque probabant, 225 aut poterant, rapiunt, captaeque erat urbis imago. 226 Femineo clamore sonat domus: ocius omnes 227 surgimus, et primus “quae te vecordia,” Theseus 228 “Euryte, pulsat” ait, “qui me vivente lacessas 229 Pirithoum violesque duos ignarus in uno?” 230 231 232 Ille nihil contra (neque enim defendere verbis 233 talia facta potest), sed vindicis ora protervis 234 insequitur manibus generosaque pectora pulsat. 235 Forte fuit iuxta signis exstantibus asper 236 antiquus crater; quem vastum vastior ipso 237 sustulit Aegides adversaque misit in ora. 238 Sanguinis ille globos pariter cerebrumque merumque 239 vulnere et ore vomens madida resupinus harena 240 calcitrat. Ardescunt germani caede bimembres	conquered foe but found 220 his empty armor, for the god of ocean 221 had changed the victim into that white bird 222 whose name he lately bore. 223 There was a truce 224 for many days after this opening fight 225 while both sides resting, laid aside their arms. 226 A watchful guard patroled the Phrygian walls; 227 the Grecian trenches had their watchful guard. 228 Then, on a festal day, Achilles gave 229 the blood of a slain heifer to obtain 230 the favor of Athena for their cause. 231 The entrails burned upon the altar, while 232 the odor, grateful to the deities, 233 was mounting to the skies. When sacred rites 234 were done, a banquet for the heroes was 235 served on their tables. There the Grecian chiefs 236 reclined on couches; while they satisfied 237 themselves with roasted flesh, and banished cares: 238 and thirst with wine. Nor harp nor singing voice 239 nor long pipe made of boxwood pierced with holes, 240 delighted them. They talked of their own deeds 241 and valor, all that thrilling night: and even 242 the strength of enemies whom they had met 243 and overcome. What else could they admit 244 or think of, while the great Achilles spoke 245 or listened to them? But especially 246 the recent victory over Cygnus held 247 them ardent. Wonderful it seemed to them 248 that such a youth could be composed of flesh 249 not penetrable by the sharpest spear; 250 of flesh which blunted even hardened steel, 251 and never could be wounded. All the Greeks, 252 and even Achilles wondered at the thought.
12.241	241 certatimque omnes uno ore “arma, arma” loquuntur. 242 Vina dabant animos, et prima pocula pugna 243 missa volant fragilesque cadi curvique lebetes,	253 Then Nestor said to them: “During your time, 254 Cygnus has been the only man you knew 255 who could despise all weapons and whose flesh 256 could not be pierced by thrust of sword or spear. 257 But long ago I saw

	244 res epulis quondam, tum bello et caedibus aptae. 245 Primus Ophionides Amycus penetralia donis 246 haud timuit spoliare suis et primus ab aede 247 lampadibus densum rapuit funale coruscis, 248 elatumque alte, veluti qui candida tauri 249 rumpere sacrifica molitur colla securi, 250 inlisit fronti Lapithae Celadontis et ossa 251 non cognoscendo confusa relinquit in ore. 252 Exsiluere oculi, disiectisque ossibus oris 253 acta retro naris medioque est fixa palato. 254 Hunc pede convulso mensae Pellaeus acernae 255 stravit humi Pelates deiecto in pectora mento, 256 cumque atro mixtos sputantem sanguine dentes 257 vulnere Tartareas geminato mittit ad umbras. 258 Proximus ut steterat, spectans altaria vultu 259 fumida terribili “cur non” ait “utimur istis?” 260 cumque suis Gryneus inmanem sustulit aram 261 ignibus et medium Lapitharum iecit in agmen 262 depressitque duos, Brotean et Orion: Orio 263 mater erat Mycale, quam deduxisse canendo 264 saepe reluctantis constabat cornua lunae. 265 “Non inpune feres, teli modo copia detur!” 266 dixerat Exadius telique habet instar, in alta 267 quae fuerant pinu votivi cornua cervi. 268 Figitur hinc duplici Gryneus in lumina ramo 269 eruiturque oculos, quorum pars cornibus haeret, 270 pars fluit in barbam concretaque sanguine pendet.	another man 258 able to bear unharmed a thousand strokes, 259 Caeneus of Thessaly, Caeneus who lived 260 upon Mt. Othrys. He was famed in war 261 yet, strange to say, by birth he was a woman!” 262 Then all expressed the greatest wonderment, 263 and begged to hear the story of his life. 264 Achilles cried, “O eloquent old man! 265 The wisdom of our age! All of us wish 266 to hear, who was this Caeneus? Why was he 267 changed to the other sex? in what campaigns, 268 and in what wars was he so known to you? 269 Who conquered him, if any ever did?” 270 The aged man replied to them with care:— 271 “Although my great age is a harm to me, 272 and many actions of my early days 273 escape my memory; yet, most of them 274 are well remembered. Nothing of old days, 275 amid so many deeds of war and peace, 276 can be more firmly fixed upon my mind 277 than the strange story I shall tell of him. 278 “If long extent of years made anyone 279 a witness of most wonderful events 280 and many, truly I may say to you 281 that I have lived two hundred years; and now 282 have entered my third century.
12.271	271 Ecce rapit mediis flagrantem Rhoetus ab aris 272 pruniceum torrem dextraque a parte Charaxi	283 The daughter of Elatus, Caenis, was 284 remarkable for charm—most beautiful 285 of all Thessalian maidens —many sighed 286 for her in vain

	273 tempora perstringit fulvo protecta capillo. 274 Correpti rapida, veluti seges arida, flamma 275 arserunt crines, et vulnere sanguis inustus 276 terribilem stridore sonum dedit, ut dare ferrum 277 igne rubens plerumque solet, quod forcipe curva 278 cum faber eduxit, lacubus demittit: at illud 279 stridet et in tepida submersum sibilat unda. 280 Saucius hirsutis avidum de crinibus ignem 281 excutit inque umeros limen tellure revulsum 282 tollit, onus plaustri, quod ne permittat in hostem, 283 ipsa facit gravitas: socium quoque saxea moles 284 oppressit spatio stantem propiore Cometen. 285 Gaudia nec retinet Rhoetus: “Sic, conprecor,” inquit 286 “cetera sit fortis castrorum turba tuorum!” 287 semicremoque novat repetitum stipite vulnus, 288 terque quaterque gravi iuncturas verticis ictu 289 rupit, et in liquido sederunt ossa cerebro. 290 Victor ad Euagrum Corythumque Dryantaque transit; 291 e quibus ut prima tectus lanugine malas 292 procubuit Corythus, “puero quae gloria fuso 293 parta tibi est?” Euagrus ait, nec dicere Rhoetus 294 plura sinit rutilasque ferox in aperta loquentis 295 condidit ora viri perque os in pectora flammas. 296 Te quoque, saeve Drya, circum caput igne rotato 297 insequitur; sed non in te quoque constitit idem 298 exitus: adsiduae successu caedis ovantem, 299 qua iuncta est umero cervix, sude figis obusta. 300 Ingemuit duroque sudem vix osse revellit	through all the neighboring towns 287 and yours, Achilles, for that was her home. 288 But Peleus did not try to win her love, 289 for he was either married at that time 290 to your dear mother, or was pledged to her. 291 “Caenis never became the willing bride 292 of any suitor; but report declares, 293 while she was walking on a lonely shore, 294 the god of ocean saw and ravished her. 295 And in the joy of that love Neptune said, 296 ‘Request of me whatever you desire, 297 and nothing shall deny your dearest wish!’— 298 the story tells us that he made this pledge. 299 And Caenis said to Neptune, ‘The great wrong, 300 which I have suffered from you justifies 301 the wonderful request that I must make; 302 I ask that I may never suffer such 303 an injury again. Grant I may be 304 no longer woman, and I'll ask no more.’ 305 while she was speaking to him, the last words 306 of her strange prayer were uttered in so deep, 307 in such a manly tone, it seemed indeed 308 they must be from a man.—That was a fact: 309 Neptune not only had allowed her prayer 310 but made the new man proof against all wounds 311 of spear or sword. Rejoicing in the gift 312 he went his way as Caeneus Atracides,
12.301	301 Rhoetus et ipse suo madefactus sanguine fugit.	313 spent years in every manful exercise, 314 and roamed the plains of

	302 Fugit et Orneus Lycabasque et saucius armo 303 dexteriore Medon et cum Pisenore Thaumas, 304 quique pedum nuper certamine vicerat omnes 305 Mermeros (accepto tum vulnere tardius ibat!), 306 et Pholus et Melaneus et Abas praedator aprorum, 307 quique suis frustra bellum dissuaserat augur, 308 Astylos: ille etiam metuenti vulnera Nesso 309 “ne fuge! ad Herculeos” inquit “servaberis arcus.” 310 At non Eurynomus Lycidasque et Areos et Imbreus 311 effugere necem: quos omnes dextra Dryantis 312 perculit adversos. Adversum tu quoque, quamvis 313 terga fugae dederas, vulnus, Crenaee, tulisti; 314 nam grave respiciens inter duo lumina ferrum, 315 qua naris fronti committitur, accipis, imae. 316 In tanto fremitu cunctis sine fine iacebat 317 sopitus venis et inexperrectus Aphidas 318 languentique manu carchesia mixta tenebat, 319 fusus in Ossaeae villosis pellibus ursae. 320 Quem procul ut vidit frustra nulla arma moventem, 321 inserit amento digitos “miscenda” que dixit 322 “cum Styge vina bibes!” Phorbas; nec plura moratus 323 in iuvenem torsit iaculum, ferrataque collo 324 fraxinus, ut casu iacuit resupinus, adacta est. 325 Mors caruit sensu, plenoque e gutture fluxit 326 inque toros inque ipsa niger carchesia sanguis. 327 Vidi ego Petraeum conantem tollere terra 328 glandiferam quercum; quam dum conplexibus ambit 329 et quatit huc illuc labefactaque robora iactat, 330 lancea Pirithoi costis inmissa Petraei	northern Thessaly. 315 “The son of bold Ixion, Pirithous 316 wedding Hippodame, had asked as guests 317 the cloud-born centaurs to recline around 318 the ordered tables, in a cool cave, set 319 under some shading trees. Thessalian chiefs 320 were there and I myself was with them there. 321 The festal place resounded with the rout 322 in noisy clamor, singing nuptial verse; 323 and in the great room, filled with smoking fire, 324 the maiden came escorted by a crowd 325 of matrons and young married women; she 326 most beautiful of all that lovely throng. 327 “And so Pirithous, the fortunate son, 328 of bold Ixion, was so praised by all, 329 for his pure joy and lovely wife, 330 it seemed his very blessings must have led 331 to fatal harm: for savage Eurytus, 332 wildest of the wild centaurs, now inflamed 333 with sudden envy, drunkenness, and lust, 334 upset the tables and made havoc there 335 so dreadful, that the banquet suddenly 336 was changed from love to uproar. Seized by the hair, 337 the bride was violently dragged away. 338 When Eurytus caught up Hippodame 339 each one of all the centaurs took at will 340 the maid or matron that he longed for most. 341 The palace, seeming like a captured town, 342 resounded with affrighted shrieks of women. 343 At once we all sprang up. And Theseus cried, 344 “What madness, Eurytus, has driven you

12.331	331 pectora cum duro luctantia robore fixit. 332 Pirithoi cecidisse Lycum virtute ferebant, 333 Pirithoi virtute Chromin. Sed uterque minorem 334 victori titulum quam Dictys Helopsque dederunt: 335 fixus Helops iaculo, quod pervia tempora fecit 336 et missum a dextra laevam penetravit ad aurem; 337 Dictys, ab ancipiti delapsus acumine montis, 338 dum fugit instantem trepidans Ixione natum, 339 decidit in praeceps et pondere corporis ornum 340 ingentem fregit suaque induit ilia fractae. 341 Victor adest Aphareus saxumque e monte revulsum 342 mittere conatur: mittentem stipite querno 343 occupat Aegides cubitique ingentia frangit 344 ossa; nec ulterius dare corpus inutile leto 345 aut vacat aut curat tergoque Bienoris alti 346 insilit haud solito quemquam portare nisi ipsum, 347 opposuitque genu costis prensamque sinistra 348 caesariem retinens vultum minitantiaque ora 349 robore nodoso praeduraque tempora fregit: 350 robore Nedymnum iaculatoremque Lycopen 351 sternit et inmissa protectum pectora barba 352 Hippason et summis exstantem Riphea silvis 353 Thereaque, Haemoniis qui prensos montibus ursos 354 ferre domum vivos indignantesque solebat. 355 Haud tulit utentem pugnae successibus ultra 356 Thesea Demoleon: solido divellere dumo 357 annosam pinum magno molimine temptat; 358 quod quia non potuit, praefractam misit in hostem. 359 Sed procul a telo Theseus veniente recessit	345 to this vile wickedness! While I have life, 346 you dare attack Pirithous. You know 347 not what you do, for one wrong injures both!’ 348 The valiant hero did not merely talk: 349 he pushed them off as they were pressing on, 350 and rescued her whom Eurytus had seized. 351 Since Eurytus could not defend such deeds 352 with words, he turned and beat with violent hands 353 the face of him who saved the bride and struck 354 his generous breast. By chance, an ancient bowl 355 was near at hand. This rough with figures carved, 356 the son of Aegeus caught and hurled it full 357 in that vile centaur's face. He, spouting out 358 thick gouts of blood, and bleeding from his wounds — 359 his brains and wine mixed,— kicked the blood-soaked sand. 360 His double membered centaur brothers, wild 361 with passion at his death, all shouted out, 362 ‘To arms! to arms!’ Their courage raised by wine! 363 In their first onset, hurled cups flew about, 364 and shattered wine casks, hollow basins—things 365 before adapted to a banquet, now 366 for death and carnage in the furious fight. 367 Amycus first (Opinion's son) began to spoil 368 the inner sanctuary of its gifts. 369 He snatched up from that shrine a chandelier, 370 adorned with glittering lamps, and lifted high, 371 with all the force of one who strives to break 372 the bull s white neck with sacrificial axe, 373 he dashed it at the head of Celadon, 374 one of the Lapithae, and crushed his skull

	360 Pallados admonitu: credi sic ipse volebat.
12.361	361 Non tamen arbor iners cecidit; nam Crantoris alti 362 abscidit iugulo pectusque umerumque sinistrum. 363 Armiger ille tui fuerat genitoris, Achille, 364 quem Dolopum rector, bello superatus, Amyntor 365 Aeacidae dederat pacis pignusque fidemque. 366 Hunc procul ut foedo disiectum vulnere Peleus 367 vidit, “at inferias, iuvenum gratissime Crantor, 368 accipe” ait, validoque in Demoleonta lacerto 369 fraxineam misit, mentis quoque viribus, hastam. 370 Quae laterum cratem praerupit et ossibus haerens 371 intremuit. Trahit ille manu sine cuspide lignum 372 (id quoque vix sequitur), cuspis pulmone retenta est. 373 Ipse dolor vires animo dabat: aeger in hostem 374 erigitur pedibusque virum proculcat equinis. 375 Excipit ille ictus galea clipeoque sonanti 376 defensatque umeros praetentaque sustinet arma 377 perque armos uno duo pectora perforat ictu. 378 Ante tamen leto dederat Phlegraeon et Hylen 379 eminus, Iphinoum conlato Marte Claninque; 380 additur his Dorylas, qui tempora tecta gerebat 381 pelle lupi saevique vicem praestantia teli 382 cornua vara boum multo rubefacta cruore. 383 Huic ego (nam vires animus dabat) “adspice,” dixi, 384 “quantum concedant nostro tua cornua ferro!” 385 et iaculum torsi; quod cum vitare nequiret, 386 opposuit dextram passurae vulnera fronti: 387 adfixa est cum fronte manus. Fit clamor, at illum 388 haerentem Peleus et acerbo vulnere victum	375 into the features of his face. His eyes 376 leaped from his sockets, and the shattered bones 377 of his smashed face gave way so that his nose 378 was driven back and fastened in his throat. 379 But Belates of Pella tore away 380 a table-leg of maple wood and felled 381 Amycus to the ground; his sunken chin 382 cast down upon his breast; and, as he spat 383 his teeth out mixed with blood, a second blow 384 despatched him to the shades of Tartarus. 385 “Gryneus, seeing a smoking altar, cried, 386 ‘Good use for this,’ with which words he raised up 387 that heavy, blazing altar. Hurling it 388 into the middle of the Lapithae, 389 he struck down Broteas and Orius: 390 Mycale, mother of that Orius, 391 was famous for her incantations, 392 which she had often used to conjure down 393 the shining twin-horns of the unwilling moon. 394 Exadius threatened, ‘You shall not escape! 395 Let me but have a weapon!’ And with that, 396 he whirled the antlers of a votive stag, 397 which he found there, hung on a tall pine-tree; 398 and with that double-branching horn he pierced 399 the eyes of Gryneus, and he gouged them out. 400 One eye stuck to the horn; the other rolled 401 down on his beard, to which it strictly clung 402 in dreadful clotted gore. 403 Then Rhoetus snatched 404 a blazing brand of plum-wood from an altar

	389 (stabat enim propior) mediam ferit ense sub alvum. 390 Prosiluit terraque ferox sua viscera traxit
12.391	391 tractaque calcavit calcataque rupit et illis 392 crura quoque inpediit et inani concidit alvo. 393 Nec te pugnantem tua, Cyllare, forma redemit, 394 si modo naturae formam concedimus illi: 395 barba erat incipiens, barbae color aureus, aurea 396 ex umeris medios coma dependebat in armos. 397 Gratus in ore vigor; cervix umerique manusque 398 pectoraque artificum laudatis proxima signis, 399 et quacumque vir est; nec equi mendosa sub illo 400 deteriorque viro facies: da colla caputque, 401 Castore dignus erit; sic tergum sessile, sic sunt 402 pectora celsa toris. Totus pice nigrior atra; 403 candida cauda tamen, color est quoque cruribus albus. 404 Multae illum petiere sua de gente, sed una 405 abstulit Hylonome, qua nulla decentior inter 406 semiferos altis habitavit femina silvis. 407 Haec et blanditiis et amando et amare fatendo 408 Cyllaron una tenet; cultus quoque, quantus in illis 409 esse potest membris, ut sit coma pectine levis, 410 ut modo rore maris, modo se violave rosave 411 inplicet, interdum candentia lilia gestet, 412 bisque die lapsis Pagasaeae vertice silvae 413 fontibus ora lavet, bis flumine corpora tingat, 414 nec nisi quae deceant electarumque ferarum 415 aut umero aut lateri praetendat vellera laevo. 416 Par amor est illis: errant in montibus una, 417 antra simul subeunt; et tum Lapitheia tecta	405 and whirling it upon the right, smashed through 406 the temples of Charaxus, wonderful 407 with golden hair. Seized by the violent flames, 408 his yellow locks burned fiercely, as a field 409 of autumn grain; and even the scorching blood 410 gave from the sore wound a terrific noise 411 as a red-hot iron in pincers which the smith 412 lifts out and plunges in the tepid pool, 413 hissing and sizzling. Charaxus shook 414 the fire from his burnt locks; and heaved up on 415 his shoulders a large threshold stone torn from 416 the ground—a weight sufficient for a team 417 of oxen. The vast weight impeded him, 418 so that it could not even touch his foe— 419 and yet, the massive stone did hit his friend, 420 Cometes, who was standing near to him, 421 and crushed him down. Then Rhoetus, crazed with joy, 422 exulting yelled, ‘I pray that all of you 423 may be so strong!’ Wielding his half-burnt stake 424 with heavy blows again and again, he broke 425 the sutures of his enemy's skull, until 426 the bones were mingled with his oozing brains. 427 “Victorious, then rushed he upon Evagrus, 428 and Corythus and Dryas. First of these 429 was youthful Corythus, whose cheeks were then 430 just covered with soft down. When he fell dead, 431 Evagrus cried, ‘What glory do you get, 432 killing a boy?’ But Rhoetus did not give 433 him time for uttering one word more. He pushed 434 the red hot stake into the foeman's mouth,

	418 intrarant pariter, pariter fera bella gerebant. 419 Auctor in incerto est: iaculum de parte sinistra 420 venit et inferius qua collo pectora subsunt, 12.421	421 Cyllare, te fixit; parvo cor vulnere laesum 422 corpore cum toto post tela educta refrixit. 423 Protinus Hylonome morientes excipit artus 424 inpositaque manu vulnus fovet oraque ad ora 425 admovet atque animae fugienti obsistere temptat. 426 Ut videt exstinctum, dictis, quae clamor ad aures 427 arcuit ire meas, telo, quod inhaeserat illi, 428 incubuit moriensque suum conplexa maritum est. 429 Ante oculos stat et ille meos, qui sena leonum 430 vinxerat inter se conexis vellera nodis, 431 Phaeocomes, hominemque simul protectus equumque. 432 Codice qui misso, quem vix iuga bina moverent, 433 Tectaphon Oleniden a summo vertice fregit. 434 435 436 437 438 439 Ast ego, dum parat hic armis nudare iacentem, 440 (scit tuus hoc genitor) gladium spoliantis in ima 441 ilia demisi. Chthonius quoque Teleboasque 442 ense iacent nostro: ramum prior ille bifurcum 443 gesserat, hic iaculum; iaculo mihi vulnera fecit: 444 signa vides! adparet adhuc vetus inde cicatrix. 445 Tunc ego debueram capienda ad Pergama mitti, 446 tum poteram magni, si non superare, morari 447 Hectoris arma meis! Illo sed tempore nullus, 448 aut puer Hector erat, nunc me mea deficit aetas. 449 Quid tibi victorem gemini	435 while he still spoke, and down into his lungs. 436 He then pursued the savage Dryas, while 437 whirling the red fire fast about his head; 438 but not with like success, for, while he still 439 rejoiced in killings, Dryas turned and pierced 440 him with a stake where neck and shoulder meet. 441 “Rhoetus groaned and with a great effort pulled 442 the stake out from the bone, then fled away, 443 drenched in his blood. And Orneus followed him. 444 Lycabas fled, and Medon with a wound 445 in his right shoulder. Thaumas and Pisenor 446 and Mermerus fled with them. Mermerus, 447 who used to excell all others in a race, 448 ran slowly, crippled by a recent wound. 449 Pholus and Melaneus ran for their lives 450 and with them Abas, hunter of wild boars 451 and Asbolus, the augur, who in vain 452 had urged his friends to shun that hapless fight. 453 As Nessus joined the rout, he said to him, 454 ‘You need not flee, for you shall be reserved 455 a victim for the bow of Hercules!’ 456 but neither Lycidas, Eurynomus 457 nor Areos, nor Imbreus had escaped 458 from death: for all of these the strong right hand 459 of Dryas pierced, as they confronted him. 460 Crenaeus there received a wound in front. 461 Although he turned in flight, as he looked back, 462 a heavy javelin between his eyes 463 pierced through him, where his nose and forehead joined.

	Periphanta Pyraethi, 450 Ampyca quid referam, qui quadrupedantis Echecli
12.451	451 fixit in adverso cornum sine cuspide vultu? 452 Vecte Pelethronium Macareus in pectus adacto 453 stravit Erigdupum, memini et venabula condi 454 inguine Nesseis manibus coniecta Cymeli. 455 Nec tu credideris tantum cecinisse futura 456 Ampyciden Mopsum: Mopso iaculante biformis 457 accubuit frustraque loqui temptavit Hodites 458 ad mentum lingua mentoque ad guttura fixo. 459 Quinque neci Caeneus dederat, Styphelumque Bromumque 460 Antimachumque Elymumque securiferumque Pyraechmen: 461 vulnera non memini, numerum nomenque notavi. 462 Provolat Emathii spoliis armatus Alesi, 463 quem dederat leto, membris et corpore Latreus 464 maximus: huic aetas inter iuvenemque senemque, 465 vis iuvenalis erat, variabant tempora cani. 466 Qui clipeo gladioque Macedoniaque sarisa 467 conspicuus faciemque obversus in agmen utrumque 468 armaque concussit certumque equitavit in orbem 469 verbaque tot fudit vacuas animosus in auras: 470 “Et te, Caeni, feram? Nam tu mihi femina semper, 471 tu mihi Caenis eris. Nec te natalis origo 472 commonuit, mentemque subit, quo praemia facto 473 quaque viri falsam speciem mercede parasti? 474 Quid sis nata, vide, vel quid sis passa, columque, 475 i, cape cum calathis et stamina pollice torque: 476 bella relinque viris.” Iactanti talia Caeneus 477 extentum cursu missa latus eruit hasta, 478 qua vir equo commissus erat. Furit	464 “In all this uproar, Aphidas lay flat, 465 in endless slumber from the wine he drank, 466 incessant, and his nerveless hand still held 467 the cup of mixed wine, as he lay full stretched, 468 upon a shaggy bear-skin from Mount Ossa. 469 When Phorbas saw him, harmless in that sleep, 470 he laid his fingers in his javelin's thong, 471 and shouted loudly, ‘Mix your wine, down there, 472 with waters of the Styx!’ And stopping talk, 473 let fly his javelin at the sleeping youth— 474 the ashen shaft, iron-tipped, was driven through 475 his neck, exposed, as he by chance lay there— 476 his head thrown back. He did not even feel 477 a touch of death—and from his deep-pierced throat 478 his crimson blood flowed out upon the couch, 479 and in the wine-bowl still grasped in his hand. 480 “I saw Petraeus when he strove to tear 481 up from the earth, an acorn-bearing oak. 482 And, while he struggled with it, back and forth, 483 and was just ready to wrench up the trunk, 484 Pirithous hurled a well aimed spear at him, 485 transfixed his ribs, and pinned his body tight, 486 writhing, to that hard oak: and Lycus fell 487 and Chromis fell, before Pirithous. 488 “They gave less glory to the conqueror 489 than Helops or than Dictys. Helops was 490 killed by a javelin, which pierced his temples 491 from the right side, clear through to his left ear. 492 And Dictys, running in a desperate haste, 493 hoping in vain, to escape Ixion's son, ille dolore 479 nudaque Phyllei iuvenis ferit ora sarisa. 480 Non secus haec resilit, quam tecti a culmine grando, 12.481	481 aut siquis parvo feriat cava tympana saxo. 482 Comminus adgreditur laterique recondere duro 483 luctatur gladium: gladio loca pervia non sunt. 484 “Haud tamen effugies! medio iugulaberis ense, 485 quandoquidem mucro est hebes” inquit et in latus ensem 486 obliquat longaque amplectitur ilia dextra. 487 Plaga facit gemitus in corpore marmoris icti, 488 fractaque dissiluit percusso lammina callo. 489 Ut satis inlaesos miranti praebuit artus, 490 “nunc age,” ait Caeneus, “nostro tua corpora ferro 491 temptemus!” capuloque tenus demisit in armos 492 ensem fatiferum caecumque in viscera movit 493 versavitque manu vulnusque in vulnere fecit. 494 Ecce ruunt vasto rabidi clamore bimembres 495 telaque in hunc omnes unum mittuntque feruntque. 496 Tela retusa cadunt: manet inperfossus ab omni 497 inque cruentatus Caeneus Elateius ictu. 498 Fecerat attonitos nova res. “Heu dedecus ingens!” 499 Monychus exclamat, “populus superamur ab uno 500 vixque viro: quamquam ille vir est, nos segnibus actis 501 quod fuit ille, sumus! Quid membra inmania prosunt? 502 Quid geminae vires et quod fortissima rerum 503 in nobis duplex natura animalia iunxit? 504 Nec nos matre dea, nec nos Ixione natos 505 esse reor, qui tantus erat, Iunonis ut altae 506 spem caperet: nos semimari superamur ab hoste! 507 Saxa trabesque super totosque	494 slipped on the steep edge of a precipice; 495 and, as he fell down headlong crashed into 496 the top of a huge ash-tree, which impaled 497 his dying body on its broken spikes. 498 “Aphareus, eager to avenge him tried 499 to lift a rock from that steep mountain side; 500 but as he heaved, the son of Aegeus struck 501 him squarely with an oaken club; and smashed, 502 and broke the huge bones of that centaur's arm. 503 He has no time, and does not want to give 504 that useless foe to death. He leaps upon 505 the back of tall Bienor, never trained 506 to carry riders, and he fixed his knees 507 firm in the centaur's ribs, and holding tight 508 to the long hair, seized by his left hand, struck 509 and shattered the hard features and fierce face 510 and bony temples with his club of gnarled 511 strong oak. And with it, he struck to the ground 512 Nedymnus and Lycopes, dart expert, 513 and Hippasus, whose beard hid all his breast. 514 And Rhipheus taller than the highest trees 515 and Thereus, who would carry home alive 516 the raging bears, caught in Thessalian hills. 517 Demoleon could no longer stand and look 518 on Theseus and his unrestrained success. 519 He struggled with vast effort to tear up 520 an old pine, trunk and all, with its long roots, 521 and, failing shortly in that first attempt, 522 he broke it off and hurled it at his foe. 523 But Theseus saw the pine tree in its flight

	involvite montes 508 vivacemque animam missis elidite silvis! 509 silva premat fauces, et erit pro vulnere pondus.” 510 Dixit et insanis deiectam viribus austri 12.511	511 forte trabem nactus validum coniecit in hostem 512 exemplumque fuit, parvoque in tempore nudus 513 arboris Othrys erat, nec habebat Pelion umbras. 514 Obrutus inmani tumulo sub pondere Caeneus 515 aestuat arboreo congestaque robora duris 516 fert umeris. Sed enim postquam super ora caputque 517 crevit onus neque habet, quas ducat, spiritus auras, 518 deficit interdum, modo se super aera frustra 519 tollere conatur iactasque evolvere silvas, 520 interdumque movet, veluti, quam cernimus, ecce, 521 ardua si terrae quatiatur motibus Ide. 522 Exitus in dubio est: alii sub inania corpus 523 Tartara detrusum silvarum mole ferebant; 524 abnuit Ampycides medioque ex aggere fulvis 525 vidit avem pennis liquidas exire sub auras, 526 quae mihi tum primum, tunc est conspecta supremum. 527 Hanc ubi lustrantem leni sua castra volatu 528 Mopsus et ingenti circum clangore sonantem 529 adspexit pariterque animis oculisque secutus 530 “o salve” dixit, “Lapithaeae gloria gentis, 531 maxime vir quondam, sed nunc avis unica, Caeneu!” 532 Credita res auctore suo est: dolor addidit iram, 533 oppressumque aegre tulimus tot ab hostibus unum; 534 nec prius abstitimus ferro exercere dolorem, 535 quam data pars leto, partem fuga noxque removit.” 536 Haec inter Lapithas et	524 and, warned by Pallas, got beyond its range— 525 his boast was, Pallas had directed him! 526 And yet, the missle was not launched in vain. 527 It sheared the left shoulder and the breast 528 from tall Crantor. He, Achilles, was 529 your father's armor bearer and was given 530 by King Amyntor, when he sued for peace. 531 “When Peleus at a distance saw him torn 532 and mangled, he exclaimed, ‘At least receive 533 this sacrifice, O Crantor! most beloved! 534 Dearest of young men!’ And with sturdy arm 535 and all his strength of soul as well, he hurled 536 his ashen lance against Demoleon, 537 which piercing through his shivered ribs, hung there 538 and quivered in the bones. The centaur wrenched 539 the wooden shaft out, with his frenzied hands, 540 but could not move the pointed head, which stuck 541 within his lungs. His very anguish gave 542 him such a desperation, that he rose 543 against his foe and trampled and beat down 544 the hero with his hoofs, Peleus allowed 545 the blows to fall on helm and ringing shield. 546 Protected so, he watched his time and thrust 547 up through the centaur's shoulder. By one stroke 548 he pierced two breasts, where horse and man-form met. 549 Before this, Peleus with the spear had killed 550 both Myles and Phlegraeus and with the sword 551 Iphinous and Clanis. Now he killed 552 Dorylas, who was clad in a wolfskin cap 553 and fought with curving bull's horns dripping blood.

	semihomines Centauros 537 proelia Tlepolemus Pylio referente dolorem 538 praeteriti Alcidae tacito non pertulit ore 539 atque ait: “Herculeae mirum est oblivia laudis 540 acta tibi, senior! Certe mihi saepe referre
12.541	541 nubigenas domitos a se pater esse solebat.” 542 Tristis ad haec Pylius: “Quid me meminisse malorum 543 cogis et obductos oculis rescindere luctus 544 inque tuum genitorem odium offensasque fateri? 545 Ille quidem maiora fide, di! gessit et orbem 546 inplevit meritis, quod mallem posse negare: 547 sed neque Deiphobum nec Polydamanta nec ipsum 548 Hectora laudamus—quis enim laudaverit hostem? 549 Ille tuus genitor Messenia moenia quondam 550 stravit et inmeritas urbes Elimque Pylumque 551 diruit inque meos ferrum flammamque penatis 552 inpulit, utque alios taceam, quos ille peremit, 553 bis sex Nelidae fuimus, conspecta iuventus: 554 bis sex Herculeis ceciderunt me minus uno 555 viribus; atque alios vinci potuisse ferendum est: 556 mira Periclymeni mors est, cui posse figuras 557 sumere, quas vellet, rursusque reponere sumptas 558 Neptunus dederat, Nelei sanguinis auctor. 559 Hic ubi nequiquam est formas variatus in omnes, 560 vertitur in faciem volucris, quae fulmina curvis 561 ferre solet pedibus divum gratissima regi; 562 Viribus usus avis pennis rostroque redunco 563 hamatisque viri laniaverat unguibus ora: 564 tendit in hunc nimium certos Tirynthius arcus 565 atque inter nubes sublimia	554 “To him I said, for courage gave me strength, 555 ‘Your horns! how much inferior to my steel!’— 556 and threw my spear. Since he could not avoid 557 the gleaming point, he held up his right hand 558 to shield his forehead from the threatened wound. 559 His hand was pierced and pinned against his forehead. 560 He shouted madly. Peleus, near him while 561 he stood there pinned and helpless with his wound, 562 struck him with sharp sword in the belly deep. 563 He leaped forth fiercely, as he trailed his bowels 564 upon the ground, with his entangled legs 565 treading upon them, bursting them, he fell 566 with empty belly, lifeless to the earth. 567 “Cyllarus, beauty did not save your life — 568 if beauty is in any of your tribe— 569 your golden beard was in its early growth, 570 your golden hair came flowing to your shoulders. 571 in your bright face there was a pleasing glance. 572 The neck and shoulders and the hands and breast,: 573 and every aspect of his human form 574 resembled those admired statues which 575 our gifted artists carve. Even the shape 576 of the fine horse beneath the human form 577 was perfect too. Give him the head and neck 578 of a full-blooded horse, and he would seem 579 a steed for Castor, for his back was shaped 580 so comfortable to be sat upon 581 and muscle swelled upon his arching chest. 582 His lustrous body was as black as pitch, 583 and yet his legs and flowing tail

	membra ferentem 566 pendentemque ferit, lateri qua iungitur ala; 567 nec grave vulnus erat sed rupti vulnere nervi 568 deficiunt motumque negant viresque volandi. 569 Decidit in terram, non concipientibus auras 570 infirmis pennis, et qua levis haeserat alae, 12.571	571 corporis adfixi pressa est gravitate sagitta 572 perque latus summum iugulo est exacta sinistro. 573 Nunc videor debere tui praeconia rebus 574 Herculis, o Rhodiae rector pulcherrime classis? 575 Nec tamen ulterius, quam fortia facta silendo 576 ulciscor fratres: solida est mihi gratia tecum.” 577 Haec postquam dulci Neleius edidit ore, 578 a sermone senis repetito munere Bacchi 579 surrexere toris: nox est data cetera somno. 580 At deus, aequoreas qui cuspide temperat undas, 581 in volucrem corpus nati Phaethontida versum 582 mente dolet patria saevumque perosus Achillem 583 exercet memores plus quam civiliter iras, 584 iamque fere tracto duo per quinquennia bello 585 talibus intonsum conpellat Sminthea dictis: 586 “O mihi de fratris longe gratissime natis, 587 inrita qui mecum posuisti moenia Troiae, 588 ecquid, ubi has iamiam casuras adspicis arces, 589 ingemis? Aut ecquid tot defendentia muros 590 milia caesa doles? Ecquid, ne persequar omnes, 591 Hectoris umbra subit circum sua Pergama tracti? 592 cum tamen ille ferox belloque cruentior ipso 593 vivit adhuc, operis nostri populator, Achilles. 594 Det mihi se! faxo, triplici quid	584 were white as snow. 585 Many a female of his kind 586 loved him, but only Hylonome gained 587 his love. There was no other centaur maid 588 so beautiful as she within the woods. 589 By coaxing ways she had won Cyllarus, 590 by loving and confessing love. By daintiness, 591 so far as that was possible in one 592 of such a form, she held his love; for now 593 she smoothed her long locks with a comb; and now 594 she decked herself with rosemary and now 595 with violets or with roses in her hair; 596 and sometimes she wore lilies, white as snow; 597 and twice each day she bathed her lovely face, 598 in the sweet stream that falls down from the height 599 of wooded Pagasa; and daily, twice 600 she dipped her body in the stream. She wore 601 upon her shoulders and left side a skin, 602 greatly becoming, of selected worth. 603 “Their love was equal, and together they 604 would wander over mountain-sides, and rest 605 together in cool caves; and so it was, 606 they went together to that palace-cave, 607 known to the Lapithae. Together they 608 fought fiercely in this battle, side by side. 609 Thrown by an unknown hand, a javelin pierced 610 Cyllarus, just below the fatal spot 611 where the chest rises to the neck—his heart, 612 though only slightly wounded, grew quite cold, 613 and his whole body felt cold, afterwards, cuspide possim, 595 sentiat; at quoniam concurrere comminus hosti 596 non datur, occulta necopinum perde sagitta!” 597 Adnuit atque animo pariter patruique suoque 598 Delius indulgens nebula velatus in agmen 599 pervenit Iliacum mediaque in caede virorum 600 rara per ignotos spargentem cernit Achivos 12.601	601 tela Parim fassusque deum “Quid spicula perdis 602 sanguine plebis?” ait. “Siqua est tibi cura tuorum, 603 vertere in Aeaciden caesosque ulciscere fratres!” 604 Dixit et ostendens sternentem Troica ferro 605 corpora Peliden, arcus obvertit in illum 606 certaque letifera direxit spicula dextra. 607 Quod Priamus gaudere senex post Hectora posset, 608 hoc fuit: ille igitur tantorum victor, Achille, 609 victus es a timido Graiae raptore maritae! 610 At si femineo fuerat tibi Marte cadendum, 611 Thermodontiaca malles cecidisse bipenni! 612 Iam timor ille Phrygum, decus et tutela Pelasgi 613 nominis, Aeacides, caput insuperabile bello, 614 arserat: armarat deus idem idemque cremabat; 615 iam cinis est, et de tam magno restat Achille 616 nescio quid parvam, quod non bene conpleat urnam: 617 at vivit totum quae gloria conpleat orbem! 618 Haec illi mensura viro respondet, et hac est 619 par sibi Pelides nec inania Tartara sentit. 620 Ipse etiam, ut, cuius fuerit, cognoscere posses 621 bella movet clipeus, deque armis arma feruntur. 622 Non ea Tydides, non audet Oileos Aiax, 623 non minor Atrides, non bello maior	614 as quickly as the weapon was drawn out. 615 Then Hylonome held in her embrace 616 the dying body; fondled the dread wound 617 and, fixing her lips closely to his lips 618 endeavored to hold back his dying breath. 619 But soon she saw that he indeed was dead. 620 With mourning words, which clamor of the fight 621 prevented me from hearing, she threw herself 622 on the spear that pierced her Cyllarus and fell 623 upon his breast, embracing him in death. 624 “Another sight still comes before my eyes, 625 the centaur Phaeocomes with his log. 626 He wore six lion skins well wrapped around 627 his body, and with fixed connecting knots 628 they covered him, both horse and man. He hurled 629 a trunk two yokes of oxen scarce could move 630 and struck the hapless son of Olenus 631 a crushing blow upon the head. The broad 632 round dome was shattered, and his dying brains 633 oozed out through hollow nostrils, mouth, and ears, 634 as curdled milk seeps down through oaken twigs; 635 or other liquors, crushed out under weights, 636 flow through a well-pierced sieve and, thick, 637 squeeze out through numerous holes. 638 As he began 639 to spoil his victim—and your father can 640 affirm the truth of this—I thrust my sword 641 deep in the wretch's groin. Chthonius, too, 642 and Teleboas fell there by my sword. 643 The former had a two-pronged stick as his 644 sole weapon, and the other had a spear, 645 with which the wounded me. You see the scar. 646 The old scar still is surely visible! 647 “Those were my days of youth and strength, and then 648 I ought to have warred against the citadel 649 of Pergama. I could have checked, or even 650

	et aevo 624 poscere, non alii: solis Telamone creato 625 Laerteque fuit tantae fiducia laudis. 626 A se Tantalides onus invidiamque removit 627 Argolicosque duces mediis considere castris 628 iussit et arbitrium litis traiecit in omnes.	vanquished, the arms of Hector: but, alas, 651 Hector had not been born, or was perhaps 652 a boy. Old age has dulled my youthful strength. 653 What use is it, to speak of Periphas, 13.1	1 Consedere duces, et vulgi stante corona 2 surgit ad hos clipei dominus septemplicis Aiax, 3 utque erat impatiens irae, Sigeia torvo 4 litora respexit classemque in litore vultu 5 intendensque manus “agimus, pro Iuppiter!” inquit 6 “ante rates causam, et mecum confertur Ulixes! 7 At non Hectoreis dubitavit cedere flammis, 8 quas ego sustinui, quas hac a classe fugavi. 9 Tutius est igitur fictis contendere verbis, 10 quam pugnare manu! Sed nec mihi dicere promptum, 11 nec facere est isti: quantumque ego Marte feroci 12 quantum acie valeo, tantum valet iste loquendo. 13 Nec memoranda tamen vobis mea facta, Pelasgi, 14 esse reor: vidistis enim. Sua narret Ulixes, 15 quae sine teste gerit, quorum nox conscia sola est. 16 Praemia magna peto, fateor; sed demit honorem 17 aemulus: Aiaci non est tenuisse superbum, 18 sit licet hoc ingens, quidquid speravit Ulixes. 19 Iste tulit pretium iam nunc temptaminis huius, 20 quod, cum victus erit, mecum certasse feretur. 21 Atque ego, si virtus in me dubitabilis esset, 22 nobilitate potens essem, Telamone creatus, 23 moenia qui forti Troiana sub Hercule cepit 24 litoraque intravit Pagasaea Colcha	1 The chiefs were seated, and the soldiers form 2 a circle round them. Then Ajax, the approved 3 lord of the seven-fold shield, arose and spoke. 4 Impatient in his wrath, he looked with stern, 5 set features, out over Sigaean shores, 6 and over the fleet of ships upon the beach, 7 and, stretching out his hands, he said, 8 “We plead, 9 O Jupiter, our cause before the ships,— 10 Ulysses vies with me! He did not shrink 11 from giving way before the flames of Hector, 12 when I withstood them and I saved the fleet. 13 'Tis safer then to fight with lying words 14 than with his hands. I am not prompt to speak, 15 nor he to act. I am as good in war 16 and deadly battle as he is in talk. 17 Pelasgians, I do not suppose my deeds 18 must here be mentioned: you have witnessed them 19 but let Ulysses tell of deeds which he 20 performed without a witness and which Night 21 alone is conscious of. I own the prize 22 we seek is great, but such a rival makes 23 it small. To Ajax there s no cause for pride 24 in having any prize, however great, 25 for which Ulysses hoped. But he has won 26 reward enough already. He can boast, 27 when vanquished, that he strove with me. 28 “I, even if my merit were in doubt 29 should still excell in birth. I am the son 30 of Telamon, who with great Hercules carina. 25 Aeacus huic pater est, qui iura silentibus illic 26 reddit, ubi Aeoliden saxum grave Sisyphon urget. 27 Aeacon agnoscit summus prolemque fatetur 28 Iuppiter esse suam: sic a Iove tertius Aiax. 29 Nec tamen haec series in causam prosit, Achivi, 30 si mihi cum magno non est communis Achille:

13.31	31 frater erat, fraterna peto! Quid sanguine cretus 32 Sisyphio furtisque et fraude simillimus illi 33 inseris Aeacidis alienae nomina gentis? 34 An quod in arma prior nulloque sub indice veni, 35 arma neganda mihi, potiorque videbitur ille, 36 ultima qui cepit detrectavitque furore 37 militiam ficto, donec sollertior isto 38 et sibi inutilior timidi commenta retexit 39 Naupliades animi vitataque traxit ad arma? 40 Optima num sumat, quia sumere noluit ulla: 41 nos inhonorati et donis patruelibus orbi, 42 obtulimus quia nos ad prima pericula, simus? 43 Atque utinam aut verus furor ille, aut creditus esset, 44 nec comes hic Phrygias umquam venisset ad arces 45 hortator scelerum. Non te, Poeantia proles, 46 expositum Lemnos nostro cum crimine haberet! 47 Qui nunc, ut memorant, silvestribus abditus antris 48 saxa moves gemitu Laertiadaeque precaris 49 quae meruit: quae, si di sunt, non vana precaris! 50 Et nunc ille eadem nobis iuratus in arma, 51 heu! pars una ducum, quo successore sagittae 52 Herculis utuntur, fractus morboque fameque 53 velaturque aliturque avibus, volucresque petendo	31 brought low the power of Troy and in the ship 32 of Jason voyaged even to the Colchian shores. 33 His father, Aeacus, now is a judge 34 among the silent shades—where Sisyphus 35 toils and is mocked forever with the stone. 36 Great Jove himself calls Aeacus his son. 37 Thus, Ajax is the third from Jupiter. 38 But, Greeks, let not this line of my descent 39 avail me, if I do not share it with 40 my cousin, great Achilles. I demand 41 these arms now due me as a cousin. Why 42 should this one, from the blood of Sisyphus, 43 and like him for his thefts and frauds, intrude 44 the names of that loathed family upon 45 honored descendants of brave Aeacus? 46 “Will you deny me arms because I took 47 arms earlier, no man prompting me, 48 and call this man the better, who last of all 49 took up arms, and, pretending he was mad, 50 declined war, till the son of Naplius 51 more shrewd than he (but to his future cost) 52 discovered the contrivance of the fraud 53 and had the coward dragged forth to the arms 54 he had avoided. And shall this man have 55 the world's best arms, who wanted none? 56 Shall I lack honor and my cousin's gift 57 because I faced the danger with the first? 58 “Would that his madness had been real, or 59 had been accepted as reality 60 and that he never had attended us, 54 debita Troianis exercet spicula fatis. 55 Ille tamen vivit, quia non comitavit Ulixen; 56 mallet et infelix Palamedes esse relictus: 57 viveret aut certe letum sine crimine haberet! 58 Quem male convicti nimium memor iste furoris 59 prodere rem Danaam finxit fictumque probavit 60 crimen et ostendit, quod iam praefoderat, aurum.

13.61	61 Ergo aut exsilio vires subduxit Achivis, 62 aut nece: sic pugnat, sic est metuendus Ulixes. 63 Qui licet eloquio fidum quoque Nestora vincat, 64 haud tamen efficiet, desertum ut Nestora crimen 65 esse rear nullum. Qui cum imploraret Ulixem 66 vulnere tardus equi fessusque senilibus annis, 67 proditus a socio est. Non haec mihi crimina fingi 68 scit bene Tydides, qui nomine saepe vocatum 69 corripuit trepidoque fugam exprobravit amico. 70 Adspiciunt oculis superi mortalia iustis! 71 En eget auxilio, qui non tulit, utque reliquit, 72 sic linquendus erat: legem sibi dixerat ipse. 73 Conclamat socios: adsum videoque trementem 74 pallentemque metu et metuentem morte futura; 75 opposui molem clipei texique iacentem 76 servavique animam (minimum est hic laudis) inertem. 77 Si perstas certare, locum redeamus in illum: 78 redde hostem vulnusque tuum solitumque timorem 79 post clipeumque late et mecum contende sub illo! 80 At postquam eripui, cui standi vulnera vires 81 non dederant, nullo tardatus vulnere fugit. 82 Hector adest secumque deos in proelia ducit, 83 quaque ruit, non tu tantum terreris,	61 as our companion to the Phrygian towers, 62 this counsellor of evil! Then, good son 63 of Poeas, Lemnos would not hold you now, 64 exposed through guilt of ours! You, as men say, 65 hidden in forest lairs, are moving with your groans 66 the very rocks and asking for Ulysses 67 what he so well deserves—what, if indeed 68 there still are gods, you shall not ask in vain. 69 And now, one of our leaders, he that was 70 sworn to the same arms with ourselves! by whom 71 the arrows of great Hercules are used, 72 as his successor; broken by disease 73 and famine, clothed with feathers, now must feed 74 on birds and squander for his wretched fare 75 the arrows destined for the wreck of Troy. 76 “At least he lives, because he has not stayed 77 too near Ulysses. Hapless Palamedes 78 might wish that he too had been left behind, 79 then he would live or would have met a death 80 without dishonor. For this man, who well 81 remembered the unfortunate discovery 82 of his feigned madness, made a fraudulent 83 attack on Palamedes, who he said 84 betrayed the Grecian interest. He proved 85 his false charge to the Greeks by showing them 86 the gold which he himself hid in the ground. 87 By exile or by death he has decreased 88 the true strength of the Greeks. And so he fights, 89 for such things men have cause to fear Ulysses! 90 “Should he excel the faithful Nestor by Ulixe, 84 sed fortes etiam: tantum trahit ille timoris. 85 Hunc ego sanguineae successu caedis ovantem 86 eminus ingenti resupinum pondere fudi, 87 hunc ego poscentem, cum quo concurreret, unus 88 sustinui, sortemque meam vovistis, Achivi, 89 et vestrae valuere preces! Si quaeritis huius 90 fortunam pugnae, non sum superatus ab illo.

13.91	91 Ecce ferunt Troes ferrumque ignesque Iovemque 92 in Danaas classes: ubi nunc facundus Ulixes? 93 Nempe ego mille meo protexi pectore puppes, 94 spem vestri reditus: date pro tot navibus arma! 95 Quod si vera licet mihi dicere, quaeritur istis, 96 quam mihi, maior honos, coniunctaque gloria nostra est, 97 atque Aiax armis, non Aiaci arma petuntur. 98 Conferat his Ithacus Rhesum imbellemque Dolona 99 Priamidenque Helenum rapta cum Pallade captum: 100 luce nihil gestum est, nihil est Diomede remoto. 101 Si semel ista datis meritis tam vilibus arma, 102 dividite, et pars sit maior Diomedis in illis! 103 Quo tamen haec Ithaco, qui clam, qui semper inermis 104 rem gerit et furtis incautum decipit hostem? 105 Ipse nitor galeae claro radiantis ab auro 106 insidias prodet manifestabitque latentem. 107 Sed neque Dulichius sub Achillis casside vertex 108 pondera tanta feret, nec non onerosa gravisque 109 Pelias hasta potest imbellibus esse lacertis, 110 nec clipeus vasti concretus imagine mundi 111 conveniet timidae nataeque ad furta sinistrae: 112 debilitaturum quid te petis,	91 his eloquence, I'd yet be well convinced 92 the way he forsook Nestor was a crime, 93 old Nestor, who implored in vain his aid, 94 when he was hindered by his wounded steed 95 and wearied with the years of his old age, 96 was then deserted by that scheming man. 97 The charge that I have made is strictly true, 98 and the son of Tydeus knows it all too well; 99 for he at that time called him by his name, 100 rebuked him and upbraided his weak friend 101 for coward flight. 102 “The gods above behold 103 the affairs of men with justice. That same man 104 who would not help a friend now calls for help; 105 he who forsook a friend, should be forsaken, 106 the law he made returns upon himself. 107 He called aloud on his companions; 108 I came and saw him trembling, pale with fear, 109 and shuddering, at the thought of coming death. 110 I held my shield above him where he lay, 111 and that way saved the villain's dastard life, 112 and little praise I have deserved for that. 113 If you still wish to claim this armor, let 114 us both return to that place and restore 115 the enemy, your wound, and usual fear— 116 there hide behind my shield, and under that 117 contend with me! Yet, when I faced the foe, 118 he, whom his wound had left no power to stand, 119 forgot the wound and took to headlong flight. 120 “Hector approached, and brought the gods with him

	Improbe, munus? 113 Quod tibi si populi donaverit error Achivi, 114 cur spolieris, erit, non cur metuaris ab hoste, 115 et fuga, qua sola cunctos, timidissime, vincis, 116 tarda futura tibi est gestamina tanta trahenti. 117 Adde quod iste tuus, tam raro proelia passus, 118 integer est clipeus: nostro, qui tela ferendo 119 mille patet plagis, novus est successor habendus. 120 Denique (quid verbis opus est?) spectemur agendo!
13.121	121 Arma viri fortis medios mittantur in hostes: 122 inde iubete peti et referentem ornate relatis?” 123 Finierat Telamone satus vulgique secutum 124 ultima murmur erat, donec Laertius heros 125 adstitit atque oculos paulum tellure moratos 126 sustulit ad proceres exspectatoque resolvit 127 ora sono; neque abest facundis gratia dictis. 128 “Si mea cum vestris valuissent vota, Pelasgi, 129 non foret ambiguus tanti certaminis heres, 130 tuque tuis armis, nos te poteremur, Achille. 131 Quem quoniam non aequa mihi vobisque negarunt 132 fata” (manuque simul veluti lacrimantia tersit 133 lumina), “quis magno melius succedit Achilli, 134 quam per quem magnus Danais successit Achilles? 135 Huic modo ne prosit, quod, uti est, hebes esse videtur, 136 neve mihi noceat, quod vobis semper, Achivi, 137 profuit ingenium, meaque haec facundia, siqua est, 138 quae nunc pro domino, pro vobis saepe locuta est, 139 invidia careat, bona nec sua quisque recuset. 140 Nam genus et proavos et quae non fecimus ipsi, 141 vix ea nostra voco; sed enim quia	121 to battle; and, wherever he rushed on, 122 not only this Ulysses was alarmed, 123 but even the valiant, for so great the fear 124 he caused them. Hector, proud in his success 125 in blood and slaughter, I then dared to meet 126 and with a huge: stone from a distance hurled 127 I laid him flat. When he demanded one 128 to fight with, I engaged him quite alone, 129 for you my Greek friends, prayed the lot 130 might fall upon me, and your prayers prevailed. 131 If you should ask me of this fight, I will 132 declare I was not vanquished there by him. 133 “Behold, the Trojans brought forth fire and sword 134 and Jove, as well, against the Grecian fleet, 135 where now has eloquent Ulysses gone? 136 Truly, I did protect a thousand ships 137 with my breast, saving the hopes of your return.— 138 for all these many ships, award me arms! 139 But, let me speak the truth, the arms will gain 140 more fame than I, for they will share my glory. 141 And they need Ajax, Ajax needs not them. 142 Let the Ithacan compare with deeds like mine 143 his sleeping Rhesus, his unwarlike Dolon, 144 Helenus taken, and Pallas gained by theft— 145 all done by night and all with Diomed. 146 If you must give these arms for deeds so mean, 147 then give the greater share to Diomed. 148 “Why give arms to Ulysses, who by stealth 149 and quite unarmed, has always done his work, 150 deceiving his unwary enemy 151 by stratagems? This brilliant helmet, rich 152 with sparkling gold, will certainly betray 153 his plans, and will discover him when hid. 154 His rettulit Aiax 142 esse Iovis pronepos, nostri quoque sanguinis auctor 143 Iuppiter est, totidemque gradus distamus ab illo. 144 Nam mihi Laertes pater est, Arcesius illi, 145 Iuppiter huic, neque in his quisquam damnatus et exsul. 146 Est quoque per matrem Cyllenius addita nobis 147 altera nobilitas: deus est in utroque parente. 148 Sed neque materno quod sum generosior ortu, 149 nec mihi quod pater est fraterni sanguinis insons, 150 proposita arma peto: meritis expendite causam,	soft Dulichian head beneath the helm 155 of great Achilles will not bear the weight; 156 Achilles' heavy spear from Pelion must 157 be burdensome for his unwarlike hands: 158 nor will the shield, graven with the vasty world 159 beseem a dastard left hand, smooth for theft. 160 “Why caitiff, will you beg them for a gift, 161 which will but weaken you? If by mistake, 162 the Grecian people should award you this, 163 it would not fright the foe but offer spoils 164 and that swift flight (in which alone you have 165 excelled all others, dastard wretch!) would soon 166 grow laggard, dragging such a weight. And that 167 good shield of yours, which has but rarely felt 168 a conflict, is unhurt; for mine, agape 169 with wounds a thousand from swift-striking darts, 170 a new one must be found. 171 “In short, what need

13.151	151 dummodo, quod fratres Telamon Peleusque fuerunt, 152 Aiacis meritum non sit nec sanguinis ordo, 153 sed virtutis honor spoliis quaeratur in istis! 154 Aut si proximitas primusque requiritur heres, 155 est genitor Peleus, est Pyrrhus filius illi. 156 Quis locus Aiaci? Phthiam haec Scyrumve ferantur! 157 Nec minus est isto Teucer patruelis Achilli: 158 num petit ille tamen? num si petat, auferat illa? 159 Ergo operum quoniam nudum certamen habetur: 160 plura quidem feci, quam quae comprendere dictis 161 in promptu mihi sit; rerum tamen ordine ducar. 162 Praescia venturi genetrix Nereia leti 163 dissimulat cultu natum, et deceperat omnes, 164 in quibus Aiacem, sumptae fallacia vestis. 165 Arma ego femineis animum motura virilem 166 mercibus inserui, neque adhuc proiecerat heros 167 virgineos habitus, cum parmam hastamque tenenti 168 “nate dea,” dixi “tibi se peritura reservant	172 is there for words? Let us be tried in war. 173 Let all the arms of brave Achilles now 174 be thrown among the foe; order them all 175 to be retrieved; and decorate for war 176 whoever brings them back, a worthy prize.” 177 Ajax, the son of Telamon, stopped speech, 178 and murmuring among the multitude 179 followed his closing words, until Ulysses, 180 Laertian hero, stood up there and fixed 181 his eyes a short time on the ground; then raised 182 them towards the chiefs; and with his opening words, 183 which they awaited, the grace of his art 184 was not found wanting to his eloquence. 185 “If my desire and yours could have prevailed, 186 O noble Greeks, the man who should receive 187 a prize so valued, would not be in doubt, 188 and you would now enjoy your arms, and we 189 enjoy you, great Achilles. Since unjust 190 fate has denied him both to me and you, 191 (and here he wiped his eyes dry with his hands, 192 as though then shedding tears,) who could succeed 193 the great Achilles better than the one 194 through whom the great Achilles joined the Greeks? 195 Let Ajax win no votes because he seems 196 to be as stupid as the truth declares. 197 Let not my talents, which were always used 198 for service of the Greeks, increase my harm: 199 and let this eloquence of mine (if such 200 we call it) which is pleading now for me,

	169 Pergama! quid dubitas ingentem evertere Troiam?” 170 iniecique manum fortemque ad fortia misi. 171 Ergo opera illius mea sunt: ego Telephon hasta 172 pugnantem domui, victum orantemque refeci; 173 quod Thebae cecidere, meum est, me credite Lesbon, 174 me Tenedon Chrysenque et Cillan, Apollinis urbes, 175 et Scyrum cepisse, mea concussa putate 176 procubuisse solo Lyrnesia moenia dextra, 177 utque alias taceam, qui saevum perdere posset 178 Hectora, nempe dedi: per me iacet inclitus Hector. 179 Illis haec armis, quibus est inventus Achilles, 180 arma peto: vivo dederam, post fata reposco. —	201 as it has pleaded many times for you,
13.181	181 Ut dolor unius Danaos pervenit ad omnes 182 Aulidaque Euboicam complerunt mille carinae, 183 exspectata diu, nulla aut contraria classi 184 flamina erant, duraeque iubent Agamemnona sortes 185 inmeritam saevae natam mactare Dianae. 186 Denegat hoc genitor divisque irascitur ipsis 187 atque in rege tamen pater est. Ego mite parentis 188 ingenium verbis ad publica commoda verti. 189 Nunc equidem (fateor, fassoque ignoscat Atrides!) 190 difficilem tenui sub iniquo iudice causam. 191 Hunc tamen utilitas populi fraterque datique 192 summa movet sceptri, laudem ut cum sanguine penset. 193 Mittor et ad matrem, quae non hortanda, sed astu 194 decipienda fuit: quo si Telamonius isset, 195 orba suis essent etiamnum lintea ventis. 196 Mittor et Iliacas audax orator ad arces, 197 visaque et intrata est altae mihi curia Troiae	202 awake no envy. Let each man show his best. 203 “Now as for ancestors and noble birth 204 and deeds we have not done ourselves, all these 205 I hardly call them ours. But, if he boasts 206 because he is the great grandson of Jove, 207 the founder of my family, you know, 208 is Jupiter; by birth I am just the same 209 degree removed from Jupiter as he. 210 Laertes is my father, my grandsire is 211 Arcesius; and my great grandsire is Jove, 212 and my line: has no banished criminal. 213 My mother's grandsire, Mercury, would give 214 me further claims of birth—on either side a god. 215 “But not because my mother's line is better 216 and not because my father certainly, 217 is innocent of his own brother's blood, 218 have I advanced my claim to own those arms. 219 Let personal merit weigh the cause alone. 220 Let Ajax win no credit from the fact 221 that Telamon, was brother unto Peleus. 222 Let not his merit be that he is near by blood, 223 may honor of manhood weigh in your award! 224 “But, if you seek the heir and next of kin, 225 Peleus is father, and Pyrrhus is the son 226 of great Achilles. Where is Ajax then? 227 These arms might go to Phthia or to Scyros! 228 Teucer might claim the prize because he is 229 Achilles' cousin. Does he seek these

	198 (plenaque adhuc erat illa viris), interritus egi, 199 quam mihi mandarat communis Graecia causam, 200 accusoque Parim praedamque Helenamque reposco 201 et moveo Priamum Priamoque Antenora iunctum. 202 At Paris et fratres et qui rapuere sub illo, 203 ni tenuere manus (scis hoc, Menelae) nefandas, 204 primaque lux nostri tecum fuit illa pericli. 205 Longa referre mora est, quae consilioque manuque 206 utiliter feci spatiosi tempore belli. 207 Post acies primas urbis se moenibus hostes 208 continuere diu, nec aperti copia Martis 209 ulla fuit: decimo demum pugnavimus anno. 210 Quid facis interea, qui nil nisi proelia, nosti?	arms? 230 And, if he did, would you allow his claim? 231 “Since then the contest lies in deeds alone,
13.211	211 Quis tuus usus erat? Nam si mea facta requiris, 212 hostibus insidior, fossas munimine cingo, 213 consolor socios, ut longi taedia belli 214 mente ferant placida, doceo, quo simus alendi 215 armandique modo, mittor, quo postulat usus. 216 Ecce Iovis monitu, deceptus imagine somni, 217 rex iubet incepti curam dimittere belli. 218 Ille potest auctore suam defendere vocem: 219 non sinat hoc Aiax delendaque Pergama poscat, 220 quodque potest, pugnet! Cur non remoratur ituros? 221 Cur non arma capit? det, quod vaga turba sequatur! 222 Non erat hoc nimium numquam nisi magna loquenti. 223 Quid quod et ipse fugit? Vidi, puduitque videre, 224 cum tu terga dares inhonestaque vela parares. 225 Nec mora, “quid facitis? quae vos dementia” dixi 226 “concitat, o socii? captam dimittite Troiam! 227 Quidve domum fertis decimo, nisi	232 though I have done more than may be well told, 233 I will recall them as they have occurred. 234 “Achilles' Nereid mother, who foresaw 235 his death, concealed her son by change of dress. 236 By that disguise Ajax, among the rest, 237 was well deceived. I showed with women's wares 238 arms that might win the spirit of a man. 239 The hero still wore clothing of a girl, 240 when, as he held a shield and spear, I said 241 ‘Son of a goddess! Pergama but waits 242 to fall by you, why do you hesitate 243 to assure the overthrow of mighty Troy?’ 244 With these bold words, I laid my hand on him — 245 and to: brave actions I sent forth the brave: 246 his deeds of Bravery are therefore mine 247 it was my power that conquered Telephus, 248 as he fought with his lance; it was through me 249 that, vanquished and suppliant? he at last was healed. 250 I caused the fall of Thebes; believe me, I 251 took Lesbos, Tenedos, Chryse and Cilla— 252 the cities of Apollo; and I took 253 Scyros; think too, of the Lyrnesian wall 254 as shaken by my hand, destroyed, and thrown 255 down level with the ground. Let this suffice: 256 I found the man who caused fierce Hector's death, 257 through me the famous Hector now, lies low! 258 And for those arms

	dedecus, anno?” 228 Talibus atque aliis, in quae dolor ipse disertum 229 fecerat, aversos profuga de classe reduxi. 230 231 nec Telamoniades etiam nunc hiscere quicquam 232 audet, at ausus erat reges incessere dictis 233 Thersites etiam, per me haud impune protervus! 234 Erigor et trepidos cives exhortor in hostem 235 amissamque mea virtutem voce reposco. 236 Tempore ab hoc, quodcumque potest fecisse videri 237 fortiter iste, meum est, qui dantem terga retraxi. 238 Denique de Danais quis te laudatve petitve? 239 At sua Tydides mecum communicat acta, 240 me probat et socio semper confidit Ulixe.	which made Achilles known 259 I now demand these arms. To him alive 260 I gave them—at his death they should be mine. 261 “After the grief of one had reached all Greece, 13.241	241 Est aliquid, de tot Graiorum milibus unum 242 a Diomede legi (nec me sors ire iubebat !), 243 si tamen et spreto noctisque hostisque periclo 244 ausum eadem, quae nos, Phrygia de gente Dolona 245 interimo, non ante tamen, quam cuncta coegi 246 prodere, et edidici, quid perfida Troia pararet. 247 Omnia cognoram, nec, quod specularer, habebam, 248 et iam promissa poteram cum laude reverti. 249 Haud contentus eo petii tentoria Rhesi 250 inque suis ipsum castris comitesque peremi 251 atque ita captivo victor votisque potitus 252 ingredior curru laetos imitante triumphos; 253 cuius equos pretium pro nocte poposcerat hostis, 254 arma negate mihi, fueritque benignior Aiax! 255 Quid Lycii referam Sarpedonis agmina ferro 256 devastata meo? Cum multo sanguine fudi	262 and ships a thousand, filled Euboean Aulis; 263 the breezes long expected would not blow 264 or adverse held the helpless fleet ashore. 265 Then ruthless oracles gave their command, 266 that Agamemnon should make sacrifice 267 of his loved daughter and so satisfy 268 Diana's cruel heart. The father stood 269 up resolute, enraged against the gods, 270 a parent even though a king. I turned, 271 by tactful! words, a father's tender heart 272 to the great issue of the public weal. 273 I will confess it, and when I have confessed, 274 may the son of Atreus pardon: I had to plead 275 a difficult case before a partial judge. 276 The people's good, his brother's, and stern duty, 277 that followed his great office, won his ear, 278 till royal honor outweighed claims of blood. 279 I sought the mother, who could not be won 280 by pleading but must be deceived by craft. 281 Had Ajax gone to her, our thousand sails 282 would still droop, waiting for the favoring breeze. 283 “As a bold envoy I was even sent 284 off to the towers of Ilium, and there 285 I saw the senate-house of lofty Troy, 286 and, fearless, entered it, while it was full 287 of heroes. There, undaunted, I spoke for

	257 Coeranon Iphitiden et Alastoraque Chromiumque 258 Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque, 259 exitioque dedi cum Chersidamante Thoona 260 et Charopem fatisque inmitibus Ennomon actum 261 quique minus celebres nostra sub moenibus urbis 262 procubuere manu. Sunt et mihi vulnera, cives, 263 ipso pulchra loco; nec vanis credite verbis: 264 adspicite en!” vestemque manu deduxit et “haec sunt 265 pectora semper” ait “vestris exercita rebus. 266 At nil impendit per tot Telamonius annos 267 sanguinis in socios et habet sine vulnere corpus! 268 Quid tamen hoc refert, si se pro classe Pelasga 269 arma tulisse refert contra Troasque Iovemque? 270 Confiteorque, tulit (neque enim benefacta maligne	288 the cause which all the Greeks had given me. 289 Accusing Paris, I demanded back 290 the gold and stolen Helen, and I moved 291 both Priam and Antenor. All the while
13.271	271 detractare meum est), sed ne communia solus 272 occupet atque aliquem vobis quoque reddat honorem, 273 reppulit Actorides sub imagine tutus Achillis 274 Troas ab arsuris cum defensore carinis. 275 Ausum etiam Hectoreis solum concurrere telis 276 se putat, oblitus regisque ducumque meique, 277 nonus in officio et praelatus munere sortis. 278 Sed tamen eventus vestrae, fortissime, pugnae 279 quis fuit? Hector abit violatus vulnere nullo! 280 Me miserum, quanto cogor meminisse dolore 281 temporis illius, quo Graium murus, Achilles 282 procubuit! Nec me lacrimae luctusque timorque 283 tardarunt, quin corpus humo sublime referrem. 284 His umeris, his, inquam, umeris ego corpus Achillis. 285 et simul arma tuli, quae nunc quoque ferre laboro!	292 Paris, his brothers, and their robber crew 293 could scarce withhold their wicked hands from me. 294 And all this, Menelaus, is well known to you: 295 that was the first danger I shared with you. 296 “I need not linger over the many things 297 which by my counsel and my bravery 298 I have accomplished through this long-drawn war. 299 “A long time, after the first battle clash, 300 the foe lay quiet within city walls, 301 giving no challenge for an open fight— 302 he stood nine years of siege before we fought 303 what were you doing all that tedious time, 304 what use were you, good only in a fight? 305 If you will make inquiry of my deeds: 306 I fashioned ambuscades for enemies; 307 and circled our defenses with a trench; 308 I cheered allies so they might all endure 309 with patient minds a long, protracted war; 310 I showed how our own army might subsist 311 and how it could be armed; and I was sent 312 wherever the necessity required. 313 “Then, at the wish of Jove, our king, deceive 314 by A false dream, bids us give up the war— 315 he could excuse his order by the cause. 316 Let Ajax tell

	286 Sunt mihi, quae valeant in talia pondera, vires, 287 est animus certe vestros sensurus honores. 288 Scilicet idcirco pro nato caerula mater 289 ambitiosa suo fuit, ut caelestia dona, 290 artis opus tantae, rudis et sine pectore miles 291 indueret? neque enim clipei caelamina novit, 292 Oceanum et terras cumque alto sidera caelo 293 Pleiadasque hyadasque inmunemque aequoris arcton 294 diversasque urbes nitidumque Orionis ensem: 295 296 Quid quod me duri fugientem munera belli 297 arguit incepto serum accessisse labori, 298 nec se magnanimo maledicere sentit Achilli? 299 Si simulasse vocas crimen, simulavimus ambo; 300 si mora pro culpa est, ego sum maturior illo.	him Troy must be laid low 317 or let him fight—at least he can do that! 318 Why does he fail to stop the fugitives? 319 Why not take arms and tell the wavering crowd 320 to rally round him? Would that be too much 321 for one who never speaks except to boast? 322 But now words fail me: Ajax turns and flees! 323 I witnessed it and was ashamed to see 324 you turn disgraced, preparing sails for flight. 325 With exclamations and without delay,
13.301	301 Me pia detinuit coniunx, pia mater Achillem, 302 primaque sunt illis data tempora, cetera vobis. 303 Haud timeo, si iam nequeam defendere, crimen 304 cum tanto commune viro: deprensus Ulixis 305 ingenio tamen ille, at non Aiacis Ulixes! 306 Neve in me stolidae convicia fundere linguae 307 admiremur eum, vobis quoque digna pudore 308 obicit. An falso Palameden crimine turpe est 309 accusasse mihi, vobis damnasse decorum? 310 Sed neque Naupliades facinus defendere tantum 311 tamque patens valuit, nec vos audistis in illo 312 crimina: vidistis, pretioque obiecta patebant. 313 Nec Poeantiaden quod habet Vulcania Lemnos, 314 esse reus merui: factum defendite vestrum, 315 consensistis enim. Nec me suasisse	326 I said, ‘What are you doing? O my friends, 327 has madness seized you that you will quit Troy, 328 which is as good as taken? What can you 329 bear home, after ten years, but your disgrace?’ 330 “With these commanding words, which grief itself 331 gave eloquence, I brought resisting Greeks 332 back from their purposed flight. Atrides called 333 together his allies, all terror struck. 334 Even then, Ajax the son of Telamon 335 dared not vouchsafe one word. But impudent 336 Thersites hurled vile words against the kings, 337 and, thanks to me, he did not miss reproof. 338 I rose and spoke to my disheartened friends, 339 reviving their lost courage with my words 340 from that time forth, whatever deeds this man, 341 my rival, may have done, belong to me. 342 'Twas I who stayed his flight and brought him back. 343 “Which of the noble Greeks has given you praise 344 or sought your company? Yet Diomed 345 has shared his deeds with me and praises me, 346 and, while Ulysses is with him, is brave 347 and confident. 'Tis worthy of regard, 348 when out of many negabo, 316 ut se subtraheret bellique viaeque labori 317 temptaretque feros requie finire dolores. 318 Paruit et vivit! Non haec sententia tantum 319 fida, sed et felix, cum sit satis esse fidelem. 320 Quem quoniam vates delenda ad Pergama poscunt, 321 ne mandate mihi: melius Telamonius ibit 322 eloquioque virum morbis iraque furentem 323 molliet aut aliqua producet callidus arte. 324 Ante retro Simois fluet et sine frondibus Ide 325 stabit et auxilium promittet Achaia Troiae, 326 quam, cessante meo pro vestris pectore rebus, 327 Aiacis stolidi Danais sollertia prosit! 328 Sis licet infestus sociis regique mihique, 329 dure Philoctete, licet exsecrere meumque 330 devoveas sine fine caput cupiasque dolenti	thousands of the Greeks, 349 a man becomes the choice of Diomed! 350 “It was not lot that ordered me to go; 351 and yet, despising dangers of the night, 352 despising dangers of the enemy, 353 I slew one, Dolon, of the Phrygian race, 354 who dared to do the very things we dared, 355 but not before I had prevailed on him

13.331	331 me tibi forte dari nostrumque haurire cruorem, 332 333 te tamen adgrediar mecumque reducere nitar, 334 tamque tuis potiar (faveat Fortuna!) sagittis, 335 quam sum Dardanio, quem cepi, vate potitus, 336 quam responsa deum Troianaque fata retexi, 337 quam rapui Phrygiae signum penetrale Minervae 338 hostibus e mediis. Et se mihi comparat Aiax? 339 Nempe capi Troiam prohibebant fata sine illo: 340 fortis ubi est Aiax? Ubi sunt ingentia magni 341 verba viri? Cur hic metuis? cur audet Ulixes 342 ire per excubias et se committere nocti 343 perque feros enses non tantum moenia Troum, 344 verum etiam summas arces intrare suaque	356 to tell me everything, by which I learned 357 perfidious actions which Troy had designed. 358 “Of such things now, I had discovered all 359 that should be found out, and I might have then 360 returned to enjoy the praise I had deserved. 361 But not content with that, I sought the tent 362 of Rhesus, and within his camp I slew 363 him and his proved attendants. Having thus 364 gained as a conqueror my own desires, 365 I drove back in a captured chariot, — 366 a joyous triumph. Well, deny me, then. 367 The arms of him whose steeds the enemy 368 demanded as the price of one night's aid. 369 Ajax himself has been more generous. 370 “Why should I name Sarpedon's Lycian troops 371 among whom I made havoc with my sword? 372 I left Coeranos dead and streaming blood, 373 with the sword I killed Alastor, Chromius, 374 Alcander, Prytanis, Halius, and Noemon, 375 Thoon and Charops with Chersidamas, 376 and Ennomus—all driven by cruel fate, 377 not reckoning humbler men whom I laid low, 378

	345 eripere aede deam raptamque adferre per hostes? 346 Quae nisi fecissem, frustra Telamone creatus 347 gestasset laeva taurorum tergora septem. 348 Illa nocte mihi Troiae victoria parta est, 349 Pergama tunc vici, cum vinci posse coegi! 350 Desine Tydiden vultuque et murmure nobis 351 ostentare meum: pars est sua laudis in illo. 352 Nec tu, cum socia clipeum pro classe tenebas, 353 solus eras: tibi turba comes, mihi contigit unus. 354 Qui nisi pugnacem sciret sapiente minorem 355 esse nec indomitae deberi praemia dextrae, 356 ipse quoque haec peteret, peteret moderatior Aiax 357 Eurypylusque ferox claroque Andraemone natus, 358 nec minus Idomeneus patriaque creatus eadem 359 Meriones, peteret maioris frater Atridae: 360 quippe manu fortes nec sunt tibi Marte secundi,	battling beneath the shadow of the city walls. 379 And fellow citizens, I have my wounds 380 honorable in the front. Do not believe 381 my word alone. Look for yourselves and see!” 382 Then with one hand, he drew his robe aside. 383 “Here is a breast,” he cried, “that bled for you! 384 But Ajax never shed a drop of blood 385 to aid his friends, in all these many years,
13.361	361 consiliis cessere meis. Tibi dextera bello 362 utilis: ingenium est, quod eget moderamine nostro; 363 tu vires sine mente geris, mihi cura futuri; 364 tu pugnare potes, pugnandi tempora mecum 365 eligit Atrides; tu tantum corpore prodes, 366 nos animo; quantoque ratem qui temperat, anteit 367 remigis officium, quanto dux milite maior, 368 tantum ego te supero; nec non in corpore nostro 369 pectora sunt potiora manu: vigor omnis in illis. 370 At vos, o proceres, vigili date praemia vestro, 371 proque tot annorum cura, quibus anxius egi, 372 hunc titulum meritis pensandum reddite nostris. 373 Iam labor in fine est: obstantia fata removi	386 and has a body free of any wound. 387 “What does it prove, if he declares that he 388 fought for our ships against both Troy and Jove? 389 I grant he did, for it is not my wont 390 with malice to belittle other's deeds. 391 But let him not claim for himself alone 392 an honor in which all may have a share, 393 let him concede some credit due to you. 394 Disguised within the fear inspiring arms 395 of great Achilles, Actor's son drove back 396 the host of Trojans from our threatened fleet 397 or ships and Ajax would have burned together. 398 “Unmindful of the king, the chiefs, and me, 399 he dreams that he alone dared to engage 400 in single fight with Hector—he the ninth 401 to volunteer and chosen just by lot. 402 But yet, O brave chief! What availed the fight? 403 Hector returned, not injured by a wound. 404 “Ah, bitter fate, with how much grief I am 405 compelled to recollect the time, when brave 406 Achilles, bulwark of the Greeks, was slain. 407 Nor tears, nor grief, nor fear,

	374 altaque posse capi faciendo Pergama cepi. 375 Per spes nunc socias casuraque moenia Troum 376 perque deos oro, quos hosti nuper ademi, 377 per siquid superest, quod sit sapienter agendum, 378 siquid adhuc audax ex praecipitique petendum est, 379 380 este mei memores! Aut si mihi non datis arma, 381 huic date!” — et ostendit signum fatale Minervae. 382 Mota manus procerum est, et quid facundia posset, 383 re patuit, fortisque viri tulit arma disertus. 384 Hectora qui solus, qui ferrum ignesque Iovemque 385 sustinuit totiens, unam non sustinet iram, 386 invictumque virum vicit dolor: arripit ensem 387 et “meus hic certe est! an et hunc sibi poscit Ulixes? 388 Hoc” ait “utendum est in me mihi, quique cruore 389 saepe Phrygum maduit, domini nunc caede madebit, 390 ne quisquam Aiacem possit superare nisi Aiax.”	could hinder me: 408 I carried his dead body from the ground, 409 uplifted on these shoulders, I repeat, 410 upon these shoulders from that ground 411 I bore off dead Achilles, and those arms 412 which now I want to bear away again. 413 I have the strength to walk beneath their weight, 414 I have a mind to understand their worth. 415 Did the hero's mother, goddess of the sea,
13.391	391 Dixit et in pectus tum demum vulnera passum, 392 qua patuit ferro, letalem condidit ensem. 393 Nec valuere manus infixum educere telum: 394 expulit ipse cruor, rubefactaque sanguine tellus 395 purpureum viridi genuit de caespite florem, 396 qui prius Oebalio fuerat de vulnere natus; 397 littera communis mediis pueroque viroque 398 incripta est foliis, haec nominis, illa querellae. 399 Victor ad Hypsipyles patriam clarique Thoantis 400 et veterum terras infames caede virorum 401 vela dat, ut referat Tirynthia tela, sagittas. 402 Quae postquam ad Graios, domino comitante, revexit, 403 imposita estque fero tandem	416 win for her son these arms, made by a god, 417 a work of wondrous art, to have them clothe 418 a rude soldier, who has no mind at all? 419 He never could be made to understand 420 the rich engravings, pictured on the shield — 421 the ocean, earth, and stars in lofty skies; 422 the Pleiades, and Hyades, the Bear, 423 which touches not the ocean, far beyond 424 the varied planets, and the fire-bright sword 425 of high Orion. He demands a prize, 426 which, if he had it, would be lost on him. 427 “What of his taunting me, because I shrank 428 from hardships of this war and I was slow 429 to join the expedition? Does he not see, 430 that he reviles the great Achilles too? 431 Was my pretense a crime? then so was his. 432 Was our delay a fault? mine was the less, 433 for I came sooner; me a loving wife 434 detained from war, a loving mother him. 435 Some hours we gave to them, the rest to you. 436 Why should I be manus ultima bello, 404 405 406 407 408 Ilion ardebat, neque adhuc consederat ignis, 409 exiguumque senis Priami Iovis ara cruorem 410 combiberat tracta atque comis antistita Phoebi 411 non profecturas tendebat ad aethera palmas. 412 Dardanidas matres patriorum signa deorum, 413 dum licet, amplexas succensaque templa tenentes 414 invidiosa trahunt victores praemia Grai. 415 Mittitur Astyanax illis de turribus, unde 416 pugnantem pro se proavitaque regna tuentem 417 saepe videre patrem monstratum a matre solebat. 418 Iamque viam suadet boreas, flatuque secundo 419 carbasa mota sonant, iubet uti navita ventis. 420 “Troia, vale! rapimur” clamant, dant oscula terrae	alarmed, if now I am 437 unable to defend myself against 438 this accusation, which is just the same 439 as you have brought against so great a man? 440 Yet he was found by the dexterity 441 of me, Ulysses, and Ulysses was 442 not found by the dexterity of Ajax. 443 “It is no wonder that he pours on me 444 reproaches of his silly tongue, because 445 he charges you with what is worthy shame.

13.421	421 Troades et patriae fumantia tecta relinquunt. 422 Ultima conscendit classem (miserabile visu!) 423 in mediis Hecube natorum inventa sepulcris: 424 prensantem tumulos atque ossibus oscula dantem 425 Dulichiae traxere manus, tamen unius hausit 426 inque sinu cineres secum tulit Hectoris haustos; 427 Hectoris in tumulo canum de vertice crinem, 428 inferias inopes, crinem lacrimasque reliquit. 429 Est, ubi Troia fuit, Phrygiae contraria tellus, 430 Bistoniis habitata viris: Polymestoris illic 431 regia dives erat, cui te commisit alendum 432 clam, Polydore, pater Phrygiisque removit ab armis, 433 consilium sapiens, sceleris nisi praemia magnas 434 adiecisset opes, animi inritamen	446 Am I depraved because this Palamedes has 447 improperly been charged with crime by me? 448 Then was it honorable for all of you, 449 if you condemned him? Only think, that he, 450 the son of Naplius, made no defence 451 against the crime, so great, so manifest: 452 nor did you only hear the charges brought 453 against him, but you saw the proof yourselves, 454 and in the gold his villainy was shown.

	avari. 435 Ut cecidit fortuna Phrygum, capit impius ensem 436 rex Thracum iuguloque sui demisit alumni 437 et, tamquam tolli cum corpore crimina possent, 438 exanimem scopulo subiectas misit in undas. 439 Litore Threicio classem religarat Atrides, 440 dum mare pacatum, dum ventus amicior esset. 441 Hic subito, quantus cum viveret esse solebat, 442 exit humo late rupta similisque minanti 443 temporis illius vultum referebat Achilles, 444 quo ferus iniustum petiit Agamemnona ferro, 445 “inmemores” que “mei disceditis” inquit “Achivi, 446 obrutaque est mecum virtutis gratia nostrae? 447 Ne facite! utque meum non sit sine honore sepulcrum, 448 placet Achilleos mactata Polyxena manes!” 449 Dixit, et inmiti sociis parentibus umbrae, 450 rapta sinu matris, quam iam prope sola fovebat, 13.451	451 fortis et infelix et plus quam femina virgo 452 ducitur ad tumulum diroque fit hostia busto. 453 Quae memor ipsa sui, postquam crudelibus aris 454 admota est sensitque sibi fera sacra parari, 455 utque Neoptolemum stantem ferrumque tenentem 456 utque suo vidit figentem lumina vultu, 457 utere iamdudum generoso sanguine!” dixit, 458 “nulla mora est: aut tu iugulo vel pectore telum 459 conde meo! (iugulumque simul pectusque retexit) 460 461 462 Mors tantum vellem matrem mea fallere posset! 463 Mater obest minuitque necis mihi gaudia, quamvis 464 non mea mors illi, verum sua vita	455 “Nor am I to be blamed, if Vulcan's isle 456 of Lemnos has become the residence 457 of Philoctetes. Greeks, defend yourselves, 458 for you agreed to it! Yes, I admit 459 I urged him to withdraw from toils of war 460 and those of travel and attempt by rest 461 to ease his cruel pain. He took my advice 462 and lives! The advice was not alone well meant 463 (that would have been enough) but it was wise. 464 Because our prophets have declared, he must 465 lead us, if we may still maintain our hope 466 for Troy's destruction—therefore, you must not 467 intrust that work to me. Much better, send 468 the son of Telamon. His eloquence 469 will overcome the hero's rage, most fierce 470 from his disease and anger: or else his 471 invention of some wile will skilfully 472 deliver him to us.—The Simois 473 will first flow backward, Ida stand without 474 its foliage, and Achaia promise aid 475 to Troy itself; ere, lacking aid from

	gemenda est. 465 Vos modo, ne Stygios adeam non libera manes, 466 ite procul, si iusta peto, tactuque viriles 467 virgineo removete manus! Acceptior illi, 468 quisquis is est, quem caede mea placare paratis, 469 liber erit sanguis. Siquos tamen ultima nostri 470 verba movent oris (Priami vos filia regis, 471 nunc captiva rogat), genetrici corpus inemptum 472 reddite, neve auro redimat ius triste sepulcri, 473 sed lacrimis! Tunc, cum poterat, redimebat et auro.” 474 Dixerat, at populus lacrimas, quas illa tenebat, 475 non tenet; ipse etiam flens invitusque sacerdos 476 praebita coniecto rupit praecordia ferro. 477 Illa super terram defecto poplite labens 478 pertulit intrepidos ad fata novissima vultus. 479 Tunc quoque cura fuit partes velare tegendas, 480 cum caderet, castique decus servare pudoris.	me, 476 the craft of stupid Ajax will avail. 477 “Though, Philoctetes, you should be enraged 478 against your friends, against the king and me; 479 although you curse and everlastingly 480 devote my head to harm; although you wish, 481 to ease your anguish, that I may be given 482 into your power, that you may shed my blood; 483 and though you wait your turn and chance at me; 484 still I will undertake the quest and will
13.481	481 Troades excipiunt deploratosque recensent 482 Priamidas et quid dederit domus una cruoris, 483 teque gemunt, virgo, teque, o modo regia coniunx, 484 regia dicta parens, Asiae florentis imago, 485 nunc etiam praedae mala sors, quam victor Ulixes 486 esse suam nollet, nisi quod tamen Hectora partu 487 edideras: dominum matri vix repperit Hector! 488 Quae corpus complexa animae tam fortis inane, 489 quas totiens patriae dederat natisque viroque, 490 huic quoque dat lacrimas lacrimas in vulnera fundit 491 osculaque ore tegit consuetaque pectora plangit 492 canitiemque suam concreto in sanguine verrens 493 plura quidem, sed et haec laniato	485 try all my skill to bring you back with me. 486 If my good fortune then will favor me, 487 I shall obtain your arrows; as I made 488 the Trojan seer my captive, as I learned 489 the heavenly oracles and fate of Troy, 490 and as I brought back through a host of foes 491 Minerva's image from the citadel. 492 “And is it possible, Ajax may now 493 compare himself with me? Truly the Fates 494 will hold Troy from our capture, if we leave 495 the statue. Where is valiant Ajax now, 496 where are the boasts of that tremendous man? 497 Why are you trembling, while Ulysses dares 498 to go beyond our guards and brave the night? 499 In spite of hostile swords, he goes within 500 not only the strong walls of Troy but even 501 the citadel, lifts up the goddess from 502 her shrine, and takes her through the enemy! 503 If I had not done this, Telamon's son 504 would bear his shield of seven bull hides in vain. 505 That night I gained the

	pectore dixit: 494 “Nata, tuae (quid enim superest?) dolor ultime matris, 495 nata, iaces, videoque tuum, mea vulnera, pectus, 496 et ne perdiderim quemquam sine caede meorum, 497 tu quoque vulnus habes! At te, quia femina, rebar 498 a ferro tutam: cecidisti et femina ferro, 499 totque tuos idem fratres, te perdidit idem, 500 exitium Troiae nostrique orbator, Achilles. 501 At postquam cecidit Paridis Phoebique sagittis, 502 “nunc certe,” dixi, “non est metuendus Achilles!rsquo; 503 Nunc quoque mi metuendus erat: cinis ipse sepulti 504 in genus hoc saevit, tumulo quoque sensimus hostem. 505 Aeacidae fecunda fui! Iacet Ilion ingens, 506 eventuque gravi finita est publica clades, — 507 sed finita tamen; soli mihi Pergama restant, 508 in cursuque meus dolor est: modo maxima rerum, 509 tot generis natisque potens nuribusque viroque, 510 nunc trahor exul, inops, tumulis avulsa meorum,	victory over Troy— 506 'Twas then I won our war with Pergama, 507 because I made it possible to win. 508 “Stop hinting by your look and muttered words 509 that Diomed was my partner in the deed. 510 The praise he won is his. You, certainly 511 fought not alone, when you held up your shield 512 to save the allied fleet: a multitude 513 was with you, but a single man gave me 514 his valued help.
13.511	511 Penelopae munus; quae me data pensa trahentem 512 matribus ostendens Ithacis “haec Hectoris illa est 513 clara parens, haec est” dicet “Priameia coniunx!” 514 Postque tot amissos tu nunc, quae sola levabas 515 maternos luctus, hostilia busta piasti! 516 Inferias hosti peperi! Quo ferrea resto? 517 Quidve moror? Quo me servas, annosa senectus? 518 Quo, di crudeles, nisi uti nova funera cernam, 519 vivacem differtis anum? Quis posse putaret 520 felicem Priamum post diruta Pergama dici? 521 Felix morte sua est, nec te, mea nata, peremptam 522 adspicit et vitam pariter	515 “And if he did not know 516 a fighting man can not gain victory 517 so surely as the wise man, that the prize 518 is given to something rarer than a brave right hand, 519 he would himself be a contender now 520 for these illustrious arms. Ajax the less 521 would have come forward too, so would the fierce 522 Eurypylus, so would Andraemon's son. 523 Nor would Idomeneus withhold his claim, 524 nor would his countryman Meriones. 525 Yes, Menelaus too would seek the prize. 526 All these brave men, my equals in the field, 527 have yielded to my wisdom. 528 “Your right hand 529 is valuable in war, your temper stands 530 in need of my direction. You have strength 531 without intelligence; I look out for 532 the future. You are able in the fight; 533 I help our king to find the proper time. 534 Your body may give service, and my mind 535

	regnumque reliquit. 523 At, puto, funeribus dotabere, regia virgo, 524 condeturque tuum monumentis corpus avitis. 525 Non haec est fortuna domus: tibi munera matris 526 contingent fletus peregrinaeque haustus harenae! 527 Omnia perdidimus: superest, cur vivere tempus 528 in breve sustineam, proles gratissima matri, 529 nunc solus, quondam minimus de stirpe virili, 530 has datus Ismario regi Polydorus in oras. 531 Quid moror interea crudelia vulnera lymphis 532 abluere et sparsos inmiti sanguine vultus?” 533 Dixit et ad litus passu processit anili, 534 albentes lacerata comas. “Date, Troades, urnam” 535 dixerat infelix, liquidas hauriret ut undas: 536 adspicit eiectum Polydori in litore corpus 537 factaque Threiciis ingentia vulnera telis! 538 Troades exclamant: obmutuit illa dolore, 539 et pariter vocem lacrimasque introrsus obortas 540 devorat ipse dolor, duroque simillima saxo	must point the way: and just as much as he 536 who guides the ship must be superior 537 to him who rows it; and we all agree 538 the general is greater than the soldier; so, 539 do I excel you. In the body lives 540 an intellect much rarer than a hand, 541 by that we measure human excellence. 542 “O chieftains, recompense my vigilance! 543 For all these years of anxious care, award 544 this honor to my many services.
13.541	541 torpet et adversa figit modo lumina terra, 542 interdum torvos sustollit ad aethera vultus, 543 nunc positi spectat vultum, nunc vulnera nati 544 vulnera praecipue, seque armat et instruit iram.” 545 Qua simul exarsit, tamquam regina maneret, 546 ulcisci statuit poenaeque in imagine tota est, 547 utque furit catulo lactente orbata leaena 548 signaque nacta pedum sequitur, quem non videt, hostem, 549 sic Hecube, postquam cum luctu miscuit iram, 550 non oblita animorum, annorum oblita suorum, 551 vadit ad artificem dirae,	545 Our victory is in sight; I have removed 546 the opposing fates and, opening wide the way 547 to capture Pergama, have captured it. 548 Now by our common hopes, by Troy's high walls 549 already tottering and about to fall, 550 and by the gods that I won from the foe, 551 by what remains for wisdom to devise 552 or what may call for bold and fearless deeds— 553 if you think any hope is left for Troy, 554 remember me! Or, if you do not give 555 these arms to me, then give them all to her!” 556 And he pointed to Minerva's fateful head. 557 The assembled body of the chiefs was moved; 558 and then, appeared the power of eloquence: 559 the fluent man received, amid applause, 560 the arms of the brave man. His rival, who 561 so often when alone, stood firm against 562 great Hector and

	Polymestora, caedis 552 conloquiumque petit: nam se monstrare relictum 553 velle latens illi, quod nato redderet, aurum. 554 Credidit Odrysius praedaeque adsuetus amore 555 in secreta venit. Tum blando callidus ore 556 “tolle moras, Hecube,” dixit, “da munera nato! 557 Omne fore illius quod das, quod et ante dedisti, 558 per superos iuro.” Spectat truculenta loquentem 559 falsaque iurantem tumidaque exaestuat ira 560 atque ita correpto captivarum agmina matrum 561 invocat et digitos in perfida lumina condit 562 expellitque genis oculos (facit ira nocentem) 563 immergitque manus, foedataque sanguine sonti 564 non lumen (neque enim superest), loca luminis haurit. 565 Clade sui Thracum gens inritata tyranni 566 Troada telorum lapidumque incessere iactu 567 coepit. At haec missum rauco cum murmure saxum 568 morsibus insequitur, rictuque in verba parato 569 latravit, conata loqui: locus exstat et ex re 570 nomen habet, veterumque diu memor illa malorum	the sword, and flames and Jove, 563 stood not against a single passion, wrath. 564 The unconquerable was conquered by his grief. 565 He drew his sword, and said:—“This is at least 566 my own; or will Ulysses also claim 567 this, for himself. I must use this against 568 myself—the blade which often has been wet, 569 dripping with blood of Phrygians I have slain,. 570 Will drip with his own master's:blood, 571 lest any man but Ajax vanquish Ajax.” 572 Saying this, he turned toward the vital spot 573 in his own breast, which never had felt a wound, 574 the fated sword and plunged it deeply in.
13.571	571 tum quoque Sithonios ululavit maesta per agros. 572 illius Troasque suos hostesque Pelasgos, 573 illius fortuna deos quoque moverat omnes, 574 sic omnes, ut et ipsa Iovis coniunxque sororque 575 eventus Hecubam meruisse negaverit illos. 576 Non vacat Aurorae, quamquam isdem faverat armis, 577 cladibus et casu Troiaeque Hecubaeque moveri. 578 Cura deam proprior luctusque domesticus angit 579 Memnonis amissi, Phrygiis quem lutea campis 580 vidit Achillea pereuntem cuspide	575 though many sought to aid, no hand had strength 576 to draw that steel—deep driven. The blood itself 577 unaided drove it out. The ensanguined earth 578 sprouted from her green turf that purple flower 579 which grew of old from Hyacinthine blood. 580 Its petals now are charged with double freight— 581 the warrior's name, Apollo's cry of woe. 582 The conqueror, Ulysses, now set sail, 583 for Lemnos, country of Hypsipyle, 584 and for the land of Thoas, famed afar, 585 those regions infamous in olden days, 586 where women slew their husbands. So he went 587 that he might capture and bring back with him 588 the arrows of brave Hercules. When these 589 were given back to the Greeks, their lord

	mater: 581 vidit, et ille rubor, quo matutina rubescunt 582 tempora, palluerat, latuitque in nubibus aether. 583 At non impositos supremis ignibus artus 584 sustinuit spectare parens, sed crine soluto, 585 sicut erat, magni genibus procumbere non est 586 dedignata Iovis lacrimisque has addere voces: 587 “Omnibus inferior, quas sustinet aureus aether 588 (nam mihi sunt totum rarissima templa per orbem), 589 diva tamen veni, non ut delubra diesque 590 des mihi sacrificos caliturasque ignibus aras. 591 Si tamen adspicias, quantum tibi femina praestem, 592 tum cum luce nova noctis confinia servo, 593 praemia danda putes; sed non ea cura neque hic est 594 nunc status Aurorae, meritos ut poscat honores: 595 Memnonis orba mei venio, qui fortia frustra 596 pro patruo tulit arma suo primisque sub annis 597 occidit a forti, sic vos voluistis, Achille. 598 Da, precor, huic aliquem, solacia mortis, honorem, 599 summe deum rector, maternaque vulnera leni.” 600 Iuppiter adnuerat, cum Memnonis arduus alto	with them, 590 a final hand at last prevailed to end 591 that long fought war. Both Troy and Priam fell, 592 and Priam's wretched wife lost all she had, 593 until at last she lost her human form. 594 Her savage barkings frightened foreign lands, 595 where the long Hellespont is narrowed down. 596 Great Troy was burning: while the fire still raged, 597 Jove's altar drank old Priam's scanty blood. 598 The priestess of Apollo then, alas! 599 Was dragged by her long hair, while up towards heaven 600 she lifted supplicating hands in vain. 601 The Trojan matrons, clinging while they could 602 to burning temples and ancestral gods, 603 victorious Greeks drag off as welcome spoil. 604 Astyanax was hurled down from the very tower 605 from which he often had looked forth and seen 606 his father, by his mother pointed out, 607 when Hector fought for honor and his country's weal. 608 Now Boreas counsels to depart. The sails, 609 moved by a prosperous breeze, resound and wave— 610 the Trojan women cry,—“Farewell to Troy! 611 Ah, we are hurried off! ” and, falling down, 13.601	601 corruit igne rogus nigrique volumine fumi 602 infecere diem (veluti cum flumina natas 603 exhalant nebulas, nec sol admittitur infra); 604 atra favilla volat glomerataque corpus in unum 605 densetur faciemque capit sumitque calorem 606 atque animam ex igni (levitas sua praebuit alas), 607 et primo similis volucri, mox vera volucris 608 insonuit pennis: pariter sonuere sorores 609 innumerae, quibus est eadem	612 they kiss the soil, and leave the smoking roofs 613 of their loved native land. The last to go 614 on board the fleet was Hecuba, a sight 615 most pitiful. She was found among the tombs 616 of her lost sons. While she embraced each urn 617 and fondly kissed their bones, Ulysses came 618 with ruthless hands and bore her off, his prize 619 she in her bosom took away the urn 620 of Hector only, and upon his grave 621 she left some white hair taken from her head, 622 a meager gift, her white hair and her tears. 623 Across the strait from Troy, there is a land 624 claimed by Bistonian men, and in that land 625 was a rich palace, built

	natalis origo, 610 terque rogum lustrant, et consonus exit in auras 611 ter plangor: quarto seducunt castra volatu. 612 Tam duo diversa populi de parte feroces 613 bella gerunt rostrisque et aduncis unguibus iras 614 exercent alasque adversaque pectora iactant 615 inferiaeque cadunt cineri cognata sepulto 616 corpora seque viro forti meminere creatas. 617 praepetibus subitis nomen facit auctor: ab illo 618 Memnonides dictae, cum sol duodena peregit 619 signa, parentali moriturae voce rebellant. 620 Ergo aliis latrasse Dymantida flebile visum est: 621 luctibus est Aurora suis intenta, piasque 622 nunc quoque dat lacrimas et toto rorat in orbe. 623 Non tamen eversam Troiae cum moenibus esse 624 spem quoque fata sinunt: sacra et, sacra altera, patrem 625 fert umeris, venerabile onus, Cythereius heros: 626 de tantis opibus praedam pius eligit illam 627 Ascaniumque suum profugaque per aequora classe 628 fertur ab Antandro sceleratae limina Thracum 629 et Polydoreo manantem sanguine terram 630 linquit et utilibus ventis aestuque secundo	there by a king 626 named Polymnestor. To him the Phrygian king 627 in secret gave his youngest son to rear, 628 his Polydorus, safe from Troy and war, 629 a prudent course, if he had not sent gold 630 arousing greed, incitement to a crime. 631 Soon, when the fortunes of the Trojans fell, 632 that wicked king of Thrace took his own sword, 633 and pierced the throat of his poor foster son 634 and then, as if the deed could be concealed, 635 if he removed the body, hurled the boy 636 from a wild cliff into the waves below. 637 Until the sea might be more calm, and gales 638 of wind might be subdued, Atrides moored 639 his fleet of ships upon the Thracian shore; 640 there, from wide gaping earth, Achilles rose, 641 as large as when he lived, with look as fierce,
13.631	631 intrat Apollineam sociis comitantibus urbem. 632 Hunc Anius, quo rege homines, antistite Phoebus 633 rite colebatur, temploque domoque recepit 634 urbemque ostendit delubraque nota duasque 635 Latona quondam stirpes pariente retentas. 636 Ture dato flammis vinoque in tura profuso 637 caesarumque boum fibris de more crematis 638 regia tecta petunt positisque	642 as when his sword once threatened Agamemnon. 643 “Forgetting me do you depart, O Greeks?” 644 He said, “And is your grateful! memory 645 of all my worth interred with my bones? 646 Do not do so. And that my sepulchre 647 may have due worship, let Polyxena 648 be immolated to appease the ghost: 649 of dead Achilles.” Fiercely so he spoke. 650 The old friends of Achilles all obeyed 651 his unforgiving shade; and instantly 652 the noble and unhappy virgin—brave, 653 more like a man than woman—was torn from 654 her mother's bosom, tapetibus altis 639 munera cum liquido capiunt Cerealia Baccho. 640 Tum pius Anchises: “O Phoebi lecte sacerdos, 641 fallor, an et natum, cum primum haec moenia vidi, 642 bisque duas natas, quantum reminiscor, habebas?” 643 Huic Anius niveis circumdata tempora vittis 644 concutiens et tristis ait: “Non falleris, heros 645 maxime: vidisti natorum quinque parentem, 646 quem nunc (tanta homines rerum inconstantia versat!) 647 paene vides orbum. Quod enim mihi filius absens 648 auxilium, quem dicta suo de nomine tellus 649 Andros habet pro patre locumque et regna tenentem? 650 Delius augurium dedit huic, dedit altera Liber 651 femineae stirpi voto maiora fideque 652 munera: nam tactu natarum cuncta mearum 653 in segetem laticemque meri canaeque Minervae 654 transformabantur, divesque erat usus in illis. 655 Hoc ubi cognovit Troiae populator Atrides, 656 ne non ex aliqua vestram sensisse procellam 657 nos quoque parte putes, armorum viribus usus 658 abstrahit invitas gremio genitoris, alantque 659 imperat Argolicam caelesti munere classem. 660 Effugiunt, quo quaeque potest: Euboea duabus,	cherished more by her, 655 since widowed and alone. And then they led 656 the virgin as a sacrifice from there 657 up to the cruel altar. When the maid 658 observed the savage rites prepared for her, 659 and when she noticed Neoptolemus 660 stand by her with his cruel sword in hand, 661 his fixed eyes on her countenance; she said:— 662 “Do not delay my generous gift of blood, 663 with no resistance thrust the ready steel 664 into my throat or breast!” And then she laid 665 both throat and bosom bare. “Polyxena 666 would never wish to live in slavery. 667 And such rites win no favor from a god. 668 Only I fondly wish my mother might 669 not know that I have died. My love of her 670 takes from my joy in death and gives me fear. 671 Not my death truly, but her own sad life

13.661	661 et totidem natis Andros fraterna petita est. 662 Miles adest et, ni dedantur, bella minatur. 663 Victa metu pietas: consortia corpora poenae 664 dedidit (et timido possis ignoscere fratri: 665 non hic Aeneas, non, qui defenderet Andron, 666 Hector erat, per quem decimum durastis in annum); 667 iamque parabantur captivis vincla lacertis:	672 should be the most lamented in her tears. 673 Now let your men stand back, that I may go 674 with dignity down to the Stygian shades, 675 and, if my plea is just, let no man's hand 676 touch my pure virgin body. A nobler gift 677 to him, whoever he may be, whom you 678 desire to placate with my death today, 679 shall be a free maid's blood. But, if my words— 680 my parting wish, has power to touch your hearts, 681 (King Priam's daughter, not a captive, pleads) 682 freely return my body to my mother, 683 let her not pay with gold

	668 illae tollentes etiamnum libera caelo 669 bracchia “Bacche pater, fer opem!” dixere, tulitque 670 muneris auctor opem, — si miro perdere more 671 ferre vocatur opem, nec qua ratione figuram 672 perdiderint, potui scire aut nunc dicere possum; 673 summa mali nota est: pennas sumpsere tuaeque 674 coniugis in volucres, niveas abiere columbas.” 675 Talibus atque aliis postquam convivia dictis 676 implerunt, mensa somnum petiere remota, 677 cumque die surgunt adeuntque oracula Phoebi: 678 qui petere antiquam matrem cognataque iussit 679 litora; prosequitur rex et dat munus ituris, 680 Anchisae sceptrum, chlamydem pharetramque nepoti, 681 cratera Aeneae, quem quondam transtulit illi 682 hospes ab Aoniis Therses Ismenius oris. 683 Miserat hunc illi Therses, fabricaverat Alcon 684 Hyleus et longo caelaverat argumento. 685 Urbs erat, et septem posses ostendere portas: 686 hae pro nomine erant et, quae foret illa, docebant. 687 Ante urbem exequiae tumulique ignesque rogique 688 effusaeque comas et apertae pectora matres 689 significant luctum: nymphae quoque flere videntur 690 siccatosque queri fontes, sine frondibus arbor	for the sad right 684 to bury me—but only with her tears! 685 Yes, when she could, she also paid with gold.” 686 After she said these words, the people could 687 no more restrain their tears; but no one saw 688 her shed one tear. Even the priest himself, 689 reluctantly and weeping, drove the steel 690 into her proffered breast. On failing knees 691 she sank down to the earth; but still maintained 692 a countenance undaunted to the last: 693 and, even unto death, it was her care 694 to cover all that ought to be concealed, 695 and save the value of chaste modesty. 696 The Trojan matrons took her and recalled, 697 lamenting, all the sons of Priam dead, 698 the wealth of blood one house had shed for all. 699 And they bewailed the chaste Polyxena 700 and you, her mother, only lately called 701 a royal mother and a royal wife,—
13.691	691 nuda riget, rodunt arentia saxa capellae. 692 Ecce facit mediis natas Orione Thebis, 693 agmen femineum, iugulo dare pectus aperto, 694 illas demisso per inertia vulnera telo 695 pro populo cecidisse suo pulchrisque per urbem 696 funeribus ferri celebrique in parte cremari,	702 the soul of Asia's fair prosperity,; 703 now lowest fallen in all the wreck of Troy. 704 The conquering Ulysses only claimed 705 her his because she had brought Hector forth: 706 and Hector hardly found a master for 707 his mother. She continued to embrace 708 the body of a soul so brave, and shed 709 her tears, as she had shed them often before 710 for country lost, for sons, for royal mate. 711 She bathed her daughter's wounds with tears and

	697 tum de virginea geminos exire favilla, 698 ne genus intereat, iuvenes, quos fama Coronos 699 nominat, et cineri materno ducere pompam. 700 Hactenus antiquo signis fulgentibus aere, 701 summus inaurato crater erat asper acantho. 702 Nec leviora datis Troiani dona remittunt 703 dantque sacerdoti custodem turis acerram, 704 dant pateram claramque auro gemmisque coronam. 705 Inde recordati Teucros a sanguine Teucri 706 ducere principium, Cretam tenuere locique 707 ferre diu nequiere Iovem, centumque relictis 708 urbibus Ausonios optant contingere portus: 709 saevit hiems iactatque viros, Strophadumque receptos 710 portubus infidis exterruit ales Aello. 711 Et iam Dulichios portus Ithacamque Samonque 712 Neritiasque domus, regnum fallacis Ulixis, 713 praeter erant vecti: certatam lite deorum 714 Ambraciam versique vident sub imagine saxum 715 iudicis, Actiaco quae nunc ab Apolline nota est, 716 vocalemque sua terram Dodonida quercu 717 Chaoniosque sinus, ubi nati rege Molosso 718 inpia subiectis fugere incendia pennis. 719 Proxima Phaeacum felicibus obsita pomis 720 rura petunt, Epiros ab his regnataque vati	kissed 712 them with her lips and once more beat her breast. 713 Her white hair streamed down in the clotting blood, 714 she tore her breast, and this and more she said: 715 “My daughter, what further sorrow can be mine? 716 My daughter you lie dead, I see your wounds— 717 they are indeed my own. Lest I should lose 718 one child of mine without a cruel sword, 719 you have your wound. I thought, because 720 you were a woman, you were safe from swords. 721 But you, a woman, felt the deadly steel. 722 That same Achilles, who has given to death 723 so many of your brothers, caused your death, 724 the bane of Troy and the serpent by my nest! 725 When Paris and when Phoebus with their shafts 726 had laid him low, ‘Ah, now at least,’ I said, 727 ‘Achilles will no longer cause me dread.’ 728 Yet even then he still was to be feared. 729 For him I have been fertile! Mighty Troy 730 now lies in ruin, and the public woe 731 is ended in one vast calamity. 732 For me alone the woe of Troy still lives. 733 “But lately on the pinnacle of fame, 734 surrounded by my powerful sons-in-law, 735 daughters, and daughters-in-law, and strong 736 in my great husband, I am exiled now, 737 and destitute, and forced from the sad tombs 738 of those I love, to wretched slavery, 739 serving Penelope: who showing me 740 to curious dames of Ithaca, will point 741 and say, while I am bending to my task, 742 ‘Look at that woman who was widely known, 743 the mother of great Hector, once the wife 744 of Priam!’ After so many have been lost,
13.721	721 Buthrotos Phrygio simulataque Troia tenetur. 722 Inde futurorum certi, quae cuncta fideli 723 Priamides Helenus monitu praedixerat, intrant 724 Sicaniam: tribus haec excurrit in aequora pinnis, 725 e quibus imbriferos est versa Pachynos ad austros,	745 now you, last comfort of a mother's grief, 746 must make atonement on the foeman's tomb. 747 I bore a victim for my enemy. 748 “Why do I live—an iron witted wretch? 749 Why do I linger? Why does cruel age 750 detain me? Why, pernicious deities, 751 thus hold me to this earth, unless you will 752 that I may weep at future funerals? 753 After the fall of Troy, who would

	726 mollibus expositum zephyris Lilybaeon, ad arctos 727 aequoris expertes spectat boreamque Peloros. 728 Hac subeunt Teucri, et remis aestuque secundo 729 sub noctem potitur Zanclaea classis harena. 730 Scylla latus dextrum, laevum inrequieta Charybdis 731 infestat: vorat haec raptas revomitque carinas, 732 illa feris atram canibus succingitur alvum, 733 virginis ora gerens, et, si non omnia vates 734 ficta reliquerunt aliquo quoque tempore virgo. 735 Hanc multi petiere proci; quibus illa repulsis 736 ad pelagi nymphas, pelagi gratissima nymphis, 737 ibat et elusos iuvenum narrabat amores. 738 Quam, dum pectendos praebet Galatea capillos, 739 talibus adloquitur, referens suspiria, dictis: 740 “Te tamen, o virgo, genus haud inmite virorum 741 expetit, utque facis, potes his impune negare; 742 At mihi, cui pater est Nereus, quam caerula Doris 743 enixa est, quae sum turba quoque tuta sororum, 744 non nisi per luctus licuit Cyclopis amorem 745 effugere,” — et lacrimae vocem impediere loquentis. 746 Quas ubi marmoreo detersit pollice virgo 747 et solata deam est, “refer, o carissima,” dixit. 748 “neve tui causam tege (sic sum fida) doloris!” 749 Nereis his contra resecuta Crataeide natam est: 750 “Acis erat Fauno nymphaque Symaethide cretus,	suppose 754 King Priam could be happy? Blest in death, 755 he has not seen my daughter's dreadful fate. 756 He lost at once his kingdom and his life. 757 “Can I imagine you, a royal maid, 758 will soon be honored with due funeral rites, 759 and will be buried in our family tomb? 760 Such fortune comes no more to your sad house. 761 A drift of foreign sand will be your grave, 762 the parting gift will be your mother's tears. 763 We have lost everything! But no, there is 764 one reason why I should endure a while. 765 His mother's dearest, now her only child, 766 once youngest of that company of sons, 767 my Polydorus lives here on these shores 768 protected by the friendly Thracian king. 769 Then why delay to bathe these cruel wounds, 770 her dear face spattered with the dreadful blood?” 771 So Hecuba went wailing towards the shore 772 with aged step and tearing her gray hair. 773 At last the unhappy mother said, “Give me 774 an urn; O, Trojan women!” for, she wished
13.751	751 magna quidem patrisque sui matrisque voluptas, 752 nostra tamen maior: nam me sibi iunxerat uni. 753 Pulcher et octonis iterum natalibus actis 754 signarat teneras dubia lanugine malas.	775 to dip up salt sea water. But just then, 776 she saw the corpse of her last son, thrown out 777 upon the shore; her Polydorus, killed, 778 disfigured with deep wounds of Thracian swords. 779 The Trojan women cried aloud, and she 780 was struck dumb with her agony, which quite 781 consumed both

	755 Hunc ego, me Cyclops nulla cum fine petebat. 756 En si quaesieris, odium Cyclopis, amorne 757 Acidis in nobis fuerit praesentior, edam: 758 par utrumque fuit. Pro quanta potentia regni 759 est, Venus alma, tui! Nempe ille inmitis et ipsis 760 horrendus silvis et visus ab hospite nullo 761 impune et magni cum dis contemptor Olympi, 762 quid sit amor, sensit validaque cupidine captus 763 uritur, oblitus pecorum antrorumque suorum. 764 Iamque tibi formae, iamque est tibi cura placendi, 765 iam rigidos pectis rastris, Polypheme, capillos, 766 iam libet hirsutam tibi falce recidere barbam 767 et spectare feros in aqua et componere vultus. 768 Caedis amor feritasque sitisque inmensa cruoris 769 cessant, et tutae veniunt abeuntque carinae. 770 Telemus interea Siculam delatus ad Aetnen, 771 Telemus Eurymides, quem nulla fefellerat ales, 772 terribilem Polyphemon adit “lumen” que, “quod unum 773 fronte geris media, rapiet tibi” dixit “Ulixes!” 774 Risit et “o vatum stolidissime, falleris,” inquit, 775 “altera iam rapuit!” Sic frustra vera monentem 776 spernit et aut gradiens ingenti litora passu 777 degravat aut fessus sub opaca revertitur antra. 778 Prominet in pontum cuneatus acumine longo 779 collis utrumque latus circumfluit aequoris unda; 780 huc ferus ascendit Cyclops mediusque resedit,	voice and tears within her heart— 782 rigid and still she seemed as a hard rock. 783 And now she gazes at the earth in front 784 now lifts her haggard face up toward the skies, 785 now scans that body lying stark and dead, 786 now scans his wounds and most of all the wounds. 787 She arms herself and draws up all her wrath. 788 It burned as if she still held regal power 789 she gave up all life to the single thought 790 of quick revenge. Just as a lioness 791 rages when plundered of her suckling cub 792 and follows on his trail the unseen foe, 793 so, Hecuba with rage mixed in her grief 794 forgetful of her years, not her intent, 795 went hastily to Polymnestor, who 796 contrived this dreadful murder, and desired 797 an interview, pretending it was her wish 798 to show him hidden gold, for her lost son. 799 The Odrysian king believed it all: 800 accustomed to the love of gain, he went 801 with her, in secret, to the spot she chose. 802 Then craftily he said in his bland way: 803 “Oh, Hecuba, you need not wait, give now, 804 munificently to your son —and all
13.781	781 lanigerae pecudes nullo ducente secutae. 782 Cui postquam pinus, baculi quae praebuit usum, 783 ante pedes posita est, antemnis apta ferendis,	805 you give, and all that you have given, 806 by the good gods, I swear, shall be his own.” 807 She eyed him sternly as he spoke 808 and swore so falsely.—Then her rage boiled over, 809 and, seconded by all her captive train,

	784 sumptaque harundinibus compacta est fistula centum, 785 senserunt toti pastoria sibila montes, 786 senserunt undae; latitans ego rupe meique 787 Acidis in gremio residens procul auribus hausi 788 talia dicta meis auditaque verba notavi: 789 “Candidior folio nivei, Galatea, ligustri, 790 floridior pratis, longa procerior alno, 791 splendidior vitro, tenero lascivior haedo, 792 levior adsiduo detritis aequore conchis, 793 solibus hibernis, aestiva gratior umbra, 794 nobilior pomis, platano conspectior alta, 795 lucidior glacie, matura dulcior uva, 796 mollior et cygni plumis et lacte coacto 797 798 saevior indomitis eadem Galatea iuvencis, 799 durior annosa quercu, fallacior undis, 800 lentior et salicis virgis et vitibus albis, 801 his inmobilior scopulis, violentior amne, 802 laudato pavone superbior, acrior igni, 803 asperior tribulis, feta truculentior ursa, 804 surdior aequoribus, calcato inmitior hydro, 805 et, quod praecipue vellem tibi demere possem. 806 Non tantum cervo claris latratibus acto, 807 verum etiam ventis volucrique fugacior aura! 808 At bene si noris, pigeat fugisse morasque 809 ipsa tuas damnes et me retinere labores. 810 Sunt mihi, pars montis, vivo pendentia saxo	810 she flew at him and drove her fingers deep 811 in his perfidious eyes; and tore them from 812 his face—and plunged her hands into the raw 813 and bleeding sockets (passion made her strong), 814 defiled with his bad blood. How could she tear 815 his eyes, gone from their seats? She wildly gouged 816 the sightless sockets of his bleeding face! 817 The Thracians, angered by such violence done 818 upon their king, immediately attacked 819 the Trojan matron with their stones and darts 820 but she with hoarse growling and snapping jaws 821 sprang at the stones, and, when she tried to speak, 822 she barked like a fierce dog. The place still bears 823 a name suggested by her hideous change. 824 And she, long mindful! of her old time woe, 825 ran howling dismally in Thracian fields. 826 Her sad fate moved the Trojans and the Greeks, 827 her friends and foes, and all the heavenly gods. 828 Yes all, for even the sister-wife of Jove 829 denied that Hecuba deserved such fate.
13.811	811 antra, quibus nec sol medio sentitur in aestu 812 nec sentitur hiems; sunt poma gravantia ramos, 813 sunt auro similes longis in vitibus uvae,	830 Although Aurora had given aid to Troy, 831 she had no heart nor leisure to be moved 832 by fall of Troy or fate of Hecuba. 833 At home she bore a greater grief and care; 834 her loss of Memnon is afflicting her. 835 Aurora,

	814 sunt et purpureae: tibi et has servamus et illas. 815 Ipsa tuis manibus silvestri nata sub umbra 816 mollia fraga leges, ipsa autumnalia corna 817 prunaque, non solum nigro liventia suco, 818 verum etiam generosa novasque imitantia ceras. 819 Nec tibi castaneae me coniuge, nec tibi deerunt 820 arbutei fetus: omnis tibi serviet arbor. 821 Hoc pecus omne meum est, multae quoque vallibus errant, 822 multas silva tegit, multae stabulantur in antris. 823 Nec, si forte roges, possim tibi dicere, quot sint: 824 pauperis est numerare pecus! De laudibus harum 825 nil mihi credideris: praesens potes ipse videre, 826 ut vix circueant distentum cruribus uber. 827 Sunt, fetura minor, tepidis in ovilibus agni, 828 sunt quoque, par aetas, aliis in ovilibus haedi. 829 Lac mihi semper adest niveum: pars inde bibenda 830 servatur, partem liquefacta coagula durant. 831 Nec tibi deliciae faciles vulgataque tantum 832 munera contingent, dammae leporesque caperque 833 parve columbarum demptusve cacumine nidus: 834 inveni geminos, qui tecum ludere possint, 835 inter se similes, vix ut dignoscere possis, 836 villosae catulos in summis montibus ursae, 837 inveni et dixi “dominae servabimus istos!” 838 Iam modo caeruleo nitidum caput exsere ponto, 839 iam, Galatea, veni, nec munera despice nostra. 840 Certe ego me novi liquidaeque in imagine vidi	his rose-tinted mother, saw 836 him perish by Achilles' deadly spear, 837 upon the Phrygian plain. She saw his death, 838 and the loved rose that lights the dawning hour 839 turned death-pale, and the sky was veiled in clouds. 840 The parent could not bear to see his limbs 841 laid on the final flames. Just as she was, 842 with loose hair streaming round her, she did not 843 disdain to crouch down at the knees of Jove, 844 and said these sad words added to her tears: 845 “Beneath all those whom golden heaven sustains; 846 (inferior, for see, through all the world 847 my temples are so few) I have come now 848 a goddess, to you; not with any hope 849 that you may grant me temples, festivals, 850 and altars, heated with devoted fires: 851 but if you will consider the good deeds, 852 which I, a woman, may yet do for you, 853 when at the dawn I mark the edge of night; 854 then you may think of some reward for me. 855 But that is not my care; nor is it now 856 Aurora's purpose here, that she should plead 857 for honors, though deserved. I come bereaved, 858 of my son Memnon, who in vain bore arms 859 to aid his uncle and in prime of life
13.841	841 nuper aquae, placuitque mihi mea forma videnti. 842 Adspice, sim quantus! Non est hoc corpore maior	860 (0, thus you willed it!) fell stricken by the sword 861 of great Achilles. Give my son, I pray, 862 O highest ruler of the gods, some honor, 863 some

	843 Iuppiter in caelo: nam vos narrare soletis, 844 nescio quem regnare Iovem. Coma plurima torvos 845 prominet in vultus umerosque, ut lucus, obumbrat. 846 Nec mea quod rigidis horrent densissima saetis 847 corpora, turpe puta turpis sine frondibus arbor, 848 turpis equus, nisi colla iubae flaventia velent; 849 850 barba viros hirtaeque decent in corpore saetae. 851 Unum est in media lumen mihi fronte, sed instar 852 ingentis clipei. Quid? non haec omnia magnus 853 Sol videt e caelo? Soli tamen unicus orbis! 854 Adde, quod in vestro genitor meus aequore regnat: 855 hunc tibi do socerum; tantum miserere precesque 856 supplicis exaudi! tibi enim succumbimus uni. 857 Quique Iovem et caelum sperno et penetrabile fulmen, 858 Nerei, te veneror: tua fulmine saevior ira est. — 859 Atque ego contemptus essem patientior huius, 860 si fugeres omnes; sed cur Cyclope repulso 861 Acin amas praefersque meis complexibus Acin? 862 Ille tamen placeatque sibi placeatque licebit, 863 quod nollem, Galatea, tibi; modo copia detur, 864 sentiet esse mihi tanto pro corpore vires! 865 Viscera viva traham divisaque membra per agros 866 perque tuas spargam (sic se tibi misceat!) undas. 867 Uror enim, laesusque exaestuat acrior ignis, 868 cumque suis videor translatam viribus Aetnam 869 pectore ferre meo: nec tu, Galatea, moveris.” 870 Talia nequiquam questus (nam cuncta videbam)	comfort for his death, a little ease 864 his mother's grief.” Jove nodded his assent. 865 Immediately the high-wrought funeral-pile 866 of Memnon fell down with its lofty fire, 867 and volumes of black smoke obscured the day, 868 as streams exhaling their dense rising fogs, 869 exclude the bright sun from the land below. 870 Black ashes fly and, rolling up a shape, 871 retain a form and gather heat and life 872 out of the fire. Their lightness gave them wings, 873 first like a bird and then in fact a bird. 874 The wings move whirring. In the neighboring air 875 uncounted sisters, of one birth and growth 876 together make one noise. Three times they flew 877 around the funeral pile; and thrice the sound 878 accordant of their fluttering wings went swift 879 upon the soft breeze. When they turned about, 880 their fourth flight in the skies divided them. 881 As two fierce races from two hostile camps, 882 clash in their warfare, these bird-sisters with 883 their beaks and crooked claws clashed, passionate, 884 until their tired wings and opposing breasts 885 could not sustain them. And those kindred-foes 886 fell down a sacrifice, memorial, 887 to Memnon's ashes buried in that place. 888 Brave Memnon, author of their birth, has given 889 his name to those birds, marvellously formed,—
13.871	871 surgit et ut taurus vacca furibundus adempta, 872 stare nequit silvaque et notis	890 and from him they are called Memnonides.— 891 now, always when the Sun has passed the twelve 892

	saltibus errat: 873 cum ferus ignaros nec quicquam tale timentes 874 me videt atque Acin “video” que exclamat “et ista 875 ultima sit, faciam, veneris concordia vestrae!” 876 Tantaque vox, quantam Cyclops iratus habere 877 debuit, illa fuit: clamore perhorruit Aetne. 878 Ast ego vicino pavefacta sub aequore mergor, 879 terga fugae dederat conversa Symaethius heros 880 et “fer opem, Galatea, precor, mihi! ferte, parentes” 881 dixerat “et vestris periturum admittite regnis!” 882 Insequitur Cyclops partemque e monte revulsam 883 mittit, et extremus quamvis pervenit ad illum, 884 angulus is molis totum tamen obruit Acin. 885 At nos, quod fieri solum per fata licebat, 886 fecimus, ut vires adsumeret Acis avitas. 887 Puniceus de mole cruor manabat, et intra 888 temporis exiguum rubor evanescere coepit 889 fitque color primo turbati fluminis imbre 890 purgaturque mora; tum moles tacta dehiscit, 891 vivaque per rimas proceraque surgit harundo, 892 osque cavum saxi sonat exsultantibus undis: 893 miraque res, subito media tenus exstitit alvo 894 incinctus iuvenis flexis nova cornua cannis, 895 qui, nisi quod maior, quod toto caerulus ore, 896 Acis erat. Sed sic quoque erat tamen Acis, in amnem 897 versus, et antiquum tenuerunt flumina nomen.” 898 Desierat Galatea loqui, coetuque soluto 899 discedunt placidisque natant Nereides undis. 900 Scylla redit (neque enim medio se credere ponto	signs of the Zodiac, they war again, 893 to perish as a sacrifice for him. 894 So others grieved, while Dymas' royal daughter 895 was barking: but Aurora overcome 896 with lasting sorrows, could not think of her: 897 and even now, she sheds affectionate tears: 898 and sprinkles them as dew on all the world. 899 The Fates did not allow the hope of Troy 900 to be destroyed entirely with her walls. 901 Aeneas, the heroic son of Venus, 902 bore on his shoulders holy images 903 and still another holy weight, his sire, 904 a venerable burden. From all his wealth 905 the pious hero chose this for his care 906 together with his child, Ascanius. 907 Then with a fleet of exiles he sails forth, 908 he leaves Antandrus, leaves the wicked realm 909 and shore of Thrace now dripping with the blood 910 of Polydorus. With fair winds and tide 911 he and his comrades reach Apollo's isle. 912 Good Anius, king of Delos, vigilant 913 for all his subjects' welfare, and as priest 914 devoted to Apollo, took him there 915 into his temple and his home, and showed 916 the city, the famed shrines, and the two trees 917 which once Latona, while in labor, held. 918 They burned sweet incense, adding to it wine, 919 and laid the flesh of cattle in the flames, 920 an offering marked by custom for the god. 921 Then in the palace and its kingly hall, 922 reclining on luxurious couches, they 923 drank flowing wine with Ceres' gifts of food. 924 But old Anchises asked: “O chosen priest 925 of Phoebus, can I be deceived? When first 926 I saw these walls, did you not have a son, 927 and twice two daughters? Is it possible 928 I am mistaken?” Anius replied,— 13.901	901 audet) et aut bibula sine vestibus	929 shaking his temples wreathed with

	errat harena, 902 aut, ubi lassata est, seductos nacta recessus 903 gurgitis, inclusa sua membra refrigerat unda. 904 Ecce fretum scindens alti novus incola ponti, 905 nuper in Euboica versis Anthedone membris, 906 Glaucus adest visaeque cupidine virginis haeret 907 et quaecumque putat fugientem posse morari 908 verba refert; fugit illa tamen veloxque timore 909 pervenit in summum positi prope litora montis. 910 Ante fretum est ingens, apicem conlectus in unum, 911 longa sub arboribus convexus in aequora vertex: 912 constitit hic, et tuta loco, monstrumne deusne 913 ille sit, ignorans, admiraturque colorem 914 caesariemque umeros subiectaque terga tegentem, 915 ultimaque excipiat quod tortilis inguina piscis. 916 Sensit et innitens, quae stabat proxima, moli, 917 “non ego prodigium nec sum fera belua, virgo, 918 sed deus” inquit “aquae: nec maius in aequore Proteus 919 ius habet et Triton Athamantiadesque Palaemon. 920 Ante tamen mortalis eram, sed, scilicet altis 921 deditus aequoribus, tantum exercebar in illis. 922 Nam modo ducebam ducentia retia pisces, 923 nunc in mole sedens moderabar harundine linum. 924 Sunt viridi prato confinia litora, quorum 925 altera pars undis, pars altera cingitur herbis, 926 quas neque cornigerae morsu laesere iuvencae, 927 nec placidae carpsistis oves hirtaeve capellae; 928 non apis inde tulit conlectos semine flores, 929 non data sunt capiti genialia serta, neque umquam 930 falciferae secuere manus; ego	fillets white,— 930 “It can be no mistake, great hero, you 931 did see the father of five children then, 932 (so much the risk of fortune may affect 933 the best of men). You see me now, almost 934 bereft of all. For what assistance can 935 my absent son afford, while he is king, 936 the ruler over Andros—that land named 937 for his name—over which he rules for me? 938 “The Delian god gave to my son the art 939 of augury; and likewise, Liber gave 940 my daughters precious gifts exceeding all 941 my wishes and belief: since, every thing 942 my daughters touched assumed the forms of corn, 943 of sparkling wine, or gray-green olive oil. 944 Most surely, wonderful advantages. 945 “Soon as Atrides, he who conquered Troy 946 had heard of this (for you should not suppose 947 that we, too, did not suffer from your storms) 948 he dragged my daughters there with savage force, 949 from my loved bosom to his hostile camp, 950 and ordered them to feed the Argive fleet, 951 by their divinely given power of touch. 952 “Whichever way they could, they made escape 953 two hastened to Euboea, and two sought 954 their brother's island, Andros. Quickly then 955 an Argive squadron, following, threatened war, 956 unless they were surrendered. The brother's love 957 gave way to fear. And there is reason why 958 you should forgive a timid brother's fear:

	primus in illo
13.931	931 caespite consedi, dum lina madentia sicco, 932 utque recenserem captivos ordine pisces, 933 insuper exposui, quos aut in retia casus 934 aut sua credulitas in aduncos egerat hamos. 935 Res similis fictae (sed quid mihi fingere prodest?): 936 gramine contacto coepit mea praeda moveri 937 et mutare latus terraque, ut in aequore, niti. 938 Dumque moror mirorque simul, fugit omnis in undas 939 turba suas dominumque novum litusque relinquunt. 940 Obstipui dubitoque diu causamque requiro, 941 num deus hoc aliquis, num sucus fecerit herbae. 942 “Quae” tamen “has” inquam “vires habet herba?”,manuque 943 pabula decerpsi decerptaque dente momordi. 944 Vix bene combiberant ignotos guttura sucos, 945 cum subito trepidare intus praecordia sensi 946 alteriusque rapi naturae pectus amore, 947 nec potui restare diu “repetenda” que “numquam 948 terra, vale!” dixi corpusque sub aequora mersi. 949 Di maris exceptum socio dignantur honore, 950 utque mihi quaecumque feram mortalia, demant, 951 Oceanum Tethynque rogant: ego lustror ab illis, 952 et purgante nefas noviens mihi carmine dicto 953 pectora fluminibus iubeor supponere centum; 954 nec mora, diversis lapsi de partibus amnes 955 totaque vertuntur supra caput aequora nostrum. 956 Hactenus acta tibi possum memoranda referre, 957 hactenus haec memini, nec mens mea cetera sensit. 958 Quae postquam rediit, alium me corpore toto 959 ac fueram nuper, neque eundem	959 he had no warrior like Aeneas, none 960 like Hector, by whose prowess you held Troy 961 from its destruction through ten years of war. 962 “Strong chains were brought to hold my daughters' arms. 963 Both lifted suppliant hands, which still were free, 964 to heaven and cried, ‘0, Father Bacchus! give 965 us needed aid!’ And he who had before 966 given them the power of touch, did give them aid— 967 if giving freedom without human shape 968 can be called giving aid.—I never knew 969 by what means they lost shape, and cannot tell; 970 but their calamity is surely known: 971 my daughters were transformed to snow-white doves, 972 white birds of Venus, guardian of your days.” 973 With this and other talk they shared the feast, 974 then left the table and retired to sleep. 975 They rose up with the day, and went at once 976 to hear the oracle of Phoebus speak. 977 He counselled them to leave that land and find 978 their ancient mother and their kindred shores. 979 The king attended them, and gave them gifts 980 when ready to depart; a sceptre to 981 Anchises, and a robe and quiver to 982 his grandson, and he gave a goblet to 983 Aeneas, that which formerly was sent 984 to him by Therses, once his Theban guest. 985 Therses had sent it from Aonian shores; 986 but Alcon the Hylean should be named, 987 for he had made the goblet and inscribed 988 a pictured story on the polished side.

	mente recepi. 960 Hanc ego tum primum viridem ferrugine barbam 13.961	961 caesariemque meam, quam longa per aequora verro, 962 ingentesque umeros et caerula bracchia vidi 963 cruraque pinnigero curvata novissima pisce. 964 Quid tamen haec species, quid dis placuisse marinis, 965 quid iuvat esse deum, si tu non tangeris istis?” 966 Talia dicentem, dicturum plura, reliquit 967 Scylla deum; furit ille inritatusque repulsa 968 prodigiosa petit Titanidos atria Circes.
14.1	1 Iamque Giganteis iniectam faucibus Aetnen 2 arvaque Cyclopum, quid rastra, quid usus aratri 3 nescia nec quicquam iunctis debentia bubus, 4 liquerat Euboicus tumidarum cultor aquarum, 5 liquerat et Zanclen adversaque moenia Rhegi 6 navifragumque fretum, gemino quod litore pressum 7 Ausoniae Siculaeque tenet confinia terrae. 8 Inde manu magna Tyrrhena per aequora raptus 9 herbiferos adiit colles atque atria Glaucus 10 Sole satae Circes, variarum plena ferarum. 11 Quam simul adspexit, dicta acceptaque salute, 12 “diva, dei miserere, precor! nam sola levare 13 tu potes hunc,” dixit “videar modo dignior esse! 14 Quanta sit herbarum, Titani, potentia, nulli 15 quam mihi cognitius, qui sum mutatus ab illis. 16 Neve mei non nota tibi sit causa furoris: 17 litore in Italico, Messenia moenia contra, 18 Scylla mihi visa est; pudor est promissa precesque 19 blanditiasque meas contemptaque verba referre.	1 Now the Euboean dweller in great waves, 2 Glaucus, had left behind the crest of Aetna, 3 raised upward from a giant's head; and left 4 the Cyclops' fields, that never had been torn 5 by harrow or by plough and never were 6 indebted to the toil of oxen yoked; 7 left Zancle, also, and the opposite walls 8 of Rhegium, and the sea, abundant cause 9 of shipwreck, which confined with double shores 10 bounds the Ausonian and Sicilian lands. 11 All these behind him, Glaucus, swimming on 12 with his huge hands through those Tyrrhenian seas, 13 drew near the hills so rich in magic herbs 14 and halls of Circe, daughter of the Sun,— 15 halls filled with men in guise of animals. 16 After due salutations had been given— 17 received by her as kindly—Glaucus said, 18 “You as a goddess, certainly should have 19 compassion upon me, a god; for you 20 alone (if I am worthy of it) can 21 relieve my passion. What the power of herbs 22 can be, Titania, none knows more than I, 23 for by their power I was myself transformed. 24 To make the cause of my strange madness known, 25 I have found Scylla on Italian shores, 26 directly opposite Messenian walls. 27 “It shames me to recount my promises, 28 entreaties, and caresses, and at last 29 rejection of my suit. If you have known 30 a power of incantation, I implore

	20 At tu, sive aliquod regnum est in carmine, carmen 21 ore move sacro, sive expugnantior herba est, 22 utere temptatis operosae viribus herbae. 23 Nec medeare mihi sanesque haec vulnera mando, 24 fineque nil opus est: partem ferat illa caloris.” 25 At Circe (neque enim flammis habet aptius ulla 26 talibus ingenium, seu causa est huius in ipsa, 27 seu Venus indicio facit hoc offensa paterno) 28 talia verba refert. “Melius sequerere volentem 29 optantemque eadem parilique cupidine captam. 30 Dignus eras ultro (poteras certeque) rogari, 14.31	31 et, si spem dederis, mihi crede, rogaberis ultro. 32 Neu dubites adsitque tuae fiducia formae: 33 en ego, cum dea sim, nitidi cum filia Solis, 34 gramine cum tantum, tantum quoque carmine possim, 35 ut tua sim, voveo; spernentem sperne, sequenti 36 redde vices unoque duas ulciscere facto!” 37 Talia temptanti “prius” inquit “in aequore frondes” 38 Glaucus “et in summis nascentur montibus algae, 39 sospite quam Scylla nostri mutentur amores!” 40 Indignata dea est, et laedere quatenus ipsum 41 non poterat (nec vellet amans), irascitur illi, 42 quae sibi praelata est, venerisque offensa repulsa 43 protinus horrendis infamia pabula sucis 44 conterit et tritis Hecateia carmina miscet 45 caerulaque induitur velamina perque ferarum 46 agmen adulantum media procedit ab aula, 47 oppositumque petens contra Zancleia saxa 48 Rhegion ingreditur ferventes aestibus undas,	31 you now repeat that incantation here, 32 with sacred lips—If herbs have greater power, 33 use the tried power of herbs. But I would not 34 request a cure—the healing of this wound. 35 Much better than an end of pain, let her 36 share, and feel with me my impassioned flame.” 37 But Circe was more quick than any other 38 to burn with passion's flame. It may have been 39 her nature or it may have been the work 40 of Venus, angry at her tattling sire. 41 “You might do better,” she replied, “to court 42 one who is willing, one who wants your love, 43 and feels a like desire. You did deserve 44 to win her love, yes, to be wooed yourself. 45 In fact you might be. If you give some hope, 46 you have my word, you shall indeed be wooed. 47 That you may have no doubt, and so retain 48 all confidence in your attraction's power—49 behold! I am a goddess, and I am 50 the daughter also, of the radiant Sun! 51 And I who am so potent with my charms, 52 and I who am so potent with my herbs, 53 wish only to be yours. Despise her who 54 despises you, and her who is attached 55 to you repay with like attachment—so 56 by one act offer each her just reward.” 57 But Glaucus answered her attempt of love, 58 “The trees will sooner grow in ocean waves, 59 the sea-weed sooner grow on mountain tops, 60 than I shall change my love for graceful! Scylla.”

	49 in quibus ut solida ponit vestigia terra 50 summaque decurrit pedibus super aequora siccis. 51 Parvus erat gurges, curvos sinuatus in arcus, 52 grata quies Scyllae; quo se referebat ab aestu 53 et maris et caeli, medio cum plurimus orbe 54 sol erat et minimas a vertice fecerat umbras. 55 Hunc dea praevitiat portentificisque venenis 56 inquinat, hic pressos latices radice nocenti 57 spargit et obscurum verborum ambage novorum 58 ter noviens carmen magico demurmurat ore. 59 Scylla venit mediaque tenus descenderat alvo, 60 cum sua foedari latrantibus inguina monstris
14.61	61 adspicit ac primo credens non corporis illas 62 esse sui partes refugitque abigitque timetque 63 ora proterva canum, sed quos fugit, attrahit una 64 et corpus quaerens femorum crurumque pedumque, 65 Cerbereos rictus pro partibus invenit illis: 66 statque canum rabie subiectaque terga ferarum 67 inguinibus truncis uteroque exstante coercet. 68 Flevit amans Glaucus nimiumque hostiliter usae 69 viribus herbarum fugit conubia Circes; 70 Scylla loco mansit cumque est data copia primum, 71 in Circes odium sociis spoliavit Ulixen; 72 mox eadem Teucras fuerat mersura carinas, 73 ni prius in scopulum, qui nunc quoque saxeus exstat, 74 transformata foret: scopulum quoque navita vitat. 75 Hunc ubi Troianae remis avidamque Charybdim 76 evicere rates, cum iam prope litus adesset 77 Ausonium, Libycas vento referuntur ad oras.	61 The goddess in her jealous rage could not 62 and would not injure him, whom she still loved, 63 but turned her wrath upon the one preferred. 64 She bruised immediately the many herbs 65 most infamous for horrid juices, which, 66 when bruised, she mingled with most artful care 67 and incantations given by Hecate. 68 Then, clothed in azure vestments, she passed through 69 her troop of fawning savage animals, 70 and issued from the center of her hall. 71 Pacing from there to Rhegium, opposite 72 the dangerous rocks of Zancle, she at once 73 entered the tossed waves boiling up with tides: 74 on these as if she walked on the firm shore, 75 she set her feet and, hastening on dry shod, 76 she skimmed along the surface of the deep. 77 Not far away there was an inlet curved, 78 round as a bent bow, which was often used 79 by Scylla as a favorite retreat. 80 There, she withdrew from heat of sea and sky 81 when in the zenith blazed the unclouded sun 82 and cast the shortest shadows on the ground. 83 Circe infected it before that hour, 84 polluting it with monster-breeding drugs. 85 She sprinkled juices over it, distilled 86 from an obnoxious root, and thrice times nine 87 she muttered over it with magic lips, 88 her most mysterious charm involved in words 89

	78 Excipit Aenean illic animoque domoque 79 non bene discidium Phrygii latura mariti 80 Sidonis; inque pyra sacri sub imagine facta 81 incubuit ferro deceptaque decipit omnes. 82 Rursus harenosae fugiens nova moenia terrae 83 ad sedes Erycis fidumque relatus Acesten 84 sacrificat tumulumque sui genitoris honorat; 85 quasque rates Iris Iunonia paene cremarat, 86 solvit et Hippotadae regnum terrasque calenti 87 sulphure fumantes Acheloiadumque relinquit 88 Sirenum scopulos, orbataque praeside pinus 89 Inarimen Prochytenque legit sterilique locatas 90 colle Pithecusas, habitantum nomine dictas.	of strangest import and of dubious thought. 90 Scylla came there and waded in waist deep,
14.91	91 Quippe deum genitor, fraudem et periuria quondam 92 Cercopum exosus gentisque admissa dolosae, 93 in deforme viros animal mutavit, ut idem 94 dissimiles homini possent similesque videri, 95 membraque contraxit naresque a fronte resimas 96 contudit et rugis peraravit anilibus ora 97 totaque velatos flaventi corpora villo 98 misit in has sedes nec non prius abstulit usum 99 verborum et natae dira in periuria linguae: 100 posse queri tantum rauco stridore reliquit. 101 Has ubi praeteriit et Parthenopeia dextra 102 moenia deseruit, laeva de parte canori 103 Aeolidae tumulum et, loca feta palustribus undis, 104 litora Cumarum vivacisque antra Sibyllae 105 intrat, et ut manes veniat per Averna paternos, 106 orat. At illa diu vultum tellure moratum 107 erexit tandemque deo furibunda	91 then saw her loins defiled with barking shapes. 92 Believing they could be no part of her, 93 she ran and tried to drive them back and feared 94 the boisterous canine jaws. But what she fled 95 she carried with her. And, feeling for her thighs, 96 her legs, and feet, she found Cerberian jaws 97 instead. She rises from a rage of dogs, 98 and shaggy backs encircle her shortened loins. 99 The lover Glaucus wept. He fled the embrace 100 of Circe and her hostile power of herbs 101 and magic spells. But Scylla did not leave 102 the place of her disaster; and, as soon 103 as she had opportunity, for hate 104 of Circe, she robbed Ulysses of his men. 105 She would have wrecked the Trojan ships, if she 106 had not been changed beforehand to a rock 107 which to this day reveals a craggy rim. 108 And even the rock awakes the sailors' dread. 109 After the Trojan ships, pushed by their oars, 110 had safely passed by Scylla and the fierce 111 Charybdis, and with care had then approached 112 near the Ausonian shore, a roaring gale 113 bore them far southward to the Libyan coast. 114 And then Sidonian Dido, who was doomed 115 not calmly to endure the loss of her 116 loved Phrygian husband, graciously recepto 108 “magna petis” dixit, “vir factis maxime, cuius 109 dextera per ferrum est, pietas spectata per ignes. 110 Pone tamen, Troiane, metum: potiere petitis 111 Elysiasque domos et regna novissima mundi 112 me duce cognosces simulacraque cara parentis. 113 Invia virtuti nulla est via!” Dixit et auro 114 fulgentem ramum silva Iunonis Avernae 115 monstravit iussitque suo divellere trunco. 116 Paruit Aeneas et formidabilis Orci 117 vidit opes atavosque suos umbramque senilem 118 magnanimi Anchisae; didicit quoque iura locorum, 119 quaeque novis essent adeunda pericula bellis. 120 Inde ferens lassos adverso tramite passus	received 117 Aeneas to her home and her regard: 118 and on a pyre, erected with pretense 119 of holy rites, she fell upon the sword. 120 Deceived herself, she there deceived them all. 121 Aeneas, fleeing the new walls built on 122 that sandy shore, revisited the land 123 of Eryx and Acestes, his true friend. 124 There he performed a hallowed sacrifice 125 and paid due honor to his father's tomb. 126 And presently he loosened from that shore 127 the ships which Iris, Juno's minister, 128 had almost burned; and sailing, passed far off 129 the kingdom of the son of Hippotas, 130 in those hot regions smoking with the fumes 131 of burning sulphur, and he left behind 132 the rocky haunt of Achelous' daughters, 133 the Sirens. Then, when his good ship had lost 134 the pilot, he coasted near Inarime, 135 near Prochyta, and near the barren hill 136 which marks another island, Pithecusae, 137 an island named from strange inhabitants. 138 The father of the gods abhorred the frauds 139 and perjuries of the Cercopians 140 and for the crimes of that bad treacherous race, 141 transformed its men to ugly animals, 142 appearing unlike men, although like men. 143 He had contracted and had bent their limbs, 144 and flattened out their noses, bent back towards 145 their foreheads; he had furrowed every face 146 with wrinkles of old age, and made them live 147 in that spot, after he had covered all 148 their bodies with long yellow ugly hair. 149 Besides all that, he took away from them 150 the use of language and control of tongues, 151 so long inclined to dreadful perjury; 152 and left them always to complain of life 153 and their ill conduct in harsh jabbering.

14.121	121 cum duce Cumaea mollit sermone laborem. 122 Dumque iter horrendum per opaca crepuscula carpit, 123 “seu dea tu praesens, seu dis gratissima” dixit, 124 “numinis instar eris semper mihi meque fatebor 125 muneris esse tui, quae me loca mortis adire, 126 quae loca me visae voluisti evadere mortis. 127 Pro quibus aerias meritis evectus

	ad auras 128 templa tibi statuam, tribuam tibi turis honores.” 129 Respicit hunc vates et suspiratibus haustis 130 “nec dea sum” dixit “nec sacri turis honore 131 humanum dignare caput; neu nescius erres, 132 lux aeterna mihi carituraque fine dabatur, 133 si mea virginitas Phoebo patuisset amanti. 134 Dum tamen hanc sperat dum praecorrumpere donis 135 me cupit, “elige” ait, “virgo Cumaea, quid optes: 136 optatis potiere tuis.” Ego pulveris hausti 137 ostendi cumulum: quot haberet corpora pulvis, 138 tot mihi natales contingere vana rogavi; 139 excidit, ut peterem iuvenes quoque protinus annos. 140 Hos tamen ille mihi dabat aeternamque iuventam, 141 si venerem paterer: contempto munere Phoebi 142 innuba permaneo; sed iam felicior aetas 143 terga dedit, tremuloque gradu venit aegra senectus, 144 quae patienda diu est (nam iam mihi saecula septem 145 acta vides): superest, numeros ut pulveris aequem, 146 ter centum messes, ter centum musta videre. 147 Tempus erit, cum de tanto me corpore parvam 148 longa dies faciet consumptaque membra senecta 149 ad minimum redigentur onus: nec amata videbor 150 nec placuisse deo; Phoebus quoque forsitan ipse 14.151	151 vel non cognoscet vel dilexisse negabit: 152 usque adeo mutata ferar, nullique videnda, 153 voce tamen noscar; vocem mihi fata relinquent.” 154 Talia convexum per iter memorante Sibylla 155 sedibus Euboicam Stygiis emergit in urbem 156 Troius Aeneas sacrisque ex more	154 After Aeneas had passed by all those 155 and seen to his right hand the distant walls 156 guarding the city of Parthenope, 157 he passed on his left hand a mound, 158 grave of the tuneful son of Aeolus. 159 Landing on Cumae's marshy shore, he reached 160 a cavern, home of the long lived Sibylla, 161 and prayed that she would give him at the lake, 162 Avernus, access to his father's shade. 163 She raised her countenance, litatis 157 litora adit nondum nutricis habentia nomen. 158 Hic quoque substiterat per taedia longa laborum 159 Neritius Macareus, comes experientis Ulixei; 160 desertum quondam mediis e rupibus Aetnae 161 noscit Achaemeniden improvisoque repertum 162 vivere miratus “qui de casusve deusve 163 servat, Achaemenide? cur” inquit “barbara Graium 164 prora vehit? petitur vestra quae terra carina?” 165 Talia quaerenti iam non hirsutus amictu, 166 iam suus et spinis conserto tegmine nullis, 167 fatur Achaemenides: “Iterum Polyphemon et illos 168 adspiciam fluidos humano sanguine rictus, 169 hac mihi si potior domus est Ithacique carina, 170 si minus Aenean veneror genitore nec umquam 171 esse satis potero, praestem licet omnia, gratus. 172 Quod loquor et spiro caelumque et sidera solis 173 respicio, possimne ingratus et impius esse? 174 Ille dedit, quod non anima haec Cyclopis in ora 175 venit, et ut iam nunc lumen vitale relinquam, 176 aut tumulo aut certe non illa condar in alvo. 177 Quid mihi tunc animi (nisi si timor abstulit omnem 178 sensum animumque) fuit, cum vos petere alta relictus 179 aequora conspexi? Volui inclamare, sed hosti 180 prodere me timui: vestrae quoque clamor Ulixis	from gazing on 164 the ground, and with an inspiration given 165 to her by influence of the god, she said, 166 “Much you would have, O man of famous deeds, 167 whose courage is attested by the sword, 168 whose filial piety is proved by flame. 169 But, Trojan, have no fear. I grant your wish, 170 and with my guidance you shall look upon 171 the latest kingdom of the world, shall see 172 Elysian homes and your dear father's shade, 173 for virtue there is everywhere a way.” 174 She spoke, and pointed out to him a branch 175 refulgent with bright gold, found in the woods 176 of Juno of Avernus, and commanded him 177 to pluck it from the stem. Aeneas did 178 what she advised him. Then he saw the wealth 179 of the dread Orcus, and he saw his own 180 ancestors, and beheld the aged ghost 181 of great Anchises. There he learned the laws 182 of that deep region, and what dangers must 183 be undergone by him in future wars.

14.181	181 paene rati nocuit. Vidi, cum monte revulsum 182 inmanem scopulum medias permisit in undas; 183 vidi iterum veluti tormenti viribus acta 184 vasta Giganteo iaculantem saxa lacerto 185 et, ne deprimeret fluctus ventusve	184 Retracing with his weary steps the path 185 up to the light, he found relief from toil 186 in converse with the sage Cumaean guide. 187 While in thick dusk he trod the frightful way, 188 “Whether you are a deity,” he said, 189 “Or human and most favored by the gods, 190 to me you always will appear divine. 191 I will confess, too, my

	carinam, 186 pertimui, iam me non esse oblitus in illa. 187 Ut vero fuga vos a certa morte reduxit, 188 ille quidem totam gemebundus obambulat Aetnam 189 praetemptatque manu silvas et luminis orbus 190 rupibus incursat foedataque bracchia tabo 191 in mare protendens gentem exsecratur Achivam 192 atque ait: “O si quis referat mihi casus Ulixem 193 aut aliquem e sociis, in quem mea saeviat ira, 194 viscera cuius edam, cuius viventia dextra 195 membra mea laniem, cuius mihi sanguis inundet 196 guttur et elisi trepident sub dentibus artus: 197 quam nullum aut leve sit damnum mihi lucis ademptae!” 198 Haec et plura ferox; me luridus occupat horror 199 spectantem vultus etiamnum caede madentes 200 crudelesque manus et inanem luminis orbem 201 membraque et humano concretam sanguine barbam. 202 mors erat ante oculos, minimum tamen ipsa doloris: 203 et iam prensurum, iam nunc mea viscera rebar 204 in sua mersurum, mentique haerebat imago 205 temporis illius, quo vidi bina meorum 206 ter quater adfligi sociorum corpora terrae, 207 cum super ipse iacens hirsuti more leonis 208 visceraque et carnes cumque albis ossa medullis 209 semianimesque artus avidam condebat in alvum. 210 Me tremor invasit: stabam sine sanguine maestus;	existence here 192 is due to your kind aid, for by your will 193 I visited the dark abodes of death, 194 and I escaped the death which I beheld. 195 For this great service, when I shall emerge 196 into the sunlit air, I will erect 197 for you a temple and will burn for you 198 sweet incense kindled at the altar flame.” 199 The prophetess looked on him and with sighs, 200 “I am no goddess,” she replied, “nor is 201 it well to honor any mortal head 202 with tribute of the holy frankincense. 203 And, that you may not err through ignorance, 204 I tell you life eternal without end 205 was;offered to me, if I would but yield 206 virginity to Phoebus for his love. 207 And, while he hoped for this and in desire 208 offered to bribe me for my virtue, first 209 with gifts, he said, ‘Maiden of Cumae choose 210 whatever you may wish, and you shall gain 211 all that you wish.’ I pointed to a heap 212 of dust collected there, and foolishly 213 replied, ‘As many birthdays must be given
14.211	211 mandentemque videns eiectantemque cruentas 212 ore dapes et frusta mero glomerata vomentem 213 talia fingebam misero mihi fata parari 214 perque dies multos latitans	214 to me as there are particles of sand.’ 215 “For I forgot to wish them days of changeless youth. 216 He gave long life and offered youth besides, 217 if I would grant his wish. This I refused, 218 I live unwedded still. My happier time 219 has fled away, now comes

	omnemque tremescens 215 ad strepitum, mortemque timens cupidusque moriri, 216 glande famem pellens et mixta frondibus herba, 217 solus, inops, exspes, leto poenaeque relictus 218 hanc procul adspexi longo post tempore navem 219 oravique fugam gestu ad litusque cucurri — 220 et movi. Graiumque ratis Troiana recepit! 221 Tu quoque pande tuos, comitum gratissime, casus 222 et ducis et turbae, quae tecum est credita ponto.” 223 Aeolon ille refert Tusco regnare profundo, 224 Aeolon Hippotaden, cohibentem carcere ventos; 225 quos bovis inclusos tergo, memorabile munus, 226 Dulichium sumpsisse ducem flatuque secundo 227 lucibus isse novem et terram adspexisse petitam; 228 proxima post nonam cum sese aurora moveret, 229 invidia socios praedaeque cupidine victos, 230 esse ratos aurum, dempsisse ligamina ventis; 231 cum quibus isse retro, per quas modo venerat undas, 232 Aeoliique ratem portus repetisse tyranni. 233 “Inde Lami veterem Laestrygonis” inquit “in urbem 234 venimus. Antiphates terra regnabat in illa. 235 Missus ad hunc ego sum, numero comitante duorum, 236 vixque fuga quaesita salus comitique mihique: 237 tertius e nobis Laestrygonis impia tinxit 238 ora cruore suo. Fugientibus instat et agmen 239 concitat Antiphates. Coeunt et saxa trabesque 240 coniciunt merguntque viros merguntque carinas.	with tottering step 220 infirm old age, which I shall long endure. 221 You find me ending seven long centuries, 222 and there remain for me, before my years 223 equal the number of those grains of sand, 224 three hundred harvests, three hundred vintages! 225 The time will come, when long increase of days 226 will so contract me from my present size 227 and so far waste away my limbs with age 228 that I shall dwindle to a trifling weight, 229 so trifling, it will never be believed 230 I once was loved and even pleased a god. 231 Perhaps, even Phoebus will not recognize me, 232 or will deny he ever bore me love. 233 But, though I change till eye would never know me, 234 my voice shall live, the fates will leave my voice.” 235 Sibylla with such words beguild their way 236 from Stygian realms up to the Euboean town. 237 Trojan Aeneas, after he had made 238 due sacrifice in Cumae, touched the shore 239 that had not yet been given his nurse's name. 240 There Macareus of Neritus had come, 241 companion of long tried Ulysses, there 242 he rested, weary of his lengthened toils. 243 He recognized one left in Aetna's cave, 244 greek Achaemenides, and, all amazed 245 to find him yet alive, he said to him, 246 “What chance, or what god, Achaemenides, 247 preserves you? Why is this barbarian ship 248 conveying you a Greek? What land is sought?” 249 No longer ragged in the clothes he wore 250 and his own master, wearing clothes not tacked 251 with sharp thorns, Achaemenides replied, 252 “Again may I see Polyphemus' jaws 253 out-streaming with their slaughtered human blood; 254 if my own home and Ithaca give more 255 delight to me than this barbarian bark, 256 or if I venerate Aeneas less 257 than my own father. If I should give my all, 258 it never could express my gratitude, 259 that I can speak and breath, and see the heavens 260 illuminated by the gleaming sun— 261 how can I be ungrateful and forget all this? 262 Because of him these limbs of mine were spared 263 the Cyclops' jaws; and, though I were even now 264 to leave the light of life, I should at worst
14.241	241 Una tamen, quae nos ipsumque vehebat Ulixen,	265 be buried in a tomb—not in his maw. 266 “What were my feelings when

	242 effugit. Amissa sociorum parte dolentes 243 multaque conquesti terris adlabimur illis, 244 quas procul hinc cernis (procul hinc, mihi crede, videnda 245 insula, visa mihi!), tuque o iustissime Troum, 246 nate dea (neque enim finito Marte vocandus 247 hostis es, Aenea), moneo, fuge litora Circes. 248 Nos quoque Circaeo religata in litore pinu, 249 Antiphatae memores inmansuetique Cyclopis, 250 ire negabamus vel tecta ignota subire; 251 sorte sumus lecti, sors me fidumque Politen 252 Eurylochumque simul nimiique Elpenora vini 253 bisque novem socios Circaea ad moenia misit. 254 Quae simul attigimus stetimusque in limine tecti, 255 mille lupi mixtaeque lupis ursique leaeque 256 occursu fecere metum, sed nulla timenda 257 nullaque erat nostro factura in corpore vulnus. 258 Quin etiam blandas movere per aera caudas 259 nostraque adulantes comitant vestigia, donec 260 excipiunt famulae perque atria marmore tecta 261 ad dominam ducunt: pulchro sedet illa recessu, 262 sollemni solio, pallamque induta nitentem 263 insuper aurato circumvelatur amictu. 264 Nereides nymphaeque simul, quae vellera motis 265 nulla trahunt digitis nec fila sequentia ducunt: 266 gramina disponunt sparsosque sine ordine flores 267 secernunt calathis variasque coloribus herbas; 268 ipsa quod hae faciunt opus, exigit, ipsa, quis usus 269 quove sit in folio, quae sit concordia mixtis, 270 novit et advertens pensas examinat herbas.	(unless indeed 267 my terror had deprived me of all sense) left there, 268 I saw you making for the open sea? 269 I wished to shout aloud, but was afraid 270 it would betray me to the enemy. 271 The shoutings of Ulysses nearly caused 272 destruction of your ship and there I saw 273 the Cyclops, when he tore a crag away 274 and hurled the huge rock in the whirling waves; 275 I saw him also throw tremendous stones 276 with his gigantic arms. They flew afar, 277 as if impelled by catapults of war, 278 I was struck dumb with terror lest 279 the waves or stones might overwhelm the ship, 280 forgetting that I still was on the shore! 281 “But when your flight had saved you from that death 282 of cruelty, the Cyclops, roaring rage, 283 paced all about Mount Aetna, groping through 284 its forests with his outstretched arms. Deprived 285 of sight, he stumbled there against the rocks, 286 until he reached the sea; and stretching out 287 his gore stained arms into its waters there, 288 he cursed all of the Grecian race, and said, 289 ‘Oh! that some accident would carry back 290 Ulysses to me, or but one of his 291 companions; against whom my rage 292 might vent itself, whose joints my hand might tear 293 whose blood might drench my throat, whose living limbs 294 might quiver in my teeth. How trifling then,

14.271	271 Haec ubi nos vidit, dicta acceptaque salute, 272 diffudit vultus et reddidit omina voce. 273 Nec mora, misceri tosti iubet hordea grani 274 mellaque vimque meri cum lacte coagula passo, 275 quique sub hac lateant furtim dulcedine, sucos 276 adicit. Accipimus sacra data pocula dextra. 277 Quae simul arenti sitientes hausimus ore, 278 et tetigit summos virga dea dira capillos, 279 (et pudet et referam!) saetis horrescere coepi 280 nec iam posse loqui, pro verbis edere raucum 281 murmur et in terram toto procumbere vultu; 282 osque meum sensi pando occallescere rostro, 283 colla tumere toris, et qua modo pocula parte 284 sumpta mihi fuerant, illa vestigia feci, 285 cumque eadem passis (tantum medicamina possunt!) 286 claudor hara, solumque suis caruisse figura 287 vidimus Eurylochum: solus data pocula fugit. 288 Quae nisi vitasset, pecoris pars una manerem 289 nunc quoque saetigeri, nec tantae cladis ab illo 290 certior ad Circen ultor venisset Ulixes. 291 Pacifer huic dederat florem Cyllenius album, 292 moly vocant superi, nigra radice tenetur; 293 tutus eo monitisque simul caelestibus intrat 294 ille domum Circes, et ad insidiosa vocatus 295 pocula, conantem virga mulcere capillos 296 reppulit et stricto pavidam deterruit ense. 297 Inde fides dextraeque datae, thalamoque receptus 298 coniugii dotem sociorum corpora poscit. 299 Spargimur ignotae sucis melioribus herbae	295 how insignificant would be the loss, 296 of my sight which he took from me!’ 297 “All this 298 and more he said. A ghastly horror took 299 possession of me when I saw his face 300 and every feature streaming yet with blood, 301 his ruthless hands, and the vile open space 302 where his one eye had been, and his coarse limbs, 303 and his beard matted through with human blood. 304 “It seemed as if Death were before my eyes, 305 yet that was but the least part of my woe. 306 I seemed upon the point of being caught, 307 my flesh about to be the food of his. 308 Before my mind was fixed the time I saw 309 two bodies of my loved companions 310 dashed three or four times hard against the ground, 311 when he above them, like a lion, crouched, 312 devouring quickly in his hideous jaws, 313 their entrails and their flesh and their crushed bones, 314 white marrowed, and their mangled quivering limbs. 315 A trembling fear seized on me as I stood 316 pallid and without power to move from there, 317 while I recalled him chewing greedily, 318 and belching out his bloody banquet from 319 his huge mouth—vomiting crushed pieces mixed 320 with phlegmy wine—and I feared such a doom 321 in readiness, awaited wretched me. 322 “Most carefully concealed for many days, 323 trembling at every sound and fearing death, 324 although desiring death; I fed myself

	300 percutimurque caput conversae verbere virgae,
14.301	301 verbaque dicuntur dictis contraria verbis. 302 Quo magis illa canit, magis hoc tellure levati 303 erigimur, saetaeque cadunt, bifidosque relinquit 304 rima pedes, redeunt umeri et subiecta lacertis 305 bracchia sunt: flentem flentes amplectimur ipsi 306 haeremusque ducis collo nec verba locuti 307 ulla priora sumus quam nos testantia gratos. 308 Annua nos illic tenuit mora, multaque praesens 309 tempore tam longo vidi, multa auribus hausi, 310 hoc quoque cum multis, quod clam mihi rettulit una 311 quattuor e famulis ad talia sacra paratis. 312 Cum duce namque meo Circe dum sola moratur, 313 illa mihi niveo factum de marmore signum 314 ostendit iuvenale, gerens in vertice picum, 315 aede sacra positum multisque insigne coronis. 316 Quis foret et quare sacra coleretur in aede, 317 cur hanc ferret avem, quaerenti et scire volenti 318 “accipe” ait “Macareu, dominaeque potentia quae sit 319 hinc quoque disce meae: tu dictis adice mentem! 320 Picus in Ausoniis, proles Saturnia terris 321 rex fuit, utilium bello studiosus equorum; 322 forma viro, quam cernis, erat: licet ipse decorem 323 adspicias fictaque probes ab imagine veram. 324 Par animus formae; nec adhuc spectasse per annos 325 quinquennem poterat Graia quater Elide pugnam. 326 Ille suos dryadas Latiis in montibus ortas 327 verterat in vultus, illum fontana petebant 328 numina, naiades, quas Albula, quasque Numici,	325 on grass and acorns, mixed with leaves; alone 326 and destitute, despondent unto death, 327 awaiting my destruction I lost hope. 328 In that condition a long while, at last 329 I saw a ship not far off, and by signs 330 prayed for deliverance, as I ran in haste, 331 down to the shore. My prayers prevailed on them. 332 A Trojan ship took in and saved a Greek! 333 “And now, O dearest to me of all men, 334 tell me of your adventures, of your chief 335 and comrades, when you sailed out on the sea.”

	329 quas Anienis aquae cursuque brevissimus Almo 330 Narve tulit praeceps et opacae Farfarus umbrae, 14.331	331 quaeque colunt Scythicae stagnum nemorale Dianae 332 finitimosque lacus; spretis tamen omnibus unam 333 ille colit nymphen, quam quondam in colle Palati 334 dicitur Ionio peperisse Venilia Iano. 335 Haec ubi nubilibus primum maturuit annis, 336 praeposito cunctis Laurenti tradita Pico est, 337 rara quidem facie, sed rarior arte canendi, 338 unde Canens dicta est: silvas et saxa movere 339 et mulcere feras et flumina longa morari 340 ore suo volucresque vagas retinere solebat. 341 Quae dum feminea modulatur carmina voce, 342 exierat tecto Laurentes Picus in agros, 343 indigenas fixurus apros, tergumque premebat 344 acris equi, laevaque hastilia bina ferebat, 345 poeniceam fulvo chlamydem contractus ab auro. 346 Venerat in silvas et filia Solis easdem, 347 utque novas legeret fecundis collibus herbas, 348 nomine dicta suo Circaea reliquerat arva. 349 Quae simul ac iuvenem, virgultis abdita, vidit, 350 obstipuit: cecidere manu, quas legerat, herbae, 351 flammaque per totas visa est errare medullas. 352 Ut primum valido mentem conlegit ab aestu, 353 quid cuperet, fassura fuit: ne posset adire, 354 cursus equi fecit circumfususque satelles. 355 “Non” ait “effugies, vento rapiare licebit, 356 si modo me novi, si non evanuit omnis 357 herbarum virtus et non mea carmina fallunt.”	336 Then Macareus told him of Aeolus, 337 the son of Hippotas, whose kingdom is 338 the Tuscan sea, whose prison holds the winds, 339 and how Ulysses had received the winds 340 tied in a bull's hide bag, an awesome gift, 341 how nine days with a favoring breeze they sailed 342 and saw afar their longed for native land. 343 How, as the tenth day dawned, the crew was moved 344 by envy and a lust for gold, which they 345 imagined hidden in that leathern bag 346 and so untied the thong which held the winds. 347 These, rushing out, had driven the vessel back 348 over the waves which they had safely passed, 349 back to the harbor of King Aeolus. 350 “From there,” he said, “we sailed until we reached 351 the ancient city of Lamus, Laestrygon.— 352 Antiphates was reigning in that land, 353 and I was sent with two men of our troop, 354 ambassadors to see him. Two of us 355 escaped with difficulty, but the third 356 stained the accursed Lestrygonian's jaws 357 with his devoted blood. Antiphates 358 pursued us, calling out his murderous horde. 359 They came and, hurling stones and heavy beams, 360 they overwhelmed and sank both ships and men. 361 One ship escaped, on which Ulysses sailed. 362 “Grieving, lamenting for companions lost, 363 we finally arrived at that land which 364 you may discern far off, and, trust my word, 365 far off it should be seen—I saw it near!

	358 Dixit et effigiem, nullo cum corpore, falsi 359 finxit apri praeterque oculos transcurrere regis 360 iussit et in densum trabibus nemus ire videri,
14.361	361 plurima qua silva est et equo loca pervia non sunt. 362 Haud mora: continuo praedae petit inscius umbram 363 Picus equique celer spumantia terga relinquit 364 spemque sequens vanam silva pedes errat in alta. 365 Concipit illa preces et verba precantia dicit 366 ignotosque deos ignoto carmine adorat, 367 quo solet et niveae vultum confundere Lunae 368 et patrio capiti bibulas subtexere nubes. 369 Tum quoque cantato densetur carmine caelum, 370 et nebulas exhalat humus, caecisque vagantur 371 limitibus comites, et abest custodia regis. 372 Nacta locum tempusque “per, o, tua lumina” dixit, 373 “quae mea ceperunt, perque hanc, pulcherrime, formam, 374 quae facit, ut supplex tibi sim dea, consule nostris 375 ignibus et socerum, qui pervidet omnia, Solem 376 accipe, nec durus Titanida despice Circen!” 377 Dixerat. Ille ferox ipsamque precesque relinquit 378 et “quaecumque es” ait, “non sum tuus: altera captum 379 me tenet et teneat per longum, comprecor, aevum! 380 Nec venere externa socialia foedera laedam, 381 dum mihi Ianigenam servabunt fata Canentem!” 382 Saepe retemptatis precibus Titania frustra 383 “non impune feres, neque” ait “reddere Canenti, 384 laesaque quid faciat, quid amans, quid femina disces.” 385 386 Tum bis ad occasum, bis se convertit ad ortus, 387 ter iuvenem baculo tetigit, tria	366 And oh most righteous Trojan, Venus' son, 367 Aeneas, whom I call no more a foe, 368 I warn you now: avoid the shores of Circe. 369 “We moored our ship beside that country too; 370 but, mindful of the dangers we had run 371 with Laestrygons and cruel Polyphemus, 372 refused to go ashore. Ulysses chose 373 some men by lot and told them to seek out 374 a roof which he had seen among the trees. 375 The lot took me, then staunch Polytes next, 376 Eurylochus, Elpenor fond of wine, 377 and eighteen more and brought us to the walls 378 of Circe's dwelling. 379 “As we drew near and stood 380 before the door, a thousand wolves rushed out 381 from woods near by, and with the wolves there ran 382 she bears and lionesses, dread to see. 383 And yet we had no cause to fear, for none 384 would harm us with the smallest scratch. 385 Why, they in friendship even wagged their tails 386 and fawned upon us, while we stood in doubt. 387 “Then handmaids took us in and led us on 388 through marble halls to the presence of their queen. 389 She, in a beautiful recess, sat on her throne, 390 clad richly in a shining purple robe, 391 and over it she wore a golden veil. 392 Nereids and nymphs, who never carded fleece 393 with motion of their fingers, nor drew out 394 a ductile thread, were setting potent herbs 395 in proper order and arranging them

	carmina dixit. 388 Ille fugit, sed se solito velocius ipse 389 currere miratur: pennas in corpore vidit, 390 seque novam subito Latiis accedere silvis
14.391	391 indignatus avem duro fera robora rostro 392 figit et iratus longis dat vulnera ramis. 393 Purpureum chlamydis pennae traxere colorem, 394 fibula quod fuerat vestemque momorderat aurum, 395 pluma fit, et fulvo cervix praecingitur auro, 396 nec quicquam antiquum Pico nisi nomina restat. 397 Interea comites, clamato saepe per agros 398 nequiquam Pico nullaque in parte reperto, 399 inveniunt Circen (nam iam tenuaverat auras 400 passaque erat nebulas ventis ac sole recludi) 401 criminibusque premunt veris regemque reposcunt 402 vimque ferunt saevisque parant incessere telis. 403 Illa nocens spargit virus sucosque veneni 404 et Noctem noctisque deos Ereboque chaoque 405 convocat et longis Hecaten ululatibus orat: 406 exsiluere loco (dictu mirabile) silvae, 407 ingemuitque solum, vicinaque palluit arbor, 408 sparsaque sanguineis maduerunt pabula guttis, 409 et lapides visi mugitus edere raucos, 410 et latrare canes et humus serpentibus atris 411 squalere et tenues animae volitare videntur. 412 Attonitum monstris vulgus pavet: illa paventis 413 ora venenata tetigit mirantia virga, 414 cuius ab attactu variarum monstra ferarum 415 in iuvenes veniunt: nulli sua mansit imago. 416 Sparserat occiduus Tartessia litora Phoebus, 417 et frustra coniunx oculis animoque	396 in baskets—a confusing wealth of flowers 397 were scattered among leaves of every hue: 398 and she prescribed the tasks they all performed. 399 “She knew the natural use of every leaf 400 and combinations of their virtues, when 401 mixed properly; and, giving them her close 402 attention, she examined every herb 403 as it was weighed. When she observed us there, 404 and had received our greetings and returned them, 405 she smiled, as if we should be well received. 406 At once she had her maidens bring a drink 407 of parched barley, of honey and strong wine, 408 and curds of milk. And in the nectarous draught 409 she added secretly her baleful drugs. 410 “We took the cups presented to us by 411 her sacred right hand; and, as soon as we, 412 so thirsty, quaffed them with our parching mouths, 413 that ruthless goddess with her outstretched wand 414 touched lightly the topmost hair upon our heads. 415 (Although I am ashamed, I tell you this) 416 stiff bristles quickly grew out over me, 417 and I could speak no more. Instead of words 418 I uttered hoarse murmurs and towards the ground 419 began to bend and gaze with all my face. 420 I felt my mouth take on a hardened skin 421 with a long crooked snout, and my neck swell 422 with muscles. With the very member which 423 a moment earlier had received the cup 424 I now made tracks in sand of the palace court. 425 Then with my friends, who suffered a like change

	Canentis 418 exspectatus erat: famuli populusque per omnes 419 discurrunt silvas atque obvia lumina portant; 420 nec satis est nymphae flere et lacerare capillos
14.421	421 et dare plangorem (facit et tamen omnia) seque 422 proripit ac Latios errat vesana per agros. 423 Sex illam noctes, tetidem redeuntia solis 424 lumina viderunt inopem somnique cibique 425 per iuga, per valles, qua fors ducebat, euntem. 426 Ultimus adspexit Thybris luctuque viaque 427 fessam et iam longa ponentem corpora ripa. 428 Illic cum lacrimis ipso modulata dolore 429 verba sono tenui maerens fundebat, ut olim 430 carmina iam moriens canit exequialia cygnus. 431 Luctibus extremis teneras liquefacta medullas 432 tabuit inque leves paulatim evanuit auras; 433 fama tamen signata loco est, quem rite Canentem 434 nomine de nymphae veteres dixere Camenae.” 435 Talia multa mihi longum narrata per annum 436 visaque sunt. Resides et desuetudine tardi 437 rursus inire fretum, rursus dare vela iubemur. 438 Ancipitesque vias et iter Titania vastum 439 dixerat et saevi restare pericula ponti. 440 Pertimui, fateor, nactusque hoc litus adhaesi.” 441 Finierat Macareus. Urnaque Aeneia nutrix 442 condita marmoreo tumulo breve carmen habebat: 443 HIC ME CAIETAM NOTAE PIETATIS ALUMNUS 444 EREPTAM ARGOLICO QUO DEBUIT IGNE CREMAVIT. 445 Solvitur herboso religatus ab aggere funis, 446 et procul insidias infamataeque	426 (charms have such power!) I was prisoned in a stye. 427 “We saw Eurylochus alone avoid 428 our swinish form, for he refused the cup. 429 If he had drained it, I should still remain 430 one of a bristly herd. Nor would his news 431 have made Ulysses sure of our disaster 432 and brought a swift avenger of our fate. 433 “Peace bearing Hermes gave him a white flower 434 from a black root, called Moly by the gods. 435 With this protection and the god's advice 436 he entered Circe's hall and, as she gave 437 the treacherous cup and with her magic wand 438 essayed to touch his hair, he drove her back 439 and terrified her with his quick drawn sword. 440 She gave her promise, and, right hands exchanged, 441 he was received unharmed into her couch, 442 where he required the bodies of his friends 443 awarded him, as his prized marriage gift. 444 “We then were sprinkled with more favored juice 445 of harmless plants, and smitten on the head 446 with the magic wand reversed. And new charms were 447 repeated, all conversely to the charms 448 which had degraded us. Then, as she sings, 449 more and yet more we raise ourselves erect, 450 the bristles fall off and the fissures leave 451 our cloven feet, our shoulders overcome 452 their lost shape and our arms become attached, 453 as they had been before. With tears of joy 454 we all embrace him, also weeping tears; 455 and we cling fondly to our chieftain's neck;—

	relinquunt 447 tecta deae lucosque petunt, ubi nubilus umbra 448 in mare cum flava prorumpit Thybris harena; 449 Faunigenaeque domo potitur nataque Latini, 450 non sine Marte tamen: bellum cum gente feroci 14.451	451 suscipitur, pactaque furit pro coniuge Turnus. 452 Concurrit Latio Tyrrhenia tota, diuque 453 ardua sollicitis victoria quaeritur armis. 454 Auget uterque suas externo robore vires, 455 et multi Rutulos, multi Troiana tuentur 456 castra. Neque Aeneas Euandri ad moenia frustra, 457 at Venulus frustra profugi Diomedis ad urbem 458 venerat: ille quidem sub Iapyge maxima Dauno 459 moenia condiderat dotaliaque arva tenebat. 460 Sed Venulus Turni postquam mandata peregit 461 auxilium petiit, vires Aetolius heros 462 excusat: nec se aut soceri committere pugnae 463 velle sui populos, aut quos e gente suorum 464 armet habere ullos, “neve haec commenta putetis, 465 admonitu quamquam luctus renoventur amari 466 perpetiar memorare tamen. Postquam alta cremata est 467 Ilion et Danaas paverunt Pergama flammas, 468 Naryciusque heros, a virgine virgine rapta, 469 quam meruit poenam solus, digessit in omnes, 470 spargimur et ventis inimica per aequora rapti 471 fulmina, noctem, imbres, iram caelique marisque 472 perpetimur Danai cumulumque Capherea cladis. 473 Neve morer referens tristes ex ordine casus, 474 Graecia tum potuit Priamo quoque flenda videri. 475 Me tamen armiferae servatum cura Minervae	456 not one of us could say a single word 457 till thus we had attested gratitude.” 458 “The full space of a year detained us there, 459 and I, remaining that long stretch of time, 460 saw many things and heard as much besides: 461 and this among the many other things, 462 was told me secretly by one of the four 463 handmaidens of those rites. While Circe passed 464 her time from all apart except my chief, 465 she brought me to a white marble shape, a youth 466 who bore a woodpecker upon his head. 467 It stood erected in a hallowed place, 468 adorned with many wreaths. When I had asked 469 the statue's name and why he stood revered 470 in that most sacred temple, and what caused 471 that bird he carried on his head; she said:— 472 ‘Listen, Macareus, and learn from this tale too 473 the power of Circe, and weigh the knowledge well!’ 474 “Picus, offspring of Saturn, was the king 475 of the Ausonian land, one very fond 476 of horses raised for war. The young man's form 477 was just what you now see, and had you known 478 him as he lived, you would not change a line. 479 His nature was as noble as his shape. 480 He could not yet have seen the steeds contend 481 four times in races held with each fifth year 482 at Grecian Elis. But his good looks had charmed 483 the dryads born on Latin hills, Naiads 484 would pine for him—both goddesses of spring 485 and goddesses of fountains, pined for him, 486 and nymphs that live in streaming Albula, 487 Numicus, Anio's course, brief flowing Almo, 488 and rapid Nar and Farfarus, so cool 489 in its delightful shades; all these and those 490 which haunt the forest lake of Scythian 491 Diana and the other nearby lakes. 492 “ ‘But, heedless of all these, he loved a nymph 493 whom on the hill, called Palatine, 'tis said, 494 Venilia bore to Janus double faced. 495 When she had

	476 fluctibus eripuit, patriis sed rursus ab agris 477 pellor, et antiquo memores de vulnere poenas 478 exigit alma Venus, tantosque per alta labores 479 aequora sustinui, tantos terrestribus armis, 480 ut mihi felices sint illi saepe vocati,	reached the age of marriage, she 496 was given to Picus Laurentine, preferred 497 by her above all others—wonderful 498 indeed her beauty, but more wonderful 499 her skill in singing, from which art they called 500 her Canens. The fascination of her voice 501 would move the woods and rocks and tame wild beasts, 502 and stay long rivers, and it even detained 503 the wandering bird. Once, while she sang a lay
14.481	481 quos communis hiems importunusque Caphereus 482 mersit aquis, vellemque horum pars una fuissem. 483 Ultima iam passi comites belloque fretoque 484 deficiunt finemque rogant erroris, at Acmon 485 fervidus ingenio, tum vero et cladibus asper, 486 “quid superest, quod iam patientia nostra recuset 487 ferre, viri?” dixit; “quid habet Cytherea, quod ultra 488 (velle puta!) faciat? Nam dum peiora timentur, 489 est locus in vulnus: sors autem ubi pessima rerum, 490 sub pedibus timor est securaque summa malorum. 491 Audiat ipsa licet, et, quod facit, oderit omnes 492 sub Diomede viros, odium tamen illius omnes 493 spernimus: et magno stat magna potentia nobis!” 494 Talibus iratam Venerem Pleuronius Acmon 495 instimulat verbis stimulisque resuscitat iram. 496 Dicta placent paucis: numeri maioris amici 497 Acmona corripimus; cui respondere volenti 498 vox pariter vocisque via est tenuata, comaeque 499 in plumas abeunt, plumis nova colla teguntur 500 pectoraque et tergum, maiores bracchia pennas 501 accipiunt, cubitusque leves sinuatur in alas. 502 Magna pedis digitos pars occupat, oraque cornu 503 indurata rigent finemque in acumine ponunt.	504 with high, clear voice, Picus on his keen horse 505 rode in Laurentian fields to hunt the boar, 506 two spears in his left hand, his purple cloak 507 fastened with gold. The daughter of the Sun 508 wandered in woods near by to find new herbs 509 growing on fertile hills, for she had left 510 Circaean fields called so from her own name. 511 “ ‘From a concealing thicket she observed 512 the youth with wonder. All the gathered herbs 513 dropped from her hands, forgotten, to the ground 514 and a hot fever-flame seemed to pervade 515 her marrow. When she could collect her thought 516 she wanted to confess her great desire, 517 but the swift horse and his surrounding guards 518 prevented her approach. “Still you shall not 519 escape me,” she declared, “although you may 520 be borne on winds, if I but know myself, 521 and if some potency in herbs remains, 522 and if my art of charms does not deceive.” 523 “ ‘Such were her;thoughts, and then she formed 524 an image of a bodiless wild swine 525 and let it cross the trail before the king 526 and rush into a woodland dense with trees, 527 which fallen trunks made pathless for his horse. 528 Picus at once, unconscious of all harm, 529 followed the phantom-prey and, hastily 530 quitting the reeking back of his good steed, 531 he wandered in pursuit of a vain hope, 532 on foot through that deep wood. She seized the chance 533 and by her incantation called strange gods

	504 Hunc Lycus, hunc Idas et cum Rhexenore Nycteus, 505 hunc miratur Abas: et dum mirantur, eandem 506 accipiunt faciem, numerusque ex agmine maior 507 subvolat et remos plausis circumvolat alis. 508 Si volucrum quae sit dubiarum forma, requiris, 509 ut non cygnorum, sic albis proxima cygnis. 510 Vix equidem has sedes et Iapygis arida Dauni
14.511	511 arva gener teneo minima cum parte meorum.” 512 Hactenus Oenides. Venulus Calydonia regna 513 Peucetiosque sinus Messapiaque arva relinquit. 514 In quibus antra videt, quae multa nubila silva 515 et levibus cannis manantia semicaper Pan 516 nunc tenet, at quodam tenuerunt tempore nymphae. 517 Apulus has illa pastor regione fugatas 518 terruit et primo subita formidine movit, 519 mox, ubi mens rediit et contempsere sequentem, 520 ad numerum motis pedibus duxere choreas. 521 Improbat has pastor, saltuque imitatus agresti 522 addidit obscenis convicia rustica dictis, 523 nec prius os tacuit, quam guttura condidit arbor: 524 arbore enim sucoque licet cognoscere mores; 525 quippe notam linguae bacis oleaster amaris 526 exhibet: asperitas verborum cessit in illas. 527 Hinc ubi legati rediere, negata ferentes 528 arma Aetola sibi, Rutuli sine viribus illis 529 bella instructa gerunt, multumque ab utraque cruoris 530 parte datur; fert ecce avidas in pinea Turnus 531 texta faces, ignesque timent, quibus unda pepercit. 532 Iamque picem et ceras alimentaque cetera flammae	534 with a strange charm, which had the power to hide 535 the white moon's features and draw thirsty clouds 536 about her father's head. The changing sky 537 then lowered more black at each repeated tone 538 of incantation, and the ground exhaled 539 its vapours, while his people wandered there 540 along the darkened paths until no guard 541 was near to aid the imperiled king. 542 “ ‘Having now gained an opportunity 543 and place, she said, “ O, youth most beautiful! 544 By those fine eyes, which captivated mine, 545 and by that graceful person, which brings me, 546 even me, a goddess, suppliant to you, 547 have pity on my passion; let the Sun, 548 who looks on all things, be your father-in-law; 549 do not despise Circe, the Titaness.” 550 “But fiercely he repelled her and her prayer, 551 “Whoever you may be, you are not mine,” 552 he said. “Another lady has my heart. 553 I pray that for a lengthening space of time 554 she may so hold me. I will not pollute 555 conjugal ties with the unhallowed loves 556 of any stranger, while the Fates preserve 557 to me the child of Janus, my dear Canens.” 558 “‘Titan's daughter, when many pleas had failed, 559 said angrily, “You shall not leave me with 560 impunity, and you shall not return 561 to Canens; and by your experience 562 you shall now learn what can be done by her 563 so slighted—what a woman deep in love

	533 Mulciber urebat perque altum ad carbasa malum 534 ibat, et incurvae fumabant transtra carinae: 535 cum memor has pinus Idaeo vertice caesas 536 sancta deum genetrix tinnitibus aera pulsi 537 aeris et inflati complevit murmure buxi, 538 perque leves domitis invecta leonibus auras 539 “inrita sacrilega iactas incendia dextra, 540 Turne!” ait. “Eripiam, nec me patiente cremabit
14.541	541 ignis edax nemorum partes et membra meorum.” 542 Intonuit dicente dea, tonitrumque secuti 543 cum saliente graves ceciderunt grandine nimbi, 544 aeraque et tumidum subitis concursibus aequor 545 Astraei turbant et eunt in proelia fratres. 546 E quibus alma parens unius viribus usa 547 stuppea praerupit Phrygiae retinacula puppis 548 fertque rates pronas medioque sub aequore mergit; 549 robore mollito lignoque in corpora verso 550 in capitum facies puppes mutantur aduncae, 551 in digitos abeunt et crura natantia remi, 552 quodque prius fuerat, latus est mediisque carina 553 subdita navigiis spinae mutatur in usum, 554 lina comae molles, antemnae bracchia fiunt, 555 caerulus, ut fuerat, color est; quasque ante timebant, 556 illas virgineis exercent lusibus undas 557 naides aequoreae durisque in montibus ortae 558 molle fretum celebrant nec eas sua tangit origo. 559 Non tamen oblitae, quam multa pericula saepe 560 pertulerint pelago, iactatis saepe carinis 561 supposuere manus, nisi siqua vehebat Achivos:	564 can do— and Circe is that slighted love.” 565 “ ‘Then twice she turned herself to face the west 566 and twice to face the East; and three times then 567 she touched the young man with her wand, 568 and sang three incantations. Picus fled, 569 but, marvelling at his unaccustomed speed, 570 he saw new wings, that spread on either side 571 and bore him onward. Angry at the thought 572 of transformation—all so suddenly 573 added a strange bird to the Latian woods, 574 he struck the wild oaks with his hard new beak, 575 and in his rage inflicted many wounds 576 on the long waving branches his wings took 577 the purple of his robe. The piece of gold 578 which he had used so nicely in his robe 579 was changed to golden feathers, and his neck 580 was rich as yellow gold. Nothing remained 581 of Picus as he was except the name. 582 “ ‘While all this happened his attendants called 583 on Picus often but in vain throughout 584 surrounding fields, and finding not a trace 585 of their young king, at length by chance they met 586 with Circe, who had cleared the darkened air 587 and let the clouds disperse before the wind 588 and clear rays of the sun. Then with good cause 589 they blamed her, they demanded the return 590 of their lost king, and with their hunting spears 591 they threatened her. She, sprinkling baleful drugs 592 and poison juices over them, invoked 593 the aid of Night and all the gods of Night

	562 cladis adhuc Phrygiae memores, odere Pelasgos 563 Neritiaeque ratis viderunt fragmina laetis 564 vultibus et laetis videre rigescere puppem 565 vultibus Alcinoi saxumque increscere ligno. 566 Spes erat, in nymphas animata classe marinas, 567 posse metu monstri Rutulum desistere bello: 568 perstat, habetque deos pars utraque, quodque deorum est 569 instar, habent animos; nec iam dotalia regna 570 nec sceptrum soceri, nec te, Lavinia virgo, 14.571	571 sed vicisse petunt deponendique pudore 572 bella gerunt, tandemque Venus victricia nati 573 arma videt, Turnusque cadit, cadit Ardea, Turno 574 sospite dicta potens. Quem postquam barbarus ensis 575 abstulit et tepida latuerunt tecta favilla, 576 congerie e media tum primum cognita praepes 577 subvolat et cineres plausis everberat alis. 578 Et sonus et macies et pallor et omnia, captam 579 quae deceant urbem, nomen quoque mansit in illa 580 urbis; et ipsa suis deplangitur Ardea pennis. 581 Iamque deos omnes ipsamque Aeneia virtus 582 Iunonem veteres finire coegerat iras, 583 cum, bene fundatis opibus crescentis Iuli, 584 tempestivus erat caelo Cythereius heros: 585 ambieratque Venus superos, colloque parentis 586 circumfusa sui “numquam mihi” dixerat “ullo 587 tempore dure pater, nunc sis mitissimus, opto, 588 Aeneaeque meo, qui te de sanguine nostro 589 fecit avum, quamvis parvum des, optime, numen, 590 dummodo des aliquod: satis est inamabile regnum	594 from Erebus and Chaos, and desired 595 the aid of Hecat with long, wailing cries. 596 “ ‘Most wonderful to tell, the forests leaped 597 from fixed localities and the torn soil 598 uttered deep groans, the trees surrounding changed 599 from life-green to sick pallor, and the grass 600 was moistened with besprinkling drops of blood; 601 the stones sent forth harsh longings, unknown dogs 602 barked loudly, and the ground became a mass 603 of filthy snakes, and unsubstantial hosts 604 of the departed flitted without sound. 605 The men all quaked appalled. With magic rod 606 she touched their faces, pale and all amazed, 607 and at her touch the youths took on strange forms 608 of wild animals. None kept his proper shape. 609 “ ‘The setting sun is resting low upon 610 the far Tartessian shores, and now in vain 611 her husband is expected by the eyes 612 of longing Canens. Her slaves and people run 613 about through all the forest, holding lights 614 to meet him. Nor is it enough for that 615 dear nymph to weep and frenzied tear her hair 616 and beat her breast—she did all that and more. 617 Distracted she rushed forth and wandered through 618 the Latin fields. Six nights, six brightening dawns 619 found her quite unrefreshed with food or sleep 620 wandering at random over hill and dale. 621 The Tiber saw her last, with grief and toil 622 wearied and lying on his widespread bank. 623 In tears she poured out words with a faint voice,

	591 adspexisse semel, Stygios semel isse per amnes.” 592 Adsensere dei, nec coniunx regia vultus 593 immotos tenuit placatoque adnuit ore; 594 tum pater “estis” ait “caelesti numine digni, 595 quaeque petis, pro quoque petis: cape, nata, quod optas!” 596 Fatus erat: gaudet gratesque agit illa parenti, 597 perque leves auras iunctis invecta columbis 598 litus adit Laurens, ubi tectus harundine serpit 599 in freta flumineis vicina Numicius undis. 600 Hunc iubet Aeneae, quaecumque obnoxia morti,
14.601	601 abluere et tacito deferre sub aequora cursu; 602 corniger exsequitur Veneris mandata suisque, 603 quidquid in Aenea fuerat mortale, repurgat 604 et respergit aquis: pars optima restitit illi. 605 Lustratum genetrix divino corpus odore 606 unxit et ambrosia cum dulci nectare mixta 607 contigit os fecitque deum, quem turba Quirini 608 nuncupat Indigetem temploque arisque recepit. 609 Inde sub Ascanii dicione binominis Alba 610 resque Latina fuit. Succedit Silvius illi. 611 Quo satus antiquo tenuit repetita Latinus 612 nomina cum sceptro. Clarus subit Alba Latinum. 613 Epytus ex illo est; post hunc Capetusque Capysque, 614 sed Capys ante fuit. Regnum Tiberinus ab illis 615 cepit et in Tusci demersus fluminis undis 616 nomina fecit aquae; de quo Remulusque feroxque 617 Acrota sunt geniti. Remulus maturior annis 618 fulmineo periit, imitator fulminis, ictu. 619 Fratre suo sceptrum moderatior Acrota forti	624 lamenting her sad woe, as when the swan 625 about to die sings a funereal dirge. 626 Melting with grief at last she pined away; 627 her flesh, her bones, her marrow liquified 628 and vanished by degrees as formless air 629 and yet the story lingers near that place, 630 fitly named Canens by old-time Camenae!.’ 631 “Such things I heard and saw through a long year. 632 Sluggish, inactive through our idleness, 633 we were all ordered to embark again 634 out on the deep, again to set our sails. 635 The Titaness explained the doubtful paths, 636 the great extent and peril, of wild seas. 637 I was alarmed, I will confess to you; 638 so, having reached these shores, I have remained.”

	620 tradit Aventino, qui, quo regnarat, eodem 621 monte iacet positus tribuitque vocabula monti. 622 Iamque Palatinae summam Proca gentis habebat. 623 Rege sub hoc Pomona fuit, qua nulla Latinas 624 inter hamadryadas coluit sollertius hortos 625 nec fuit arborei studiosior altera fetus. 626 Unde tenet nomen: non silvas illa nec amnes, 627 rus amat et ramos felicia poma ferentes. 628 Nec iaculo gravis est, sed adunca dextera falce, 629 qua modo luxuriem premit et spatiantia passim 630 bracchia compescit, fisso modo cortice lignum
14.631	631 inserit et sucos alieno praestat alumno; 632 nec sentire sitim patitur bibulaeque recurvas 633 radicis fibras labentibus inrigat undis: 634 hic amor, hoc studium; veneris quoque nulla cupido est. 635 Vim tamen agrestum metuens pomaria claudit 636 intus et accessus prohibet refugitque viriles. 637 Quid non et satyri, saltatibus apta iuventus, 638 fecere et pinu praecincti cornua Panes 639 Silenusque, suis semper iuvenalior annis, 640 quique deus fures vel falce vel inguine terret, 641 ut poterentur ea? Sed enim superabat amando 642 hos quoque Vertumnus neque erat felicior illis. 643 O quotiens habitu duri messoris aristas 644 corbe tulit verique fuit messoris imago! 645 Tempora saepe gerens faeno religata recenti 646 desectum poterat gramen versasse videri; 647 saepe manu stimulos rigida portabat, ut illum 648 iurasses fessos modo disiunxisse iuvencos.	639 Macareus finished. And Aeneas' nurse, 640 now buried in a marble urn, had this 641 brief, strange inscription on her tomb:— 642 “My foster-child of proven piety, 643 burned me Caieta here: although 644 I was at first preserved from Argive fire, 645 I later burned with fire which was my due.” 646 The cable loosened from the grassy bank, 647 they steered a course which kept them well away 648 from ill famed Circe's wiles and from her home 649 and sought the groves where Tiber dark with shade, 650 breaks with his yellow sands into the sea. 651 Aeneas then fell heir to the home and won 652 the daughter of Latinus, Faunus' son, 653 not without war. A people very fierce 654 made war, and Turnus, their young chief, 655 indignant fought to hold a promised bride. 656 With Latium all Etruria was embroiled, 657 a victory hard to win was sought through war. 658 By foreign aid each side got further strength: 659 the camp of Rutuli abounds in men, 660 and many throng the opposing camp of Troy. 661 Aeneas did not find Evander's home 662 in vain. But Venulus with no success 663 came to the realm of exiled Diomed. 664 That hero had marked out his mighty walls 665 with favor of Iapygian Daunus and 666 held fields that came to him as marriage dower. 667 When Venulus, by Turnus' orders, made 668 request for aid, the Aetolian hero said

	649 Falce data frondator erat vitisque putator; 650 induerat scalas: lecturum poma putares; 651 miles erat gladio, piscator harundine sumpta. 652 Denique per multas aditum sibi saepe figuras 653 repperit, ut caperet spectatae gaudia formae. 654 Ille etiam picta redimitus tempora mitra, 655 innitens baculo, positis per tempora canis, 656 adsimulavit anum cultosque intravit in hortos 657 pomaque mirata est “tanto” que “potentior!” inquit, 658 paucaque laudatae dedit oscula, qualia numquam 659 vera dedisset anus, glaebaque incurva resedit 660 suspiciens pandos autumni pondere ramos.
14.661	661 Ulmus erat contra speciosa nitentibus uvis: 662 quam socia postquam pariter cum vite probavit, 663 “at si staret” ait “caelebs sine palmite truncus, 664 nil praeter frondes, quare peteretur, haberet; 665 haec quoque, quae iuncta est, vitis requiescit in illo: 666 si non nupta foret, terrae acclinata iaceret. 667 Tu tamen exemplo non tangeris arboris huius 668 concubitusque fugis nec te coniungere curas. 669 Atque utinam velles! Helene non pluribus esset 670 sollicitata procis nec quae Lapitheia movit 671 proelia nec coniunx nimium tardantis Ulixei. 672 Nunc quoque, cum fugias averserisque petentes, 673 mille viri cupiunt et semideique deique 674 et quaecumque tenent Albanos numina montes. 675 Sed tu, si sapies, si te bene iungere anumque 676 hanc audire voles, quae te plus omnibus illis, 677 plus quam credis, amo, vulgares reice taedas	669 that he was poor in men: he did not wish 670 to risk in battle himself nor any troops 671 belonging to his father-in-law and had 672 no troops of his that he could arm for battle. 673 “Lest you should think I feign,” he then went on 674 “Although my grief must be renewed because 675 of bitter recollections of the past, 676 I will endure recital now to you:— 677 “After the lofty Ilion was burnt 678 and Pergama had fed the Grecian flames, 679 and Ajax, the Narycian hero, had 680 brought from a virgin, for a virgin wronged, 681 the punishment which he alone deserved 682 on our whole expedition, we were then 683 dispersed and driven by violent winds 684 over the hostile seas; and we, the Greeks, 685 had to endure in darkness, lightning, rain, 686 the wrath both of the heavens and of the sea, 687 and Caphareus, the climax of our woe. 688 Not to detain you by relating such 689 unhappy things in order, Greece might then 690 have seemed to merit even Priam's tears. 691 “Although well armed Minerva's care preserved 692 me then and brought me safe through rocks and waves, 693 from my native Argos I was driven again, 694 for outraged Venus took her full revenge 695 remembering still that wound of long ago; 696 and I endured such

	678 Vertumnumque tori socium tibi selige! pro quo 679 me quoque pignus habes (neque enim sibi notior ille est, 680 quam mihi); nec passim toto vagus errat in orbe: 681 haec loca magna colit; nec, uti pars magna procorum, 682 quam modo vidit, amat: tu primus et ultimus illi 683 ardor eris, solique suos tibi devovet annos. 684 Adde, quod est iuvenis, quod naturale decoris 685 munus habet formasque apte fingetur in omnes, 686 et quod erit iussus, iubeas licet omnia, fiet. 687 Quid quod amatis idem? quod, quae tibi poma coluntur, 688 primus habet laetaque tenet tua munera dextra? 689 Sed neque iam fetus desiderat arbore demptos, 690 nec, quas hortus alit, cum sucis mitibus herbas,	hardships on the deep, 697 and hazards amid armies on the shore, 698 that often I called those happy whom the storm—
14.691	691 nec quicquam, nisi te; miserere ardentis et ipsum, 692 quod petit, ore meo praesentem crede precari 693 ultoresque deos et pectora dura perosam 694 Idalien memoremque time Rhamnusidis iram! 695 Quoque magis timeas (etenim mihi multa vetustas 696 scire dedit), referam tota notissima Cypro 697 facta, quibus flecti facile et mitescere possis. 698 Viderat a veteris generosam sanguine Teucri 699 Iphis Anaxareten, humili de stirpe creatus, 700 viderat et totis perceperat ossibus aestum 701 luctatusque diu, postquam ratione furorem 702 vincere non potuit, supplex ad limina venit 703 et modo nutrici miserum confessus amorem, 704 ne sibi dura foret, per spes oravit alumnae, 705 et modo de multis blanditus cuique ministris 706 sollicita petiit propensum voce favorem;	699 an ill that came on all, or Cephareus had drowned. 700 I even wished I had been one of them. 701 “My best companions having now endured 702 utmost extremities in wars and seas, 703 lost courage and demanded a swift end 704 of our long wandering. Acmon, by nature hot, 705 and much embittered by misfortune, said, 706 ‘What now remains for you, my friends, 707 that patience can endure? What can be done 708 by Venus (if she wants to) more than she 709 already has done? While we have a dread 710 of greater evils, reason will be found 711 for patience; but, when fortune brings her worst, 712 we scorn and trample fear beneath our feet. 713 Upon the height of woe, why should we care? 714 Let Venus listen, let her hate Diomed 715 more than all others—as indeed she does, 716 we all despise her hate. At a great price 717 we have bought and won the right to such contempt!’ 718 “With language of this kind Pleuronian Acmon. 719 Provoking Venus further than before, 720 revived her former anger. His fierce words 721 were then approved of by a few, while we 722 the greater number of his real friends, 723 rebuked the words of Acmon: and while he 724 prepared to

	707 saepe ferenda dedit blandis sua verba tabellis, 708 interdum madidas lacrimarum rore coronas 709 postibus intendit posuitque in limine duro 710 molle latus tristisque serae convicia fecit. 711 Saevior illa freto surgente cadentibus Haedis, 712 durior et ferro, quod Noricus excoquit ignis, 713 et saxo, quod adhuc vivum radice tenetur, 714 spernit et inridet factisque inmitibus addit 715 verba superba ferox et spe quoque fraudat amantem. 716 Non tulit impatiens longi tormenta doloris 717 Iphis et ante fores haec verba novissima dixit: 718 “Vincis, Anaxarete, neque erunt tibi taedia tandem 719 ulla ferenda mei: laetos molire triumphos 720 et Paeana voca nitidaque incingere lauru!	answer us, his voice, and even 725 the passage of his voice, were both at once 726 diminished, his hair changed to feathers, while 727 his neck took a new form. His breast and back 728 covered themselves with down, and both his arms
14.721	721 Vincis enim, moriorque libens: age, ferrea, gaude! 722 Certe aliquid laudare mei cogeris amoris, 723 724 Non tamen ante tui curam fugisse memento, 725 quam vitam, geminaque simul mihi luce carendum est. 726 Nec tibi fama mei ventura est nuntia leti: 727 ipse ego, ne dubites, adero praesensque videbor, 728 corpore ut exanimi crudelia lumina pascas. 729 Si tamen, o superi, mortalia facta videtis, 730 este mei memores (nihil ultra lingua precari 731 sustinet) et longo facite ut narremur in aevo, 732 et, quae dempsistis vitae, date tempora famae!” 733 Dixit, et ad postes ornatos saepe coronis 734 umentes oculos et pallida bracchia tollens, 735 cum foribus laquei religaret vincula summis, 736 “haec tibi serta placent, crudelis et	729 grew longer feathers, and his elbows curved 730 into light wings, much of each foot was changed 731 to long toes, and his mouth grew still and hard 732 with pointed horn. 733 “Amazed at his swift change 734 were Lycus, Abas, Nycteus and Rhexenor. 735 And, while they stared, they took his feathered shape. 736 The larger portion of my company 737 flew from their boat, resounding all around 738 our oars with flapping of new-fashioned wings. 739 If you should ask the form of these strange birds 740 they were like snowy swans, though not the same. 741 “Now as Iapygian Daunus' son-in-law 742 I scarcely hold this town and arid fields 743 with my small remnant of trustworthy men.” 744 So Diomed made answer. Venulus 745 soon after left the Calydonian realms, 746 Peucetian bays, and the Messapian fields. 747 Among those fields he saw a darkened cave 748 in woods and waving reeds. The halfgoat Pan 749 now lives there, but in older time the nymphs 750 possessed it. An Apulian shepherd scared 751 them from that spot. At first he terrified 752 them with a sudden fear, but soon in scorn, 753 as they considered what the

	impia?” dixit, 737 inseruitque caput, sed tum quoque versus ad illam, 738 atque onus infelix elisa fauce pependit. 739 Icta pedum motu est adapertaque ianua factum 739 740 741 prodidit. Exclamant famuli frustraque levatum 742 (nam pater occiderat) referunt ad limina matris; 743 accipit illa sinu complexaque frigida nati 744 membra sui postquam miserarum verba parentum 745 edidit et matrum miserarum facta peregit, 746 funera ducebat mediam lacrimosa per urbem 747 luridaque arsuro portabat membra feretro. 748 Forte viae vicina domus, qua flebilis ibat 749 pompa, fuit, duraeque sonus plangoris ad aures	intruder was, 754 they danced before him, moving feet to time. 755 The shepherd clown abused them, capering, 756 grotesquely imitating graceful steps, 757 and railed at them with coarse and foolish words. 758 He was not silent till a tree's new bark
14.750	750 venit Anaxaretae, quam iam deus ultor agebat: 751 mota “tamen videamus” ait “miserabile funus” 752 et patulis iniit tectum sublime fenestris; 753 vixque bene impositum lecto prospexerat Iphin, 754 deriguere oculi, calidusque e corpore sanguis 755 inducto pallore fugit, conataque retro 756 ferre pedes haesit, conata avertere vultus 757 hoc quoque non potuit, paulatimque occupat artus, 758 quod fuit in duro iam pridem pectore, saxum. 759 Neve ea ficta putes, dominae sub imagine signum 760 servat adhuc Salamis: Veneris quoque nomine templum 761 Prospicientis habet. — Quorum memor, o mea, lentos 762 pone, precor, fastus et amanti iungere, nymphe. 763 Sic tibi nil vernum nascentia frigus adurat 764 poma nec excutiant rapidi florentia venti!' 765 Haec ubi nequiquam formae deus	759 had closed his mouth for now he is a tree. 760 And the wild olive's fruit took bitterness 761 from him. It has the tartness of his tongue. 762 When the ambassadors returned and told 763 their tale about Aetolian arms refused, 764 the bold Rutulians carried on the war 765 without those forces, and much blood was shed. 766 Then Turnus with a greedy torch drew near 767 the Trojan fleet, well built of close-knit pine. 768 What had escaped the waves, now feared the flame. 769 Soon Mulciber was burning pitch and wax 770 and other food of fire, up the high masts 771 he ran and fed upon the tight furled sails, 772 and even the benches in the curved hull smoked. 773 When the holy mother of the gods, recalling 774 how those same pines were felled on Ida's crest, 775 filled the wind with a sound of cymbals clashed 776 and trill of boxwood flutes. Borne through light air 777 by her famed lion yoke, she came and said, 778 “In vain you cast the fire with impious hand, 779 Turnus, for I will save this burning fleet. 780 I will not let the greedy flame consume 781 trees that were part and members of my grove.” 782 It thundered while she spoke, and heavy clouds, 783

	aptus anili 766 edidit, in iuvenem rediit et anilia demit 767 instrumenta sibi talisque apparuit illi, 768 qualis ubi oppositas nitidissima solis imago 769 evicit nubes nullaque obstante reluxit, 770 vimque parat: sed vi non est opus, inque figura 771 capta dei nymphe est et mutua vulnera sensit. 772 Proximus Ausonias iniusti miles Amuli 773 rexit opes, Numitorque senex amissa nepotis 774 munere regna capit, festisque Palilibus urbis 775 moenia conduntur, Tatiusque patresque Sabini 776 bella gerunt, arcisque via Tarpeia reclusa 777 dignam animam poena congestis exuit armis. 778 Inde sati Curibus tacitorum more luporum 779 ore premunt voces et corpora victa sopore	following the thunder, brought a storm 784 of bounding hail. The Astraean brothers filled 785 both air and swollen waters with their rage 786 and rushed to battle. With the aid of one 787 of them the kindly mother broke the ropes 788 which held the Phrygian ships, and, drawing all 789 prow foremost, plunged them underneath the wave. 790 Softening quickly in the waters quiet depth, 791 their wood was changed to flesh, the curving prows
14.780	780 invadunt portasque petunt, quas obice firmo 781 clauserat Iliades: unam tamen ipsa reclusit 782 nec strepitum verso Saturnia cardine fecit. 783 Sola Venus portae cecidisse repagula sensit 784 et clausura fuit, nisi quod rescindere numquam 785 dis licet acta deum. Iano loca iuncta tenebant 786 naides Ausoniae gelido rorantia fonte: 787 has rogat auxilium, nec nymphae iusta petentem 788 sustinuere deam venasque et flumina fontis 789 elicuere sui; nondum tamen invia Iani 790 ora patentis erant, neque iter praecluserat unda: 791 lurida supponunt fecundo sulphura fonti 792 incenduntque cavas fumante bitumine venas. 793 Viribus his aliisque vapor penetravit ad ima 794 fontis, et Alpino modo quae certare	792 were metamorphosed into human heads, 793 blades of the oars made feet, the looms were changed 794 to swimming legs, the sides turned human flanks, 795 each keel below the middle of a ship 796 transformed became a spine, the cordage changed 797 to soft hair, and the sail yards changed to arms. 798 The azure color of the ships remained. 799 As sea-nymphs in the water they began 800 to agitate with virgin sports the waves, 801 which they had always dreaded. Natives of 802 the rugged mountains they are now so changed, 803 they swim and dwell in the soft flowing sea, 804 with every influence of birth forgot. 805 Never forgetful of the myriad risks 806 they have endured among the boisterous waves, 807 they often give a helping hand to ships 808 tossed in the power of storms—unless, of course, 809 the ship might carry men of Grecian race. 810 Never forgetful of the Phrygians and 811 catastrophe, their hatred was so great 812 of all Pelasgians, that they looked with joy 813 upon the fragments of Ulysses' ship; 814 and were delighted when they saw the ship 815

	rigori 795 audebatis aquae, non ceditis ignibus ipsis! 796 Flammifera gemini fumant adspergine postes, 797 portaque, nequiquam rigidis promissa Sabinis, 798 fonte fuit praestructa novo, dum Martius arma 799 indueret miles; quae postquam Romulus ultro 800 obtulit, et strata est tellus Romana Sabinis 801 corporibus strata estque suis, generique cruorem 802 sanguine cum soceri permiscuit impius ensis, 803 pace tamen sisti bellum nec in ultima tantum 804 decertare placet Tatiumque accedere regno. 805 Occiderat Tatius, populisque aequata duobus, 806 Romule, iura dabas, posita cum casside Mavors 807 talibus adfatur divumque hominumque parentem: 808 “Tempus adest, genitor, quoniam fundamine magno 809 res Romana valet et praeside pendet ab uno,	of King Alcinous growing hard upon 816 the breakers, as its wood was turned to stone. 817 Many were hopeful that a fleet which had 818 received life strangely in the forms of nymphs 819 would cause the chieftain of the Rutuli 820 to feel such awe that he would end their strife. 821 But he continued fighting, and each side 14.810	810 praemia (sunt promissa mihi dignoque nepoti!) 811 solvere et ablatum terris imponere caelo. 812 Tu mihi concilio quondam praesente deorum 813 (nam memoro memorique animo pia verba notavi) 814 “unus erit, quem tu tolles in caerula caeli” 815 dixisti: rata sit verborum summa tuorum!” 816 Adnuit omnipotens et nubibus aera caecis 817 occuluit tonitruque et fulgure terruit orbem: 818 quae sibi promissae sensit rata signa rapinae 819 innixusque hastae pressos temone cruento 820 impavidus conscendit equos Gradivus et ictu 821 verberis increpuit pronusque per aera lapsus 822 constitit in summo nemorosi colle Palati 823 reddentemque suo non regia iura	822 had its own gods, and each had courage too, 823 which often can be as potent as the gods. 824 Now they forgot the kingdom as a dower, 825 forgot the scepter of a father-in-law, 826 and even forgot the pure Lavinia: 827 their one thought was to conquer, and they waged 828 war to prevent the shame of a defeat. 829 But Venus finally beheld the arms 830 of her victorious son; for Turnus fell, 831 and Ardea fell, a town which, while he lived, 832 was counted strong. The Trojan swords 833 destroyed it.—All its houses burned and sank 834 down in the heated embers: and a bird 835 not known before that time, flew upward from 836 a wrecked heap, beating the dead ashes with 837 its flapping wings. The voice, the lean pale look, 838 the sorrows of a captured city, even 839 the name of the ruined city, all these things 840 remain in that bird—Ardea's fallen walls 841 are beaten in lamentation by his wings.

	Quiriti 824 abstulit Iliaden: corpus mortale per auras 825 dilapsum tenues, ceu lata plumbea funda 826 missa solet medio glans intabescere caelo. 827 Pulchra subit facies et pulvinaribus altis 828 dignior, est qualis trabeati forma Quirini. 829 Flebat ut amissum coniunx, cum regia Iuno 830 Irin ad Hersiliam descendere limite curvo 831 imperat et vacuae sua sic mandata referre: 832 “O et de Latio, o et de gente Sabina 833 praecipuum, matrona, decus, dignissima tanti 834 ante fuisse viri, coniunx nunc esse Quirini, 835 siste tuos fletus et, si tibi cura videndi 836 coniugis est, duce me lucum pete, colle Quirini 837 qui viret et templum Romani regis obumbrat.” 838 Paret et in terram pictos delapsa per arcus 839 Hersilien iussis compellat vocibus Iris.
14.840	840 Illa verecundo vix tollens lumina vultu 841 “o, dea, namque mihi nec, quae sis, dicere promptum est, 842 et liquet esse deam, duc, o duc” inquit “et offer 843 coniugis ora mihi, quem si modo posse videre 844 fata semel dederint, caelum accepisse fatebor.” 845 Nec mora, Romuleos cum virgine Thaumantea 846 ingreditur colles: ibi sidus ab aethere lapsum 847 decidit in terras, a cuius lumine flagrans 848 Hersilie crines cum sidere cessit in auras. 849 Hanc manibus notis Romanae conditor urbis 850 excipit et priscum pariter cum corpore nomen 851 mutat Horamque vocat, quae nunc dea iuncta Quirino est.	842 The merit of Aeneas now had moved 843 the gods. Even Juno stayed her lasting hate, 844 when, with the state of young Iulus safe, 845 the hero son of Cytherea was 846 prepared for heaven. In a council of the gods 847 Venus arose, embraced her father's neck, 848 and said: “ My father, ever kind to me, 849 I do beseech your kind indulgence now; 850 grant, dearest, to Aeneas, my own son 851 and also your own grandson, grant to him 852 a godhead power, although of lowest class, 853 sufficient if but granted. It is enough 854 to have looked once upon the unlovely realm. 855 And once to have gone across the Stygian streams.” 856 The gods assented, and the queen of Jove 857 nodded consent with calm, approving face. 858 The father said, “You well deserve the gift, 859 both you who ask it, and the one for whom 860 you ask it: what you most desire is yours, 861 my daughter.” He decreed, and she rejoiced 862 and thanked her parent. Borne by harnessed doves 863 over and through the light air, she arrived 864 safe on Laurentine shores: Numicius there 865 winds through his tall reeds to the neighboring sea 866 the waters of his stream: and there she willed 867 Numicius should wash perfectly away 868 from her Aeneas every part that might 869 be subject unto death; and bear it far 870 with quiet current into Neptune's realm. 871 The horned Numicius satisfied the will 872 of Venus; and with flowing waters washed 873 from her Aeneas every mortal part, 874 and sprinkled him, so that the essential part 875 of immortality remained alone, 876 and she anointed him, thus purified, 877 with heavenly essence, and she touched his face 878 with sweetest nectar and ambrosia mixt, 879 thereby transforming him into a god. 880 The throng of the Quirini later named 881 the new god Indiges, and honored him.

15.1	1 Quaeritur interea quis tantae pondera molis 2 sustineat tantoque queat succedere regi: 3 destinat imperio clarum praenuntia veri 4 fama Numam; non ille satis cognosse Sabinae 5 gentis habet ritus: animo maiora capaci 6 concipit et, quae sit rerum natura, requirit. 7 Huius amor curae, patria Curibusque relictis, 8 fecit ut Herculei penetraret ad hospitis urbem. 9 Graia quis Italicis auctor posuisset in oris 10 moenia, quaerenti sic e senioribus unus 11 rettulit indigenis, veteris non inscius aevi: 12 “Dives ab Oceano bubus Iove natus Hiberis 13 litora felici tenuisse Lacinia cursu 14 fertur et, armento teneras errante per herbas, 15 ipse domum magni nec inhospita tecta Crotonis 16 intrasse et requie longum relevasse laborem 17 atque ita discedens “aevo” dixisse “nepotum 18 hic locus urbis erit”; promissaque	1 While this was happening, they began to seek 2 for one who could endure the weight of such 3 a task and could succeed a king so great; 4 and Fame, the harbinger of truth, destined 5 illustrious Numa for the sovereign power. 6 It did not satisfy his heart to know 7 only the Sabine ceremonials, 8 and he conceived in his expansive mind 9 much greater views, examining the depth 10 and cause of things. His country and his cares 11 forgotten, this desire led him to visit 12 the city that once welcomed Hercules. 13 Numa desired to know what founder built 14 a Grecian city on Italian shores. 15 One of the old inhabitants, who was well 16 acquainted with past history, replied: 17 “Rich in Iberian herds, the son of Jove 18 turned from the ocean and with favoring wind 19 'Tis said he landed on Lacinian shores. 20 And, while the herd strayed in the tender grass, 21 he visited the house, the friendly home, 22 of far-famed Croton. There he rested from 23 his arduous labors. At the time of his 24 departure, he said, ‘Here in future days 25 shall be a city of your numerous race.’ 26 The passing years have proved the promise true, 27 for Myscelus, choosing that site, marked out 28 a city's walls. Argive Alemon's son, 29 of all men in his generation, he 30 was most acceptable to the heavenly vera fuerunt. 19 Nam fuit Argolico generatus Alemone quidam 20 Myscelos, illius dis acceptissimus aevi. 21 Hunc super incumbens pressum gravitate soporis 22 claviger adloquitur: “Lapidosas Aesaris undas 23 i, pete diversi! Patrias, age, desere sedes!” 24 et, nisi paruerit multa ac metuenda minatur; 25 post ea discedunt pariter somnusque deusque. 26 Surgit Alemonides tacitaque recentia mente 27 visa refert, pugnatque diu sententia secum: 28 numen abire iubet, prohibent discedere leges, 29 poenaque mors posita est patriam mutare volenti. 30 Candidus Oceano nitidum caput abdiderat Sol,	gods.

15.31	31 et caput extulerat densissima sidereum Nox: 32 visus adesse idem deus est eademque monere 33 et, nisi paruerit, plura et graviora minari. 34 Pertimuit patriumque simul transferre parabat 35 in sedes penetrale novas: fit murmur in urbe, 36 spretarumque agitur legum reus; utque peracta est 37 causa prior crimenque patens sine teste probatum, 38 squalidus ad superos tollens reus ora manusque 39 “o cui ius caeli bis sex fecere labores, 40 fer, precor” inquit, “opem! nam tu mihi criminis auctor.” 41 Mos erat antiquus niveis atrisque lapillis, 42 his damnare reos, illis absolvere culpa; 43 tunc quoque sic lata est sententia tristis, et omnis 44 calculus inmitem demittitur ater in urnam. 45 Quae simul effudit numerandos versa lapillos, 46 omnibus e nigro color est mutatus in album, 47 candidaque Herculeo sententia	31 Bending over him once at dawn, while he 32 was overwhelmed with drowsiness of sleep, 33 the huge club-bearer Hercules addressed 34 him thus: ‘Come now, desert your native shores. 35 Go quickly to the pebbly flowing stream 36 of distant Aesar.’ And he threatened ill 37 in fearful words, unless he should obey. 38 “Sleep and the god departed instantly. 39 Alemon's son, arising from his couch, 40 pondered his recent vision thoughtfully, 41 with his conclusions at cross purposes.— 42 the god commanded him to quit that land, 43 the laws forbade departure, threatening death 44 to all who sought to leave their native land. 45 “The brilliant Sun had hidden in the sea 46 his shining head, and darkest Night had then 47 put forth her starry face; and at that time 48 it seemed as if the same god Hercules 49 was present and repeating his commands, 50 threatening still more and graver penalties, 51 if he should fail to obey. Now sore afraid 52 he set about to move his household gods 53 to a new settlement, but rumors then 54 followed him through the city, and he was 55 accused of holding statutes in contempt. 56 “The accusation hardly had been made 57 when his offense was evidently proved, 58 even without a numine facta 48 solvit Alemoniden. Grates agit ille parenti 49 Amphitryoniadae, ventisque faventibus aequor 50 navigat Ionium, Sallentinumque Neretum 51 praeterit et Sybarin Crimisenque et Iapygis arva; 51 52 53 vixque pererratis, quae spectant litora, terris, 54 invenit Aesarei fatalia fluminis ora 55 nec procul hinc tumulum, sub quo sacrata Crotonis 56 ossa tegebat humus, iussaque ibi moenia terra 57 condidit et nomen tumulati traxit in urbem.” 58 Talia constabat certa primordia fama 59 esse loci positaeque Italis in finibus urbis.	witness. Then he raised 59 his face and hands up to the gods above 60 and suppliant in neglected garb, exclaimed,

15.60	60 Vir fuit hic, ortu Samius, sed fugerat una 61 et Samon et dominos odioque tyrannidis exsul 62 sponte erat, isque, licet caeli regione remotos, 63 mente deos adiit et quae natura negabat 64 visibus humanis, oculis ea pectoris hausit, 65 cumque animo et vigili perspexerat omnia cura, 66 in medium discenda dabat coetusque silentum 67 dictaque mirantum magni primordia mundi 68 et rerum causas et, quid natura, docebat, 69 quid deus, unde nives, quae fulminis esset origo, 70 Iuppiter an venti discussa nube tonarent, 71 quid quateret terras, qua sidera lege mearent — 72 et quodcumque latet; primusque animalia mensis 73 arguit imponi, primus quoque talibus ora 74 docta quidem solvit, sed non et credita, verbis: 75 “Parcite, mortales, dapibus temerare nefandis 76 corpora! Sunt fruges, sunt deducentia ramos	61 ‘Oh mighty Hercules, for whom alone 62 the twice six labors gave the privilege 63 of heavenly residence, give me your aid, 64 for you were the true cause of my offence.’ 65 “It was an ancient custom of that land 66 to vote with chosen pebbles, white and black. 67 The white absolved, the black condemned the man. 68 And so that day the fateful votes were given—: 69 all cast into the cruel urn were black! 70 Soon as that urn inverted poured forth all 71 the pebbles to be counted, every one 72 was changed completely from its black to white, 73 and so the vote adjudged him innocent. 74 By that most fortunate aid of Hercules 75 he was exempted from the country's law. 76 “Myscelus, breathing thanks to Hercules, 77 with favoring wind sailed on the Ionian sea, 78 past Sallentine Neretum, Sybaris, 79 Spartan Tarentum, and the Sirine Bay, 80 Crimisa, and on beyond the Iapygian fields. 81 Then, skirting shores which face these lands, he found 82 the place foretold the river Aesar's mouth, 83 and found not far away a burial mound 84 which covered with its soil the hallowed bones 85 of Croton.—There, upon the appointed land, 86 he built up walls—and he conferred the name 87 of Croton, who was there entombed, on his 88 new city, which has ever since

	77 pondere poma suo tumidaeque in vitibus uvae, 78 sunt herbae dulces, sunt quae mitescere flamma 79 mollirique queant; nec vobis lacteus umor 80 eripitur, nec mella thymi redolentia flore: 81 prodiga divitias alimentaque mitia tellus 82 suggerit atque epulas sine caede et sanguine praebet. 83 Carne ferae sedant ieiunia, nec tamen omnes: 84 quippe equus et pecudes armentaque gramine vivunt. 85 At quibus ingenium est inmansuetumque ferumque, 86 Armeniae tigres iracundique leones 87 cumque lupis ursi, dapibus cum sanguine gaudent. 88 Heu quantum scelus est in viscera viscera condi 89 congestoque avidum pinguescere corpore corpus	been called 89 Crotona.” By tradition it is known 90 such strange deeds caused that city to be built,
15.90	90 alteriusque animantem animantis vivere leto! 91 Scilicet in tantis opibus, quas optima matrum 92 terra parit, nil te nisi tristia mandere saevo 93 vulnera dente iuvat ritusque referre Cyclopum, 94 nec, nisi perdideris alium, placare voracis 95 et male morati poteris ieiunia ventris? 96 At vetus illa aetas, cui fecimus aurea nomen, 97 fetibus arboreis et, quas humus educat, herbis 98 fortunata fuit nec polluit ora cruore. 99 Tunc et aves tutae movere per aera pennas, 100 et lepus impavidus mediis erravit in arvis, 101 nec sua credulitas piscem suspenderat hamo: 102 cuncta sine insidiis nullamque timentia fraudem 103 plenaque pacis erant. Postquam non utilis auctor 104 victibus invidit, quisquis fuit ille, deorum 105 corporeasque dapes avidam demersit in alvum, 106 fecit iter sceleri, primoque e caede ferarum	91 by men of Greece upon the Italian coast. 92 Here lived a man, by birth a Samian. 93 He had fled from Samos and the ruling class, 94 a voluntary exile, for his hate 95 against all tyranny. He had the gift 96 of holding mental converse with the gods, 97 who live far distant in the highth of heaven; 98 and all that Nature has denied to man 99 and human vision, he reviewed with eyes 100 of his enlightened soul. And, when he had 101 examined all things in his careful mind 102 with watchful study, he released his thoughts 103 to knowledge of the public. 104 He would speak 105 to crowds of people, silent and amazed, 106 while he revealed to them the origin 107 of this vast universe, the cause of things, 108 what is nature, what a god, whence came the snow, 109 the cause of lightning—was it Jupiter 110 or did the winds, that thundered when the cloud 111 was rent asunder, cause the lightning flash? 112 What shook the earth, what laws controlled the stars 113 as they were moved—and every hidden thing 114 he was the first man to forbid the use 115 of any animal's flesh as human food, 116 he was the first to speak with learned lips, 117 though not believed in this, exhorting them.— 118 “No, mortals,” he would say, “Do not permit

	107 incaluisse potest maculatum sanguine ferrum 108 (idque satis fuerat), nostrumque petentia letum 109 corpora missa neci salva pietate fatemur: 110 sed quam danda neci, tam non epulanda fuerunt. 111 Longius inde nefas abiit, et prima putatur 112 hostia sus meruisse mori, quia semina pando 113 eruerit rostro spemque interceperit anni. 114 Vite caper morsa Bacchi mactatus ad aras 115 dicitur ultoris; nocuit sua culpa duobus! 116 Quid meruistis oves, placidum pecus, inque tuendos 117 natum homines, pleno quae fertis in ubere nectar, 118 mollia quae nobis vestras velamina lanas 119 praebetis vitaque magis quam morte iuvatis?	119 pollution of your bodies with such food, 120 for there are grain and good fruits which bear down 121 the branches by their weight, and ripened grapes
15.120	120 Quid meruere boves, animal sine fraude dolisque, 121 innocuum, simplex, natum tolerare labores? 122 Inmemor est demum nec frugum munere dignus, 123 qui potuit curvi dempto modo pondere aratri 124 ruricolam mactare suum, qui trita labore 125 illa, quibus totiens durum renovaverat arvum, 126 tot dederat messes, percussit colla securi. 127 Nec satis est, quod tale nefas committitur: ipsos 128 inscripsere deos sceleri, numenque supernum 129 caede laboriferi credunt gaudere iuvenci. 130 Victima labe carens et praestantissima forma 131 (nam placuisse nocet) vittis insignis et auro 132 sistitur ante aras auditque ignara precantem 133 imponique suae videt inter cornua fronti, 134 quas coluit, fruges percussaque sanguine cultros 135 inficit in liquida praevisos forsitan unda.	122 upon the vines, and herbs—those sweet by nature 123 and those which will grow tender and mellow with 124 a fire, and flowing milk is not denied, 125 nor honey, redolent of blossoming thyme. 126 “The lavish Earth yields rich and healthful food 127 affording dainties without slaughter, death, 128 and bloodshed. Dull beasts delight to satisfy 129 their hunger with torn flesh; and yet not all: 130 horses and sheep and cattle live on grass. 131 But all the savage animals—the fierce 132 Armenian tigers and ferocious lions, 133 and bears, together with the roving wolves— 134 delight in viands reeking with warm blood. 135 “Oh, ponder a moment such a monstrous crime— 136 vitals in vitals gorged, one greedy body 137 fattening with plunder of another's flesh, 138 a living being fed on another's life! 139 In that abundance, which our Earth, the best 140 of mothers, will afford have you no joy, 141 unless your savage teeth can gnaw 142 the piteous flesh of some flayed animal 143 to reenact the Cyclopean crime? 144 And can you not appease the hungry void— 145 the perverted craving of a stomach's greed, 146 unless you first destroy another life? 147 “That age of old time which is

	136 Protinus ereptas viventi pectore fibras 137 inspiciunt mentesque deum scrutantur in illis: 138 unde (fames homini vetitorum tanta ciborum!) 139 audetis vesci, genus o mortale? Quod, oro, 140 ne facite, et monitis animos advertite nostris! 141 Cumque boum dabitis caesorum membra palato, 142 mandere vos vestros scite et sentite colonos. 143 Et quoniam deus ora movet, sequar ora moventem 144 rite deum Delphosque meos ipsumque recludam 145 aethera et augustae reserabo oracula mentis. 146 Magna nec ingeniis investigata priorum 147 quaeque diu latuere, canam; iuvat ire per alta 148 astra, iuvat terris et inerti sede relicta 149 nube vehi validique umeris insistere Atlantis	given the name 148 of ‘Golden,’ was so blest in fruit of trees, 149 and in the good herbs which the earth produced 150 that it never would pollute the mouth with blood. 151 The birds then safely moved their wings in air,
15.150	150 palantesque homines passim ac rationis egentes 151 despectare procul trepidosque obitumque timentes 152 sic exhortari seriemque evolvere fati: 153 O genus attonitum gelidae formidine mortis, 154 quid Styga, quid manes et nomina vana timetis, 155 materiem vatum, falsique pericula mundi? 156 Corpora, sive rogus flamma, seu tabe vetustas 157 abstulerit, mala posse pati non ulla putetis! 158 Morte carent animae, semperque priore relicta 159 sede novis domibus vivunt habitantque receptae. 160 Ipse ego (nam memini) Troiani tempore belli 161 Panthoides Euphorbus eram, cui pectore quondam 162 haesit in adverso gravis hasta minoris Atridae: 163 cognovi clipeum, laevae gestamina nostrae, 164 nuper Abanteis templo Iunonis in Argis.	152 the timid hares would wander in the fields 153 with no fear, and their own credulity 154 had not suspended fishes from the hook. 155 All life was safe from treacherous wiles, 156 fearing no injury, a peaceful world. 157 “After that time some one of ill advice 158 (it does not matter who it might have been) 159 envied the ways of lions and gulped into 160 his greedy paunch stuff from a carcass vile. 161 He opened the foul paths of wickedness. 162 It may be that in killing beasts of prey 163 our steel was for the first time warmed with blood. 164 And that could be defended, for I hold 165 that predatory creatures which attempt 166 destruction of mankind, are put to death 167 without evasion of the sacred laws: 168 but, though with justice they are put to death, 169 that cannot be a cause for eating them. 170 “This wickedness went further; and the sow 171 was thought to have deserved death as the first 172 of victims, for with her long turned-up snout 173 she spoiled the good hope of a harvest year. 174 The ravenous goat, that gnawed a sprouting vine, 175 was led for slaughter to the altar fires 176 of angry

	165 Omnia mutantur, nihil interit: errat et illinc 166 huc venit, hinc illuc, et quoslibet occupat artus 167 spiritus eque feris humana in corpora transit 168 inque feras noster nec tempore deperit ullo; 169 utque novis facilis signatur cera figuris 170 nec manet ut fuerat nec formas servat easdem, 171 sed tamen ipsa eadem est: animam sic semper eandem 172 esse, sed in varias doceo migrare figuras. 173 Ergo, ne pietas sit victa cupidine ventris, 174 parcite, vaticinor, cognatas caede nefanda 175 exturbare animas, nec sanguine sanguis alatur! 176 Et quoniam magno feror aequore plenaque ventis 177 vela dedi: nihil est toto, quod perstet, in orbe. 178 Cuncta fluunt, omnisque vagans formatur imago; 179 ipsa quoque adsiduo labuntur tempora motu,	Bacchus. It was their own fault 177 that surely caused the ruin of those two. 178 “But why have sheep deserved sad destiny, 179 harmless and useful for the good of man 180 with nectar in full udders? Their soft wool 181 affords the warmest coverings for our use,
15.180	180 non secus ac flumen, neque enim consistere flumen 181 nec levis hora potest, sed ut unda impellitur unda 182 urgeturque eadem veniente urgetque priorem, 183 tempora sic fugiunt pariter pariterque sequuntur 184 et nova sunt semper; nam quod fuit ante, relictum est, 185 fitque quod haud fuerat, momentaque cuncta novantur. 186 Cernis et emensas in lucem tendere noctes, 187 et iubar hoc nitidum nigrae succedere nocti. 188 Nec color est idem caelo, cum lassa quiete 189 cuncta iacent media, cumque albo Lucifer exit 190 clarus equo rursusque alius, cum praevia lucis 191 tradendum Phoebo Pallantias inficit orbem. 192 Ipse dei clipeus, terra cum tollitur ima, 193 mane rubet, terraque, rubet cum conditur ima,	182 their life and not their death would help us more. 183 Why have the oxen of the field deserved 184 a sad end—innocent, without deceit, 185 and harmless, without guile, born to endure 186 hard labor? Without gratitude is he, 187 unworthy of the gift of harvest fields, 188 who, after he relieved his worker from 189 weight of the curving plow could butcher him, 190 could sever with an axe that toil worn neck, 191 by which so often with hard work the ground 192 had been turned up, so many harvests reared. 193 For some, even crimes like these are not enough, 194 they have imputed to the gods themselves 195 abomination—they believe a god 196 in heaven above, rejoices at the death 197 of a laborious ox. 198 “A victim free 199 of blemish and most beautiful in form 200 (perfection brings destruction) is adorned 201 with garlands and with gilded horns before 202 the altar. In his ignorance he hears 203 one praying, and he sees the very grain 204 he labored to produce, fixed on his head 205 between the horns, and felled, he

	194 candidus in summo est, melior natura quod illic 195 aetheris est terraeque procul contagia fugit. 196 Nec par aut eadem nocturnae forma Dianae 197 esse potest umquam, semperque hodierna sequente, 198 si crescit, minor est, maior, si contrahit orbem. 199 Quid? non in species succedere quattuor annum 200 adspicis, aetatis peragentem imitamina nostrae? 201 Nam tener ac lactens puerique simillimus aevo 202 vere novo est: tunc herba nitens et roboris expers 203 turget et insolida est et spe delectat agrestes. 204 Omnia tunc florent, florumque coloribus almus 205 ludit ager, neque adhuc virtus in frondibus ulla est. 206 Transit in aestatem post ver robustior annus 207 fitque valens iuvenis: neque enim robustior aetas 208 ulla nec uberior, nec quae magis ardeat, ulla est. 209 Excipit autumnus, posito fervore iuventae	stains with blood 206 the knife which just before he may have seen 207 reflected in clear water. Instantly 208 they snatch out entrails from his throbbing form, 209 and seek in them intentions of the gods. 210 Then, in your lust for a forbidden food 211 you will presume to batten on his flesh,
15.210	210 maturus mitisque, inter iuvenemque senemque 211 temperie medius, sparsus quoque tempora canis. 212 Inde senilis hiems tremulo venit horrida passu, 213 aut spoliata suos, aut quos habet, alba capillos. 214 Nostra quoque ipsorum semper requieque sine ulla 215 corpora vertuntur, nec, quod fuimusve sumusve, 216 cras erimus; fuit illa dies, qua semina tantum 217 spesque hominum primae matrisque habitavimus alvo. 218 Artifices natura manus admovit et angi 219 corpora visceribus distentae condita matris 220 noluit eque domo vacuas emisit in auras. 221 Editus in lucem iacuit sine viribus infans; 222 mox quadrupes rituque tulit sua membra ferarum,	212 O race of mortals! Do not eat such food! 213 Give your attention to my serious words; 214 and, when you next present the slaughtered flesh 215 of oxen to your palates, know and feel 216 that you gnaw your fellow tillers of the soil. 217 “And, since a god impels me to speak out, 218 I will obey the god who urges me, 219 and will disclose to you the heavens above, 220 and I will even reveal the oracles 221 of the Divine Will. I will sing to you 222 of things most wonderful, which never were 223 investigated by the intellects 224 of ancient times and things which have been long 225 concealed from man. In fancy I delight 226 to float among the stars or take my stand 227 on mighty Atlas' shoulders, and to look 228 afar down on men wandering here and there — 229 afraid in life yet dreading unknown death, 230 and in these words exhort them and reveal 231 the sequence of events ordained by fate! 232 “O sad humanity! Why do you fear 233 alarms of icy death, afraid of Styx,

	223 paulatimque tremens et nondum poplite firmo 224 constitit adiutis aliquo conamine nervis. 225 Inde valens veloxque fuit spatiumque iuventae 226 transit et emeritis medii quoque temporis annis 227 labitur occiduae per iter declive senectae. 228 Subruit haec aevi demoliturque prioris 229 robora, fletque Milon senior, cum spectat inanes 230 (illos, qui fuerant solidorum mole tororum 231 Herculeis similes!) fluidos pendere lacertos; 232 Flet quoque, ut in speculo rugas adspexit aniles, 233 Tyndaris et secum, cur sit bis rapta, requirit. 234 Tempus edax rerum, tuque, invidiosa vetustas, 235 omnia destruitis, vitiataque dentibus aevi 236 paulatim lenta consumitis omnia morte. 237 Haec quoque non perstant, quae nos elementa vocamus, 238 quasque vices peragant, (animos adhibete!) docebo. 239 Quattuor aeternus genitalia corpora mundus	234 fearful of moving shadows and empty names— 235 of subjects harped on by the poets' tales, 236 the fabled perils of a fancied life? 237 Whether the funeral pile consumes your flesh 238 with hot flames, or old age dissolves it with 239 a gradual wasting power, be well assured 240 the body cannot meet with further ill. 241 And souls are all exempt from power of death. 242 When they have left their first corporeal home, 243 they always find and live in newer homes. 244 “I can declare, for I remember well, 245 that in the days of the great Trojan War, 246 I was Euphorbus, son of Panthous. 247 In my opposing breast was planted then 248 the heavy spear-point of the younger son 249 of Atreus. Not long past I recognised 250 the shield, once burden of my left arm, where 251 it hung in Juno's temple at ancient Argos, 252 the realm of Abas. Everything must change: 253 but nothing perishes. The moving soul 254 may wander, coming from that spot to this, 255 from this to that—in changed possession live 256 in any limbs whatever. It may pass 257 from beasts to human bodies, and again 258 to those of beasts. The soul will never die, 259 in the long lapse of time. As pliant wax 260 is moulded to new forms and does not stay 261 as it has been nor keep the self same form
15.240	240 continet; ex illis duo sunt onerosa suoque 241 pondere in inferius, tellus atque unda, feruntur, 242 et totidem gravitate carent nulloque premente 243 alta petunt, aer atque aere purior ignis. 244 Quae quamquam spatio distant, tamen omnia fiunt 245 ex ipsis et in ipsa cadunt, resolutaque tellus 246 in liquidas rarescit aquas, tenuatus in auras 247 aeraque umor abit, dempto quoque pondere rursus 248 in superos aer tenuissimus emicat ignes. 249 Inde retro redeunt, idemque retexitur ordo; 250 ignis enim densum spissatus in aera transit, 251 hic in aquas, tellus glomerata cogitur unda.	262 yet is the selfsame wax, be well assured 263 the soul is always the same spirit, though 264 it passes into different forms. Therefore, 265 that natural love may not be vanquished by 266 unnatural craving of the appetite, 267 I warn you, stop expelling kindred souls 268 by deeds abhorrent as cold murder.—Let 269 not blood be nourished with its kindred blood! 270 “Since I am launched into the open sea 271 and I have given my full sails to the wind, 272 nothing in all the world remains unchanged. 273 All things are in a state of flux, all shapes 274 receive a changing nature. Time itself 275 glides on with constant motion, ever as 276 a flowing river. Neither river nor 277 the fleeting hour can stop its constant course. 278 But, as each wave drives on a wave, as each 279 is pressed by that which follows, and must press 280 on that before it, so the moments fly, 281 and others follow, so

	252 Nec species sua cuique manet, rerumque novatrix 253 ex aliis alias reddit natura figuras: 254 nec perit in toto quicquam, mihi credite, mundo, 255 sed variat faciemque novat, nascique vocatur 256 incipere esse aliud, quam quod fuit ante, morique 257 desinere illud idem. Cum sint huc forsitan illa, 258 haec translata illuc, summa tamen omnia constant. 259 Nil equidem durare diu sub imagine eadem 260 crediderim: sic ad ferrum venistis ab auro, 261 saecula, sic totiens versa est fortuna locorum. 262 Vidi ego, quod fuerat quondam solidissima tellus, 263 esse fretum, vidi factas ex aequore terras: 264 et procul a pelago conchae iacuere marinae, 265 et vetus inventa est in montibus ancora summis. 266 Quodque fuit campus, vallem decursus aquarum 267 fecit, et eluvie mons est deductus in aequor, 268 eque paludosa siccis humus aret harenis, 269 quaeque sitim tulerant, stagnata paludibus ument.	they are renewed. 282 The moment which moved on before is past, 283 and that which was not, now exists in Time, 284 and every one comes, goes, and is replaced. 285 “You see how night glides by and then proceeds 286 on to the dawn, then brilliant light of day 287 succeeds the dark night. There is not the same 288 appearance in the heavens,: when all things 289 for weariness are resting in vast night, 290 as when bright Lucifer rides his white steed. 291 And only think of that most glorious change, 15.270	270 Hic fontes natura novos emisit, at illic 271 clausit, et antiquis tam multa tremoribus orbis 272 flumina prosiliunt aut excaecata residunt. 273 Sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu, 274 exsistit procul hinc alioque renascitur ore: 275 Sic modo combibitur, tecto modo gurgite lapsus 276 redditur Argolicis ingens Erasinus in arvis, 277 et Mysum, capitisque sui ripaeque prioris 278 paenituisse ferunt, alia nunc ire Caicum; 279 nec non Sicanias volvens Amenanus harenas 280 nunc fluit, interdum suppressis fontibus aret. 281 Ante bibebatur, nunc, quas	292 when loved Aurora, Pallas' daughter, comes 293 before the day and tints the world, almost 294 delivered to bright Phoebus. Even the disk 295 of that god, rising from beneath the earth, 296 is of a ruddy color in the dawn 297 and ruddy when concealed beneath the world. 298 When highest, it is a most brilliant white, 299 for there the ether is quite purified, 300 and far away avoids infection from 301 impurities of earth. Diana's form 302 at night remains not equal nor the same! 303 'Tis less today than it will be tomorrow, 304 if she is waxing; greater, if she wanes. 305 “Yes, do you not see how the year moves through 306 four seasons, imitating human life: 307 in early Spring it has a nursling's ways 308 resembling infancy, for at that time 309 the blade is shooting and devoid of strength. 310 Its flaccid substance swelling gives delight, 311 to every contingere nolis, 282 fundit Anigros aquas, postquam, nisi vatibus omnis 283 eripienda fides, illic lavere bimembres 284 vulnera, clavigeri quae fecerat Herculis arcus. 285 Quid? non et Scythicis Hypanis de montibus ortus, 286 qui fuerat dulcis, salibus vitiatur amaris? 287 Fluctibus ambitae fuerant Antissa Pharosque 288 et Phoenissa Tyros, quarum nunc insula nulla est. 289 Leucada continuam veteres habuere coloni: 290 nunc freta circueunt. Zancle quoque iuncta fuisse 291 dicitur Italiae, donec confinia pontus 292 abstulit et media tellurem reppulit unda. 293 Si quaeras Helicen et Burin, Achaidas urbes, 294 invenies sub aquis, et adhuc ostendere nautae 295 inclinata solent cum moenibus oppida mersis. 296 Est prope Pittheam tumulus Troezena, sine ullis 297 arduus arboribus, quondam planissima campi 298 area, nunc tumulus; nam (res horrenda relatu!) 299 vis fera ventorum, caecis inclusa cavernis,	watching husbandman, alive 312 in expectation. Then all things are rich 313 in blossom, and the genial meadow smiles 314 with tints of blooming flowers; but not as yet 315 is there a sign of vigor in the leaves. 316 “The year now waxing stronger, after Spring 317 it passes into Summer, and its youth 318 becomes robust. Indeed of all the year 319 the Summer is most vigorous and most 320 abounds with glowing and life-giving warmth. 321 “Autumn then follows, and, the vim of life

15.300	300 exspirare aliqua cupiens luctataque frustra 301 liberiore frui caelo, cum carcere rima 302 nulla foret toto nec pervia flatibus esset, 303 extentam tumefecit humum, ceu spiritus oris 304 tendere vesicam solet aut derepta bicorni 305 terga capro; tumor ille loci permansit et alti 306 collis habet speciem longoque induruit aevo. 307 Plurima cum subeant audita et cognita nobis, 308 pauca super referam. Quid? non et lympha figuras 309 datque capitque novas? Medio tua, corniger Ammon, 310 unda die gelida est, ortuque	322 removed, that ripe and mellow time succeeds 323 between youth and old age, and a few white hairs 324 are sprinkled here and there upon his brow. 325 “Then aged Winter with his tremulous step 326 follows, repulsive, strips of graceful locks 327 or white with those he has retained so long. 328 “Our bodies also, always change unceasingly: 329 we are not now what we were yesterday 330 or we shall be tomorrow. And there was 331 a time when we were only seeds of man, 332 mere hopes that lived within a mother's womb. 333 But Nature changed us with her skilfull touch, 334 determined that our bodies should not be 335 held in such narrow room, below the entrails 336 in our distended parent; and in time 337 she brought us forth into the vacant air. 338 “Brought into light, the

	obituque calescit. 311 Admotis Athamanas aquis accendere lignum 312 narratur, minimos cum luna recessit in orbes. 313 Flumen habent Cicones, quod potum saxea reddit 314 viscera, quod tactis inducit marmora rebus. 315 Crathis et huic Sybaris, nostris conterminus oris 316 electro similes faciunt auroque capillos. 317 Quodque magis mirum est, sunt qui non corpora tantum, 318 verum animos etiam valeant mutare liquores. 319 Cui non audita est obscenae Salmacis undae 320 Aethiopesque lacus? Quos siquis faucibus hausit, 321 aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem. 322 Clitorio quicumque sitim de fonte levavit, 323 vina fugit gaudetque meris abstemius undis, 324 seu vis est in aqua calido contraria vino, 325 sive, quod indigenae memorant, Amythaone natus, 326 Proetidas attonitas postquam per carmen et herbas 327 eripuit furiis, purgamina mentis in illas 328 misit aquas odiumque meri permansit in undis. 329 Huic fluit effectu dispar Lyncestius amnis;	helpless infant lies. 339 Then on all fours he lifts his body up, 340 feeling his way, like any young wild beast, 341 and then by slow degrees he stands upright, 342 weak-kneed and trembling, steadied by support 343 of some convenient prop. And soon more strong 344 and swift he passes through the hours of youth, 345 and, when the years of middle age are past, 346 slides down the steep path of declining age. 347 “This undermines him and destroys the strength 348 of former years: and Milon, now grown old, 349 weeps, when he sees his arms, which once were firm 350 with muscles big as those of Hercules, 351 hang flabby at his side: and Helen weeps, 15.330	330 quem quicumque parum moderato gutture traxit, 331 haud aliter titubat, quam si mera vina bibisset. 332 Est locus Arcadiae (Pheneum dixere priores), 333 ambiguis suspectus aquis, quas nocte timeto: 334 nocte nocent potae, sine noxa luce bibuntur. 335 Sic alias aliasque lacus et flumina vires 336 concipiunt, tempusque fuit, quo navit in undis, 337 nunc sedet Ortygie. Timuit concursibus Argo 338 undarum sparsas Symplegadas elisarum, 339 quae nunc inmotae perstant	352 when in the glass she sees her wrinkled face, 353 and wonders why two heroes fell in love 354 and carried her away.—O Time, 355 devourer of all things, and envious Age, 356 together you destroy all that exists 357 and, slowly gnawing, bring on lingering death. 358 “Yes, even things which we call elements, 359 do not endure. Now listen well to me, 360 and I will show the ways in which they change. 361 “The everlasting universe contains 362 four elemental parts. And two of these 363 are heavy—earth and water—and are borne 364 downwards by weight. The other two devoid 365 of weight, are air and—even lighter—fire: 366 and, if these two are not constrained, they seek 367 the higher regions. These four ventisque resistunt. 340 Nec, quae sulphureis ardet fornacibus, Aetne 341 ignea semper erit, neque enim fuit ignea semper. 342 Nam sive est animal tellus et vivit habetque 343 spiramenta locis flammam exhalantia multis, 344 spirandi mutare vias, quotiensque movetur, 345 has finire potest, illas aperire cavernas; 346 sive leves imis venti cohibentur in antris 347 saxaque cum saxis et habentem semina flammae 348 materiam iactant, ea concipit ictibus ignem, 349 antra relinquentur sedatis frigida ventis; 350 sive bitumineae rapiunt incendia vires 351 luteave exiguis ardescunt sulphura fumis: 352 nempe ubi terra cibos alimentaque pinguia flammae 353 non dabit absumptis per longum viribus aevum 354 naturaeque suum nutrimen deerit edaci, 355 non feret illa famem desertaque deseret ignis. 356 Esse viros fama est in Hyperborea Pallene, 357 qui soleant levibus velari corpora plumis, 358 olim Tritoniacam noviens subiere paludem. 359 Haud equidem credo: sparsae quoque membra venenis	elements, 368 though far apart in space, are all derived 369 from one another. Earth dissolves 370 as flowing water! Water, thinned still more, 371 departs as wind and air; and the light air, 372 still losing weight, sparkles on high as fire. 373 But they return, along their former way: 374 the fire, assuming weight, is changed to air; 375 and then, more dense, that air is changed again 376 to water; and that water, still more dense, 377 compacts itself again as primal earth.

15.360	360 exercere artes Scythides memorantur easdem. 361 Siqua fides rebus tamen est addenda probatis, 362 nonne vides, quaecumque mora fluidoque calore 363 corpora tabescunt, in parva animalia verti? 364 I quoque, delectos mactatos obrue tauros 365 (cognita res usu) de putri viscere passim 366 florilegae nascuntur apes, quae more parentum 367 rura colunt operique favent in spemque laborant; 368 pressus humo bellator equus	378 “Nothing retains the form that seems its own, 379 and Nature, the renewer of all things, 380 continually changes every form 381 into some other shape. Believe my word, 382 in all this universe of vast extent, 383 not one thing ever perished. All have changed 384 appearance. Men say a certain thing is born, 385 if it takes a different form from what it had; 386 and yet they say, that certain thing has died, 387 if it no longer keeps the self same shape. 388 Though distant things move near, and near things far, 389 always the sum of all things is unchanged. 390 “For my part, I cannot believe a thing 391 remains long under the same form

	crabronis origo est; 369 concava litoreo si demas bracchia cancro, 370 cetera supponas terrae, de parte sepulta 371 scorpius exibit caudaque minabitur unca; 372 quaeque solent canis frondes intexere filis 373 agrestes tineae (res observata colonis) 374 ferali mutant cum papilione figuram. 375 Semina limus habet virides generantia ranas, 376 et generat truncas pedibus, mox apta natando 377 cura dat, utque eadem sint longis saltibus apta, 378 posterior superat partes mensura priores. 379 Nec catulus, partu quem reddidit ursa recenti, 380 sed male viva caro est: lambendo mater in artus 381 fingit et in formam, quantam capit ipsa, reducit. 382 Nonne vides, quos cera tegit sexangula, fetus 383 melliferarum apium sine membris corpora nasci 384 et serosque pedes serasque adsumere pennas? 385 Iunonis volucrem, quae cauda sidera portat, 386 armigerumque Iovis Cythereiadasque columbas 387 et genus omne avium mediis e partibus ovi, 388 ni sciret fieri, quis nasci posse putaret? 389 Sunt qui, cum clauso putrefacta est spina sepulcro,	unchanged. 392 Look at the change of times from gold to iron,: 393 look at the change in places. I have seen 394 what had been solid earth become salt waves, 395 and I have seen dry land made from the deep; 396 and, far away from ocean, sea-shells strewn, 397 and on the mountain-tops old anchors found. 398 Water has made that which was once a plain 399 into a valley, and the mountain has 400 been levelled by the floods down to a plain. 401 A former marshland is now parched dry sand, 402 and places which endured severest drought 403 are wet with standing pools. Here Nature has 404 opened fresh springs, but there has shut them up; 405 rivers aroused by ancient earthquakes have 406 rushed out or vanished, as they lost their depth. 407 “So, when the Lycus has been swallowed by
15.390	390 mutari credant humanas angue medullas. 391 Haec tamen ex aliis generis primordia ducunt: 392 una est, quae reparet seque ipsa reseminet, ales. 393 Assyrii phoenica vocant; non fruge neque herbis, 394 sed turis lacrimis et suco vivit amomi. 395 Haec ubi quinque suae complevit saecula vitae, 396 ilicis in ramis tremulaeque cacumine palmae 397 unguibus et puro nidum sibi	408 a chasm in the earth, it rushes forth 409 at a distance and is reborn a different stream. 410 The Erasinus now flows down into a cave, 411 now runs beneath the ground a darkened course, 412 then rises lordly in the Argolic fields. 413 They say the Mysus, wearied of his spring 414 and of his former banks, appears elsewhere 415 and takes another name, the Caicus. 416 “The Amenanus in Sicilian sands 417 now smoothly rolling, at another time 418 is quenched, because its fountain springs are dry. 419 The water of the Anigros formerly 420 was used for

	construit ore. 398 Quo simul ac casias et nardi lenis aristas 399 quassaque cum fulva substravit cinnama murra, 400 se super imponit finitque in odoribus aevum. 401 Inde ferunt, totidem qui vivere debeat annos, 402 corpore de patrio parvum phoenica renasci. 403 Cum dedit huic aetas vires, onerique ferendo est, 404 ponderibus nidi ramos levat arboris altae 405 fertque pius cunasque suas patriumque sepulcrum, 406 perque leves auras Hyperionis urbe potitus 407 ante fores sacras Hyperionis aede reponit. 408 Si tamen est aliquid mirae novitatis in istis, 409 alternare vices et quae modo femina tergo 410 passa marem est, nunc esse marem miremur hyaenam; 411 id quoque, quod ventis animal nutritur et aura, 412 protinus adsimulat, tetigit quoscumque colores. 413 Victa racemifero lyncas dedit India Baccho: 414 e quibus, ut memorant, quidquid vesica remisit, 415 vertitur in lapides et congelat aere tacto. 416 Sic et curalium quo primum contigit auras 417 tempore, durescit: mollis fuit herba sub undis. 418 Desinet ante dies et in alto Phoebus anhelos 419 aequore tinget equos, quam consequar omnia verbis	drinking, but it pours out now 421 foul water which you would decline to touch, 422 because (unless all credit is denied 423 to poets) long ago the Centaurs, those 424 strange mortals double-limbed, bathed in the stream 425 wounds which club-bearing Hercules had made 426 with his strong bow.—Yes, does not Hypanis 427 descending fresh from mountains of Sarmatia, 428 become embittered with the taste of salt? 429 “Antissa, Pharos, and Phoenician Tyre, 430 were once surrounded by the wavy sea: 431 they are not islands now. Long years ago 432 Leucas was mainland, if we can believe 433 what the old timers there will tell, but now 434 the waves sweep round it. Zancle was a part 435 of Italy, until the sea cut off 436 the neighboring land with strong waves in between. 437 Should you seek Helice and Buris, those
15.420	420 in species translata novas: sic tempora verti 421 cernimus atque illas adsumere robora gentes, 422 concidere has. Sic magna fuit censuque virisque 423 perque decem potuit tantum dare sanguinis annos, 424 nunc humilis veteres tantummodo Troia ruinas 425 et pro divitiis tumulos ostendit avorum. 426	438 two cities of Achaea, you will find 439 them underneath the waves, where sailors point 440 to sloping roofs and streets in the clear deep. 441 “Near Pittheaan Troezen a steep, high hill, 442 quite bare of trees, was once a level plain, 443 but now is a hill, for (dreadful even to tell) 444 the raging power of winds, long pent in deep, 445 dark caverns, tried to find a proper vent, 446 long struggling to attain free sky. 447 Finding no opening from the prison-caves, 448 imperious to their

	427 428 429 430 431 Nunc quoque Dardaniam fama est consurgere Romam, 432 Appenninigenae quae proxima Thybridis undis 433 mole sub ingenti rerum fundamina ponit: 434 haec igitur formam crescendo mutat et olim 435 immensi caput orbis erit. Sic dicere vates 436 faticinasque ferunt sortes quantumque recordor, 437 dixerat Aeneae, cum res Troiana labaret, 438 Priamides Helenus flenti dubioque salutis: 439 “Nate dea, si nota satis praesagia nostrae 440 mentis habes, non tota cadet te sospite Troia! 441 Flamma tibi ferrumque dabunt iter: ibis et una 442 Pergama rapta feres, donec Troiaeque tibique 443 externum patrio contingat amicius arvum. 444 Urbem etiam cerno Phrygios debere nepotes, 445 quanta nec est nec erit nec visa prioribus annis. 446 Hanc alii proceres per saecula longa potentem, 447 sed dominam rerum de sanguine natus Iuli 448 efficiet; quo cum tellus erit usa, fruentur 449 aetheriae sedes, caelumque erit exitus illi.”	force, they raised the earth, 449 exactly as pent air breathed from the mouth 450 inflates a bladder, or the bottle-hides 451 stripped off the two-horned goats. The swollen earth 452 remained on that spot and has ever since 453 appearance of a high hill hardened by 454 the flight of time. 455 “Of many strange events 456 that I have heard and known, I will add a few. 457 Why, does not water give and take strange forms? 458 Your wave, O horned Ammon, will turn cold 459 at mid-day, but is always mild and warm 460 at sun-rise and at sun-set. I have heard 461 that Athamanians kindle wood, if they 462 pour water on it, when the waning moon 463 has shrunk away into her smallest orb. 464 The people of Ciconia have a stream 465 which turns the drinker's entrails into stone, 466 which changes into marble all it raves. 467 The Achaean Crathis and the Sybaris,
15.450	450 Haec Helenum cecinisse penatigero Aeneae 451 mente memor refero, cognataque moenia laetor 452 crescere et utiliter Phrygibus vicisse Pelasgos. 453 Ne tamen oblitis ad metam tendere longe 454 exspatiemur equis, caelum et quodcumque sub illo est, 455 inmutat formas tellusque et quidquid in illa est: 456 nos quoque, pars mundi, quoniam non corpora solum, 457 verum etiam volucres animae sumus inque ferinas	668 Such was the prophesy 669 of Helenus, when great Aeneas took 670 away his guardian deities, and I 671 rejoice to see my kindred walls rise high 672 and realize how much the Trojans won 673 by that resounding victory of the Greeks! 674 “But, that we may not range afar with steeds 675 forgetful of the goal, the heavens and all 676 beneath them and the earth and everything 677 upon it change in form. We likewise change, 678 who are a portion of the universe, 679 and, since we are not only things of flesh 680 but winged souls as well, we may be doomed 681 to enter into beasts as our

	458 possumus ire domos pecudumque in corpora condi, 459 corpora, quae possunt animas habuisse parentum 460 aut fratrum aut aliquo iunctorum foedere nobis 461 aut hominum certe, tuta esse et honesta sinamus 462 neve Thyesteis cumulemus viscera mensis! 463 Quam male consuescit, quam se parat ille cruori 464 impius humano, vituli qui guttura cultro 465 rumpit et inmotas praebet mugitibus aures, 466 aut qui vagitus similes puerilibus haedum 467 edentem iugulare potest, aut alite vesci, 468 cui dedit ipse cibos! Quantum est, quod desit in istis 469 ad plenum facinus? Quo transitus inde paratur? 470 Bos aret aut mortem senioribus imputet annis, 471 horriferum contra borean ovis arma ministret, 472 ubera dent saturae manibus pressanda capellae! 473 Retia cum pedicis laqueosque artesque dolosas 474 tollite nec volucrem viscata fallite virga, 475 nec formidatis cervos includite pennis, 476 nec celate cibis uncos fallacibus hamos! 477 Perdite, siqua nocent, verum haec quoque perdite tantum: 478 ora vacent epulis alimentaque mitia carpant!” 479 Talibus atque aliis instructum pectora dictis	abode; 682 and even to be hidden in the breasts 683 of cattle. Therefore, should we not allow 684 these bodies to be safe which may contain 685 the souls of parents, brothers, or of those 686 allied to us by kinship or of men 687 at least, who should be saved from every harm? 688 Let us not gorge down a Thyestean feast! 689 “How greatly does a man disgrace himself, 690 how impiously does he prepare himself 691 for shedding human blood, who with u knife 692 cuts the calf's throat and offers a deaf ear 693 to its death-longings! who can kill the kid 694 while it is sending forth heart rending cries 695 like those of a dear child; or who can feed 696 upon the bird which he has given food. 697 How little do such deeds as these fall short 698 of actual murder? Yes, where will they lead? 699 “Let the ox plough, or let him owe his death 700 to weight of years; and let the sheep give us 701 defence against the cold of Boreas; 702 and let the well-fed she-goats give to man 703 their udders for the pressure of kind hands. 704 “Away with cruel nets and springs and snares 705 and fraudulent contrivances: deceive 706 not birds with bird-limed twigs: do not deceive 707 the trusting deer with dreaded feather foils: 708 do not conceal barbed hooks with treacherous bait: 709 if any beast is harmful, take his life, 710 but, even so, let killing be enough. 711 Taste not his flesh, but look for harmless food!”
15.480	480 in patriam remeasse ferunt ultroque petitum 481 accepisse Numam populi Latiaris habenas. 482 Coniuge qui felix nympha ducibusque Camenis 483 sacrificos docuit ritus gentemque feroci 484 adsuetam bello pacis traduxit ad artes. 485 Qui postquam senior regnumque aevumque peregit, 486 exstinctum Latiaeque nurus populusque patresque	468 which flow not far from here, will turn the hair 469 to something like clear amber or bright gold. 470 “What is more wonderful, there are some waters 471 which change not only bodies but the minds: 472 who has no knowledge of the Salmacis 473 and of its ill famed waves? Who has not 474 heard of the lakes of Aethiopia: 475 how those who drink of them go raving mad 476 or fall in a deep sleep, most wonderful 477 in heaviness. Whoever quenches thirst 478 from the Clitorian spring will hate all wine, 479 and

	487 deflevere Numam; nam coniunx urbe relicta 488 vallis Aricinae densis latet abdita silvis 489 sacraque Oresteae gemitu questuque Dianae 490 impedit: a! quotiens nymphae nemorisque lacusque, 491 ne faceret, monuere et consolantia verba 492 dixerunt. Quotiens flenti Theseius heros 493 “siste modum!” dixit, “ne que enim fortuna querenda 494 sola tua est; similes aliorum respice casus: 495 mitius ista feres, utinamque exempla dolentem 496 non mea te possent relevare! Sed et mea possunt. 497 Fando aliquem Hippolytum vestras puto, contigit aures 498 credulitate patris, sceleratae fraude novercae 499 occubuisse neci: mirabere, vixque probabo, 500 sed tamen ille ego sum. Me Pasiphaeia quondam 501 temptatum frustra patrium temerare cubile, 502 quod voluit, voluisse, infelix crimine verso 503 (indiciine metu magis offensane repulsae?) 504 damnavit, meritumque nihil pater eicit urbe 505 hostilique caput prece detestatur euntis. 506 Pittheam profugo curru Troezena petebam, 507 iamque Corinthiaci carpebam litora ponti, 508 cum mare surrexit, cumulusque inmanis aquarum 509 in montis speciem curvari et crescere visus	soberly secure great pleasure from 480 pure water. Either that spring has a power 481 the opposite of wine-heat, or perhaps 482 as natives tell us, after the famed son 483 of Amythaon by his charms and herbs, 484 delivered from their base insanity 485 the stricken Proetides, he threw the rest 486 of his mind healing herbs into the spring, 487 where hatred of all wine has since remained. 488 Unlike in nature flows another stream 489 of the country, called Lyncestius: everyone 490 who drinks of it, even with most temperate care, 491 will reel, as if he had drunk unmixed wine. 492 In Arcadia is a place, called Pheneos 493 by men of old, which is mistrusted for 494 the twofold nature of its waters. Stand 495 in dread of them at night; if drunk at night, 496 they harm you, but in daytime they will do 497 no harm at all. 498 So lakes and rivers have 499 now this, now that effect. 500 “Ortygia once 501 moved like a ship that drifts among the waves. 502 Now it is fixed. The Argo was in dread 503 of the Symplegades, which moved apart 504 with waves in-rushing. Now immovable 505 they stand, resisting the attack of winds. 506 “Aetna, which burns with sulphur furnaces, 507 will not be always concentrated fire, 508 nor was it always fiery. If the earth 509 is like an animal and is alive 510 and breathes out flame at many openings, 511 then it can change these many passages 512 used for its breathing and, when it is moved, 513 may close these caverns as it opens up 514 some others. Or if rushing winds are penned 515 in deepest caverns, and they drive great stones 516 against the rock, and substances which have 517 the properties of flame and fire are made 518 by those concussions; when the winds are calmed 519 the caverns will, of course, be cool again. 520 “Or if some black bitumen catches fire 521 or yellow sulphur burns with little smoke, 522 then surely, when the ground no longer gives 523 such food and oily nutriment for flames 524 and they in time have ravined all their store, 525 their greedy nature soon will pine with death— 526 it will not bear such famine but depart 527 and, when deserted, will desert the place.

15.510	510 et dare mugitus summoque cacumine findi. 511 Corniger hinc taurus ruptis expellitur undis, 512 pectoribusque tenus molles erectus in auras 513 naribus et patulo partem maris evomit ore. 514 Corda pavent comitum. Mihi mens interrita mansit 515 exsiliis contenta suis: cum colla feroces 516 ad freta convertunt adrectisque auribus horrent 517 quadrupedes monstrique metu turbantur et altis 518 praecipitant currum scopulis; ego ducere vana 519 frena manu spumis albentibus oblita luctor 520 et retro lentas tendo resupinus habenas. 521 Nec vires tamen has rabies superasset equorum. 522 ni rota, perpetuum qua circumvertitur axem, 523 stipitis occursu fracta ac disiecta fuisset. 524 Excutior curru, lorisque tenentibus artus 525 viscera viva trahi nervosque in stipe teneri, 526 membra rapi partim, partim reprensa relinqui, 527 ossa gravem dare fracta sonum fessamque videres 528 exhalari animam nullasque in corpore partes, 529 noscere quas posses; unumque erat omnia vulnus. 530 Num potes aut audes cladi componere nostrae, 531 nympha, tuam? Vidi quoque luce carentia regna 532 et lacerum fovi Phlegethontide corpus in unda, 533 nec nisi Apollineae valido medicamine prolis 534 reddita vita foret; quam postquam fortibus herbis 535 atque ope Paeonia Dite indignante recepi, 536 tum mihi, ne praesens augerem muneris huius 537 invidiam, densas obiecit Cynthia nubes, 538 utque forem tutus possemque impune videri,	528 “'Tis said that Hyperboreans of Pallene 529 can cover all their bodies with light plumes 530 by plunging nine times in Minerva's marsh. 531 But I cannot believe another tale: 532 that Scythian women get a like result 533 by having poison sprinkled on their limbs. 534 “If we give any credit to the things 535 proved by experience, we can surely know 536 whatever bodies are decayed by time 537 or by dissolving heat are by such means 538 changed into tiny animals—Come now, 539 bury choice bullocks killed for sacrifice, 540 and it is well known by experience 541 that the flower-gathering bees are so produced, 542 miraculous, from entrails putrefied. 543 These, like the faithful animals from which 544 they were produced, inhabit the green fields, 545 delight in toil, and labor for reward. 546 “The warlike steed, when buried in the ground, 547 is a known source of hornets. If you cut 548 the bending claws off from the sea-shore crab 549 and bury the remainder in the earth, 550 a scorpion will come forth from the dead crab 551 buried there, threatening with its crooked tail. 552 “The worms which cover leaves with their white threads, 553 a thing observable by husbandmen, 554 will change themselves to funeral butterflies. 555 Mud holds the seeds that generate green frogs, 556 at first producing tadpoles with no feet, 557 and soon it gives them legs adapted for

	539 addidit aetatem nec cognoscenda reliquit
15.540	540 ora mihi Cretenque diu dubitavit habendam 541 traderet an Delon: Delo Creteque relictis 542 hic posuit nomenque simul, quod possit equorum 543 admonuisse, iubet deponere, “qui” que “fuisti 544 Hippolytus” dixit, “nunc idem Virbius esto!” 545 Hoc nemus inde colo, de disque minoribus unus 546 numine sub dominae lateo atque accenseor illi.” 547 Non tamen Egeriae luctus aliena levare 548 damna valent, montisque iacens radicibus imis 549 liquitur in lacrimas, donec pietate dolentis 550 mota soror Phoebi gelidum de corpore fontem 551 fecit et aeternas artus tenuavit in undas. 552 Et nymphas tetigit nova res, et Amazone natus 553 haud aliter stupuit, quam cum Tyrrhenus arator 554 fatalem glaebam mediis adspexit in arvis 555 sponte sua primum nulloque agitante moveri, 556 sumere mox hominis terraeque amittere formam 557 oraque venturis aperire recentia fatis 558 (indigenae dixere Tagen, qui primus Etruscam 559 edocuit gentem casus aperire futuros); 560 utve Palatinis haerentem collibus olim 561 cum subito vidit frondescere Romulus hastam, 562 quae radice nova, non ferro stabat adacto 563 et iam non telum, sed lenti viminis arbor 564 non exspectatas dabat admirantibus umbras; 565 aut sua fluminea cum vidit Cipus in unda 566 cornua (vidit enim) falsamque in imagine credens 567 esse fidem, digitis ad frontem saepe relatis,	558 their swimming, and, so they may be as well 559 adapted to good leaping, their hind legs 560 are longer than the fore-legs. The mother bear 561 does not bring forth a cub but a limp mass 562 of flesh that hardly can be called alive. 563 By licking it the mother forms the limbs, 564 and brings it to a shape just like her own. 565 “Do not the offspring of the honey bees, 566 concealed in cells hexagonal, at first 567 get life with no limbs, and assume in time 568 both feet and wings? Unless the fact were known, 569 could anyone suppose it possible 570 that Juno's bird, whose tail is bright with stars; 571 the eagle, armor-bearer of high Jove; 572 the doves of Cytherea; and all birds 573 emerge from the middle part of eggs? 574 And some believe the human marrow turns 575 into a serpent when the spine at length 576 has putrefied in the closed sepulchre. 577 “Now these I named derive their origin 578 from other living forms. There is one bird 579 which reproduces and renews itself: 580 the Assyrians gave this bird his name—the Phoenix. 581 He does not live either on grain or herbs, 582 but only on small drops of frankincense 583 and juices of amomum. When this bird 584 completes a full five centuries of life 585 straightway with talons and with shining beak 586 he builds a nest among palm branches, where 587 they join to form the palm tree's waving top.

	568 quae vidit, tetigit, nec iam sua lumina damnans 569 restitit, ut victor domito veniebat ab hoste,
15.570	570 ad caelumque manus et eodem lumina tollens 571 “quiquid” ait, “superi, monstro portenditur isto, 572 seu laetum est, patriae laetum populoque Quirini, 573 sive minax, mihi sit!” viridique e caespite factas 574 placat odoratis herbosas ignibus aras 575 vinaque dat pateris mactatarumque bidentum, 576 quid sibi significent, trepidantia consulit exta. 577 Quae simul adspexit Tyrrhenae gentis haruspex, 578 magna quidem rerum molimina vidit in illis, 579 non manifesta tamen. Cum vero sustulit acre 580 a pecudis fibris ad Cipi cornua lumen, 581 “rex” ait, “o salve! Tibi enim, tibi, Cipe, tuisque 582 hic locus et Latiae parebunt cornibus arces. 583 Tu modo rumpe moras portasque intrare patentes 584 adpropera! sic fata iubent; namque urbe receptus 585 rex eris et sceptro tutus potiere perenni.” 586 Rettulit ille pedem torvamque a moenibus urbis 587 avertens faciem “procul a! procul omina” dixit 588 “talia di pellant! Multoque ego iustius aevum 589 exsul agam, quam me videant Capitolia regem!” 590 Dixit et extemplo populumque gravemque senatum 591 convocat, ante tamen pacali cornua lauro 592 velat; et aggeribus factis a milite forti 593 insistit priscosque deos e more precatus 594 “est” ait “hic unus, quem vos nisi pellitis urbe, 595 rex erit. Is qui sit, signo, non nomine dicam: 596 cornua fronte gerit. Quem vobis indicat augur,	588 “As soon as he has strewn in this new nest 589 the cassia bark and ears of sweet spikenard, 590 and some bruised cinnamon with yellow myrrh, 591 he lies down on it and refuses life 592 among those dreamful odors.—And they say 593 that from the body of the dying bird 594 is reproduced a little Phoenix which 595 is destined to live just as many years. 596 “When time has given to him sufficient strength 597 and he is able to sustain the weight, 598 he lifts the nest up from the lofty tree 599 and dutifully carries from that place 600 his cradle and the parent's sepulchre. 601 As soon as he has reached through yielding air 602 the city of Hyperion, he will lay 603 the burden just before the sacred doors 604 within the temple of Hyperion. 605 “But, if we wonder at strange things like these, 606 we ought to wonder also, when we learn 607 that a hyena has a change of sex: 608 the female, quitting her embracing male, 609 herself becomes a male.—That animal 610 which feeds upon the winds and air, at once 611 assumes with contact any color touched. 612 “Conquered India gave to the vine crowned Bacchus 613 lynxes, whose urine turns, they say to stones, 614 hardening in air. So coral, too, as soon 615 as it has risen above the sea, turns hard. 616 Below the waves it was a tender plant. 617 “The day will fail me; Phoebus will have bathed

	597 si Romam intrarit, famularia iura daturum. 598 Ille quidem potuit portas inrumpere apertas, 599 sed nos obstitimus, quamvis coniunctior illo
15.600	600 nemo mihi est. Vos urbe virum prohibete, Quirites, 601 vel, si dignus erit, gravibus vincite catenis, 602 aut finite metum fatalis morte tyranni!” 603 Qualia succinctis, ubi trux insibilat eurus, 604 murmura pinetis fiunt, aut qualia fluctus 605 aequorei faciunt, siquis procul audiat illos, 606 tale sonat populus; sed per confusa frementis 607 verba tamen vulgi vox eminet una “quis ille est?”, 608 et spectant frontes praedictaque cornua quaerunt. 609 Rursus ad hos Cipus “quem poscitis” inquit, “habetis” 610 et dempta capiti, populo prohibente, corona 611 exhibuit gemino praesignia tempora cornu. 612 Demisere oculos omnes gemitumque dedere 613 atque illud meritis clarum (quis credere possit?) 614 inviti videre caput; nec honore carere 615 ulterius passi, festam imposuere coronam. 616 At proceres, quoniam muros intrare vetaris, 617 ruris honorati tantum tibi, Cipe, dedere, 618 quantum depresso subiectis bubus aratro 619 complecti posses ad finem lucis ab ortu, 620 cornuaque aeratis miram referentia formam 621 postibus insculpunt, longum mansura per aevum. 622 Pandite nunc, Musae, praesentia numina vatum 623 (scitis enim, nec vos fallit spatiosa vetustas,) 624 unde Coroniden circumflua Thybridis alti 625 insula Romuleae sacris adiecerit urbis.	618 his panting horses in the deep sea waves, 619 before I can include in my discourse 620 the myriad things transforming to new shapes. 621 In lapse of time we see the nations change; 622 some grow in power, some wane. Troy was once great 623 in riches and in men—so great she could 624 for ten unequalled years afford much blood; 625 now she lies low and offers to our gaze 626 but ancient ruins and, instead of wealth, 627 ancestral tombs. Sparta was famous once 628 and great Mycenae was most flourishing. 629 And Cecrops' citadel and Amphion's shone 630 in ancient power. Sparta is nothing now 631 save barren ground, the proud Mycenae fell, 632 what is the Thebes of storied Oedipus 633 except a name? And of Pandion's Athens 634 what now remains beyond the name? 635 “Reports come to me that Dardanian Rome 636 is rising, and beside the Tiber's waves, 637 whose springs are high in the Apennines, is laying 638 her deep foundations. So in her growth 639 her form is changing, and one day she will 640 be the sole mistress of the boundless world. 641 “They say that soothsayers and that oracles, 642 revealers of our destiny, declare 643 this fate, and, if I recollect it right, 644 Helenus, son of Priam, prophesied 645 unto Aeneas, when he was in doubt 646 of safety and lamenting for the state 647 of Troy, about to fall, ‘O, son of a goddess,

	626 Dira lues quondam Latias vitiaverat auras, 627 pallidaque exsangui squalebant corpora morbo. 628 Funeribus fessi postquam mortalia cernunt 629 temptamenta nihil, nihil artes posse medentum,
15.630	630 auxilium caeleste petunt mediamque tenentes 631 orbis humum Delphos adeunt, oracula Phoebi, 632 utque salutifera miseris succurrere rebus 633 sorte velit tantaeque urbis mala finiat, orant: 634 et locus et laurus et, quas habet ipse, pharetras 635 intremuere simul, cortinaque reddidit imo 636 hanc adyto vocem pavefactaque pectora movit: 637 “Quod petis hinc, propiore loco, Romane, petisses, 638 et pete nunc propiore loco! nec Apolline vobis, 639 qui minuat luctus, opus est, sed Apolline nato. 640 Ite bonis avibus prolemque accersite nostram!” 641 Iussa dei prudens postquam accepere senatus, 642 quam colat, explorant, iuvenis Phoebeius urbem, 643 quique petant ventis Epidauria litora mittunt. 644 Quae simul incurva missi tetigere carina, 645 concilium Graiosque patres adiere, darentque, 646 oravere, deum, qui praesens funera gentis 647 finiat Ausoniae: certas ita dicere sortes. 648 Dissidet et variat sententia, parsque negandum 649 non putat auxilium, multi retinere suamque 650 non emittere opem nec numina tradere suadent: 651 dum dubitant, seram pepulere crepuscula lucem, 652 umbraque telluris tenebras induxerat orbi, 653 cum deus in somnis opifer consistere visus 654 ante tuum, Romane, torum, sed qualis in aede	648 if you yourself, will fully understand 649 this prophecy now surging in my mind 650 Troy shall not, while you are preserved to life 651 fall utterly. Flames and the sword shall give 652 you passage. You shall go and bear away 653 Pergama, ruined; till a foreign soil, 654 more friendly to you than your native land, 655 shall be the lot of Troy and of yourself. 656 “Even now I know it is decreed by Fate 657 that our posterity, born far from Troy, 658 will build a city greater than exists, 659 or ever will exist, or ever has 660 been seen in former times. Through a long lapse 661 of ages other noted men shall make 662 it strong, but one of the race of Iulus; 663 shall make it the great mistress of the world. 664 After the earth has thoroughly enjoyed 665 his glorious life, aetherial abodes 666 shall gain him, and immortal heaven shall be 667 his destiny.’

	655 esse solet, baculumque tenens agreste sinistra 656 caesariem longae dextra deducere barbae 657 et placido tales emittere pectore voces: 658 “Pone metus! Veniam simulacraque nostra relinquam. 659 Hunc modo serpentem, baculum qui nexibus ambit, 15.660	660 perspice et usque nota visu, ut cognoscere possis! 661 Vertar in hunc, sed maior ero tantusque videbor, 662 in quantum verti caelestia corpora debent.” 663 Extemplo cum voce deus, cum voce deoque 664 somnus abit, somnique fugam lux alma secuta est. 665 Postera sidereos aurora fugaverat ignes: 666 incerti, quid agant, proceres ad templa petiti 667 perveniunt operosa dei, quaque ipse morari 668 sede velit, signis caelestibus indicet, orant. 669 Vix bene desierant, cum cristis aureus altis 670 in serpente deus praenuntia sibila misit 671 adventuque suo signumque arasque foresque 672 marmoreumque solum fastigiaque aurea movit 673 pectoribusque tenus media sublimis in aede 674 constitit atque oculos circumtulit igne micantes. 675 Territa turba pavet. Cognovit numina castos 676 evinctus vitta crines albente sacerdos: 677 “En deus est deus est! Animis linguisque favete, 678 quisquis ades!” dixit. “Sis, o pulcherrime, visus 679 utiliter populosque iuves tua sacra colentes !” 680 Quisquis adest, visum venerantur numen, et omnes 681 verba sacerdotis referunt geminata piumque 682 Aeneadae praestant et mente et voce favorem. 683 Adnuit his motisque deus rata pignora cristis

	684 et repetita dedit vibrata sibila lingua. 685 Tum gradibus nitidis delabitur oraque retro 686 flectit et antiquas abiturus respicit aras 687 adsuetasque domos habitataque templa salutat. 688 Inde per iniectis adopertam floribus ingens 689 serpit humum flectitque sinus mediamque per urbem
15.690	690 tendit ad incurvo munitos aggere portus. 691 Restitit hic agmenque suum turbaeque sequentis 692 officium placido visus dimittere vultu 693 corpus in Ausonia posuit rate: numinis illa 694 sensit onus, pressa estque dei gravitate carina; 695 Aeneadae gaudent caesoque in litore tauro 696 torta coronatae solvunt retinacula navis. 697 Impulerat levis aura ratem: deus eminet alte, 698 impositaque premens puppim cervice recurvam 699 caeruleas despectat aquas modicisque per aequor 700 Ionium zephyris sextae Pallantidos ortu 701 Italiam tenuit praeterque Lacinia templo 702 nobilitata deae Scylaceaque litora fertur; 703 linquit Iapygiam laevisque Amphrisia remis 704 saxa fugit, dextra praerupta Celennia parte, 705 Romethiumque legit Caulonaque Naryciamque, 706 evincitque fretum Siculique angusta Pelori 707 Hippotadaeque domos regis Temesesque metalla, 708 Leucosiamque petit tepidique rosaria Paesti. 709 Inde legit Capreas promunturiumque Minervae 710 et Surrentino generosos palmite colles 711 Herculeamque urbem Stabiasque et in otia natam 712 Parthenopen et ab hac Cumaeae templa Sibyllae.	712 They say that Numa with a mind well taught 713 by these and other precepts traveled back 714 to his own land and, being urged again, 715 assumed the guidance of the Latin state. 716 Blest with a nymph as consort, blest also with 717 the Muses for his guides, he taught the rites 718 of sacrifice and trained in arts of peace 719 a race accustomed long to savage war. 720 When, ripe in years, he ended reign and life, 721 the Latin matrons, the fathers of the state, 722 and all the people wept for Numa's death. 723 For the nymph, his widow, had withdrawn from Rome, 724 concealed within the thick groves of the vale 725 Aricia, where with groans and wailing she 726 disturbed the holy rites of Cynthia, 727 established by Orestes. Ah! how often 728 nymphs of the grove and lake entreated her 729 to cease and offered her consoling words. 730 How often the son of Theseus said to her 731 “Control your sorrow; surely your sad lot 732 is not the only one; consider now 733 the like calamities by others borne, 734 and you can bear your sorrow. To my grief 735 my own disaster was far worse than yours. 736 At least it can afford you comfort now. 737 “Is it not true, discourse has reached yours ears 738 that one Hippolytus met with his death 739 through the credulity of his loved sire, 740 deceived by a stepmother's wicked art? 741 It will amaze you much, and I may fail

	713 Hinc calidi fontes lentisciferumque tenetur 714 Liternum multamque trahens sub gurgite harenam 715 Volturnus niveisque frequens Sinuessa columbis 716 Minturnaeque graves et quam tumulavit alumnus 717 Antiphataeque domus Trachasque obsessa palude 718 et tellus Circaea et spissi litoris Antium. 719 Huc ubi veliferam nautae advertere carinam
15.720	720 (asper enim iam pontus erat), deus explicat orbes 721 perque sinus crebros et magna volumina labens 722 templa parentis init flavum tangentia litus. 723 Aequore placato patrias Epidaurius aras 724 linquit et hospitio iuncti sibi numinis usus 725 litoream tractu squamae crepitantis harenam 726 sulcat et innixus moderamine navis in alta 727 puppe caput posuit, donec Castrumque sacrasque 728 Lavini sedes Tiberinaque ad ostia venit. 729 Huc omnis populi passim matrumque patrumque 730 obvia turba ruit, quaeque ignes, Troica, servant, 731 Vesta, tuos, laetoque deum clamore salutant. 732 Quaque per adversas navis cita ducitur undas, 733 tura super ripas aris ex ordine factis 734 parte ab utraque sonant et odorant aera fumis, 735 ictaque coniectos incalfacit hostia cultros. 736 Iamque caput rerum, Romanam intraverat urbem: 737 erigitur serpens summoque acclinia malo 738 colla movet sedesque sibi circumspicit aptas. 739 Scinditur in geminas partes circumfluus amnis 740 (Insula nomen habet), laterumque a parte duorum 741 porrigit aequales media tellure lacertos.	742 to prove what I declare, but I am he! 743 Long since the daughter of Pasiphae 744 tempted me to defile my father's bed 745 and, failing, feigned that I had wished to do 746 what she herself had wished. Perverting truth— 747 either through fear of some discovery 748 or else through spite at her deserved repulse— 749 she charged me with attempting the foul crime. 750 “Though I was guiltless of all wrong, 751 my father banished me and, while I was 752 departing, laid on me a mortal curse. 753 Towards Pittheus and Troezen I fled aghast, 754 guiding the swift chariot near the shore 755 of the Corinthian Gulf, when all at once 756 the sea rose up and seemed to arch itself 757 and lift high as a white topped mountain height, 758 make bellowings, and open at the crest. 759 Then through the parting waves a horned bull 760 emerged with head and breast into the wind, 761 spouting white foam from his nostrils and his mouth. 762 “The hearts of my attendants quailed with fear, 763 yet I unfrightened thought but of my exile. 764 Then my fierce horses turned their necks to face 765 the waters, and with ears erect they quaked 766 before the monster shape, they dashed in flight 767 along the rock strewn ground below the cliff. 768 I struggled, but with unavailing hand, 769 to use the reins now covered with white foam; 770 and throwing myself back, pulled on the thongs 771 with weight and strength. Such effort might have checked

	742 Huc se de Latia pinu Phoebeius anguis 743 contulit et finem, specie caeleste resumpta, 744 luctibus imposuit venitque salutifer urbi. 745 Hic tamen accessit delubris advena nostris: 746 Caesar in urbe sua deus est; quem Marte togaque 747 praecipuum non bella magis finita triumphis 748 resque domi gestae properataque gloria rerum 749 in sidus vertere novum stellamque comantem,
15.750	750 quam sua progenies; neque enim de Caesaris actis 751 ullum maius opus, quam quod pater exstitit huius: 752 scilicet aequoreos plus est domuisse Britannos 753 perque papyriferi septemflua flumina Nili 754 victrices egisse rates Numidasque rebelles 755 Cinyphiumque Iubam Mithridateisque tumentem 756 nominibus Pontum populo adiecisse Quirini 757 et multos meruisse, aliquos egisse triumphos, 758 quam tantum genuisse virum? Quo praeside rerum 759 humano generi, superi, favistis abunde! 760 Ne foret hic igitur mortali semine cretus, 761 ille deus faciendus erat. Quod ut aurea vidit 762 Aeneae genetrix, vidit quoque triste parari 763 pontifici letum et coniurata arma moveri, 764 palluit et cunctis, ut cuique erat obvia, divis 765 “adspice” dicebat, “quanta mihi mole parentur 766 insidiae quantaque caput cum fraude petatur, 767 quod de Dardanio solum mihi restat Iulo. 768 Solane semper ero iustis exercita curis, 769 quam modo Tydidae Calydonia vulneret hasta, 770 nunc male defensae confundant moenia Troiae,	772 the madness of my steeds, had not a wheel, 773 striking the hub on a projecting stump, 774 been shattered and hurled in fragments from the axle. 775 “I was thrown forward from my chariot 776 and with the reins entwined about my legs. 777 My palpitating entrails could be seen 778 dragged on, my sinews fastened on a stump. 779 My torn legs followed, but a part 780 remained behind me, caught by various snags. 781 The breaking bones gave out a crackling noise, 782 my tortured spirit soon had fled away, 783 no part of the torn body could be known— 784 all that was left was only one crushed wound— 785 how can, how dare you, nymph, compare your ills 786 to my disaster? 787 “I saw the Lower World 788 deprived of light: and I have bathed my flesh, 789 so tortured, in the waves of Phlegethon. 790 Life could not have been given again to me, 791 but through the remedies Apollo's son 792 applied to me. After my life returned— 793 by potent herbs and the Paeonian aid, 794 despite the will of Pluto— Cynthia then 795 threw heavy clouds around that I might not 796 be seen and cause men envy by new life: 797 and that she might be sure my life was safe 798 she made me seem an old man; and she changed 799 me so that I could not be recognized. 800 “A long time she debated whether she 801 would give me Crete or Delos for my home.

	771 quae videam natum longis erroribus actum 772 iactarique freto sedesque intrare silentum 773 bellaque cum Turno gerere, aut, si vera fatemur, 774 cum Iunone magis? Quid nunc antiqua recordor 775 damna mei generis? Timor hic meminisse priorum 776 non sinit: en acui sceleratos cernitis enses? 777 Quos prohibete, precor, facinusque repellite, neve 778 caede sacerdotis flammas exstinguite Vestae!” 779 Talia nequiquam toto Venus anxia caelo 15.780	780 verba iacit superosque movet, qui rumpere quamquam 781 ferrea non possunt veterum decreta sororum, 782 signa tamen luctus dant haud incerta futuri. 783 Arma ferunt inter nigras crepitantia nubes 784 terribilesque tubas auditaque cornua caelo 785 praemonuisse nefas; solis quoque tristis imago 786 lurida sollicitis praebebat lumina terris. 787 Saepe faces visae mediis ardere sub astris, 788 saepe inter nimbos guttae cecidere cruentae. 789 Caerulus et vultum ferrugine Lucifer atra 790 sparsus erat, sparsi Lunares sanguine currus. 791 Tristia mille locis Stygius dedit omina bubo, 792 mille locis lacrimavit ebur, cantusque feruntur 793 auditi sanctis et verba minantia lucis. 794 Victima nulla litat magnosque instare tumultus 795 fibra monet, caesumque caput reperitur in extis. 796 Inque foro circumque domos et templa deorum 797 nocturnos ululasse canes umbrasque silentum 798 erravisse ferunt motamque tremoribus urbem. 799 Non tamen insidias venturaque vincere fata	802 Delos and Crete abandoned, she then brought 803 me here, and at the same time ordered me 804 to lay aside my former name—one which 805 when mentioned would remind me of my steeds. 806 She said to me, ‘You were Hippolytus, 807 but now instead you shall be Virbius.’ 808 And from that time I have inhabited 809 this grove; and, as one of the lesser gods, 810 I live concealed and numbered in her train.” 811 The grief of others could not ease the woe 812 of sad Egeria, and she laid herself 813 down at a mountain's foot, dissolved in tears, 814 till moved by pity for her faithful sorrow, 815 Diana changed her body to a spring, 816 her limbs into a clear continual stream.

	800 praemonitus potuere deum, strictique feruntur 801 in templum gladii; neque enim locus ullus in urbe 802 ad facinus diramque placet nisi curia, caedem. 803 Tum vero Cytherea manu percussit utraque 804 pectus et Aeneaden molitur condere nube, 805 qua prius infesto Paris est ereptus Atridae 806 et Diomedeos Aeneas fugerat enses. 807 Talibus hanc genitor: “Sola insuperabile fatum, 808 nata, movere paras? Intres licet ipsa sororum 809 tecta trium: cernes illic molimine vasto
15.810	810 ex aere et solido rerum tabularia ferro, 811 quae neque concussum caeli neque fulminis iram 812 nec metuunt ullas tuta atque aeterna ruinas. 813 Invenies illic incisa adamante perenni 814 fata tui generis: legi ipse animoque notavi 815 et referam, ne sis etiamnum ignara futuri. 816 Hic sua complevit, pro quo, Cytherea, laboras, 817 tempora, perfectis, quos terrae debuit, annis. 818 Ut deus accedat caelo templisque colatur, 819 tu facies natusque suus, qui nominis heres 820 impositum feret unus onus caesique parentis 821 nos in bella suos fortissimus ultor habebit. 822 Illius auspiciis obsessae moenia pacem 823 victa petent Mutinae, Pharsalia sentiet illum. 824 Emathiique iterum madefient caede Philippi, 825 et magnum Siculis nomen superabitur undis, 826 Romanique ducis coniunx Aegyptia taedae 827 non bene fisa cadet, frustraque erit illa minata, 828 servitura suo Capitolia nostra Canopo.	817 This wonderful event surprised the nymphs, 818 and filled Hippolytus with wonder, just 819 as great as when the Etrurian ploughman saw 820 a fate-revealing clod move of its own 821 accord among the fields, while not a hand 822 was touching it, till finally it took 823 a human form, without the quality 824 of clodded earth, and opened its new mouth 825 and spoke, revealing future destinies. 826 The natives called him Tages. He was the first 827 who taught Etrurians to foretell events. 828 They were astonished even as Romulus, 829 when he observed the spear, which once had grown 830 high on the Palatine, put out new leaves 831 and stand with roots—not with the iron point 832 which he had driven in. Not as a spear 833 it then stood there, but as a rooted tree 834 with limber twigs for many to admire 835 while resting under that surprising shade. 836 Or, as when Cippus first observed his horns 837 in the clear stream (he truly saw them there). 838 Believing he had seen a falsity, 839 he often touched his forehead with his hand 840 and, so returning, touched the thing he saw. 841 Assured at last that he could trust his eyes, 842 he stood entranced, as if he had returned 843 victorious from the conquest of his foes: 844 and, raising eyes and hands toward heaven, he cried, 845 “You gods above! Whatever is foretold 846 by this great prodigy, if it means good,

	829 Quid tibi barbariem, gentesque ab utroque iacentes 830 oceano numerem? Quodcumque habitabile tellus 831 sustinet, huius erit: pontus quoque serviet illi! 832 Pace data terris animum ad civilia vertet 833 iura suum legesque feret iustissimus auctor 834 exemploque suo mores reget inque futuri 835 temporis aetatem venturorumque nepotum 836 prospiciens prolem sancta de coniuge natam 837 ferre simul nomenque suum curasque iubebit, 838 nec nisi cum senior Pylios aequaverit annos, 839 aetherias sedes cognataque sidera tanget.
15.840	840 Hanc animam interea caeso de corpore raptam 841 fac iubar, ut semper Capitolia nostra forumque 842 divus ab excelsa prospectet Iulius aede.” 843 Vix ea fatus erat, media cum sede senatus 844 constitit alma Venus, nulli cernenda, suique 845 Caesaris eripuit membris neque in aera solvi 846 passa recentem animam caelestibus intulit astris. 847 Dumque tulit, lumen capere atque ignescere sensit 848 emisitque sinu: luna volat altius illa, 849 flammiferumque trahens spatioso limite crinem 850 stella micat natique videns bene facta fatetur 851 esse suis maiora et vinci gaudet ab illo. 852 Hic sua praeferri quamquam vetat acta paternis, 853 libera fama tamen nullisque obnoxia iussis 854 invitum praefert unaque in parte repugnat: 855 sic magni cedit titulis Agamemnonis Atreus, 856 Aegea sic Theseus, sic Pelea vicit Achilles; 857 denique, ut exemplis ipsos aequantibus utar,	847 then let it be auspicious to my land 848 and to the inhabitants of Quirinus, — 849 if ill, let that misfortune fall on me.” 850 He made an offering at new altars, built 851 of grassy thick green turf, with fragrant fires, 852 presenting wine in bowls. And he took note 853 of panting entrails from new-slaughtered sheep, 854 to learn the meaning of the event for him. 855 When an Etruscan seer examined them, 856 he found the evidence of great events, 857 as yet obscure, and, when he raised keen eyes 858 up from the entrails to the horns of Cippus, 859 “O king, all hail!” he cried, “For in future time 860 this country and the Latin towers will live 861 in homage to you, Cippus, and your horns. 862 But you must promptly put aside delay; 863 hasten to enter the wide open gates— 864 the fates command you. Once received within 865 the city, you shall be its chosen king 866 and safely shall enjoy a lasting reign.” 867 Cippus retreated, and he turned his grave 868 eyes from the city's walls and said, “O far, 869 O far away, the righteous gods should drive 870 such omens from me! Better it would be 871 that I should pass my life in exile than 872 be seen a king throned in the capitol.” 873 Such words he spoke and forthwith he convoked 874 the people and the grave and honored Senate. 875 But first he veiled his horns with laurel, which 876 betokens peace. Then, standing on a

	858 sic et Saturnus minor est Iove: Iuppiter arces 859 temperat aetherias et mundi regna triformis, 860 terra sub Augusto est; pater est et rector uterque. 861 Di, precor, Aeneae comites, quibus ensis et ignis 862 cesserunt, dique Indigetes genitorque Quirine 863 urbis et invicti genitor Gradive Quirini, 864 Vestaque Caesareos inter sacrata penates, 865 et cum Caesarea tu, Phoebe domestice, Vesta, 866 quique tenes altus Tarpeias Iuppiter arces, 867 quosque alios vati fas appellare piumque est: 868 tarda sit illa dies et nostro serior aevo, 869 qua caput Augustum, quem temperat, orbe relicto	mound
15.870	870 accedat caelo faveatque precantibus absens! 871 Iamque opus exegi, quod nec Iovis ira nec ignis 872 nec poterit ferrum nec edax abolere vetustas. 873 Cum volet, illa dies, quae nil nisi corporis huius 874 ius habet, incerti spatium mihi finiat aevi: 875 parte tamen meliore mei super alta perennis 876 astra ferar, nomenque erit indelebile nostrum, 877 quaque patet domitis Romana potentia terris, 878 ore legar populi, perque omnia saecula fama, 879 siquid habent veri vatum praesagia, vivam.	877 raised by the valiant troops, he made a prayer 878 after the ancient mode, and then he said, 879 “There is one here who will be king, if you 880 do not expel him from your city—I 881 will show him to you surely by a sign; 882 although I will not tell his name. He wears 883 horns on his head. The augur prophecies 884 that, if he enters this your city, he 885 will give you laws as if you were his slaves. 886 “He might have forced his way within your gates, 887 for they stand open, but I have hindered him, 888 although nobody is to him so close 889 as I myself. Good Romans, then, forbid 890 your city to this man; or, if you find 891 that he deserves still worse, then bind him fast 892 with heavy fetters; or else end your fears 893 by knowledge of the destined tyrant's death.” 894 As murmurs which arise among the groves 895 of pine trees thick above us, when the fierce 896 east wind is whistling in them, or as sound 897 produced by breaking waves, when it is heard 898 afar off, such the noise made by the crowd. 899 But in that angry stirring of the throng 900 one cry could be distinguished, “Which is he?” 901 And they examined foreheads, and they sought 902 predicted horns. Cippus then spoke again: 903 “The man whom you demand,” he said, “is here!” 904 And, fearless of the people, he threw back 905 the chaplet from his forehead, so that all 906 could see his temples plainly, wonderful